The town is divided into the consolidated parishes of St. Peter and St. James. The living is a vicarage, with the curacy of St. James, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £19 1s. 6d.; gross income £359. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Sutherland. The church is an ancient building, with a lofty square tower, and contains a curious Norman font. The great and small tithes of both parishes, the property of the rectors, improPRIATOR, and vicar, were commuted 10° George IV. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here; the congregation was formed in 1800. Here are a free grammar-school with a small endowment, and almshouses for six aged widows, founded and endowed with £24 per annum, in 1633, by Sir Thomas Crewe, to which Bishop Crewe, in 1721, added £12. There are also six daily schools here, and a day and Sunday National school, besides a Sunday school, including 164 children. On the Castle-hill is the site of an ancient fortress. Dr. Samuel Clarke, the celebrated orientalist, was born here in 1623. "Robert, earl of Leicester, about the year 1150, gave one Solomon, a clergyman, one acre of land here to build an hospital on, to the honour of St. John the Evangelist, which was well-endowed by his son Robert and other benefactors. It consisted of a master or prior, and several brethren, and was, in after times, called the hospital of St. John and St. James. Maud, the relict of John, Lord Lovel, being patroness about 8° Henry V., designed to have changed this hospital into a house for thirteen friars preachers, which seems not to have taken effect; but, A. D. 1484, it was united to Magdalene college in Oxford. There was also with-out the town an hospital dedicated to St. Leonard."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 1,420; in 1831, 2,107. Houses 376. Acres 2,790. A. P. £2,587. Poor rates, in 1837, £977.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Brackley by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £6,000, capable of accommodating 250 persons. The Brackley poor-law union comprehends 30 parishes, embracing an area of 87 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 13,351. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £11,743. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,301.

BRACKNELL, or BRACKENHILL, a hamlet in the parish of Easthampstead, hund. of Cookham, county of Berks; 4 miles east of Wokingham. The Independents have a place of worship here. Bracknell is a polling-place for the election of the county-members.—Fairs are held here on April 25, August 22, and October 1, for horses, cows, and sheep.

BRACONASH, a parish in the hund. of Humbleyard, union of Henstead, county of Norfolk; 7 miles south by west of Norwich. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £10; gross income £259. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. E. Berney. There is a small daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 283; in 1831, 316. Houses 39. Acres 950. A. P. £1,410. Poor rates, in 1837, £215.

BRADBORNE, a parish, comprising the chapelry of Atlow, in the hund. of Appletree, and the chapelries of Ballidon and Brassington, the townships of Aldwark and Bradborne, and the hamlet of Lea-hall, in the hund. of Wirksworth, county of Derby; 5 miles north-north-east of Ashborne, in the vicinity of the Cromford and High Peak railway. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Ballidon, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £8 3s. 4d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £119. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Devonshire. This parish possesses a day and Sunday National school, with an endowment, besides five daily and two Sunday schools. Limestone is abundant here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £21 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,022; in 1831, 1,297. Houses 259. Acres 6,400. A. P. £13,010. Poor rates, in 1837, £696.—Pop. of the township, in 1801, 157; in 1831, 195. Houses 37. A. P. £3,624. Poor rates, in 1837, £140.

BRADBURY, a township in the parish of Sedgfield, north-eastern division of Stockton ward, co. palatine of Durham; 10½ miles south by east of Durham, in the immediate vicinity of the Great North of England and Clarence railways. Here was formerly a chapel dedicated to St. Nicholas. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 147. Houses 25. Acres 1,970. A. P. £1,995. Poor rates, in 1837, £93.

BRADBY, a chapelry in the parish of Repton, hund. of Depton and Gresley, county of Derby; 3 miles east of Burton-upon-Trent, in the neighbourhood of the Birmingham and Derby railroad. There are two daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 265; in 1831, 325. Houses 57. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,289. Poor rates, in 1837, £271.

BRADDEN, a parish in the hund. of Green's-Norton, union of Towcester, county of Northampton; 3 miles west of Towcester. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £14 6s. 8d.; gross income £241. Patron, in 1835, C. Ives, Esq. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1803. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 165. Houses 33. Acres 1,000. A. P. £1,470. Poor rates, in 1837, £127.

BRADL. See CHURCH-KNOWLE.

BRADENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Desborough, union of Wycombe, county of Buckingham; 3¼ miles north-west by north of High Wycombe. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £5 3s. 9d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £248 13s. 6d.; gross income £190. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. A. Hearle. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 263. Houses 38. Acres 830. A. P. £1,385. Poor rates, in 1837, £86.

BRADENHAM (EAST), a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Greenhoe, union of Swaffham, county of Norfolk; 5 miles south-west of East Dereham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £12 2s. 8½d.; gross income £298. Patron, in 1835, T. Adlington, Esq. There are an Independent place of worship here, and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 381. Houses 68. Acres 2,120. A. P. £2,628. Poor rates, in 1837, £505.

BRADENHAM (WEST), a parish in the southern division of the above hund., union of Swaffham; 5½ miles south-west by west of East Dereham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £7 1s. 10½d.; gross income £296; in the patronage of the bishop of Ely. There are three small daily schools here, and a Sunday school. Charities connected with this parish produce about £28 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 300; in 1831, 370. Houses 82. Acres 1,790. A. P. £2,140. Poor rates, in 1837, £409.

BRADENSTOKE, a hamlet in the parish of Lineham, hund. of King's-bridge, county of Wilts; 5½ miles south-west of Wootton-Basset, in the vicinity of the Wilts and Berks canal, and the Great Western railroad. "Here Walter D'Evereux, or de Saresbiria built, A. D. 1142, and endowed a priory of Black canons to the honour of the blessed Virgin, wherein, after his lady's decease, he himself took a religious habit, died, and was buried. This monastery—of which the king, before the dissolution, was accounted patron or founder in right of the duchy of Lancaster—was valued, 6th Henry VIII., at £270 16s. 8d.; and was granted in exchange to Richard Pexall, 36th Henry VIII."—Tanner.

BRADSTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Blofield, county of Norfolk; 4 miles west-south-west of Acle. Living, a discharged rectory, united with that of Strumpshaw. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1811, 108; in 1831, 145. Houses 32. Acres 630. A. P. £559. Poor rates, in 1837, 122.

BRADFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Theale, union of Bradfield, county of Berks; 8 miles west of Reading, and 3 south-west of the Great Western railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £19 7s. 8½d.; gross income £800. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. Stevens. This parish possesses four daily schools, one of which, the school of industry, contains 111 scholars, who are employed in needle-work, plaiting straw, &c., for which they are paid,—a portion of the day being set apart for reading and religious instruction. The benefits arising from this school, in reducing the poor's rate, and generating industrious and orderly habits, are very considerable. There are also two Sunday schools here. In the charter of King Ina at Abingdon, mention is made of a monastery here. Pop., in 1801, 678; in 1831, 956. Houses 180. Acres 4,270. A. P. £5,774. Poor rates, in 1837, £530.—A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Bradfield, at an expense of £7,450, capable of containing 250 persons. The Bradfield poor-law union comprehends 29 parishes, embracing an area of 106 square miles, with a population returned, in 1831, at 14,682. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £12,753. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,898.

BRADFIELD, a parish in the hund. and union of Tendring, county of Essex; 3 miles east-south-east of Maningtree, on the southern bank of the navigable river Stour. Living, a discharged vicarage united to the rectory of Mistley. This parish possesses six daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 582; in 1831, 964. Houses 198. Acres 2,270. A. P. £3,290. Poor rates, in 1837, £555.

BRADFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Tunstead, county of Norfolk; 2¼ miles north-north-west of North Walsham. Living, consisting of one mediety, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £3 15s. 7½d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £219; gross income £127. Patron, in 1835, Lord Suffield. The other mediety of the living is a donative, annexed to Thorpe-market. There is an Independent church here, formed in 1650. Pop., in 1801, 155; in 1831, 210. Houses 40. Acres 630. A. P. £842. Poor rates, in 1837, £48.

BRADFIELD, a chapelry in the parish of Eccles-field, northern division of the wapentake of Strathford and Tickhill, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles north-west by north of Sheffield, in the vicinity of the Manchester and Sheffield railroad. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £24, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £124; gross income £186; in the patronage of the vicar of Ecclesfield. There are eleven daily schools here, one of which is supported by an endowment of £45 15s., and a house and garden, for the instruction of all children born and resident in the chapelry of Bolsterstone, and other four have endowments, varying from £8 to £18 each. There are also eleven Sunday schools, including 836 children. Fairs are held in June 17th and 18th, and December 9th and 10th chiefly for swine. Pop., in 1801, 4,102; in 1831, 5,504. Houses 1,008. Acres 33,730. A. P. £15,710. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,643.

BRADFELD-COMBUST, a parish in the hund. of Thedwestry, union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 5½ miles south by east of Bury-St.-Edmund's. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £4 19s. 7d.; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. J. Hasted. There is a day and Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 154. Houses 24. Acres 590. A. P. £1,108. Poor rates, in 1837, £135.

BRADFELD (St. CLARE), a parish in the hund. of Thedwestry, union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 5 miles south-east of Bury-St.-Edmund's. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £7 4s. 7d.; gross income £287. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Davaers. There is a day and Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 226. Houses 28. Acres 1,190. A. P. £1,406. Poor rates, in 1837, £74.

BRADFELD (St. GEORGE), a parish in the hund. of Thedwestry, union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 4½ miles south-east of Bury-St.-Edmund's, intersected by the Ipswich and St.-Edmund's-Bury railway, which here passes through a tunnel 1½ mile in length. Living, a rectory with that of Rushbrooke annexed, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £11 17s. 3½d.; gross income £550. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Bristol. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 354; in 1831, 489. Houses 54. Acres 2,090. A. P. £2,110. Poor rates, in 1837, £287.

BRADFORD, a parish in the hund. of Black Torrington, union of Holsworthy, county of Devon; 8 miles west by north of Hatherleigh, on the southern bank of the river Torridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £13 8s. 4d.; gross income £310; in the patronage, in 1835, of trustees. There are two daily schools here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £44 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 352; in 1831, 487. Houses 83. Acres 3,670. A. P. £1,763. Poor rates, in 1837, £176.

BRADFORD, a township in the parish of Manchester, hund. of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles east of Manchester, in the immediate vicinity of the Manchester and Sheffield railroad. There is a small daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 166. Houses 27. Acres 260. A. P. £584. Poor rates, in 1837, £55.

BRADFORD, a township in the parish of Bambrough, northern division of Bambrough ward, county of Northumberland; 2½ miles south-east of Belford. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 36. Houses 6. Acreage with the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £23.

BRADFORD, a township in the parish of Bolam, north-eastern division of Tindale ward, county of Northumberland; 15 miles north-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 32. Houses 6. Acreage with the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £32.

BRADFORD HUNDRED—north and south—in the county of Salop, is bounded on the north by Cheshire; on the east by Staffordshire; on the south-east and south by Wenlock Franchise; on the south-west by the hundred of Condovery; and on the west by the hundred of Pimhill and the liberty of Shrewsbury. Area 197,810 acres. Houses 12,432. Pop., in 1831, 64,849.

BRADFORD, a parish in the hund. of Taunton and Taunton-Dean, union of Wellington, county of Somerset; 3 miles west-south-west of Taunton, intersected by the Bristol and Exeter railway, and the intended Western canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £10 17s. 6d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £108 18s. 11d.; nett income £120. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Burridge. This parish possesses two daily and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 447; in 1831, 525. Houses 81. Acres 1,710. A. P. £4,147. Poor rates, in 1837, £226.

BRADFORD HUNDRED, in the Bradford, Trowbridge, and Westbury division of the county of Wilts. Area 18,760 acres. Houses 2,283. Pop., in 1831, 11,604.

BRADFORD,

A market-town and parish in the wapentake of Morley, honour of Pontefract, union of Bradford, and west riding of Yorkshire; 196 miles north-north-west of London, 35 south-west of York, and 13 north-west of Wakefield; intersected by the Bradford canal. The parish is 15 miles in length, and, at an average, 4 in breadth; and comprises the market-town of the same name, the chapels of Haworth, Horton, and Thornton, and the townships of Allerton, North Bierley, Bowling, Clayton, Eccleshill, Heaton, Manningham, Shipley, and Wilsden.—Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon, valued at £20; gross income £440. Patrons, the trustees of the late Rev. C. Simeon. The parish-church was erected in the reign of Henry VI. In 1613-14, Christ-church was erected as a chapel-of-ease to St. Peter's. It is a curacy of the certified value of £32; gross income £159. The building is a plain one; of Gothic architecture, having a low tower crowned with pinnacles. St. James's, a handsome building, was erected in 1839, and a new church is erecting within the parish. The Baptists, Independents, Society of Friends Methodists of different denominations, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics have places of worship here. The Independent church assembling at Horton lane chapel was formed about 1780, that at Salem Chapel in 1836, and a new chapel has been since built in High street in connexion with the Independent college. The first Baptist church was formed in 1753 and the second in 1824. The Unitarian church in 1700. Kirkgate chapel (Wesleyan) was built in 1812. Eastbrook chapel (Wesleyan) in 1828. A chapel belonging to the same body is in White Abbey, and another in Manchester Road. These have been recently built. A Primitive Methodist church was organized in 1824. The General Baptists have a chapel erected in 1837. The Wesleyan Association and the New Connexion have also places of worship opened in 1839.—Here is a free grammar-school, under the management of 13 resident governors, and subject to the visitation of the archbishop of York, under a charter of Charles II., dated October 10th, 1663. This school was founded in the reign of Edward VI., and has a very rich endowment, part of which was given by Charles I. It was incorporated by patent in 1663. Scholars educated here have the privilege of standing candidates for the exhibitions in Queen's college, Oxford, founded by Lady Elizabeth Hastings. The new building erected in Manningham lane for this school in 1830 is spacious and elegant, containing a good library for the use of the scholars, with a house for the master. There are also a National school containing 300 boys, and one conducted on the system of the British and Foreign school society, in the town of Bradford. Besides these there are 82 daily, 60 Sunday, and 8 infant schools within the parish. Airedale college, in the vicinity of the town, is a valuable and flourishing institution for the education of young men for the ministry in the Congregational or Independent denomination; the Baptists have a similar institution at Horton; and the Wesleyan Methodists have a school for the education of ministers' sons at Woodhouse grove near Bradford.

The town of Bradford, which is built almost entirely of fine freestone, receives its name from its vicinity to an ancient ford over a small stream tributary to the river Aire.* It stands in a beautiful situation at the junction of three fine valleys, forming nearly a central point from the different towns of Halifax, Keighley, Leeds, Wakefield, Dewsbury, and Huddersfield. Water is conveyed from springs at a distance of 3 miles, in pipes; and the streets, which are narrow and ill-constructed, have been paved, and lighted with gas, under acts obtained in 43^o George III., and 3^o George IV. The piece-hall, for the exhibition and sale of stuff-goods, is a spacious building, 144 feet long, by 36 broad, consisting of two stories. Here are also a good market, with a spacious enclosed area; and an elegant exchange, in which assemblies are occasionally held, and in which there are a news-room and library. Thursday is market-day; and fairs are held on March 3d and 4th, for horned cattle and household furniture; June 17th, 18th, and 19th, for the same and sheep; and on December 9th, 10th, and 11th, for hogs and pedlery. The Bradford banking company was formed in June, 1827; and the Bradford commercial joint stock bank, in March, 1837; there are also branches of the Northern and Central bank of England, the Yorkshire District bank, and the Leeds and West Riding banking company: a flourishing Savings' bank with a handsome building may be added to these. Bradford owes much to its situation in the very centre of the great manufacturing districts of Yorkshire, and to the abundance of coal in the vicinity. Iron-stone is also plentiful, and there are some extensive foundries: we may particularize those of Bowling and Low-moor. The leading manufacture of Bradford is of worsted stuffs, here called "merinos" and "pieces." Worsted yarn is also spun extensively in the town, and Bradford is the great wool-market of Great Britain. The manufactures are now almost entirely confined to the products of machinery. In 1838 there were 2 cotton, 9 woollen, and 142 worsted mills, employing collectively 11,675 hands, within the parish. Commercial operations have been greatly facilitated by a branch from the Leeds and Liverpool canal, near Shipley, which has been led into the very centre of the town, and which connects it with the German ocean on the one hand, and the Irish sea on the other. The Leeds railway will also, should it be completed, greatly promote the prosperity of this enterprising town. The projected line commences at Leeds, within three minutes' walk of the court-house, commercial-buildings, and the post-office; passes along the valley of the Aire, through the centre of the clothing-district, comprising Armley, Bramley, Kirkstall, Horsforth, Calverley, Rawden, Yeadon, Guiseley, Apperley-bridge, Eccleshill, Idle, Baildon, and Shipley; and terminates at Bradford, within 300 yards of the exchange, piece-hall, and principal streets of the town. The time occupied in transit by railway from Leeds to Bradford will not exceed half an hour. It is proposed that a branch of about one mile and a third in length, shall form a junction with the North Midland and Manchester and Leeds railways, near their depot, in Leeds, by which the inconvenience of a change of carriage and reloading of goods on their route to or from London, Birmingham, Bristol, Gloucester, Manchester, Liverpool, Hull, Edinburgh, &c., will be avoided. The whole expense of constructing the works, including depots, station-buildings, and locomotive engines and carriages necessary for profitably working the line, is estimated by the engineers at £450,000.

The rapidity with which the population of Bradford has increased, affords one of the best evidences of its prosperity. Leland thus describes it in the reign of Henry VIII.—"Bradford, a pretty quick market town, dimidio aut eo amplius minus Wackefeld. It hath one paroch church, and a chapel of St. Sitha. It standeth much by clothing."—The magistrates for the west-riding hold petty-sessions here, for the east division of Morley. A court of requests for the recovery of debts under £15 is held in Bradford, under an act passed in 1839. A convenient and handsome court-house, with lock-ups in the basement, has been erected in this town, the expense being defrayed by the county, aided by subscription. The cost without furniture has been £6,250. The cells open into a spacious covered area under the court-house. There are four cells for males, three for females, a day-room, and an apartment for vagrants. From October sessions 1834 to the same period in 1836, 724 prisoners passed through these lock-ups.—The debtor's prison is extremely well-managed. It consists of a house for the keeper, and two detached buildings for prisoners, with suitable airing-yards. The accommodation consists of three day-rooms on the ground floor, three sleeping-rooms on the first floor for males, and a day-room and sleeping-room for females.—Bradford, including the townships of Manningham and Bowling, and the chapelrys of Little and Great Horton, now returns by the Reform act two members to parliament. It is also one of the polling-places for the members for the west riding of Yorkshire. A mechanics' institute has been established here, for which a commodious building has been recently erected; there exists a flourishing philosophical society, and a dispensary is supported on a liberal scale. Bradford boasts also of a temperance hall, said to be the first built for that specific purpose in the kingdom. It was in this town that temperance societies were first established in England. A septennial festival was held here in honour of St. Blase, the titular patron of the wool-combers. This has been of late years but irregularly observed. Charities connected with the parish of Bradford produce about £350 per annum. Dr. John Sharpe, archbishop of York in the reign of William III., was born here in 1644. Pop. of the parish in 1801, 29,794; in 1831, 76,996. Houses

* "It is difficult to imagine," says Baines, "how a water so insignificant could have acquired the epithet of broad. The term broad, however, is in Yorkshire frequently applied to rivers which have no peculiar title to that designation. Thus, the river Aire, where it passes Leeds, is by many called the Broad Aire."

14,231. Acres, 33,710. A. P. £135,353. Poor rates, in 1837, £4,285. Pop. of the township in 1801, 6,393; in 1831, 23,233. Houses 4,044. Acres 1,690. A. P. £76,773.—The Bradford poor-law union comprehends the following parishes and townships, embracing an area of 61 square miles, with a population returned in 1831, at 94,621: viz. Bradford, Allerton, Bowling, Bolton, Calverley with Farsley, Clayton, Cleckheaton, Drighlington, Heaton, Horton, Hunsworth, Idle, Manningham, North Bierley, Pudsey, Shipley, Thornton, Tong, Wike, and Wilsden. The total number of paupers belonging to the union in the quarter ending December 25, 1838, was 3,460.—“This manor,” says Allen, “belonged to John of Gaunt, who granted to John Northop and his heirs in the village of Manningham, three messuages and six bovates of land, to come to Bradford, on the blowing of a horn, on St. Martin’s-day, in winter, and wait on him and his heirs, in their way from Blackburnshire, with a lance and hunting dog, for thirty days, and for going with the receiver or bailiff to conduct him safe to the castle of Pontefract. A descendant of Northorp afterwards granted land in Horton to Rushworth, of Horton, to hold the bound while Northorp’s man blew the horn.”

BRADFORD-ABBAS, a parish in the hund. and union of Sherborne, Sherborne division of the county of Dorset; 4 miles south-west of Sherborne, intersected by the South Western railway. Living a vicarage, to which is united the rectory of Clifton-May-bank, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury, valued at £7 17s. 11d., rated in the parliamentary returns at £121 10s.; gross income £480; in the patronage of Winchester college. There are two daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum for 20 boys, and the other with £10 per annum for 10 girls. There are also two Sunday and two infant schools. Other charities connected with this parish produce about £23 per annum. In 1838 there was a flax-mill here, employing 28 hands. Pop., in 1801, 480; in 1831, 595. Houses 123. Acres 1,810. A. P. £1,695. Poor rates, in 1837, £131.

BRADFORD (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Bradford, county of Wilts; 100 miles west of London, 31 north-west of Salisbury, intersected by the river Avon and the Kennet and Avon canal, by which means extensive inland and seaward communications are maintained. It comprises the market-town of the same name, the chapelries of Atworth, Holt, Winsley with Limpley-Stoke, and South Wraxhall, with the tythings of Leigh-Wooley and Trowle. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacies of Westwood, Holt, Winsley, Stoke, Wraxhall, and Atworth annexed, in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, valued at £10 1s. 3d.; gross income £855; nett income £596; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Bristol. The church is an ancient and handsome edifice, containing some elegant marble monuments, a fine altar-piece, painted windows and organ. The Baptists, Methodists, Independents, Society of Friends, Unitarians, and connexion of the countess of Huntingdon have places of worship here. One of the two Independent churches was formed in 1740; the Methodist in 1760; and the Baptist church in 1690. There are fourteen daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed with £40, and another with £10 per annum, and sixteen Sunday schools. There are two endowed almshouses. Other charities connected with this parish produce about £125 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 7,302; in 1831, 10,102. Houses 1,990. Acres 11,740. A. P. £26,847. Poor rates, in 1837, £4,757.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Bradford, by the poor law commissioners, at an expense of £4,986, capable of accommodating 250 individuals. The Bradford poor law union comprehends 8 parishes, embracing an area of 31 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 12,660. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,112. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,196. “Here was an ancient monastery,” says Tanner, in his Notitia, “dedicated to St. Lawrence, founded by St. Adhelm, who was abbot here at the time of his being made bishop, viz. A. D. 705. King Ethelred gave it to the great nunnery at Shaftesbury, in 1001. After that time I find no account of any religious society here.” The town is finely situated on the Lower Avon, by which it is divided into two portions,—that on the north being called the Old, and that on the south, the New town. The old town is built at various degrees of elevation, on a rocky ridge rising abruptly from the river’s bank, and presents a very picturesque appearance. The river is crossed by two bridges,—a very ancient one of 9 arches, and a more modern one of 4. Saturday is market-day; a fair for cattle and millinery goods is held on Trinity-Monday, and another in the hamlet of Bradford-Leigh, on August 26th. There are branches of the North Wilts, and of the Wilts and Dorset banking companies here. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of woollen cloth. Leland mentions these manufactures as flourishing here in the reign of Henry VIII. The finer cloths are made from Spanish and Saxony wool, and it is said that the river is peculiarly favourable to the dyeing of them. In 1838 there were 4 woollen mills, employing 418 hands, within this parish.—The town has never been incorporated, though it sent members to parliament in the 23^d of Edward I. and retains the appellation of ‘the borough.’ Under the Reform act its freeholders vote for the members for North Wilts. It is under the jurisdiction of certain of the county magistrates appointed for the purpose; and the petty sessions for the district of Bradford, in the division of Trowbridge, are held here.

BRADFORD-PEVERELL, a parish in the hund. of George, Dorchester union and division of the county of Dorset; 3 miles north-west by north of Dorchester. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; valued at £11 2s. 11d.; gross income £270; in the patronage of the warden and fellows of Winchester college. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1798. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. The line of a Roman road passes near the village, and in various tumuli in the neighbourhood Roman antiquities have been discovered. Pop., in 1801, including the tything of Muckleford, 216; in 1831, 330. Houses 60. Acres 2,700. A. P. £1,911. Poor rates, in 1837, £118.

BRADFORD (WEST), a township in the parish of Mitton, western division of the wapentake of Raintcliffe and Eweross, union of Clitheroe, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north of Clitheroe. There is a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1821, 564; in 1831, 522. Houses 101. Acres 1,700. A. P. £1,964. Poor rates, in 1837, 178.

BRADING, in ancient records Brerdynge or Brerdynge, a parish in the liberty of East Medina, Isle of Wight division of the county of Southampton; 7 miles east by south of Newport, and 95 south-east of London. This parish is extensive, and includes the borough of Brading. Its former bounds included the present parishes of St. Helen’s on the north, Yaverland towards the south, and Shanklin and Bonchurch to the south-west. Yaverland parish is a small oblong scarce a mile in length, and of less breadth, its south-western limit approaching the coast a very little to the east of Sandown fort. But the parish of St. Helen's on the north has been its greatest enemy, taking from it a sweep of coast for more than a mile in breadth. The mother-church of Brading still retains a sovereignty over two of these parishes, which are, Shanklin and Yaverland; who are compelled to bury their dead at Brading, and to pay to its minister ten shillings yearly by way of homage, besides an obligation to attend on Easter Sunday, if demanded, and to read the first and second lessons of the day. It is further incumbent on the parish of Shanklin that they are also to take their own minister to the burial of their dead. The living is a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; valued at £20; gross income £250; in the patronage of the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. The church is a very ancient structure, and appears to have been built as early as the year 704, by Wilfrid, then bishop of Chichester, or rather of Selsea, who was very successful in preaching the gospel to the inhabitants of the island, at that time involved in pagan darkness. On the very spot where this church was built, it is said that he baptized nearly the whole of them, consisting of about twelve hundred families. It is built on a rock of white sand-stone, which appears at the depth of a few feet from the surface. At its west end there is a square tower, in which are four bells; a spire of more modern date than the other parts of the building having been erected on it, has a very pleasing effect on a distant view. It is a Gothic structure of three aisles; and, though it appears low on the outside, has a sufficient height within, particularly the middle aisle which is very lofty. The Independents have also a place of worship here. Here is a National school, supported by subscription, in which 63 children receive education; there are also four daily and two Sunday schools. The town stands at the head of an inlet called Brading-haven, which is a marshy tract, of nearly 900 acres in extent, according to Albin, covered by the tide to a considerable depth, so that brigs of a moderate size can enter the harbour and approach the town. Attempts have been made, but hitherto without success, to exclude the sea from the area of the harbour. The most extensive was that of Sir Bevis Thelwall, in the reign of James I.; £7,000 having been expended on the works, which had nearly been completed, when an extraordinary rise of the tide destroyed them. In a history of the Isle of Wight, published in 1795, it is stated that "about 11 or 12 years ago, as a fishing vessel, when the tide was in, was sailing in her accustomed manner over these grounds, she accidentally or designedly, as a matter of speculation and curiosity, let go her dreg; on her motion being repelled, and a discovery of the cause, it was hauled in with an enormous quantity of fine oysters. The master pursued the fortune of such a favourable circumstance, and loaded his sloop in a few hours, with which he returned to Cowea. It was a matter of astonishment how he could possibly have accumulated such a valuable cargo in so short a time; but no declaration of the business was made. He waited a few days for another opportunity, and again, unperceived, had the like success. The fishermen became clamorous, and resolved to watch his motions, night and day; and he was now convinced of the impossibility of keeping the treasure to himself. The whole fleet of oyster-smacks proposed to give him each a tub of oysters, of about three shillings value, on their return to port, on condition of his leading them to this new-found source of riches; to which he prudently agreed, and each of them, after reaping their golden harvest in a few hours, gladly fulfilled the terms they had proposed. On the dispersion of this news, every fishing town from the island to the Medway, despatched their craft to share the spoil; and an almost inconceivable quantity was soon taken and conveyed to the Milton and other beds near the Thames, for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the metropolis. It is scarcely credible, that from one to three or four hundred vessels have been employed at once on these banks, in this lucrative employment; which might have been rendered a perpetual source of opulence, and afforded an annual support to many industrious persons, had their preservation been attended to as an object of public importance. But such an excessive drain has, in a great measure, destroyed the breed of them. Great quantities of mullet, flounders, and other fish, are also caught, in their proper seasons, in this harbour; but the latter are not remarkably firm, being too nearly connected with the sea. Cockles are here of an excellent quality, and in prodigious numbers; and the gathering them furnishes employment in summer to many women and children, on the ebb of the tide." The town of Brading consists of one long and irregular street. It is incorporated; but the only original charter in possession of the corporation is a grant by Edward VI. made in the first year of his reign to the bailiffs and the king's subjects and inhabitants of the town of Breardinge, of a market to be held every Wednesday, and of two fairs every year. The government is vested in a senior and junior bailiff, a recorder, town-clerk, and 13 jurats. There is a court of piepowder. The corporation possess no patronage of any kind. The town, which was formerly a place of considerable importance, has a common seal, on which are the words, 'The king's town of Brading.' Fairs are held here on May 12th and October 2d. Here is a small town-hall, used partly as a prison and market-house. The inhabitants are principally shopkeepers, each of whom, before commencing business, pays to the corporation 3s. 4d. Every person carrying on trade pays an annual sum to the same body. The highest sum paid is 2s., which is the payment by a baker; the lowest 4d., which is paid by carpenters and coopers. There is no manufacture in the town, and it is very little affected by the rapid increase of small summer residences which is taking place in many parts of the island. Pop., in 1801, 1,629; in 1831, 2,227. Houses 338. Acres 7,350. A. P. £10,908. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,492.

BRADGATE, an extra parochial liberty, in the hund. of West Goscote, county of Leicester; 5 miles north-west of Leicester. At this place are the ruins of an ancient mansion, at one period noted for its magnificence and extent. "The chapel has ceased to be used for public worship since the period of the demolition of the mansion; but contains a handsome monument of Henry, Lord Grey of Groby, and his lady; and a vault, in which the two first earls of Stamford were interred." Nichols's Leicester. The unfortunate Lady Jane Grey, beheaded by command of Queen Mary in 1554, was born here in 1537.

BRADLEY, a tything in the parish of Cumner, hund. of Horner, county of Berks; 4½ miles north-west of Abingdon. This is the property of Merton college. Pop., in 1801, 7; in 1831, 6. House 1. Other returns with the parish.

BRADLEY, a township in the parish of Malpas, upper division of the hund. of Broxton, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles south-east of Malpas, in the neighbourhood of the Ellesmere canal. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 95. Houses 18. Acres 940. A. P. £791. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

BRADLEY, a parish in the hund. of Appletree union of Burton-upon-Trent, county of Derby; 2½ miles east of Ashborne. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £5 19s. 9½d.; gross income £298; in the patronage of the dean of Lincoln. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 312; in 1831, 323. Houses 60. Acres 1,860. A. P. £2,848. Poor rates, in 1837, £188.

BRADLEY HUNDRED, in the county of Gloucester, is bounded on the north by the hundred of Kiftgate; on the east by the hundred of Slaughter; on the south-east by Brightwells Barrow hundred; on the south by Rapsgate hundred; and on the west and north-west by the hundreds of Cheltenham and Cleeve. Area 39,250 acres. Houses 999. Pop., in 1831, 5,316.

BRADLEY, a hamlet in the chapelry of Holt, parish of Medbourne, hund. of Gartree, county of Leicester; 2½ miles north-west of Rockingham. "Here was a small priory, of the order of St. Augustine, founded by Robert Bundy, or Burney, in the time of King John. It had but two canons at the time of the suppression, whose lands were valued at £20 15s. 7d. per annum; and were all granted, 29th Henry VIII., to Thomas Nevell, Esq." Tanner's Not. Mon.

BRADLEY, a parish in the hund. of Bradley-Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 2½ miles south-west of Great Grimsby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £5 10s. 10d.; gross income £151. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Nelthorpe. The children of this parish have a right to attend a free school at Laseby. Pop., in 1801, 84; in 1831, 98. Houses 17. Acres 1,450. A. P. £1,298. Poor rates, in 1837, £32.

BRADLEY, a parish in the hund. of Overton, a detached portion surrounded by the hundred of Odiham, union of Basingstoke, Kingsclere division of the county of Southampton; 6 miles west-north-west of Alton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £8 13s. 4d., and valued in the parliamentary returns at £144 16s. 7d.; gross income £175. Patron, in 1835, E. Blackburn, Esq. There is a daily school here. Charities connected with this parish produce £20 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 103. Houses 15. Acres 670. A. P. £756. Poor rates, in 1837, £79.

BRADLEY, a parish in the western division of the hund. of Cuttlestone, union and county of Stafford; 3½ miles north-west of Penkridge, and 3 west of the Grand Junction railway. It contains the liberties of Billington and Woollaston, part of Apton, Alston, Brough and Rule. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued in the parliamentary returns at £49 6s. 8d. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Sutherland. Here are a grammar and preparatory school, free to all children within the parish; endowed with land producing about £130 per annum. The preparatory school is conducted on the system of Dr. Bell. There are also two Sunday schools. Other charities connected with the parish produce £18 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 593; in 1831, 731. Houses 133. Acres 4,690. A. P. £3,565. Poor rates, in 1837, £360.—Near this village an example of spontaneous combustion is exhibited, still more interesting than the burning cliff at Weymouth. The earth is here on fire, and this fire has continued for more than sixty years, and has resisted every attempt made to extinguish it. Proceeding from an ignited stratum of coal, about four feet thick, and eight or ten yards in depth, to which the air has free access, in consequence of the main coal having been dug from beneath it, it has reduced many acres of land to a mere calx. Sulphur is sometimes found in considerable quantities on the surface of the ground, and the calx has proved a useful material in repairing the public roads.

BRADLEY. See STOCK.

BRADLEY-FIELD. See UNDERBARROW.

BRADLEY (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Risbridge, county of Suffolk; 8 miles north-west of Clare. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £17 1s. 5½d.; gross income £426. Patron, in 1835, Lord Dacre. Pop., in 1801, 395; in 1831, 527. Houses 98. Acres 2,280. A. P. £2,049. Poor rates, in 1837, £243.

BRADLEY-HAVERSTOE HUNDRED or WAPENTAKE, in the parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln, is bounded on the north-east and east by the Humber; on the south-east by the hundred of Lontheske; on the south by the hundreds of Ludborough and Walahcroft; and on the west and north-west by Yarborough hundred. Area 66,450 acres. Houses 2,314. Pop., in 1831, 11,919.

BRADLEY (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Risbridge, county of Suffolk; 7½ miles north-west of Clare. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £5 0s. 10d.; gross income £100; in the patronage, in 1835, of C. and W. Lamprella. The church contains a curious monumental brass in memory of John Daye, the printer, who died in 1584 at Walden in Essex. Pop., in 1801, 48; in 1831, 22. Houses 4. Acres 890. A. P. £985. Poor rates, in 1837, £78.

BRADLEY (MAIDEN). See MAIDEN-BRADLEY.

BRADLEY-IN-THE-MOORS, a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Totmanslow, union of Cheadle, county of Stafford; 4 miles east-south-east of Cheadle, in the vicinity of the Uttoxeter canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £16 16s., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £85; gross income £58. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Shrewsbury. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 75. Houses 17. Acres 570. A. P. £1,075. Poor rates, in 1837, £47.

BRADLEY (LOWER and UPPER), a township in the parish of Kildwick, eastern division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewecross, west riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles south-south-east of Skipton, intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Here are three daily schools, and a Sunday school with a lending library attached. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 614. Houses 112. Acres 1,630. A. P. £2,004. Poor rates, in 1837, £232.

BRADLEY (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Whorwelsdown, union of Westbury and Whorwelsdown, county of Wilts; 2 miles south of Trowbridge. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £11; gross income £400; in the patronage of Winchester college. There is a Baptist chapel here; the church was formed in 1775. There are two daily schools and a day and Sunday school, with a small endowment, in this parish. Here is an asylum for men and women, founded by Archdeacon Daubeney. Other charities connected with this parish produce about £30 per annum. Pop., in 1801, with the tything of Southwick, 922; in 1831, 2,477. Houses 466. Acres 3,020. A. P. £3,127. Poor rates, in 1837, £607.

BRADLEY (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Glaston-Twelve-Hides, union of Wells, county of Somerset; 4 miles east by south of Glastonbury, intersected by the Glastonbury and Bruton railway. Living, a curacy united with the vicarage of Pennard, East. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 132. Houses 20. Acres 300. A. P. £364. Poor rates, in 1837, £64.

BRADMORE, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Rushcliffe, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 6 miles south of Nottingham. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 325; in 1831, 360. Houses 67. Acres 1,560. A. P. £1,924. Poor rates, in 1837, £106.

BRADNINCH, or BRAINES, a borough and parish in the hund. of Hayridge, union of Tiverton, Honiton division of the county of Devon; 163 miles west of London, 8 miles north-north-east of Exeter, and 2 south-west of Collumpton, intersected by the Exeter and Bristol railway. The boundaries of the borough are the same as those of the parish of Bradninch. The corporation claim to be a corporation by prescription. They possessed the following charters:—Arthur Reginald, son of Henry I.; 10th King John, 1208; 2^o Jac. I., 13th Nov. 1603. These charters were destroyed by fire in 1666, when the guildhall and the prison were burned. The governing charter is that of James I., an exemplification of which was granted in 1667. The government is vested in a mayor, recorder, 12 masters, and an indefinite number of free burgesses. The town is pleasantly situated on an eminence, nearly surrounded by hills, and consists of a long irregular street. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of paper, for which there are here several mills, driven by water-power from the river Culm. Woollen cloths were formerly manufactured here, but this branch of trade has declined considerably; in 1838 there was only one woollen mill here, employing 54 hands. There were formerly a market and a court of pie-powder, but these have become obsolete. The mayor, with the late mayor and recorder, are justices of peace within the borough. A court of record is held on the first Monday of every month before the mayor. Petty sessions are also regularly held once a-month, but frequently every Monday; courts leet and baron for the duchy of Cornwall are held annually; and the corporation holds a quarterly court of session. The old gaol was burnt down in the recent fire which consumed the guildhall and the neighbouring buildings. The present gaol, which was finished in 1835, was built at the expense of the borough, by a liberty-rate, the corporation contributing £120, and the king, as duke of Cornwall, £100. This latter sum was intended as a subscription towards the relief of the sufferers by the fire, but was, with the consent of the officers of the duchy and of the committee for the relief of those persons, transferred to the fund for building the gaol. It is under the guildhall, and consists of two divisions,—one for males, and the other for females. The gaoler is one of the sergeants at mace. The town is well supplied with water, and a water-rate is levied under a bye-law made in 1813. The corporation possess no church patronage, and their whole income amounts to £64 10s. per annum. In 1835 there were 146 families employed in agriculture; 122 in trade and manufactures; and 47 not comprised in these classes. Charities connected with Bradninch produce about £48 per annum. "This is a barony, and was always parcel of the dukedom of Cornwall, of which the dukes were always entitled barons of Braines. This town consists of three parts, the fee, the manor, and the borough. The fee consists of freeholders, who are to attend at the lord's court twice a-year to make their presentments. The manor consists of such as hold their lands of their lord by fine, which they pay every three weeks, as they can agree: the borough, to whom the lord has granted a charter, by which they challenge a power to choose a mayor yearly, who has the government of the town, who by his place is a justice of the peace, as are likewise his next predecessors. It did anciently send two burgesses to parliament; but upon complaint that it was a burden to them, they were excused upon the payment of five marks. Other privileges they retain, viz., the cognizance of all pleas in all causes within the borough, searches, tumbrel, pillory, view and redress of bread, and free warren, for which the mayor makes an account and payment yearly at the audit kept by the king's or duke's officers." [Mag. Brit. Edn. 1738.] Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £40, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £90; gross income £102; in the patronage of the dean and canons of Windsor. The church is an ancient Gothic structure, containing a richly carved oak screen separating the chancel from the nave. The Baptists have a place of worship here. The church was formed in 1814. There are three daily schools in this parish, and a day and Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 1,187; in 1831, 1,524. Houses 310. Acres 4,320. A. P. £7,417. Poor rates, in 1837, £675.

BRADNOP, a township in the parish of Leek, northern division of the hund. of Totmonslow, county of Stafford; 2 miles east-south-east of Leek, on the post road to Ashborne. There are two daily schools, containing 50 children, and one Sunday school here. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in copper mines in the vicinity. Pop., in 1811, 420; in 1831, 467. Houses 84. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,946. Poor rates, in 1837, £192.

BRADON, a parish, containing the tythings of North and South Bradon, in the hund. of Abddick and Bulstone, union of Langport, Ilminster division of the county of Somerset; 3 miles north by east of Ilminster, in the neighbourhood of the Chard canal. Living, a sinecure rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £5 4s. 4^d.; gross income £134. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Egremont. The church has been desecrated, and the inhabitants attend public service in the parish church of Puckington. Pop., in 1801, 21; in 1831, 34. Houses 6. Acres 530. A. P. £745. Poor rates, in 1837, £10.

BRADPOLE, a parish in the hund. of Beaminster-Forum and Redhone, Bridport union and division of the county of Dorset; 1 mile north-east of Bridport. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; valued at £8 13s. 1^d. and rated in the parliamentary returns at £105; gross income £212. Patron, the Crown. There are two daily, two boarding, and two Sunday schools in this parish. In 1838 there was a flax-mill here, employing 87 hands. Pop., in 1801, 575; in 1831, 1,018. Houses 201. Acres 990. A. P. £4,299. Poor rates, in 1837, £249.

BRADSHAW, a chapelry in the parish of Bolton, hund. of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles north-east of Bolton-le-Moors. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Manchester; rated in the parliamentary returns at £75; gross income £105; in the patronage of the vicar of Bolton-le-Moors. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Bradshaw possesses several extensive bleaching establishments, which give employment to many of the inhabitants. John Bradshaw, who presided at the trial of Charles I., resided at Bradshaw-hall, in this neighbourhood. Pop., in 1801, 380; in 1831, 773. Houses 124. Acres 1,380. A. P. £2,166. Poor rates, in 1837, £310.

BRADSHAW-EDGE, a township in the parish of Chapel-in-le-Frith, hund. of High Peak, county of Derby; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west of Chapel-in-le-Frith. Pop., in 1801, 1,329; in 1831, 1,760. Houses 337. Acreage with the parish.

BRADSOLE, or ST. RADEGUND, in the parish of Polton, hund. of Bewsborough, lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent; 3 miles north-west of Dover. "Here was an abbey of the Premonstratensian order, founded A.D. 1191, by King Richard III., or Jeffery, earl of Perch, and Maud, his wife, the parents of Henry de Wengham, or some other charitable and pious persons, and commended to the patronage of St. Mary and St. Radegund. There seems to have been a design of translating this abbey to the neighbouring church of Ryvere, 9th of King John, but it did not succeed. The revenues of this monastery were returned into the exchequer, 26th Henry VIII., at £98 9s. 2d., according to Dugdale, and at £142 8s. 9d., according to Speed; and, after the dissolution, it was granted to the archbishop of Canterbury, and his successors, in exchange for some old estates of the archbishoprick." Tanner's Notitia.

BRADSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Lifton, union of Tavistock, county of Devon; 4 miles north-east by east of Launceston, on the eastern bank of the river Tamar. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £6 7s. 2d.; gross income £222; in the patronage of the bishop of Exeter. There are two daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 162. Houses 18. Acres 1,300. A. P. £1,404. Poor rates, in 1837, £67.

BRADSTONE, a hamlet in the parish of Berkeley, upper division of the hund. of Berkeley, county of Gloucester; 2 miles north-east of Berkeley. Connected with this place, Hamfallow hamlet, and Hinton tything, there are seven daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 130; in 1831, 121. Houses 26. Acreage with the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £110.

BRADWELL, a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport Pagnell, county of Buckingham; 3 miles east by south of Stoney-Stratford, intersected by the London and Birmingham railroad. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £5 11s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £213. Patron, the Crown. Here are two daily schools, one of which has a small endowment, and a Sunday school. Charities connected with this parish produce about £32 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 255; in 1831, 257. Houses 60. Acres 790. A. P. £1,550. Poor rates, in 1837, £123.

BRADWELL, a township in the parish of Sandbach, hund. of Northwich, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles north by west of Sandbach. Pop., in 1801, 252; in 1831, 297. Houses 48. Acres 1,760. A. P. £2,716. Poor rates, in 1837, £237.

BRADWELL, a hamlet in the parish of Hope, hund. of High Peak, county of Derby; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Tidswell. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here; the Methodist and Baptist churches were formed in 1811. Here are six daily schools, one of which has a small endowment, and a Sunday school, with a lending library attached. There are furnaces for smelting lead-ore in this hamlet, and in the vicinity are traces of a Roman fortification. A large natural cavern, called Bagshaw's, or the Crystallized cavern, was discovered in the neighbourhood in 1807. Its stalactites are of peculiar elegance, and it extends through numerous subterranean chambers, above four hundred yards. Here is a cotton manufactory which employs a considerable number of hands, but the majority of the inhabitants are employed in the mines of lead and calamine in the vicinity. Pop., in 1801, 955; in 1831, 1,153. Houses 252. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £1,824. Poor rates, in 1837, £296.

BRADWELL, a parish in the hund. of Witham, union of Baintree, county of Essex; 2 miles west of Coggeshall, on the southern bank of the Blackwater river. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £12; gross income £260; in the patronage, in 1835, of the Rev. M. J. Brunwin. There is a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 318. Houses 53. Acres 3,210. A. P. £1,334. Poor rates, in 1837, £167.

BRADWELL, a parish in the hund. of Mutford and Lothingland, county of Suffolk; 3 miles south-west of Great Yarmouth. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £28; gross income £805. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Anguish. Pop., in 1801, 199; in 1831, 257. Houses 51. Acres 1,540. A. P. £3,372. Poor rates, in 1837, £229.

BRADWELL-ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Newport, county of Buckingham; 3 miles east-south-east of Stoney-Stratford, intersected by the London and Birmingham railroad. "Manefelmus or Meinfelin, baron of Wolverton, founded here, in the time of Stephen, a priory of Black monks, which was at first a cell to Luffield. It was dedicated to St. Mary, and was one of the small monasteries mentioned in the bull of Pope Clement VII., to be granted to Cardinal Wolsey, 17th Henry VIII. But, 23rd Henry VIII., it being valued at £53 11s. 2d. per annum, came by way of exchange to the monks of Shene, and as parcel of that abbey, was granted, 34th Henry VIII., to Arthur Longfield." Tanner's Not. Mon.—Pop., in 1801, 12; in 1831, 17. Houses 3. Acres 650.

BRADWELL-NEAR-THE-SEA, a parish in the hund. of Dengey, union of Maldon, county of Essex; 12 miles east of Maldon; bounded on the north by the estuary of the Blackwater river, and on the east by the North sea. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £48; gross income £1,720; nett income £1,624. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Schreiber. Here is an ancient chapel, dedicated to St. Peter, now used as a barn. There are six daily schools in this parish, one of which is supported by endowment. A fair is held on June 24th for toys. Camden considers this to have been the site of the ancient Saxon city, Ithancestre, and of the Roman station, Othona. Pop., in 1801, 720; in 1831, 956. Houses 162. Acres 3,870. A. P. £7,528. Poor rates, in 1837, £497.

BRADWORTHY, a parish in the hund. of Black Torrington, union of Bideford, county of Devon; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by west of Holsworthy. Living, a vicarage with the chapel of St. Pancras-Wyke annexed in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £25 5s. 5d.; gross income £283. Patron, the Crown. There are two daily schools containing 90 pupils, and a Sunday school, in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 634; in 1831, 1,027. Houses 170. Acres 12,220. A. P. £3,205. Poor rates, in 1837, £319.

BRAFFERTON, a township in the parish of Great Aycklyff, south-eastern division of Darlington ward, union of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by east of Darlington, intersected by the Great North of England railway. Here are a meeting-house for Methodists, a daily, and a day and Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 212; in 1831, 247. Houses 52. Acres 2,080. A. P. £2,203. Poor rates, in 1837, £118.

BRAFFERTON, originally BROADFORD-TOWN, a parish in the union of Easingwold, comprising the township of Brafferton in the wapentake of Bulmer, the township of Thornton-bridge in Hallikeld, and the township of Helperby. It is within the liberty of St. Peter of York, but is locally situated in the wapentake of Bulmer, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-east of Boroughbridge; in the immediate vicinity of the Great North of England railroad. Brafferton and Helperby are apparently but one village, occupying opposite sides of the same street. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; valued at £9 15s. 6d.; gross income £307. Patron, the Crown. There are two daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £27 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 714; in 1831, 872. Houses 182. Acres 4,960. A. P. £3,424. Poor rates, in 1838, £206 4s. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 133; in 1831, 152. Houses 31. Acres 1,990. A. P. £1,254. Poor rates, in 1838, £50 1s.

BRAFFIELD-ON-THE-GREEN, a parish in the hund. of Wymersley, union of Hardington, county of Northampton; 5 miles east by south of Northampton. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to Houghton-on-the-Green. There are two Sunday schools here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £13 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 264; in 1831, 460. Houses 84. Acres 1,980. A. P. £1,177. Poor rates, in 1838, £304 6s.

BRAILES DIVISION, in the hund. of King-ton, county of Warwick. Area 30,260 acres. Houses 1,155. Pop., in 1831, 5,918.

BRAILES, a parish and village in the Brailes division of the hund. of Kington, union of Ship-ton-upon-Stour, Warwickshire; 4½ miles east by south of Ship-ton-upon-Stour. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; valued at £25; gross income £344. Patron, in 1835, S. Thornton, Esq. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1784. The Roman Catholics have a chapel here. Here is a school founded in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, with an annuity of £8 1s. 8d., and since augmented to £64 8s. 2d. It is free to all poor children resident in the parish. There are also 3 daily schools in this parish, besides a day and Sunday school, and two Sunday National schools. The hills in this parish present fine prospects. A fair is held here on Easter Tuesday for horses, cows, and sheep. Pop., in 1801, 960; in 1831, 1,272. Houses 255. Acres 5,220. A. P. £11,196. Poor rates, in 1838, £631 17s.

BRAILSFORD, a parish in the hund. of Apple-tree, county of Derby; 7 miles north-west by west of Derby. Living, a rectory, with that of Osmaston annexed, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £9 19s. 2d.; gross income £773; nett income £673. Patron, in 1835, Earl Ferrers. Here are 3 daily schools containing about 90 children, besides an infant and a Sunday school. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. Pop., in 1801, 648; in 1831, 780. Houses 143. Acres 5,300. A. P. £6,912. Poor rates, in 1838, £194 19s.

BRAINES. See BRADNINC.

BRAINTFIELD, or BRAMFIELD, a parish within the liberty of St. Albans, but locally situated in the hund. and union of Hertford, county of Hertford; 3½ miles north-west of Hertford. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £11 6s. 8d.; gross income £268. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Bouchier. This living was, according to Matthew Paris, the first enjoyed by Thomas à Becket. There is a day school in this parish.—Pop., in 1801, 192; in 1831, 204. Houses 34. Acres 1,540. A. P. £1,701. Poor rates, in 1838, £60.

BRAINTREE, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Hinckford, union of Baintree, county of Essex; 40 miles north-east of London, 8 east of Dunmow, and 7½ north-west of the railroad from London to Norwich. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £12 13s. 4d.; gross income £227. Patroness, in 1835, Lady Stewart. The church, a spacious structure, stands on the summit of a mount supposed to have been the site of an ancient entrenchment. The former church stood anciently at half-a-mile's distance from the town, near the Bishop's palace, of which some remains still exist. It was of old a rectory sine cura. In after ages it was appropriated to the monastery of the Carthusians, and the vicarage became the gift of the Charter-house, London, and so continued till the dissolution, when it was given to James Mitchell, whose heirs sold them to John Godfrey, who passed them to Richard Lord Rich, who settled the rectory upon the school and almshouse at Felsted, to pay £30 1s. 8d. in money, and a certain allowance in malt and wheat. The Baptists, Independents, Methodists, and Society of Friends, have places of worship here. The Independent church has existed since 1788; the chapel is a very handsome structure, built in 1832, and seating 1,500. One Baptist church was formed in 1690, and a second in 1835. There are here four daily schools, one of which is supported by an endowment of £63 per annum; in the British school about 200 boys and 60 girls are educated. Here is a fund of £350 per annum, derived from an estate at Tolleshunt d'Arcy, purchased with the sum of £2,800, which Henry Smith, alderman of London, bequeathed in the reign of Charles I. for the benefit of the poor of this parish. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £130 per annum.—Baintree is divided from the village of Bocking by the turnpike road. It is mentioned in Domesday-book under the names of Raines and Branchetreu, and then comprehended the territory of Raine as well as Baintree. It is one of the polling-places for the members for North Essex; and the petty-sessions for the southern division of the hundred are held here. The market, which was granted in 1199, is on Wednesday. Fairs are held on May 8th, and October 2d and 3d, for cattle, butter, and cheese. In 1838 there was a silk-mill here, employing 106 hands. Silk-throwing was introduced here in 1810. Some crapes are manufactured by the hand-loom for the London dealers. The number of weavers in Baintree, Bocking, and the vicinity, in 1838, was about 700, whose average wages would not exceed 8s. a-week. Straw-plaiting has been recently introduced. The manufacture of woollen-cloth—introduced into Baintree in the reign of Queen Elizabeth by some Flemings who had fled to England to avoid the persecution of the duke of Alva—has declined. Pop., in 1801, 2,821; in 1831, 3,222. Houses 708. Acres 2,500. A. P. £4,493. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,518.—The Baintree poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, embracing an area of 65 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 15,097. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £13,448. Expenditure, in 1838, £9,495. See BOCKING.

BRAISEWORTH, or BREISWORTH, a parish in the hund. and union of Hartismere, county of Suffolk; 2 miles south-south-west of Eye, intersected by the Eastern Counties railroad. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £4 8s. 1½d.; gross income £149. Patron, in 1835, Sir E. Kerrison. There is a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 156. Houses 27. Acres 1,400. A. P. £372. Poor rates, in 1837, £74.

BRAITHWAITE, a township in the parish of Crosshwaite, ward of Allerdale above Darwent, county of Cumberland; 2½ miles west of Keawick. There are two daily schools here for the townships of Braithwaite and Coledale, and the chapelries of Newland and Thornwaite. Pop., in 1801, 282; in 1831, 245. Houses 50. Acreage with the parish.

BRAITHWELL, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Doncaster, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles south-west by south of Doncaster. It contains the townships of Braithwell and Bramley. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Bramley annexed, in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £7 7s. 6d.; gross income £330. Patron, the Crown. The vicarial tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1765. There are three daily schools, one of which has an endowment, and two Sunday schools, in this parish. Some Roman antiquities have been found in the vicinity. Pop., in 1801, 569; in 1831, 745. Houses 163. Acres 2,990. A. P. £4,061. Poor rates, in 1837, £246. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 331; in 1831, 455. Houses 97. Acres 2,010. A. P. £2,432. Poor rates, in 1837, £157. See BRAMLEY.

BRAMBER RAPE, in the western division of the county of Sussex, contains 11 hundreds; and is bounded on the north by the county of Surrey; on the east by the rape of Lewes; on the south by the English channel; and on the west by the rape of Arundel. Area 116,650 acres. Houses 5,073. Pop., in 1831, 30,113.

BRAMBER, a parish in the hund. and union of Steyning, rape of Bramber, county of Sussex; 50 miles south of London, and ½ mile south-east of Steyning, intersected by the river Adur. Living, a discharged rectory, united with Butulph, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; valued at £10 6s. 8d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £165; in the patronage of Magdalene college, Oxford. The church is an ancient structure, supposed to have belonged to a former priory. It is much mutilated, but presents some fine specimens of Norman architecture. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish; and some ruins in the Saxon style, belonging to an ancient castle, which is mentioned in Domesday-book, and was once of great extent. This place, which now consists of a few cottages, was formerly of much greater importance. It was a borough by prescription, and returned two members to parliament in the reign of Edward I., and continued to do so regularly from the 7th Edward IV. till the year 1832, when it was disfranchised. The right of election was vested in the occupiers of ancient houses, or houses built on ancient foundations, and paying scot and lot. These were about 20 in number; and as the tenures belonged to the duke of Rutland and Lord Calthorpe, each of these noblemen returned a member. Pop., in 1801, 91; in 1831, 97. Houses 21. Acres 670. A. P. £519. Poor rates, in 1837, £24.

BRAMCOTE, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Broxtow, union of Shardlow, county of Nottingham; 4½ miles west-south-west of Nottingham, in the neighbourhood of the Midland Counties railroad. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Attenborough. There are two daily schools containing 49 children, and also a boarding and a Sunday school, in this parish. Charities connected with Bramcote produce £24 per annum.

Pop., in 1801, 354; in 1831, 562. Houses 114. Acres 1,000. A. P. £2,444. Poor rates, in 1837, £265.

BRAMCOTT, a hamlet in the parish of Bulkington, Kirby division of the hund. of Knightlow, county of Warwick; 4 miles south-east of Nuneaton, in the vicinity of the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal. Pop., in 1811, 39; in 1821, 25.

BRAMDEAN, a parish in the hund. of Bishop's Sutton, union of Alresford, Alton division of the county of Southampton; 4 miles south by east of New Alresford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; valued at £8 13s. 9½d.; gross income £210; in the patronage of the bishop of Winchester. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 215; in 1831, 215. Houses 39. Acres 1,360. A. P. £1,232. Poor rates, in 1837, £179.

BRAMERTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Henstead, county of Norfolk; 5 miles south-east of Norwich, in the neighbourhood of the London and Norwich railroad. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £6; no return. Patron, in 1835, R. Fellowes, Esq. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £9 10s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 202. Houses 24. Acres 1,000. A. P. £352. Poor rates, in 1837, £143.

BRAMFIELD, a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; 2 miles south of Halesworth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £6 7s. 6d.; gross income £172. Patron, the Crown. There are three daily schools in this parish, one of which has a small endowment, and a Sunday school. Here are almshouses for four poor people, who have each a room and a rood of land, founded by Thomas Neale, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 552; in 1831, 667. Houses 141. Acres 2,050. A. P. £3,300. Poor rates, in 1837, £412.

BRAMFORD, a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; 3 miles north-west of Ipswich, in the neighbourhood of the Eastern Counties railroad. Living, a vicarage, with that of Burstall annexed, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £18 3s. 9d., and in the parliamentary returns at £91; gross income £81; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Canterbury. There are two daily and two Sunday schools in this parish, and almshouses for six poor widows. Other charities connected with the parish produce £25 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 762; in 1831, 867. Houses 180. Acres 1,940. A. P. £4,096. Poor rates, in 1837, £498.

BRAMHALL, a township in the parish and union of Stockport, hund. of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester; 8 miles south of Stockport, in the vicinity of the Manchester and Birmingham railroad. Here are three daily schools, containing 91 children, and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 1,083; in 1831, 1,401. Houses 231. Acres 3,250. A. P. £4,486. Poor rates, in 1837, £404.

BRAMHAM, a parish, partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the upper division of the wapentake of Barkstone-ash, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-south-east of Wetherby, and 6½ west of the York and North Midland railway. It comprises the townships of Bramham and Clifford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £6 7s. 6d.; gross income £165; in the patronage of the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. Here is an endowment of £11 per annum, arising from various private benefactions, for the education of six children, four of whom must belong to the township of Bramham, and two to that of Clifford. There are two daily, two day and Sunday, and three Sunday schools, in this parish. In 1838 there was a flax-mill here, employing 53 hands. In the year 1408, Sir Thomas Rokeby, sheriff of Yorkshire, fought and defeated the earl of Northumberland here, thereby securing the crown to Henry IV. On Bramham-moor are large remains of the Roman way, called Watling-street. The following quaint observations on the view from the common were made by Mr. John Watson of Malton, in the year 1781:—"Upon the middle of this moor a man may see 10 miles around him; within those 10 miles there is as much freestone as would build ten cities, each as large as York; within those 10 miles there is as much good oak-timber as would build those ten cities; there is as much limestone and coals to burn it into lime as the building of those ten cities would require; there is also as much clay and sand and coals to burn them into bricks and tiles as would build those ten cities; within those 10 miles there are two iron forges sufficient to furnish iron for the building of those ten cities, and ten thousand tons to spare; within those 10 miles there is lead sufficient for the ten cities, and ten thousand fadders to spare; within those 10 miles there is a good coal seam sufficient to furnish those ten cities with firing for 10,000 years; within those 10 miles there are three navigable rivers, from any of which a man may take shipping and sail to any part of the world; within those 10 miles there are 70 gentlemen's houses, all keeping coaches, and the least of them an Esquire, and ten parks and forests well-stocked with deer; within those 10 miles there are ten market-towns, one of which may be supposed to return £10,000 per week." Pop., in 1801, 1,452; in 1831, 2,403. Houses 489. Acres 5,260. A. P. £5,433. Poor rates, in 1837, £454. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 792; in 1831, 972. Houses 270. Acres 3,760. A. P. £2,817. Poor rates, in 1837, £229.

BRAMHOPE, a township in that part of the parish of Otley, which is in the upper division of the hund. of Skyrack, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles east-south-east of Otley. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £43 6s. 8d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £130; gross income £48; in the patronage, in 1835, of trustees. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1805. Here is a daily school endowed with £9 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 359. Houses 72. Acres 1,290. A. P. £2,202. Poor rates, in 1837, £68.

BRAMLEY, a parish in the hund. and union of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Basingstoke, through which the London and Southampton railroad passes. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; valued at £7 3s. 6d.; gross income £441; in the patronage of Queen's college, Oxford. There is a day and Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 404; in 1831, 429. Houses 83. Acres 2,350. A. P. £2,749. Poor rates, in 1837, £372.

BRAMLEY, a parish in the first division of the hund. of Blackheath, union of Hambledon, county of Surrey; 3 miles south by east of Guildford, intersected by the Arun and Wey canal. There are two daily schools and a Sunday school here. Charities connected with this parish produce £14 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 637; in 1831, 842. Houses 156. Acres 4,420. A. P. £3,926. Poor rates, in 1837, £448.

BRAMLEY, a chapelry in the parish of St. Peter, within the liberty of the town of Leeds, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles west-north-west of Leeds, in the vicinity of the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £30 1s.; gross income £289; in the patronage of the vicar of Leeds. There are here two dissenting meeting-houses; a Baptist church, formed in 1768, and a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1811. There are here seven daily schools, one of which has an endowment, and five Sunday schools. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of woollen cloths. Excellent stone and slate are found here. Pop., in 1801, 2,562; in 1831, 7,039. Houses 1,378. Acres 2,490. A. P. £7,096. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,104.

BRAMLEY AND GRANGE, a township in the parish of Braithwell, southern division of the wapentake of Strathford and Tickhill, west riding of Yorkshire; 10 miles east by north of Sheffield, and $5\frac{1}{2}$ east of the York and North Midland railway. There are two daily schools, containing 32 children, and a Sunday school, in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 258; in 1831, 290. Houses 66. Acres 980. A. P. £1,629. Poor rates, in 1837, £89.

BRAMPFORD-SPEKE, a parish in the hund. of Wonford, Crockerwell division and union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 4 miles north of Exeter, intersected by the Exeter and Bristol railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £10; gross income £239. Patron, the Crown. There are three daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 273; in 1831, 374. Houses 67. Acres 670. A. P. £3,371. Poor rates, in 1837, £237.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the ward of Eskdale, union of Bampton, county of Cumberland; 311 miles north by west of London, and 10 east by north of Carlisle, intersected by the Carlisle and Newcastle railroad, which passes $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of the town. It comprehends the townships of Easeby and Naworth-castle. Bampton—which is by Camden supposed to be on the site of the Roman station Bremonturacum—stands in a deep and narrow vale near the junction of the rivers Irthing and Gelt. It is long, irregularly built, and contains few modern houses. During the wars in the reign of Edward I. it received much damage, previous to which time it was a place of much greater importance. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of gingham and checks, and in two extensive breweries in the vicinity. Here is a neat town-hall, an octagonal building, erected in 1817 by the earl of Carlisle, who is lord of the manor. The lower part is formed into piazzas, which are occupied by the country people on the market-day. Coal is brought from Tindal-fell to which a railway extends, and trade is facilitated by the vicinity of the Newcastle and Carlisle line. Tuesday is market-day, and fairs for horned cattle and horses are held on the second Wednesday after Whitsunday, and the last Wednesday in August. Corn, which is admitted free of toll, is largely sold on market-day. Petty-sessions are held here for the division of Eskdale; and courts-leet and baron and view of frank-pledge for the whole barony of Gilsland, are held at Easter and Michaelmas, in the town-hall. Bampton is one of the polling-places for the members for East Cumberland. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; valued at £8; gross income £468. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Carlisle. When Bampton common was enclosed in 1777, land was assigned to the vicar, in lieu of all tithes, except the payment of $7\frac{1}{4}$ d. annually from each house. The church has been abandoned, and a large parochial chapel in the town is used instead of it. The old building stands about a mile from the town, and is only used when persons burying in the cemetery require the performance of the funeral service. The Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, Presbyterians, and Independents have places of worship here. There are six daily and two Sunday schools in this parish, and an hospital for 6 aged men and 6 women, founded by Edward, earl of Carlisle, in 1688. Pop., in 1801, 2,125; in 1831, 3,345. Houses 581. Acres 16,970. A. P. £8,564. Poor rates, in 1837, £820. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 1,682; in 1831, 2,842. Houses 488. Acreage with the parish.—A work-house has been erected here for the union of Brampton, by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £1,250. The Brampton poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, embracing an area of 149 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 10,080.—There are penny-posts to Haydonbridge and Haltwhistle. About two miles to the south of Brampton is Naworth castle, the seat of the earls of Carlisle. (See NAWORTH CASTLE.) At Middle-Gelt bridge, the Newcastle and Carlisle railroad is carried across two public roads, and the river Gelt, by an oblique viaduct rising 80 feet from the bed of the river, and consisting of 3 arches, each of 33 feet span.—On the western declivity of a range of mountains, extending from Brampton to Brough, in Westmoreland, a distance of 40 miles, a remarkably violent wind occasionally prevails, blowing with tremendous violence down the western slope of the mountain, extending two or three miles over the plain at the base, often overturning horses with carriages, and producing much damage, especially during the period when ripe corn is standing. It is accompanied by a loud noise, like the roaring of distant thunder; and is carefully avoided by travellers in that district, as being fraught with considerable danger. It is termed the helm wind; and its presence is indicated by a belt of clouds, denominated the helm bar, which rests in front of the mountain, three or four miles west of its summit, and apparently at an equal elevation, remaining immovable during twenty-four or even thirty-six hours, and collecting or attracting to itself all the light clouds which approach it. As long as this bar continues unbroken, the wind blows with unceasing fury, not in gusts, like other storms, but with continued pressure. This wind extends only as far as the spot where the bar is vertical, or immediately over head; while at the distance of a mile farther west, as well as to the east of the summit of the mountain, it is not unfrequently almost a perfect calm.

BRAMPTON WITH CUTTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Scarsdale, county of Derby; 3 miles west by north of Chesterfield, through which the North Midland railroad passes. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued in the parliamentary returns at £118; gross income £143; in the patronage of the dean of Lincoln. A new church was erected here, in 1832, for the district comprising Walton, part of Brampton, and part of Newbold, by the parliamentary commissioners, in the Gothic style, with a tower, at an expense of £2,930 4s. Sitings 724. The living is a curacy of the yearly value of £54; also in the patronage of the dean of Lincoln. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, and Independents, have places of worship here; the Primitive Methodist church was formed in 1828. There are two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £8 10s. per annum, a day and Sunday National school, and five Sunday schools in this parish. Coal and iron-ore are found in this parish, and pottery-ware is manufactured to a considerable extent. There are also extensive bleaching greens. Charities connected with this parish produce about £90 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 2,047; in 1831, 3,595. Houses 700.

Acres 8,820. A. P. £6,180. Poor rates, in 1837, £667.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union and county of Huntingdon; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-west of Huntingdon. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £8 1s. 4d.; gross income £160; in the patronage of the prebendary of Lincoln cathedral. The prebendal and vicarial tithes, the property of the prebend of Brampton and the vicar, were commuted in 1772. There are here two daily, two Sunday, and two infant schools, supported by Lady Oliver B. Sparrow. This was the birth-place of Samuel Pepya, Esq., secretary to the admiralty under Charles II. and James II., and, in 1684, elected president of the Royal Society, which office he held for ten years. Charities connected with this parish produce £28 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 780; in 1831, 1,064. Houses 238. Acres 3,640. A. P. £6,163. Poor rates, in 1837, £750.

BRAMPTON, a township or chapelry in the parish of Torksey, wapentake of Well, and parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Gainsborough, on the eastern bank of the river Trent, over which there is a ferry here. The great and small tithes, the property of the prebend of Stowe and lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1777. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 103. Houses 19. Acres 790. A. P. £4,228. Poor rates, in 1837, £111.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Erpingham, union of Aylsham, county of Norfolk; 2 miles south-east of Aylsham, intersected by the river Bure. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; valued at £5, and in the parliamentary returns at £96 19s. 11d.; gross income £160. Patron, in 1835, R. Marsham, Esq. The church has a curious tower. Some Roman antiquities have been found here. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 207. Houses 41. Acres 530. A. P. £547. Poor rates, in 1837, £68.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Market-Harborough, county of Northampton; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Market-Harborough. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £21 6s. 8d.; gross income £407. Patron, in 1835, Earl Spencer. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 100. Houses 21. Acres 2,290. A. P. £2,928. Poor rates, in 1837, £36.

BRAMPTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Halesworth. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £20; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. N. T. Leman. There are two daily schools, containing 40 children, and a Sunday school endowed with £9 6s. 8d. per annum, in this parish. Charities connected with this parish produce £56 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 236; in 1831, 289. Houses 45. Acres 1,800. A. P. £1,992. Poor rates, in 1837, £351.

BRAMPTON (ABBOT'), a parish in the hund. of Greytree, union of Ross, county of Hereford; 2 miles north of Ross, on the eastern bank of the river Wye. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; valued at £12 10s.; gross income £250; in the patronage of the bishop of Hereford. There are an infant and a daily school, containing 59 children, and two Sunday schools here. Charities connected with this parish produce £7 per annum. Annual courts leet and baron are held at this place. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 218. Houses 31. Acres 1,600. A. P. £2,491. Poor rates, in 1837, £189.

BRAMPTON-BRYAN, a parish, partly in the hund. and union of Knighton, county of Radnor, South Wales, and partly in the hund. of Wignore, county of Hereford; 5 miles east of Knighton, on the southern bank of the river Teme. The former consists of the lordship of Stanage, and the latter comprises the townships of Brampton-Bryan, and Boresford, and Pedwardine: which see. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, valued at £5 11s. 0^d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Oxford. There are two daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £18 per annum. The village is of considerable antiquity, having been established by the Norman Bryan de Brampton, of whose castle there are still some remains. This fortress, after being twice besieged, was destroyed by the royalists in the parliamentary war. A fair is held on June 22d for horned cattle, horses, and wool. Pop., in 1801, 323; in 1831, 404. Houses 66. Acres, excluding the lordship of Stanage, 3,190. A. P. £2,506. Poor rates, in 1837, £251. Pop. of the township in 1801, 127; in 1831, 140. Houses 23. A. P. £1,347. Poor rates, in 1837, £114.

BRAMPTON-CHAPEL, a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-Grove, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Northampton. The chapel has long ago been demolished. There is a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 206. Houses 39. Acres 1,330. A. P. £2,238. Poor rates, in 1837, £122.

BRAMPTON-CHURCH, or BRAMPTON-MAGNA, a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-Grove, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 4 miles north-west by north of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £25 19s. 7d.; gross income £400; in the patronage of the president and fellows of Corpus Christi college, Oxford. There is a Sunday school here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £25 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 173; in 1831, 176. Houses 34. Acres 1,100. A. P. £1,338. Poor rates, in 1837, £123.

BRAMPTON (LITTLE), a joint township with Rod and Nash, parish of Presteigne, hund. of Wigmore, county of Hereford; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles north of King-ton. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 157. Houses 25. A. P. £1,954. Poor rates, in 1837, £132.

BRAMPTON-EN-LE-MORTHEN, a township in the parish of Treton, southern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-east of Rotherham, in the vicinity of the North Midland railroad. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1771. There is a day and Sunday National school here. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 142. Houses 31. Acres 1,090. A. P. £1,192. Poor rates, in 1837, £104.

BRAMSHALL, a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Totmonslow, union of Uttoxeter, county of Stafford; 2 miles west of Uttoxeter. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £4 3s. 9d.; gross income £100. Patron, in 1835, Lord Willoughby. There are two daily schools here. Charities connected with this parish produce £15 10s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 170. Houses 31. Acres 1,310. A. P. £1,964. Poor rates, in 1837, £110.

BRAMSHAW, a parish, union of New Forest, partly in the hund. of Cawden and Cadworth, county of Wilts, and partly in the northern division of the hund. of New Forest, Romsey division of the county of Southampton; 6 miles north-north-west of Lyndhurst. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; valued in the parliamentary returns at £52; gross income £148; in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of Salisbury. There are four daily and two day and Sunday schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 490; in 1831, 799. Houses 133. Acres 2,760. A. P. £2,347. Poor rates, in 1837, £251.

BRAMSHILL (GREAT), a tything in the parish of Eversley, hund. of Holdshott, Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-west of Hartford Bridge. Pop., in 1811, 149; in 1831, 156. Houses 32. Poor rates, in 1837, £167. The mansion of Bramshill, which stands in a spacious park in the vicinity, was the seat of Lord Zouche, and is supposed to have been built by him as a palace for prince Henry, son of James I.

BRAMSHILL (LITTLE), a tything in the parish of Eversley, out hund. of Odiham, Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton; about 6 miles north-north-east of Odiham. Pop., in 1801, 8; in 1831, 10. Houses 2.

BRAMSHOT, a parish in the hund. of Alton north, or Alton division of the county of Southampton; 4 miles west of Haslemere. This parish includes the hamlet of Liphook. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; valued at £13 19s. 2d.; gross income £645; in the patronage of the provost and fellows of Queen's college, Oxford. There are four daily and two Sunday schools here. Pop., in 1801, 767; in 1831, 1,210. Houses 187. Acres 6,190. A. P. £3,714. Poor rates, in 1837, £336.

BRAMWICH (KIRK), a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, union of Doncaster, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles west by south of Thorne, intersected by the Stainforth and Keadley canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £12 18s. 4d.; gross income £618. Patron, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. There are two daily schools, and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 214; in 1831, 211. Houses 44. Acres 1,200. A. P. £1,738. Poor rates, in 1837, £138.

BRAMWICH (SAND), a hamlet in the parishes of Barnby-upon-Don, and Hatfield, lower division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, west riding of Yorkshire. See BARNBY-UPON-DON.

BRAMWRA. See THOMAS CLOSE.

BRANAR and MARCHELED, a chapelry in the parish of Llangerniew, hund. of Isdulas, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 7 miles north-east of Llanrwst. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1821, 169.

BRANCASTER, or BRANCHESTER, a parish in the hund. of Smithdon, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 4 miles west-north-west of Burnham-Westgate, on the eastern shore of the promontory of St. Edmund's Point, possessing a quay for vessels. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £24; gross income £1,000; nett income £979. Patron, in 1835, H. Holloway, Esq. There are three daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed; three infant schools, and a Sunday school; also two almshouses for four poor widows. Other charities connected with this parish produce £15 per annum. This was the site of the Roman station Brannodunum. Pop., in 1801, 563; in 1831, 851. Houses 194. Acres 3,340. A. P. £2,978. Poor rates, in 1837, £514.

BRANCEPETH, a parish in the north-western division of the ward of Darlington, union and copalatine of Durham; 4 miles south-west of Durham, and $\frac{1}{2}$ west of the Great North of England railway. A branch of the Bishop-Auckland and Wear-dale railroad, after pursuing a course a little to the west of north, 3 miles 16 chains in length, terminates at Crook, in this parish. It contains the townships of Brancepeth, Brandon with Bybottles, Crook with Billy-row, Hedley-hope, Hemlington-row, Stockley, and Willington. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham; valued at £60 10s. 5d.; in gross income £970; nett income £811. Patron, in 1835, R. E. D. Shaftoe. The church is a handsome cruciform edifice, containing some monuments to the family of Nevill, earls of Westmoreland. There are five daily, and two Sunday schools here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £35 per annum. Coal and stone are found in abundance in this parish. In the vicinity is the noble mansion called Brancepeth-castle, erected on the site of an ancient structure which originally belonged to the Nevills. Pop., in 1801, 1,508; in 1831, 1,449. Houses 273. Acres 21,850. A. P. £19,498. Poor rates, in 1837, £939. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 367; in 1831, 329. Houses 66. Acres 7,050. A. P. £5,468. Poor rates, in 1837, £235.

BRANCH AND DOLE HUNDRED, in the county of Wilts. Area 38,440 acres. Houses 1,627. Pop., in 1831, 8,560.

BRANCHESTER. See BRANCASTER.

BRANDESTON, a parish in the hund. of Eynesford, union of St. Faith, county of Norfolk; 3 miles south-east of Reepham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £7 12s. 8½d.; gross income £185; in the patronage of the president and fellows of Magdalene college, Oxford. There is a daily school here. William Gurney, by indenture, bearing date, 3d May, 9^o Elizabeth, bequeathed 20 acres, 2 roods, 31 poles, for the benefit of the poor of this parish. The rents, amounting to £23 5s. per annum, are generally distributed on the second Tuesday in January, to the widows and other old and infirm persons. In January 1834, £1 was given to each widow; the other persons received from 4s. to 17s. each. The sums have been increased of late years by the distribution of £30, received for timber in 1828; but this fund is now exhausted. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 96. Houses 14. Acres 580. A. P. £807. Poor rates, in 1837, £163.

BRANDESTON, a parish in the hund. of Loes, union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; 3½ miles south-west of Framlingham, intersected by the river Deben. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £8 13s. 4d.; gross income £100. Patrons, in 1835, trustees. There are two daily schools in this parish, and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 287; in 1831, 569. Houses 64. Acres 1,060. A. P. £1,873. Poor rates, in 1837, £380.

BRANDON WITH BYSHOTTLES, a township in the parish of Brancepeth, north-western division of the ward of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham; 3 miles west-south-west of Durham. There are two daily schools in this township, and a paper manufactory. Pop., in 1801, 522; in 1831, 478. Houses 90. Acres 3,460. A. P. £5,515. Poor rates, in 1837, £282.

BRANDLING railway. See GATESHEAD.

BRANDON, a township in the parish of Eglington, northern division of Coquetdale ward, county of Northumberland; 8½ miles east-south-east of Wooler, pleasantly situated on the north side of the Breamish. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 160. Houses 21. Acreage with the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £44.

BRANDON, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Lackford, union of Thetford, county of Suffolk; 78 miles north-north-east of London, and 42 north-north-east of Ipswich, on the Little Ouse or Brandon river, over which a bridge has been thrown here. Living, a rectory consolidated with Wangford, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £20 18s. 1½d.; gross income £584. Patron, in 1835, Admiral Wilson.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1812. There are in this parish seven daily schools, one of which, a free grammar-school, is endowed by Mr. Wright, late of Downham-hall, for teaching Latin and Greek, but by an arrangement of the trustees 40 children, sons of the poor, of working mechanics, and of small tradesmen of Brandon, Downham, Weeting, and Wangford, are instructed in the ordinary branches of an English education. There are also three Sunday schools. Friday is market-day, but the market is poorly attended; fairs for cattle, toys, &c., are held on February 14th, June 11th, and November 11th. Brandon has a considerable trade in corn, malt, coal, bricks, iron, and timber. The dukes of Suffolk took their name from this place, it now gives the title of duke to the Hamilton family. "Brandon is the only place in England in which gun-flints are now made to any considerable extent. During the war, and before the invention of percussion-caps, when the demand for gun-flints was much greater than it is at present, some were made at Lewisham, Maidstone, Purfleet, Greenhithe, and Northfleet; but none are made there at present, although the largest flint-merchant in the world resides at the last-mentioned place. The gun-flint makers at Brandon say that they have an advantage over every other place in England, in consequence of the material which they obtain in the pits below their heath being better than is to be had anywhere else. They say, that the flints which they are enabled thereby to make will last longer than other flints, and are most certain in their fire. This, from information elsewhere obtained, I consider to be true. At Brandon they said that the French no longer made gun-flints, and, in fact, that they themselves were now the only makers in the whole world, and yet the seventy or eighty men now employed could barely make a living by their trade; the cessation of war, and the invention of percussion-caps, had so much diminished their business. The masses of flint from which the gun-flints are made at Brandon are obtained from a common about a mile south-east from the town. The chalk is within six feet of the surface. The men sink a shaft down about six feet, then proceed about three feet horizontally, and sink another shaft lower down into the chalk about the same depth of six feet, and sometimes they fall in with a floor of flint within this depth. They proceed again about three feet horizontally, and sink another shaft six feet; and so they proceed, going sometimes to the depth of about thirty feet. By making their shafts only about six feet in depth, they are able to descend, and hand up the stone from one stage to another without the aid of any machinery; and although a windlass, rope, and bucket might save labour, they would require capital, which the poor men who follow this occupation cannot command. They pay a rent of five shillings to the parish for every cart-load, which is as much as three horses can draw, and of this they grievously complain. In the descent of about thirty feet, they generally find three floors of flint, and sometimes as many as four. At every floor of flint which they find they excavate horizontally for several yards, even as far as twenty yards below the chalk. The flint is in large blocks, in form much like the septaria stone. The men break the blocks into moderately-sized pieces, so as to be enabled to hand them up from stage to stage. When engaged in doing this, a man places himself about half-way up between two stages, so as to receive the stone from below, and hand it up to the stage above him. They sometimes sink shafts, and do not fall in with flint to repay their labour. That the flint of the best quality, and most adapted to the manufacture of gun-flints, is comparatively rare, is shown by the experience of France as well as England."—[Jameson's Edinburgh Journal.] Here is an alms house for seven poor widows. Other charities connected with this parish produce £117 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,148; in 1831, 2,065. Houses 387. Acres 5,570. A. P. £4,523. Poor rates, in 1837, £702. There are penny-posts to Stoke and Wereham.—Feltwell-fen, in this parish, comprising an area of 2,400 acres, is drained by a steam-engine of 20 horse-power.

BRANDON AND BRETSFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Wolston, Kirby division of the hund. of Knightlow, county of Warwick; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Coventry on the northern bank of the river Avon, and intersected by the London and Birmingham railway. This hamlet possesses a Sunday school. Here are some remains of an ancient castle. "Here was, for some little time, during the reign of King Henry II., a small cell of two or three Black nuns, founded by Jeffery de Clinton, son to Jeffery the founder of Kenilworth; but they seem to have soon separated, and their lands, by the consent of the founder, were annexed to Kenilworth priory. Here was a kind of hospital or chapel of St. Edmund, founded perhaps by the Turvilles, lords of Wolston, who were patrons of it, 34th Edward III."—Turner's Not. Mon. Pop., including the hamlet of Marston, in 1811, 559; in 1831, 589. Houses 80. Acres 940. Poor rates, in 1837, £218.

BRANDON (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Forehoe, county of Norfolk; 5 miles north-north-west of Wymondham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk, and dio. of Norwich; valued at £8 3s. 9d.; gross income £291. Patron, in 1835, F. R. Reynolds. There is a Sunday school here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £37 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 208. Houses 25. Acres 1,010. A. P. £1,464. Poor rates, in 1837, £196.

BRANDESBURTON, or BRANDESBURTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Holderness, union of Skirlaugh, east riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles north-east of Beverley, in the neighbourhood of the Leaven canal. It comprises the townships of Brandsburton and Moortown. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; valued at £24 13s. 4d.; gross income £901; in the patronage of the master and fellows of St. John's college, Cambridge. The church is an ancient structure. The Independents have a place of worship here. There are two day and Sunday schools, one of which is endowed with about £37 per annum in this parish. Fairs are held on May 15th, and on every alternate Wednesday is a sort of cattle-market. This manor was bequeathed in 1601, by Lady Dacres, for the benefit of twenty aged spinsters and bachelors, in Emanuel Hospital, Westminster, under the direction of the lord-mayor and aldermen of the city of London. Pop., in 1801, 464; in 1831, 611. Houses 121. Acres 3,140. A. P. £5,273. Poor rates, in 1837, £273. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 432; in 1831, 585. Houses 117. Acres 2,680. A. P. £4,854. Poor rates, in 1837, £246.

BRANDSFEE, a liberty, the limits of which are not distinct, partly in the parish of Hitchenden, and partly in those of Great and Little Missenden, in the hunds. of Desborough and Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Wycombe. It was anciently called Tilleberie. Pop. returned with the parish.

BRANKSTON. See BRANXTON.

BRANSBY, or BRANSELY, a township in the parish of Stow, wapentake of Well, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; 8 miles north-west of Lincoln. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 88. Houses 18. Acres 290. Poor rates, in 1837, £171.

BRANSBY WITH STEARSBY, a parish in the wapentake of Bulmer, union of Easingwold, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles east-north-east of Easingwold. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; valued at £98s. 11 $\frac{1}{4}$ d.; gross income £651. Patron, in 1835, F. Cholmley, Esq. The Roman Catholics have a chapel at this place. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £7 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 199; in 1831, 298. Houses 47. Acres 2,700. A. P. £4,131. Poor rates, in 1837, £87.

BRANSCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Colyton, division and union of Honiton, county of Devon; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Sidmouth, on the coast. This parish contains the hamlets of Dean and Westen. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £18 15s. 10d.; gross income £190; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Exeter. There are two Sunday schools in this parish. Freestone is found here in abundance. Pop., in 1801, 603; in 1831, 829. Houses 169. Acres 1,750. A. P. £3,623. Poor rates, in 1837, £453.

BRANSFORD, a hamlet and chapelry, partly in the parish of Powick and partly in that of Leigh, lower division of the hund. of Pershore, county of Worcester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Worcester. Living, a curacy, not in charge, annexed to the rectory of Leigh. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 338. Houses 74. A. P. £2,747. Poor rates, in 1837, £162.

BRANSON, BRANSTON, or BRANTESTON, a township in the parish of Burton-upon-Trent, northern division of the hund. of Offlow, county of Stafford; 2 miles west by south of Burton-upon-Trent, intersected by the Birmingham and Derby railroad, and in the vicinity of the Grand Trunk canal. There are here a daily, an infant, and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 281; in 1831, 382. Houses 80. Acres 1,490. A. P. £4,606. Poor rates, in 1837, £148.

BRANSTON, a parish in the liberty of the city of Lincoln, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 4 miles south-east by south of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £18 17s. 11d.; gross income £837. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. P. Cartois. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1766. There are two daily and two Sunday schools in this parish, and a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. Pop., in 1801, 445; in 1831, 859. Houses 170. Acreage with the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £368.

BRANSTON, or BRAUNSTON, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; 8 miles north-east by north of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; valued at £15 10s. 5d.; gross income £357. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Rutland. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1766. There are here two daily schools, containing 52 children, and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 209; in 1831, 208. Houses 56. Acres 960. A. P. £2,388. Poor rates, in 1837, £137.

BRANTHAM, a parish in the hund. of Sampford, county of Suffolk; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Ipswich, on the northern bank of the navigable river Stour. Living, a rectory with the chapelry of East Bergholt annexed, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £25 10s.; gross income £1,120. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Rowley. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1811, 323; in 1831, 367. Houses 42. Acres 1,940. A. P. £2,368. Poor rates, in 1837, £148.

BRANTHWAITHE, or BRAND'S PLAIN, a township in the parish of Dean, ward of Allerdale above Darwent, county of Cumberland; 6 miles south-west of Cockermouth. The Methodists have a place of worship here. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 317. Houses 62. Acreage with the parish.

BRANTINGHAM, a parish, partly in the wapentake of Howdenshire, and partly in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Beverley, east riding of Yorkshire; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east by east of South Cave, and $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles north of the Selby and Hull railroad. It contains the townships of Thorpe-Brantingham and Ellerker. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Ellerker annexed, in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; valued at £12 9s. 2d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £99 8s.; gross income £178; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. The great and small tithes of the lands and grounds in the townships of Brantingham and Thorpe-Brantingham, the property of the dean and chapter of Durham and the vicar, were commuted in 1765. There are four daily schools, containing 68 children, and a Sunday school, in this parish. This manor belongs to the see of Durham. Pop., in 1801, 354; in 1831, 468. Houses 97. Acres 3,040. A. P. £4,587. Poor rates, in 1837, £224.

BRANTINGTHORPE. See BRUNTINGTHORPE.

BRANTON, a township in the parish of Eglington, northern division of the ward of Coquetdale, county of Northumberland; $9\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-east of Wooler. There is a dissenting chapel here. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 110. Houses 18. Acreage with the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

BRANTON-GREEN. See DUNSFORTH (UPPER).

BRANXTON, a small parish in the western division of the ward of Glendale, union of Glendale, county of Northumberland; 9 miles north-west of Wooler. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Cornhill annexed, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; valued at £3 6s. 8d.; gross income £350; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. There is a daily school here. This was the birth-place of the ingenious Percival Stockdale, whose father was vicar of the parish. At this place stands a monumental column commemorative of the victory achieved over James IV. by the Earl of Surrey, on the 19th of September, 1513. It is a rough upright pillar of basalt, 6 feet 7 inches high. See FLODDEN. Pop., in 1801, 209; in 1831, 249. Houses 54. Acres 1,120. A. P. £2,395. Poor rates, in 1837, £73.

BRASSINGTON, a parochial chapelry and township in the parish of Bradborne, hund. of Wirksworth, county of Derby; 4 miles west by north of Wirksworth, in the vicinity of the Cromford and High Peak railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £10, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £48; gross income £87. Patron, in 1835, John Story, Esq. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1803. There are here two daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school, which is endowed with a piece of land given in 1742, by Mr. Thurston Dale, for teaching 12 children. A peculiar kind of grey clay, which is a decomposition of toad-stone, is found here, from which tiles are made, in imitation of the flat slate-like tiles of Staffordshire. Pop., in 1801, 560; in 1831, 714. Houses 153. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £5,401. Poor rates, in 1837, £339.

BRADSTED, a parish, partly in the hund. of Westerham, and partly in that of Codsheath, lathe of Sutton at Hone, county of Kent; 4 miles west-north-west of Seven Oaks. Living, a rectory in the jurisdiction and patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury, and in the exempt deanery of Shoreham; valued at £22 6s. 8d.; gross income £679. There are four daily schools here. Charities connected with this parish produce about £50 per annum. An annual fair is held here on Ascension-day, for horses and all sorts of commodities. The parish is crossed by the rivers Eden and Darent. "Adjoining to Sundrish, westward, lies the parish of Bradsted, which has in it a district called Bradsted ville, which is a jurisdiction separate from any hundred, having a constable of its own. The church stands within the ville."—Hasted's Kent. Pop., in 1801, 750; in 1831, 964. Houses 173. Acres 4,630. A. P. £4,769. Poor rates, in 1837, £486.

BRATHAY (THE), a river of Westmoreland, flowing through Great Langdale, and uniting with the Rothay half a mile before the united streams fall into Windermere lake. At this point, says Green, "rocks, splendidly crowned with trees, rise beautifully out of the water, and make excellent combinations with the craggy steepes of Loughrigg fell and the mountains of Ambleside and Rydal. Probably the island of Great Britain can scarcely present a sweeter little aquatic line, than that from the landing at Clappergrate to the head of the lake of Windermere. But the finest water-view from the head of the lake of Windermere is about half-a-mile south of the river's junction with the lake; where the mountains of Coniston, Little and Great Langdale, Loughrigg, Rydal, Ambleside, and Troutbeck; the high grounds of Appletrethwaite, Orrest, Bowness, and Cartmel fell; and the lands above Wray, as from one station on the water, are seen to the greatest advantage."

BRATTLEBY, a parish in the wapentake of Lawres, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 7 miles north-north-east of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £7 10s.; gross income £270; in the patronage of Balliol college, Oxford. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1779. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 154. Houses 28. Acres 1,220. A. P. £1,414. Poor rates, in 1837, £44.

BRATTON, a chapelry in the parish and hund. of Westbury, county of Wilts; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-north-east of Westbury. This chapelry includes Howbridge and Haywood. Living, a curacy, not in charge, annexed to the vicarage of Westbury. The Baptists have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1734. There are three daily and two Sunday schools here. In 1838 there were three woollen mills, employing 73 hands, within this chapelry. Here are traces of a very extensive intrenchment, called Bratton-castle, said to have been constructed by the Danes. It is situated on the ascent of a hill, and the ditch encloses an area of 23 acres. Pop., in 1801, 1,085; in 1831, 1,237. Houses 284. Acreage and poor rates with the parish.

BRATTON-CLOVELLY, a parish in the hund. and division of Lifton, union of Ockhampton, county of Devon; 8 miles west-south-west of Ockhampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £21 5s. 2d.; gross income £468; in the patronage of the bishop of Exeter. There are two daily schools in this parish. In the vicinity are traces of an ancient fortification called Broadbury castle. This village was the birth-place of Henry de Bracton, an eminent lawyer in the reign of Edward I. Pop., in 1801, 548; in 1831, 787.

Houses 127. Acres 8,200. A. P. £2,133. Poor rates, in 1837, £297.

BRAATON-FLEMING, a parish in the union and hund. of Braunton, union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; 6 miles north-east by east of Barnstaple. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; valued at £29 15s. 5d.; gross income £631; in the patronage of Caius college, Cambridge. There are four daily and two Sunday schools here. In the vicinity, at a place called Nightacott, are six upright stones, supposed to have belonged to some druidical structure. Pop., in 1801, 406; in 1831, 534. Houses 89. Acres 4,370. A. P. £3,377. Poor rates, in 1837, £249.

BRAATON-SEYMOUR, or ST. MAUR, a parish in the hund. of Norton-Ferris, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 2½ miles north-west of Wincanton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £5 4s. 7d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £83; gross income £170. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. Lopes, Bart., and Mr. J. Hodges, alternately. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 59. Houses 14. Acres 1,170. Poor rates, in 1837, £22.

BRAUGHIN HUNDRED, in the county of Hertford, is bounded on the north-west and north by the hundred of Edwinstree; on the east and south by the county of Essex; on the south-west by Hertford hundred; and on the west partly by the hundred of Broadwater. Area 38,410 acres. Houses 3,307. Pop., in 1831, 17,827.

BRAUGHIN, a parish in the hund. of Braughin, union of Bishop-Stortford, county of Hertford; 7 miles north-north-east of Ware. The town—which was formerly of considerable importance, and a demeane of the Saxon kings—stands near the confluence of the Quin and Rib. It was called Brooking by the Saxons, and Brackinges by the Normans; and had a market, but which has fallen into disuse. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £19 13s. 4d.; gross income £230. Patrons, in 1835, — Houbton and W. Tower, Esq. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c. the property of the lay-impropriators and vicar, were commuted in 1812. The Independents have a place of worship here. There are five daily schools, one of which has a small endowment, and a Sunday school, in this parish. Here is an alms-house for aged widows, in the patronage of Mr. Bonest. A rent charge of £6 13s. 4d., given by Mr. Jennings, is annually applied to charitable uses. The same person also gave an endowed alms-house for an aged couple. Other charities connected with this parish produce £15 per annum. A fair is held here on Whit-Monday. In the neighbourhood of the village is an ancient encampment which is supposed to have belonged to the Romans. Pop., in 1801, 972; in 1831, 1,266. Houses 227. Acres 4,300. A. P. £5,104. Poor rates, in 1837, £730.

BRAUNCEWELL AND DUNSBY, a parish in the wapentake of Flaxwell, parts of Kesteven, union of Sleaford, county of Lincoln; 4½ miles north-north-west of Sleaford. Living, a discharged rectory with Dunsby, united in 1718 to the vicarage of Alnwick, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £9 18s. 11½d.; gross income £776. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Bristol. Pop., in 1801, 30; in 1831, 134. Houses 19. Acres 3,470. A. P. £1,879. Poor rates, in 1837, £103.

BRAUNSTON, or BRANDSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Fawsley, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 3 miles north-west of Daventry, intersected by the Oxford canal, which joins the Grand Junction in this parish, and passes through a tunnel 1½ mile in length. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £31 2s. 11½d.; gross income £873; in the patronage of the principal and fellows of Jesus college, Oxford. There are four daily and two Sunday schools, and also a day and Sunday school with an endowment of £30 per annum, arising from land given in 1733 by William Makepeace, within this parish. Charities connected with Braunton produce about £296 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 909; in 1831, 1,380. Houses 287. Acres 3,930. A. P. £5,624. Poor rates, in 1837, £658.

BRAUNSTON, a parish and township in the soke and union of Oakham, county of Rutland; 2½ miles west-south-west of Odiham, on the border of the forest of Leafield, of which it forms a part. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to the vicarage of Hambleton. All tithes, &c. the property of the dean and chapter of Lincoln and the vicar, were commuted in 1801. There are here four daily schools, one of which has an endowment of £5 per annum, and a Sunday school, and a Baptist chapel. Charities connected with this parish produce about £54 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 367; in 1831, 424. Houses 87. Acres 3,250. A. P. £2,215. Poor rates, in 1837, £262.

BRAUNSTONE, a parochial chapelry and township in the parish of Glenfield, hund. of Sparkenhoe, county of Leicester; 2½ miles south-west by west of Leicester, in the neighbourhood of the Leicester and Swannington railway, the Union canal, and the line of the Midland counties railroad. Living, a curacy, not in charge, subordinate to the rectory of Glenfield. There is a Sunday school here, supported by E. Winstanley, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 202; in 1831, 198. Houses 40. Acres 1,610. A. P. £3,055. Poor rates, in 1837, £150.

BRAUNSTONE-FRITH, a liberty in the above parish; 2 miles west-south-west of Leicester. Pop., in 1801, 13; in 1831, 8. A. P. £388. Other returns with the parish.

BRAUNTON HUNDRED, in the divisions of South Molton and Braunton, county of Devon, is bounded on the north by the Bristol channel; on the east by the hundred of Sherwill; on the south-east by South Molton hundred; on the south by the river Taw; and on the west by the bays of Morte and Barnstaple. Area 68,830 acres. Houses 3,941. Pop., in 1831, 21,974.

BRAUNTON, a parish in the above hund., union of Barnstaple; 5 miles west-north-west of Barnstaple. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; valued at £16 12s. 6½d.; gross income £504; in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean of Exeter. The Independents have a meeting-house here; the church was formed in 1742. There are in this parish five daily schools, one of which has a small endowment, a day and Sunday school, endowed with £60 per annum, and two Sunday schools. Charities connected with this parish produce £17 10s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,296; in 1831, 2,047. Houses 389. Acres 7,010. A. P. £7,455. Poor rates, in 1837, £787.

BRAWBY, a township in the parish of Salton, within the liberty of St. Peter of York, locally situated in the wapentake of Ryedale, north riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-north-west of New Malton, on the western bank of the river Rye. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. A fair is held here on the first Monday after July 11, for cattle and earthenware. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 199. Houses 31. Acres 1,060. A. P. £1,425.

BRAWDY, a parish in the hund. of Dewisland, union of Haverford-west, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 6 miles east of St. David's, near Newgate Sands. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; valued at £3 18s. 9d., rated in the parliamentary returns at £21 14s. 6d., and united to the vicarage of Hayscastle; gross income £115; in the patronage of the bishop of St. David's. There are here two daily schools, including 115 children, and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 572; in 1831, 768. Houses 146. A. P. £2,002. Poor rates, in 1837, £290.

BRAWITH. See KNATTON.

BRAXTED (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Witham, county of Essex; 2 miles east by north of Witham, in the vicinity of the railroad from London to Norwich. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £19; gross income £552; in the patronage of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge. There are here two daily and two Sunday schools. Charities connected with this parish produce £18 16s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 502; in 1831, 471. Houses 90. Acres 1,240. A. P. £3,248. Poor rates, in 1837, £156.

BRAXTED (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Witham, county of Essex; 1 mile east by north of Witham, in the vicinity of the railroad from London to Norwich. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £3 6s. 8d., rated in the parliamentary returns at £119 8s.; gross income £120. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. Rush, deceased. Charities connected with this parish produce £7 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 92. Houses 19. Acres 1,680. A. P. £727. Poor rates, in 1837, £67.

BRAY, a parish, in itself a hund., union of Cookham, county of Berks; 2 miles south by east of Maidenhead, on the southern bank of the river Thames, and intersected by the Great Western railway. It comprises the divisions of Bray, Touchen, Water-Oakley, and part of Maidenhead. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £25 4s. 4½d.; gross income £520; in the patronage of the bishop of Oxford. The vicarial tithes, the property of the vicar, were commuted in 1814. There are three daily schools, one of which is endowed with £21 per annum, three Sunday schools and a day and Sunday school, in this parish. Here are eighteen free tenements, given for the use of the poor by Sir John Norris. In 1627, William Goddard, Esq., founded and endowed here an hospital, called Jesus hospital, and placed it under the direction of the Fishmongers' company in London. The inmates are 40 in number, 6 of whom must be free of the Fishmongers' company. One poor person of this parish is entitled to a place in Lucas's hospital. Other charities connected with this parish produce about £250 per annum. Bray was famous for a time-serving vicar, who, during the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth, changed his religion so as to retain his charge, being twice a protestant, and twice a papist. This unprincipled conduct having attracted notice, he is said to have defended himself on the ground that his ruling principle was "to live and die vicar of Bray." About three quarters of a mile from this place stands Monkey island, a picturesque spot in the river Thames, fancifully decorated by the third duke of Marlborough for the accommodation of angling parties. Pop., in 1801, 2,403; in 1831, 3,480. Houses 703. Acres 8,900. A. P. £17,950. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,102.

BRAYBROOKE, a parish in the hund. of Rothwell, union of Market-Harborough, county of Northampton; 3 miles south-south-east of Market-Har-borough. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £23 6s. 10½d.; gross income £488. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Field. The church contains a curious monument to Sir Nicholas Griffin, who died in 1509. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1778. The Baptists have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1793. There are here a daily school, containing 25 children, and two Sunday schools.—The family of Neville-Griffin has taken the title of baron from Braybrooke since 1788. Pop., in 1801, 378; in 1831, 366. Houses 83. Acres 3,060. A. P. £4,122. Poor rates, in 1837, £248.

BRAYDON, a hamlet in the parish of Purton, hund. of Highworth, Cricklade and Steeple, county of Wilts; 4½ miles south-south-west of Cricklade. Pop., in 1821, 70; in 1831, 64. Houses 13. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £857. Poor rates, in 1837, £68.

BRAYFIELD (COLD), a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport-Pagnell, county of Buckingham; 3½ miles east of Olney, on the banks of the river Ouse. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Oxford, annexed to the vicarage of Lavendon. Pop., in 1801, 82; in 1831, 93. Houses 18. Acres 530. A. P. £983. Poor rates, in 1837, £42.

BRAYFORD, a township in the parish of Charles, county of Devon. There is a Baptist meeting-house here; the church was formed in 1817.

BRAYTOFT, or BRATOFT, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 5½ miles east by south of Spilsby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £18 3s. 6d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £144 6s.; gross income £255. Patron, the lord chancellor. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 201. Houses 32. Acres 1,220. A. P. £1,807. Poor rates, in 1837, £170.

BRAYTON, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash, union of Selby, west riding of Yorkshire; 1½ mile west-south-west of Selby, intersected by the Leeds and Selby railroad, and the Selby canal, which connects the rivers Ouse and Aire. It comprises the township and chapelry of Barlow, and the townships of Brayton, Burn, Gateforth, Hambleton, and Thorpe-Willoughby. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of York; valued at £7 14s. 4½d.; gross income £268. Patrons, in 1835, the honourable E. Petre and the prebendary of Wistow. The great and small tithes of Brayton, Thorpe-Willoughby, Burton, and Gateforth-with-Lund township, the property of the archbishop of York, lord of the manor, and vicar, were commuted in 1799. There are four daily schools, two of which are endowed, two Sunday and two infant schools, in this parish. Charities connected with Brayton yield £43 16s. 6d. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,274; in 1831, 1,612. Houses 300. Acres 10,690. A. P. £12,228. Poor rates, in 1837, £589. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 227; in 1831, 278. Houses 54. Acres 1,790. A. P. £2,040. Poor rates, in 1837, £74.

BREADSALL, a parish the hund. of Appletree, though locally situated in the hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, union of Shardlow, county of Derby; 2½ miles north-east by north of Derby, in the vicinity of the North Midland railroad, and intersected by the Little Eaton canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, valued at £28 2s. 8½d.; gross income £583. Patron, in 1835, Sir George Crewe, Bart. The church contains a monument to the celebrated Dr. Erasmus Darwin, author of the 'Zoonomia,' the 'Botanic Garden,' and some other works. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1815. There are here two day and Sunday schools, in one of which sixteen children are taught to read, on an endowment of £10 8s. per annum, given in 1745 by the Rev. John Clayton. Other charities connected with the parish produce £43 per annum. "Here was an house of friars' heremites, in the time of Henry III. It afterward, till the dissolution, continued a small priory of the Austin order, dedicated to the Holy Trinity; valued only at £13 0s. 8d. per annum. It was granted, 6th Edward VI., to Henry, duke of Suffolk."—Tanner's Not. Mon. In the quarries, at the priory here, a fine solid building stone, wholly free from clay, is procured. Pop., in 1801, 414; in 1831, 565. Houses 110. Acres 2,410. A. P. £2,122. Poor rates, in 1837, £188.

BREAGE (St.), a parish in the western division of the hund. of Kerrier, union of Helstone, county of Cornwall; 3 miles west of Helstone, on the post road to Marazion or Market-Jew. Living, a vicarage, to which are annexed the curacies of Cury, St. Germoe, and Gunwallow, in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; valued at £33; gross income £870; nett income £760. Patron, the Crown. There are here fourteen daily and three Sunday schools. The inhabitants are, to a great extent, employed in mining. Here is the celebrated tin-mine called Wheal-Vor. See also GODOLPHIN. Pop., in 1801, 2,534; in 1831, 5,149. Acres 7,390. Houses 938. A. P. £8,673. Poor rates, in 1837, £789.

BREAMORE, or BROMERE, a parish and liberty in the New Forest division, union of Fordingbridge, county of Southampton; 3 miles north-north-east of Fordingbridge, on the western bank of the river Avon. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; valued at £250; gross income £565. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. C. May. There are three daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. "A priory of Black canons was founded here by Baldwin de Redveris, or Riveris, and Hugh his uncle, about the latter end of the reign of Henry I. St. Michael was the patron saint of this monastery, which, about the time of the suppression, consisted of a prior and nine canons, and was endowed with £200 5s. 1d. The site and great part of its possessions were granted, 28th Henry VIII., to Henry marquess of Exeter."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 488; in 1831, 600. Houses 111. Acres 3,440. A. P. £3,126. Poor rates, in 1837, £524.

BREANE, a parish in the hund. of Bempstone, but situated within the hund. of Brent with Wrington, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; 8½ miles west by north of Axbridge, on the coast, and in the vicinity of the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £7 0s. 5d.; gross income £220. Patron, in 1835, William Willies. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Samphire is found here in abundance. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 134. Houses 21. Acres 1,330. A. P. £1,966. Poor rates, in 1837, £71.

BREARTON, or BREXTON, a township in the parish of Stranton, north-eastern division of the ward of Stockton, co.-palatine of Durham; 8 miles north-north-east of Stockton-on-Tees, in the vicinity of the Clarence and Hartlepool railway. Pop., in 1801, 22; in 1831, 22. Houses 4. Acres 70. A. P. £368. Poor rates, in 1837, £15.

BREARTON, a township in the parish of Knaresborough, lower division of the wapentake of Claro, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-west of Knaresborough. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 248.

Houses 44. Acres 1,560. A. P. £1,647. Poor rates, in 1837, £88.

BREASON, or BREASTON, a township in the parish of Sawley, hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, county of Derby; 8 miles east-south-east of Derby, intersected by the Derby canal, and the Derby branch of the Midland counties railroad. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to that of Risley. There are here three daily and two Sunday schools. The inhabitants of this township have the privilege of sending their children to the free-school at Risley. Pop., in 1801, 379; in 1831, 642. Houses 150. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,442. Poor rates, in 1837, £268.

BRECH-FFA, or BRECHVA, a parish in the hund. of Cethinog or Cathinog, union of Llandilo Fawr, county of Caermarthen, South Wales; 10½ miles north-east of Caermarthen. Living, a rectory, not in charge, in the archd. of Caermarthen, and dio. of St. David's; valued at £8 5s.; gross income £78. Patrons, in 1835, the family of Tregib and Aberoethy, alternately. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. It stands on the new turnpike road uniting the counties of Caermarthen, Cardigan, and Glamorgan. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 93. Houses 22. A. P. £302. Poor rates, in 1837, £26.

BRECKENBOROUGH. See NEWSHAM.

BRECKLES, or BRECKLES-MAGNA, a parish in the hund. and union of Wayland, county of Norfolk; 5 miles south-south-east of Watton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; valued at £7 17s. 11d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £30; gross income £41. Patron, in 1835, Sir E. Kerrison, Bart. There is here a daily school supported by Lady Kerrison. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 154. Houses 17. Acres 1,860. A. P. £1,774. Poor rates, in 1837, £86.

BRECKNOCKSHIRE,

A county of South Wales; bounded on the north and east by that of Radnor; on the east by the shires of Hereford and Monmouth; on the south-east and part of the south by Monmouthshire, and on the rest of the south by Glamorganshire; and on the west by Caermarthen and Cardigan shires. It is in length about 38 miles, in breadth 27, and in circumference about 108. It contains about 512,000 acres of land; of which it is calculated that 232,000 are in cultivation, while 185,600 are waste, and unfit for being brought into an arable state.

The face of the country is mountainous, the hills running chiefly in two ridges, in one of which is the Vana mountain, or Brecknock beacon, rising to an elevation of 2,892 feet, and considered the loftiest mountain in South Wales. It is separated from the county of Radnor by the river Wye; and is crossed by the Usk, which rises near the border of the county of Caermarthen and passes across the county to Monmouth. See articles WYE and USK. The Irvon or Yrfon, Tawe, Taaf, Tarell, Hepste, and Honddu, are minor streams in this county, not deserving of individual notice. One of the largest lakes in South Wales is Brecknock-mere or Llangorse-pool, situated about 2 miles to the east of the town of Brecknock, measuring about 2 miles in length and one in breadth, and abounding in otters, pike, tench, perch, and eels. Ridges of hills form the separation of this from most of the adjacent counties, and these are said to shelter it in such a manner as to render it temperate. Giraldus Cambrensis, indeed, dwells chiefly on its being protected to the south from the heat of the sun, and fanned by cool breezes: a commendation that implies a difference either in the nature of the climate at that time, or in the feelings of the inhabitants. The district is subject to rain, but the air is pure, and the county is considered one of the healthiest in Wales. There are mineral springs at Builth and Llanwrtyd. The land declines towards the banks of the Wye, where it is tolerably fertile, as it is also in the valleys watered by its numerous rills, and generally throughout the hundreds of Talgarth and Crickhowell.

Copper, lead, iron, coal, and limestone in abundance, are the most important natural products of this county. The vale of Usk is a sandy loam; the northern part of the county is stiff loam mixed with clay; the vale of Wye is a brown and gravelly loam of good quality. The agricultural produce consists of oats, wheat, rye, barley, turnips, vetch, and potatoes. There is also a considerable exportation of wool, timber, butter, cheese, and cattle of various kinds, to the markets in the neighbouring English counties. Laud in the vales lets at from 15s. to 21s. per acre; the mountains do not let for more than from 3s. to 7s. an acre. Farms are generally held on yearly tenure, and are of small size. The high lands are chiefly used as sheep-pastures, and produce a small breed, but of excellent quality.—Near the borders of Monmouthshire are large iron-works; coarse woollen cloths, stockings, and other worsted stuffs are also manufactured to a certain extent. The trade has been considerably facilitated by the Brecknock canal, which joins the Monmouthshire canal near Ponty-Pool, and establishes a communication, by water, between the town of Brecknock and the sea. Fresh facilities are now afforded by the Brecon and Merthyr-Tydvil railway. The Hay railway runs betwixt the wharf of the Brecknock canal, near Brecon, and the village of Parton-Cross, in the parish of Eardisley in Herefordshire, where the Kington railroad joins it. It has a winding course of about 24 miles. The southern portions of the county are also benefited by the Swansea canal, which intersects the vale of Tawe, and communicates with different places in Brecknockshire by means of a tram railroad.

This county is divided into six hundreds, viz.: Builth, Crickhowell, Devynnock, Merthyr, Penkelly, and Talgarth, and comprises 71 parishes and 4 chapelries. It possesses four market-towns: Brecknock or Brecon, Builth, Crickhowell, and Hay, with six petty-recessions. It returns one member to parliament, who is nominated and polled at Brecon; and, with the exception of the second part of the archdeaconry of Brecon—which has been transferred to the see of Llandaff—is in the province of Canterbury and diocese of St. David's. Pop., in 1801, 31,633; in 1821, 43,613; 3,959 families being returned as employed in agriculture, and 2,954 in trades and manufactures; families not comprised in these two classes 2,935; in 1831, the population was 47,763. Houses 9,373. A. P. £146,539. Poor rates, in 1827, £17,019; in 1837, £19,800.

This county is supposed to derive its name from Brychan, a native prince of the 5th century. It is said to have been conquered by a brother of William the Conqueror. The Welsh language is now confined chiefly to the northern and eastern parts of the county.

BRECON, BRECKNOCK, or ABER-HONDEY, a market-town and borough, having separate jurisdictions, but locally situated partly in the hund. of Merthyr and partly in that of Devynnock, union and county of Brecknock, South Wales; 171 miles west-north-west of London, and 18 miles east by south of Llandoverly. The district extends from north to south about 2 miles, and from east to west about $3\frac{1}{2}$; it is in the centre of the county, and is connected by a canal, which runs through the mineral and manufacturing districts, with the British channel. A railway, which passes through the Briny-Glacial mountain by a tunnel 1,430 yards in length, joins the town with Merthyr-Tydvil.

The town is divided into two parishes, and a chapelry: viz. St. David's and St. John's, the latter of which includes the chapelry of St. Mary. Within the parish of St. John there are two beautiful groves, excelling in some respects the Priory grove which winds in luxuriant loveliness along the banks of the Honddu. Indeed the walks in the vicinity of this place constitute one of its principal attractions. "Few towns," Sir Richard C. Hoare remarks, "surpass Brecknock in picturesque beauties; the different mills and bridges on the rivers Usk and Honddu, the ivy-mantled walls and towers of the old castle, the massive embattled turret and gateway of the priory, with its luxuriant groves, added to the magnificent range of mountain-scenery on the south side of the town, form, in many points of view, the most beautiful, rich, and varied outline imaginable." The living of St. John's is a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; valued at £5 15s. 7½d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £150; no return. Patron, in 1835, Hugh Bold, Esq. St. Mary's is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the vicar of Brecon. The living of St. David's is a discharged vicarage; valued at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £160; in the patronage of the archdeacon of Brecon, to whom the impropriate tithes belong. Here is also an extra-parochial collegiate church, which, though situated within the town, is considered as belonging to the county. This was originally a house of Dominican friars, but on the general dissolution of monastic establishments, Henry VIII. converted it into the college of Christ-church of Brecknock. The chapter consists of the bishop of St. David's as dean, a procurator, treasurer, chancellor, and 19 prebendaries. The church is very ancient and is falling into decay. The Independents and Baptists have meeting-houses here; the Baptist church was formed in 1807. The Wesleyan Methodists have also two churches; both of which were formed in 1810. Besides these there are a Calvinistic Methodist church, formed in 1791, and a Roman Catholic chapel, within the borough. There are here the collegiate school, supported by a rent-charge of £21 9s. 4d. per annum, on the tithes of Moddve parish, nine daily schools, one of which is endowed with £21 per annum, eight Sunday schools, and a day and Sunday school. There is also an academy here for the education of young men for the Independent ministry in Wales. Here are twelve endowed almshouses for decayed females, built by the family of Games of Newton. A general infirmary for the town and county was instituted in 1834. The town charity consists of seven small rent-charges, amounting in the whole to £16 1s. Of this sum, £9 18s. 6d. is distributed on St. Thomas's day, in sums of 4s. each, amongst the poorer inhabitants; a sum of £3 is also distributed among six poor widows selected for life, in sums of 10s. each. Certain lands, bequeathed in 1686 by Rice Powell, produce yearly £180; £24 of which is paid to the principal of Jesus' college, Oxford, to be divided between two scholars, natives of the town of Brecon; £21 to a school here; and the remainder is expended in apprenticing children. Other charities connected with the borough produce £172 per annum.

Brecon stands on a gently rising ground at the confluence of the rivers Usk and Honddu, over the former of which there is one bridge, and over the latter three. The upper Honddu bridge leading to the priory is very old, narrow, and inconvenient; the one below it, consisting of two arches, with an immensely thick prop in the centre, at one time led to the castle, and supported a drawbridge; the third was widened in 1794. The town consists chiefly of three principal streets, which contain many respectable and well-built houses, and the country in the vicinity is picturesque and fertile. It is supplied with water, and lighted and paved, under a local act passed in 1776, 16^o Geo. III. c. 56. It is lighted with gas. The act, however, contains no provision for the maintenance of a night-watch, nor are any watchmen in fact employed. Here are a town-hall, a shire-hall, the county-gaol, and house of correction, and a fine arsenal which usually contains 1,500 swords and 15,000 muskets arranged in fanciful forms as in the tower of London. —The first charter of Brecon was granted by Philip and Mary, and bears date the 20th March, in the second and third year of their reign, 1556. This charter was confirmed by Elizabeth in the 19th year of her reign. Another was granted by James II.; but is disregarded in practice. The governing charter is that of Philip and Mary, under which a bailiff, recorder, 15 common councilmen, and other office-bearers, were appointed. By the new Municipal act the town is governed by a bailiff, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors. The income of the corporation, in 1837, was £301. The corporation have exclusive jurisdiction, both criminal and civil; the county-magistrates being forbidden to intermeddle, unless 'for the defect' of the borough-magistrates. The quarter-sessions are held before the bailiff, aldermen, and recorder, and have cognizance of all offences arising within the borough, and not affecting life. Petty-sessions are held once a-week, or oftener, if necessary. A court of record is held every Monday and Thursday, which has jurisdiction in all manner of actions for causes originating within the borough, without limitation as to amount, and is required to proceed according to the laws and customs of England. There is a court-leet every year, within a month after Michaelmas, at which the steward, who is appointed by the mayor or bailiff, as lord of the manor, presides. Brecon county-gaol and house of correction is extremely old and dilapidated. It is surrounded by a lofty outer wall, and stands at a considerable distance from other buildings. It comprises 22 cells, 4 wards, and 7 rooms, with airings-yards. The number of prisoners on September 9th, 1837, was 29. The borough-gaol is a small house, situated in the public street. Brecon has returned one member to parliament since the reign of Henry VIII. The franchise originally belonged only to the free burgesses, in number not above 21. Under the reform act, Brecon still returns one member, but the boundaries of the borough comprise the old borough of Brecon and the extra-parochial districts of the Castle and Christ's college. The returning officer is the bailiff; and the number of new electors registered in 1832 was 242. There is no traffic or manufacture of importance sufficient to warrant the expectation of any great increase of population. The town possesses several respectable houses and shops, and is a considerable thoroughfare.—Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday are market-days; and fairs for hops, leather, cattle, &c., are held on the first Wednesday in March, May 14th, July 5th, September 6th, and November 17th. There are branches of the National Provincial bank and of the North and South Wales bank here.

This town was the birth place of Mrs. Siddons in 1753. Some Roman antiquities have been found in the vicinity, and there are traces of ancient encampments. At Penny Crug there is a military work which Mr. Strange describes as "one of the most curious and best preserved remains of that kind throughout the whole principality." Marquess Camden takes the title of Earl from this town. Pop., in 1801, 2,870, exclusive of the extra-parochial districts; in 1831, 5,026, inclusive of these districts. Houses 1,071. A. P. £4,899. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,915.—A work-house has been erected here for the union of Brecknock by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £2,649 2s., capable of accommodating 100 persons. The Brecknock poor-law union comprehends 42 parishes, with a population returned, in 1831, at 17,400. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £8,110. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,544.—"Brecon," says Warner, "like most other towns in Wales, is interesting rather from what it has been, than on account of what it now is. During the days of chivalry and papacy it boasted a castle and a monastery, the imperfect ruins of which still evince the former extent and grandeur of these edifices. They were both built in the reign of Henry I. by Bernard de Newmarch, a Norman lord, who, a short time after the erection of the castle, founded near it a priory for six Benedictine monks, and richly endowed it with lands and tithes. This was a common practice with the great barons in the feudal ages, who seem to have thought that the erection of a religious house in the immediate neighbourhood of their castles operated as an absolution for all the acts of spoliation, rapine, and misrule, exhibited within their walls. The castle of Brecknock passed through the families of the Braoses and Bohuns, and afterwards into that of the duke of Buckingham,—a nobleman successively the friend, favourite, enemy, and victim of Richard III. It was to this fortress that Moreton, bishop of Ely, was conveyed on his arrest by the usurper, and committed to the custody of Buckingham. The ingratitude of Richard, who, as soon as he was assured of his power, forgot the arm which had helped to vest him with it, raised the indignation of the Lord of Brecknock, and retiring to his castle, he there consulted with his prisoner on the means of wresting the sceptre from Richard, and returning it once more into the Lancastrian line. The plan was here digested, and eventually brought to a successful termination; though very opposite fates attended the original formers of it. Buckingham was the active engine; and shortly after the commencement of his operations, being detected and taken prisoner, he finished his restless and time-serving career on the scaffold. The bishop acted the more judicious part,—he escaped from the castle, kept quiet, and lived to become, in the ensuing reign, a privy-counsellor, and to fill the metropolitan see of Canterbury. Part of the castle-walls and some fragments of a tower remain; the latter is said to have been the apartment in which the bishop was confined, and is still called Ely tower. Vestiges of the priory are also to be seen, and the church formerly belonging to it is now used by the parishioners for public worship. It is a large building, but I should apprehend not older than the time of Henry IV. The parvaire, or ambulatory, where the monks were wont to walk and meditate, lies to the east of the church, and is called the Priory-walks. They have been long appropriated to the use of the inhabitants, and are wonderfully pleasant and romantic; shaded by noble trees, and watered by the loud brawling river Honddu, which rolls at the foot of them, though so much hidden by wood as only to be caught in occasional glimpses."

BREDBURY, a township in the parish of Stockport, hund. of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles north-east by east of Stockport, in the vicinity of the Peak Forest canal. There are here six daily and four Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 1,358;

in 1831, 2,374. Houses 379. Acres 2,730. A. P. £4,985. Poor rates, in 1837, £636.

BREDE, a parish in the hund. of Gostrow, rape of Hastings, union of Rye, county of Sussex; 5 miles east-north-east of Battle. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; valued at £12 10s. 5d.; gross income £705. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. H. S. Hele. There are three daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. Here is an iron-foundry. A fair is held here on Easter Tuesday for cattle and pedlery. In Burrell's MSS. No. 5679, p. 131, is the following notice:—"The court of this manor is a branch of that of Battle, and hath the same privileges and process. The lands of this place, though at some distance from Kent, descend according to the custom of gavelkind, used in that county. Here is a court kept every three weeks to try actions between man and man, and the officers of it are exempted from attendance at the assizes and quarter-sessions." Pop., in 1801, 801; in 1831, 1,046. Houses 128. Acres 5,700, of which above 900 are in hops. A. P. £3,416. Poor rates, in 1837, £366.

BREDENBURY, or BRIDENBURY, a parish in the hund. of Broxash, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 3 miles west-north-west of Bromyard. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; valued at £2 1s. 10½d.; gross income £55. Patron, in 1835, Charles Dutton, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 54. Houses 11. Acres 540. A. P. £616. Poor rates, in 1837, £35.

BREDFIELD, a parish, partly in the hund. of Loes, and partly in that of Wilford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 3 miles north of Woodbridge. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £4 4s. 2d.; gross income £250. Patron, the Crown. There are in this parish two daily schools, containing 64 children, an infant and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 334; in 1831, 466. Houses 91. Acres 1,630. A. P. £2,078. Poor rates, in 1837, £316.

BREDGAR, a parish in the hund. and union of Milton, lathe of Scray, county of Kent; 3 miles south-south-west of Sittingbourn. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; valued at £9, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £70; gross income £181. Patron, in 1835, Sir E. Dering, Bart. The church presents some specimens of Norman architecture. There are here three daily schools, one of which is endowed with £5 per annum, and a Sunday school. A small college of one secular priest, master, and two scholars or fellows being clerks, was founded in the parish church here to the honour of the Holy Trinity, 16° Richard II. It was granted, 29° Henry VIII., to the archbishop of Canterbury. Pop., in 1801, 401; in 1831, 512. Houses 94. Acres 1,810. A. P. £1,812. Poor rates, in 1837, £338.

BREDHURST, a parish in the hund. of Eyborne, lathe of Aylesford, union of Hollingbourn, county of Kent; 4½ miles south-east of Chatham. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge; valued at £37 17s. 6d.; gross income £101; in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury, and in the patronage of the rector of Hollingbourn. Close to the church is a small chapel, now in ruins, formerly the burial-place of the family of Kemsley. There is a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 147. Houses 23. Acres 400. A. P. £576. Poor rates, in 1837, £75.

BREDICOT, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 3½ miles east of Worcester, intersected by the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; valued at £3 18s. 1½d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £123 10s.; gross income £121; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Worcester. Pop., in 1801, 32; in 1831, 52. Houses 7. Acres 430. A. P. £667. Poor rates, in 1837, £34.

BREDON, a parish in the middle and upper divisions of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Tewkesbury, county of Worcester; 4 miles north-east of Tewkesbury, on the eastern bank of the river Avon, and intersected by the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. It comprises the chapelries of Norton, Mitton, and Cutsdean, and the hamlets of Bredon, Hardwick, Kinsham, and Westmancote. Living, a rectory, with the curacies of Norton and Cutsdean annexed, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, exempt from visitation, and in the peculiar jurisdiction of the rector, valued at £8 11s. 0½d.; rated in the parliamentary returns at £98; gross income £1,600; nett income £1,498. Patron, in 1835, John Keysall, Esq. The church contains a monument to Dr. Prideaux, bishop of Worcester in the reign of Charles I. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1806. There are here eight daily schools, one of which, the endowed blue coat school, contains 18 males, of whom 12 are clothed, five Sunday schools, and endowed almshouses for eight females. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £47 per annum. Bredon hill separates the vales of Cotswold and Evesham, and commands an extensive prospect. On the top are traces of a Roman encampment with a double trench. "Ethelbald, king of Mercia, before the year 716, gave this town to his kinsman Eanulf (who was grandfather to the king Offa), with intent that he should found a monastery here, which he seems to have done, and dedicated it to St. Peter. It subsisted under an abbot of its own till after the year 841. But before the Conquest it became part of the possessions of the bishoprick of Worcester."—Tanier's Not. Mon. At Mitton is a ruined chapel. The inhabitants are partly employed by the stocking manufacturers at Tewkesbury. Pop., in 1801, 1,063; in 1831, 1,325. Houses 310. Acres 6,130. A. P. £10,405. Poor rates, in 1837, £624.

BREDWARDINE, a parish in the hund. of Webtree, union of Hay, county of Hereford; 11½ miles west-north-west of Hereford, intersected by the river Wye. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; valued at £7 8s. 1½d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £144 6s. 8d.; gross income £190. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. N. D. Newton. There is here a day and Sunday school, supported by an endowment called "Jarvis's charity;" clothing and books are provided:—see also HEREFORDSHIRE—Charities. On the Wye, at a short distance, are the ruins of Bredwardine castle. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 436. Houses 80. Acres 3,890. A. P. £2,068. Poor rates, in 1837, £123.

BREDY (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Uggescombe, Dorchester division and union, county of Dorset; 6½ miles west by south of Dorchester. It comprises the extra-parochial hamlet of Kingston-Russell. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 241. Houses 43. Acres 3,220. A. P. £3,308. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

BREDY (LONG), a parish in the hund. of Egger-ton, union of Dorchester, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; 8 miles west of Dorchester. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Little Bredy united, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; valued at £19 12s. 1d.; gross income £628. Patron, in 1835, Robert Williams, Esq. There are two evening National schools, an infant and daily school here. Charities connected with this parish produce £7 10s. Pop., in 1801, 241; in 1831, 333. Houses 54. Acres 2,000. A. P. £3,669. Poor rates, in 1837, £163.

BREEDON-ON-THE-HILL, a parish in the western division of the hund. of Goscote, county of Leicester; 5 miles north-east by north of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. It comprises the chapelry of Worthington, the liberty of Newbold, the townships of Breedon and Staunton-Harold, and the hamlets of Tonge and Wilson. The village stands at the base of a high rock of limestone, on the top of which stands the church. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; valued at £62s. 8d.; gross income £205. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Stamford. Improper and vicarial tithes of Breedon manor, and common fields of Breedon, Tonge, and Wilson, the property of the lay-impropriator, clerical rector, and vicar, were commuted in 1759. The improper and vicarial tithes of the manors of Breedon-on-the-hill and Worthington, and the township of Newbold, the property of the trustees of Rustat's charities, lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1802. There are in this parish two day and Sunday National schools, endowed by Elizabeth Commins in 1745, three daily and three Sunday schools. Charities connected with this parish produce £23 per annum. "The church of St. Mary and St. Hardulph here, with some lands, being given by Robert Ferrers, earl of Nottingham, about A. D. 1144, to the priory of St. Oswald at Nosthell in Yorkshire, here was soon fixed a cell of Black canons subordinate to that monastery. This was a small house, consisting of a prior and five religious, and, about the time of the dissolution, here were only two canons, when all the lands and tithes belonging to them were rated at £25 6s. 1d. per annum; and, as parcel of St. Oswald's, it was granted to Lord Gray, 7th Edward VI."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 2,198; in 1831, 2,656. Houses 556. Acres 6,410. A. P. £9,479. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,166. Pop. of the township in 1801, 815; in 1831, 1,044. Houses 243. Acres 3,010. A. P. £3,735. Poor rates, in 1837, £608.

BREEM, or BREAM, a chapelry in the parish of Newland, hund. of St. Briavell's, county of Gloucester; 5 miles south-south-west of Coleford. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £19 10s.; gross income £53; in the patronage of the vicar of Newland. The chapel has recently been enlarged, and contains a number of free sittings. The schools are returned with the parish. Pop., in 1811, 339; in 1831, 393. Houses 80. Acreage with the parish.

BREHAR, one of the Scilly islands, forming part of the county of Cornwall; 30 miles west of Land's End. This is a rude and mountainous island, inhabited chiefly by fishermen. There are some remains of druidical structures in this island.

BRIGHTMET, a township in the parish of Bolton, hund. of Salford, county of Lancaster; 2½ miles east of Great Bolton. Here is a school for fifty-four children, endowed with £26 per annum arising from various benefactions. The school-house was erected in 1750 on land given for the purpose in 1729 by William Hulton. Pop., in 1801, 734; in 1831, 1,026. Houses 189. Acres 970. A. P. £2,307. Poor rates, in 1837, £157.

BRIGHTON, a township in the parish of Bubwith, Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, east riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles north-west of Howdon, in the vicinity of the Selby and Hull railroad. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 204.

Houses 28. Acres 2,030. A. P. £1,253. Poor rates, in 1837, £93.

BREINTON, a parish in the hund. of Grims-worth, union and county of Hereford; 2½ miles west by south of Hereford, on the northern bank of the river Wye. Living, a perpetual curacy; valued at £1 10s.; rated in the parliamentary returns at £140; gross income £109; in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean of Hereford. There are here two day and Sunday schools, both endowed. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £9 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 238; in 1831, 290. Houses 53. Acres 1,490. A. P. £2,365. Poor rates, in 1837, £271.

BRELADE (Str.), a parish in the south-west part of the isle of Jersey; 1½ mile south by west of St. Aubin, on the northern angle of St. Brelade's bay. Pop., in 1831, 2,069. Houses 307.

BREMHILL, or BREMEL, a parish in the hund. of Chippenham, union of Calne, county of Wilts; 4 miles east by north of Chippenham, in the vicinity of the Wilts and Berks canal, and 3 miles south-east of the Great Western railroad. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £15 15s.; gross income £580; in the patronage of the bishop of Salisbury. The incumbent, in 1830, was the Rev. W. L. Bowles, author of many poems of great merit. The great and small tithes, the property of the vicar, were commuted in 1775. There are three Sunday schools in this parish. The village stands on an eminence commanding extensive views of the surrounding country. A monumental pillar has been erected at Wickhill in this parish, surmounted by a female figure in the costume of Edward IV. Pop., in 1801, 1,303; in 1831, 1,525. Houses 285. Acres 5,920. A. P. £10,770. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,182.

BREMILHAM, or COWITCH, a parish in the hund. and union of Malmesbury, county of Wilts; 2 miles west by south of Malmesbury. Living, a discharged rectory, with the curacies of Highway and Foxham united, formerly in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £4 1s. 8d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £91 1s. 4d.; gross income £121. Patron, in 1835, Lord Northwich. Pop., in 1811, 14; in 1831, 33. Houses 6. Acres 300. A. P. £760. Poor rates, in 1837, £28.

BRENCHLEY AND HORSEMONDEN HUNDRED, in the lathe of Aylesford, county of Kent. Area 16,490 acres. Houses 638. Pop., in 1831, 4,371.

BRENCHLEY, a parish in the hund. of Brenchley and Horsemonden, lathe of Aylesford, union of Tonbridge, county of Kent; 4 miles north of Lamberhurst, in the neighbourhood of the South Eastern railroad. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, now in the dio. of Canterbury; valued at £12 18s. 9d.; gross income £1,068; nett income £749. Patron, in 1835, G. Courthope, Esq. The church is an ancient building in the form of a cross. The Baptists have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1801. No return was made to government, in 1835, regarding the schools of Brenchley. Charities connected with this parish produce £17 per annum. Here are some mineral waters resembling those of Tunbridge. Pop., in 1801, 1,844; in 1831, 2,602. Houses 420. Acres 8,590, of which 460 were in hops in 1837. A. P. £5,582. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,331.

BRENDON, a parish in the hund. of Sherwill, Braunton division, union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; 1½ miles east of Ilfracombe, near the coast. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; valued at £9 4s., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £80; gross income £148. Patron, in 1835, John Knight, Esq. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 259. Houses 50. Acres 9,470. A. P. £717. Poor rates, in 1837, £787.

BRECKLEY, a township in the parish of Ponteland, western division of Castle ward, county of Northumberland; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 42. Houses 8. Acreage with the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £44.

BRENT (THE), a small river, rising in the county of Hertford, entering Middlesex near Finchley, and crossing the county towards Brentford, where it falls into the Thames. The London and Birmingham railway crosses this river by a viaduct, at a point 7 miles distant from Euston Grove.

BRENT (THE), a river rising in Selwood forest, Somersetshire, and falling into the sea near Bridgewater.

BRENT WITH WRINGTON HUNDRED, in the division of Wrington, county of Somerset. Area 18,210 acres. Houses 769. Pop., in 1831, 4,828.

BRENT (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Brent with Wrington, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Axbridge, intersected by the Bristol and Exeter railroad. It comprises the hamlets of Edingworth, Book-a-bridge and North Yeo. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £30 11s. 3d.; gross income £982; in the patronage of the bishop of Bath and Wells. The Methodists have a place of worship here. Here was formerly a cell to the abbey of Glastonbury. In this parish there is a lofty conical hill called Brent-knoll, on the summit of which are vestiges of a double entrenchment supposed to have been Roman. From the summit of this eminence are seen "Wed-moor, Mark-moor, and Godney-moor, the Netherlands of West England on the left, terminated by the pointed hill and lofty Tor of Glastonbury; and on the other side the eye, after sweeping a wide expanse of water, the Bristol channel, reposes itself on the hills of Glamorganshire." Pop., in 1801, 571; in 1831, 802. Houses 126. Acres 3,180. A. P. £11,508. Poor rates, in 1837, £431.

BRENT-ELEIGH, or ELY, a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Cosford, county of Suffolk; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Sudbury. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £8; gross income £374. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Snape. The church contains an excellent library, given to the parish by Dr. Colman of Trinity college, Cambridge. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Here are alms-houses for six widowers and widows, endowed with £72 per annum, in 1736, by Edward Colman, Esq. A market was formerly held here, under a grant of Henry VIII., but it has fallen into disuse. Pop., in 1801, 243; in 1831, 290. Houses 49. Acres 1,650. A. P. £2,200. Poor rates, in 1837, 135.

BRENT (SOUTH), a parish in the hund. of Stanborough, union of Totness, county of Devon; 7 miles south-west by south of Ashburton, intersected by the river Avon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £29 15s. 4½d.; gross income £906. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Baker. "The only curiosity of South Brent," says Warner, "is its little church, which has many vestiges of antiquity both within and without. Its seating is particularly curious, being certainly anterior to the Reformation. Instead of pews, it has—like the Russian churches—a regular series of plain oaken benches, with a back to each, running from either side towards the middle of the church, at right angles with the wall. The flat boards, which form the terminations of these seats, are curiously and variously carved with subjects most grotesque and ludicrous;—such as a fox or an ass in a mitre,—a pig roasting, and a monkey acting the part of turnspit,—a party of geese hanging a pig,—a monkey at prayers,—a pig preaching, &c. These caricature carvings I should consider as instances of practical satire by the parochial clergy against the mendicant orders; for it is well known that the most inveterate antipathy subsisted between the parish-priests and the friars, in consequence of that considerable influence which the latter had obtained by their absurd vows and itinerant preaching." The Independents have a place of worship here. There are in this parish four daily schools, one of which is endowed with £8 per annum, and two Sunday schools. The parish-lands yield annually £113 15s.; a considerable portion of which is laid out in purchasing clothes of all kinds, and blankets, for the poor. The village stands on the road to Plymouth, and has a great thoroughfare. Saturday is market-day, and fairs for horned cattle are held here on May 12th and October 10th. In 1838 there was a woollen mill here, employing 17 hands. The manor was anciently the property of the abbey of Buckfastleigh. Pop., in 1801, 1,032; in 1831, 1,248. Houses 226. Acres 10,180. A. P. £8,261. Poor rates, in 1837, £608.

BRENT (SOUTH), a parish in the hund. of Brent with Wrington, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; 7 miles south-west by west of Axbridge, intersected by the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £25 17s. 8½d.; gross income £613; in the patronage of the archdeaconry of Wells. The Methodists have a place of worship here. This parish possesses four daily schools and a day and boarding school. The court for the hundred is held here. Charities connected with this parish produce £7 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 500; in 1831, 890. Houses 148. Acres 3,210. A. P. £10,858. Poor rates, in 1837, £380.

BRENT-TOR, a parish in the hund. and union of Tavistock, county of Devon; 4 miles north by west of Tavistock. Living, a curacy not in charge, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued in the parliamentary returns at £14 19s. 10d.; gross income £66. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Bedford. The church and village stand on the top of a rugged and lofty cliff which serves as a conspicuous land-mark to mariners in the English channel. Here are mines of manganese. The parish is intersected by the small river Lid, and contains a sheet of water called Stowford lake. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 147. Houses 21. Acres 2,810. A. P. £887. Poor rates, in 1837, £59.

BRENTFORD, a market-town and parish, partly in the hund. of Ossulstone, and partly in the hund. of Elthorne, union of Brentford, county of Middlesex; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of London, on the Great Western road, and, on the northern bank of the Thames, $2\frac{1}{2}$ north of the Great Western railway. The former portion, attached to the parish of Ealing, is called Old Brentford, the latter New Brentford. It takes its name from its vicinity to an ancient ford on the river Brent. It is first noticed in history as the scene of a battle between Edmund Ironside and the Danes in 1016. "In a chapel at the west end of this town was founded, 25th Henry VI., by John Somerset, chancellor of the exchequer, and the king's chaplain, a friary, hospital, or fraternity of the nine orders of angels, consisting of a master and several brethren, which was able to dispense £40 per annum, according to MSS. Stow, and granted, 1^o Edward VI. to Edward, duke of Somerset."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The town consists of a long street, containing some good houses, and paved and lighted with gas. By an act obtained in 1821 for this latter object, the whole road between London and Brentford is also lighted. Here is a bridge over the Thames leading to Kew, the extensive gardens of which lie on the opposite bank; and another bridge over the Brent, which was erected in 1825, on the site of a very ancient one. Here are also an iron manufactory and a distillery of considerable extent. Tuesday is market-day; and fairs for horses, cattle, hogs, &c., are held on May 17th, 18th, and 19th; and on Sept. 12th, 13th, and 14th. These fairs, according to the charter, are for six days, but are seldom kept more than three. The market is plentifully supplied with provisions, especially vegetables. The parliamentary elections for the county were formerly held here, though it has no town-hall. It is within the jurisdiction of the county-magistrates, and its internal affairs are managed by constables and other officers, annually appointed at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. Petty-sessions for the division of New Brentford, and for the hundred of Isleworth, are held here every alternate week. It is now one of the polling-places for the county-members. Living of New Brentford, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester, of the yearly value of £283; subordinate to the vicarage of Hanwell, the incumbent of which is patron. Adjoining is a house for the curate. Of this living, the celebrated John Horne Tooke was for some time curate. Living of Old Brentford, a curacy, not in charge, a chapel of ease to the vicarage of Ealing. Here are places of worship belonging to the Independents, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists, both Primitive and Wesleyan. One of the Independent churches was formed in 1829. The Baptist church in New Brentford was organized in 1802; that in Old Brentford, in 1819. Here are a charity school for boys, with an income of £143 7s. 6d., founded in 1703, and a charity school for girls with an income of £144 18s. 4d.; besides a National school, and a school on the British and Foreign system. There are many handsome villas in the vicinity. Pop. of New Brentford, in 1801, 1,443; in 1831, 2,085. Houses 375. Acres 230. A. P., in 1828, £7,418. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,146. The returns of Old Brentford are included in the parish of EALING WITH OLD BRENTFORD: which see.—A workhouse capable of containing 400 persons has been erected here for the union of Brentford, at an expense of £9,000. The Brentford poor-law union comprehends 10 parishes, embracing an area of 29 square miles; with a population, in 1831, of 32,605. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £13,779. Expenditure, in 1838, £8,686.—Early on the morning of Sabbath the 17th of January, 1841, a frightful inundation, attended with the loss of many lives, and the destruction of property to the value of nearly £100,000, was produced here by the bursting of the banks and locks on the Grand Junction canal, which joins the Thames a little to the southward of New Brentford. This catastrophe was probably occasioned by the rapid thaw which set in on the 16th after a severe frost, and the consequent influx of an immense body of water into the Brent. In 1813, when digging for clay, some curious organic remains were discovered in the neighbourhood of Old Brentford, consisting chiefly of bones and teeth of the hippopotamus, elephant, and some species of deer.

BRENTINGBY. See WITFORDBY WITH BRENTINGBY.

BRENTWOOD, a chapelry, formerly a market town, in the parish of South Weald, hund. of Chafford, county of Essex; 18 miles east-north-east of London, and 11 south-west of Chelmsford, intersected by the railroad from London to Norwich. It was formerly a place of greater importance than now, and had a prison and town-hall, the assizes being held here. Part of these buildings still exist, and are held by different persons on condition of putting them in repair when the assizes are again removed thither. A market was formerly held here on Thursday, which has been discontinued; fairs for horses and horned cattle are held on July 11th, and October 15th and 16th. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £2 10s., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £125; gross income £124. Patron, in 1835, Charles T. Tower, Esq. The church is a small ancient structure of Gothic architecture. The Independents and Roman Catholics have places of worship here; the Independent church was formed in 1707; the Roman Catholic chapel was built in 1837. The petty-sessions for the hundreds of Barstable and Chafford are held here and at Billericay. Here is a free grammar-school for all boys residing in Brentwood and the neighbourhood. It was founded and endowed in 1537, by Sir Anthony Browne, Knt., and has an income of £1,452 17s. per annum, of which £50 are annually given to the inmates of five almshouses, and the remainder, after defraying the expenses of keeping the school-room and almshouses in repair, is paid to the master. This school has a claim along with Chelmsford and Maldon to an exhibition of £6 per annum in Caius and Gonville college, Cambridge, founded by Dr. Plume. There are also six daily schools in this chapelry. Pop., in 1801, 1,007; in 1831, 1,642. Houses 305. Acres 730. A. P. £3,000. Poor rates, in 1837, £565.

BRENZETT, or BRENSSET, a parish, partly within the liberty of Romney-Marsh, and partly in the lower division of the hund. of Aloesbridge, lathe of Shepway, union of Romney-Marsh, county of Kent; 4½ miles south-west by north of Romney, in the vicinity of the Royal Military canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; valued at £7 18s. 1½d.; gross income £77. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Brockman. The church anciently belonged to the abbey of Guynes in Artois, Flanders. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 258. Houses 43. Acres 1,740. A. P. £3,603.

BREOCK (Str.), a parish in the hund. of Pyder, union of St. Columb-Major, county of Cornwall; 1 mile west of Wadebridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; valued at £41 10s. 10d.; gross income £1,005; nett income £859; in the patronage of Sir W. Molesworth. There are six daily schools in this parish. The river Camel is here navigable to Wadebridge,—where it is crossed by a fine bridge of 16 arches. Markets were formerly held at Wadebridge. On a hill in this parish is a cromlech. Pop., in 1801, 962; in 1831, 1,650. Houses 274. Acres 7,860. A. P. £6,910. Poor rates, in 1837, £488.

BREREHURST, a hamlet in the parish of Wolstanton, northern division of the hund. of Firehill, county of Stafford; about 2 miles north-north-east of Newcastle-under-Lyme. Pop., in 1811, 646; in 1831, 900. Houses 170. Acreage with the parish.

BRERETON WITH SMETHWICK, a parish in the hund. of Northwich, union of Congleton, co-palatine of Chester; 3 miles north-east by north of Sandbach, intersected by the Manchester and Birmingham railway. This was formerly a part of the parish of Astbury, and had a chapel, but was made parochial about the time of Henry VIII., and endowed with the tithes of Brereton and Smethwick. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £7 0s. 5d.; gross income £761. Patron, in 1835, James Royds, Esq. The Presbyterians have a place of worship here; and there are two daily schools, one of which possesses a small endowment. Several bequests left to the poor and the school have been invested in land for their joint benefit, which was leased in 1833 for a term of 14 years, at a clear rent of £12 10s. Other charities connected with this parish produce £10 10s. per annum. Petty-sessions are held at Brereton-Green, and at Middlewich and Sandbach alternately, for the hundred of Northwich. Pop., in 1801, 556; in 1831, 660. Houses 110. Acres 4,240. A. P. £5,584. Poor rates, in 1837, £466.

BRESSINGHAM, or BRISSINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Diss, union of Guiltcross, county of Norfolk; 3 miles west of Diss. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £15; gross income £456. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Norfolk. The church is an ancient building. There are three daily schools, one of which is endowed, and two Sunday schools, in this parish. Here are the remains of a large conduit constructed by Sir Richard de Boyland. Pop., in 1801, 650; in 1831, 655. Houses 91. Acres 2,300. A. P. £3,525. Poor rates, in 1837, £510.

BRETBY. See BRADBY.

BRETBY. See BIRKBY, Yorkshire.

BRETORTON, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Blackenhurst, union of Evesham, county of Worcester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Evesham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; valued at £6 5s.; gross income £97. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Dr. Timbrill. The inappropriate and vicarial tithes, the property of the lay-impropriators and vicar, were commuted in 1765. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 413; in 1831, 423. Houses 95. Acres 1,530. A. P. £2,574. Poor rates, in 1837, £65.

BRETHERTON, a township in the parish of Croston, hund. of Leyland, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Preston, on the eastern bank of the Douglas river, and 6 miles west of the Wigan and Preston railway. An Independent church was formed here in 1819. Here is a school in which the children in the town receive gratuitous instruction in reading and writing; it was founded in 1654, by James Fletcher, and has now an annual income of £112. The township also possesses a daily school and three Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 567; in 1831, 828. Houses 136. Acres 2,360. A. P. £4,851. Poor rates, in 1837, £255.

BRETENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Shrop-ham, union of Thetford, county of Norfolk; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Thetford, intersected by the Roman-road Peddar way. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £5 12s. 6d.; gross income £200; in the patronage of the bishop of Ely. Pop., in 1801, 56; in 1831, 65. Houses 9. Acres 2,170. A. P. £1,104. Poor rates, in 1837, £15.

BRETENHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Cosford, county of Suffolk; 8 miles west of Needham Market, intersected by the proposed Ipswich and St. Edmund's Bury railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £11 3s. 11½d.; gross income £377. Patron, the lord-chancellor. There are here two daily schools. Here are some vestiges of a Roman camp, from which some antiquaries have been led to suppose this the site of the Roman station Combretonium, or Combretonvium. It is doubtful, however, whether this was not at Brettenham in Norfolk. Pop., in 1801, 228; in 1831, 366. Houses 79. Acres 1,550. A. P. £1,666. Poor rates, in 1837, £209.

BRETTON, a township in the parish of Hawarden, hund. of Mold, county of Flint, North Wales; 3 miles south-east by east of Hawarden. Pop., in 1821, 212; in 1831, 257. Houses 52. Other returns with the parish.

BRETTON (MONK or LUNDA), a township in the parish of Royston, wapentake of Staincross, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north-east of Barnesley, in the immediate vicinity of the Barnesley canal, and the York and North Midland railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Royston. There are here a daily school, containing 42 children, and three Sunday schools; and also an almshouse for six poor widows, founded in 1654. "Here Adam Fitz-Swain, pretty early in the reign of King Henry II., founded a monastery of the Cluniac order to the honour of St. Mary Magdalene. It was first made subordinate to the priory of St. John at Pontefract, which had, till the dissolution, from this house a small yearly acknowledgment in money. The revenues belonging to the priory and monks of Bretton, amounted, 26th Henry VIII., to £323 8s. 2d. The site was granted, 32d Henry VIII., to William Blythman." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 480; in 1831, 1,394. Houses 256. Acres 2,050. A. P. £3,576. Poor rates, in 1837, £275.

BRETTON (WEST), a chapelry partly in the parish of Great Sandall, lower division of the wapentake of Agbrigg, and partly in the parish of Silkstone, wapentake of Staincross, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-west of Barnesley, in the vicinity of the Manchester and Leeds railway. Living, a curacy annexed to Silkstone. There is a daily school in this chapelry. Pop., in 1801, 491; in 1831, 568. Houses 111. Acres 2,520. A. P. £2,188. Poor rates, in 1837, £217.

BREWARD (ST.), or SIMONWARD, a parish in the hund. of Trigg, union of Camelford, county of Cornwall; 7 miles north by east of Bodmin. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; valued at £8; and in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Exeter. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 513; in 1831, 627. Houses 116. Acres 9,180. A. P. £2,561. Poor rates, in 1837, £205.

BREWHAM (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Bruton, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Bruton; now annexed to South Brewham. At Batt's farm in this parish was formerly a chapel. Pop., in 1801, 274; in 1831, 395. Houses 75. Acres 2,310. A. P. £2,833. Poor rates, in 1837, £372.

BREWHAM (SOUTH), a parish in the hund. or Bruton, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Bruton, intersected by the Bath and Weymouth railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £21, rated in the parliamentary returns at £36; gross income £102. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. The church has recently been enlarged. There are two daily schools here. The river Brew runs through this parish and gives origin to the name. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 573. Houses 121. Acres 3,590. A. P. £2,862. Poor rates, in 1837, £458.

BREWHOUSE-YARD, an extra-parochial liberty, in the southern division of the wapentake of Broxtow, county of Nottingham; contiguous to Nottingham. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 573. Houses 19. A. P. £2,862. Poor rates, in 1837, £26.

BREWOD, a parish in the eastern division of the hund. of Cuttlestone, union of Penkridge, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Penkridge, intersected by the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction canal, and 2 miles west of the Grand Junction railroad. It comprises the township, formerly the market-town, of Brewod, the liberties of Coven, Chillington, and Somerford, and the townships of Bishop's-Wood, Hide with Wooley, Kiddermore-Green, and Park-Lane. The parish extends a short way into the Shiffnall division of the hundred of Brunstree, Salop. The village stands in an agreeable situation on the banks of the Peak. Tuesday is market-day, and a fair for horses and cattle is held on September 19th. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £6 17s. 8d.; gross income £632; in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean of Lichfield. The church is a handsome edifice. Here are places of worship belonging to the Independents and Wesleyan Methodists; the Independent church was formed in 1802. The free grammar-school has a revenue of £412 per annum. It is believed to have been founded by Dr. Knightley. Here are also a National school and several Sunday schools. In 1835 no education return could be obtained from this place by government, although five applications were made for that purpose. In this parish is a noble mansion called Chillington-hall; on the estate there are two Roman Catholic chapels. "Here was a priory of White or Cistercian nuns, situate in that part of the parish which is in the county of Salop, dedicated to St. Leonard, as old as the reign of Richard I. or John. About the time of the general dissolution it consisted of six religious, and was valued at £31 1s. 4d. per annum. The site was granted to William Whorwood, 31^o Henry VIII., and is still called White ladies, the same that is mentioned in the accounts of the famous escape of King Charles II. from Worcester fight, being near Boscobel and the royal oak. There was also a small Benedictine nunnery, situate in that part of the parish which is in the county of Stafford, in being in the time of Richard I., and perhaps before, dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary, and valued but £11 1s. 6d. clear, yet, there were five nuns. It was granted, 30th Henry VIII., to Thomas Gifford. This was called the Black ladies of Brewod." Tanner's Not. Men. Pop., in 1801, 2,867; in 1831, 3,799. Houses 699. Acres 11,950. A. P. £16,428. Poor rates, in 1837, £968.

BRIAN'S-PUDDLE. See APP-PUDDLE.

BRIAVELL'S (ST.) HUNDRED, in the county of Gloucester, bordering on the counties of Hereford and Monmouth. Area 50,100 acres. Houses 3,236. Pop., in 1831, 16,092.

BRIAVEL'S (ST.), a parish in the hund. of St. Briavell's, county of Gloucester; 7 miles north of Chepstow, on the eastern bank of the river Wye. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Lydney. The church is a small cruciform edifice of great antiquity. There are two daily schools in this parish. A weekly market was formerly held here under a charter of Edward II., who likewise conferred on the inhabitants the right of passing toll-free all over the kingdom,—a privilege now obsolete. The market has also fallen into disuse. A court is held here for regulating all matters in dispute between miners in the neighbouring coal-works. Its jurisdiction extends over the whole hundred, concurrently with the other tribunals. The suits cognizable in this court are actions in the nature of debt or contract, or for injury to personal property. The court sits every third Monday, except during vacations. A castle was erected here in the reign of Henry I., as a frontier defence against the Welsh. Of this structure only a small portion remains, in which the officers of the hundred hold their courts; and in part of which are cells used as prisons for the debtors and delinquents in the Forest. It is in a dilapidated condition. The moat still remains, and also some vestiges of Offa's dyke. The duke of Beaufort, as lord of the manor, holds the office of constable or governor of St. Briavel's castle,—a sinecure charge. Pop., in 1801, 670; in 1831, 1,124. Houses 224. Acres 4,710. A. P. £2,894. Poor rates, in 1837, £267.

BRICETT, or BRISSET (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Needham. Living, a perpetual curacy not in charge, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; of the yearly value of £100; in the patronage of the provost and fellows of king's college, Cambridge. A fair is held here on the 5th of July for butter, sheep, and toys. "About A. D. 1110, Ralph Fitz-Brien erected a priory here for canons of the order of St. Austin, to the honour of St. Leonard. It was subordinate to the monastery of Nobiliac in the diocese of Limoges and duchy of Berry. After the suppression of these alien priories, this, with all its lands, was given by King Henry VI. to king's college, Cambridge." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 284. Houses 33. Acres 950. A. P. £878. Poor rates, in 1837, £239.

BRICKENDON, a parish in the liberty of All Saints, Hertford, hund. and county of Hertford; 3 miles south of Hertford. There are three daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 463; in 1831, 765. Houses 147. Acres 1,690. A. P. £3,106. Poor rates, in 1837, £318. The poor-law commissioners report that this parish, "having a population of 765 in 1831, and being at that time overgrown with pauperism, determined on a struggle to emancipate itself some time before the labours of the commissioners of inquiry had drawn public attention to the peculiar means of effecting such an object. They built a workhouse capable of holding 70 inmates, divided, both as to building and yard, into two compartments, and began their new system in 1833. At that time the amount of relief given to persons on the pension-list for one quarter short of a week, was £67, the number of individuals relieved being 45 and upwards. In 1835, and taking the corresponding quarter of the year, the quarterly pension amounted to £17 11s., and the number of recipients of outdoor relief were only 12. With regard to the able-bodied, as much as £107 appears to have been spent in one year in finding employment for men out of work; in 1834, the expense incurred on this account was not more than £28. In a printed abstract of the parish accounts made up to Easter, 1835, the saving is stated as follows: Average expenditure during the preceding four years, £655 15s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; expenditure for the past year, £380 6s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; saving during the past year, £275 9s. 4d."

BRICKHILL (Bow), a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport Pagnell, county of Buckingham; 2 miles south by east of Fenny Stratford, in the vicinity of the Grand Junction canal, and the London and Birmingham railroad. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £15 0s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £370. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Davies. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1790. Here is an endowment, given in 1633, by Charles Purrett, for the benefit of the poor and the instruction of children. Other charities connected with the parish produce £16 per annum. The females in this parish receive some employment from the lace-merchants. Pop., in 1801, 431; in 1831, 475. Houses 112. Acres 1,380. A. P. £2,415. Poor rates, in 1837, £183.

BRICKHILL (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport Pagnell, county of Buckingham; 3 miles south-east by east of Fenny Stratford, in the vicinity of the London and Birmingham railroad. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £18 2s. 11d.; gross income £457. Patron, in 1835, P. P. Duncombe. Certain great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1771. The Baptists have a chapel here. There are two daily, three infant, and three Sunday schools in this parish. Charities connected with Great Brickhill produce £54 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 560; in 1831, 776. Houses 150. Acres 1,800. A. P. £3,633. Poor rates, in 1837, £317.

BRICKHILL (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport Pagnell, county of Buckingham; 2 miles east-south-east of Fenny Stratford, on the post-road to Dunstable, about 3 miles north-east of the London and Birmingham railroad. Living, a perpetual curacy; valued at £29 10s.; gross income £119; in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury. The great and small tithes, the property of the archbishop of Canterbury, and the vicar, were commuted in 1796. There are here four daily schools, one of which has an endowment of £5 per annum. Other charities connected with this parish produce about £26 per annum. Fairs are held here on May 12th, and October 29th, for cattle. This was formerly a place of much greater importance than at present, and so late as the reign of Elizabeth was a market-town in which the assizes were held. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 514. Houses 104. Acres 1,360. A. P. £3,132. Poor rates, in 1837, £266.

† BRICKLEHAMPTON, a chapelry in the parish of St. Andrew, Pershore, upper division of the hund. of Pershore, county of Worcester; 3½ miles south-east by south of Pershore. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of St. Andrew, Pershore. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1774. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 102; in 1831, 156. Houses 35. Acres 810. A. P. £1,477. Poor rates, in 1837, £63.

BRIDELL, a parish in the hund. of Kilgerran, union of Cardigan, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 3 miles south of Cardigan. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Cardigan and dio. of St. David's; valued at £9, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £109; gross income £120; in the patronage of the freeholders of the parish. There are a daily and a Sunday school here, and a dissenting chapel. Pop., in 1801, 248; in 1831, 395. Houses 83. A. P. £1,070. Poor rates, in 1837, £106.

BRIDEKIRK, a parish in the ward of Allerdale below Darwent, county of Cumberland; 2 miles north-north-east of Cockermouth, in the vicinity of the Maryport and Carlisle railroad. It comprises the townships of Bridekirk, Great and Little Broughton, Dovenby, Papcastle with Goat, Ribton, and Tallentire. Living, a discharged vicarage, in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; valued at £10 13s. 4d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £94 0s. 4d.; gross income £139. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Dykes. The church is an ancient structure. It contains a curious carved font, supposed by Camden to have been brought from the Roman station at Papcastle, on which is an inscription in Saxon and Runic characters, which Bishop Nicholson has thus translated:—"Here was Erkad converted; and to this man's example were the Danes brought." It is of a square form, and in height about two feet. There are ten daily schools, one of which is endowed, and six Sunday schools, in this parish; and also endowed alms-houses for ten poor persons. Other charities connected with Bridekirk produce £8 per annum. Freestone is found here in abundance; there are also quarries of limestone. In 1838, there were two flax-mills, employing 111 hands within this parish. Bridekirk was the birth-place of Sir Joseph Williamson, secretary of state to Charles II., and Thomas Tickell the poet. Pop., in 1801, 1,410; in 1831, 1,902. Houses 405. Acres 9,270. A. P. £10,232. Poor rates, in 1837, £472. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 94; in 1831, 111. Houses 19. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £963. Poor rates, in 1837, £30.

BRIDE (ST.), MAJOR, a parish in the hund. of Ogmere, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 3¼ miles south-east of Bridgend, near the Bristol channel. It comprises the hamlets of St. Bride, Lampha, Southerndown, and Ynysawdre. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Wick annexed, in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; valued at £9 15s. 5½d.; gross income £200; in the patronage of Mrs. Turberville. There are two daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 682; in 1831, 922. Houses 194. A. P. £4,023. Poor rates, in 1837, £407.

BRIDE (ST.), MINOR, a parish in the hund. of Newcastle, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 2½ miles north by east of Bridgend, on the Ogmere river. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; valued at £5 3s. 6½d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £120; gross income £176; in the patronage of the Earl of Dunraven. Coal is found here. Pop., in 1801, 359; in 1831, 306. Houses 75. A. P. £911. Poor rates, in 1837, £86.

BRIDE (ST.), WENTLOOG, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Wentloog, union of Newport, county of Monmouth; 4½ miles south-south-west of Newport, on the shore of the Bristol channel. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Coedkernew annexed, in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; valued at £4 18s. 1½d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £40; gross income £140; in the patronage of the bishop of Llandaff. There is an Independent church, formed in 1826. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 200. Houses 39. Acres 2,180. A. P. £2,593. Poor rates, in 1837, £141.

BRIDE'S (ST.), NETHERWENT, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Caldicott, union of Chepstow, county of Monmouth; 6½ miles east-south-east of Caerleon. It includes the hamlet of Landevenny. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; valued at £6 13s. 3d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £63; gross income £193; in the patronage, in 1835, of T. and J. Perry, Esqs. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 163. Houses 35. Acres 1,190. A. P. £644. Poor rates, in 1837, £42.

BRIDE'S (ST.), a parish in the hund. of Roose, union of Haverfordwest, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 9½ miles south-west of Haverfordwest, on the southern side of the dangerous bay of St. Bride, in St. George's channel. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; valued at £15 12s.; gross income £190; in the patronage, in 1835, of Sir W. Phillips, W. Phillips, and Mary B.

Allen, alternately. Here is an ancient chapel in ruins. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 132. Houses 25. A. P. £1,390. Poor rates, in 1837, £146.

BRIDE'S (ST.), SUPER ELY, a parish in the hund. of Dinas Powis, union of Cardiff, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 7 miles west by north of Cardiff, on the river Ely. Living, a discharged rector, united to that of Michaelston-Super-Ely. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 128. Houses 28. A. P. £628. Poor rates, in 1837, £36.

BRIDE'S-KIRK, a parish in the north-eastern part of the Isle of Man; 5 miles north of Ramsey, and 2 south of the point of Ayre, on which there is a light-house. It is one of five parishes, which, from their fertility, compose what is termed the Garden of the Island. Pop., in 1831, 1,039. Houses 183.

BRIDESTOWE, a parish in the hund. of Lifton, union of Oakhampton, county of Devon; 6 miles south-west of Oakhampton, on the post-road to Launceston. Living, a rector, with the curacy of Sourton annexed, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £32 17s. 11d.; gross income £513; in the patronage of the bishop of Exeter. The Baptist church here was formed in 1832. There are three daily schools, and a day and Sunday school, in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 581; in 1831, 907. Houses 156. Acres 5,170. A. P. £3,804. Poor rates, in 1837, £335.

BRIDFORD, or BRIDGEFORD, a parish in the hund. of Wonford, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 6 miles north-west by north of Chudleigh. Living, a rector, in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £13 15s.; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, Sir Lawrence V. Falk, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 444; in 1831, 529. Houses 79. Acres 4,090. A. P. £2,193. Poor rates, in 1837, £291.

BRIDGE and PETHAM HUNDRED, in the lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent. Area 13,210 acres. Houses 486. Pop., in 1831, 3,057.

BRIDGE—in old deeds Bregge—a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Bridge and Petham, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Bridge, county of Kent; 3 miles south-east, on the post-road to Dover, and intersected by the river Stour, over which there is a bridge here. Living, a vicarage, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury, consolidated with the vicarage of Patricxbourne. The church has a spire steeple. This parish possesses two daily schools, and a day and Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 325; in 1831, 543. Houses 97. Acres 1,280. A. P. £1,667. Poor rates, in 1837, £218.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Bridge, by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £5,000, capable of accommodating 500 persons.—The Bridge poor-law union comprehends 22 parishes, embracing an area of 62 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 10,439. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £8,492. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,764.

BRIDGEND, a hamlet in the parish of Horbling, wapentake of Aveland, parts of Kesteven, county of Lincoln; 4½ miles east by north of Fellingham. "Here was a Gilbertine priory, founded in the time of King John, by Godwin, a rich citizen of London, to the honour of our blessed Saviour. It was valued at £5 1s. 11d. per annum, and, as parcel of Sempringham, was granted to Edward, Lord Clinton, 32^d Henry VIII."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

BRIDGEND, a town in the parish of Coyt and hund. of Newcastle, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 181 miles west of London, and 7 west by north of Cowbridge. It is a straggling place, on the river Ogmore, over which there is a stone-bridge, and is divided into three parts, called Oldcastle, Newcastle, and Bridgend. There is an Independent church formed in 1808. The county-member was sometimes elected in the town-hall here, where petty-sessions are also held for the hundreds of Newcastle and Ogmore. It is one of the polling-places in the election of the county-members. Saturday is market-day, and fairs are held on November 17th; and Holy Thursday, for cattle, sheep, and hogs. Here are extensive woollen factories, and the soil in the neighbourhood is fertile and well-cultivated. Pop. and other returns included in those of the parish.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £4,400, capable of containing 200 persons.—The Bridgend and Cowbridge poor-law union comprehends 52 parishes; with a population returned, in 1831, at £17,288. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union was £6,879. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,232.—There is a railway from this place to the Duffryn-Llynvi line, near Cefn Gribbwyr in the parish of Laleston; length 4½ miles; rise 190 feet.

BRIDGEFORD (EAST), or BRIDGEFORD-ON-THE-HILL, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Bingham, union of Bingham, county of Nottingham; 8 miles east-north-east of Nottingham, on the eastern bank of the river Trent, over which there is a ferry here. Living, a rector, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; valued at £19 6s. 8½d.; gross income £752; alternately in the patronage of J. Musters, Esq., and the president and fellows of Magdalene college, Oxford. The great and small tithes, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1796. There are here two day and boarding schools, containing 58 children, and a day and Sunday National school. Charities connected with this parish produce £10 14s. per annum. The south-east border of the parish is crossed by the Roman fosse road. Pop., in 1801, 526; in 1831, 938. Houses 179. Acres 1,910. A. P. £3,252. Poor rates, in 1837, £286.

BRIDGEFORD (WEST), a parish, partly in the southern division of the wapentake of Bingham, and partly in the northern division of the wapentake of Rushcliffe, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 2 miles south-south-west of Nottingham, intersected by the Grantham canal, and in the vicinity of the Midland Counties railroad. Living, a rector, comprising the hamlet of Gameton, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; valued at £16 14s. 2d.; gross income £800. Patron, in 1835, J. Musters, Esq. There is a daily school in this parish, with an endowment of £15 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 338. Houses 59. Acres 1,720. A. P. £5,452. Poor rates, in 1837, £183.

BRIDGEFORD. See BRIDFORD.

BRIDGEHAM, a parish in the hund. of Shrop-ham, union of Guiltcross, county of Norfolk; 3 miles west by south of East Harling. Living, a rector, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £11 1s. 0½d., in the parliamentary returns at £110; gross income £400; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Charities connected with this parish produce £16 6s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 242; in 1831, 291. Houses 37. Acres 2,330. A. P. £1,870. Poor rates, in 1837, £124.

BRIDGEHAMPTON, a tything in the parish of Yeovilton, hund. of Somerton, county of Somerset; 2 miles east by north of Ilchester. Pop., in 1821, 105; in 1831, 103. Houses 16. Acreage with the parish.

BRIDGEMERE, a township in the parish of Wybunbury, hund. of Nantwich, co.-palatine of Chester; 6 miles south-south-east of Nantwich, in the vicinity of the Grand Junction railway. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 236. Houses 41. Acres 850. A. P. £1,065. Poor rates, in 1837, £102.

BRIDGEN. See BEXLEY.

BRIDGNORTH, a borough and market-town, situated in the hund. of Stottesden, union of Bridgnorth, county of Salop, but possessing separate jurisdiction; 139 miles north-west of London, and 8 south-east of Much-Wenlock. It stands on the river Severn, which divides it into two portions, called the Upper and Lower towns. The Upper town is on the western bank of the river, on the sides and summit of a red sandstone rock which rises to the height of 180 feet above the level of the river. The appearance of this division of the town is remarkably picturesque. It is supplied with water raised from the Severn, and forced by machinery into a great reservoir, from which it is conducted by pipes into the houses. The borough corporation hold the Severn waterworks under a lease of 1,000 years in trust for the benefit of the town. The funds for the support of the works are levied by a rate on the inhabitants. The view from the upper part of the town is very fine, especially from that part where the remains of the castle stand, where a terrace-walk has been laid out, overlooking the lower town, the river, and a widely spreading country. The public library, founded by the Rev. Mr. Stackhouse, is in this part of the town. It is a handsome building, and contains upwards of 4,000 volumes; the inhabitants are admitted to its use on payment of an annual subscription. The lower town, which lies on the opposite side of the Severn, contains only two principal streets.

Bridgnorth is a borough by prescription. The first charter of which any knowledge exists is of the 16th King John, which grants to the burgesses of Bruges and their heirs, certain liberties and free customs, and freedom from toll throughout the kingdom, except within the liberties of London. A subsequent charter of the 11th Henry III. renewed this grant, and included others; among which was his mill at Pendlestone, without the town, to be held in fee-farm at a yearly rent of £10. Farther grants were made by Henry VI. The old corporation consisted of 2 bailiffs, a recorder, and a deputy-recorder, 24 aldermen, 48 common-council-men, 2 chamberlains, and 2 bridge-masters, with a town-clerk, sergeants-at-mace, and other officers. The bailiffs were justices of the peace, and justices of the court of record; the senior acted as coroner for the borough. The recorder held his office for life; his deputy, whom he appointed, was always a barrister, and the legal adviser of the corporation. By the new Municipal act Bridgnorth is governed by a bailiff, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors. The income of the corporation, in 1837, was £1,114. A general session of the peace is held once a-year, before the bailiffs and deputy-recorder. No felonies are tried at it; all persons accused of felony are committed for trial to the county. Bridgnorth has had a commission of the peace granted to it, and a court of quarter-sessions, and recorder. The prison is in the rear of the work-house, there being but one entrance to both establishments. It consists of two cells and three other apartments. The magistrates are about to reconstruct it on the principle of separate confinement. This borough has continued to return two members to parliament since the time of Edward I. All burgesses, whether resident or not, possessed the right of voting; their number was about 986, and the influence of the Whitmore family predominated. Under the reform bill the constituency has fallen to about 620, though the boundaries of the burgh have been made to comprise the old borough of Bridgnorth, and the several parishes of Quatford, Oldbury, Tasley, and Astley-Abbotts. Bridgnorth is also a polling-place in the election of the members for the southern division of Salop. The petty-sessions for the hundred of Stottesden are held here. Bridgnorth does not contribute to the county rates.

The market-day is Saturday, when large quantities of grain are brought forward, especially wheat and barley. Fairs are held on the Thursday before Shrovetide, May 1st, June 30th, August 2d, October 29th, and December 15th for horned cattle, horses, sheep, hops, wool, yarn, linen, butter, cheese, and general merchandise. Races are held here in the month of August. Upwards of three-fourths of the population are returned as employed in trade and manufactures, the latter being chiefly those of cloth, stockings, and iron tools. In 1838 there was a worsted mill here, employing 101 hands. The town derives its chief importance, however, from its situation on the Severn, and it is a thriving inland port. A large portion of its labouring class obtain employment in the navigation of the Severn; but the market and the retail trade with the neighbourhood afford the principal source of profit to the inhabitants. Vessels are built here, and a great quantity of goods imported for inland consumption, while grain and malt are exported largely.

The borough is divided into the two parishes of St. Mary Magdalene and St. Leonard, the livings of which are perpetual curacies, not in charge, exempt from visitation, and in 1835, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of Thomas Whitmore, Esq.—The living of St. Mary Magdalene is rated in the parliamentary returns at £115 19s.; gross income £95. The present church was erected in 1792. It is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style. The original church was the chapel to the castle, which King John exempted from ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and which was made parochial in the 4th of Edward III.—St. Leonard's is rated in the parliamentary returns at £83; gross income £150. The church is a Gothic structure, much defaced. It was formerly collegiate, and was erected in 1448, on the site of a still more ancient church. Here are places of worship for Independents and Baptists; the Independent church was formed in 1711, and the Baptist in 1704. The free grammar-school, for the sons of burgesses, was founded in 1503, by the corporation, and is supported partly by endowments and partly by contributions. Its income is about £160 per annum. In 1689, Mr. Canawell endowed eighteen exhibitions to Christ-church college, Oxford, with an estate now producing £1,500 per annum. These exhibitions are distributed to the following free grammar-schools in the county of Salop, viz. Shrewsbury, which has four; Bridgnorth, three; Shifnal, three; Wem, two; and Donnington, in the parish of Wroxeter, two. There are also eight daily, three boarding, and three Sunday schools within the borough. Here are alms-houses for 12 widows of burgesses; endowed with £158 per annum, and in the direction of the corporation; and an hospital in the churchyard of St. Leonard's, founded and endowed in 1687 by the Rev. Francis Palmer of Sandley in Bedfordshire, for ten poor widows, each of whom receives £10 per annum. Other charities connected with Bridgnorth produce about £196 per annum.—“Roger of Montgomery or Bellesm, earl of Shrewsbury, in the time of William Rufus, built at Quatford in this county, a church, or chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, and endowed it with great possessions, at the desire of Adelaiza his second wife, who made a vow thereof in a tempest at sea on her first coming to England. But this foundation was soon removed or annexed to Bridgnorth, where, in the castle, the said Earl Roger began, and his son Robert de Bellesmo finished a collegiate church, of a dean and six prebendaries, to the honour also of St. Mary Magdalene. This continued, and was accounted as a royal free chapel till the general dissolution. It was granted, 21st Elizabeth, to Sir Christopher Hatton.—Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 4,408; in 1831, 5,065. Houses 1,113. Acres 3,500. A. P. £11,739. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,207.—The Bridgnorth poor-law union comprehends 29 parishes, embracing an area of 105 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 14,316. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union was £5,900. Expenditure, in 1838, £3,374.

Bridgnorth is a place of great antiquity. It was originally called Brugia, Brug, or Bruges. Its name was derived from a bridge erected by the Saxons over the Severn. The town is supposed to have been founded by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred. It is doubtful whether or not a castle existed here from so early a period; but in the reign of Henry I. it is said to have been rebuilt by Robert de Belesme, earl of Shrewsbury. It became a royal garrison, which during the civil war remained faithful to the royal cause. In 1646, it sustained a desperate attack from the parliamentary forces, in the course of which a large portion of the town was burnt to the ground. The garrison held out for three weeks, and at last obtained a capitulation on honourable terms. The captors blew up the fortifications.

BRIDGERULE, a parish, partly in the hund. of Stratton, Cornwall, and partly in the hund. of Black Torrington, union of Holworthy, Devonshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Stratton, intersected by the Bude and Launceston canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £14, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £130; gross income £152. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. H. Kingdon. There are a daily and a day and Sunday National school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 467. Houses 84. Acres 4,010. A. P. £719. Poor rates, in 1837, £205.

BRIDGE-SOLLERS, a parish in the hund. of Grimsworth, union of Weobley, county of Hereford; 6 miles west-north-west of Hereford: on the banks of the river Wye, over which there is a ferry here. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; valued at £3 10s., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £102; gross income £100. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. G. Cotterell, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 71. Houses 12. Acres 740. A. P. £1,159. Poor rates, in 1837, £104.

BRIDGEWATER, a sea-port, borough, market-town, and parish, locally situated in the hund. of North-Petherton, division and union of Bridgewater, county of Somerset; 139 miles west by south of London, and 11 north-north-east of Taunton, in the immediate vicinity of the Bristol and Exeter railway, which is carried across the river Parret, about $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile above the town by an arch of 100 feet span. The limits of the borough, for municipal purposes, are co-extensive with those of the parish. Its boundaries, for election purposes, which were much narrowed by a decision of the house of commons in 1769, are, by the boundary act, rendered nearly co-terminous with the limits of the municipal borough.

Living, a vicarage, with the rectory of Chilton annexed, in the archd. of Taunton, and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £11 7s. 6d., rated in the parliamentary returns at £110; gross income £354; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church is an ancient Gothic structure, with a very lofty spire. It contains a fine altar-piece, taken from a French privateer, and presented to the parish by the Hon. A. Poulett. A new church has been built by the parliamentary commissioners, in the Gothic style, with porches, at an expense of £3,254. Sittings 1,093. The Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, Baptists, Society of Friends, and Unitarians have places of worship here; the Independent church was formed in 1818; the Unitarian in 1688; the Baptist in 1600; and the Wesleyan Methodist in 1816. Here is a grammar-school, founded in 1561, and endowed with £16 13s. 4d. per annum, for which two boys are taught Greek and Latin. Here is also a free school for 30 scholars, founded and endowed in 1723 by Mr. John Morgan, in which the system of Dr. Bell is followed. In 1781, Mr. Edward Fackerell founded and endowed a school here, to which, by a decree of the court of chancery, his own relatives only are admitted; these are now 30 in number, and the annual revenue is about £174. There are also in this borough 13 daily schools, 5 Sunday schools, 4 of which have lending libraries attached, and a day and Sunday school. John Gilbert, in 1731, bequeathed certain lands, which now produce £56 9s. 10d. per annum, this sum is expended in purchasing bread and clothing for the poor. Other charities connected with the borough produce £86 per annum.

The town stands on the river Parret, over which is an iron bridge of one arch, erected on the site of an ancient stone structure. The greater part of the town is situated on the western side of the river, and contains some good streets, which are paved, lighted, and kept remarkably clean. By a local act—7^o Geo. IV.—24 trustees are appointed for this purpose, who have power to make bye-laws, to employ watchmen, and to light the streets with gas. The power of lighting the town with gas has never been acted upon. It is in a prosperous state, the trade is improving, and considerable facilities have been afforded by the erection of new markets for the accommodation of the inhabitants. The market days are, Tuesday for corn and cattle, and Saturday for provisions. Fairs for cattle and all sorts of merchandise are held on the second Thursday in Lent, June 24th, October 2d and 3d, and December 29th. There is a branch of the West of England and South Wales district bank, and of Stuckey's banking company, here. Bridgewater is a warehousing port, and possesses considerable trade; the river being navigable up to the town for vessels of 200 tons burden, and as far as Langport and Taunton for barges and boats. The number of vessels which entered inwards in 1832 was 2,089, and the amount of custom-duties for the year ending 5th July, 1833, was £6,878. The foreign trade with the United States, Canada, and the West Indies, consists in the importation of wine, hemp, tallow, and timber; but the greater part of the vessels are employed coast-wise; large quantities of coal are imported from Wales, and sent inland by a canal as far as Taunton.

Bridgewater was constituted a free borough in 1200 by King John, and until the passing of the late municipal act, was governed under a charter granted by that monarch, but subsequently modified and enlarged by Edward III., Elizabeth, Charles II. and other monarchs. The corporation consisted of a mayor, recorder, two aldermen, two bailiffs or sheriffs, and other office-bearers. By the municipal act, this borough has been divided into two wards,—north and south,—to each of which 9 councillors have been assigned, who, with 6 aldermen and a mayor, compose the governing body. The quarter sessions for the county are held at this place during the summer, and the county assizes once in every two years. There is a court of record or civil court, held every Monday in every week, before the mayor, recorder, and aldermen for the time being, or any three, two, or one of them. The jurisdiction of this court extends to all personal actions, and to any amount. Petty-sessions are generally held every Monday. The town has had a commission of the peace granted to it, and a court of quarter-sessions. The income of the town, in 1837, was £1,775. This borough has returned two members to parliament since the 23^d Edward I. The right of election belonged formerly to the scot and lot paying inhabitants of a small part of the town, called 'the borough'; it was afterwards extended over the whole town. The electors were formerly about 460 in number; those registered under the new act in 1832, amounted to 484. Of these, 132 were registered as scot and lot voters; none as freemen. The mayor is the returning officer. The influence of the Poulett family formerly predominated here. Bridgewater is also a polling-place in the election of members for West Somerset.—Here are some almshouses and a well-supported infirmary, founded in 1813. An eye dispensary was erected in 1834 by Mr. Torgood, surgeon, and is supported solely at his expense. Bridgewater was the birth-place of Admiral Blake. The Egerton family takes the title of Earl from Bridgewater. Pop., in 1801, 3,634; in 1831, 7,807. Houses 1,400. Acres 3,580. A. P. £29,235. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,094.—A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Bridgewater, by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £7,500, capable of accommodating 300 persons.—The Bridgewater poor-law union comprehends 40 parishes, embracing an area of 133 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 23,566. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £13,387. Expenditure, in 1838, £10,401.—The name appears in ancient records to have been formerly spelt Burgh-Walter, or Brugg-Walter, and is thought to imply that it was the burgh of Walter de Douay, a follower of William the Conqueror. In the reign of Henry II. it reverted to William de Briwere, who built a castle of great size and strength here. He also founded an hospital, the revenue of which, at the dissolution, was valued at £121. In the parliamentary war, this place declared itself for the king, and, in consequence, was besieged and taken by General Fairfax, who demolished the castle.

BRIDLINGTON, or BURLINGTON, formerly BRELLINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, union of Bridlington, east riding of Yorkshire; 206 miles north of London, and 12 north-east of Great Driffield. It includes the towns of Bridlington and Bridlington Quay, the chapelry of Grindall, the townships of Buckton, Hildethorp, and Sewerby with Martin, and the hamlets of Easton and Spec-ton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; valued at £8, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £83 10s.; gross income £143. Patrons, in 1835, Sir L. Wood and the Rev. A. Cooke. Of the priory church, dedicated to St. Mary, the nave alone exists. When perfect, it rivalled the noble minster of Beverley, not only in dimensions, but in beauty of construction. It is now rather an unsightly parish church. To the admirer of ancient architecture, however, the remains possess that magnificence of design and beauty of detail, which render such relics so valuable to the artist and archæologist. The building is entirely in the pointed style; the greater part of the nave appears to have been erected between the reigns of the first and the third Edward; the aisle showing the lancet windows of the first reign, and the clerestory, the more elaborate tracery which prevailed in the time of the last named monarch. The extensive west window with the door-way below it, and the remains of the tower are the work of the 16th century, and are executed in the richest style of Tudor architecture. The great and small tithes, &c. of the township, the property of the lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1768. The Baptists, Society of Friends, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here; the Baptist church was formed in 1698; the Independent in the same year. Here are a grammar-school for 20 boys, founded and endowed with £40 per annum, in 1637, by William Hustler, and a knitting-school for girls, endowed with rent-charge of £40 per annum, arising from an estate at Birdsall. There are also in this parish nine daily schools, one of which is endowed with £2 per annum, five Sunday, and two day and Sunday National schools. William Cowton bequeathed lands which now return £170 per annum, for the benefit of the poor of Bridlington and Hummanby. Other charities connected with the parish produce £147 18s. 6d. per annum.—The town stands at the distance of half-a-mile from the sea, on a fine bay which takes its name. It is built on a gentle declivity, and consists chiefly of one long narrow street. The town of Bridlington Quay is situated on the shore, and is much frequented in the summer season as a bathing-place. The harbour is formed by two piers, which, stretching into the sea 150 yards, form an agreeable promenade. The port is a member of the port of Hull. The number of vessels belonging to it was returned, in 1828, at 48, of the average burden of 155 tons. In the season of 1837, an act was passed for improving the piers and harbour of this place, and rendering it a more commodious and safe harbour of refuge. The market is on Saturday, and is well supplied with corn; this is one of the ports from which the average returns of the kingdom are made up. Fairs for cattle, cloth, and toys, are held on the Monday before Whitsuntide, and October 21st. The York Union banking company, the Yorkshire District bank, and the Yorkshire Agricultural and Commercial banking company, have branches here.—About half-a-mile to the north-west of Bridlington Quay is a chalybeate spring, resembling in its properties the waters of Scarborough and Cheltenham. The petty-sessions for the division of Dickering are held here. Bridlington is a polling-place in the election of members for the east riding of the county. Fossil remains are occasionally discovered in the vicinity. William of Newburgh, a well-known monkish historian, was a native of Bridlington. In the churchyard is a tablet to the memory of Thomas Newman, who lived to the advanced age of 153. Pop., in 1801, 3,773; in 1831, 5,637. Houses 1,186. Acres 12,410. A. P. £17,434. Poor rates, in 1837, £855. Pop. of the township of Bridlington and Bridlington Quay, in 1801, 3,130; in 1831, 4,792. Houses 1,035. Acres 3,060. A. P. £8,248. Poor rates, in 1837, £523.—The Bridlington poor-law union comprehends 32 parishes, embracing an area of 85 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 11,924. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £3,782. Expenditure, in 1838, £3,128.

BRIDPORT DIVISION, in the western part of the county of Dorset, comprises the hundreds of Beaminstor Forum and Redhone, Eggerton, Godderthorne, and Whitchurch-Canonicorum, with the liberties of Broadwinsor, Frampton, Lothers and Bothenhampton, and Poorstock. Area 94,650 acres. Houses 5,801. Pop., in 1831, 32,206.

BRIDPORT, a port, borough, parish, and market-town, in the hund. of Whitchurch-Canonicorum, union of Bridport, Bridport division of the county of Dorset, but having separate jurisdiction; 134 miles west-south-west of London, 15 west by north of Dorchester, and 71 west of Southampton. This place is mentioned in Domesday-book as containing 120 houses, and a mint for the coinage of silver. Here was also a priory, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, but the order of the monks is not known.—The town is situated on the river Brit, or Bride, which here falls into the sea, forming a harbour from which the town has taken its name. It consists of three spacious and airy streets, well-paved and lighted with gas, and containing many handsome houses. The present market-house was built under the act of 1785, the trustees for executing which are sixteen in number. Saturday is market-day; and fairs for bullocks, sheep, and pedlery, are held on April 6th, Holy Thursday, and Oct. 11th. There is a branch of the Wilts and Dorset banking company here. This is a place of considerable trade. The number of vessels which entered inwards, from 5th April, 1832, to 20th December, 1833, was 544; the number which cleared outwards, during the same period, was 242. The harbour is good. In 1824 the harbour dues were £1,582; in 1832 they amounted to £1,935. The privilege of bonding and warehousing goods was extended to this port in 1832, and the customs establishment was made independent of that of Lyme. There is an extensive coasting-trade in coal and grain; hemp, flax, tallow, and timber, are imported here from Russia and the Baltic; timber is also brought from Norway and America to this port. Two branches of manufactures have been carried on here for many years, and afford employment to many hundreds of the labouring class. The first is that of twine-lines and fishing-nets. These have always been regarded as the staple productions of the town. No great increase has taken place in this branch, nor perhaps is much improvement to be anticipated. It may, however, be considered as still in a thriving state. The second branch consists in the manufactures of sail-canvas and shoe-thread; it is an extensive one, and is not only in a flourishing condition at the present time, but is likely to acquire increased vigour and stability from the improvements which will probably be introduced in it by the application of steam-power. In 1838 there were two flax mills here, employing 64 hands; and 206 looms employed in the manufacture of sail-cloth, at which an able-bodied weaver earns about 12s. 8d. a-week. The town-hall is a handsome edifice, of brick and Portland stone, in the centre of the town, on the site of an ancient chapel. Here is a prison for confining debtors. The municipal limits of Bridport; now co-extensive with its parliamentary limits, comprise, in addition to the ancient borough, portions of the several parishes of Allington, Bradpole, Wallditch, Bothenhampton, Burton Bradstock, and Symondsburry.—The town received its first charter from Henry III., but this has been variously modified by Richard II., Henry VII., Elizabeth, James I., and Charles II. Under that granted by Charles II., it was governed by two bailiffs, a recorder, deputy-recorder, and 15 burgesses; with a town-clerk, sergeants-at-mace, and other subordinate officers. By the municipal act of 1835, it has been divided into two wards—north and south—to each of which 9 councillors have been assigned, who, with 6 aldermen and 2 bailiffs, compose the governing body. The bailiffs, as well as the late bailiffs, are justices of the peace within the borough. The courts held within it, are,—the court of sessions, the court of record, and the court leet. The court of sessions may be held quarterly, but in consequence of the little business to be transacted, is usually held but once in the year. The court of record is generally held once in every three weeks before the deputy-recorder and bailiffs, or two of them; but proceedings in it have fallen into disuse, no process having been issued since 1787. A court leet is held once in every year, in the month of October, before the bailiffs, the town-clerk acting as steward or clerk of the court. There is an ancient practice at this court for the town-clerk to call over what is termed the "Resiant Roll," which, it is understood, ought to contain the name of every male inhabitant of the borough from the age of 16 to 60. Some of those who do not answer to their names send a penny to be paid to the clerk. Those who neither answer nor send a penny are presented by the jury, and are by the court ordered to be amerced three-pence each. These fines are not exacted; but the absentees, when called upon by the sergeants-at-mace, usually send their penny each to the clerk. Bridport has had a commission of the peace granted to it. This town has returned two members to parliament from the 23^d of Edward VI., the right of voting having been vested in the inhabitants paying scot and lot, who did not exceed 348 in number, they are now 421. The bailiffs are the returning officers.—Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; valued at £10 12s. 3^d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £135; gross income £174. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Ilchester. The church is a spacious structure, with a tower, and contains some interesting monuments. An Independent church was formed here in 1751; a Presbyterian in 1672; a Wesleyan Methodist in 1809. There are 16 daily schools in this parish, one of which is supported by endowment, 4 Sunday schools, and a mechanics' institute, also almshouses for twenty-seven persons. Charities connected with the borough produce about £80 per annum. The family of Hood takes the titles of baron and viscount from Bridport. Pop., in 1801, 3,117; in 1831, 4,242. Houses 625. Acres 250. A. P. £7,001. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,310.—The Bridport poor-law union comprehends 19 parishes, embracing an area of 47 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at £14,644. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union was £7,209. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,753.—Besides a cross mail to Taunton, 33 miles, there are penny-posts to Beaminstor, Bridport harbour, and Longbredy.

BRIDSTOW, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Wormelow, union of Ross, county of Hereford; 1 mile west-north-west of Ross, on the western bank of the river Wye. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; valued at £9 3s. 11^d., rated in the parliamentary returns at £55 17s. 6^d.; gross income £302; in the patronage of the bishop of Hereford. There are two daily schools in this parish. In the vicinity is Wilton castle, now a picturesque ruin covered with ivy, but formerly the baronial residence of the lords Grey de Wilton. Pop., in 1801, 471; in 1831, 596. Houses 116. Acres 1,870. A. P. £4,141. Poor rates, in 1837 £326.

BRIERCLIFFE WITH EXTWISTLE, a township in the parish of Whalley, hund. of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles north-east of Burnley, in the neighbourhood of the Leeds and Liverpool canal. There are here five daily and three Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 956; in 1831, 1,755. Houses 292. Acres 4,180. A. P. £2,933. Poor rates, in 1837, £453.

BRIERDEAN, or BURRADON, a township in the parish of Earsdon, eastern division of Castle ward, county of Northumberland; 6½ miles north-north-east of Newcastle, near the coast. Here are ruins of an ancient fort, quarries of freestone, and a colliery. Pop., in 1801, 29; in 1831, 67. Houses 13. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £640. Poor rates, in 1837, £45.

BRIERLEY, a township in the parish of Felkirk, wapentake of Staincross, west riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles north-east of Barnesley, in the vicinity of the York and North Midland railway, and the Barnesley canal. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 415; in 1831, 483. Houses 97. Acres 2,610. A. P. £3,614. Poor rates, in 1837, £322.

BRIERLEY-HILL, a chapelry in the parish of Kingswinford, northern division of the hund. of Seisdon, county of Stafford; 2 miles north-north-east of Stourbridge, in the vicinity of the Stafford and Birmingham canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, not in charge; rated in the parliamentary returns at £55 17s. 6d.; gross income £97. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Dr. Penfold. In the vicinity are many collieries and extensive iron-works where steam-boilers are made. Pop. is returned with the parish.

BRIERTON, a township in the parish of Stranton, north-east division of Stockton ward, co.-palatine of Durham; 8 miles north-north-east of Stockton, in the vicinity of the Clarence and Hartlepool union railway. Pop., in 1801, 22; in 1831, 22. Houses 4. Acres 700. A. P. £368.

BRIGG. See GLANDFORD-BRIDGE.

BRIGHAM, a parish in the ward of Allerdale above Derwent, county of Cumberland; 2 miles west of Cockermouth, on an eminence on the southern bank of the river Derwent, commanding an agreeable prospect. It comprises the borough and market-town of Cockermouth, the chapelries of Buttermere, Embleton, Mosser, and Setmurthey, and the townships of Blindbothel, Brigham, Eaglesfield, Gray-southern, and Whinfell. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Carlisle; valued at £20 16s. 0d.; gross income £190. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Lonsdale. There are in this parish thirty-eight daily schools, four of which have small endowments, and six Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce £59 per annum. The church is an ancient structure. All tithes, moduses, &c. of the township, the property of the lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1813. Limestone, freestone, and coal, are produced here. In 1838 there were 3 flax and 3 woollen mills here, employing 111 hands. The parish is within the honour of Cockermouth, over which Lord Egremont is lord-paramount. Pop., in 1811, 4,918; in 1831, 7,040. Houses 1,465. Acres 22,580. A. P. £18,116. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,414. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 238; in 1831, 503. Houses 105. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,311. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,414.

BRIGHAM, a township in the parish of Foston-upon-Wolds, wapentake of Dickering, east riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles south-east of Great Driffield, intersected by a canal communicating with the river Hull. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1766. Pop., in 1801, 80; in 1831, 151. Houses 18. Acres 1,470. A. P. £2,016. Poor rates, in 1837, £47.

BRIGHOUSE. See HIPPERHOLME WITH BRIGHOUSE.

BRIGHTFORD HUNDRED, in the rape of Bramber, county of Sussex. Area 14,570 acres. Houses 1,247. Pop., in 1831, 6,878.

BRIGHTHAMPTON, a hamlet partly in the parish of Bampton and partly in that of Standlake, hund. of Bampton, county of Oxford; 4½ miles south by east of Witney. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 102. Houses 19. Acres 410. A. P. £646. Poor rates, in 1837, £45.

BRIGHTLING, a parish in the hund. of Netherfield, rape of Hastings, union of Battle, county of Sussex; 4 miles west-south-west of Robert's-bridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; valued at £11; gross income £565. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. B. Hayley. This parish possesses two daily schools, one of which is endowed with the interest of £200, the bequest of Mrs. Herbert. Fairs are held here on the first Monday after Thomas-à-Becket, and July 7th. Pop., in 1801, 507; in 1831, 656. Houses 105. Acres 3,390. A. P. £2,256. Poor rates, in 1837, £441.

BRIGHTLINGSEA, a parish in the hund. of Tendring, union of Lexden and Winstree, county of Essex; 7½ miles south-east by south of Colchester, bounded on the west by the Colne river, and on the south by Brightlingsea Creek, forming a kind of peninsula. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £17 0s. 5d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £104 19s. 10d.; gross income £213. The Swedenborgians have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1813. There are in this parish six daily schools, one of which is endowed, three Sunday schools, and a New Jerusalem church. Fairs are held here on the first Thursday in June, and October 15th, for horses. Brightlingsea is a member of the Cinqueport of Sandwich. Pop., in 1811, 1,020; in 1831, 1,784. Houses 310. Acres 2,890. A. P. £4,056. Poor rates, in 1837, £682.

BRIGHTON,

Or BRIGHTHELMSTONE, a sea-port, market-town, and parish, in the hund. of Whalesbone, rape of Lewes, county of Sussex; 51 miles south of London, and 6 east of New Shoreham, intersected by the Brighton and London railroad. In the Saxon it is called Brightelmstun; in Domesday book, Bristlemeston; it is now generally contracted into Brighton.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—The living is a vicarage, consolidated with the rectory of Bletchington, in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; valued at £20 2s. 1½d.; gross income £1,045; in the patronage of the bishop of Chichester. The church is an ancient Gothic structure, partly in the decorated and partly in the ancient style of English architecture, containing a fine screen of carved oak, and a font of high antiquity said to have been brought from Normandy at the Conquest.—Here are also 7 perpetual curacies, viz. the chapel-royal, of the yearly value of £180; in the patronage of the vicar of Brighton: St. James', of the yearly value of £181; in the patronage of N. Kemp, Esq.: St. George's, of the yearly value of £150; in the patronage of L. Peel, Esq. and the incumbent: St. Mary's, of the yearly value of £80; in the patronage of the Rev. H. V. Elliott: St. Margaret's, of the yearly value of £150; in the patronage of the proprietors of the chapel: St. Peter's, of the yearly value of £450; and Trinity chapel, of the yearly value of £150; both in the patronage of the vicar of Brighton. A new church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, has been erected on Carlton hill. The vicar anciently received the episcopal custom of a penny per head, (commonly called Smoke-money, or Garden-penny,) and the fourth of a share out of all fishing-vessels, but the claim has been allowed to become obsolete. The Independents, Baptists, Society of Friends, Methodists, United Secession, Huntingdonians, Roman Catholics, and Jews, have places of worship here, making in all 13 dissenting chapels. The three Independent churches were formed in 1662, 1825, and 1834; the first Baptist church in 1785, the second in 1824, and the third in 1837; the Methodist in 1808; those in Lady Huntingdon's connexion in 1767 and 1830, and a church of Calvinistic Methodists in 1820. There are here 158 daily schools, one of which was founded in 1768 by William Grimmel, Esq., and endowed with £69 per annum for educating and clothing 20 poor boys; another endowed by Swan Downer, Esq., who bequeathed £7,100 for clothing and educating 20 or more poor girls; 65 are now receiving the benefit of this institution. There are also 43 boarding, 14 Sunday, and 3 infant-schools, with endowed alms-houses for 6 poor women. Notwithstanding the number of schools, it was ascertained by a strict canvass of the town in 1837, that about 3,000 children were without the means of instruction. Charles Pieschell, Esq., by will dated 26th October, 1820, bequeathed £30,000 for charitable purposes, to the governors of Christ's hospital, London, and directed them to pay yearly, for ever, to Thomas, earl of Chichester, or his descendants, the sum of £200; £100 of which to be devoted to the sole benefit of the poor parishioners of Brighton; the other £100 to be given to the dispensary and infirmary, then established at this place. The county hospital is in the vicinity near Kemp's town; it is a handsome building, capable of accommodating 90 patients. There are also a lying-in institution, and an infirmary for diseases of the eye. The relief of the poor of Brighton is administered under a local act.

Town.—The town is situated at the bottom of a bay of the English channel, formed on the one hand by Beechy-head, and on the other by Selsea-bill. From the north and north-east winds it is sheltered by the semicircular range of the South Downs, which are easy of access, and command extensive views of the weald of Sussex and the isle of Wight. The climate of Brighton and its vicinity is warm, from its southern aspect, and the shelter afforded by the Downs from northerly and easterly winds; yet it is rendered refreshing and bracing by an almost continual sea-breeze. The town covers a considerable space of ground, presenting a sea-frontage of nearly 3 miles in extent, and consists for the most part of spacious streets, intersecting each other at right angles, lighted with gas, and well paved. The whole is divided into two nearly equal portions by an open space, extending the whole length of the valley, from the entrance from London to the sea, and varying from 50 to 100 yards in width. At the northern extremity of this opening are situated the public gardens; the next portion is termed the Level, a piece of land held in trust as a cricket-ground, and for other pedestrian exercises and diversions. In 1836 the town-commissioners fenced it round with iron posts and rails, and have cleared and levelled it at very considerable expense. It is now reduced to about eight acres, two acres having been taken for the adjoining roads. Immediately south of the Level, in the centre of the open space, is St. Peter's church, a very elegant Gothic building. Beyond this are two handsome enclosures, affording a very agreeable resort for the occupiers of the houses on each side, called the North Steyne. The palace with its grounds occupies the next portion; and lastly, the Steyne brings us to the sea-side, or rather, to the York and Albion hotels, which have been permitted to intervene between the Steyne and the sea. The older part of the town is chiefly situated to the west of the Steyne, which forms a beautiful lawn, from which the east and west cliffs rise with a gentle ascent. On the northern part, called the Old Steyne, a fine statue of his majesty George IV. has been erected; it was executed by Chantrey, in bronze. On the eastern cliff are the Royal crescent, the Marine parade, Pavilion parade, and other fine ranges of buildings commanding views of the sea. Still farther to the east, is Kemp town, which consists of three sides of a quadrangle, from the extremities of which other rows of houses branch-off, enclosing spacious pleasure-grounds which communicate with the beach. The sea-wall at the eastern part of Brighton is the greatest improvement ever made in this place, and affords a magnificent and unequalled promenade. On the western cliff are Cannon-place, Bedford-square, Regency-square, and Terrace, with an extensive esplanade much resorted to as a fashionable promenade. On this point of the coast is a battery mounting six 42 pounders. The pavilion, a palace erected by George IV., and for a long time his favourite residence, was begun in 1784; and, after many additions and alterations, finally completed in 1827, in the form of the celebrated palace of the Kremlin at Moscow. Connected with this structure are extensive pleasure-grounds, a suite of stables in the Arabian style, and a chapel-royal capable of accommodating 1,000 persons. About half-a-mile to the west of the old church is a chalybeate spring much resorted to by invalids. There are several public libraries, and a handsome theatre. The Sussex Scientific and Literary institution was founded here in 1836. Races are held in August, on the neighbouring downs.

Suspension Chain-pier.—A suspension chain-pier affords great facilities here for the landing and embarkation of passengers, as well as an agreeable promenade. This work, begun in October 1822, and carried on under the superintendence of Captain Brown, R. N., was finished in November 1823. It extends 1,014 feet into the sea from the front of the esplanade wall. The entire length is 1,136 feet, and is divided into four spans of 225 feet each. The platform is 13 feet broad. There are eight main chains, carried over pyramidal cast-iron frames, 25 feet high, resting on piles; the extreme pile at the head of the pier is spread out laterally, and is covered with granite paving, weighing upwards of 200 tons,—the object being to afford a firm base for the back-stay chains which are bolted to diagonal piles constructed in the extreme pile. At the land-end the main chains are carried over a pier of masonry, and through two tunnels cut in the cliff, 30 or 40 feet deep; and secured in a brick chamber to massive stones, by means of a ponderous plate of cast-iron. This beautiful pier was greatly injured, if not destroyed, by a tremendous gale, during the night of the 15th October, 1833. The platform between the first and third piers was almost entirely destroyed; all the suspension-rods broken, and the main chains much deranged, while the weight of the road-way being removed, the chains over the first and fourth spans were so much depressed that the platform they supported was also greatly injured. It has been thoroughly repaired. Steam-packets sail from hence to Dieppe, a voyage of about 80 miles. Four different lines of railroad, betwixt London and Brighton, have been projected. The line now executing will have its terminus in Trafalgar-street, and joins the London and Croydon railroad. There is a branch-line to Shoreham.

Population, Markets, &c.—The pop., in 1801, was 7,339; in 1831, 40,634; but this number is greatly increased at certain seasons by the large influx of visitors. The number of houses is 7,798; of acres, within the parish, 1,980. The assessed property is rated at £71,515 of annual value. Poor rates, in 1837, £19,224. A market was established by act of parliament in 1773; Thursday is market-day. Fairs are held on Holy Thursday, and September 4th, for pedlery; but daily for provisions. There are a considerable number of boats employed in fishing, partly for the supply of the London market: the fish chiefly taken are mackerel, soles, turbot, and skate.—The town is governed by a constable and four head-boroughs. The county-magistrates hold petty-sessions in the town-hall here twice a-week for the Brighton division of the rape of Lewes; and the police is regulated by commissioners appointed by the inhabitants paying scot and lot.—This borough, comprising the parishes of BRIGHTHELMSTONE and HONE, now returns two members to parliament. The number of electors is about 3,000, and the constable of the hundred of Whalesbone is the returning officer.

Many Roman antiquities having been dug up in the neighbourhood, and some traces of ancient lines and fortifications having been discovered, it has been conjectured that this was a Roman station; some have even gone so far as to suppose it to have been the place at which Cæsar landed. Within the period of accurate history, however, it was a mere fishing-village, which, having been often plundered by the French, was at length fortified with walls and batteries. From this place Charles II. embarked for France after the battle of Worcester. The sea has often made considerable inroads here, especially in 1665, and 1705. The town was brought into repute in the reign of George II., when Dr. Richard Russel recommended the use of sea-bathing for various disorders. His late majesty, George IV., displayed a strong partiality for it.

BRIGHTSIDE-BIERLOW, or BIERLEY, a township in that part of the parish of Sheffield which is in the northern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-east of Sheffield, intersected by the Sheffield branch of the York and North Midland railway. The great and small tithes, the property of the lord of the manor and vicar, were commuted in 1788. There are here ten daily schools, one of which is endowed with £5 10s. per annum, and five Sunday schools, with lending libraries attached. The inhabitants are chiefly artisans connected with the manufactories of cutlery in the parish. Pop., in 1801, 4,030; in 1831, 8,968. Houses 1,790. Acres 2,630. A. P. £16,229. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,315.

BRIGHT WALTHAM. See WALTHAM, BRIGHT.

BRIGHTWELL, a parish in the hund. of Moreton, union of Wallingford, county of Berks; 2½ miles west-north-west of Wallingford, in the vicinity of the Great Western railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £44 17s. 11d.; gross income £747; in the patronage of the bishop of Oxford. Here is a place of worship for Dissenters. There are three daily schools in this parish, one of which is partly supported by endowment. Charities connected with this parish produce £28 4s. per annum. A castle stood anciently here, but the site is not known, and we are equally in the dark respecting its origin and the time when it was destroyed. The learned Dr. Thomas Godwyn, author of a treatise on Jewish and Roman antiquities, died rector of this parish in 1642; a monument to his memory stands in the church. Pop., in 1801, 491;

in 1831, 578. Houses 120. Acres 1,690. A. P. £4,329. Poor rates, in 1837, £477.

BRIGHTWELL, a parish in the hund. of Carleford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 5½ miles east by south of Ipswich. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Foxhall annexed, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge; valued in the parliamentary returns at £31; gross income £54. Patron, in 1833, Sir R. Harland. Pop., in 1811, 53; in 1831, 86. Houses 8. Acres 510. A. P. £486. Poor rates, in 1837, £132.

BRIGHTWELL-BALDWIN, a parish in the hund. of Ewelme, union of Henley, county of Oxford; 1¼ mile west of Watlington. It contains the tything of Cadwell. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; valued at £18 16s. 6½d.; gross income £518. Patron, in 1835, W. F. L. Stone. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1802. This parish possesses two daily schools. Charities connected with it produce £10 7s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 332. Houses 53. Acres 1,660. A. P. £2,149. Poor rates, in 1837, £158.

BRIGHTWELL (PRIOR'S), a chapelry in the parish of Newington, hund. of Ewelme, county of Oxford; 6 miles south-south-east of Tetsworth. Living, a curacy, not in charge, annexed to the rectory of Newington, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury. After the French Revolution, a convent of nuns of St. Clare took refuge here. Pop., in 1801, 52; in 1831, 52. Houses 8. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £665. Poor rates, in 1837, £53.

BRIGHTWELLS-BARROW HUNDRED, in the county of Gloucester, bordering on Oxfordshire. Area 36,850 acres. Houses 1,506. Pop., in 1831, 7,159.

BRIGNALL, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Gilling, union of Teesdale, north riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles south-south-east of Bernard castle. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £8 12s. 6d.; gross income £300; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 205; in 1831, 232. Houses 34. Acres 1,910. A. P. £2,084. Poor rates, in 1837, £75.

BRIGSLEY, a parish in the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 5 miles south of Great Grimsby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £7 4s. 4d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £42; gross income £55; in the patronage of the chapter of the collegiate church of Southwell. Pop., in 1801, 64; in 1831, 108. Houses 20. Acres 860. A. P. £953. Poor rates, in 1837, £132.

BRIGSTOCK, a parish in the hund. of Coiby, union of Thrapston, county of Northampton; 7½ miles north-east of Kettering. Living, a vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Stanyon annexed, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £11 7s. 3½d.; gross income £237. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Cleveland. The great and small tithes of Brigstock and Stanyon, the property of the lay-impropriators and vicar, were commuted in 1795. An Independent church was formed here in 1778. There are in this parish three daily schools, one of which is endowed, and a day and Sunday National school. Charities connected with the parish produce £51 18s. per annum. Fairs are held on 25th April for horses and horned cattle; on September 4th for sheep, brass, and pewter; and on November 22d for black hats, boots, shoes, and pedlery. Pop., in 1801, 903; in 1831, 1,167. Houses 253.

Acres 5,900. A. P. £6,385. Poor rates, in 1837, £897.

BRILL, anciently BREHULL, a parish in the hund. of Ashenden, union of Thame, county of Buckingham; 7½ miles north-north-west of Thame. Living, a perpetual curacy with Boarstall, formerly in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £8, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £101; gross income £101. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. Aubrey, Bart. The church consists of a nave, chancel, and tower, and was formerly a chapel-of-ease to Oakley. In 1836 a new church was built here, partly by subscription, and partly by a grant from the church-building society. This parish possesses two day and Sunday National schools, with which a school, originally founded by Samuel Turner, Esq., and endowed with lands for educating 25 boys, is now incorporated. These schools are endowed with the interest of £2,000, bequeathed by Sir John Aubrey, Bart. A fair was granted in 1347 to Sir John Molyns, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of July, the observance of which has been immemorially lost; but there is an annual wake on the Wednesday next after Michaelmas, O. S. Some pottery ware is here manufactured. There are almshouses for poor widows, with a small endowment. The pasture-ground, belonging to the parish of Brill, yields £120 per annum, which is distributed in equal shares to poor persons. Other charities connected with it produce £12 per annum. The kings of Mercia had a palace here; the Conqueror retained Brill as part of the royal demesnes; and Edward the Confessor used to resort hither for the purpose of hunting in Bernwode forest. The manor was anciently held by the service of furnishing for the king's table 100 capons, when he chose to reside at his palace of Brill. Pop., in 1801, 859; in 1831, 1,263. Houses 325. Acres 2,600. A. P. £5,124. Poor rates, in 1837, £857.

BRILLEY, a parish in the hund. of Huntingdon, county of Hereford; 5½ miles north-north-east of Hay. Living, a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Kington. Here is a day and Sunday school, endowed with £55 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 467; in 1831, 539. Houses 101. Acres 4,250. A. P. £3,657. Poor rates, in 1837, 476.

BRIMFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Wolphy, union of Tenbury, county of Hereford; 4½ miles west of Tenbury. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; valued at £17, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £118; gross income £107; in the patronage of the bishop of Hereford. This parish possesses three daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 415; in 1831, 581. Houses 122. Acres 1,880. A. P. £2,099. Poor rates, in 1837, £206.

BRIMHAM. See HARTWITH WITH WINSLEY.

BRIMINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Chesterfield, hund. of Scardsdale, county of Derby; 2 miles north-east of Chesterfield; in the vicinity of the North Midland railroad, and the Chesterfield canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £10, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £41; gross income £102; in the patronage of the vicar of Chesterfield. The chapel was built in 1808. There are four daily and two Sunday schools here. Pop., in 1801, 503; in 1831, 759. Houses 142. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,388. Poor rates, in 1837, £118.

BRIMSFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Raps-gate, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 5 miles east-north-east of Painswick. Living, a discharged rectory, with that of Cranham annexed, in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £9 12s. 1d.; gross income £458. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Pitt. There are two daily schools in this parish. Here was "an alien priory of Benedictine monks, a cell to the abbey of St. Stephen at Fontenay in Normandy. It was given to Eaton college by King Henry VI., and confirmed thereto by King Edward IV." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 232. Houses 79. Acres 2,240. A. P. £2,825. Poor rates, in 1837, £243.

BRIMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Faircross, union of Newbury, county of Berks; 6 miles east-south-east of Newbury. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £7, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £148. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Cove. There appears to have been here a house of the Knights-hospitallers. Charities connected with the parish produce about £10 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 443. Houses 84. Acres 1,900. A. P. £2,507. Poor rates, in 1837, £248.

BRIMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Stone, division and union of Yeovil, county of Somerset; 2 miles west-south-west of Yeovil. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £7 7s.; gross income £154. Patron, in 1835, J. Williams, Esq. There is no school here, but the inhabitants have the privilege of sending a certain number of children to an endowed school at Yeovil. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 100. Houses 16. Acres 860. A. P. £2,703. Poor rates, in 1837, £61.

BRIMSLADE, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Kinwardstone, county of Wilts; 4 miles south-south-east of Marlborough, intersected by the Kennet and Avon canal. Pop., in 1811, 103; in 1831, 186. Houses 30. Acres 590.

BRIMSTREE HUNDRED, in the county of Salop, consists of two divisions—Hales-Owen and Shiffnall—and is bounded on the north and east by Staffordshire; on the south by the hundred of Stot-teden; and on the west and north-west by Wenlock Franchise, and the hundred of Bradford (South). Area 60,690 acres. Houses 4,087. Pop., in 1831, 21,065.

BRIMSTAGE, a township in the parish of Brom-borough, hund. of Wirral, co.-palatine of Chester; 3½ miles north by east of Great Neston. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 136. Houses 27. Acres 1,030. A. P. £976. Poor rates, in 1837, £35.

BRINTON. See BLYMILL WITH BRINTON.

BRIND. See NEWSHAM WITH BRIND.

BRINDLE, a parish in the hund. of Leyland, union of Chorley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5 miles north by east of Chorley, intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Manchester; valued at £12 8s. 4d.; gross income £515. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Devonshire. The Roman Catholics have a chapel here. This parish possesses two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £16 16s. 4d. per annum, and three Sunday schools. Here is a pauper lunatic asylum, supported by contributions from several townships which enjoy the privilege of sending lunatics here. Charities connected with the parish produce £13 13s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,271; in 1831, 1,558. Houses 255. Acres 2,940. A. P. £4,567. Poor rates, in 1837, £435.

BRINDLEY, a township in the parish of Acton, hund. of Nantwich, co.-palatine of Chester; 4½ miles west-north-west of Nantwich. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 158. Houses 34. Acres 950. A. P. £1,515. Poor rates, in 1837, £153.

BRINGHURST, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Uppingham, county of Leicester; 1½ mile west of Rockingham. It comprises the chapelry of Great Easton, and townships of Bringhurst and Drayton. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Great Easton, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; valued at £11 15s.; gross income £251; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Peterborough. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., of the townships of Bringhurst, Great Easton, and Drayton, the property of the dean and chapter of Peterborough and the vicar, were commuted in 1804. There are here four daily schools, one of which is endowed with £3 per annum, and three Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 777; in 1831, 782. Houses 19. Acres 490. A. P. £1,893. Poor rates, in 1837, £77.

BRINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union of Thrapston, county of Huntingdon; 6 miles north by west of Kimbolton. Living, a rectory, with the chapels of Bythorn and Old Weston, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £34 3s. 6d.; gross income £500; in the patronage of the master and fellows of Clare-hall, Cambridge. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1804. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 150. Houses 35. Acres 1,190. A. P. £1,451. Poor rates, in 1837, £114.

BRINGTON (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-Grove, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 7 miles north-west by west of Northampton, in the neighbourhood of the London and Birmingham railroad. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £40; gross income £485. Patron, in 1835, Earl Spencer. The church contains, in a chapel on the north side of the chancel, some fine monuments to members of the Spencer family. The Baptists have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1824. There are here three infant schools, a daily school, and a Sunday school, endowed with £12 per annum. The charity estate connected with this parish produces £225 13s. per annum. This parish contains the hamlets of Great Brington, Little Brington, and Nobottle or Newbottle. Pop., in 1801, 772; in 1831, 887. Houses 163. Acres 4,180. A. P. £5,549. Poor rates, in 1837, £448.

BRININGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Holt, union of Walsingham, county of Norfolk; 4 miles south-west of Holt. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, of the yearly value of £62. Patron, in 1835, R. Reeve, Esq. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 228; in 1831, 277. Houses 36. Acres 1,430. A. P. £1,333. Poor rates, in 1837, £257.

BRINKBURN (HIGH WARD), a township, formerly extra-parochial, but now in the parish of Long Framlington, eastern division of the ward of Coquetdale, Northumberland; 9 miles north-north-west of Morpeth. Coal and limestone are found here in abundance. Here was "a priory of Black canons, founded in the time of Henry I., by Osbertus Colutarius upon a piece of ground which was given him by William Bertram. This house was under the patronage of St. Peter, and about the time of the dissolution consisted of ten religious, who had the yearly income of £77. It was granted to John, earl of Warwick, 4th Edward VI." Tanner's Not. Mon. The ruins of this monastery yet remain, in a beautiful situation on the bank of the river Coquet. Hutchinson says of the site of this building that it is the most melancholy and deep solitude chosen for a religious edifice he had ever visited. The tower of the church, a spire, and dormitory still remain. Pop., including Brinkburn and Low-ward, in 1801, 200; in 1831, 192. Houses 41. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,396. Poor rates, in 1837, £121.

BRINKBURN (SOUTH SIDE), a township in the parish of Felton, western division of the ward of Morpeth, county of Northumberland; 9 miles north-north-west of Morpeth. Pop., in 1801, 60; in 1831, 43. Houses 8. Acres 800. Poor rates, in 1837, £64.

BRINKHILL, a parish in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 5½ miles north-north-west of Spilsby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £8, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £140; gross income £160. Patron, in 1835, Mr. Cracroft. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1773. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 116. Houses 25. Acres 780. A. P. £1,109. Poor rates, in 1837, £71.

BRINKLEY, a parish in the hund. of Radfield, union of Newmarket, county of Cambridge; 5½ miles south of Newmarket. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; valued at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £260; in the patronage of the master and fellows of St. John's college, Cambridge. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1811. This parish possesses a daily school, endowed with the rent of certain lands situated in the parish of Oakington. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 335. Houses 37. Acres 1,500. A. P. £1,850. Poor rates, in 1837, £218.

BRINKLOW, a parish in the Kirby division of the hund. of Knightlow, county of Warwick; 5½ miles north-west of Rugby, intersected by the Oxford canal, and 2½ miles north of the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; valued at £17 10s.; gross income £238; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The Independents have a chapel here. There are in this parish two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum, and an infant school. Charities connected with Brinklow produce about £24 per annum. In this parish petty-sessions for the Kirby division of the hundred of Knightlow are held. Here was formerly a castle belonging to the Mowbray family. Pop., in 1801, 615; in 1831, 949. Houses 193. Acres 1,410. A. P. £2,897. Poor rates, in 1837, £300.

BRINKWORTH, a parish in the hund. and union of Malmesbury, county of Wilts; 4 miles west-north-west of Wootton-Basset. This parish includes the tything of Grittenham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £23 9s. 2d.; gross income £873; in the patronage of Pembroke college, Oxford. A church of Primitive Methodists was formed in 1825. There are here three daily schools, one of which is endowed with a rent charge of £5 per annum, on the estate of Lord Suffolk, and three Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce £21 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 923; in 1831, 1,417. Houses 265. Acres 6,470. A. P. £9,799. Poor rates, in 1837, £969.

BRINNINGTON, a township in the parish of Stockport, hund. of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles north-east of Stockport, in the vicinity of the Peak Forest canal. There are two daily schools here. The inhabitants are much employed in the neighbouring factories. Pop., in 1801, 890; in 1831, 3,987. Houses 791. Acres 810. A. P. £5,576. Poor rates, in 1837, £810.

BRINSCOMBE. See WEARE.

BRINSOP, a parish in the hund. of Grimsworth, union of Weobley, county of Hereford; $\frac{5}{2}$ miles north-west of Hereford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; valued at £4; rated in the parliamentary returns at £72; gross income £275; in the patronage of the bishop of Hereford. There is a day and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 112. Houses 17. Acres 1,470. A. P. £2,218. Poor rates, in 1837, £75.

BRINSWORTH, a township in the parish of Rotherham, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles south-west of Rotherham, in the immediate vicinity of the North Midland railway. The small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1812. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 227. Houses 48. Acres 1,050. A. P. £3,077. Poor rates, in 1837, £175.

BRINTON, a parish in the hund. of Holt, county of Norfolk; 4 miles south-west of Holt. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Thornage. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 112. Houses 50. Acres 650. A. P. £2,218. Poor rates, in 1837, £206.

BRISCO, or BIRKCUUGH, a township in the parish of St. Cuthbert, liberties of the city of Carlisle, Cumberland; 3 miles south-south-east of Carlisle, in the vicinity of the Carlisle and Newcastle railroad. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 305. Houses 55. Other returns with the parish.

BRISLET-MAGNA. See BRICETT (GREAT).

BRISLEY, a parish in the hund. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 6 miles north-north-west of East Dereham. Living, a discharged rectory with the vicarage of Gateley, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; valued at £8 7s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £491; in the patronage of the master and fellows of Christ's college, Cambridge. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 264; in 1831, 362. Houses 82. Acres 1,230. A. P. £1,301. Poor rates, in 1837, £198.

BRISLINGTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Keynsham, county of Somerset; 3 miles south-east of Bristol, intersected by the Great Western railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £25; rated in the parliamentary returns at £140; gross income £163. Patron, in 1835, E. W. L. Popham. The church has recently been enlarged. This parish possesses 2 day and Sunday schools. Here is an extensive and well-arranged asylum for lunatics. Charities connected with Brislington produce £11 13s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 776; in 1831, 1,294. Houses 189. Acres 2,960. A. P. £6,825. Poor rates, in 1837, £511.

BRISTOL,

A city, and county in itself, situated on the southern side of the Bristol channel, and surrounded by the counties of Gloucester and Somerset; locally, it is situated principally in Gloucestershire, and partly in Somersetshire; 114 miles west of London, 34 south-west of Gloucester, and 12 north-west of Bath. Besides the facility of communication afforded by the river Avon, this city now possesses an extensive line of inland-transport through the medium of the Great Western, and the Bristol and Exeter railroads. The county includes the course of the river Avon from Hanham mills, about 4 miles above Bristol, to its mouth; and takes in so much of the Bristol channel as is included within a line skirting the Somersetshire coast as far westward as the How rocks, just below Clevedon, 12 miles from Bristol; thence in a straight line to the islands called the Steep holmes and the Flat holmes, more than 20 miles below the mouth of the Avon; thence in a straight line nearly up the mid channel to an island called the Denny, nearly opposite the Avon; and thence to Avon road, on the north side of that river. A perambulation of the county by land and by water is made every seven years. By the act 1^o William IV. c. 4, the corporation of the poor were empowered to purchase an hospital for the reception of pauper lunatics; and the act provides that the site so purchased, whilst employed for that purpose, shall become part of the city and county of Bristol. The reform act added to the city, for the purpose of parliamentary representation, the district of the united parishes of St. James and St. Paul, the whole of the parish of Clifton, that part of the parishes of St. Philip and St. Jacob heretofore without the boundary of the ancient city, and parts of the parishes of Westbury and Bedminster.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Bristol was erected into a diocese by Henry VIII. in 1542. It was separated from the diocese of Salisbury, and its jurisdiction extended over the city and county of Bristol, the county of Dorset, and a part of the county of Gloucester. On the recommendation of the ecclesiastical commissioners of England, the archdeaconry of Dorset has been transferred from the diocese of Bristol to that of Salisbury, and the sees of Gloucester and Bristol have been united. The deanery of the Forest, formerly in the archdeaconry of Hereford and diocese of Gloucester, is now in the archdeaconry of Gloucester; and the deaneries of Bristol, Cirencester, Fairford, and Hawkesbury, have been transferred from the archdeaconry of Gloucester, and, along with all the parishes within the city of Bristol, now constitute the archdeaconry of Bristol, in the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol.

Cathedral, &c.—The cathedral is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. It is thus mentioned by Bishop Tanner in his Notitia:—"Robert Fitz-Harding, A.D. 1148, mayor of Bristol, founded, on a rising-ground in the north-west part of the city, a priory of Black canons, of which house, as well as of the order, St. Augustine was the patron saint. This was, in the latter end of the reign of King Henry II., changed into an abbey, which had, before its dissolution, yearly revenues worth £767 15s. 3d. King Henry VIII., A.D. 1542, changed it into a cathedral, by the name of the cathedral of the Holy Trinity, and founded therein a bishop, dean, six secular canons or prebendaries, one archdeacon, six minor canons or priests vicars, a deacon and subdeacon, six lay-clerks, six choristers, two grammar schoolmasters, four almsmen, &c., who were endowed with the site, church, and greatest part of the lands of the old monastery."—The cathedral church is a beautiful structure in the form of a cross, and presenting specimens of the various styles of English architecture. The whole length is 175 feet, the breadth of the transept 128 feet, the height of the tower 130 feet, and the breadth of the nave and aisles 73 feet. The ornaments are designed in the purest taste. In particular, the arched roof of the choir and transepts attract attention from the elegance of their construction, and the circumstance of the roofs of the two side-aisles being as lofty as that of the choir. The nave was unfortunately destroyed in the parliamentary war. The entrance to the choir is through an impanelled screen covered with rich carvings. Some of the side-chapels are very beautiful, and contain monuments of the founder, of several abbots and bishops, of Mrs. Draper, the 'Eliza' of Sterne, of Mrs. Mason, and of Lady Hesketh, the amiable friend of Cowper. The intermixture of a yellow limestone and red sandstone, indiscriminately in the plain and decorated parts of the exterior of this building, produces a singular effect, particularly in the unequal decomposition of these materials. The episcopal palace, which presented some specimens of Saxon and early English architecture, was burned down during the riot of 1831. An order in council of 5th October, 1836, directs the site of this palace to be sold under the direction of the ecclesiastical commissioners, and the proceeds applied, along with other sums received as damages, to the erection of a new residence for the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The chapter-house is a highly ornamented and spacious edifice in the Norman style; it has been recently renovated in good taste.

Parish-churches.—Bristol contains 19 parishes, and an extra-parochial district called castle-precincts, which is exempted from payment of ecclesiastical assessment.—The living of All Saints is a discharged vicarage, valued at £4 3s. 4d.; gross income £160; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Gloucester and Bristol. It is a peculiar of the bishop. The church is an ancient structure in the early style of English architecture, chiefly remarkable for a fine monument erected to the memory of Edward Colston, Esq., and sculptured by Rysbrach. The tower was added in 1716.—St. Augustine's is a discharged vicarage; valued at £6; gross income £320; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Gloucester and Bristol. The church is an ancient building, in a mixed style of English architecture.—Christ-church is a discharged rectory with St. Ewen; valued at £11 10s.; gross income £390; formerly in the patronage of the corporation, and exempt from visitation. The church is a modern Grecian building, with an elegant tower and spire.—St. James' is a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop; gross income £551; formerly in the patronage of the corporation. This church was formerly collegiate, and belonged to a priory dedicated to St. James. It is a fine structure in the Norman style, and is supposed to contain the remains of Robert, earl of Gloucester, and Eleonora, niece of King John. The ancient priory is thus mentioned by Tanner:—"In the north-east suburb of this city, Robert, base son to King Henry I., and earl of Gloucester, built a priory of Benedictine monks, to the honour of St. James, in the latter end of his father's, or beginning of King Stephen's reign. This he made a cell to the abbey of Tewkesbury, and, as parcel of the possessions of that great house, was granted, 35^o Henry VIII., to Henry Brayne." The church was made parochial in 1347.—St. John the Baptist's is a discharged rectory with St. Lawrence; valued at £7 4s. 4d.; gross income £160; formerly in the patronage of the corporation, and exempt from visitation. The church is a good specimen of the later style of English architecture.—St. Nicholas' is a discharged vicarage, with that of St. Leonard's annexed; valued, the one at £21 1s. 1d., the other at £12; gross income £257; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Gloucester and Bristol, and in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop.—St. Mark, or Gaunt's, is a perpetual curacy, not in charge. It was formerly collegiate, but now is the chapel of the mayor, whose chaplain officiates every Sabbath. The church is a beautiful specimen of English architecture, with a fine tower.—St. Mary le Port's is a discharged rectory; valued at £7; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Chandos. This is a peculiar of the bishop. The church is an ancient edifice in the early English style of architecture.—St. Mary Redcliffe's is a perpetual curacy, to which is annexed St. Thomas, united to Bedminster; rated at £12 6s. 3d.; gross income £366; a peculiar of the bishop, and in the patronage of the prebendary of Bedminster. The church is one of the most elegant ecclesiastical structures in England. "It is," says Camden, "on all accounts the first parish-church in England." It was founded in 1249 by Simon de Burton, mayor of Bristol, and completed in 1376. Having sustained extensive damage in 1445 from a violent storm, it was repaired by the mayor, William Canynge or Cannynges, who is therefore regarded as a second founder, and whose memory is perpetuated by two beautiful monumental statues in the church. The style of architecture is English of all dates, and the ornaments are of the most delicate and graceful description. In the interior are some fine paintings by Hogarth, but which unfortunately block up the east window. The whole is built in the form of a cross, having a nave raised above the aisles and lighted by a series of lofty windows on each side, in the manner of a cathedral. Sir William Penn, father of the founder of Pennsylvania, lies buried in this church.—St. Michael's is a discharged rectory; valued at £6; gross income £372; formerly in the patronage of the corporation. This is also a peculiar of the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The church was sometime since rebuilt in a very plain style.—St. Paul's is a perpetual curacy, not in charge; gross income £513; formerly in the patronage of the corporation. It is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop.—St. Peter's is a discharged rectory; valued at £6 7s. 6d.; gross income £240; in the patronage of the corporation, and a peculiar of the bishop. The church is an interesting structure of great antiquity, and the churchyard contains the remains of the unfortunate poet Savage.—St. Philip and St. Jacob's is a discharged vicarage; valued at £15; gross income £440; in the patronage of the corporation. The church is an ancient building, in the early style of English architecture.—St. Stephen's is a discharged rectory; valued at £16; gross income £292; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor, and a peculiar of the bishop. The church was erected about 1470, and presents a rich specimen of the later style of English architecture.—Temple or Holy Cross is a discharged vicarage; valued at £3 4s. 2d.; gross income £387; formerly in the patronage of the corporation. The church originally belonged to the Knights Templars, and presents a mixture of the Norman and early English styles of architecture. It is remarkable for its steeple, which leans considerably, and when the bells are rung is felt to shake to and fro.—St. Werburgh's is a discharged rectory; valued at £10; gross income £70; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church was founded in 1190, and is in the later style of English architecture. Besides the churches already mentioned, there are five episcopal chapels.—The Independents have 13 chapels; the Methodists 10; the Baptists 6; the Society of Friends, Moravians, United Secession, Huntingdonians, Unitarians, Jews, and Roman Catholics, have also places of worship here. One of the Independent churches was formed in 1670; Methodist churches were formed in 1755, 1795, 1813, and 1816; the first Baptist church was formed in 1640, the second in 1656, the third in 1804, the fourth and fifth in 1832, and the sixth in 1834; the Unitarian church was organized in 1718; the Huntingdonian in 1773–4. An act was passed in the session of 1837 for the erection of a new general cemetery near the city.

Schools and Charities.—The grammar-school of Bristol was founded in 1531–2 by Robert Thorne, whose monument stands in the church of St. Werburgh. The endowment originally consisted of £1,000 given by the founder, which was laid out in the purchase of the estates of the hospital of St. Bartholomew. These estates were afterwards granted out in fee-farm by the corporation: reserving a rent of £41 6s. 8d. for the charity. The corporation subsequently repurchased the property, which they now claim as civic estate, subject only to the £41 6s. 8d., which is alleged to be the only income of the charity. A suit is now pending against the corporation for restoration of the original rights of the charity. There are certain sums expended by this charity in support of several exhibitions, and two small fellowships in St. John's college, Oxford. The sons of resident freemen have the right of being educated here.—Attached to the cathedral is a grammar-school for the instruction of the choristers.—Here is also an hospital named after Queen Elizabeth, but founded in 1586 by John Carr, in which 100 boys are educated, clothed, and maintained; the endowment produces nearly £4,000 per annum, and is managed by the trustees of the municipal charities of the city.—Here are three schools founded and endowed by Edward Colston in the beginning of the last century; in the one, in Temple parish, 30 boys are clothed and instructed; in the second, in St. Augustine's parish, 100 boys are clothed, maintained, and educated; the third is intended for 40 boys belonging to the parishes of St. Mary Redcliffe and St. Thomas.—In Temple parish is a school endowed for the instruction and clothing of 40 girls.—The Red Maid's school, in the parish of St. Augustine, is endowed for the maintenance, education, and clothing of 44 girls. The coffees commenced the erection of a very beautiful new hospital for this charity in 1835, in the ancient collegiate style; but we believe the progress of the work has been recently suspended by certain law proceedings.—There are also in the city and suburbs 98 daily schools, 9 of which are endowed, a central National school, 39 Sunday schools, 12 day and Sunday schools, 3 of which are endowed, 20 day and boarding, 26 boarding, and 10 infant schools.—Bristol college, opened in 1831, belongs to a proprietary body. The course of instruction at the senior department comprehends, in their fullest extent, all the branches of classical and scientific learning, which are taught at any of the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge. The mode of lecturing resembles that which is pursued at those universities, with such modifications, however, as are deemed expedient. The junior department is strictly preparatory to the senior. The object proposed in its establishment was not only to lay a solid foundation for classical learning, but also to give a good English and commercial education.—The charitable establishments in Bristol are numerous and well-supported. The infirmary, the general hospital founded in 1832, the asylum for the blind, dispensaries instituted in 1776, the Bristol institution for diseases of the eye founded in 1810, the eye dispensary founded in 1812, penitentiary, refuge society, humane society, and other institutions, are all conducted on a most liberal scale. The number of patients admitted to the institution for diseases of the eye during the first 25 years of its existence was 13,546; cataracts cured 139; annual disbursement about £160. The number of patients admitted to the eye dispensary from 1812 to 1837 was 24,294; the number in 1837 alone, 1,823, annual expenditure £70.—The infirmary deserves special notice. Bristol first set the example of an asylum for the sick and wounded poor, supported entirely by the voluntary contributions of her citizens and neighbours, by founding this institution in 1738. It expends annually between £5,000 and £6,000 in its ordinary disbursements; and receives on an average 1,500 in, and 6,000 out-patients, total 7,500 yearly. By the official return made to the parliamentary medical commission, we learn that the number of casualties treated here are about 1,300, and the operations 67 yearly. The building contains baths, a lecturing-theatre, an operation-room—which not unfrequently contains 100 spectators—a valuable library, and the extensive and exceedingly rich museum of Mr. Richard Smith. The wards are spacious and well-ventilated; and every attention is paid to cleanliness and good order. There is also a large garden and gravelled walk, as a promenade for the convalescents: indeed no cost has been spared to add to the comforts and convenience of the patients. The charity is governed by four quarterly boards: and the details by a weekly committee consisting of 30 subscribers, to whom are added the treasurer, one physician, and one surgeon, who are members ex officio. Two house-visitors inspect the whole establishment in every department, and enter their report in a book which is weekly placed before the committee. The charity is supported by annual subscriptions of two and five guineas; thirty paid at once constitute a trustee for life; legacies also form a large item in the receipts.—There are numerous hospitals or alms-houses, and minor charities connected with Bristol, the united revenues of which amount to about £17,000 per annum. The relief of the poor is administered under a local act, 7^o and 8^o William III. c. 32, by the 'corporation of the poor.' The sums apportioned to the different parishes for this purpose, from 25th March, 1832, to 25th March, 1833, amounted to £32,519 9s. 8d.; in 1838, to £20,821 4s. This corporation act in some cases with the authority of magistrates. They have the power of compelling any vagrant to inhabit the workhouse, and to detain him there, whilst, in their opinion, he is unable to maintain himself; and it seems that a power of imprisonment for misbehaviour, or even for insolence towards the officers of the corporation, is not unusually exercised. There are generally more than 500 in the workhouse, and from 4,000 to 5,000 out-poor.

Streets, Buildings, &c.—The city is situated in a valley, about 8 miles from the mouth of the river Avon, and near its confluence with the Frome. Close to the river-side is the ancient city, bounded on one side by the Avon, on another by the Frome, and on a third by the ancient moat of the castle. This part contains some very ancient houses, and narrow streets, in which the upper stories often project considerably beyond the line of the ground-floor; but many of the streets have of late been widened and otherwise improved in appearance. The highest parts of the city are those called St. Michael's-hill, and King's-down, which are about 200 feet above the level of the lowest streets. The streets are lighted with gas; the pavements are good; and there is a plentiful supply of water chiefly obtained from springs. The more modern parts of the town contain some spacious streets and squares, with elegant buildings. The progress of building till lately was towards the west, and many of the principal inhabitants reside at Clifton.—Among the public buildings, the exchange, in Corn-street, is at once the finest and the most important. It was erected by the corporation in 1760, at the expense of £50,000. It is a handsome and spacious edifice in the Corinthian order of architecture, 110 feet in length, and 148 in depth; the place intended for the merchants is a peristyle 90 feet by 80, and capable of containing 1,440 persons. It is used chiefly by the corn-merchants, the real business of the exchange being transacted in the commercial-rooms, which were erected in 1811, at an expense of £17,000. The latter contains several apartments of considerable dimensions, one of which is used for a library and news-room.—The present council-house was built in 1827 at an expense of above £14,000. There are also assembly-rooms in Prince's-street, in a fine building of the Corinthian order. The Victoria rooms, near the top of Park-street, intended for public assemblies of all kinds, present a very handsome exterior. The grand hall, or saloon, is 117 feet by 55, and 48 in height. The theatre was erected in 1766, by Mr. Powell, and is opened during winter for performances. Mr. Garrick pronounced it to be the completest in Europe of its dimensions. Bristol possesses several literary and scientific institutions, among which the most important are the philosophical and literary society, and the mechanics' institution. Connected with these are libraries, reading and lecture-rooms, a museum, chemical laboratories, and collections of philosophical apparatus. Here is also an extensive and valuable city-library, contained in a very handsome building; it was founded in 1615 by Robert Redwood, who devised to the corporation a house in King-street, on condition of its being converted into a public library. It was afterwards increased by different donations of books, and now contains upwards of 15,000 volumes. About 1773 a society was formed, called the Bristol library society, to whom its corporation allotted a certain part of the building which had been used for the city-library. To this building a new wing was some years afterwards added by the society, containing a library-room, which communicated with the library of the corporation. The subscribers to the library have the use of the books which belong to the corporation, and the mayor, sheriffs, and chamberlain, for the time being, have access, to the books of the society without being subscribers; but the city-library is not open to any other of the citizens, except those who subscribe to the society. A medical library, formed in 1831, contains about 2,000 volumes. Its members amount to 56, who pay a subscription of two guineas annually for its support.

Population, Trade, &c.—The population of the city of Bristol, in 1801, was 39,914; and in 1831, 59,074, exclusive of the suburbs, which returned, in 1801, 22,831; in 1831, 44,812; in city and suburbs together,—houses 16,145. Acres 9,870. A. P. £322,249.—The markets, which are held in a spacious quadrangle near the exchange, are on Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday; a market for cattle is held every Thursday; and fairs for most sorts of goods are held on March 1st and September 1st,—each lasting ten days. The Bristol and Clifton races used to be held in the month of May; but have been discontinued of late.—The Bristol Old bank was established about 1748 or 1750, but the present partnership of eight partners, in June, 1826. Here are also branches of Stuckey's Banking company, the West of England and South Wales District bank, and the National Provincial bank of England.—Bristol is a city of great commercial importance. The principal exports are the manufactures of the neighbourhood; the imports are chiefly the produce of the West Indies, North and South America, Russia, France, and Germany, consisting of sugar, rum, wine, wool, tobacco, coffee, turpentine, hemp, and timber. In 1836 the custom duties received at this port amounted to £1,112,812; in 1838, to £1,169,524.* The quay extends along the shore of the Frome and Avon for a distance of more than a mile, from St. Giles' bridge to Bristol bridge. In 1803, it was found necessary to form a floating-harbour here, on account of the damage which large vessels occasionally sustained from lying in the river at low water. This was effected by changing the course of the Avon, and damming up the old course, which now forms the harbour, communicating with the river, accessible at all times, and affording a sufficient depth of water for any vessel. This work, with the elegant iron bridges over the Avon, occupied a period of five years, and required an expenditure of £600,000. The swivel-bridge across the floating-harbour was formerly a drawbridge, but was altered to its present form in 1827 at a cost of £1,930. The new channel of the river extends from near Totterdown to Rowenham ferry. Ship-building is carried on to a considerable extent; the dock-yards are situated on the banks of the floating-harbour. In 1835 the harbour was much choked with mud. By act of parliament 21 feet of water in a sufficient number of berths is required; but the deepest part was then only 16½, and that only in two berths; while above the swivel-bridge, which may be passed by vessels of 100 tons, there were only 10½ feet in the deepest part, shoaling to 8. Large ships cannot move safely in the harbour without raising the water to a higher level than is allowed by the act; they must discharge part of their cargoes immediately on entering to enable them to reach the quay—the expense of which falls on the ship-owner—or, in default of this precaution, vessels of 450 and 500 tons often ground in attempting to go up. Soon after the first formation of the float a dredging-machine was employed during nine months in the year, and 120 tons of mud were removed daily; this was discontinued after four years. Works, however, have been undertaken by which, it is expected, the state of the harbour will be improved. From various causes, chiefly of a local nature, the trade of Bristol has not kept pace with the increase of other ports, once its rivals. An act was passed in the session of 1837 for the better regulating of the shipping, river, and wharfs.—The most important manufactures of Bristol are those of brass and copper, glass, zinc, pins, and china; there are also considerable quantities of lead, patent shot, soap, leather, and floor-cloth made here; and there are several iron-foundries, breweries, distilleries, and sugar-refineries. Coal is procured in the vicinity in great abundance, and the importation of it has been facilitated by forming a railway between Cuckold's pill on the east side of Bristol, and Coal-pit heath in the parish of Westerleigh, Gloucestershire, a distance of 9 miles.

Municipal government.—The principal charters of Bristol were collected in a volume and published in 1812 by the late Rev. S. Seyer. The earliest charter for which any authority can be stated is by Henry II. about 1164. The next in the collection is a very remarkable one, being a grant by that monarch, in 1172–3, of the city of Dublin to his men of Bristol, to dwell in, with all the liberties and free customs which the men of Bristol have at Bristol. It was apparently granted to a colony which about that time was removed from Bristol to Dublin. Charters of incorporation were subsequently granted by John Earl of Morton—afterwards King John—Henry III., Edward I., Edward II., and Edward III., which have undergone various modifications and extensions. The latest charter is that of Queen Anne, granted to the city on the 24th of July, 1710. Under the new municipal act the corporate body of Bristol consists of a mayor, 16 aldermen, and 48 councillors. Formerly the corporation consisted of a mayor, recorder, high steward, two sheriffs, 12 aldermen, 28 common-council-men, with a town-clerk, a chamberlain, two coroners, and inferior officers. The mayor was annually elected by the council, and allowed

* In 1832, the number of vessels belonging to the port was returned at 303, of which there were 32 employed at other ports or laid up. In 1832, 276 British and foreign vessels entered inwards, and 215 cleared outwards; in the same year 400 Irish vessels cleared outwards, and 537 entered the port of Bristol from Ireland. In 1838, 325 British vessels, of a total tonnage of 63,567 tons, and 42 foreign vessels of 6,107 tons, entered the port.

£1,000 to support the dignity of his office. The high steward was usually a nobleman; the recorder a barrister of five years standing; and the town-clerk one of three years. The sheriffs were bailiffs of the ancient hundreds, and annually chosen by the council from their own body. The vacancies among the aldermen were filled up by election from those who had served the office of mayor. The mayor, recorder, and aldermen, were justices of the peace for the city and county. The freedom of the city might be inherited by birth, or obtained by gift, purchase, servitude, or even by marriage with the daughter of a freeman. The sheriffs held a court, called the tolzey court, from having formerly been held at the place where the king's tolls were collected; its jurisdiction applied to all civil actions for the recovery of debts or otherwise. A court of pie-powder was also held in the open street for 14 days. It was nominally opened twice a-day during the fortnight; but the only sitting days were the first and last. A court of requests for Bristol and neighbourhood is held under 56° George III. c. 76. It sits every Tuesday, and is held before not less than five commissioners, one of whom at least must be a member of the town-council. This court has the power of trying actions for sums from 40s. to £20. A court of conscience is established here under an act of 1° William and Mary, for the recovery of all debts under 40s., the registrar of which is appointed by the common council. The mayor and recorder formerly held assizes twice a-year for the trial of persons charged with offences committed within the city jurisdiction; but this court has been abolished by the municipal corporations act; and courts of quarter-session are now held by the recorder. One of the judges on the western circuit usually attends the spring-assizes for the trial of civil causes. A lord-lieutenant is appointed for the county, but he is in no wise a member of the civic corporation.—A spacious and well-constructed gaol was erected here in 1820, which was partially burnt during the great riot of 1831. The prisoners usually found in the city-gaol and house of correction are different in character and appearance from the general inmates of provincial prisons. They approximate closely to the criminals of the metropolitan gaols, and are very intractable. The gaoler's lodge, which is separate from the main building, was entirely destroyed during the riots of 1831, and all the prisoners were released. This prison comprises 10 wards, 10 airing-yards, 29 day-rooms, and 6 cells, besides work-rooms and infirmaries. The hard labour consists of the tread-mill, picking hemp, and breaking stones. A system of separation and silence is now pursued in this gaol. The greatest number of prisoners, at one time, in 1835, was 221. The rebuilt city bridewell was opened in March, 1836, and is a new and neat erection. It cost £6,276 0s. 11d., and contains 48 cells, 6 airing-yards, and 12 day-rooms. From the period of its opening up to June 22d, 1837, the number of prisoners was 815. Previous to the introduction of the new police, 12 policemen paraded the town during the day, and continued on till ten o'clock at night, at which hour the night-watch was set. The municipal commissioners reported that all parties agreed that the police force was wholly inadequate to the extent and population of the city, and that the establishment of a well-organized body of policemen was absolutely necessary. This recommendation was complied with in June, 1836. The present force consists of a superintendent, 5 inspectors, 24 sergeants, and 198 men, exclusive of 4 officers employed at the council-house. A fourth part of the men parade the city by day, and the remainder by night, after the model of the metropolitan police.—The revenue of the corporation is entirely managed by the common council, and no account of it had been published until 1832. In consequence of the excitement which prevailed in Bristol in the course of 1831 and 1832, a committee of gentlemen, not of the corporation, were permitted to examine the corporation-books, and to compare them with an account of receipts and disbursements during several preceding years. That account was published by the committee, with the sanction of the common council, in March, 1832. The average income of the corporation, as prepared for the use of the commissioners of municipal corporations, (1833,) was £18,773; the average expenditure £16,409. The bond debt of the city, in 1833, was £86,204 10s. 1d. A great part of this debt consists of monies which the corporation have accepted on condition of paying a permanent interest for it to charitable purposes, and which, consequently, they have no power to pay off.—Bristol has returned two members to parliament since the 23° Edward I. The right of election formerly belonged to all freemen, in whatever manner they had become so, the number being nearly 6,000. Under the act for reforming the representation and the extended boundaries, the number of electors is about 9,785. The sheriff is the returning officer.

Cross-mails, &c.—There are cross-mails from Bristol to Bideford, 102 miles; to Birmingham, 88 miles; to Brighton, 138 miles; to Carmarthen, 116½ miles; to Portsmouth, 99 miles; to Shrewsbury, 105 miles; to Bath, 13 miles; and penny-posts to Clifton, Hotwells, Kingsdown, St. Philips, Stokes Croft, Redland, Westbury, Cribb's Causeway, Keynsham, Brislington, Persford, Temple Cloud, Old Down, Horfield, Felton, Almondsbury, Rugeway, Bedminster, Ashton, Bourton, Nailsea, Clevedon, Wrington, Pucklechurch, Stapleton, Hambrook, Winterbourne, Frampton Cottrell, Iron Acton, St. George's (Gloucester), Hanham, Willsbridge, Biton, Kingweston, Old Passage, Stone Easton, Wraxall, Cross Hands, and Portbury.

The Great Western railway, when completed, will be 117½ miles in length. It commences at Paddington, and passes through or near to Acton, Ealing, Southall, Maidenhead, Reading, Didcot, Faringdon, Swindon, Chippenham, and Bath; and terminates at Temple-Mead, near the floating-harbour at Bristol. It is thought that the entire cost of this stupendous undertaking will fall little short of £5,000,000. It was opened from London to Maidenhead on June 4th, 1838; and as far as Twyford, 5 miles from Reading, on July 1st, 1839. The total length of line open at the close of 1839, was 31½ miles; the receipts on which for the week ending December 4th, was £1,771; number of passengers, 7,913.—The Bristol and Exeter railway runs off from the Great Western railway at Temple-Mead, and passes near Weston-Supermare, Bridgewater, Wellington, Collumpton, and Bradninch, to the new basin on the western side of Exeter. Its length is 75½ miles through a country nearly level. The stock of this railway is held in 15,000 shares of £100 each.

History.—By the Britons this city was called Caer Oder, 'the city of Oder,' or perhaps 'the city of the Chasm.' By some antiquarians Bristol is supposed to have been the Abona of Antoninus. It is referred to as a fortified city by Gildas in the 5th century, and by Nennius in the 7th; but it appears first in authentic history during the reign of Athelstan. The Saxons gave it the name of Brito-stow, or Brightstowe, signifying 'the pleasant city.' In Latin deeds it is called Bristowa, and Bristolia. Florence of Worcester mentions, that, in 1063, Harold set sail from Bristowe to invade Wales. In the 11th century, a mart for the sale of English slaves existed here, which was suppressed by William the Conqueror at the intercession of Archbishop Lanfranc. The bishop of Constance, when in England for the purpose of opposing William Rufus's claim to the throne, erected walls around Bristol; and a castle was subsequently erected here, in which Henry II. resided for four years and received part of his education. By Edward III. Bristol was made a staple-town for wool, and a city and county in itself. Bristol castle was defended in 1399, by Scroop, Earl of Wilts, against Henry IV. when Duke of Lancaster. The inhabitants exhibited a strong attachment to the Lancastrian cause, and aided the attempts made to replace Henry VI. on the throne held by Edward IV. Bristol was visited by Henry VII. in 1485, and fined for exhibiting too much finery on the occasion. Henry VIII. made Bristol the seat of a bishopric. In the 5th year of Charles I. the castle was taken out of Gloucestershire and made part of the county of Bristol; and in the following year, by charter dated 26th October, 1630, the reversion in the property, expectant on a subsisting term of years determinable on lives, was granted to the corporation, and the property in the castle and soil thus became vested in them in fee-farm, at £40 per annum, with all jurisdictions, franchises, and emoluments arising from it—except ecclesiastical benefices and knights fees belonging to the premises—and all manner of lead and tin and other mines. The rent reserved on this purchase of the castle, as well as on that of the town, was afterwards redeemed by the corporation. In the reign of Charles I. Bristol was first in the hands of the parliament. In 1643 it was taken by Prince Rupert, and remained in the hands of the royalists, till Fairfax laid siege to and took it, when the castle and fortifications were destroyed. In the last week of October, 1831, this great and wealthy city was made the scene of a series of disturbances unparalleled in the modern history of England. Several hundred individuals were killed or wounded in the riot and its suppression; the custom-house, the exchequer-office, the bishop's palace, the public gaols, and more than forty private houses were set fire to; and property to an immense amount plundered and destroyed. A loan of £66,000 was granted to the town by government in 1833, for the payment of the sufferers. This frightful disaster originated in the attempt made by Sir Charles Wetherell, the recorder of the city, who had rendered himself highly unpopular by his conduct in the reform question, to make a public entry into the city previous to holding the assizes.

Antiquities, &c.—Here were anciently two nunneries, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene and St. Sepulchre; two priories, dedicated to St. Philip and St. Catherine, several houses of friars of various denominations, and several hospitals, all dissolved by Henry VIII.—Part of the ancient fortifications may still be seen in the gateway of the town, a gate in St. John's street, and a highly ornamented gateway under the tower of St. John's church.—The family of Hervey takes the title of earl and marquess from this city.—Many eminent characters have been born here. Among these were the navigators Sebastian Cabot and Hugh Elliott; William Grocyn, a professor of Greek in Oxford; Sir William Draper, the opponent of Junius; the poet Chatterton, and Thomas Edward Bowditch, the African traveller.

BRISTON, or BURSTON, a parish in the hund. of Holt, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; 4½ miles south-south-west of Holt, on the river Bure, from which its name is derived. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; valued at £4 9s. 9½d.; gross income £193. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. George Preston. Here is also an independent place of worship. This parish possesses 7 daily schools. Charities connected with it produce £8 13s. per annum. Fairs are held here on May 26th and October 11th. Pop., in 1801, 750; in 1831, 1,037. Houses 224. Acres 2,450. A. P. £2,319. Poor rates, in 1837, £551.

BRITFORD, a parish in the hund. of Cawden and Cadworth, union of Alderbury, county of Wilts; 1½ mile south-east by south of Salisbury, intersected by the Salisbury and Southampton canal. It includes the hamlets of East Harnham and Langford Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £13; nett income £281; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Salisbury. There are here two day and Sunday schools. A great fair for sheep and horses is held here on August 12th. Pop., in 1801, 675; in 1831, 838. Houses 153. Acres 3,350. A. P. £5,274. Poor rates, in 1837, £596.

BRITH-DIR, a hamlet and chapelry in the parish of Gelli-gaer, hund. of Caerphilly, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 10 miles north of Caerphilly, Pop., in 1801, 278; in 1831, 792. Houses 150.

BRITON-FERRY, a parish, in the hund. and union of Neath, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 2½ miles south of Neath, on the north-eastern part of the bay of Swansea. There is a ferry here across the river Neath, which here emerges in a fine sweep between woody banks, and, at a short distance, joins the sea. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff, not in charge; valued at £10; gross income £124. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Jersey. There is a daily school here. The scenery of this place is possessed of more than common beauty. It is a fairy region, which nature and art have combined to adorn. From a hill in the vicinity an extensive and delightful prospect is obtained of the Bristol channel and neighbouring coast. The Earl of Jersey has a mansion-house here, with pleasure-grounds tastefully laid out. Pop., in 1801, 188; in 1831, 416. Houses 76. A. P. £605. Poor rates, in 1837, £167.

BRITWELL-SALOME, a parish in the hund. of Lewknor, union of Henley, county of Oxford; 5½ miles south-south-east of Tetworth. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; valued at £6 19s. 2d.; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, Lord Carrington. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 155; in 1831, 216. Houses 40. Acres 730. A. P. £1,099. Poor rates, in 1837, £86.

BRIXHAM, a parish in the hund. of Haytor, Paignton division, union of Totness, county of Devon; 25 miles south of Exeter, on the shore of the English channel, near the southern extremity of Torbay. It consists chiefly of the market-town and seaport of the same name. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Churston Ferrers, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £25 15s.; gross income £600; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The church has been enlarged. In the division called Lower Brixham a new church has been built by the parliamentary commissioners in the Gothic style, at an expense of £1,200. Sitings 1,100. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here; the Baptist church was formed in 1800, the Wesleyan Methodist in 1812. The town contains some good houses, is well-supplied with water, and stands in an agreeable and salubrious situation. It is a member of the port of Dartmouth, has a good harbour, and employs about 100 vessels in the coasting-trade. Thursday and Saturday are market-days, and a fair is held on Whit-Tuesday.—There are here 19 daily schools, and also a day and Sunday National school, which is endowed. A spacious and commodious building has been erected for this school by the inhabitants of Brixham, assisted by the National society. Charities connected with the parish produce £90 per annum. Petty sessions are held here and at Walton court, and Torquay, for the division of Paignton. Here is a curious well which ebbs and flows frequently in the course of an hour. Pop., in 1801, 3,671; in 1831, 5,015. Houses 969. Acres 5,210. A. P. £16,113. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,086.

BRIXTON, a parish in the hund. of Plympton, division of Ermington and Plympton, union of Plympton St. Mary, county of Devon; 2 miles south-south-east of Plympton-Earl. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £35 15s., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £59 11s. 8d.; gross income £107; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Windsor. There are two daily schools in this parish, the inhabitants of which have the right of sending children to a school at Plympton-Earl, endowed with upwards of £200 per annum; but for many years no child has been educated by this charity. Other charities connected with the parish produce £42 per annum. Petty-sessions are held here and at Redgeway, for the hundreds of Ermington and Plympton. The river Yealm is here navigable. Pop., in 1801, 635; in 1831, 796. Houses 142. Acres 3,060. A. P. £5,635. Poor rates, in 1837, £420.

BRIXTON, or BRIGHTSTONE, a parish in the south-west division of Medina liberty, Isle of Wight division of the county of Southampton; 6 miles south-west of Newport. Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the bishop of Winchester; valued at £32 3s. 4d.; gross income £585. There are here four daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 a-year by the Rev. Noel Digby. Pop., in 1801, 448; in 1831, 641. Houses 55. Acres 2,700. A. P. £4,089. Poor rates, in 1837, £400.

BRIXTON HUNDRED, in the county of Surrey, consists of two divisions—eastern and western—and is situated in the eastern division of the county. Area 30,400 acres. Houses 40,880. Pop., in 1831, 245,860.

BRIXTON, a village in the parish of Lambeth, hund. of Brixton, county of Surrey; 4½ miles south-west of St. Paul's cathedral, in the neighbourhood of the Southampton and London railroad. It extends 2 miles along the road from Kennington to Streatham, is watched and lighted with gas, and has become one of the most agreeable of the suburbs of London. A district church has been erected here by the parliamentary commissioners in the Doric style, with portico, tower, and steeple, at an expense of £15,192 9s.; sittings 1,926; yearly value £650; in the patronage of the rector of Lambeth. The Independents have two, and the Methodists several places of worship here. There is also a church of Huntingdonians, formed in 1827. The house-of-correction for the county of Surrey is here. Here is a charitable establishment called Trinity asylum, founded and endowed, in 1824, by Thomas Bailey, Esq. It consists of residences for 12 females, who receive annually £10 and 12 sacks of coals each;—indispensable qualifications for admission are, that the party be of the age of 57 years, in possession of £20 per annum, and a believer in the doctrine of the Trinity. Mrs. Bailey left a fund of £2,000 for the education and maintenance of the orphan children of gospel-ministers. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

BRIXTON-DEVERILL, a parish in the hund. of Heytesbury, union of Warminster, county of Wilts; 4 miles south of Warminster. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £19 1s. 0½d.; gross income £260; in the patronage of the bishop of Salisbury. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 197. Houses 33. Acres 2,690. A. P. £1,647. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

BRIXTON-HILL, a village in the parish of Streatham, county of Surrey. An Independent church here was formed in 1829.

BRIXWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Orlingbury, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 6 miles north of Northampton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £14 15s. 10d.; gross income £312; in the patronage of the chancellor of Salisbury cathedral. All tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the chancellor of New Sarum and the vicar, were commuted in 1780. This parish possesses seven daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum, and two Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce £58 per annum. A fair is held annually on Whit-Monday for cloth, hardware, and toys. Pop., in 1801, 718; in 1831, 973. Houses 227. Acres 3,410. A. P. £6,344. Poor rates, in 1837, £550.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Brixworth by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £5,800, capable of accommodating 250 persons. The Brixworth poor-law union comprehends 31 parishes, embracing an area of 87 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 13,511. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £12,469. Expenditure, in 1838, £8,011.

BROAD-CHALK, a parish in the hund. of Chalk, union of Wilton, county of Wilts; 7½ miles south-west by south of Wilton. Living, a rectory, with the curacies of Bower Chalk and Alverdiston, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £27 14s.; gross income £348; in the patronage of the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. Here is an Independent chapel; the church was formed in 1801. There are three daily schools here. An encampment of six acres in extent, in this neighbourhood, has been attributed to the Romans; and there is here an extensive barrow called Gawen's barrow. Pop., in 1801, 625; in 1831, 796. Houses 125. Acres 8,380. A. P. £4,918. Poor rates, in 1837, £413.

BROADCLIST, a parish in the hund. of Clifton, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 5 miles north-east of Exeter, in the vicinity of the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £26; gross income £492. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. D. Acland. There are seven daily schools in this parish; and also an alms-house for 12 poor persons, endowed with £23 11s. per annum. Other charities connected with the parish produce £27 10s. per annum. Clist house, in this parish, was a palace of the bishops of Exeter previous to the Reformation. A fair is held on the 3d of May for cattle. Pop., in 1801, 1,540; in 1831, 2,085. Houses 382. Acres 10,270. A. P. £14,746. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,205.

BROADFIELD, or BRADFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Odsey, union of Buntingford, county of Hertford; 3 miles north-west by west of Buntingford. The church has long been desecrated. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 10. Houses 2. Acres 630. A. P. £443. Poor rates, in 1837, £34.

BROADGATE, an extra-parochial liberty, in the western division of the hund. of Goscote, county of Leicester; 5 miles north-west of Leicester. The ruins of the mansion of the Lords Grey de Groby, the birth-place of Lady Jane Grey, are in this liberty. Pop., in 1801, 8; in 1831, 10. House 1. Acres 1,120.

BROADHEMBURY, a parish in the hund. of Ha. ridge, union of Honiton, county of Devon; 5 miles north-west of Honiton, and 6 east of the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £16 17s., rated in the parliamentary returns at £120; gross income £225; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Exeter. There are here four daily schools, one of which is endowed, and a day and Sunday school. Charities connected with this parish produce £15 5s. per annum. The abbot of Dunkeswell was anciently lord of the manor. A cell or a priory subordinate to the priory of Montacute, formerly existed in the village of Carswell. Here is an entrenchment called Hunbury fort, attributed to the Romans. A fair is held on December 11th for cattle. Pop., in 1801, 780; in 1831, 849. Houses 170. Acres 5,950. A. P. £5,273. Poor rates, in 1837, £476.

BROADHEMPSTON, a parish in the hund. of Haytor, union of Newton-Abbot, county of Devon; 4 miles south-east of Ashburton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £25 6s. 8d.; gross income £366. Patron, the Crown. This parish possesses two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 667; in 1831, 748. Houses 159. Acres 2,140. A. P. £3,544. Poor rates, in 1837, £268.

BROAD-HINTON, a liberty in the parish of Hurst, hund. of Amesbury, county of Wilts, but locally situated in the hund. of Sonning, county of Berks; 4 miles north by west of Wokingham. There are here two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £7 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 406; in 1831, 519. Houses 79. Acres 1,710. A. P. £2,603. Poor rates, in 1837, £234.

BROAD-HINTON, a parish in the hund. of Selkley, union of Marlborough, county of Wilts; 6 miles south-south-west of Swindon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £14 18s. 11½d.; gross income £322; in the patronage of the trustees of St. Nicholas' hospital, Salisbury. There is a daily school in this parish, endowed with £20 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 550; in 1831, 684. Houses 138. Acres 4,670. A. P. £1,547. Poor rates, in 1837, £411.

BROADHOLME, a hamlet in the parish of Thorney, northern division of the wapentake of Newark, county of Nottingham; 11 miles east by north of Tuxford. "Agnes de Camville, wife to Peter Gousla, (the founder of Newhouse for Præmonstratensian canons,) placed here a prioress and nuns of the same order, about the latter part of the reign of King Stephen. This small monastery, situated upon the borders of this county next Lincolnshire, was dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary, and had possessions, 26th Henry VIII., rated, according to Leland, at only £18. It was granted, 6th Elizabeth, to John Coniers and William Haber. Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 67. Houses 12. Acres 550. Poor rates, in 1837, £84.

BROADLANE, a township in the parish of Hwarden, hund. of Mold, county of Flint; about 5 miles north-east of Mold. Pop., in 1821, 36; in 1831, 47. Houses 7. Other returns with the parish.

BROADMAYNE, a parish in the hund. of St. George, but locally situated in that of Colliford-Tree, union of Dorchester, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 4 miles south-east by south of Dorchester. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1805. Living, a rectory annexed to West Knighton. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 215; in 1831, 362. Houses 70. Acres 2,540. A. P. £1,237. Poor rates in 1837, £65.

BROADOAK, a parish in the hund. of West, union of Liskeard, county of Cornwall; 6 miles west-south-west of Liskeard. Living consolidated in 1742 with the rectory of Boconnock. This parish possesses a day and Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 173; in 1831, 301. Houses 49. Acres 3,240. A. P. £1,035. Poor rates, in 1837, £88.

BROADOAK, a hamlet in the parish of Breda, county of Kent. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here.

BROADSTAIRS, a hamlet or ville, in the parish of St. Peter, isle of Thanet or hund. of Ringsale, lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent; 75 miles east of London, and 2 north of Ramsgate, on the coast. It is a member of the town and port of Dover, and was anciently known by the name of Bradstow, and of considerable importance. Of late it has been much resorted to as a bathing-place. Fairs are held here on April 8th, and July 10th. A chapel was erected here in 1828; it is a curacy in the dio. of Canterbury, of the yearly value of £160; and in the patronage of the vicar of St. Peter's. Near the gate was formerly a chapel, part of which may still be seen in a dwelling-house, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, whose image was once held in such reverence, that vessels in passing were wont to lower their top-sails. A church of Calvinistic Methodists was formed here in 1828. Between this place and Kingsgate is a lighthouse, erected in 1833, on the North Foreland, the most easterly point of England, in N. lat. 51° 22', and E. long. 1° 27'. In 1790, patent lamps with large magnifying lenses were introduced here instead of the ancient coal fires. The light is fixed, and visible at the distance of 22 miles in clear weather. Lord Holland has a seat in the vicinity. A desperate battle is said to have been fought by the Saxons and Danes near this, in 853; the spot is marked by two large tumuli. Returns with the parish.

BROADWARD, a township in the parish of Leominster, hund. of Wolphy, county of Hereford; 1½ mile south of Leominster. It includes the hamlets of Brierley, Eaton, Honnor, Shotford, and Whar-ton. Pop., in 1801, 171; in 1831, 347. Houses 64. Other returns with the parish.

BROADWAS, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, but locally in the upper division of the hund. of Doddingtree, union of Martley, county of Worcester; 6 miles west of Worcester, on the northern bank of the river Teme. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; valued at £10 9s. 2½d.; gross income £273; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Worcester. There are two daily schools here. Charities connected with the parish produce £7 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 245; in 1831, 296. Houses 60. Acres 1,000. A. P. £1,642. Poor rates, in 1837, £108.

BROADWATER (THE), a river in Cumberland. See BASSENTHWAITE.

BROADWATER HUNDRED, in the county of Hertford, is extremely irregular in its outline, and stretches, from north to south, nearly across the county. Area 60,600 acres. Houses 3,103. Pop., in 1831, 17,043.

BROADWATER, a parish in the hund. of Brightford, rape of Bramber, county of Sussex; 1 mile north of Worthing. It includes the town of Worthing. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; valued at £36; gross income £650. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Peter Wood. The church is in the form of a cross, with a tower springing from the centre. In the side-chapels are some curious monuments. The capitals of the pillars in the church which support the arch under the tower, are surmounted with branches of palm, an ornament introduced by the crusaders. Instead of the stone stalls frequent on the south side of our chancels, is a stone bench, over which is a Norman arch, a very rare if not an unique instance. On the south side of the church is a cross in the wall, in flint-work, a style peculiar to the Suffolk churches, and not occurring in any other church in Western Sussex. This parish possesses four daily, three infant, and three boarding-schools, and also two day and Sunday National, and two Sunday schools. In 1661, Dr. Chester bequeathed 10 acres of land, now producing £25 per annum, for the relief of the poor of this parish. Fairs for horned-cattle, sheep, and horses, are held on June 22d and October 30th. Pop., in 1801, 1,018; in 1831, 4,576. Houses 824. Acres 2,240. A. P. £9,561. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,016.

BROADWAY, a parish in the hund. of Colliford-Tree, union of Weymouth, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 3 miles north by west of Melcombe-Regis, intersected by the Bath and Weymouth railway. Living, a rectory annexed to that of Bincombe. There are two daily schools in this parish. A fair is held on Wednesday before September 18th. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 385. Houses 67. Acres 1,000. A. P., including that of Buckland-Ripers, £3,188. Poor rates, in 1837, £185.

BROADWAY, a parish in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, union of Chard, county of Somerset; 2½ miles north-west of Ilminster, in the vicinity of the Chard canal. It includes part of the tything of Capland. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £30, rated in the parliamentary returns at £42; gross income £167. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. William Palmer. The church is an ancient cruciform structure. Here are an Independent chapel, a daily school, and two day and Sunday schools; and also an almshouse for seven poor men, endowed with £21 per annum. A fair is held on September 14th, for cattle and pedlery. Pop., in 1801, 328; in 1831, 450. Houses 72. Acres 1,830. A. P. £1,415. Poor rates, in 1837, £188.

BROADWAY, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Pershore, union of Evesham, county of Worcester; 5½ miles south-east of Evesham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; valued at £10 17s. 6d.; gross income £212. Patron, in 1835, — Bird, Esq. The foundation-stone of a new church was laid here, by Michael Russell, Esq., on 13th August, 1839. The great and small tithes of Broadway manor, the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1771. Here is an Independent chapel; the church was formed in 1797. The Roman Catholics have also a chapel here. This parish possesses three daily schools, one of which is endowed with land bequeathed by the late Mr. Hodges, and three Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce £27 per annum. There is a silk-mill here which, in 1838, employed 39 hands. Pop., in 1801, 1,117; in 1831, 1,517. Houses 320. Acres 4,800. A. P. £8,200. Poor rates, in 1837, £550.

BROADWELL, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Slaughter, union of Stow-on-the-Wold, county of Gloucester; 1½ mile north-north-east of Stow-on-the-Wold, intersected by the Cheltenham, Oxford, and London Union railroad. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Adlestrop, in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £23 11s. 10½d.; gross income £648. Patron, in 1835, C. Leigh, Esq. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1792. There are here a daily school and two Sunday schools. The parish is crossed by the Roman fosse-way. Pop., in 1801, 239; in 1831, 334. Houses 79. Acres 1,600. A. P. £3,158. Poor rates, in 1837, £145.

BROADWELL, a parish in the hund. of Bampton, union of Witney, county of Oxford; 5 miles south of Burford. It comprises the chapelries of Holwell and Kelmscott, and the hamlet of Filkins. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacies of Holwell and Kelmscott, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; valued at £8 14s. 4½d.; gross income £270. Patron, in 1835, E. F. Colston, Esq. The great and small tithes, &c., the property of Trinity college, Oxford, and the vicar, were commuted in 1775. There are four daily and four Sunday schools here. Pop., in 1801, 734; in 1831, 793. Houses 198. Acres 5,990. A. P. £2,062. Poor rates, in 1837, £153.

BROAD-WINDSOR, a parish and liberty in the union of Beaminster, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; 3 miles west-north-west of Beaminster. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; valued at £15 8s. 9d.; gross income £600; in the patronage of the bishop of Salisbury. This parish contains the manors and tythings of Childhay, Drimpton, Debberford, and Little Windsor. The Independents have a place of worship here. There are seven daily schools, one of which is endowed with £13 per annum, and three Sunday schools, in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £17 per annum. A fair is held here on Trinity-Monday. In 1838 there was a flax-mill here, employing 27 hands. Pop., in 1801, 1,094; in 1831, 1,570. Houses 283. Acres 7,110. A. P. £10,586. Poor rates, in 1837, £538.

BROADWOOD-KELLY, a parish in the hund. of Black Torrington, union of Oakhampton, county of Devon; 5½ miles east by north of Hatherleigh. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £19 7s. 6d.; gross income £257. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. John Hole. There are here two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 388. Houses 73. Acres 2,190. A. P. £1,707. Poor rates, in 1837, £86.

BROADWOODWIDGER, a parish in the hund. of Lifton, union of Holsworthy, county of Devon; 6 miles north-east of Launceston, intersected by the Exeter and Falmouth railway. Living, a perpetual curacy, with Week St. German's annexed, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £8 3s. 4d., in the parliamentary returns at £72 3s.; gross income £148. Pop., in 1801, 586; in 1831, 879. Houses 145. Acres 7,350. A. P. £2,639. Poor rates, in 1837, £347.

BROBURY, a parish in the hund. of Grimsworth, union of Weobley, county of Hereford; 8½ miles east by north of Hay, on the northern bank of the river Wye. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; valued at £4, rated in the parliamentary returns at £87; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. N. D. H. Newton. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 62. Houses 16. Acres 440. A. P. £646. Poor rates, in 1837, £17.—Brobury scar, in the neighbourhood, is a grand object, and contrasts beautifully, in its bold and majestic outline, with the scenery on the banks of the Wye.

BROCKDISH, a parish in the hund. of Earsham, union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 3 miles south-west by west of Harleston, on the northern bank of the river Waveney. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £10; gross income £335. Patron, in 1835, William Wigney, Esq. There are here three daily and two Sunday schools. The Rev. Francis Blomefield, the historian of the county, was rector of this parish. Pop., in 1801, 370; in 1831, 482. Houses 66.

Acres 1,080. A. P. £1,491. Poor rates, in 1837, £255.

BROCKENHURST, a parish in the eastern division of the hund. of New Forest, union of Lymington, New Forest division of the county of Southampton; 4 miles north by west of Lymington. Living, a curacy not in charge, annexed to the vicarage of Boldre. The church—which is mentioned in Domesday-book—presents some remains of Saxon architecture. There are in this parish three daily schools, one of which is endowed by Mr. Henry Thurston, and three infant-schools.—In the vicinity is a heath called Sway-common, on which are several tumuli. Pop., in 1801, 632; in 1831, 841. Houses 161. Acres 2,980. A. P. £3,119. Poor rates, in 1837, £363.

BROCKFORD AND WITHERINGSETT, a parish in the hund. and union of Hartismere, county of Suffolk; 5 miles south-west by south of Eye, intersected by the Eastern Counties railroad. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 851; in 1831, 1,001. Houses 124. Acres 3,950. A. P. £4,696. Poor rates, in 1837, £658.

BROCKHALL, a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-grove, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 4½ miles east of Daventry, intersected by the London and Birmingham railway, and the Grand Junction canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £13; gross income £245. Patron, in 1835, T. R. Thornton. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 58. Houses 9. Acres 720. A. P. £2,300.

BROCKHAM GREEN, a hamlet in the county of Surrey. Here is a place of worship for Baptists; the church was formed in 1803.

BROCKHAMPTON AND KNOWLE, a hamlet in the parish and hund. of Buckland-Newton, Cerne subdivision of the county of Dorset; 12 miles north by east of Dorchester. Pop., in 1811, 137; in 1831, 162. Houses 30. Other returns with the parish.

BROCKHAMPTON. See SOUTHAM and BROCKHAMPTON.

BROCKHAMPTON, a chapelry in the parish of Bromyard, hund. of Broxash, county of Hereford; 2 miles east by north of Bromyard. Pop., in 1831, 113. Houses 20. Acres 1,410.

BROCKHAMPTON, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Graytree, union of Ross, county of Hereford; 6 miles north of Ross, on the eastern bank of the Wye. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; valued at £10 8s., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £60; gross income £74; in the patronage and peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Hereford. Near the village is the site of a Roman encampment. Pop., in 1801, 117; in 1831, 153. Houses 33. Acres 620. A. P. £768. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

BROCKHAMPTON. See NEWINGTON.

BROCKHOLES. See GRIMSARGH with BROCKHOLES.

BROCKLEBANK AND STONERAISE, a township in the parish of Westward, ward of Allerdale, below Derwent, county of Cumberland; 4½ miles south-east of Wigton. It is situated in a hilly and woody district bounded by Catland and Warnell fells. Pop., in 1801, 434; in 1831, 603. Houses 105. Other returns with the parish.

BROCKLESBY. See LIMBER (LITTLE), with BROCKLESBY.

BROCKLEY, a hamlet, partly in the parish of St. Paul, Deptford, and partly in that of Lewisham, hund. of Blackheath and lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, county of Kent; 6½ miles south-east of St. Paul's cathedral, London. "Here was a monastery of the Premostratensian order, founded about the latter end of King Henry II., or beginning of the reign of King Richard I., by Julian, countess of —, to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary: but the religious were, in King John's time, removed with the canons of Ottenham to the abbey of Beigham." Tanner's Not. Mon.

BROCKLEY, a parish in the hund. of Chewton, union of Bedminster, county of Somerset; 9 miles north by east of Auxbridge, intersected by the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £9 18s. 4d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £128. Patron, in 1835, J. H. S. Pigott, Esq. There is a boarding school in this parish. This parish, with that of Kingston-Seymour, forms a detached portion of the hundred, being locally situated in that of Hartcliff with Bedminster. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 171. Houses 16. Acres 910. A. P. £1,162. Poor rates, in 1837, £24.

BROCKLEY, a parish in the hund. and union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 6½ miles south-south-west of Bury St. Edmund's. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £10 4s. 2d.; gross income £343. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. D. Sprigge. This parish possesses two daily schools, one of which was endowed in 1721, by Thomas Sparke, with a rent-charge of £8. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £43 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 253; in 1831, 319. Houses 44. Acres 1,080. A. P. £1,450. Poor rates, in 1837, £229.

BROCKSFIELD, a township in the parish of Embleton, southern division of Bambrough ward, county of Northumberland; 2½ miles north-north-east of Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 41; in 1831, 29. Houses 6. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £350. Poor rates, in 1837, £7.

BROCKTHROP, or BROOKTHROP, a parish in the hund. of Dudstone and King's-Barton, union of Wheatenhurst, county of Gloucester; 3 miles north-west of Painswick, in the vicinity of the Cheltenham and Great Western railroad union. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £7 17s. 6d., rated in the parliamentary returns at £121 7s.; gross income £144; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Gloucester and Bristol. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 193. Houses 29. Acres 1,100. A. P. £1,978. Poor rates, in 1837, £91.

BROCKTON, a township in the parish of Baswick, eastern division of the hund. of Cuttlesstone, county of Stafford; 3½ miles south-east of Stafford, in the vicinity of the Stafford and Worcester canal. There are here two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £6 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 232. Houses 49. Acres 1,990. A. P. £1,093. Poor rates, in 1837, £31.

BROCKWORTH, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Dudstone and King's-Barton, county of Gloucester; 4 miles east-south-east of Gloucester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £6 3s. 4d.; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, J. Watts, Esq. There are two daily schools here. This parish is crossed by the Roman Ermin-street. Pop., in 1801, 350; in 1831, 390. Houses 87. Acres 2,360. A. P. £2,062. Poor rates, in 1837, £130.

BRODSWORTH, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Doncaster, west riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles north-west by west of Doncaster, and 4½ east of the York and North Midland railway. It comprises the townships of Brodsworth with Pickburn and Scauby. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of York; valued at £6 6s. 10¹/₂d.; gross income £369; in the patronage of the archbishop of York. The great and small tithes, &c., the property of the dean and chapter of York and the vicar, were commuted in 1815. Here are the large estate and mansion-house formerly belonging to the earl of Kinnoul, from whom they were purchased by the late Peter Thelluson, Esq., and vested in trustees, on purpose that an accumulation may take place, which, within the time fixed, will amount to several millions. If at the end of that period a male heir be in existence, he is to inherit the whole; but if not, the sum is to be applied to liquidating the national debt. Here is a school for girls, in which 6 children receive gratuitous instruction, from a small endowment by Mrs. Thelluson. The Brodsworth estate is charged with the payment of £10 per annum to a free school, founded in 1696, by D'Arcy Wentworth, for ten boys. There are also a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 302; in 1831, 447. Houses 78. Acres 3,170. A. P. £1,784. Poor rates, in 1837, £230.

BROGDEN, or BROCKDEN, a township in the parish of Barnoldswick, eastern division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewcross, west riding of Yorkshire; 9 miles west-south-west of Skipton, in the vicinity of the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Pop., in 1801, 189; in 1831, 229. Houses 38. Acres 1,670. Poor rates, in 1837, £124.

BROKENBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. and union of Malmesbury, county of Wilts; 2 miles north-west of Malmesbury. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Westport. There are in this parish a daily school, endowed by Mr. Hodges with £2 per annum, and two Sunday schools. Under the reform act this parish is comprised within the boundaries of the borough of Malmesbury. Pop., in 1801, 211; in 1831, 283. Houses 58. Acres 2,590. A. P. £3,786. Poor rates, in 1837, £155.

BROKENHEUGH, a hamlet in the parish of Warden, ward of Tindale, county of Northumberland; 6 miles north by west of Hexham, in the immediate vicinity of the Newcastle and Carlisle railway. Pop., in 1811, 280; in 1831, 171. Houses 30. Other returns with the parish.

BROMBLOW. See WORTHEN.

BROMBOROUGH, a parish and township in the hund. and union of Wirral, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles north-east of Great Neston, intersected by the Chester and Birkenhead railway. It comprises the townships of Bromborough or Bromborrow, and Brimstage, the former in the higher, the latter in the lower division of the hundred. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £5 11s. 8d., rated in the parliamentary returns at £29; gross income £51; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Chester. There is a Sunday school here; and about 20 children attend a daily school at Eastham, with which this parish is in connection. Pop., in 1801, 277; in 1831, 449. Houses 81. Acres 2,250. A. P. £2,345. Poor rates, in 1837, £82.

BROMBY, a township in the parish of Frodingham, eastern division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; 7 miles west-north-west of Glandford-Brigg. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 115. Houses 25. Acreage with the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £89.

BROMEOLME, a hamlet in the parish of Bacton, hund. of Tunstead, county of Norfolk; 4¹/₂ miles north-east of North Walsham. "William de Glanville built here, A. D. 1113, a priory for Cluniac monks from Castle acre, to which this house was for some time subordinate. It was dedicated to St. Andrew, consisted of seven or eight monks, and was endowed, 26th Henry VIII., with £144 19s. The site was granted, 37th Henry VIII., to Thomas Wodehouse." Tanner's Not. Mon. The monks received a grant for a weekly market and annual fair, from Henry III.

BROMESWELL, a parish in the hund. of Wilford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 2¹/₂ miles north-east of Woodbridge, on the river Deben. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £4 15s. 7¹/₂d.; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Bristol. There are three daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 178. Houses 37. Acres 3,060. A. P. £887. Poor rates, in 1837, £158.

BROMFIELD, BROOMFIELD, or BAUN'S-FIELD, a parish, partly in the ward of Cumberland and partly in that of Allerdale below Derwent, union of Wigton, county of Cumberland; 6 miles west by south of Wigton, in the vicinity of the Carlisle railroad. The former portion comprehends the townships of Bleucogo and Dundraw, and the latter the chapelry of Allonby, and the townships of Bromfield with Crookdale and Scales, Langrigg with Mealrigg, and West Newton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; valued at £22; gross income £270; in the patronage of the bishop of Carlisle. Here is a grammar-school, free for the children of all persons resident in the parish. It was founded in 1612, by Richard Osmotherly, mercer in London, who endowed it with £10 per annum. The endowment has been subsequently increased, chiefly by donations from the family of Thomlinson, and the income now amounts to £40 per annum. There are also seven daily schools, one of which is endowed, and three Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 1,586; in 1831, 2,342. Houses 456. Acres 12,850. A. P. £17,203. Poor rates, in 1837, £745. Pop. of the township of Bromfield, with Crookdale and Scales, in 1801, 297; in 1831, 405. Houses 61. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,686. Poor rates, in 1837, £160.

BROMFIELD HUNDRED, in the county of Denbigh, North Wales. Houses 5,281. Pop., in 1831, 26,459. Coal, lime, and iron-ore are found here, and the rivers Allen and Dee water the district.

BROMFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Munslow, union of Ludlow, county of Salop; 2¹/₂ miles north-west by west of Ludlow. It comprises the chapelry of Halford, and the townships of Bromfield and Dinehope. Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Halford annexed, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; valued at £6; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, the honourable R. H. Clive. This parish possesses a day and Sunday school, endowed with £100 three per cent. consols. The church was formerly part of the old monastery. "Here was, in the time of Henry I., a little college of prebendaries or secular canons, who, in the year 1159, turned Benedictine monks, and yielded up their church and all their lands to the abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester, whereupon were placed a prior and monks here, who continued to the dissolution. It was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and valued in one place at £45 11s. 8d. per annum, and in my MS. Valor and Stevens, vol. I. p. 32, at £78 19s. 4d. It was granted to Charles Fox, 4th and 5th Philip and Mary." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 511; in 1831, 630. Houses 132. Acres 9,330. A. P. £6,035. Poor rates, in 1837, £625. Pop. of the township, in 1821, 540; in 1831, 517. Houses 107. Acreage with the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £594.

BROMFLEET, a township in the parish of South

Cave, partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, east riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-west of South Cave, intersected by the Hull and Selby railway, which is carried across the Market-Weighton canal, in this neighbourhood, by a bridge with a cast-iron span of 70 feet. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 190. Houses 37. Acres 1,220. A. P. £2,277. Poor rates, in 1837, £85.

BROMHALL, or BROMEHAL, a hamlet in the parish of Sunninghill, hund. of Cookham, county of Berks. "Here was a small Benedictine nunnery, dedicated to St. Margaret, founded before the first year of King John. But by inquisition, taken 13th Henry VIII., it was found that Joan Rawlins, late prioress, having resigned, the only two nuns belonging to this house had abandoned it (in 1522), upon which the priory with the lands belonging thereunto were judged to be escheated to the crown, from whence it was granted, in the next year, by the interest and procurement of Bishop Fisher, to St. John's college in Cambridge, which yet enjoys the same." Tanner's Not. Mon.

BROMHALL, a township in the parish of Wrenbury, hund. of Nantwich, co.-palatine of Chester; 3½ miles south-west by south of Nantwich, in the vicinity of the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction canal. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 140; in 1831, 181. Houses 28. Acres 1,130. A. P. £1,233. Poor rates, in 1837, £180.

BROMHAM, a parish in the hund. of Willey, union of Bedford, county of Bedford; 4 miles west-north-west of Bedford, intersected by the river Ouse, over which there is a bridge here. Living, a vicarage, with that of Oakley annexed, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £8; gross income £339; in the patronage of Eton college. The church contains monuments of the families of Trevor and Dyne. There are a day and Sunday school in this parish; and a mineral spring. Pop., in 1801, 297; in 1831, 334. Houses 61. Acres 1,910. A. P. £1,996. Poor rates, in 1837, £190.

BROMHAM, a parish in the hund. of Potterne and Cannings, union of Devizes, county of Wilts; 3½ miles north-west of Devizes, in the neighbourhood of the Kennet and Avon canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £12 16s.; gross income £700. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Dr. Starkey. The church contains several monuments to members of the Bayntun family, who have possessed the manor ever since the reign of Henry VI. The Baptists have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1829. There are four daily and four Sunday schools in this parish; and also alms-houses for six poor persons, founded in 1614, and endowed with £20 per annum by Sir Henry Bayntun. Pop., in 1801, 1,154; in 1831, 1,556. Houses 303. Acres 3,300. A. P. £5,549. Poor rates, in 1837, £956.

BROMLEY, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Bromley and Beckenham, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; 10 miles south-east of London, in the vicinity of the Croydon railroad. It stands on the north side of the river Ravensbourne, and consists chiefly of a long street of well-built houses. The bishops of Rochester have long had their palace in the immediate vicinity, but the present building—which is a plain brick edifice—was erected by Bishop Thomas in 1777. In the grounds is a well, similar in properties to the mineral wells of Tunbridge. The town is regulated by constables and headboroughs chosen at the court-leet of the lord of the manor, and the petty-sessions for the Bromley division are held by the county-magistrates here, and at Farnborough and Footscray. Bromley is a polling-place for the election of members for the western division of the county. A market is held every Thursday. Fairs for cattle, horses, sheep, and hogs, are held on February 14th, and August 5th.—Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, now in the dio. of Canterbury; valued at £39 12s., rated in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £160. The church is a spacious Gothic structure, with an embattled tower, and contains the monuments of several bishops of Rochester. The Methodists and Independents have places of worship here.—Here is a charitable establishment called Bromley college, for the residence and maintenance of widows of clergymen of the established church, under the direction of the archbishop of Canterbury, and thirteen other trustees. The college is a handsome pile of building, containing a chapel, with apartments for 40 widows, each of whom receives £38 yearly, with an allowance of coal and candles. This institution was originally founded in 1666, by John Warner, bishop of Rochester, for 20 widows, and a chaplain. Subsequent benefactions have extended and enriched the college. There are two day and Sunday National schools in this parish, one of which is endowed with the interest of £1,400 for clothing and educating 30 children. Pop., in 1801, 2,700; in 1831, 4,002. Houses 669. Acres 4,630. A. P. £14,798. Poor rates, in 1837, £652.—The Bromley poor-law union comprehends 16 parishes, embracing an area of 62 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 14,413. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £8,101. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,764.

BROMLEY, a township in the parish of Eccleshall, northern division of the hund. of Pirehill, county of Stafford; about 8 miles north-west of Stafford. Pop., in 1811, 32; in 1831, 36. Houses 4. Acres 1,080.

BROMLEY, a township in the parish of Bywell-St.-Peter's, eastern division of the ward of Tindale, county of Northumberland; 4 miles south-east of Corbridge, in the immediate vicinity of the Newcastle and Carlisle railway. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 345. Houses 56. Other returns with the parish.

BROMLEY-ABBOTTS, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the southern division of the hund. of Pirehill, union of Uttoxeter, county of Stafford; 129 miles north-west of London, and 12 east of Stafford. It contains the liberty of Bagot's-Bromley, and the township of Bromley-Hurst. The town consists chiefly of a long street, containing some good houses, situated on the road from Lichfield to Uttoxeter, on the banks of a rivulet which falls into the Blyth. The first affix to the name was derived from the circumstance of its having belonged to an abbey founded at Blythbury for Benedictine monks, by Hugh Malveysin, in the reign of Henry I., or Stephen. On the dissolution of monasteries, this possession was granted to the Bagot family. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £5 1s. 8d., rated in the parliamentary returns at £145; gross income £187. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Anglesey. The church is an ancient structure, presenting a combination of various styles of architecture. There is an Independent chapel here. Tuesday is market-day. Fairs are held on the Tuesday before Mid-lent Sunday, May 22d, and September 4th, for horses and horned cattle. The lord of the manor holds his annual courts leet and baron here; and it is one of the polling-places for the members for the northern division of Stafford. There is a free-grammar school here, in which 12 boys receive gratuitous instruction. It was founded in 1606, by Richard Clarke, a native of Bromley, who bequeathed £400 for the purpose of endowing it. With this sum an estate of 150 acres of land was purchased, about two centuries ago, and let on a lease of 999 years. There are also five daily and two Sunday schools; and an hospital for six aged men and a matron, founded and endowed by Lambard and Charles Bagot, each of the inmates of which receives £10 annually. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £108 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 808; in 1831, 1,621. Houses 332. Acres 8,360. A. P. £9,634. Poor rates, in 1837, £438.

BROMLEY (BAGOT'S), a liberty in the above parish of Abbot's-Bromley; 6 miles north-north-east of Rugeley. This was anciently the domain of the family of Bagot, the site of whose mansion is marked by a pillar. In the park is a chalybeate spring.

BROMLEY (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Tendring, county of Essex; 4½ miles south-south-west of Mayning-tree, intersected by the Colchester and Harwich railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £16 16s. 0½d.; gross income £698. Patron, in 1835, — Graham, Esq. This parish sends four scholars as candidates for two exhibitions in St. John's college, Cambridge. It contains a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 492; in 1831, 697. Houses 94. Acres 3,050. A. P. £4,685. Poor rates, in 1837, £294.

BROMLEY-HURST. See BROMLEY-ABBOTT'S.

BROMLEY (KING'S), a parish in the northern division of the hund. of Offlow, union of Lichfield, county of Stafford; 5 miles north of Lichfield. Living, a perpetual curacy; valued at £35; gross income £80; in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter, and patronage of the prebendary of Lichfield cathedral. There are here a daily school, and two day and Sunday schools, one of which is endowed with an estate of the annual value of 105; and also endowed alma-house for seven poor widows. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £60 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 454; in 1831, 629. Houses 130. Acres 3,370. A. P. £5,356. Poor rates, in 1837, £309.

BROMLEY (ST. LEONARD'S), a parish in the Tower division of the hund. of Ossulstone, union of Poplar, county of Middlesex; 3½ miles east-north-east of St. Paul's, London, intersected by the Eastern Counties railway. Its name is derived from "a Benedictine nunnery, dedicated to St. Leonard, and founded by William, bishop of London, in the time of William the Conqueror. Herein were a prioress and nine nuns, whose revenues were rated, 26th Henry VIII., at £121 16s. The site was granted, 30th Henry VIII., to John Mewtas, and 32nd Henry VIII., to Sir Ralph Sadler."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The church of this nunnery is still used as the parish-church. Living, a perpetual curacy and donative in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, not in charge; valued in the parliamentary returns at £108; gross income £190. Patron, in 1835, John Walter, Esq. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. The school at Stratford-le-Bow receives 17 children belonging to this parish for gratuitous instruction. It was founded in 1617, by Sir John Jolles, who also founded here eight alms-houses, and placed the whole under the direction of the Drapers' company. There are besides three daily schools, and a Sunday school endowed with £1,400 three per cents. Other charities connected with the parish produce £34 18s. per annum. Pop., in 1801,

1,684; in 1831, 4,846. Houses 888. Acres 620. A. P. £17,886. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,337.

BROMLEY (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Tendring, county of Essex; 3¼ miles south-south-west of Manningtree, intersected by the Colchester and Harwich railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £8; gross income £493; in the patronage of Wadham college, Oxford. There are in this parish two daily schools, and a Sunday school endowed with £3 per annum. In 1809 Elizabeth Warren bequeathed the sum of £200 to the poor of this parish, the interest of which is expended in the purchase of great-coats and gowns. Pop., in 1801, 295; in 1831, 883. Houses 48. Acres 2,260. A. P. £2,719. Poor rates, in 1837, £169.—The first large establishment for calico-printing in England was at Bromley-hall.

BROMPTON, a hamlet in the parish of Gillingham, hund. of Chatham and Gillingham, late of Aylesford, county of Kent; 1 mile north-east of Chatham. It stands on the brow of a hill, and is inhabited chiefly by persons connected with the dock-yards. The Roman Catholics have a chapel here, with a day school attached, supported by subscription, in which upwards of 100 children are instructed. Here are extensive barracks belonging to the East India company, and a fine naval hospital. It is included within the fortifications called the Lines. A fair is held on May 29th. Pop. returned with the parish.

BROMPTON, a hamlet in the parish of Kensington, Kensington division of the hund. of Ossulstone, county of Middlesex; 1 mile south-west by west of Hyde-Park corner. A new district church was erected here in 1828, the living of which is a perpetual curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Kensington. The Independents have a place of worship here; and a Baptist church was formed in 1838. Returns with the parish.

BROMPTON WITH RISTON, a township in the parish of Church-Stoke, hund. of Chirbury, county of Salop; 6 miles north-west by west of Bishop's-castle. Pop., in 1811, 193; in 1821, 206. Houses 34. Acres 1,560. A. P. £1,771. Poor rates, in 1837, £128.

BROMPTON, a chapelry in the parish of North-allerton, wapentake of Allertonshire, north riding of Yorkshire; 1½ mile north-north-east of Northallerton, in the vicinity of the Great North of England railway. Living, a curacy not in charge, a peculiar of York, and subordinate to the vicarage of Northallerton. Besides the church here are two chapels belonging to the Wesleyan and the Primitive Methodists. There are six daily schools in this chapelry, two of which have an endowment of £10 per annum each. The inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of linen, woollen trowsers, and fancy goods. Here is Standard-hill, so called from the memorable battle of the standard, in which the Scots were defeated, fought here in 1138. Pop., in 1801, 994; in 1831, 1,510. Houses 301. Acres 3,490. A. P. £4,993. Poor rates, in 1837, £635.

BROMPTON, a parish in Pickering lythe, union of Scarborough, north riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles south-west by west of Scarborough. It comprises the townships of Brompton, Sawdon, Snainton, and Troutsdale. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Snainton, in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; valued at £12; gross income £103. Patron, in 1835, Sir G. Cayley, Bart. The church is one of the most beautiful and capacious village-churches in Yorkshire. All tithes of Brompton, Ebberston, and Snainton townships, the property, or the clerical rector and curates, were commuted in 1768. There are five daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. Brompton is said to have been the site of a palace of the Northumbrian kings. It is also supposed to be the place which gave name to, and probably the birth-place of John de Brompton, a monk of the Benedictine abbey of Whitby, who compiled an elaborate chronicle of the early periods of English history. In the vicinity, on an eminence termed Castle-hill, are the ruins of an ancient fortress. Petty-sessions for part of the eastern portion of the wapentake of Pickering lythe are held here. Pop., in 1801, 993; in 1831, 1,338. Houses 267. Acres 10,180. A. P. £8,815. Poor rates, in 1837, £419. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 370; in 1831, 496. Houses 106. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £4,994. Poor rates, in 1837, £126.

BROMPTON-BIERLOW, or BIERLEY, a township in the parish of Wath-upon-Deane, upper division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north by west of Rotherham, in the vicinity of the Dearne and Dove canal, and the York and North Midland railroad. Here is a school, conducted on the plan of Dr. Bell, the endowment of which is derived from an estate bequeathed in 1711, by George Ellis, and from a bequest of £300 by John Higson, in 1814. There are also three daily schools, a day and boarding, and a Sunday school. In the vicinity are some large iron furnaces. Pop., in 1801, 860; in 1831, 1,462. Houses 271. Acres 3,150. A. P. £1,559. Poor rates, in 1837, £599.

BROMPTON-PATRICK, a parish partly in the eastern and partly in the western division of the wapentake of Hang, union of Leyburn, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-west by west of Bedale. It contains the townships of Brompton-Patrick, Newton-le-Willows, part of Arrowthorne, and part of Hunton. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £22; gross income £96; in the patronage of the bishop of Ripon. There are here five daily schools, one of which is endowed with lands, cottages, and the interest of money to the amount of £21 10s. 6d. per annum. Pop., in 1811, 906; in 1831, 1,051. Houses 230. Acres 5,560. A. P. £3,689. Poor rates, in 1837, £296. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 163; in 1831, 188. Houses 42. Acres 1,280. A. P. £1,901. Poor rates, in 1837, £24.

BROMPTON (POTTER'S). See GANTON WITH BROMPTON.

BROMPTON-RALPH, a parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemanners, union of Williton, county of Somerset; 3 miles north of Wiveliscombe. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £17 10s. 5d.; gross income £417. Patrons, in 1835, the Rev. T. S. Escott and General Blommart. There is a day and Sunday school here. In this parish are traces of an encampment, ascribed to the Romans. Pop., in 1801, 406; in 1831, 424. Houses 76. Acres 2,800. A. P. £3,422. Poor rates, in 1837, £205.

BROMPTON-REGIS, a parish, formerly constituting a hund. of itself, but now included in the hund. of Williton and Freemanners, union of Dulverton, county of Somerset; 3½ miles north-east of Dulverton, on the eastern bank of the river Exe. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £12 5s. 7½d.; gross income £465; in the patronage of Emanuel college, Cambridge. The church contains a wooden screen curiously carved, separating the nave and chancel. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. This parish has the right of holding a weekly market and two annual fairs. In the vicinity are the remains of Barlinch priory, now occupied as a private mansion: see BARLINCH. Stone for building is abundant here. Pop., in 1801, 702; in 1831, 802. Houses 149. Acres 8,810. A. P. £5,379. Poor rates, in 1837, £566.

BROMPTON-UPON-SWALE, a township in the parish of Easby, eastern division of the wapentake of Gilling, north riding of Yorkshire; 1½ mile north-west of Catterick. There are two daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 401; in 1831, 455. Houses 99. Acres 1,710. A. P. £2,645. Poor rates, in 1837, £111.

BROMSBERROW, a parish in the hund. of Botloe, union of Newent, county of Gloucester; 3½ miles east-south-east of Ledbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £7 15s.; gross income £356. Patron, in 1835, Earl Beauchamp. This parish possesses two daily schools. Charities connected with it produce £6 16s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 337. Houses 54. Acres 1760. A. P. £2,599. Poor rates, in 1837, £255.

BROMSGROVE, or BROOMSGROVE, a market-town and parish in the upper division of the hund. of Halfshire, division of Droitwich, union of Bromsgrove, county of Worcester; 6½ miles north-north-east of Droitwich; 1½ mile from the Birmingham and Gloucester railway, and in the line of the Worcester and Birmingham canal. Till the reign of Henry III. this was a royal demesne, and in the 23^d of Edward I. returned members to parliament; but it appears to have soon after relinquished the privilege. It is a large and populous town, consisting chiefly of one long street, on the western bank of the river Salwarp. Leland's description of this place is still applicable:—"All, in a manner of one street, very large, standing in a plain-ground. The town standeth something by clothinge. The heart of the towne is meetly well-paved." It extends about a mile along the turnpike road, and contains many good modern houses, with some very ancient ones. The principal trade is nail-making. Tuesday is market-day, and fairs for linen, cheese, and horses are held on June 24th, and Oct. 1st. There is a branch of the Stourbridge and Kidderminster bank here. The town was formerly incorporated, and governed by a bailiff, recorder, aldermen, and other officers; it is now under the jurisdiction of the county-magistrates, who hold petty-sessions for the division of Droitwich, established in December, 1833, in the townhall, a neat and commodious structure, under which is a market-place. Living, a vicarage, to which is annexed the perpetual curacy of King's Norton, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £41 8s. 1½d.; gross income £1,419; nett income £1,205; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Worcester. The church is a structure of great beauty and antiquity, with a tower 189 feet in height. The Independents have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1693. There is also a Baptist church formed in 1652, and a Wesleyan Methodist church in 1833. The free grammar-school here was founded by Edward VI. The endowment was originally £7 per annum; but Sir Thomas Cookes, the founder of Worcester college in Oxford, added £50 per annum, and founded for the benefit of scholars of this and four other schools in the county, six scholarships of £50 per annum, and as many fellowships of £150 per annum in Worcester college. The number of scholars on the foundation is twelve, who receive clothing and education, and when dismissed are apprenticed at the expense of the fund. In 1828 Mrs. Wattell gifted to this school the sum of £200; the interest is given away in medals, for which an appropriate die has been struck. There are in this parish, besides, 14 daily schools and 5 Sunday schools, one of which, including 686 scholars, is endowed. Recently a new school-house has been erected for the accommodation of the pupils attending it, at an expense of upwards of £1,000. Charities connected with this parish produce about £207 per annum.—In the vicinity of the town is a district called Bromsgrove-Lickey, part of which is now enclosed and cultivated, but which was formerly a barren range of hills. On these hills are the sources of several streams, some of which descend to the Severn, and others join the Trent.—In a farm-house at Dodsworth are part of the remains of an ancient priory of Premonstratensian canons, founded in the reign of Henry I. Pop., in 1801, 5,898; in 1831, 8,612. Houses 1,756. Acres 11,230. A. P. £26,661. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,961.—The Bromsgrove poor-law union comprehends 13 parishes, embracing an area of 71 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 19,843. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,333. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,861.

BROMWICH-CASTLE, a chapelry in the parish of Aston, Birmingham division of the hund. of Hemlingford, county of Warwick; 4 miles west by north of Coleshill, in the vicinity of the Birmingham and Derby railway, and the Birmingham and Fazely canal. Living, a curacy, not in charge, a donative, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; of the yearly value of £362. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Bradford. This place is supposed by Dugdale to have taken its name from a castle which once stood here. A mount called the Castle-hill yet remains. Implements of war have been found, and there exist vestiges of Roman intrenchments in this chapelry. Pop. returned with that of the parish.

BROMWICH (LITTLE). See ASTON, Warwick.

BROMWICH (WEST), a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Offlow, union of West Bromwich, county of Stafford; 2 miles south-east of Wednesbury, intersected by the Grand Junction railway and the Birmingham canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £22; gross income £566. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Dartmouth.—Christ-church is a curacy, of the yearly value of £330; in the patronage of the Earl of Dartmouth and trustees. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriators, were commuted in 1801. The Independents have two chapels here, one of them a very handsome structure in the Doric style, with 1,000 sittings, and the Wesleyan Methodists one; the latter church was formed in 1760. There is also a Roman Catholic chapel. This parish possesses 14 daily, 7 Sunday, 2 day and Sunday National, and 2 infant schools. Charities connected with it produce £14 10s. per annum. There is a branch of the Dudley and West Bromwich bank here. Coal and ironstone are found here. Pop., in 1801, 5,687; in 1831, 15,327. Houses 2,860. Acres 5,380. A. P. £13,245. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,483.—The West Bromwich poor-law union comprehends six parishes, embracing an area of 27 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 34,616. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,584. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,194.

BROMYARD, a parish in the hund. of Broxash, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 12½ miles north-west of London, and 14 north-east of Hereford. It is situated on the river Frome, and comprises the market-town of Bromyard, the townships of Linton, Norton, and Winslow, and the chapelry of Brockhampton. The market-town is a small, irregularly built village, consisting chiefly of old wooden houses. The petty-sessions for the hundred of Broxash are held here by the county-magistrate. Tuesday is market-day, when there is a good supply of grain, butter, and cheese. Fairs for horned cattle, horses, and sheep, are held on the Thursday before March 25th, May 3d, Whit-Monday, Thursday before St. James' day, Thursday before October 29th, and July 25th. Much business is done at these fairs. There are branches of the National Provincial bank of England, and of the Herefordshire banking company here. Living, a sinecure rectory and a vicarage, in the archd. and dio. of Hereford. The rectory is divided into three portions, the first of which is valued at £5, and the other at £6; gross income of 1st portion £803; of 2d portion £70; of 3d portion £7; in the patronage of the bishop of Hereford. "Three canons, prebendaries, or portionists, in the church here," says Tanner, "occur as anciently as 530 Henry III., in the gift of the bishops of Hereford. Hence it was frequently styled a collegiate church or college, and as such was granted, 14th Elizabeth, to one William Jeames." Vicarage valued at £9 10s. 7½d.; gross income £556. Patrons, the 3 portionists. The church is ancient, and contains some curious monuments. An independent church was formed in 1696. Here are 4 daily schools. The grammar-school is endowed with £36 14s. 11½d. per ann. There are almshouses for 7 women; income, in 1824, £41. Pop., in 1801, 2,392; in 1831, 2,936. Houses 596. Acres 9,310; of which there were 600 in hops in 1837. A. P. £12,161. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,020.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Bromyard, by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £3,000, capable of accommodating 120 persons. The Bromyard poor-law union comprehends 33 parishes, embracing an area of 96 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 11,940. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £4,722. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,141.

BRONCASTELLAN, a township in the parish of Llanbadarn Fawr, hund. of Gneur-Glynn, county of Cardigan, South Wales; about 1½ mile south-east of Aberystwith, on the river Reidol. Pop., in 1801, 72; in 1831, 144. Houses 32. Poor rates in 1837, £25.

BRON-LLYS. See BRYN-LLYS.

BRON-Y-GATH. See WESTON-REYN, with BRON-Y-GATH.

BRONGWYN, a parish in the hund. of Troedyr, union of Newcastle in Emlyn, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 7 miles east-south-east of Cardigan. Pop., in 1801, 283; in 1831, 396. Houses 79. A. P. £938. Poor rates, in 1837, £102.

BROOK, a parish, partly in the hund. of Wye, and partly in that of Chart and Longbridge, lathe of Scray, union of East Ashford, county of Kent; 4 miles east by north of Ashford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; valued at £7 7s. 3d.; gross income £174; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Canterbury. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 175. Houses 29. Acres 540. A. P. £773. Poor rates, in 1837, £110.

BROOK, or GASPER, a hamlet in the parish of Stourton, division of Wincanton, hund. of Norton-Ferris, county of Somerset; 3½ miles west of Mere. There is a daily school in this hamlet. Pop., in 1801, 343; in 1831, 303. Houses 57. Acres 1,340. A. P. £1,160.

BROOK, a parish in the liberty of West Medina, isle of Wight division of Southampton; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Newport, on the coast. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; valued at £1 18s. 9d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Bowreman. Pop., in 1801, 83; in 1831, 125. Houses 21. Acres 750. A. P. £872. Poor rates, in 1837, £130.

BROOKE, a parish in the hund. of Clavering, but locally in the hund. of Henstead, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 7 miles south-east by south of Norwich. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £5; gross income £222; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Here is a Baptist chapel; the church was formed in 1833. This parish possesses a daily, a Sunday, and an infant school. Pop., in 1801, 502; in 1831, 736. Houses 132. Acres 2,060. A. P. £4,013. Poor rates, in 1837, £419.

BROOKE, a parish in the soke and union of Oakham, county of Rutland; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Oakham. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Oakham. There are a daily and Sunday school in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £17 5s. per annum. "A small priory of three or four canons regular of the order of St. Austin was founded here by Hugh Ferrers in the time of Richard I. It was subordinate to the monastery of Kenilworth in Warwickshire, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, and valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £43 13s. 4d. The site was granted, 28th Henry VIII., to Anthony Coope." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 95. Houses 23. Acres 1,560. A. P. £2,256. Poor rates, in 1837, £52.

BROOK-END, a hamlet in the parish of Shenley, hund. of Cottesloe, county of Buckingham; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Penny-Stratford, in the vicinity of the Grand Junction railroad. Pop., in 1801, 232; in 1831, 244. Houses 52. Acres 1,620. A. P. £1,817. Poor rates, in 1837, £141.

BROOKESBY, a parish in the eastern division of the hund. of Goscote, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; 6 miles west-south-west of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; valued at £5 12s. 6d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, G. Wyndham, Esq. Here was the family-mansion in which Villiers, first duke of Buckingham of that name, was born. Pop., in 1801, 43; in 1831, 10. Houses 2. Acres 640. A. P. £1,663. Poor rates, in 1837, £61.

BROOK-GREEN, a hamlet in the parish of Fulham, Kensington division of the hund. of Ossulstone, county of Middlesex; 3 miles west by south of London. There is a Roman Catholic chapel in this hamlet. Returns with the parish.

BROOKHAMPTON, a township in the parish of Holdgate, hund. of Munslow, county of Salop; 12 miles north-north-east of Ludlow. Pop., in 1821, 101; in 1831, 83. Houses 16. Acreage with the township of Holdgate.

BROOKHAMPTON. See NEWINGTON, Oxford.

BROOKHAMPTON. See OMBERSLEY.

BROOKLAND, a parish, partly in the liberty of Romney-marsh, and partly in the hund. of Aloes-bridge, lathe of Shepway, union of Romney-Marsh, county of Kent; 6 miles west by north of New Romney, in the vicinity of the Royal Military canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; valued at £17 12s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £136; gross income £115, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Canterbury. This parish possesses three daily schools. A fair is held on August 1st for pedlery. Pop., in 1801, 382; in 1831, 434. Houses 77. Acres 1,500. A. P., £4,335. Poor rates, in 1837, £302.

BROOKTHROP. See БРОКТРОП.

BROOK-STREET, a hamlet in the parish of South Weald, hund. of Chafford, county of Essex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west-south-west of Brentwood, intersected by the Eastern Counties railroad. "A free chapel, and an hospital of a master or warden, and divers poor people, lepers, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was established here before 20th Edward I. This spittle, with all the lands thereunto belonging, were granted, 7th Edward VI., to Sir Anthony Brown and Richard Weston." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop. returned with the parish.

BROOKS-WEIR, or БРОКВЭЙР, a village in the parishes of St. Briavell's, Huelsfield, and Wollastone, hund. of St. Briavell's, county of Gloucester; 5 miles north of Chepstow, on the eastern bank of the Wye. It is a place of some trade and activity. Vessels belonging to Bristol ascend the river to this place, for the purpose of receiving goods brought from Hereford and Monmouth in barges on the Wye. The tide seldom flows to any considerable height above Brooks-Weir, except during spring-tides.

BROOM, a hamlet in the parish of Southill, hund. of Wixamtree, county of Bedford; 2 miles south-west of Biggleswade. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 257. Houses 56. Other returns with the parish.

BROOM, a township in the parish of St. Oswald, city of Durham, middle division of Chester ward. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 93. Houses 19. Acres 1,450. A. P. £1,340. Poor rates, in 1837, £71.

BROOM, a parish to the southern division of the hund. of Seisdon, union of Kidderminster, county of Stafford, but detached and situated in the lower division of the hund. of Halfshire, county of Worcester, to which county it has recently been annexed by the new boundary act; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Stour-bridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; valued at £5 3s. 4d.; gross income £345. Patron, in 1835, Sir E. D. Scott, Bart. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1779. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 110. Houses 20. Acres 550. A. P. £2,016. Poor rates, in 1837, £61.

BROOME, or БРОМЕ, a parish in the hund. of Loddon, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 2 miles north-north-east of Bungay. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £221. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. F. Middleton, Bart. There are two daily schools in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £68 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 298; in 1831, 504. Houses 102. Acres 1,470. A. P. £2,110. Poor rates, in 1837, £146.

BROOME, a parish in the hund. and union of Hartismere, county of Suffolk; 2 miles north of Eye, intersected by the Eastern Counties railway. Living, a discharged rectory, consolidated with Oakley, Great and Little, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £10 0s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £562. Patron, in 1835, Sir E. Kerrison, Bart. The church contains some monuments to members of the family of Cornwallis. Charities connected with the parish produce £18 per annum. The Marquess Cornwallis takes the title of Viscount Brome from this place. Pop., in 1801, 278; in 1831, 377. Houses 41. Acres 1,630. A. P. £1,743. Poor rates, in 1837, £164.

BROOMFIELD, a parish in the hund. and union of Chelmsford, county of Essex; 2 miles north of Chelmsford, in the vicinity of the Eastern Counties railway. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £7 13s. 4d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £161; in the patronage of the bishop of Rochester. The church is a spacious building, with a large round tower. There are here four daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 467; in 1831, 747. Houses 146. Acres 1,980. A. P. £4,271. Poor rates, in 1837, £404.

BROOMFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Eyborne, lathe of Aylesford, union of Hollingbourn, county of Kent; 6 miles east-south-east of Maidstone. Living, a perpetual curacy, annexed to that of Leeds. Here is an extensive rabbit-warren in King's Wood. A fair is held on Whit-Monday. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 129. Houses 25. Acres 1,000. A. P. £1,652. Poor rates, in 1837, £69.

BROOMFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Andersfield, division and union of Bridgewater, county of Somerset; 5 miles north of Taunton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £25, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £71 10s.; gross income £78. Patron, in 1835, Colonel Hamilton. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Charities connected with it produce about £26 per annum. A fair is held on November 13th for cattle, hats, and pewter-goods. Pop., in 1801, 369; in 1831, 503. Houses 91. Acres 4,050. A. P. £4,025. Poor rates, in 1837, £377.

BROOMHAUGH, a township in the parish of Bywell-St.-Andrew, eastern division of the ward of Tindale, county of Northumberland; 7½ miles east-south-east of Hexham, intersected by the Newcastle and Carlisle railway. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 115. Houses 24. Other returns with the parish.

BROOMHILL, a parish in the liberty of Romney-Marsh, lathe of Shepway, union of Rye, county of Kent; 4 miles east by south of Rye. It is now a member of the town and port of New Romney. Pop., in 1811, 18; in 1831, 80. Houses 7. Acres 3,580. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

BROOMHOPE WITH BUTELAND. See BINTLEY, Northumberland.

BROOMPARK, a township in the parish of Edlingham, Northumberland; 5½ miles west by south of Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 64; in 1831, 53. Houses 12. Poor rates, in 1837, £29.

BROOMRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of Ford, Northumberland; 6 miles north by west of Wooler. This is supposed by Camden to have been Brunan-burch, the scene of an encounter between Athelstan and the combined forces of Scotland and Denmark, in 928. At Haltwell sweire, about half-a-mile to the south, Earl Bothwell defeated Sir Henry Percy in 1558.

BROSELEY, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Wenlock, union of Madeley, Salop; 146 miles north-west of London, 13 south-east of Shrewsbury, and 19 from Wolverhampton station, on the Manchester and Birmingham railway. It touches the western bank of the Severn, opposite Madeley, and extends upwards from it a distance of 2 miles, in an irregularly built street, crossed at intervals by small lanes. It stands in the middle of an extensive mining district, in which coal and ironstone are wrought, and is inhabited chiefly by miners. There are extensive iron-foundries and furnaces here; and the town and neighbourhood is famous for the manufacture of fire-bricks, tiles, and tobacco-pipes, which are exported to all parts of the kingdom. The pipe-manufacture employs about 40 hands, and consumes annually about 45 tons of a fine white clay, which is procured from Barnstaple and Cornwall. The pipes are burnt the Dutch way, in a large kiln, usually containing 360 gross, or a small kiln of 130 gross. Here is held a court-of-requests, having jurisdiction in the parishes of Broseley, Benthall, Madeley, Barrow, Linley, Willey, Little Wenlock, and Dawley, with the extra-parochial district of Posnall. Wednesday is market-day; and fairs are held on the last Tuesday in April and 29th of October.—Living, a rectory with that of Linley, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; valued at £7 18s. 6d.; gross income £539. Patron, in 1835, Lord Forrester. The tower of the church is ancient, but the body of it has been rebuilt. The Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here; the first Baptist church was formed in 1749; the second in 1803; the Wesleyan Methodist in 1821. The Independent chapel was opened in 1841, at a cost of £700. This parish possesses 3 daily, 4 day and boarding, and 6 Sunday schools.—In this vicinity a spring of petroleum was discovered in 1711. See Scots Mag., 1748, p. 86.—Pop., in 1801, 4,832; in 1831, 4,299. Houses 1,012. Acres 1,550. A. P. £7,285. Poor rates, in 1837, £681.

BROTHERCROSS HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk, is bounded on the north by the German ocean; on the east by the hundred of North Greenhoe; on the south by the hundred of Gallow; and on the west by that of Smithdon. Area 18,720 acres. Houses 872. Pop., in 1831, 4,143.

BROTHERICK. See WARKWORTH.

BROTHERTOFT, a chapelry in the parish and wapentake of Kirton, parts of Holland, county of Lincoln; 4 miles west-north-west of Boston. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Kirton. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 102; in 1831, 123. Houses 22. Acres 900. A. P. £1,836. Poor rates, in 1837, £78.

BROTHERTON, a parish partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the lower division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-north-east of Pontefract, intersected by the York and North Midland railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £192; in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of York. Rectorial and vicarial tithes, the property of the dean and chapter of York and the vicar, were commuted in 1793. There is a place of worship for Independents here. There are in this parish seven daily schools, one of which is endowed with £5 per annum, and two Sunday schools. Charities connected with it produce £6 15s. per annum. The parish contains the townships of Brotherton, Byrome with Pool, and Sutton. Limestone of superior quality is found here. Near the church is a plot of ground, which the tenants are bound to keep surrounded with a stone wall and trench. It is said to have been the site of a house in which Margaret, the second wife of Edward I. was delivered of her son Thomas de Brotherton, on the 1st of June, 1300. Pop., in 1801, 1,115; in 1831, 1,623. Houses 348. Acres 2,120. A. P. £6,136. Poor rates, in 1837, £606. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 994; in 1831, 1,432. Houses 326. Acres 790. A. P. £3,817. Poor rates, in 1837, £469.

BROTTON, a parish in the eastern division of the liberty of Langbaugh, north riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-east of Guisborough. It comprehends the townships of Broton, Kilton, and Skinninggrove. Living, a curacy annexed to the perpetual curacy of Skelton. Pop., in 1801, 569; in 1831, 470. Houses

111. Acres 3,560. A. P. £4,396. Poor rates, in 1837, £330. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 373; in 1831, 327. Houses 80. Acres 1,800. A. P. £2,341. Poor rates, in 1837, £241.

BROUGH AND SHATTON, a hamlet in the parish of Hope, hund. of High Peake, county of Derby; 5 miles north-north-east of Tideswell. Some antiquaries suppose this place to have been the site of the Roman station Crococolana; others refer this station to Ancaster in Lincolnshire. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 78. Houses 18. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £1,101. Poor rates, in 1837, £53.

BROUGH-UNDER-STAINMORE, a parish in East ward, union of East ward, county of Westmoreland; 261 miles north-north-west of London, and 7½ east-south-east of Appleby, on the great road from London to Glasgow. It comprises the market-town of Brough, the chapelry of Stainmore, the townships of Brough-Sowerby, and Hilbeck, and part of that of Kaber. It was very early a place of importance; and a castle was erected here, which seems to have belonged to the family of Clifford. It is now in ruins, and a great part of the materials of which it was constructed have been carried away. The town consists chiefly of one long street. It stands on the Swindale beck, which flows into the Eden; and is divided into Church-Brough and Market-Brough. Lead and coal are wrought here, and many of the inhabitants are employed in the mines. Thursday is market-day, but it is not well attended, though no toll is charged on the admission of corn. A fair is held on the Thursday before Whitsunday, for horned cattle and sheep. There is a branch of the Darlington District joint-stock banking company here. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; valued at £8 18s. 9d.; gross income £525; in the patronage of the provost and fellows of Queen's college, Oxford. The church is an ancient structure. Here are also places of worship for Independents, Baptists, and Methodists; the Baptist church was formed in 1834.—"In the beginning of the 16th century, John Brunsell founded here, on a piece of ground called Gigharth, a chapel and hospital, with two beds for travellers and other poor people. The chapel was dedicated to the blessed Virgin and St. Gabriel; it had two chaplains, the one to celebrate divine service, the other to instruct the children of the place in grammar and singing. It was under the government of the abbot of Shapp for the time being. At the dissolution, a pension of £7 4s. 4d. out of its revenues was granted for the continuance of the grammar-school." Tanner's Not. Mon. There are here seven daily schools, two of which are endowed, and four Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce £18 10s. per annum. In the vicinity is a chalybeate spring. Some Roman coins and antiquities have been found here. In the forest of Stainmore was anciently the cross which marked the boundaries of England and Scotland, erected by William the Conqueror, and Malcolm of Scotland. On the eve of Epiphany there is an annual procession here, called 'the carrying of the Holling,' or Holy tree. The custom is peculiar to this place, nothing of the kind being known in any other part of the kingdom. Pop., in 1801, 1,487; in 1831, 1,882. Houses 333. Acres 22,650. A. P. £10,056. Poor rates, in 1837, £813. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 694; in 1831, 996. Houses 181. A. P. £2,590. Poor rates, in 1837, £409.

BROUGH, a township in the parish of Catterick, hund. of East Hang, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-east of Richmond. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 78. Houses 14. Acres 1,050. A. P. £1,867. Poor rates, in 1837, £54.

BROUGH. See ELLOUGHTON WITH BROUGH.

BROUGH-SOWERBY, a township in the parish of Brough, East ward, county of Westmoreland; 1½ mile south of Brough-under-Stainmore. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 155. Houses 31. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £1,551. Poor rates, in 1837, £57.

BROUGHALL. See WHITCHURCH, or BLANMINSTER, Salop.

BROUGHAM, a parish in West ward, union of West ward, county of Westmoreland; 2 miles south-east of Penrith, watered by the Eamont on the north, the Eden on the east, and the Lowther on the west. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; valued at £16 10s. 7½d.; gross income £320. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Thanet. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1776. Here was formerly a village of the same name, but no traces of it remain. The name is derived from the Saxon words Burg-ham, signifying 'castle-town,' this having been the site of the Roman station Brovoniacum. The station seems to have comprised an area of 140 paces in length, by 120 in breadth; some vestiges of the vallum and outworks yet remain.—Here are the remains of an ancient castle, of which the following account is extracted from 'The Pledge of Friendship,' for 1828.—"Brougham castle is a very ancient edifice, but the precise time when it was erected is a subject of mere conjecture. From the style of the architecture, and particularly of the keep, Grose pronounces it Roman. Some coins and urns have been found here, and the place has all the usual evidence of a Roman station. Others assert that Roger, Lord Clifford, son of Isabella de Veteripont, built the greater part of the castle, and placed over its inner door this inscription:—'This made Roger.' His grandson, Robert, built its eastern parts, where his arms and those of his wife were carved in stone. An inquisition, in 1403, found it and its demesne worth nothing, 'because it lieth altogether waste, by reason of the destruction of the country by the Scots.' The countess of Pembroke relates, that Henry, when Lord Clifford, 'with his father, Francis, earl of Cumberland, did magnificently entertain King James at Brougham castle, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th days of August, 1617, on his return from his last journey out of Scotland.' After this it became neglected and ruinous, until the years 1651 and 1652, when Lady Anne Clifford, countess-dowager of Pembroke, Dorset, and Montgomery, caused it to be repaired. The tower of Leagues, the Pagan tower, and a state-room called Greystoke-chamber, are frequently mentioned in her memoirs. After the death of the countess, it was suffered to run progressively to its present state of ruin. The side next the river is divided by three square towers; from thence, on either hand, a little wing falls back—the one leading to the gateway, the other connected with the outworks, which extend to a considerable distance along a plain of pasture land. The centre of the building is a lofty square tower; the shattered turrets which form the angles and the hanging galleries, are overgrown with shrubs. The lower apartment in the principal tower, into which you descend by several steps, still remains entire; being a square of 20 feet, covered with a vaulted roof of stone, consisting of eight arches of light and beautiful workmanship. From the construction of this cell, and its situation in the chief tower of the fortress, it is not probable that it was formed for a prison, but as the retreat of the chief persons of the household, in the time of siege and assault. All the other apartments are destroyed. The outer gateway is machicolated, and has the arms of Vaux (chigny, or, and gules) on its tower." Near the castle is a pillar surmounted with an obelisk, which the countess of Pembroke erected in 1616, to commemorate the last parting with her mother, the countess of Cumberland. The inscription also sets forth, that annually on the 2d of April, the sum of £4 shall be distributed to the poor of the parish.—In the vicinity, on a woody eminence on the east side of the Lowther, stands Brougham-hall, the seat of Lord Brougham and Vaux, recently lord-chancellor of England, which, from the richness, variety, and extent of the prospect from its fine terraces, is often called 'the Windsor of the North.' This property belonged at a very early period to the family of Brougham, but was divided and carried away into different families by the marriages of co-heiresses, until ultimately reunited in one individual, whose daughters sold it to John Brougham, Esq., a descendant of the original family. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 171. Houses 24. Acres 6,580. A. P. £3,225. Poor rates, in 1837, £85.

BROUGHTON. See BIERTON WITH BROUGHTON.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport-Pagnell, county of Buckingham; 3 miles south-south-east of Newport-Pagnell. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £10 9s. 7d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £93; gross income £116. Patron, in 1835, W. Praed, Esq. This parish possesses a daily school, endowed with £2 10s. per annum, a school held on Saturdays, in which poor girls are taught needle-work, and several lace schools. Charities connected with the parish produce £38 6s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 172. Houses 34. Acres 1,020. A. P. £1,988. Poor rates, in 1837, £107.

BROUGHTON, a township in the parish of Wrexham, hund. of Bromfield, county of Denbigh, North Wales; about 6 miles south-west of Holt. There are two daily schools, one of which is endowed, and two Sunday schools here. Pop., in 1801, 762; in 1831, 1,266. Houses 252. Poor rates, in 1837, £187.

BROUGHTON, a township in the parish of Hawarden, hund. of Mold, county of Flint; 2½ miles south-east of Hawarden. Here is an ancient mansion of the Richardson family, entirely constructed of wood. Pop., in 1821, 322; in 1831, 397. Houses 65. Other returns with the parish.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hund. of Hurstingstone, union of St. Ives, county of Huntingdon; 5 miles north-east by north of Huntingdon. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £21 13s. 9d.; gross income £204. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Johnston. All tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1794. There are here two daily schools. This parish was anciently the head of the barony of the abbots of Ramsay. Pop., in 1801, 319; in 1831, 411. Houses 55. Acres 2,950. A. P. £2,497. Poor rates, in 1837, £92.

BROUGHTON, a chapelry in the parish of Preston, hund. of Amounderness, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles north by west of Preston, in the vicinity of the Lancaster and Preston railway. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Manchester; valued at £34 8s., rated in the parliamentary returns at £90; gross income £106. Patron, in 1835, Sir P. Houghton, Bart. The chapel has been enlarged. There are here two daily schools, one of which is endowed with lands, and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 545; in 1831, 620. Houses

96. Acres 2,570. A. P. £4,526. Poor rates, in 1837, £202.

BROUGHTON, a township in the parish of Manchester, hund. of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 1½ mile north-north-west of Manchester. There are here four daily and three boarding schools. Pop., in 1801, 868; in 1831, 1,589. Houses 263. Acres 960. A. P. £5,082.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, union of Glandford-Brigg, county of Lincoln; 3 miles north-west of Glandford-Brigg. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £21; gross income £983; nett income £824. Patron, in 1835, E. A. Stephens. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. This is supposed to have been the site of a Roman station. In a farmhouse here is a door-way, the only relic of an ancient nunnery, in which, at the dissolution, there were a prioress and six nuns, having revenues valued at £20. It is said to have been founded in 1185, by William de Alta Ripa. Pop., in 1801, 729; in 1831, 915. Houses 187. Acres 7,880. A. P. £5,403. Poor rates, in 1837, £427.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hund. of Orlingbury, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 3 miles south-west of Kettering. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £21 9s. 7d.; gross income £420. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Buccleugh. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1786. This parish possesses three daily schools, and the privilege of sending children to a free school at Pitchley. Charities connected with Broughton produce about £38 per annum. Edward Bagshaw, a learned polemic of the seventeenth century, was a native of this parish. Pop., in 1801, 374; in 1831, 533. Houses 110. Acres 2,560. A. P. £2,291. Poor rates, in 1837, £260.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hund. of Bloxham, union of Banbury, county of Oxford; 2½ miles west-south-west of Banbury. It contains the hamlet of North Newington. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; valued at £18 16s. 0½d.; gross income £591. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. F. Wyatt. The church contains monuments to the lords Say and Sele. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1803. There are a daily school and two Sunday schools in this parish. Charities connected with it produce about £82 per annum. Here are the remains of a castle belonging to the family of Twistleton; it is surrounded by a deep moat, crossed by a stone-bridge of two arches. Pop., in 1801, 419; in 1831, 538. Houses 131. Acres 1,950. A. P. £4,858. Poor rates, in 1837, £317.

BROUGHTON, a parish within the liberties of the town of Shrewsbury, union of Wem, county of Salop; 7 miles north of Shrewsbury. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Chester; valued at £4, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £46; gross income £67. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. Hill, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 157. Houses 30. Acres 1,120. A. P. £1,557. Poor rates, in 1837, £114.

BROUGHTON, a parish in the hund. of Thorn-gate, union of Stockbridge, Andover division of the county of Southampton; 4½ miles west-south-west of Stockbridge. It contains the tythings of Frenchmoor and Pittleworth. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Bossington, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; valued at £37 10s.; gross income £824; nett income £748. Patron, in 1835, C. B. Wall, Esq. There are chapels here for Baptists and Independents; the Baptist church was formed in 1690. There are two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £68 17s. per annum, and two Sunday schools, in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £38 14s. per annum. The lord of the manor holds an annual court-leet, and a fair is held on the first Monday in July for toys. This is supposed to have been the site of the Roman station Brige, mentioned by Antoninus. Pop., in 1801, 585; in 1831, 897. Houses 186. Acres 4,500; the area of French-moor tything is included in West Tytherly, that of Pittleworth in Bossington. A. P. £1,660. Poor rates, in 1837, £378.

BROUGHTON, a chapelry in the parish of Eccles-hall, northern division of the hund. of Pirehill, county of Stafford; 5 miles north-west by west of Eccles-hall, on the post-road to Nantwich. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £4 6s. 8d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £72; gross income £129. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. D. Broughton, Bart. Pop., in 1811, 18; in 1831, 25. Houses 2. Acres 590. Other returns with the parish.

BROUGHTON, a township in the parish of Appleton-le-Street, wapentake of Ryedale, north riding of Yorkshire; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-west of New Malton. "Here was an hospital, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, erected by Eustace St. John, the founder of the monasteries of Malton and Alnwick, who died 1^o Henry II." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 111. Houses 22. Acres 800. A. P. £1,087. Poor rates, in 1837, £53.

BROUGHTON-IN-AREDALE, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Eweross, union of Skipton, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles west by south of Skipton, in the vicinity of the Leeds and Liverpool canal. It contains the township of Broughton with Elslack. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £5 16s. 0½d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £112 17s. 11d.; gross income £190; in the patronage of the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. The church contains some monuments to the Tempest family. This parish possesses two day and Sunday schools. The village was plundered by the Pretender's forces in the middle of last century. Pop., in 1801, 200; in 1831, 407. Houses 74. Acres 3,950. A. P. £4,934. Poor rates, in 1837, £294.

BROUGHTON-ASTLEY, a parish in the hund. of Guthlaxton, union of Lutterworth, county of Leicester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by west of Lutterworth, intersected by the Midland Counties railway. It includes the townships of Broughton-Astley, Prime-Thorp, and Sutton-in-the-Elms. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; valued at £26 10s. 5d.; gross income £674. Patron, in 1835, R. T. Adnutt, Esq. There are here six daily schools, one of which was endowed in 1806 by Zaccheus Duckett, Esq., with £100. Pop., in 1801, 458; in 1831, 726. Houses 149. Acres 1,930. A. P. £4,751. Poor rates, in 1837, £334.

BROUGHTON-BRANT, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, union of Newark, county of Lincoln; 8 miles east of Newark, on the river Brant. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £35 13s. 4d.; gross income £602. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. Sutton, Bart. This parish possesses three daily and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 567; in 1831, 627. Houses 123. Acres 4,490. A. P. £4,973. Poor rates, in 1837, £211.

BROUGHTON CHURCH AND SAPPERTON, a parish in the hund. of Appletree, union of Burton-upon-Trent, county of Derby; 10 miles west by south of Derby. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £245. Patron, in 1835, John Broadhurst. There are here two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £30 per annum. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £15 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 420; in 1831, 521. Houses 121. Acres 2,380. A. P. £1,558. Poor rates, in 1837, £248.

BROUGHTON (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of Cartmel, hund. of Lonsdale, north of the Sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7 miles north-east of Ulverstone. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Carlisle; gross income £67. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Burlington. There are here a daily National school, and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 319; in 1831 416. Houses 82. Acres 2,830. A. P. £2,604. Poor rates, in 1837, £266.

BROUGHTON-IN-FURNESS, a market-town and chapelry in the parish of Kirkby-Ireleth, hund. of Lonsdale, north of the Sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 281 miles north-north-west of London, and 29 north-west of Lancaster. Broughton was formerly celebrated for the manufacture of woollen yarn, but this has declined since the introduction of machinery. In the neighbouring mountains minerals are abundant, among which are iron, copper, and roofing-slate, considerable quantities of which are exported by means of the river Duddon, which is navigable to within a mile of the town by vessels of 30 tons burden. Friday is market-day, and a fair for woollen-yarn is held on August 1st.—Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Carlisle; valued at £7 10s. 11d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £108; gross income £108. Patron, in 1835, J. Sawrey, Esq. The tithes, moduses, compositions, &c., the property of the dean and chapter of St. Peter's, York, were commuted 9^o Geo. IV. At Scathwaite a chapel-of-ease has been erected. There are six daily schools, two of which are endowed, and two Sunday schools here. About half-a-mile to the north of the town is the residence of J. G. Sawrey, Esq., of which the ancient structure of Broughton tower forms a part. This was for several centuries the seat of the family of Broughton, and was forfeited by Sir Thos. Broughton, who joined Lambert Simmel, and fell in the battle of Stoke in 1487. Pop., in 1801, 1,005; in 1831, 1,375. Houses 279. Acres 7,040. A. P. £5,175. Poor rates, in 1837, £479.

BROUGHTON-GIFFORD, a parish in the hund. and union of Bradford, county of Wilts; 2 miles west of Melksham, on the western bank of the river Avon, and in the neighbourhood of the Kennet and Avon canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £19 3s. 11½d.; gross income £355; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The Baptists have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1690. This parish possesses three daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum. Other charities produce £12 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 618; in 1831, 735. Houses 149. Acres 1,840. A. P. £4,174. Poor rates, in 1837, £463.

BROUGHTON (GREAT), a township in the parish of Bridekirk, ward of Allerdale below Derwent, county of Cumberland; 3 miles west of Cockermouth, on the northern bank of the river Derwent. The great and small tithes of the manors of Great and Little Broughton, the property of the lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1819. Here are an alms-house and school founded and endowed by Mr. Joseph Ashley. The inmates of the alms-house are four poor women, and the endowment is £8 per annum; the endowment of the school is £20 10s. There are also two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 408; in 1831, 523. Houses 128. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,101. Poor rates, in 1837, £129.

BROUGHTON, (GREAT and LITTLE), a township in the parish of Kirkby in Cleveland, western division of the liberty of Langbaugh, north riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Stokesley. There was formerly a chapel here which has been demolished. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1807. In the vicinity, on the summit of a mountain overlooking the village, is a rude heap of stones, supposed to have been erected to the memory of a Danish chief. Pop., in 1801, 460; in 1831, 297. Houses 111. Acres 2,780. A. P. £3,257. Poor rates in 1837, £156.

BROUGHTON-HACKETT, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Pershore, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 5 miles east of Worcester, in the vicinity of the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; valued at £8 1s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £145; gross income £73; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 153. Houses 31. Acres 390. A. P. £655. Poor rates, in 1837, £33.

BROUGHTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Bridekirk, ward of Allerdale below Derwent, county of Cumberland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Cockermouth. The Baptists and Society of Friends have chapels here; the Baptist church was formed in 1662. Pop., in 1801, 243; in 1831, 297. Houses 63. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £1,006. Poor rates, in 1837, £74.

BROUGHTON (NETHER), a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; 6 miles north-west by west of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; valued at £11 5s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £347. Patrons, in 1835, the Hon. P. Bouverie and Sir H. Sawyer. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1764. There are two daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 324; in 1831, 415. Houses 72. Acres 2,110. A. P. £3,274. Poor rates, in 1837, £201.

BROUGHTON-POGGS, a parish in the hund. of Bampton, union of Witney, county of Oxford; 5 miles south-south-west of Burford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; valued at £7 7s. 11d.; gross income £290. Patron, in 1835, E. Goodenough. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 158. Houses 29. Acres 360. A. P. £1,469. Poor rates, in 1837, £154.

BROUGHTON-SULNEY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Bingham, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Nottingham; 12 miles south-south-east of Nottingham. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; valued at £11 9s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £390. Patron, in 1835, J. Radcliffe, Esq. The great and small tithes of Broughton-Sulney-Fields, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1760. Here are a Baptist chapel, and three daily and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 230; in 1831, 344. Houses 59. Acres 1,600. A. P. £2,261. Poor rates, in 1837, £116.

BROWNSEA, or BRANKSEA ISLAND, a small island in the hund. of Cogdean, Shaston division of the county of Dorset; 2 miles south-east of Poole. It lies at the east end of the bay of Poole, opposite to the entrance. Its length is about a mile and a half, and the greatest breadth three quarters of a mile. The soil is sandy, and the whole island being overrun with heath, furze, and fern, is thought scarce capable of any improvement, though some attempts of that kind have been made; and on the north side a tolerable crop of barley has been obtained. It lies pretty high, and contains 800 acres well-watered. At present there are but two tenements in the island, — one rented by the commissioners of the customs at £10 per annum, and a small public-house. The castle stands at the east part of the island, opposite to the entrance into the bay of Poole. It was erected by Queen Elizabeth to defend Poole harbour, and is now a residence of the Sturt family, to whom the island belongs.

BROWNSHALL HUNDRED, in the Sturminster division of the county of Dorset. Area 9,080 acres. Houses 404. Pop., in 1831, 2,188.

BROWNSIDE. See CHINLEY-BUGSWORTH and BROWNSIDE.

BROWNSOVER, a parish in the hund. and union of Rugby, county of Warwick; 2 miles north by east of Rugby, intersected by the Oxford canal, and in the vicinity of the London and Birmingham railway, and the Midland counties line. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Clifton. Pop., in 1801, 89; in 1831, 90. Houses 17. Acres 1,130. A. P. £1,808. Poor rates in 1837, £126.

BROXASH HUNDRED, in the county of Hereford, is bounded on the north and north-east by Worcestershire; on the east and south-east by the hundred of Radlow; on the south-west by Grims-worth hundred; and on the west by that of Wolphy. Area 61,290 acres. Houses 2,315. Pop., in 1831, 11,781.

BROXA, a township in the parish of Hackness, liberty of Whitby-Strand, north riding of Yorkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Scarborough. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 74. Houses 9. Acres 450. A. P. £469. Poor rates, in 1837, £33.

BROXBURN, BROXBORNE, or BROOKESBORNE, a parish in the union of Ware, hund. and county of Hertford; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Hoddesdon, intersected by the Eastern counties railway, by which it is distant 3 miles from Roydon, and $11\frac{1}{2}$ from Tottenham. It includes part of the hamlet of Hoddesdon. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £12 6s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £361; in the patronage of the bishop of Rochester. The church is a handsome and spacious edifice, containing several side-chapels, and some fine monuments, besides a good ring of five bells. The architecture is in the decorated English style. This parish possesses ten daily schools, one of which is endowed by Sir Richard Lucy with a house and £20 per annum, two day and Sunday National schools, whereof one is endowed with £30 per annum, and two Sunday schools. An alms-house for six poor widows was endowed in 1727 by the Hon. Letitia Monson. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £42 per annum. The manor anciently belonged to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. Pop., in 1801, 1,598; in 1831, 2,144. Houses 404. Acres 4,560. A. P. £8,399. Poor rates, in 1837, £801.

BROXHOLME, a parish in the hund. of Lawress, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 6 miles north-west of Lincoln. Living, a rectory, in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £9 10s.; gross income £281. Patron, in 1835, Lord Monson. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831, 137. Houses 24. Acres 1,230. A. P. £1,226. Poor rates, in 1837, £51.

BROXTED, or CHAWRETH, a parish in the hund. and union of Dunmow, county of Essex; 3 miles south-west of Thaxted, in the vicinity of the railroad from London to Cambridge. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £7, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £139 2s. 8d.; gross income £170. Patron, in 1835, R. De Beauvoir. This parish possesses two daily schools. "Tradition will have it that Broxted was but a hamlet to Chawreth or Chawre, but we find it twice in Domesday book, and Chawre not at all." Morant's Essex. Pop., in 1801, 540; in 1831, 694. Houses 131. Acres 3,110. A. P. £3,917. Poor rates, in 1837, £555.

BROXTON HUNDRED, in the co.-palatine of Chester, anciently called Dudestan hundred, consists of two divisions—higher and lower—and is bounded on the west and south by the counties of Flint and Denbigh; on the east and north-east by the hundreds of Nantwich and Eddisbury; and on the north-west by the hundred of Wirral. Area 77,470 acres. Houses 2,953. Pop., in 1831, 16,415.

BROXTON, a township in the parish of Malpas, higher division of the above hund.; 5 miles north of Malpas. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 454. Houses 65. Acres 2,270. A. P. £2,278. Poor rates, in 1837, £130.

BROXTOW HUNDRED, or WAPENTAKE, in the county of Nottingham, consists of two divisions—north and south—and is bounded on the north and west by Derbyshire; on the south and south-east by Rushcliff hundred; on the east by the hundred of Thurgarton and the liberties of Southwell and Scrooby; and on the north-east by the hundred of Bassetlaw. Area 81,470 acres. Houses 12,662. Pop., in 1831, 65,299.

BROXTOW, a chapelry in the parish of Bilborough, southern division of the wapentake of Broxtow, county of Nottingham; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by west of Nottingham. The chapel is in ruins. "It is probable that this place in ancient time was made use of for the people of the hundred to meet in, because it gives name to the wapentake. By an inquisition held at Nottingham the Saturday after the feast of St. Michael, 7th Henry VI., before Thomas Mapurley and his brother commissioners, it appears that the jury, (of which John Broxtowe was one,) found, that in the parish of Broxtowe there were not then ten inhabitants who were householders." Thoroton's Nottingham. Pop. returned with the parish.

BRUE, BRY, or BRENT (THE), a river in Somerset, rising in Selwood forest, on the border of Wilts, near Bruton, and falling into Bridgewater bay on the Bristol channel, near the estuary of the Parret.

BRUEN-STAPLEFORD, a township in the parish of Tarvin, second division of the hund. of Eddisbury, co.-palatine of Chester; 4 miles east by north of Chester. Pop., in 1801, 161; in 1831, 159. Houses 25. Acres 980. A. P. £1,672. Poor rates, in 1837, £148.

BRUERNE, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Chadlington, county of Oxford; 5 miles north of Burford. "An abbey for Cistercian monks was founded here by Nicholas Basset, A. D. 1147, to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary. Its yearly revenues at the dissolution amounted to £124 10s. 10d., and the site was granted to Sir Anthony Cope, 8th James I." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 30; in 1831, 41. Houses 5. Acres 3,510. A. P. £1,973. Poor rates, in 1837, £50.

BRUISYARD, a parish in the hund. and union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; 3 miles north-east by east of Framlingham. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated in the parliamentary returns at £54 13s. 4d.; valued at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £89. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Stradbroke. This parish possesses a daily school. "The college founded at Ashe, by Maud, countess of Ulster, was removed to the manor place of Rokehall in Bruisyard, where was also built a chapel of the annunciation, and the proper officers for the warden and priests, A. D. 1354; but, upon some complaints, and at the instance of Lionel, duke of Clarence, with the consent of the king, &c., this college or chantry, with all the lands belonging thereunto, was surrendered, 4th October, 40th Edward III., to the use of an abbess and sisters, nuns, minoresses, of the order of St. Clare, who remained here till the general suppression, when their yearly revenues were estimated at £56 2s. 1d. The site and endowment of this abbey were granted to Nicholas Hare, 30th Henry VIII." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 292. Houses 34. Acres 1,330. A. P. £1,266. Poor rates, in 1837, £167.

BRUMBY. See BROMBY.

BRUMHILL. See WEETING WITH BRUMHILL.

BRUMSTEAD, or BRUNSTEAD, a parish in the hund. of Happing, county of Norfolk; 6 miles east-south-east of North-Walsham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £6 5s. 7½d.; gross income £170. Patron, in 1835, Earl Abergavenny. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 107. Houses 17. Acres 930. A. P. £779. Poor rates, in 1837, £49.

BRUNDALL, a parish in the hund. and union of Blofield, county of Norfolk; 6 miles east of Norwich, intersected by the railroad from Norwich to Yarmouth. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to the rectories of Little Plumstead and Witton. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 63. Houses 14. Acres 490. A. P. £507. Poor rates, in 1837, £25.

BRUNDISH, a parish in the hund. and union of Hoxne, county of Suffolk; 4 miles north-north-west of Framlingham. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Tannington. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 478. Houses 54. Acres 1,360. A. P. £2,593. Poor rates, in 1837, £346.

BRUNDON, formerly a distinct parish, but now part of the parish of Ballingdon, hund. of Hinckford, county of Essex; 1 mile south-west of Sudbury. "This parish belonged, in Edward the Confessor's reign, to one free man; and, at the time of the general survey, to Ralph de Limesel. The church of Brundon was small, of one pace with the chancel, but now lies in ruins. The remains of it are in a little enclosure, about a mile on the left hand of Ballingdon-street, directly opposite to Borley church. This rectory was appendant to the manor." Morant's Essex. Pop. returned with Ballingdon.

BRUNSTOCK, a township in the parish of Crosby-upon-Eden, ward of Eskdale, county of Cumberland; 3 miles north-north-east of Carlisle. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 108. Houses 16. Other returns with the parish.

BRUNTINGTHORPE, or BRENTINGTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of Guthlaxton, union of Lutterworth, county of Leicester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Lutterworth. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; valued at £10 7s. 6d.; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Freeman. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1776. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 259; in 1831, 382. Houses 86. Acres 1,320. A. P. £2,005. Poor rates, in 1837, £125.

BRUNTON (EAST), a township in the parish of Gosforth, western division of Castle ward, county of Northumberland; 4 miles north-north-west of Newcastle. Coal of a superior quality is found here; and the inhabitants are chiefly miners. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 268. Houses 45. Poor rates, in 1837, £39.

BRUNTON (WEST), a township in the above parish. Pop., in 1801, 101; in 1831, 118. Houses 20. Poor rates, in 1837, £105.

BRUSHFIELD, a township in the parish of Bakewell, hund. of High Peake, county of Derby; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Bakewell. Pop., in 1801, 44; in 1831, 44. Houses 8. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £396. Poor rates, in 1837, £32.

BRUSHFIELD. See MITCHELMERSH.

BRUSHFORD, a parish in the hund. of North Tawton, with Winkley, union of Crediton, county of Devon; 5 miles south by west of Chumleigh. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; valued at £8, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £60; gross income £51. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Luxton. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 136. Houses 25. Acres 1,220. A. P. £585. Poor rates, in 1837, £68.

BRUSHFORD, a parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemanors, union of Dulverton, county of Somerset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Dulverton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £15 ls. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £428. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Sydenham. There are in this parish two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £7 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 303; in 1831, 351. Houses 64. Acres 4,030. A. P. £2,631. Poor rates, in 1837, £204.

BRUTES-MORTON. See BIRTS-MORTON.

BRUTON (HIGH AND LOW), a township in the parish of Embleton, ward of Bamfrough, county of Northumberland; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by north of Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 62. Houses 14. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £900. Poor rates, in 1837, £88.

BRUTON HUNDRED, in the eastern division of the county of Somerset. Area 14,250 acres. Houses 890. Pop., in 1831, 4,490.

BRUTON, a parish in the hund. of Bruton, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 109 miles west by south of London, and $9\frac{1}{2}$ south-south-west of Frome. A railway has been proposed from this place to Glastonbury, with a branch to Wincanton; the length of the former will be 13 miles, 42 chains. This parish comprises the market-town of Bruton, the chapelry of Weeke-Champfflower, and the tythings of Discove and Redlynch. The town is situated in a valley watered by the Brue, from which it takes its name, and consists of three streets. Saturday is market-day; and fairs for cattle are held on the 23d of April and 19th of September. There is a branch of Stuckey's banking company here. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the silk manufacture. In 1838 there were four silk mills here, employing 355 hands. The principal manufacture at present is that of hosiery and inferior woollen goods.—Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £40, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £130; gross income £141. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. The church is an interesting building. The western tower is highly decorated and crowned with elaborately carved pinnacles. In the market-place is an ancient hexagonal cross supported on pillars. The Independents have a chapel here.—The free grammar school, which was founded in the reign of Edward VI. by Richard Fitz-James, bishop of London, Sir John Fitz-James, chief justice of England, and Dr. John Edmunds, has endowments amounting to £350 per annum, but of this sum, four sums of £50 each are given to exhibitors in either of the English universities.—In 1618, Hugh Saxey, who had risen from being a waiter in an inn here, to be auditor of the household to Queen Elizabeth and James I., and acquired considerable wealth, founded an hospital here, and endowed it with land, now producing the annual income of £1,381 11s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. This is applied to the support of 14 aged men and 14 women, each of whom receives a weekly allowance of 6s., and a bushel of coals; and to the support and education of 16 boys,—for each of whom, on leaving school, an apprentice fee of £22 is paid. Attached to this establishment are a chaplain, a schoolmaster, who boards the scholars at 7s. per week each, a treasurer, and a surgeon. The building is a handsome quadrangle, in the Elizabethan style of architecture. There are also eight daily and two Sunday schools in this parish.—This village was the birth-place of the celebrated navigator Dampier. At Bruton, “about the year 1005, Algar, or rather Ailmer or Aethelmare, earl of Cornwall, is said to have built a religious house for monks, who were changed into black canons by William Moyné or Mohun, earl of Somerset, in the reign of Stephen. This priory was turned into an abbey in the beginning of the reign of King Henry VIII., by the procurement of the then prior, William Gilbert or Giles, bishop of Megara, and suffragan to the bishop of Bath and Wells, who was a great benefactor to the building of this monastery, which was dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary, and rated, 26^o Hen. VIII., at £490 17s. 2d. It was granted, 37^o Hen. VIII., to Sir Maurice Berkeley.” Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 1,631; in 1831, 2,223. Houses 451. Acres 3,520. A. P. £4,110. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,046.

BRYANSTON, or BLANDFORD-BRYAN, a parish in the hund. of Pimperne, union of Blandford, North Blandford division of the county of Dorset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-west by west of Blandford-Forum, on the western bank of the river Stour. Living, a rectory consolidated with that of Durweston, at which place the children of this parish attend a charity school. In 1731 Bryanston was nearly all destroyed by fire; only one house escaped the flames. An elegant mansion-house of the Portman family is situated here. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 155. Houses 29. Acres 1,870. A. P. £1,260. Poor rates, in 1837, £28.

BRYMBO, a township in the parish of Wrexham, Denbighshire, North Wales; 3 miles north-west of Wrexham. A church has been recently built here by the parliamentary commissioners. The Calvinistic Methodists have a church here which was formed in 1820. Here is a daily school. In this township are extensive iron-works. The iron-ore obtained from the adjacent hills is exceedingly rich, and, with the aid of furnace ore from Lancashire, iron of excellent quality is manufactured from it. Offa's dike passes this place.—Pop., in 1801, 837; in 1831, 1,116. Houses 226. Poor rates, in 1837, £231.

BRYNCHIL and TALAFOG, a township in the parish of Cemmaes, hund. of Machynlleth, county of Montgomery, North Wales; about 9 miles north-north-east of Machynlleth. Pop., in 1801, 394; in 1831, 395. Houses 96.

BRYN-CROES, a parish, partly in the hund. of Commitmaen, and partly in that of Gufflogien, union of Fwllheli, county of Caernarvon, North Wales; 12 miles south-west of Fwllheli. It is situated on the promontory of Llyn, and on the Soihan river.

Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Bangor and dio. of St. Asaph and Bangor; valued at £4 4s., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £54; gross income £107. Patron, in 1835, C. W. G. Wynn. The Calvinistic Methodists have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1760. This parish possesses a daily school, endowed with £3 13s. 6d. per annum, and three Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 799; in 1831, 910. Houses 203. A. P. £1,590. Poor rates, in 1837, £312.

BRYN-EGLWYS, a parish in the hund. of Yale, union of Corwen, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 6 miles north-east of Corwen. Its area is about 3,000 acres, and it is situated in an elevated and remote situation. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. of St. Asaph's and dio. of St. Asaph and Bangor; gross income £90. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. W. Wynn. The Calvinistic Methodists have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1817. There are here a daily school, which is endowed with £6 per annum, and three Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 450. Houses 83. A. P. £1,831. Poor rates, in 1837, £325.

BRYNGWYN, a parish in the hund. of Pain's Castle, union of Hay, county of Radnor, South Wales; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Kington. It contains about 4,000 acres, and lies on the river Avro. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; valued at £11 6s. 8d.; gross income £342; in the patronage of the bishop of St. David's. Charities connected with this parish produce £9 2s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 277; in 1831, 364. Houses 66. A. P. £1,194. Poor rates, in 1837, £231.

BRYNGWYN, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Ragland, union of Abergavenny, county of Monmouth; 2 miles north-west of Ragland. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; valued at £4 8s. 9d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £150; gross income £215. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Abergavenny. This parish possesses two daily schools. Charities connected with it produce £10 15s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 300. Houses 62. Acres 1,560. A. P. £1,090. Poor rates, in 1837, £85.

BRYNING WITH KELLASNERGH, a township in the parish of Kirkham, hund. of Amounderness, co-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles south-west of Kirkham. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 164. Houses 22. Acres 1,040. A. P. £1,402. Poor rates, in 1837, £120.

BRYN-LLYS, or BRON-LLIS, a parish in the hund. of Talgarth, union of Hay, county of Brecon, South Wales; 7 miles west-south-west of Hay. It is situated on the river Llyffin, which falls into the Wye, and the village stands on the turnpike road from Brecon to Hay. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; valued at £4 16s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £174. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Wilkins. Here is an ancient castle supposed to have been erected in the reign of Harold, though some attribute it to William the Conqueror. Mr. King, in his 'Observations on Ancient Castles,' is of opinion that Breconshire formed part of the country of the Silures, and that this castle is of Syrian architecture. It has been in the hands of the families of Clifford, Gifford, De Bohun, and Stafford, by the last of whom it was forfeited to the crown on the attainder of the duke of Buckingham. In 1752 Edward Williams of Llanguy, into whose possession they had come, sold the castle and lands to Francis Lewis of Llanelli, by whom they were transferred to William Davies, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 286. Houses 66. A. P. £1,970. Poor rates, in 1837, £245.

BRYN-Y-BEIRDD, a hamlet in the parish of Llandillo-Fawr, hund. of Iskenen, county of Caermarthen, South Wales. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1831, 379. Houses 78. Other returns with the parish.

BUBBENHALL, or BOBENHULL, a parish in the Kenilworth division of the hund. of Knightlow, union and county of Warwick; 5 miles south-south-east of Coventry, on the river Avon, over which there is a bridge here. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; valued at £10, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £58; gross income £70. There are in this parish a daily and a Sunday school, the former of which is endowed with £4 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 233. Houses 56. Acres 1,290. A. P. £1,731. Poor rates, in 1837, £49.

BUBNELL, a township in the parish of Bakewell, hund. of High Peak, county of Derby; 4 miles north-north-east of Bakewell. Pop., in 1831, 115. Houses 18. Other returns with the parish.

BUBWITH, a parish in the Holme-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Howden, east riding of Yorkshire, and partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York; 6 miles north-north-west of Howden, on the eastern bank of the river Derwent, over which there is a stone-bridge here of three large and seven smaller arches, and in the vicinity of the Selby and Hull railroad. It comprises the townships of Brighton, Bubwith, Foggathorpe, Gribthorpe with Willitof, Harlethorpe and Spaldington. Living, a discharged vicarage held in mediety. The first mediety is valued at £7 2s. 6d., in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York, and in the patronage of the lord-chancellor;—the second is a peculiar, in the patronage of the dean and chapter of York; valued at £8 0s. 5d.; gross income £102. The parish-church is beautifully situated on the banks of the Derwent, and is a finely proportioned structure, consisting of a nave and side-aisles, a chancel, and a square embattled tower with crocketed pinnacles. It was repaired and beautified in 1792. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., of the township of Bubwith and Harlethorpe, the property of the dean of St. Peter, York, and lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted 2^d Will. IV. There are five daily and two Sunday schools in this parish; and a Wesleyan Methodist chapel. Charities connected with it produce £21 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,172; in 1831, 1,358. Houses 234. Acres 10,460. A. P. £12,289. Poor rates, in 1837, £745. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 424; in 1831, 461. Houses 80. Acres 1,420. A. P. £2,009. Poor rates, in 1837, £293.

BUCKBY (LONO), a parish in the hund. of Guilsborough, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 5 miles north-east of Daventry, intersected by the London and Birmingham railway. This parish contains the hamlet of Murcott. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £10; gross income £100; in the patronage of the bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. The great and small tithes of Long Buckby, exclusive of the hamlet of Murcott, the property of the bishop of Lichfield, lay-impropriator and vicar, were commuted in 1765. See also WATFORD. The Independents and Baptists have chapels here; the latter church was formed in 1759. There are two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum by the Rev. Langton Freeman, and three Sunday schools, here. Charities connected with the parish produce £28 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,600; in 1831, 2,078. Houses 453. Acres 3,900. A. P. £6,388. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,199.

BUCKDEN, a parish in the hund. of Toseland, union of St. Neott's, county of Huntingdon; 4 miles south-west of Huntingdon, on the western bank of the river Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £8, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £140 3s. 2d.; gross income £183; in the patronage of the bishop of Ely. In the church some of the bishops of Lincoln have been interred. "The prebend of Bugden, in the cathedral church of Lincoln, was annexed to the see of Lincoln, and the reserved rent was settled as an augmentation for the vicar of Bugden, by an act of parliament, 4^o and 5^o Queen Anne." Bacon's Liber Regis. This manor was conferred on the bishops of Lincoln so early as the reign of Henry I. The great and small tithes, the property of the prebendary of Buckden and the vicar, were commuted in 1813. Here was the ancient palace of the bishop of Lincoln,—a venerable brick structure surrounded by a moat. It consisted of two quadrangular courts and a gate-house, in the upper part of which was the library. By order in council, dated 3d April, 1838, the bishop of Lincoln was authorized to pull down the old episcopal palace, and to apply the proceeds of the sale thereof towards the expense of providing a new episcopal residence. There are here two daily schools, one of which has endowments amounting to £19 14s. per annum, three infant and two Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce about £120 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 869; in 1831, 1,095. Houses 218. Acres 3,590. A. P. £7,642. Poor rates, in 1837, £845.

BUCKDEN, a township in the parish of Arncliffe, eastern division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Eweross, west riding of Yorkshire; 11½ miles north-east of Settle, on the eastern bank of the river Wharfe. There are here three daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 309. Houses 70. Acres 15,790. A. P. £4,031. Poor rates, in 1837, £240.

BUCKENHAM, or BOKENHAM FERRY, a parish in the hund. and union of Blofield, county of Norfolk; 4½ miles south-west of Acle, on the river Yare, over which there is a ferry here, and in the vicinity of the railroad from Norwich to Yarmouth. Living, a discharged rectory, consolidated with that of Hassingham, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; valued at £6; gross income £238. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. B. Proctor. This parish possesses a daily school. A Roman station is supposed to have existed in the vicinity. Pop., in 1801, 40; in 1831, 49. Houses 8. Acres 1,020. A. P. £607. Poor rates, in 1837, £63.

BUCKENHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Wayland, union of Swaffham, county of Norfolk; 6 miles south-west by west of Watton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £3; no return. The church has been demolished. Pop., in 1801, 24; in 1831, 51. Houses 10. Acres 630. A. P. £614. Poor rates, in 1837, £150.

BUCKENHAM (NEW), a market-town and parish in the hund. of Shropham, union of Guiltcross, county of Norfolk; 93 miles north-east of London, 15 south-south-west of Norwich, and about 7 west of the London and Norwich railroad. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £25, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £50; gross income £116; in the patronage of the parishioners. The greater part of the present structure was erected in 1479. It contains some interesting monuments, and a richly carved screen. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1812. There are here four daily schools, one of which is endowed with £6 6s. per annum; and also an almshouse for four aged persons, endowed by Wm. Barber, Esq., with £28 per annum. Saturday is market-day; and fairs for cattle, cheese, and toys, are held on the last Saturdays of May and November. The inhabitants have the privilege of attending fairs in all parts of England, free from toll and stallage, and exemption from serving on juries. Pop., in 1801, 664; in 1831, 795. Houses 163. Acres 250. A. P. £1,525. Poor rates, in 1837, £326.

BUCKENHAM (OLD), a parish in the hund. of Shropham, union of Guiltcross, county of Norfolk; 3½ miles south-south-east of Attleborough. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £17, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £40; gross income £103; in the patronage of the parishioners. There are in this parish three daily schools, in two of which 20 children are instructed from the proceeds of an endowment. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £60 per annum. Tanner says:—"William D'Albini, earl of Chichester or Arundel, in the time of Stephen, built here a priory of Black canons, and commended it to the patronage of St. James the Apostle. About the time of the dissolution, here was a prior and eight canons, who held revenues to the yearly value of £131 11s. The site of this house was granted, 2^o Mary, to Sir Thomas Lovell." The present parish-church belonged to the monastery, and for some time after the dissolution was used as a barn. Not far from the site of the castle was a chapel to the Virgin Mary. Here were three guilds, dedicated to St. Margaret, St. Peter, and St. Thomas the Martyr. Pop., in 1801, 845; in 1831, 1,201. Houses 242. Acres 5,520. A. P. £9,738. Poor rates, in 1837, £811.

BUCKENHILL. See WOLHOPE.

BUCKERELL, a parish in the hund. of Hemyock, division and union of Honiton, county of Devon; 3 miles west of Honiton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £10 0s. 2½d.; gross income £120; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Exeter. There is a day and Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 394. Houses 56. Acres 2,120. A. P. £2,876. Poor rates, in 1837, £180.

BUCKFASTLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Stanborough, division of Stanborough and Coleridge, union of Totness, county of Devon; 2½ miles south-west by south of Ashburton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £19 1s. 0½d.; gross income £182. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. M. Lowndes. The church is a spacious structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, transepts, and two side-chapels, with a tower. Here is also an Independent church, formed in 1787. This parish possesses eight daily and two Sunday schools. Charities connected with it produce about £12 per annum. Buckfastleigh was formerly a market-town, and the market-house yet remains. Fairs are still held on June 29th for sheep, and on August 24th for horned-cattle. In 1838 there were 5 woollen mills, employing 254 hands, within this parish. Part of the inhabitants are also employed in some copper-works in the vicinity. Marble and limestone are found here. "An abbey of the Cistercian order was founded here, A. D. 1137, by Ethelwerd, son of William Pomerel, to the honour of St. Mary. The yearly income of this house was £466 11s. 2d., and it was granted, 31^o Henry VIII., to Sir Thomas Denny." Tanner's Not. Mon. The buildings of this monastery have been demolished. Its remains were long an object of much interest to the tourist. After the dissolution, the market fell into disuse. Pop., in 1801, 1,525; in 1831, 2,445. Houses 452. Acres 6,270. A. P. £5,802. Poor rates, in 1837, £843.

Pubd. by Archd. Fullarton & Co. Glasgow.

BUCKHORN-WESTON, a parish in the hund. of Redlane, union of Wincanton, Sturminster division of the county of Dorset; 8 miles west by north of Shaftsbury. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; valued at £10 1s. 3d.; gross income £286. Patroness, in 1835, Lady Stapleton. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 307; in 1831, 403. Houses 71. Acres 2,080. A. P. £1,950. Poor rates, in 1837, £193.

BUCKHOW-BANK, a township in the parish of Dalston, ward and county of Cumberland; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Carlisle, in the vicinity of the Maryport and Carlisle railroad. Pop., in 1801, 493; in 1831, 668. Houses 104. Other returns with the parish.

BUCKINGHAM HUNDRED, in the county of the same name, is bounded on the north and north-east by Northamptonshire; on the east by the hundreds of Newport and Cottesloe; on the south and south-east by Ashendon hundred; and on the west by Oxfordshire. Area 56,230 acres. Houses 2,772. Pop., in 1831, 14,110.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE,

An inland county of England, bounded on the north and north-west by the county of Northampton; on the north-east and east by the counties of Hertford and Bedford; on the south-east by Middlesex; on the south-west by Berks; and on the west by Oxfordshire. It lies between the parallels of $51^{\circ} 27'$ and $52^{\circ} 12'$ N. lat. Its outline is irregular; and there are no natural boundaries except on the south-west, where the river Thames separates it from the county of Berks, and from Surrey, and a few miles of the course of the Ouse. Its shape is oblong; its length from north to south, or from Olney to Staines, is about 53 miles; its breadth is on an average 18 miles, and in the widest part 27; and its circumference 138 miles. It contains, according to one admeasurement, about 472,320 acres; but another admeasurement—which we are inclined to think considerably exceeds the truth—estimates its superficial area at 513,400 acres, of which 352,000 are stated to be arable, and about 170,000 in pasture.

Face of the Country.—The surface of this small county is agreeably diversified. The northern portion is gently undulating. The fertile and beautiful vale of Aylesbury, watered by the Thame, occupies the centre, and is bounded on the south by the Chiltern hills, a chalk range, whose average breadth here is 16 miles.

Rivers, Canals, and Railways.—The principal rivers in this county are the Thames, the Thame, the Ouse, and Coln, or Colne; there are also the Ousel and the Wyk, or Wick. The Ouse enters the western side of the county, from Northamptonshire, near Brackley, whence to Water-Stratford it forms a boundary between this county and Northamptonshire; it then passes the town of Buckingham, turns to the north-east, passes Stony-Stratford, Newport-Pagnell, and Olney, and enters Bedfordshire near Brayfield, about 2 miles from Olney. Its course is very winding, and amounts to above 40 miles within this county: see article OUSE. The Ousel joins the Ouse at Newport-Pagnell, after a course of about 25 miles.—The Thames forms an irregular boundary on the south-west side of the county, from near Henley to Staines, a distance of about 28 miles. It receives the Wick, and one or two rivulets in this county.—The Colne divides the county for a short distance from Middlesex, passes Uxbridge, and falls into the Thames.—The Thame river between Fenny-Stratford and Aylesbury, flows north-west, and falls into the Thames at Dorchester in Oxfordshire. About 28 miles of its course belongs to Bucks: see THAME.—The Grand Junction canal enters this county, from Herefordshire, near Tring,—gives off two branches to Aylesbury and Wendover,—runs nearly due north, passing Leighton-Buzzard and Fenny-Stratford, and turning north-west, is carried across the Ouse by an aqueduct three-quarters of a mile in length; after which it gives off a branch to the town of Buckingham, and enters Northamptonshire near Stony-Stratford. The London and Birmingham railroad intersects this county, entering it about 2 miles east of Stony-Stratford, passing near Fenny-Stratford and Leighton-Buzzard, and enters Herefordshire near Little Gaddesden. The Great Western railway crosses the south-eastern portion, commencing at Iver and terminating near Maidenhead.—The county is crossed by the roads from London to Oxford, Liverpool, and Chester, and Holyhead. There is a road to Birmingham through Aylesbury.

Population, &c.—The population of this county, in 1801, was 107,444; in 1821, 134,068; and in 1831, 146,400; of whom, in 1831, there were 16,893 families engaged in agriculture, and 8,395 in handicrafts. The number of houses was 28,159. The annual value of property as assessed in 1815 was £643,492. The amount of poor rates, in 1815, at 4s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. in the pound, was £129,610, the amount of assessed rental being £644,000; the poor rates, in 1827, at 4s. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. in the pound, amounted to £153,912 9s.; of which £152,515 9s. were expended, £132,877 1s. being applied to the use of the poor. In the year ending 25th March, 1830, £158,463 was levied in name of poor rates, of which £135,239 was strictly expended in the relief of the poor. The poor rates, levied in 1837, amounted to £75,342.

Agriculture, Trade, &c.—A large portion of this county is laid out in dairy and grazing-farms, which supply the London market with butter, oxen, lambs, calves, hogs, and early ducklings: See AYLESBURY. The vale of Aylesbury is noted for its sheep, whose wool is of a very superior description. The average size of farms is about 200 acres; few exceed 400; most farms are let on single year leases. The soil throughout the county varies from chalky to rich loam, with occasional sandy and marly spots. There is not much extent of waste land. The most extensive commons are those of Wickham, of about 1,500 acres; Iver, about 1,150; and Stoke, of about 1,600. Besides these there are Fulmer and Great Harwood heaths. Wood is plentiful, especially on the Chiltern hills, and throughout the extensive district called Whaddon chase. According to ancient historians this county was at one time almost all forest. The principal timber is beech. The cattle of this county are not peculiar to it; the horses are black, and of the half-cart, half-coach breed; the cows are mostly of the short-horned breed. Fuller's earth, marble, chalk, and marl are the mineral products.—The principal manufactures are those of paper, thread-lace, veils, and straw-plat. Many of the women and children of the lower class are employed in lace-making. This branch of industry, however is not now so prosperous as it was in former years.

Divisions, Towns, &c.—This county contains 206 parishes, and is divided into 8 hundreds, viz., Ashendon, Aylesbury, Buckingham, Burnham, Cotelow or Cottesloe, Desborough, Newport, and Stoke. It comprises six boroughs; viz. Buckingham, Aylesbury, Agmondesham, Chipping-Wycombe, Wendover, and Great Marlow; and the market-towns of Beaconsfield, Chesham, Ivinghoe, Newport-Pagnell, Olney, Prince's Risborough, Fenny-Stratford, Stony-Stratford, Winslow, and Colne-Brook. The general quarter-sessions are held at Aylesbury. The county is included in the Oxford circuit; it formerly returned 14 members to parliament; two being sent for each of the boroughs of Aylesbury, Amersham, Buckingham, Great Marlow, Wendover, and Wycombe, and two for the shire; to the latter an additional member was added by the Reform bill, but Amersham and Wendover were disfranchised, so that eleven members only are now returned. The polling-places are Aylesbury, Buckingham, Newport-Pagnell, and Beaconsfield. The summer-assizes are held at Buckingham, and the winter-assizes at Aylesbury. The gaol is at Aylesbury.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—This county is in the province of Canterbury, and, with the exception of ten parishes, formed an archdeaconry in the diocese of Lincoln. By order in council, dated 19th July, 1837, it has been transferred from the diocese of Lincoln to that of Oxford. There are about 200 parishes and chapelries in this county. The dissenting congregations in this shire are 132 in number, and the annual income of public charities is £11,393 11s. This county possesses 386 daily schools, attended by 10,065 scholars, and 34 infant schools, containing 769 children, forming a total of 10,834 young persons under daily instruction. There are also 294 Sunday schools, attended by 20,728 individuals.

Name and History.—The name of this district is by some derived from the Saxon boeking, 'a free or chartered land,' and ham, 'a residence;' by others, amongst whom is Camden, from boece, 'a birch tree,' or buccen, 'a stag,' both of which were, in ancient times, remarkably abundant in the forests of this county.—Its most ancient inhabitants, so far as historical information goes, were the Cassii or Cat-tiuchlani; the Romans included it first in their province of Britannia superior, and subsequently in that of Flavia Cæsariensis. Some of the Roman roads crossed this county, and there are still occasionally found indications of the Roman dominion here. [See next article.] It afterwards formed part of the kingdom of Mercia; and in still later times was included in the district called Dene-lege, or Danish jurisdiction. In the reign of Charles I. Buckinghamshire was the first county to take up arms against the king; and a spirited address from this county to parliament decided the measures of that body; for, as Lord Clarendon says, "from the date of its presentation we may reasonably date the levying of war in England." The king, in 1644, made this shire for sometime his head-quarters, and had garrisons in Brill, Borstall-house, Greenland-house, and other parts, which were the scenes of various encounters, referred to under the names of the several places. The Hampden family derive the title of Earl from this shire. [See Lyson's Magna Britannia, and Lipscombe's Buckinghamshire.]

Antiquities.—There are remains of camps and intrenchments at West-Wycombe, Danesfield, All-Hollands, Cholsbury, Hawridge, Hedgerley-dean, Mendenham, and Ellesborough. The sites of the castles of Castlethorpe, Lavendon, and Whitchurch may be traced, but no parts of the buildings remain. Of ancient abbeyes there are remains at Burnham, Mendenham, and Nutley; some portions of the college of Bon-hommes at Asheridge, and of St. Margaret's, a nunnery, yet remain.

BUCKINGHAM, a parish and borough in the hund., union, and county of Buckingham; 55 miles north-west of London, and 16 north-west of Aylesbury, intersected by a branch of the Grand Junction canal. For civil and ecclesiastical purposes the parish and town of Buckingham are co-extensive, and consist of the borough and market-town of Buckingham, the chapelry of Gawcott, the hamlets of Bourton, Bourton-hold, and Lenborough, with the precinct of Prebend-End.—The town stands on a bend of the river Ouse, by which it is nearly surrounded, and which is here crossed by three handsome stone bridges. It consists chiefly of one long irregular street, situated at the foot of a hill, and covering a considerable space of ground. The streets are paved, and contain for the most part brick houses of an inferior class. In 1725 it suffered severely from fire, property having been destroyed to the amount of £38,000. The act of 3^d William IV. c. 90. for lighting was for a short period adopted, but created so much dissatisfaction that it has been abandoned, and the night-watching and lighting are now maintained by voluntary contribution, gas-works having been erected by a private company. The town has not increased for several years. No trade or manufacture is carried on in it, except lace-making with bobbins. Many females still continue this occupation from the difficulty of finding any other employment; but the best hands, with the utmost exertion, can scarcely earn more than 2s. 6d. a-week. Limestone and marble are quarried in the vicinity. The market and fairs are well-attended. Saturday is market-day; fairs for cattle and sheep are held on January 28th, March 7th, if leap year, March 6th, May 6th, Whit-Thursaday, July 10th, September 4th, October 2d, Saturday after Old Michaelmas, and November 8th.

The town of Buckingham was made a borough in the reign of Henry VIII., and has returned two representatives to every parliament since the 33d of that monarch. Under the old system the members of the corporation—in number 13 only—had the sole right of voting, and were in the interest of the duke of Buckingham. The number of municipal electors registered under the new act, in 1837, was 286, of whom 151 were entitled also to vote in the election of members of parliament. The bailiff is the returning officer; and the parliamentary boundaries comprise the several parishes of Buckingham, Maidsmorton, Thornborough, Padbury, Hillesden, Preston-Bissett, Tingewick, and Radcliffe-cum-Chackmore. The governing charter of the borough was granted in the first year of the reign of Mary—1554—in consequence of services rendered by the inhabitants in the suppression of the Duke of Northumberland's rebellion on the queen's accession to the throne. This charter appears to have been surrendered, and a new one granted in the 36th year of Charles II., 1684. The corporation acted upon the latter for several years; but in consequence of a dispute with James II. in 1688—during which the king successively removed three mayors elected by them in the course of three months—quo warrantos were issued, and, after some litigation, the charter of Charles II. was also surrendered. The corporation afterwards availed themselves of the proclamation for restoring surrendered charters, by resuming the charter of Mary, under which they have ever since continued to act. The government was vested, previous to the late municipal act, in a bailiff, a high-steward, a recorder, and twelve burgesses, with a town-clerk and other officers. It is now governed by a bailiff, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors. The income of the borough, in 1837, amounted to £605; expenditure £695. A court of quarter-sessions was holden at Easter and Michaelmas by virtue of a standing special commission under the great seal. A court for the recovery of debts under £5 may be holden by the bailiff, assisted by the deputy-steward and three of the burgesses; but it had fallen into disuse since 1818. A commission of the peace and court of quarter-sessions have, however recently been granted to this borough.—The prison consists of four rooms and an airing-yard. All prisoners sentenced to hard labour are sent to the county house of correction at Aylesbury. The borough has a gaol, which Lord Cobham erected at an expense of £7,000. The town-hall is in the middle of the town; it is a neat building of brick, containing chambers for holding the courts.

Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar, formerly in the dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £22; gross income £230. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Buckingham. The church is an elegant modern structure of freestone, having a handsome tower and spire, 150 feet high. The interior is fitted up very tastefully, in the Doric and Ionic styles, and the altar-piece presented by the Marquis of Buckingham, is a good copy of the celebrated painting of the Transfiguration by Ruffaello d'Urbino. The chief expense of erecting this church was defrayed by Earl Temple. The Baptists, Independents, Presbyterians, and Society of Friends have places of worship here; the Church-street Independent chapel was formed in 1792, and the Old Meeting-house in 1700. The grammar-school was founded by Edward VI., and endowed with the property of a chantry belonging to the guild of the holy Trinity. There are here a National school, containing 140 pupils, and a green-coat school for 25 boys, which Mr. Gabriel Newton founded and endowed in 1700; and two daily and three Sunday schools, besides endowed alms-houses for twelve poor women. Other charities connected with it produce about £117 per annum. This town has given the title of duke to the families of Stafford, Villiers, and Sheffield; and now confers it on the family of Grenville.—Pop., in 1801, 2,605; in 1831, 3,610. Houses 710. Acres 5,330. A. P. £10,660. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,668.—A work-house has been erected here for the union of Buckingham, by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £5,500, capable of accommodating 250 persons. The Buckingham poor-law union comprehends 29 parishes, embracing an area of 91 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at £14,106. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £13,705. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,569.

The remains of a Roman villa were discovered, in 1837, within 2 miles of Buckingham, on the road to Stony-Stratford, on a farm belonging to the Duke of Buckingham, and a coin found with the reverse bearing the Cross and the Alpha and Omega, indicating that it was struck subsequently to the time of Constantine, and probably by one of his sons, or the usurper, Decentius, though the inscription is illegible. Within a mile of this villa are two tumuli or barrows, supposed to contain the remains of Roman generals; they do not appear to have been opened, and as they are situated on the property of the Duke of Buckingham, it is probable they will be examined. Bishop Kennett, in his 'Parochial Antiquities,' states that Buckingham must have been a place of considerable antiquity, as the spot near which the Roman General Aulus Plautius surprised and routed the Britons, under the command of Caractacus and Togodumnus, the sons of Cunobelin. And it is probable the barrows above alluded to may be the almost imperishable monuments of that event. The town was celebrated in early Saxon times as the burial place of St. Rumbald, who was born at King's Sutton, and who, according to a popish legend, lived only three days; but during a short time after birth declared himself a Christian, and bequeathed his body after death to Sutton for one year, to Buckley for two years, and then to Buckingham for ever. Pilgrims came in crowds to his shrine and well, which still exists.

BUCKLAND WITH CARSWELL, a parish in the hund. of Ganfield, union of Farrington, county of Berks; 4 miles north-east by east of Great Farrington. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £18 4s. 7d.; gross income £310; in the patronage, in 1835, of Mrs. Rawbone, and T. H. Southby. The vicarial tithes were commuted in 1802. The Roman Catholics have a chapel here. This parish possesses two daily schools, one of which is endowed. Pop., in 1801, 690; in 1831, 946. Houses 167. Acres 4,420. A. P. £5,951. Poor rates, in 1837, £456.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hund. and union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; 3 miles west-north-west of Tring, in the vicinity of the Grand Junction canal, and the London and Birmingham railroad. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Bierton. Pop., in 1801, 288; in 1831, 510. Houses 100. Acres 1,290. A. P. £1,464. Poor rates, in 1837, £297.

BUCKLAND WITH LAVERTON, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Kiftagete, union of Winchcomb, county of Gloucester; 5½ miles west-south-west of Chipping Campden. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £29 6s. 8d.; gross income £226. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. Phillipps. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector and lord of the manor, were commuted in 1779. Here is a school for poor children, which was endowed in 1710, with property producing £30 per annum, by James Thynne, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 328; in 1831, 403. Houses 67. Acres 2,270. A. P. £2,933. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hund. of Edwinstree, union of Buntingford, county of Hertford; 2½ miles south-west of Barkway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £20; gross income £325; in the patronage of King's college, Cambridge. There are two daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 300; in 1831, 373. Houses 80. Acres 1,590. A. P. £1,871. Poor rates, in 1837, £173.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hund. of Bewsborough, lathe of St. Augustine, union of River, county of Kent; 2 miles north-north-west of Dover, on the post-road to Canterbury. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of Canterbury, and a peculiar of the archbishop; valued at £26, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £60; gross income £139; in the patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury. This parish possesses three daily and two Sunday schools. Paper is made to a considerable extent, and an hospital for lepers anciently existed within this parish. Pop., in 1801, 340; in 1831, 834. Houses 157. Acres 850. A. P. £2,993. Poor rates, in 1837, £472.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hund. and union of Faversham, lathe of Scray, county of Kent; 3 miles north-west by west of Faversham. Living, a sinecure rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; valued at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £167. The church is in ruins. Pop., in 1801, 20; in 1831, 15. Houses 3. Acres 1,340. A. P. £639. Poor rates, in 1837, £14.

BUCKLAND, a parish in the hund. and union of Reigate, county of Surrey; 2 miles west of Reigate. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; valued at £11 12s. 11d.; gross income £347; in the patronage of All Souls' college, Oxford. There are a day and Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 269; in 1831, 344. Houses 54. Acres 2,040. A. P. £2,336. Poor rates, in 1837, £334.

BUCKLAND-BREWER, a parish in the hund. of Shebbear, Great Torrington division, union of Bideford, county of Devon; 5 miles west of Great Torrington. Living, a discharged vicarage, to which are annexed the curacies of Bulkworthy and East Putford, in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; valued at £25 17s. 3½d.; gross income £244; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. This parish possesses four daily and two Sunday schools. Petty sessions are held here, and by adjournment at Great Torrington and Bideford for the division of Great Torrington. Here was formerly a market, which was discontinued on the dissolution of the abbey of Dunkeswell, to which part of the manor had been given by Lord Brewer. Fairs are held on Whit-Tuesday and 2d November for cattle. Pop., in 1801, 872; in 1831, 1,096. Houses 200. Acres 3,970. A. P. £3,944. Poor rates, in 1837, £396.

BUCKLAND-DENHAM, a parish in the hund. and division of Kilmersdon, union of Frome, county of Somerset; 2½ miles north-north-west of Frome. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £8 9s. 7d.; gross income £163; in the patronage of the prebendary of the cathedral of Wells. There are here two daily schools. Charities connected with the parish produce £11 6s. per annum. Tessel is raised in abundance in the vicinity. Pop., in 1801, 429; in 1831, 532. Houses 107. Acres 1,400. A. P. £2,156. Poor rates, in 1837, £171.

BUCKLAND (EAST), a parish in the hund., union, and division of South Molton, but belonging to that of Braunton, county of Devon; 5 miles north-west by north of South Molton. Living, a rectory, consolidated with Buckland-Filleigh, in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; valued at £9 1s. 8d.; gross income £324. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fortescue. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 173. Houses 25. Acres 2,340. A. P. £1,118. Poor rates, in 1837, £80.

BUCKLAND-EGG. See EGGBUCKLAND.

BUCKLAND-FILLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Shebbear, division of Black Torrington and Shebbear, union of Torrington, county of Devon; 7 miles north-west of Hatherleigh. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; valued at £11 16s. 0½d.; gross income £238; in the patronage of the bishop of Exeter. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 252; in 1831, 317. Houses 53. Acres 4,550. A. P. £1,359. Poor rates, in 1837, £87.

BUCKLAND-HOLLOW, a village in the parish of Derbyshire. There is a Wesleyan chapel here.

BUCKLAND (ST. MARY), a parish, partly in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, partly in that of Petherton, and partly in that of Martock, division of Ilminster, union of Chard, county of Somerset; 6 miles west by south of Ilminster. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £12 19s. 9½d.; gross income £392. Patron, in 1835, Lieutenant-General Popham. In the churchyard are the remains of an ancient stone-cross. The Baptists have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1832. There are a daily and a day and Sunday school in this parish. A fair is held here on the 21st and 22d September for horses the first day, and bullocks the second. In the vicinity are traces of a Roman fort which has been called Neroche castle. The neighbourhood was the scene of many conflicts between the Saxons and Danes, many relics of whom have been dug up at various places. Pop., in 1801, 418; in 1831, 646. Houses

118. Acres 3,120. A. P. £3,310. Poor rates, in 1837, £260.

BUCKLAND-MINCHIN, or SOMERUM, in the parish of Durston, hund. of North Petherton, county of Somerset. "In the reign of King Henry II., William de Erlegh founded here an house of regular canons, who, having killed his steward, and done other unjustifiable acts, were suppressed and removed to other houses. But that king granted all their lands to the Knights-hospitallers, A. D. 1180, upon condition that they should place here all the sisters of their order, which before lived in several of their preceptories. This seems to have been complied with, and the nuns here had at first great dependence upon the knights, but afterwards they disengaged themselves, and became a distinct priory or hospital of nuns of the order of St. Augustine. This was dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and endowed with £223 17s. 4d. per annum, and the site was granted, 36° Henry VIII., to William, earl of Essex, &c. There was also at this place a preceptory of knights of St. John of Jerusalem, whose house was granted, 36° Henry VIII., to Alexander Popham and William Halley." Tanner's Not. Mon.

BUCKLAND-MONACHORUM, a parish in the hund. of Roborough, Midland Roborough division, union of Tavistock, county of Devon; 4 miles south by east of Tavistock, intersected by the Dartmoor railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £19 8s. 9d.; gross income £430. Patron, in 1835, — Nicholls, Esq. The church is a handsome cruciform structure, consisting of a nave, two side-aisles, two small transepts, and a tower with turrets and pinnacles. This parish possesses four daily schools, one of which has a small endowment, and two Sunday schools. Charities connected with it produce £15 per annum. The village—at which a market was formerly held—contains some curious old houses and a stone-cross. In the church is a monument, by Bacon, to Lord Heathfield, who defended Gibraltar. The parish takes its name from an abbey, which contained monks of the Cistercian order, and was founded A. D. 1278, by Amicia, countess-dowager of Devonshire. Its yearly revenues were valued, 26° Henry VIII., at £341; and the site was soon after granted to Richard Greyfield. Pop., in 1801, 918; in 1831, 1,274. Houses 225. Acres 6,910. A. P. £7,138. Poor rates, in 1837, £552.

BUCKLAND-IN-THE-MOOR, a parish in the hund. of Haytor, division of Teignbridge, union of Newton-Abbot, county of Devon; 3½ miles north-west of Ashburton. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Ashburton. There are two daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 139. Houses 22. Acres 1,500. A. P. £861. Poor rates, in 1837, £49.

BUCKLAND NEWTON HUNDRED, in the Cerne subdivision of the county of Dorset. Area 12,570 acres. Houses 279. Pop., in 1831, 1,727.

BUCKLAND-NEWTON, or ABBAS, a parish in the above hund., union of Cerne, Cerne subdivision of the county of Dorset; 10 miles north of Dorchester, intersected by the proposed Bath and Weymouth railway, which will be here carried through a hill by a tunnel 1 mile 51 chains in length. It is divided into the tythings of Brockhampton and Knowle, Buckland, Newton, Duntish, Minter-Parva, and Plush. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Plush, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; valued at £16 19s. 9½d.; gross income £556. There are three daily schools in this parish. Charities connected with it produce about £25 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 652; in 1831, 786. Houses 159. Acres 6,770. A. P. £8,617. Poor rates, in 1837, £623.

BUCKLAND-RIPERS, a parish in the hund. of Colliford-Tree, union of Weymouth, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 3 miles north-west by north of Melcombe-Regis. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; valued at £5 9s. 2d.; gross income £176. Patron, in 1835, J. Frampton, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 115. Houses 19. Acres 1,410. Poor rates, in 1837, £71.

BUCKLAND-TOUTSAINTS, a parish in the hund. of Coleridge, Stanborough and Coleridge division, union of Kingsbridge, county of Devon; 2½ miles north-east of Kingsbridge. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Loddiswell. Pop., in 1801, 9; in 1831, 46. Houses 8. Acres 1,000. A. P. £848. Poor rates, in 1837, £52.

BUCKLAND (Westr), a parish in the hund. of Branton, division and union of South Molton, county of Devon, but locally situated in the hund. of South Molton; 6 miles north-west of South Molton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; valued at £13 3s. 4d.; gross income £220; in the patronage, in 1835, of Bar. Bassett. This parish possesses two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 257; in 1831, 273. Houses 54. Acres 2,290. A. P. £1,222. Poor rates, in 1837, £97.

BUCKLAND (Westr), a parish in the western division of the hund. of Kingsbury, union and division of Wellington, county of Somerset; 2½ miles west of Wellington, in the vicinity of the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Wellington. There are two daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 676; in 1831, 793. Houses 178. Acres 3,500. A. P. £5,016. Poor rates, in 1837, £330.

BUCKLEBURY, a parish in the hund. of Reading, union of Bradfield, county of Berks; 6 miles east-north-east of Newbury. Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Marlston, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; valued at £17; gross income £453. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Hartley. The church presents some specimens of Norman architecture. There are here four daily schools, one of which was endowed, in 1833, by the late Rev. W. H. H. Hartley, and three Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 1,122; in 1831, 1,300. Houses 261. Acres 6,970. A. P. £3,681. Poor rates, in 1837, £679.

BUCKLESHAM, a parish in the hund. of Colneis, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 5½ miles east-south-east of Ipswich. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £9 1s. 8d.; gross income £580. Patron, in 1835, W. Walford, Esq. Many curious petrifications are found in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 274. Houses 38. Acres 2,310. A. P. £1,713. Poor rates, in 1837, £307.

BUCKLEY, or BULKELEY, a township in the parish of Malpas, high division of Broxton hund., co-palatine of Chester; 9 miles west-north-west of Nantwich. There are two daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 185. Houses 38. Acres 800. A. P. £1,132. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

BUCKLOW HUNDRED, in the county of Chester, is bounded on the north and west by the river Mersey, which separates it from the county of Lancashire; on the south-west and south by the hundreds of Eddisbury and Northwich; and on the east by Macclesfield hundred. Area 107,710 acres. Houses 7,849. Pop., in 1831, 42,942.

BUCKMINSTER, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicestershire; 9½ miles east-north-east of Melton-Mowbray.

It contains the township of Buckminster and the chapelry of Sewstern. Living, a rectory with that of Sewstern, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £8 7s. 3½d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £150; gross income £161. Patron, in 1835, Lord Huntingtower. This parish possesses a daily and two Sunday schools. Charities connected with it produce about £25 10s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 262; in 1831, 842. Houses 148. Acres 2,080. A. P. £1,797. Poor rates in 1837, £190.

BUCKNALL, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Gartree, parts of Lindsey, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; 6½ miles west of Horncastle. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £9 11s. 10½d.; gross income £252. Patron, in 1835, Lord Monson. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 278. Houses 41. Acres 2,490. A. P. £2,429. Poor rates, in 1837, £193.

BUCKNALL, a township in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, northern division of the hund. of Pirehill, county of Stafford; 4 miles east-north-east of Newcastle-under-Lyne, in the vicinity of the Grand Trunk canal, and the Manchester and Birmingham railroad. Living, a rectory, with that of Bagnall, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £10; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Edward Powys. There are two daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £10 per annum. Pop., in 1811, 344; in 1831, 574. Houses 150. Other returns with the parish.

BUCKNELL, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Bicester, county of Oxford; 2½ miles west by north of Bicester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; valued at £13 6s. 0½d.; no return; in the patronage of New College, Oxford. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1779. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £11 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 274. Houses 52. Acres 1,670. A. P. £2,890. Poor rates, in 1837, £130.

BUCKNILL, a parish, partly in the hund. of Wigmore, county of Hereford, and partly in that of Puralow, union of Knighton, county of Salop; 5 miles east-north-east of Knighton, on the river Teme. It contains the township of Buxton and Coxhall. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; valued at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £342; in the patronage of the grocers' company of London. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1818. There are two daily schools in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £12 12s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 416; in 1831, 465. Houses 86. Acres 4,160. A. P. £2,808. Poor rates, in 1837, £214.

BUCKROSE WAPENTAKE, in the east riding of Yorkshire, is bounded on the north and west by the river Derwent, which separates it from the north riding; on the south and south-east by the Wilton and Bainton Beacon divisions of Harthill wapentake; and on the west by the wapentake of Dickering. Area 106,140 acres. Houses 2,142. Pop., in 1831, 11,969.

BUCKTON, a township in the parish of Bridlington, wapentake of Dickering, east riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles north of Bridlington. There are two daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £2 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831 171. Houses 28. Acres 1,840. A. P. £2,185. Poor rates, in 1837, £52.

BUCKWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union and county of Huntingdon; 7 miles north-west of Huntingdon. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £21 5s. 2½d.; gross income £330. Patron, in 1835, R. E. D. Shafto. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 130; in 1831, 136. Houses 28. Acres 2,290. A. P. £2,475. Poor rates, in 1837, £77.

BUDBROOKE, a parish in the Snitterfield division of the hund. of Barlichway, union and county of Warwick; 1½ mile north-west of Warwick, intersected by the Birmingham and Warwick canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; valued at £8; gross income £354; lately in the patronage of the corporation of Warwick. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here. There is here a daily school endowed by Job Marston with £22 11s. per annum. Other charities connected with the parish produce £44 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 348; in 1831, 467. Houses 99. Acres 3,050. A. P. £5,257. Poor rates, in 1837, £447.

BUDBY, a township in the parish of Edwinstow, Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, county of Nottingham; 2½ miles north-west by west of Ollerton. There is here a day and Sunday school containing 18 girls, established in 1791 by the late Dowager Countess, and continues under the patronage of the present Countess Manvers; the children are all fed and clothed, but return to their respective homes every day; each child on leaving the school has an allowance of £10, which is placed for them in the Retford Savings' bank. Pop., in 1801, 145; in 1831, 139. Houses 19. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £963. Poor rates, in 1837, £41.

BUDDESGATE HUNDRED, in the Fawley division of the county of Southampton. Area 45,250 acres. Houses 1,648. Pop., in 1831, 9,707.

BUDE, a small village and seaport, in the parish and hund. of Stratton, county of Cornwall; 1½ mile west of Stratton. It lies on the coast of the Bristol channel, and is resorted to as a bathing-place. Its trade has been increased and facilitated by the formation of the Bude and Launceston canal.

BUDEAUX, or BUDOCK (ST.) a parish in the hund. and division of Roborough, union of Plymouth St. Mary, county of Devon; 4 miles north-west by north of Plymouth, on the eastern bank of the Tamar. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; valued at £36 18s. 10d.; gross income £114; in the patronage of the vicar of St. Andrew's, Plymouth. This parish possesses three daily schools, one of which is endowed. Pop., in 1801, 544; in 1831, 669. Houses 118. Acres 2,500. A. P. £5,653. Poor rates, in 1837, £690.

BUDLE, a township in the parish and ward of Bambrrough, county of Northumberland; 3¼ miles east by north of Belford, on the southern shore of Warren bay. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 103. Houses 18. Poor rates, in 1837, £61.

BUDLEIGH, EAST HUNDRED, in the Honiton division of the county of Devon. Area 50,290 acres. Houses 3,896. Pop., in 1831, 20,266.

BUDLEIGH (EAST), a parish in the above hund., union of St. Thomas; 5 miles west-south-west of Sidmouth. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Wythcombe Rawleigh, in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £30, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £110; gross income £340. Patron, in 1835, Lord Rolle. An Independent church was formed here in 1719. At Budleigh-Satterton, which is frequented as a bathing-place, there are a chapel-of-ease, and a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists. This parish possesses eleven daily, two boarding, and four Sunday schools, and also four schools, in which 65 girls are taught reading and lace-making. A market-place was formerly held here. Pop. in 1801, 1,014; in 1831, 2,044. Houses 412. Acres 2,490. A. P. £5,067. Poor rates, in 1837, £525.—There is a cross-mail from Budleigh-Satterton to Exeter, 15 miles.

BUDLEIGH, WEST HUNDRED, in the Collumpton division of the county of Devon. Area 16,890 acres. Houses 560. Pop., in 1831, 3,047.

BUDOCK (ST.), a parish in the hund. of Kerrier, union of Falmouth, county of Cornwall; 1½ mile west of Falmouth. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of St. Glavias. There are here a daily, a boarding, and a Sunday school, the former of which is endowed with £6 per annum. Petty-sessions for the East division of the hundred of Kerrier are held at Gelley's hotel, Greenbank, in this parish. Pop. in 1801, 779; in 1831, 1,797. Houses 314. Acres 3,320. A. P. £8,618. Poor rates, in 1837, £456.

BUDOCK (ST.) See BUDEAUX, Devon.

BUDON. See BREDON.

BUDWORTH (GREAT), a parish in the union of Altrincham, Northwich, and Runcorn, co.-palatine of Chester; 2½ miles north-east of Northwich, intersected by the Grand Trunk canal, and in the vicinity of the Grand Junction railway. It contains the townships of Castle-Northwich, Hertford, and Winnington, in the hundred of Eddisbury; the chapelry of Nether-Peover, and Witton with Twambrook, and 6 townships in the hundred of Northwich; and the chapelries Aston by Budworth, and Little Leigh, with 21 townships in the hundred of Bucklow. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £6 9s. 4d., and rated in the parliamentary returns at £134 7s. 11d.; gross income £203; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Christchurch, Oxford. There are in this parish 49 daily schools, two of which are endowed, 16 Sunday, 3 infant, and 2 day and Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce about £120 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 11,747; in 1831, 15,955. Houses 2,070. Acres 36,450. A. P. £68,204. Poor rates, in 1837, £7,931.

BUDWORTH (GREAT), a township in the above parish. There are here two daily schools, and a Sunday school. Fairs are held for cows, horses, swine, hats, and pedlery, on February 13th, April 5th, and October 2d. Pop., in 1801, 463; in 1831, 586. Houses 126. Acres 840. A. P. £1,893. Poor rates, in 1837, £195.

BUDWORTH (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Eddisbury, union of Northwich, co.-palatine of Chester; 4 miles north-east by east of Tarporley. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £10, and rated in the parliamentary returns at £58; gross income £85; in the patronage of the bishop of Chester. This parish possesses three daily and two day and Sunday schools, and also twenty endowed alma-houses. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £52 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 434; in 1831, 621. Houses 103. Acres 2,630. A. P. £2,627. Poor rates, in 1837, £251.

BUERTON, a township in the parish of Aldford, lower division of the hund. of Broxton, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles south by east of Chester, in the neighbourhood of the Chester and Crewe railroad. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 59. Houses 9. Acres 790. A. P. £964.

BUERTON, a township in the parish of Audlem, hund. of Nantwich, co.-palatine of Chester; 7 miles south by east of Nantwich, in the vicinity of the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction canal. There are two daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 405; in 1831, 464. Houses 88. Acres 2,980. A. P. £3,295. Poor rates, in 1837, £184.

BUGBROOK, a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-Grove, union and county of Northampton; 6 miles west-south-west of Northampton, intersected by the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £34; gross income £801. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. J. Harrison. The great and small tithes and moduses, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1779. The Baptists have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1805. There are two daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. Each inhabitant pays four-pence annually to the duchy-court of Lancaster, held at West Haddon. Pop., in 1801, 611; in 1831, 865. Houses 183. Acres 2,420. A. P. £3,794. Poor rates, in 1837, £231.

BUG-LAWTON, or LAWTON YATE, a township in the parish of Astbury, hund. of Northwich, co-palatine of Chester; 2 miles north-east by east of Congleton, in the vicinity of the Grand Trunk canal. There are six daily and three Sunday schools here. Pop., in 1801, 517; in 1831, 2,087. Houses 331. Acres 2,960. A. P. £2,969. Poor rates, in 1837, £508.

BUGTHORPE, a parish in the union of Pocklington, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the wapentake of Buckrose, east riding of Yorkshire; 6½ miles north-north-west of Pocklington. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; valued at £20; gross income £111; in the patronage of the prebendary of York cathedral. The great and small tithes, the property of the prebend of Bugthorpe and the curate, were commuted in 1777. There are two daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 300. Houses 52. Acres 1,990. A. P. £2,805. Poor rates, in 1837, £113.

BUILDWAS, a parish in the Wellington division of the hund. of South Bradford, union of Madeley, county of Salop; 4 miles north-east by north of Much Wenlock, on the river Severn. Living, a donative curacy, formerly in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Chester, not in charge; gross income £20; in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of W. Moseley, Esq. There are an infant and a Sunday school in this parish. "Roger, bishop of Chester, built here, A. D. 1135, an abbey for monks of the order of Savigny, to the honour of St. Mary and St. Chad. Herein were twelve monks, about the time of the suppression, who were endowed with £129 6s. 10d. per annum. The site, and all the lands belonging to this monastery, were granted 29° Henry VIII., to Edward, Lord Powis." Tanner's Not. Mon. The remains of the church form an interesting ruin, covered with ivy. They present nearly the earliest specimen of pointed arches. A beautiful iron bridge of one arch, 130 feet in span, was erected over the Severn at this place in 1796, at an expense of £6,034. Pop., in 1801, 258; in 1831, 246. Houses 50. Acres 2,950. A. P. £2,769. Poor rates, in 1837, £312.

BULTH HUNDRED, in the county of Brecon, South Wales. Area 1,162 acres. Houses 1,321. Pop., in 1831, 6,699.

BULTH, or BUALTH, sometimes called LLANFAIR, a parish and market-town in the hund. and union of Bulth, county of Brecon, South Wales; 17½ miles west-north-west of London, and 12 south-west of New Radnor. It stands in a very picturesque situation on the Wye, over which is a bridge of six arches, leading into Radnorshire. The town consists chiefly of two parallel streets, which form irregular terraces on the side of a steep declivity. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; valued in the parliamentary returns at £70; gross income £106. Patrons, in 1835, R. B. Price and V. Pocock, Esqrs. There are several dissenting meeting-houses here, among which is a church of Calvinistic Methodists, formed in 1747. There are also five daily schools, two of which are endowed, and five Sunday schools. Bulth is supposed to have been the Roman station Bullaum. The castle, at the east end of the town, was built before the Conquest, and was accidentally destroyed by fire, together with the greater part of the town, in 1690. The damage sustained amounted to about £12,000. Monday is market-day; fairs for sheep, horned cattle, and horses, are held on the 3d Monday in February, June 27th, October 2d, and December 6th. Petty-sessions are held in the Lion hotel here for the hundred of Bulth. Pop., in 1801, 677; in 1831, 1,034. Houses 225. A. P. £2,430. Poor rates, in 1837, £324.—The air of Bulth is salubrious, and about a mile to the north-west of the town are some mineral springs, called Park wells, which afford three sorts of water, saline, sulphureous, and chalybeate. Pump rooms have been erected here.

BULBRIDGE. See WILTON.

BULBY. See IRNHAM.

BULCAMP. See BLITHING HUNDRED.

BULCOTE, a hamlet in the parish of Burton-Joyce, wapentake of Thurgarton, county of Nottingham; 6 miles north-east of Nottingham, on the northern bank of the river Trent. Living, a curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Burton-Joyce: which see, for commutation of tithes. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 142. Houses 28. Acres 970. A. P. £1,020. Poor rates, in 1837, £59.

BULFORD, a parish in the hund. and union of Amesbury, county of Wilts; 2 miles north-north-east of Amesbury, on the river Avon. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; valued at £40; gross income £75. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Southby. Here is an Independent chapel; the church was formed in 1806. This parish possesses two daily schools, and a day and Sunday school, which is endowed. Pop., in 1801, 228; in 1831, 290. Houses 58. Acres 4,160. A. P. £2,403. Poor rates, in 1837, £177.

BULK, a township in the parish of Lancaster, hund. of Lonsdale, south of the sands, co-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles north-east of Lancaster, in the vicinity of the Lancaster and Kendal canal. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 102. Houses 18. Acres 1,200. A. P. £1,841. Poor rates, in 1837, £218.

BULKINGTON, a parish in the Kirby division of the hund. of Knightlow, union of Nuneaton, county of Warwick; 4 miles south-east by south of Nuneaton, intersected by the Coventry canal, and the line of projected railway from Stafford to Rugby. It includes the hamlets of Barnacle, Bramcote, Mearston-Jabbett, Ryton, and Weston. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Worcester; valued at £6 10s. 7d.; gross income £260; in the patronage of the Crown. Improper and vicarial tithes, the property of the free grammar-school of Robert Johnstone, hospitals of Oakham and Uppingham, and the vicar, were commuted in 1770. There is an Independent chapel here; the church was formed in 1812. There are two daily and four Sunday schools in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £68 per annum. The inhabitants are partly employed in the weaving of silk ribbons. Pop., in 1801, 1,311; in 1831, 1,792. Houses 382. Acres 4,600. A. P. £6,751. Poor rates, in 1837, £904.

BULKINGTON, a tything in the parish of Keevil, hund. of Melksham, county of Wilts; 6 miles east of Trowbridge. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 326; in 1831, 249. Houses 42. Acres 760. A. P. £2,147. Poor rates, in 1837, £110.

BULKWORTHY, a parish in the hund. of Shebbear, division of Great Torrington, union of Bideford, county of Devon; 7 miles south-west of Great Torrington. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Buckland-Brewer. This parish possesses two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831, 198. Houses 36. Acres 6,050. A. P. £521. Poor rates, in 1837, £65.

BULLER'S GREEN, a township in the parish and ward of Morpeth, county of Northumberland; adjacent to Morpeth, and included by the new boundaries act within that burgh. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 203. Houses 52. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £351. Poor rates, in 1837, £65.

BULLEY, a parish in the division of the duchy of Lancaster, county of Gloucester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Newent. Living, a curacy annexed to Churcham vicarage. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 176; in 1831, 216. Houses 43. Acres 780. A. P. £328. Poor rates, in 1837, £122.

BULLINGHAM (UPPER AND LOWER), a parish in the hund. of Webtree, union and county of Hereford; 2 miles south of Hereford, in the neighbourhood of the Abergavenny and Hereford railroad. Living, a perpetual curacy, a peculiar of the dean of Hereford; valued in the parliamentary returns at £88; gross income £109; in the patronage of the prebendary of Bullingham in Hereford cathedral. Pop., in 1801, 339; in 1831, 397. Houses 75. Acres 1,700. A. P. £2,382. Poor rates, in 1837, £196.

BULLINGTON HUNDRED, in the county of Oxford. Area 46,630 acres. Houses 2,493. Pop., in 1831, 12,857.

BULLINGTON, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Wraggoc, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 2 miles west of Wragby. Living, a curacy, not in charge, annexed to that of Goltho. "Simon Fitz-William or de Kyma, in the time of Stephen, built in his park here, a religious house for a prior and convent of both sexes, under the rule of St. Gilbert of Sempringham, to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, which before the dissolution was endowed with £187 7s. 9d., and was granted to Charles, duke of Suffolk, 30th Henry VIII." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1811, 36; in 1831, 50. Houses 10. Acres 760. A. P. £952. Poor rates, in 1837, £30.

BULLINGTON, a chapelry in the parish and hund. of Wherwell, Andover division of the county of Southampton; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Whitechurch. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Wherwell. Some Roman antiquities have been found here. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 189. Houses 23. Acres 1,760. A. P. £1,532. Poor rates, in 1837, £44.

BULLOCK'S HALL, a township in the parish of Warkworth, eastern division of Morpeth ward, county of Northumberland; 7 miles south-east of Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 7; in 1831, 14. Houses 4. Other returns with the parish.

BULLSTON. See BOULSTON.

BULMER, a parish in the hund. of Hinckford, union of Sudbury, county of Essex; 2 miles west-south-west of Sudbury. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly consolidated with that of Belchamp-Walter, formerly in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, now in the dio. of Rochester; valued at £8; gross income £445. Patron, in 1835, S. M. Raymond. There is a day and Sunday school in this parish. A fair is held here on Tuesday before Holy Thursday, for cattle and hops. Pop., in 1801, 421; in 1831, 706. Houses 128. Acres 2,880. A. P. £3,761. Poor rates, in 1837, £390.

BULMER WAPENTAKE, in the south extremity of the north riding of Yorkshire. Area 113,308 acres. Houses 8,710. Pop., in 1831, 19,368.

BULMER, a parish in the above wapentake, union of Malton; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of New Malton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £11; gross income £403. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fitz-William. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1777. This parish possesses four daily and two Sunday schools. It contains the townships of Bulmer and Welburn, with the chapelry of Henderskelf. Pop., in 1801, 754; in 1831, 901. Houses 179. Acres 3,800. A. P. £5,139. Poor rates, in 1837, £232. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 295; in 1831, 360. Houses 72. Acres 1,430. A. P. £2,239. Poor rates, in 1837, £78.—see HENDERSKELF.

BULPHAM, or BULFAN, a parish in the hund. of Barstable, union of Orsett, county of Essex; 3 miles north-west of Horndon-on-the-Hill, in the vicinity of the Thames haven railroad. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £23; gross income £345. Patron, in 1835, J. S. Hand, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 236. Houses 29. Acres 2,020. A. P. £2,110. Poor rates, in 1837, £188.

BULVERHITHE, a manor, and member of the town and port of Hastings, located in the hund. and parish of Bexhill, rape of Hastings, county of Sussex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile east of Bexhill. See HASTINGS.

BULWELL, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Broxtow, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 4 miles north-west by north of Nottingham. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 5s. 10d.; gross income £353. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. A. Pauley. There are in this parish three daily schools, one of which has a small endowment, four infant schools, containing 86 children, and four Sunday schools. In 1838 there was a cotton mill here, employing 95 hands. Pop., in 1801, 1,944; in 1831, 2,611. Houses 502. Acres 1,210. A. P. £2,116. Poor rates, in 1837, £423.

BULWICK, or BULWICH, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Oundle, county of Northampton, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Kettering. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £18 7s. 1d.; gross income £386. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Tryon, Esq. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1778. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £35 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 369; in 1831, 482. Houses 86. Acres 1,910. A. P. £3,546. Poor rates, in 1837, £220.

BUMPSTED-HELION, a parish in the hund. of Freshwell, union of Risbridge, county of Essex; 8 miles north-north-east of Thaxted. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £13; gross income £176; in the patronage of the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. This parish possesses two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 662; in 1831, 847. Houses 158. Acres 2,790. A. P. £3,296. Poor rates, in 1837, £510.

BUMPSTED-STEEPLE, a parish in the hund. of Hinckford, union of Risbridge, county of Essex; 8 miles north-west by west of Castle-Hedingham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £15 2s. 1d.; gross income £247; in the patronage of the lord-chancellor. The Independents have a place of worship here. This parish possesses three daily and two boarding schools. Pop., in 1801, 787; in 1831, 1,069. Houses 206.

Acres 3,460. A. P. £4,405. Poor rates, in 1837, £616.

BUNBURY, a parish in the hund. of Eddisbury, co.-palatine of Chester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Tarporley, intersected by the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction canal, and the Chester and Crewe railroad, and also by the line of the proposed railway to St. George's Harbour in Derbyshire. It comprises the townships of Alpraham, Beeston, Bunbury, Calveley, Houghton, Peckforton, Ridley, Spurstow, Tiverton, Tilston-Fernall, and Wardle, with the chapelry of Burwardsley. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued in the parliamentary returns at £55; gross income £117; in the patronage of the Haberdashers' company, London. The church is built of red free-stone, and contains some fine monuments. Tanner says—"In the parish-church here, Sir Hugh Calveley, Knight, about A. D. 1386, founded a college for a master and six secular chaplains, to the honour of St. Boniface. Its reputed yearly revenue was said to be 100 marks; but, 26th Henry VIII., its clear value was fixed at £48 2s. 8d., when the foundation consisted of a dean, five vicars, and two choristers. It was purchased from the crown, 18th Elizabeth, by Thomas Aldersey of London, merchant-tailor, who bestowed the income in charitable uses." This parish possesses fourteen daily schools, one of which is endowed, and four Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce about £60 per annum. Pop. of the parish, in 1801, 3,073; in 1831, 4,373. Houses 754. Acres 17,600. A. P. £18,959. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,556. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 519; in 1831, 834. Houses 147. Acres 1,000. A. P. £1,610. Poor rates, in 1837, £358.

BUNTON. See ASHWINGTON, Sussex.

BUNDLEY, or BUNDLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of North Tawton with Winkley, county of Devon; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Chulmleigh. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £10 17s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £232. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Egremont. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 339. Houses 62. Acres 2,410. A. P. £1,185. Poor rates, in 1837, £131.

BUNGAY, a market-town, containing two parishes, in the hund. and union of Wangford, county of Suffolk; 38 miles north-north-east of Ipswich, and 107 north-east by north of London. Living, the vicarage of the Holy Trinity, and the perpetual curacy of St. Mary, both in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich. The former is rated at £8 0s. 6d.; gross income £305; patron, the bishop of Ely: the latter (not in charge) is valued at £15; gross income £115. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Norfolk. The church of the Holy Trinity is a small ancient structure with a round tower; that of St. Mary is spacious and handsome. There are a Roman Catholic chapel, and places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists, here: the Methodist congregation was formed in 1801. The free grammar-school is of ancient and uncertain foundation; it has the privilege of sending four scholars to Emanuel college, Cambridge. The school is endowed with a farm at St. Lawrence Ilketshall, containing 33 acres, now let for £45 per annum, and the vicarage of St. Andrew Ilketshall, the value of which is about £100 per annum. There are also here 22 daily and 4 Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce about £90 per annum. In Holy Trinity parish there are almshouses for aged persons, and a dispensary was established in 1828, which is very liberally supported. "Roger de Glanvil, and the countess Gundreda his lady, temp. Hen. II., founded here a Benedictine nunnery to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary and of the Holy Cross. Here was, temp. Edward I., a prioress and fifteen sisters religious; but at the dissolution not above seven nuns, who had a yearly income rated at £82 2s. 1d. ob. This house was granted, 29th Hen. VIII., to Thomas, duke of Norfolk." Tanner's Not. Mon.—The town is neatly built, and pleasantly situated on the Waveney, which is here navigable for small barges, and forms the boundary between Norfolk and Suffolk. On the northern side of the town is an extensive common, with a promenade leading to a bath-house. There are branches of three banks here, those of Messrs. Gurney, Messrs. Harvey and Hudson, and the East of England; and a considerable trade carried on in corn, malt, flour, coal, and lime. The market is on Thursday; the fairs, May 14th for horses and cattle, and September 25th. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty-sessions for the division of Bungay here. Pop., in 1801, 2,349; in 1831, 3,734. Houses 789. Acres 2,090. A. P. £7,517. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,207.

BUNNY, or BOWBY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Rushcliffe, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Nottingham. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 14s.; gross income £425. Patrons, in 1835, Lord Raneliffe and Rev. J. Boyer. Certain vicarial tithes, the property of the lay-impropriators and vicars, were commuted in 1797. There are a daily and a Sunday school here, the former of which is endowed with £48 15s. per annum, arising from an estate left for charitable purposes, and is free to the inhabitants of Bradmore; there is also an endowed almshouse for four widows. Pop., in 1801, 359; in 1831, 371. Houses 70. Acres 2,000. A. P. £2,554. Poor rates, in 1837, £141.

BUNTINGFORD, a market-town and chapelry, situate in the four several parishes of Layston, Aspeden, Throcking, and Wyddiall, in the hund. of Edwinstree, union of Buntingford, county of Hertford; 13 miles north-north-east of Hertford. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to the vicarage of Layston. The Independents and Quakers have also places of worship here. The free grammar-school in this place was endowed, in 1633, by Mrs. Freeman, with land producing £10 10s. per annum; to which was added the moiety of the produce of lands bequeathed by Dr. Seth Ward, bishop of Salisbury, to Christ's college, Cambridge; the other being applied to the endowment of four scholarships of £12 each per annum, for boys on this foundation. This worthy prelate—who was a native of this town—gave £600 to purchase lands, appropriating the rental to the apprenticing of poor children. He also founded eight almshouses here, and endowed them with the rent of lands in Lincolnshire. The market is on Monday. The fairs are on the 29th of June, St. Andrew's day, and the 30th of November, for pedler's ware. Petty-sessions for the Buntingford division of the hundred of Edwinstree are held here. Returns with the several parishes. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Buntingford, at an expense of £2,657 10s., capable of containing 120 persons.—The Buntingford poor-law union comprehends 16 parishes, embracing an area of 45 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 6,327. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £4,615. Expenditure, in 1838, £3,048.

BUNWELL, a parish in the hund. and union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of St. Mary Stratton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £17; gross income £661. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. Buxton, Bart. There are four daily schools in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £10 8s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 602; in 1831, 947. Houses 182. Acres 2,280. A. P. £3,679. Poor rates, in 1837, £429.

BURASTON-WITH-WHETMORE, a township in the parish of Burford, hund. of Overa, county of Salop; 2 miles north-east of Tenbury, in the vicinity of the Leominster canal. A chapel-of-ease has been erected here. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1821, 286. Houses and acres with the parish. A. P. £1,587. Poor rates, in 1837, £98.

BURBAGE, a parish, in the hund. of Kinwardstone, union of Pewsey, county of Wilts; 4½ miles east by north of Pewsey, intersected by the Kennet and Avon canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 3s. 1½d.; gross income £263; in the patronage of the prebendary in the cathedral of Salisbury. This parish possesses two daily schools, and a day and Sunday school, endowed with £10 per annum by the late Philip Pearce, Esq. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £100 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,008; in 1831, 1,448. Houses 254. Acres 3,530. A. P. £5,922. Poor rates, in 1837, £498.

BURBAGE, or BURBACK, a chapelry in the parish of Aston-Flamville, hund. of Sparkenhoe, county of Leicester; 1½ mile south-east of Hinckley; on the post-road. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Aston-Flamville. There are an Independent place of worship here, and eight daily and three Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 1,099; in 1831, 1,618. Houses 326. Acres 3,170. A. P. £6,924. Poor rates, in 1837, £590.

BURBEACH HUNDRED, in the rape of Bramber, county of Sussex. Area 8,630 acres. Houses 331. Pop., in 1831, 2,139.

BURCOMBE (SOUTH), a parish in the hund. of Cawden and Cadworth, union of Wilton, county of Wilts; 1½ mile west-south-west of Wilton. Living, a perpetual curacy with St. John's, near Wilton, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; valued in the parliamentary returns at £15 3s.; gross income £52. Patron, the master of St. John's hospital, Wilton. There are two daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 253; in 1831, 419. Houses 83. Acres 3,090. A. P. £1,172. Poor rates, in 1837, £149.

BURCOT, or WOOD-BURCOT. See TOWCESTER.

BURCOTT, a parish in the hund. of Dorchester, union of Abingdon, county of Oxford; 5 miles east by south of Abingdon; on the post-road. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1775. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 163. Houses 33. Acres 1,550. A. P. £796. Poor rates, in 1837, £85.

BURDON, a township in the parish of Bishop-Wearmouth, north division of Easington ward, co-palatine of Durham; 4 miles south by west of Sunderland, in the vicinity of the Durham and Sunderland railway. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 162. Houses 29. Acres 1,000. A. P. £931. Poor rates, in 1837, £54.

BURDON (GREAT), a township in the parish of Haughton-le-Skerne, south-east division of Darlington ward, co-palatine of Durham; 2½ miles north-north-east of Darlington; in the vicinity of the great North of England railway. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 102. Houses 22. Acres 510. A. P. £1,151. Poor rates, in 1837, £90.

BURDOSWALD, in the parish of Lanercost, county of Cumberland. It is supposed by some antiquaries to have been the Roman station called Amboglanna.

BURE. See CHRIST-CHURCH.

BURE (THE), a tributary of the Yare in Norfolk. It rises near Hindolveston, and flows past Aylsham, whence it is navigable to Yarmouth.

BURES (ST. MARY), a parish, partly in the hund. of Hinckford, county of Essex, but chiefly in that of Babergh, union of Sudbury, county of Suffolk; about 5 miles south-east by south of Sudbury, on the river Stour. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich; now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £12 16s. 0½d.; gross income £273. Patron, in 1835, O. Hanbury, Esq. The Baptists have a place of worship here; their church was formed in 1834. There are two daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £11 8s. 3d. per annum. A fair is held for toys on Holy Thursday. Pop., in 1801, 1,129; in 1831, 1,559. Houses 210. Acres 4,220. A. P. £5,184. Poor rates, in 1837, £779.

BURES-MOUNT, or LITTLE BURES, a parish in the Colchester division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Lexden and Winstree, county of Essex. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £367. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. John Brett. Pop., in 1801, 250; in 1831, 262. Houses 49. Acres 1,430. A. P. £1,910. Poor rates, in 1837, £259.

BURFIELD. See BURGHFIELD.

BURFORD, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Bampton, union of Witney, county of Oxford; 18 miles west by north of Oxford, and 73 west-north-west of London; it contains the hamlet of Upton and Signet. Living, a discharged vicarage with the chapelry of Fulbrook, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £31 13s.; gross income £294. Patron, the bishop of Oxford. Tithes, the property of the bishop of Oxford and vicar, commuted in 1794. Here are places of worship belonging to several dissenting bodies; the Baptist church was formed in 1700. This town is pleasantly situated at the western extremity of the county, on the borders of Gloucestershire, on the banks of the small river Windrush. The chief manufactures are duffles, rugs, and saddlery. The market is on Saturday; fairs are held for cattle and sheep on the last Saturday in April; for horses, sheep, cows, and small ware, July 5th; and for toys and cheese, September 25th. There is a branch of the County of Gloucester bank here.—In 1571 a free school was founded here by Symon Wisdom, an alderman of this town; its income is £80 per annum. There are also five daily, three day and boarding, and three Sunday schools. Here are several alms-houses, and many other charitable endowments and bequests. Tanner says, "A small priory or hospital here, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. It was valued at £13 6s. 6d. per annum, Dugd., Speed, and granted 35th Hen. VIII. to Edmund Herman."—Burford is a place of great antiquity. In 685, or, according to Spelman, 705, a synod was held here by kings Ethelred and Berthwald, at which Aldhelm, bishop of Sherburn, was desired to write against the errors of the British churches relative to Easter. Here Cuthred, king of the West Saxons, then tributary to the Mercians, unable any longer to bear the grievous exactions of their king Ethelbald, revolted from him, and defeated him, and took his standard, in which historians say was painted a golden dragon. 'Bewchamps, erles of Warwyke, were lordes of it, and also of the forest of Wichwood. Some say the Spencers formerly had some dominion in it. There is a notable quarry of fine stone about Burford. There was a place in Burford called the Priory.' ['Leland,' vii. 63.]

This town gave birth to Dr. Peter Heylin, and was the residence of speaker Lenthall, who bought an estate and good house of Lord Falkland, and died here, 1662. The seat and manor still belong to the family of Lenthall, and in the house are said to be many of the pictures of Charles the First's collection, brought by the speaker from Hampton court. The church is a large handsome building: the two west doors adorned with Saxon zigzag and heads as at Isley, and others in this county; the porch of florid Gothic. At the entrance of the churchyard are some ancient alms-houses, and the vicarage house opposite to them rebuilt by Symon Wisdom, alderman here, 1579, shows marks of greater antiquity."—In 1649 a battle was fought near this town between Fairfax and the royalists, when the former was victorious. As some workmen were lately digging a road from Burford to Barrington, they discovered, near the surface of the earth, a stone-coffin of an immense size, and extremely irregular, weighing nearly three tons, which, on examination, was found to contain the perfect skeleton of a man of middle stature, having his teeth entire, also a great number of short nails completely oxidated and matted together in pieces of hide, of which materials it is probable a shield was formed. From the size and appearance of this coffin, and from the circumstance of its being found near to a place known by the name of Battle-Edge, it may be presumed to have been deposited there after the battle between Ethelbald and Cuthred, above noticed.—Burford gives the title of Earl to the Duke of St. Alban's. The late Sir William Beechey, R. A., was born here in 1753. Pop., in 1801, 1,516; in 1831, 1,620. Houses 355. Acres 2,170. A. P. £2,007. Poor rates, in 1837, £742.

BURFORD, a township and parish in the hund. of Overs, union of Tenbury, county of Salop; 1 mile west of Tenbury, on the river Teme; comprising the townships of Buraston with Whetmore, Nash, Tilsope and Weston, and Whetton. Living, a rectory in three portions, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated—the first portion—at £9 13s. 4d.; gross income £392; the second, to which the curacy of Whetton is annexed, at £8; gross income £300; and the third, with the curacies of Buraston and Nash annexed, at £8 13s. 4d.; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Rushout Bowles.—"In this parish-church were three prebendaries, or portionists, in the beginning of the reign of King Edward I., and, in 13th Elizabeth, the college, or collegiate church here, was granted, with all that belonged to it, to William Jeames and John Grey."—Tanner's Not. Mon. This parish possesses an infant, and a day and Sunday school. Charities connected with it produce £10 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 819; in 1831, 1,086. Houses 212. Acres 8,370, of which 212 were in hops in 1837. A. P. £7,526. Poor rates, in 1837, £405. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 215; in 1821, 365. A. P. £2,663. Poor rates, in 1837, £173.

BURGATE, a parish in the hund. and union of Hartismere, county of Suffolk; 4½ miles west-north-west of Eye, in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £13 10s. 10d.; gross income £560. Patron, the bishop of Ely. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 296; in 1831, 243. Houses 40. Acres 1,830. A. P. £2,524. Poor rates, in 1837, £468.

BURGH, a parish in the hund. of Carlford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 4 miles north-west of Woodbridge. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8 3s. 4d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, M. Barnes, Esq. There are in this parish a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 222; in 1831, 252. Houses 54. Acres 780. A. P. £2,182. Poor rates, in 1837, £207.

BURGH-APTON, a parish in the hund. of Clavering, but located in the hund. of Henstead, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 8½ miles south-east of Norwich; on a branch of the river Yare. Living, a rectory with a mediety of Holveston, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £575. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Abergavenny. There is a daily school here. Charities connected with the parish produce £28 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 509. Houses 77. Acres 1,620. A. P. £3,274. Poor rates, in 1837, £230.

BURGH-NEXT-AYLSHAM, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Erpingham, union of Aylsham, county of Norfolk; 2 miles south-east of Aylsham; on the river Bure. Tithes commuted in 1840. This parish possesses a daily school. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 247. Houses 33. Acres 540. A. P. £1,131. Poor rates, in 1837, £127.

BURGH-CASTLE, a parish in the hund. of Mutford and Lothingland, county of Suffolk; 4 miles west-south-west from Great Yarmouth. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £411. Patron, the lord-chancellor. The church is said to have been built out of the ruins of a fort supposed to have been the Garianonum of the Romans, so called from its commanding the mouth of the river Gerionus, or Yare. "Upon the first preaching of Christianity to the East Angles, about A. D. 630, King Sigebert gave to Furasus (a holy man who came out of Ireland) a place near the castle or city, whereon to found a monastery, which was augmented both in buildings and revenues by King Anna." Tanner's Not. Mon.—The poor's fuel allotments in this parish produce £27 10s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 189; in 1831, 270. Houses 52. Acres 1,210. A. P. £2,264. Poor rates, in 1837, £512.—The main difficulty in identifying Burgh-Castle with the ancient Garianonum is its distance from the sea, it being now above 3 miles inland. But it is certain that at the time of the Roman conquest the Yare and Waveney here exhibited a large estuary, of which the remains still appear in the marshy district extending from this place to Norwich, a distance of 20 miles, and in which anchors, rings, and other maritime implements have frequently been dug up. The whole area of the camp is 5 acres, 2 roods, and 20 perches. The bricks which have been used in its construction are of a fine red colour and close texture.

BURGH-WITH-GRISBY, or BURGH-UPON-BANE, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Wragg, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 6½ miles west of Louth, on the river Baine. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 10s. 10d., and in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £133. Patron, in 1835, G. Lister, Esq. There are two daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 131. Houses 27. Acres 1,870. A. P. £2,729. Poor rates, in 1837, £190.

BURGH-PARVA. See MELTON-CONSTABLE with BURGH.

BURGH-MATTISHALL, or MATTISHALL-BURGH, a parish in the hund. of Mitford, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 5½ miles east by south of East Dereham; on a branch of the river Wensum. Living, a discharged rectory united to that of Hockering. Charities connected with the parish produce £21 12s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 173; in 1831, 210. Houses 43. Acres 690. A. P. £847. Poor rates, in 1837, £105.

BURGH-ST.-MARGARET, a parish in the western division of the hund. of Flegg, county of Norfolk; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east of Acle, in the vicinity of the river Bure. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Burgh-St.-Mary, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8 13s. 4d.; gross income £440. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Lucas. There are here three daily schools. Charities connected with the parish produce £78 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 317; in 1831, 491. Houses 68. Acres 2,160. A. P. £1,555. Poor rates, in 1837, £180.

BURGH-ST.-PETER, or WHEATACRE-BURGH, a parish in the hund. of Clavering, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 6 miles east-north-east of Beccles. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 6s. 8d.; gross income £330. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Boycott. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 316. Houses 61. Acres 1,970. A. P. £2,575. Poor rates, in 1837, £91.

BURGH-SOUTH, a parish in the hund. of Mitford, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east of Watton; near the Blackwater river. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 13s. 6d.; gross income £253. Patron, in 1835, T. T. Gurdon, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 176; in 1831, 281. Houses 50. Acres 1,260. A. P. £1,555. Poor rates, in 1837, £151.

BURGH-IN-THE-MARSH, a market-town and parish in the Marsh division of the wapentake of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles east by south of Spilsby. Living, a discharged vicarage, annexed, in 1729, to the vicarage of Winthorpe, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £100. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. There are a grammar-school here, endowed with 27 acres of land, for which 80 pupils are taught free, and four daily schools, the teachers of two of which receive each £10 per annum from the fees of Holden's charity. The Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists have chapels here. The market-day is Thursday; the fairs are held on the 13th of May and 2d of October: the first is for sheep, cattle, and horses; the second for cattle and clothing. There is a branch of the Stamford and Boston banking company here. "The name of this place affords undoubted evidence of its Roman origin, and, according to Dr. Stukeley, here was once 'a Roman castrum to guard the sea-coast, probably against the Saxon rovers. It is a piece of very high ground, partly natural, partly raised by Roman labour, overlooking the wide extended marshes, perhaps in those times covered with salt-water, at least in spring-tides. There are two artificial tumuli, one very high, called Cockhill. In St. Mary's churchyard, now demolished, Roman coins have been found.' This town formerly possessed two churches, St. Mary's and St. Peter's; but the first-named edifice has been long since demolished. The burying-ground belonging to it was afterwards used by the general Baptists as a place of sepulture, but it has since been converted into a garden. St. Peter's church is built on the plan adopted in most of the Marsh ecclesiastical edifices, consisting of a nave, north and south aisles, chancel, and a fine embattled tower at the west end; the battlements not pierced, but ornamented with quatrefoils, a turret at each corner, and three others on each side. The angles of the tower are supported by double buttresses. The nave is surrounded by an embattled parapet, and supported by five light pointed arches, over which is a range of handsome clerestory windows. The beauty of the church has been much impaired by the removal of the tracery work from the windows of both aisles, to give more light. Two chapels, one at the east end of each aisle, are separated from the nave by Gothic fret-work. The pulpit is made of dark oak, and is very richly carved; it is inscribed '1623, John Houlden.' The font and pedestal are octangular; in each compartment round the bowl is a blank shield, the cover is carved and surmounted by a spire raised on eight duplicated pillars; on the summit of the spire is an eagle gilt, with extended wings, and holding in its mouth a baton and bottle." [History of Lincolnshire, Lincoln, 1834, vol. ii. p. 129.] Pop., in 1801, 716; in 1831, 906. Houses 205. Acres 4,240. A. P. £7,149. Poor rates, in 1837, £584.

BURGH-UPON-THE-SANDS, a parish in Cumberland ward, union of Carlisle, county of Cumberland; 6 miles west by north of Carlisle; on the north side of the Ship canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £5 1s. 10d., and in the parliamentary returns at £95; gross income £91. Patron, the lord-chancellor. This parish comprises the townships of Boustead Hill, Burgh-by-Sands, or Burgh-Head, Longburgh, Moorhouse, and Westend. It was the scene of many encounters between the English and Scots; and the death of Edward I. took place here on the 7th of July, 1307, whilst marching against Robert Bruce of Scotland. "In the very place where this brave and valiant king expired, (the memory whereof had been always preserved by some great stones rolled upon it,) is now erected a very fair square pillar, nine yards and a half in height, with these inscriptions in large Roman letters on three sides, viz.: on the west side, 'Memoria eterna Edwardi I. Anglie, longe clarissimi, qui in belli apparatu contra Scotos occupatus hic in castris obiit 7 Julii, A. D. 1307.' On the north side, 'Nobilissimus Princeps Henricus Howard, Dux Norfolkice, Comes Mareschall. Anglie, Comes Arund. &c. Ab Edvardo I. Anglie oriundus, P. A. D. 1685.' On the other side, 'Johannes Aglionby, J. C. F. C. i. e. Juris consultis fieri causavit.' Beneath, 'Tho. Langstone fecit, 1685.' The inhabitants say, that under this burgh, in the very estuary, there was first a sea-fight between the Scots and English, and when the tide was out, a second fight began between the horse of both sides, as strange as that which Pliny relates in Caramania, and makes a great wonder of it. Into this estuary the Huna or river Eden, having passed through part of Westmoreland, and quite cross the north-east parts of the county, falls with a vast body of waters, which, in the year 1216, seemed to be the greatest enemy that the Scots had; for when they had plundered the English without resistance, and were returning with loads of spoil, they came upon them with a full torrent, and swallowed up quick the whole plundering crew." [Magna Britannia, i. p. 379.]—The original pillar described in the foregoing extract no longer exists; but a modern one still marks its site.—There are here three daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Those inhabitants, whose real estate is not worth £12 per annum, are entitled to send their children for education to a school at Wiggonby in Aikton. Pop., in 1801, 720; in 1831, 1,372. Houses 170. Acres 6,380. A. P. £5,878. Poor rates, in 1837, £271.

BURGHWALLIS, a parish and township in the upper division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles north-north-west of Doncaster; near the post-road, and in the vicinity of Dutch river. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £14 6s. 10d.; and in the parliamentary returns at £37 ls.; gross income £328. Patron, in 1835, M. Tasburgh, Esq. All tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1813. Pop., in 1801, 182; in 1831, 223. Houses 38. Acres 1,700. A. P. £2,490. Poor rates, in 1837, £219.

BURGHCLERE, a parish in the hund. of Evingar, union of Kingsclere, Kingsclere division of the county of Southampton; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Whitechurch. It includes Earliston tything in Kingsclere hundred. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Newtown, in the dio. of Winchester, exempt from visitation; rated at £30; gross income £984. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Carnarvon. This parish possesses two daily schools, one of which—a National school—is endowed with £8 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 581; in 1831, 802. Houses 151. Acres 3,560. A. P. £4,844. Poor rates, in 1837, £580.

BURGHESHER. See BURWASH.

BURGHFIELD, or BURFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Theale, union of Bradfield, county of Berks; 5 miles south-west of Reading. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £14 19s. 2d.; gross income £963. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Shrewsbury. There are a daily and a day and Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 738; in 1831, 965. Houses 176. Acres 4,700. A. P. £6,189. Poor rates, in 1837, £428.

BURGHILL, a parish in the hund. of Grimsworth, union and county of Hereford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Hereford. It includes the township of Tillington. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £6 18s. 2d., and in the parliamentary returns at £43 10s. 6d.; gross income £94. Patron, in 1835, B. Biddulph, Esq. There are a daily school, endowed with £9 9s. 8d. per annum, and a Sunday school in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £21 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 639; in 1831, 856. Houses 181. Acres 3,170. A. P. £4,139. Poor rates, in 1837, £569.

BURGHLEY-HOUSE, in the liberty of Peterborough, Northamptonshire, parish of St. Martin's; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east of Stamford; on the post-road, south of the river Welland. This mansion, the seat of the marquess of Exeter, is one of the noblest monuments of British architecture in the times of Queen Elizabeth. It is an immense pile forming the four sides of a large court, and though decorated with a variety of fantastic ornaments, according to the fashion of the time in which it was built, has still a noble and imposing appearance. Sir William Cecil began to erect this mansion in 1575. See 'Guide to Burghley-House,' 1816.

BURHAM, a parish in the hund. of Larkfield, lathe of Aylesford, union of Malling, county of Kent; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-west of Aylesford; on the Medway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £8, and in the parliamentary returns at £133; gross income £191. Patron, in 1835, C. Milner, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 287. Houses 53. Acres 1,630. A. P. £1,833. Poor rates, in 1837, £170.

BURINGTON. See BERRINGTON.

BURITON, a parish in the hund. of Finch-Dean, union of Petersfield, South Alton division of the county of Southampton (including the tythings of Nurstead and Weston); $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by west of Petersfield, within the new boundaries of which it is now included. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Petersfield, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £32 16s. 10½d.; gross income £1,300; in the patronage of the bishop of Winchester. This parish possesses a daily school, the teacher of which is allowed £24 per annum by the trustees of a charity for instructing and apprenticing poor children, and a day and Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 630; in 1831, 822. Houses 141. Acres 6,840. A. P. £8,229. Poor rates, in 1837, £550.

BURLAND, a township in the parish of Acton, hund. of Nantwich, county of Chester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Nantwich; crossed by a branch of the Chester canal; and in the vicinity of the Nantwich and Birmingham railway. There are two daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 371; in 1831, 515. Houses 105. Acres 1,450. A. P. £1,759. Poor rates, in 1837, £215.

BURLESCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Bampton, union of Wellington, county of Devon; 8 miles east-north-east of Tiverton; in the immediate vicinity of Exeter and Bristol railway, and the Grand Western canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £11 15s. 10d.; gross income £316. Patron, in 1835, W. A. Sanford, Esq. There are four daily schools in this parish. In the reign of Henry II., a priory was founded in this parish, by Walter Clavell, and dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary, St. John the Evangelist, and St. Etheldreda. The society was changed in the reign of Edward for an abbey and nuns of the same order, whose number in the 26th of Henry VIII., was 18, and the revenue £202 15s. 3d.; the ruins are still visible. Pop., including that of Ashford, in 1801, 853; in 1831, 999. Houses 196. Acres 4,210. A. P. £4,878. Poor rates, in 1837, £384.

BURLESTONE, a parish in the hund. of Piddletown, union of Dorchester, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 7 miles east by north of Dorchester; on the river Trent. Living, a rectory annexed to that of Athelhamptone, or Admiston. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 67. Houses 13. Acres 750. A. P. £605. Poor rates, in 1837, £12.

BURLEY, a parish in the hund. of Alstoe, union of Oakham, county of Rutland; 2 miles north-east of Oakham; in the vicinity of the Melton-Mowbray and Oakham canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10 13s. 1½d.; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, G. Finch, Esq. Tithes of Burley-on-the-Hill commuted in 1789. There is a day and Sunday school here. The poor of this parish receive £10 per annum from Lady Ann Harrington's charity.—Burley-on-the-Hill, the splendid seat of the earl of Winchelsea, is built on the site of the mansion in which Villiers, first duke of Buckingham, entertained James I. and his court. "After this great duke had gotten this lordship, he made it one of the finest seats of England, improving the house to that advantage, that it looked like a second Belvoir, and in some respects was superior to that famous seat of the (then earls, but now) dukes of Rutland, situated on an hill, having a princely park, and woods adjoining, and overlooking the little but rich vale of Catmuss, and divers other manors belonging to his estate. Here it was that that duke entertained King James I. and all his court, in a manner worthy of the gratitude of so great a favourite; and while they remained here the famous Bishop Andrews, the most celebrated court-preacher of his time, preached several sermons before the king and court, which are still extant in the large volumes of his sermons. Here it was also that the king, Prince Charles, and the court, were first presented with Ben. Jonson's Mask of the Gypsies, acted by the nobility only, which was an entertainment so pleasing to the king, that he caused it to be acted again and again in his progress, first at Beaver, and afterwards at Windsor. Lastly, here it was that Jeffrey Hudson the dwarf (of whom we have already spoken at Oakham) being then about seven years old, and but 18 inches high, was presented as a rarity in nature, to the duchess of Buckingham, then residing at Burley House. It happened that the court came to Barley, not long after, King Charles I. being then on the throne, and attended with his Queen Henrietta Maria of France. In treating the court, Jeffrey was served up to the table in a pye, to divert the royal guests, and the queen being presented with him by the duchess, took him into her service, and made use of him in many important matters, viz. sent him for her midwife into France, and employed him in many other affairs, of which I have spoken in Oakham. This stately and noble fabric, in the late rebellion, was entered upon by the parliamentary party, and made a garrison in 1645; but the parliament army being in these parts, there were placed in it no more soldiers than were sufficient, as was thought, to guard the committee from any attempts of the loyal party, and harass the country, where it was supposed they were disaffected; but the parliament army removing from these parts, and the garrison being surrounded with the royalists in arms, against whom they found themselves not able to defend it, the soldiers set fire to the house and rich furniture in it, and departed; but the stables being at some distance from the house, escaped the burning, and remain to this day, one of the noblest buildings of the kind in England, if not the finest. The house, after the restoration, lay in its ruins many years, the last duke of Buckingham, though he lived some years after, not minding to rebuild it, but dying very much in debt, this lordship, with several others adjoining, were sold a little after to the Right Honourable Daniel Earl of Nottingham, who in the place of the old house had erected a most beautiful noble edifice, adorned with all such embellishments as are suitable to so magnificent a building, which is rendered more admirable as well as delightful, by its situation on a hill, in the midst of a walled park of five or six miles in compass, and therein no less pleasant than large and spacious woods, rich pastures, and store of game, which together have made this seat of so extraordinary and singular regard, that there are not many seats in England that can equal it, and few or none surpass Burley-on-the-Hill, the great grace of this little county of Rutland. This was the third edition of this seat, which being first erected by John Lord Harrington, was much improved, if not new built, by the duke of Buckingham, and is now restored by the earl of Nottingham, to a more superlative degree of beauty and exquisiteness of structure and contrivance, as well as convenience." [Magna Britannia, vol. iv. pp. 573, 573.] Pop., in 1801, 192; in 1831, 232. Houses 40. Acres 3,390. A. P. £4,822. Poor rates, in 1837, £186.

BURLEY, a tything in the parish of Ringwood, New-Forest, east division, county of Southampton; 6 miles south-west of Lyndhurst. An Independent congregation was formed here in 1833. There are here two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £3 per annum. Pop., with the village of Bistern-closes, in 1801, 240; in 1831, 341. Houses 74. Poor rates, in 1837, £94.

BURLEY, a chapelry in the liberty of Cawood, Wistow, and Otley, in that part of the parish of Otley which is in the upper division of the wapentake of Skyrack, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles west by north of Otley; on the north bank of the river Warfe. Living, a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of the parish, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £25 3s. 8d.; gross income £89. Patrons, the Rev. T. F. Wilson, and W. Settle, Esq. There are here three daily and two Sunday schools, and an Independent chapel. Here are some cotton-mills on an extensive scale. Pop., in 1801, 842; in 1831, 1,448. Houses 218. Acres 3,190. A. P. £2,509. Poor rates, in 1837, £445.

BURLEY. See HEADINGLEY WITH BURLEY.
BURLEY ARCHES, or BURARCHES HUXDRED, in the rape of Pevensey, county of Sussex. Area 5,350 acres. Houses 263. Pop., in 1831, 1,485.

BURLEY-LODGE, an extra-parochial liberty in the parish of Ringwood, New Forest, east division, county of Southampton. Pop., in 1821, 30; in 1831, 33. Houses 9. Other returns with the parish.

BURLINGHAM-ST.-ANDREW, a parish in the hund. and union of Blofield, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles west by south of Acle; in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Burlingham-St.-Edmund, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12; gross income £560. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. C. Burroughes. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 225. Houses 24. Acres 730. A. P. £1,203. Poor rates, in 1837, £146.

BURLINGHAM-ST.-EDMUND, a parish in the hund. and union of Blofield, county of Norfolk. Living, consolidated with that of Burlingham-St.-Andrew. This parish possesses a daily school. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 104. Houses 19. Acres 480. A. P. £602. Poor rates, in 1837, £85.

BURLINGHAM-ST.-PETER, a parish in the hund. and union of Blofield, county of Norfolk. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, H. N. Burroughes, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 102. Houses 20. Acres 680. A. P. £1,062. Poor rates, in 1837, £68.

BURLINGTON. See BRIDLINGTON.

BURMARSH, a parish within the liberty and union of Romney-marsh, lathe of Shepway, county of Kent; 4 miles south-west of Hythe; in the neighbourhood of the Royal Military canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £20 10s. 10d.; gross income £220. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 105. Houses 21. Acres 1,690. A. P. £3,675. Poor rates, in 1837, £190.

BURMINGTON, a parish in Brilles division of the hund. of Kingston, union of Shipston-upon-Stour, county of Warwick; 2 miles south by east of Shipston-upon-Stour; in the neighbourhood of the Moreton and Stafford-on-Avon railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; gross income £207; in the patronage of Merton college, Oxford. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 205. Houses 37. Acres 720. A. P. £2,672. Poor rates, in 1837, £139.

BURN, a township in the parish of Brayton, lower division of the wapentake of Barkston-Ash, west riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles south-west of Selby; on the north bank of the Selby canal, and in the vicinity of the river Aire. There is a daily school here, endowed with £7 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 189; in 1831, 244. Houses 49. Acres 2,370. A. P. £2,105. Poor rates, in 1837, £121.

BURNAGE, a township in the parish of Manchester, hund. of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4 miles south of Manchester; in the vicinity of the Manchester and Sheffield railway, and on the north bank of the river Mersey. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 507. Houses 91. Acres 610. A. P. £1,752. Poor rates, in 1837, £112.

BURNASTON, a hamlet in the parish of Etwell, hund. of Appletree, county of Derby; 5 miles south-west of Derby; in the neighbourhood of the Butingham and Derby railway. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 117; in 1831, 134. Houses 29. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £1,193. Poor rates, in 1837, £91.

BURNBY, a parish in Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Pocklington, east riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-east of Pocklington; on a branch of the river Derwent, and in the neighbourhood of the Pocklington canal. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £7 15s.; gross income £321. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Devonshire. This parish possesses a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 93. Houses 20. Acres 2,100. A. P. £1,662. Poor rates, in 1837, £58.

BURNESIDE, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkby-Kendal, Kendal ward, county of Westmoreland; 3 miles north-west of Kendal; on the river Kent. It comprises the townships of Strickland-Kettle, Strickland-Roger, and part of Skelsmergh. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; valued at £13 5s. 8d., but in the parliamentary returns at £130; gross income £110. Patrons, the landholders in the parish of Kendal. There is here an endowed school. Pop., in 1801, 519; in 1831, 712. Houses 122. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £5,929. Poor rates, in 1837, £474.

BURNESTON, a parish in the wapentake of Hallikeld, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-east of Bedale, comprising the townships of Carthorp, Gatenby, Exelby, Leeming and Newton, Theakstone and Burneston. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £37 6s. 8d.; gross income £546. Patrons, in 1835, the Duke of Cleveland, W. R. Serjeantson, and others. In 1688 M. Robinson assigned a rent-charge of £43 5s. for the purpose of endowing a school and an almshouse here. Subsequent benefactions have augmented the income to £67. There are also eight daily schools, one of which has a small endowment, and five Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce £29 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,302; in 1831, 1,430. Houses 323. Acres 6,920. A. P. £12,325. Poor rates, in 1837, £505.

BURNETT, a parish in the hund. and union of Keynsham, county of Somerset; 3½ miles north-east of Pensford; on the river Chew, in the vicinity of the Western railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £5 10s. 7½d., and in the parliamentary returns at £140; gross income £125. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Bristol. Pop., in 1801, 64; in 1831, 82. Houses 10. Acres 660. A. P. £1,246. Poor rates, in 1837, £47.

BURN-HALL, in the middle division of Chester ward, co.-palatine of Durham; 2½ miles south by west from Durham. Here is a Roman Catholic chapel.

BURNHAM HUNDRED, in the county of Buckingham. Area 50,960 acres. Houses 3,595. Pop., in 1831, 19,066.

BURNHAM, a parish, including the liberty of Boveny-Lower, in the hund. of Burnham, union of Eton, county of Buckingham; 3½ miles north-west by north of Eton; intersected by the Western railway, and near the river Thames. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £16 13s. 4d.; gross income £549; in the patronage of the fellows of Eton college. The church contains an elegant monument to the memory of Lord-chief-justice Wills. Here are a place of worship for Independents, and a National school. There are also nine daily schools, two of which are endowed, and three Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce about £100 per annum. Tanner says—"Richard, king of the Romans, A.D. 1265, began here a nunnery of the order of St. Augustine, which was dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary, and consisted of an abbess, and seven or eight nuns. Their yearly revenues, in tax line, amounted to £56 16s. 11d., in 26th Henry VIII., to £51 2s. 4d., Dugd., £91 5s. 11d. ob., Speed. This abbey was granted, 36th Henry VIII., to William Tyldesley." Some portions of the building have been converted into farm-houses, &c. The village had originally a market, which has long since been discontinued; but three annual fairs are held here; they are on the 25th of February, and 1st of May, for horses, cattle, sheep, and hogs, and 2^d of October, for horses, cattle, hogs, and hiring servants. Pop., in 1801, 1,529; in 1831, 2,137. Houses 378. Acres 6,740. A. P. £10,361. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,089.

BURNHAM, a parish in the hund. of Dengie, union of Maldon, county of Essex; 19½ miles south-east of Chelmsford; on the northern bank of the river Crouch. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £22 13s. 4d.; gross income £581; in the patronage, in 1835, of Lady Jane St. John Mildmay. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1690. Here are two day and Sunday National schools, endowed with £80 per annum, and five daily schools. Fairs are held on the 25th of April, and 24th of September, for toys. Pop., in 1801, 1,054; in 1831, 1,393. Houses 261. Acres 5,050. A. P. £9,044. Poor rates, in 1837, £529.

BURNHAM, a parish in the hund. of Bempstone, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; 9 miles south-south-west of Axbridge; near the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £16 11s. 10½d.; gross income £579. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Wells. The church is a spacious building with a lofty tower serving as a land-mark; the altar-piece was designed by Inigo Jones. There are here four daily schools. Charities connected with the parish produce about £36 per annum. A fair is held on Trinity Monday, for cattle, horses, and sheep. Pop., in 1801, 653; in 1831, 1,113. Houses 176. Acres 4,270. A. P. £9,606. Poor rates, in 1837, £272.

BURNHAM-DEEPPDALE, a parish in the hund. of Brothercross, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles north-west of Burnham-Westgate; near Burnham harbour. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £11; gross income £258. Patrons, in 1835, the trustees of H. Blyth, Esq. The church formerly contained a rudely sculptured font emblematic of the Saxon months, of which an account will be found in the Archæologia, vol. x. p. 177. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. In this and the adjoining parishes are extensive salt marshes, for the embanking and improvement of which various operations have been long carried on. Pop., in 1801, 142; in 1831, 95. Houses 25. Acres 960. A. P. £808. Poor rates, in 1837, £44.

BURNHAM-NORTON, a parish in the hund. of Brothercross, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 1 mile north of Burnham-Westgate. Living, with that of Burnham-Ulph and Burnham-Overy, a rectory divided into mediæties with Burnham-Sutton and Burnham-Westgate, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated jointly at £17 10s.; gross income £674. Patron, the Crown. This parish possesses a daily and a Sunday school. "About the year 1241, here was a house of White or Carmelite friars founded by Sir Rasph de Hemenhale and Sir William de Calthorp, knts. It was valued at £2 5s. 4d. per annum. Speed; £1 10s. 8d., ob. Dugd., and granted, 33° Hen. VIII., to William, Lord Cobham." Tanner's Not. Mon. R. Bale, the historian, was prior of the above, and was buried here, in 1503. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 183. Houses 43. Acres 1,480. A. P. £1,085. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

BURNHAM-OVERY, a parish in the hund. of Brothercross, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 1½ mile north-east of Burnham-Westgate. There are 2 daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 361; in 1831, 610. Houses 130. Acres 1,920. A. P. £2,553. Poor rates, in 1837, £394.

BURNHAM-THORPE, a parish in the hund. of Brothercross, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 1½ mile east by south of Burnham-Westgate, Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £19 10s.; gross income £500. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Orford. Here are an Independent chapel, and a free school. In the 55th of Henry III. grants were obtained for a market and an annual fair here, but these have been discontinued. Viscount Nelson was born in the parsonage-house of this parish, during the incumbency of his father, in September, 1758. He took the title of Baron from Burnham-Thorpe. Pop., in 1801, 270; in 1831, 363. Houses 78. Acres 2,200. A. P. £2,466. Poor rates, in 1837, £568.

BURNHAM-ULPH AND SUTTON, a parish in the hund. of Brothercross, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; ¾ mile north-east of Burnham-Westgate. Living, a rectory in mediety with Burnham-Norton and Burnham-Westgate. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 364. Houses 80. Acres 1,220. A. P. £1,477. Poor rates, in 1837, £78.

BURNHAM-WESTGATE, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Brothercross, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 38 miles north-west of Norwich, and 120 miles north-north-east of London. Living, a rectory, with a mediety of the rectories of Burnham-Norton and Burnham-Ulph, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £20 16s. 8d.; gross income £900; nett income £768; in the patronage of Christ's college, Cambridge. The church is a neat building, with a square tower. The Independents have a chapel here. There are in this parish an infant, a day and boarding, and a Sunday school. Charities connected with it produce about £28 per annum. Fairs are held on Easter Monday, for cheese, and on the 1st of August, for horses. Pop., in 1801, 743; in 1831, 1,022. Houses 192. Acres 2,930. A. P. £4,033. Poor rates, in 1837, £492.

BURNINGHAM. See BRININGHAM.

BURNISTON, a township in the parish of Scalby, wapentake of Pickering-Lyth, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-west by north of Scarborough. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 317. Houses 71. Acres 1,400. A. P. £1,917. Poor rates, in 1837, £78.

BURNLEY, anciently BRUNLEY, a market-town and chapelry in the parish of Whalley, hund. of Blackburn, union of Burnley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 210 miles north-north-west of London, and 25 north of Manchester; on the banks of the river Brun, which joins the West Calder immediately below the town.—Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £23 16s. 8d., and in the parliamentary returns at £98 19s. 6d.; gross income £776. Patron, in 1835, R. T. Parker, Esq. The chapel is a spacious edifice in various styles of architecture, and contains several monuments of the Townley family. A tall cross with a crucifix cut in relief upon it formerly stood near this chapel, which Dr. Whitaker says was brutally destroyed by a drunken rabble hired for the purpose a few years ago, "the last instance," he adds, "of puritanical fury—for such it was—which has been directed against the ornaments of an English church." The fact of the destruction of the cross is certain, but what evidence the learned doctor had that this was an act of 'puritanical fury,' he is not pleased to communicate. A new church, in the early English, or lancet style, was built here in 1835; and there are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The Independent church was formed in 1814; the Baptist churches in 1780 and 1827; the Wesleyan Methodist church in 1768; and the Primitive Methodist in 1825. A new Wesleyan chapel has just been erected here.—A free grammar-school was founded here in the reign of Edward VI. and endowed in 1578 by Sir R. Ingham; its present income is £137 10s. per annum; there are also 4 daily, 3 infant, and 7 Sunday schools.—The interest of £1,244 15s. three per cent. consols, given by Mrs. Elizabeth Peel in 1800, is appropriated to clothing the poor of Burnley and Habergham-Heaves.—The houses of the town are modern, and chiefly built of freestone. The streets are well-paved, watched, and lighted with gas. The trade of Burnley was at one time confined to the manufacture of woollen cloth and worsted articles; but that of cotton, in all its branches, is now carried on to a great extent. Mr. Baimes, in his 'Directory,' published in 1824, states that there were then between 25,000 and 30,000 pieces of calico manufactured in this town and its neighbourhood per week; 80,000 lbs. weight of cotton-yarn spun; and 60,000 spindles in motion. There are now 130,000 spindles at work. See article WHALLEY. Coal, flagstone, and slate abound in the neighbourhood. The Leeds and Liverpool canal contributes greatly to the promotion of its trade. Saturday is the market-day. Fairs are held on the 6th of March, Easter Eve, 6th and 13th of May, 10th of July, and 11th of October, for horses, horned cattle, and sheep. A cattle fair is held in the town every alternate Monday. Races are held in the month of August. There is a branch of the Commercial bank of England here. Petty-sessions are held here, and occasionally at Bacup, for Burnley and other places within this part of the higher division of the hundred of Blackburn. Burnley is one of the polling-places for the members for the northern division of Lancashire. Pop., in 1801, 3,305; in 1831, 7,551. Houses 1,423. Acres 1,630. A. P. £8,273. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,018. From the discovery of Roman coins, an urn, pottery, &c., this town is supposed to have been a Roman settlement; there are, however, very few historical notices of it on record, except that of a grant for a market having been obtained by the Earl of Lincoln in the 22d of Edward I.

BURNOP AND HAMSTEELS, a township in the parish of Lanchester, co.-palatine of Durham; on the river Wear. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 133. Houses 21. Acres 1,960. Other returns with the parish.

BURNSALL, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of Staincliff and Ewecross, union of Skipton, west riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles north-north-east of Skipton, on the river Wharfe; comprising the chapelries of Conistow with Kilnsey, and Rilsdon, and the townships of Appletreewick, Burnsall with Thorp-sub-Montem, Cracro, Harlington, and Hetton with Bordley. Living, a recovery in two mediety, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £36, and in the parliamentary returns at £63; gross income of the first mediety £317; in the patronage of the Rev. J. Graham: of the second, £278; in the patronage of Earl Craven. At the entrance of the choir each rector has his own stall and pulpit, from which service is performed alternately. Here is a grammar-school founded in 1605, by Sir W. Craven; its income is £42. There are also six daily and five Sunday schools. Sir W. Craven repaired the church in 1612, and erected several bridges in the vicinity of this place. See APPLETREWICK. In 1838 there were two cotton mills and one worsted mill, employing together 152 hands, within this parish. Pop., in 1801, 1,213; in 1831, 1,385. Houses 277. Acres 25,950. A. P. £13,046. Poor rates, in 1837, £949.

BURNTWOOD, a liberty in the parish of St. Michael, Lichfield, south division of the hund. of Offlow, county of Stafford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Lichfield; in the vicinity of the Essington canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, and a peculiar of the dean and chapter of Lichfield; nett income £78. Patron, the vicar of St. Michael's. Pop., in 1831, 432. Houses 87. Poor rates, in 1837, £189.

BURPHAM, a parish in the hund. of Poling, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; 2 miles north-east by east of Arundel; bounded on the west by the river Arun. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £7 12s. 6d., and in the parliamentary returns at £150; gross income £165. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Chichester. There is here a daily school. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 273. Houses 35. Acres 3,150. A. P. £1,844. Poor rates, in 1837, £129.

BURRADON. See BRIERDEAN.

BURRALS, a township in the parish of Appleby, St. Lawrence, East ward, county of Westmoreland; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-west of Appleby; on a branch of the river Eden. Pop., in 1821, 75; in 1831, 90. Houses 15. Other returns with the parish: which see.

BURREL WITH COWLING, a township in the parish of Bedale, eastern division of the wapentake of Hang, north riding of Yorkshire; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-west of Bedale. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 139. Houses 26. Acres 370. A. P. £1,221. Poor rates, in 1837, £35.

BURRINGHAM, a township in the parish of Bottesford, eastern division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Glandford Bridge; on the river Trent. Living, a perpetual curacy to the vicarage of Bottesford. Patron, the vicar of Bottesford. There are here four daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 233; in 1831, 410. Houses 72. Acres 2,120. Poor rates, in 1837, £101.

BURRINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Wigmore, union of Ludlow, county of Hereford; 5 miles west-south-west of Ludlow; east of the river Teme. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £5; gross income £178. Patron, the lord-chancellor. This parish possesses a daily school, endowed by Mrs. Knight for 20 children. Pop., in 1801, 227; in 1831, 230. Houses 42. Acres 2,850. A. P. £1,572. Poor rates, in 1837, £92.

BURRINGTON, a parish in the hund. of North Tawton with Winkley, union of South Molton, county of Devon; 4 miles north-west of Chumleigh; on the east of the river Taw, and near the confluence of its tributary the Moule. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £13 11s. 3d.; gross income £301. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Buckingham. There are in this parish three daily schools, two of which have small endowments, and three Sunday schools. This place was anciently called Borvington. Pop., in 1801, 785; in 1831, 987. Houses 159. Acres 6,100. A. P. £3,300. Poor rates, in 1837, £402.

BURRINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Brent and Wrington, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; 5 miles north-east of Axbridge; romantically situated on the north of the Mendip hills, 13 miles south-west of Bristol. Living, a curacy subordinate to the rector of Wrington. There are four daily schools in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £18 per annum. In 1795 an ancient cave was discovered here, containing several human skeletons. Pop., in 1801, 423; in 1831, 579. Houses 89. Acres 2,420. A. P. £2,742. Poor rates, in 1837, £205.

BURROUGH, or BURROW-ON-THE-HILL, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12; gross income £449. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. M. Burnaby. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 138; in 1831, 173. Houses 33. Acres 1,190. A. P. £2,989. Poor rates, in 1837, £37.

BURROUGH-GREEN, a parish in the hund. of Radfield, union of Newmarket, county of Cambridge; 5 miles south of Newmarket. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £18 10s.; gross income £553. Patron, in 1835, T. Redhead, Esq. There are in this parish an infant and a daily school, both of which are endowed. Pop., in 1801, 276; in 1831, 421. Houses 75. Acres 2,000. A. P. £2,945. Poor rates, in 1837, £186. Carter quotes the following from Dowsing's Memoranda: "March 22 [1643] We break down 64 superstitious pictures and crucifixes, and Joseph and Mary stood together in the glass, as they were espoused; and ordered a cross to be taken off the steeple. Received 6s. 8d."

BURROW-WITH-BURROW, a township in the parish of Tunstall, hund. of Lonsdale, south of the sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles south-east of Kirby-Lonsdale; near the river Lune. It is thought to be the site of the Roman station Bremetonacum. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 306. Houses 32. Acres 2,290. A. P. £2,824. Poor rates, in 1837, £182.

BURROWGATE. See PENRITH.

BURSCOUGH, a township in the parish of Ormskirk, hund. of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles north-east by north of Ormskirk; close on the Leeds and Liverpool canal. The Roman Catholics have a chapel here; and there is a new church here, built by the parliamentary commissioners in the Gothic style, with belfry, at an expense of £3,246 4s. Sittings 749. There are here three daily schools, one of which is endowed with £18 15s. 4d., and two infant schools. The following is from Tanner's Not. Mon.—"A priory of Black canons, founded by Robert Fitz-Henry, lord of Chatham, temp. Rich. I. St. Nicholas was the tutelary saint of this house, which had a prior and five religious, and forty servants, and was endowed at the dissolution with £80 7s. 6d. per ann. Dugd.: according to a second valuation, £122 5s. 7d.: according to Mr. Speed, with £129 1s. 10d." Pop., in 1801, 1,139; in 1831, 2,244. Houses 397. Acres 4,340. A. P. £9,142. Poor rates, in 1837, £536.

BURSLDON, a parish in the hund. of Bishop's Waltham, union of South Stoneham, Portsdown division of the county of Southampton; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Southampton. Living, a perpetual curacy to the vicarage of Hound. This parish possesses five daily and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 522; in 1831, 503. Houses 89. Acres 830. A. P. £1,028. Poor rates, in 1837, £150.

BURSLLEN, a market-town and parish in the north division of the hund. of Pirehill, union of Woolstanton and Burslem, county of Stafford; 3 miles north of Newcastle-under-Lyne; near the Birmingham railway and Macclesfield canal. The township is now included within the boundaries of the borough of Stoke-upon-Trent. It includes the township of Hulton-Abbey, and the hamlet of Sneyd. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £22 9s. 6d.; gross income £530. Patrons, in 1835, the trustees. The church is a brick edifice, with a massive square tower. The first stone of a handsome district-church was laid here in 1828, towards the erection of which £8,000 was granted by the commissioners for building churches; sittings, 2,037. Here are places of worship for several denominations of Protestant dissenters; among whom are Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Independents. The Independent church was formed in 1821; the Wesleyan Methodist in 1801; the Primitive Methodist in 1823; and the Baptist in 1806. There is also a Roman Catholic chapel. A National school was erected here in 1817; it has been incorporated with a charity school, founded in 1749 by J. Bourne, Esq., and endowed with 27 acres of land: 147 children are taught at this establishment. There are, besides, 36 daily and 11 Sunday schools. At a very early period this place was distinguished for the variety and excellence of the clays in its vicinity; and in the 17th century it was the principal place in England for the manufacture of earthenware. "For centuries back the butter-pots (a species of earthenware for preserving butter) were made here before a single vessel was moulded in its neighbourhood. In the course of time the articles of the manufactory became more various, but the products were coarse and clumsy, made entirely from the clays found contiguous to Burslem; painted and mottled in a rude way, and glazed with lead ore, finely powdered and sprinkled on the patterns before they were sent to the kiln. Two foreigners, (for to other nations we have been indebted for almost every original hint of manufactures, and for their first improvements,) by name Elers, introduced about the end of the 17th century a new mode of glazing the Staffordshire ware,—by casting into the kiln, when at its highest heat, a quantity of salt, whose vapours produced a vitrification of the clay on the surface of the vessel, and thus gave it a much more equal and beautiful gloss than the preceding process could afford. This was succeeded by a prodigiously great improvement in the materials of the ware itself, the addition of calcined powdered flint to the tobacco-pipe clay, which, being ground and mixed together, the mass was manufactured into the well-known white ware, that for many years was the favourite pottery of the table. But it was left to Mr. Josiah Wedgwood to bring the Staffordshire pottery to a state of perfection." [Warner's 'Tour through the Northern Counties,' pp. 165, 166.]—The town is the largest and most populous of any in the district, and by far the larger portion of its inhabitants are employed in this branch of manufacture, which has reached a high degree of perfection. A market was established in 1825. Monday and Saturday are market-days, and fairs are held on February 24th, April 14th, June 28th, October 13th, and December 26th for cattle and horses. There is a branch of the Manchester and Liverpool district bank here, and also of the Commercial bank of England. The town-hall is a neat building in the centre of the market-place, built by subscription in 1761. It contains an elegant newsroom and the offices of police. Josiah Wedgwood, the ingenious improver of English pottery manufacture, was born here in 1730. The Manchester, Cheshire, and Staffordshire railway passes within 5 chains to the right of Burslem church. Pop., in 1801, 6,578; in 1831, 12,714. Houses 2,995. Acres 2,930. A. P. £22,206. Poor rates, in 1837, £5,629.—See articles ETBURIA and THE POTTERIES.

BURSTALL, a parish in the hund. of Samford, county of Suffolk; 5½ miles east by north of Hareleigh. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Bramford. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 199. Houses 40. Acres 1,230. A. P. £1,074. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

BURSTALL-GARTH, in the south division of the wapentake of Holderness, east riding of Yorkshire; 24 miles east-south-east of Kingston-upon-Hull.—"Stephen, earl of Albemarle, gave, A. D. 1115, to the Benedictine monks of St. Martin de Alecio, near Albemarle in Normandy, several tithes and churches in this part of Yorkshire, and in the north part of Lincolnshire, who thereupon sent over a procurator, or prior, with some monks of their own house, to look after the same. These, after some time, fixed their cell, and continued in the chapel of St. Helen here, till the frequent seizing of the estates of the foreign abbies, during the wars with France, occasioned this alien priory to be sold to the abbot and convent of Kirtall, 189 Richard II."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The site of this priory was about 2 miles to the south of Easington, and is now covered by the Trinity sands.

BURSTEAD (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Barstable, union of Billericay, county of Essex; 2 miles south-south-east of Billericay. It includes the market-town and chapelry of Billericay. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £17 6s. 8d.; gross income £190. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Evans. This parish possesses twelve daily schools, one of which is endowed with lands in the parish of Laindon, amounting to £45 per annum, and another with the interest of £500 invested in consols, and five boarding schools. Charities connected with the parish produce about £23 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,472; in 1831, 1,977. Houses 368. Acres 4,420. A. P. £7,169. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,071.—See article BILLERICAY.

BURSTEAD (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Barstable, union of Billericay, county of Essex; 2½ miles south-west of Billericay; near a branch of the river Crouch. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £12; gross income £280. Patron, the bishop of London. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Charities connected with it produce about £40 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 204. Houses 31. Acres 1,320. A. P. £2,190. Poor rates, in 1837, £192.

BURSTOCK, a parish in the hund. of Whitchurch-Canonicorum, union of Beaminster, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; 4½ miles west-north-west of Beaminster. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £5 19s. 4½d.; gross income £165. Patron, in 1835, John Bragge, Esq. This parish possesses three daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 261. Houses 46. Acres 970. A. P. £1,926. Poor rates, in 1837, £155.

BURSTON, a parish in the hund. of Diss, union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles north-east by north of Diss, near the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £16; gross income £434. Patron, the lord-chancellor. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 298; in 1831, 477. Houses 86. Acres 1,300. A. P. £1,860. Poor rates, in 1837, £371.

BURSTON, a hamlet in the parish of Stone, and hund. of South Pirehill, county of Stafford; 3 miles south-east of Stone; on the eastern bank of the Trent. "Dr. Plot will have this place and Burweston to be the same; but Mr. Erdewick makes them two different places; but both agree in their account, viz., that there was a chapel here, visited for some ages for devotion, being the place where Wolphere the pagan, king of Mercia, in his zealous infidelity, slew his son Ruffinus, because he was become a Christian, and had been baptized by S. Chad; as he had done his other son Walfadus at Stone for the same reason. It was then a wood into which the young prince fled for safety from his father's fury, but was soon found and slain there. There were some remains of this chapel standing not many years since." ['Magna Britannia.' Edn. 1738. vol. v. p. 79.] Returns with the parish.

BURSTON. See BRISTON.

BURSTOW, a parish in the east division of the hund. and union of Reigate, county of Surrey; 7½ miles south-east by south of Reigate; near Croydon railway. Living, a rectory and peculiar in the deanery of Croydon and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £15 13s. 4d.; gross income £400. Patron, the lord-chancellor. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 606; in 1831, 736. Houses 139. Acres 4,420. A. P. £2,782. Poor rates, in 1837, £483.

BURSTWICK, or SKECKLING, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Holderness, east riding of Yorkshire; 9 miles east by south of Kingston-upon-Hull. Living, a perpetual curacy, united to that of Skeckling, in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; valued at £7; gross income £219. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. A. C. Constable. The great and small tithes of the town and territories of Burstwick and Skeckling, the property of the lord of the manor and vicar, were commuted in 1773. This parish possesses four daily schools. It comprises the townships of Burstwick, and of Ryhill and Camerton. Pop., in 1801, 549; in 1831, 699. Houses 135. Acres 5,720. A. P. £9,141. Poor rates, in 1837, £408. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 335; in 1831, 436. Houses 84. Acres 3,340. A. P. £5,834. Poor rates, in 1837, £275.

BURTHOLME, a township in the parish of Lancaster abbey, ward of Eskdale, county of Cumberland; 3 miles north-east by north of Bampton; on the river Irthing. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 279; in 1831, 239. Houses 41. Poor rates, in 1837, £98.

BURTLE-HOUSE. See BYRELEY.

BURTON, a township in the parish and ward of Bambrough, county of Northumberland; 4½ miles east-south-east of Belford. Pop., in 1801, 40; in 1831, 78. Houses 14. Poor rates, in 1837, £57.

BURTON, a township in the parish of Tarvin, second division of Eddisbury hund., co.-palatine of Chester; 3½ miles west-north-west of Tarporley; on the post-road. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 84. Houses 12. Acres 320. A. P. £607. Poor rates, in 1837, £45.

BURTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Wirral, co.-palatine of Chester; 8 miles north-west of Chester; comprising the townships of Burton and Puddington; on the east of the river Dee, near its mouth. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £54. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Law. A free school was founded here in 1724 by Dr. Wilson, bishop of Sodor and Man, who was a native of Burton; he gave £400 for erecting and endowing it, which sum was augmented by a gift of £200 from his son Dr. T. Wilson, rector of St. Stephen's, Walbrook. There are also a daily and a day and Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 427; in 1831, 458. Houses 78. Acres 2,920. A. P. £3,443. Poor rates, in 1837, £114. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 288; in 1831, 313. Houses 55. Acres 1,620. A. P. £1,392. Poor rates, in 1837, £65.

BURTON, a parish in the hund. of Roose, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales; 7 miles south-east of Haverford; near Milford haven. Living, a rectory in the dio. of St. David's; rated at £15 12s. 11d.; gross income £235. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Cadwor. The parish extends to about 2,700 acres. Pop., in 1801, 457; in 1831, 694. Houses 153. A. P. £1,256. Poor rates, in 1837, £207.

BURTON, or BODEXTON, a parish in the hund. of Rotherbridge, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; 3 miles south-west of Petworth; south of the river Rother, and bounded on the north-east by the Rother and Arundel canal. Living, a discharged rectory with Coates in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £7 3s. 11½d.; nett income £113. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Egremont. Pop., in 1801, 14; in 1831, 7. House 1. Acreage with the parish of Barlavington. A. P. £505. Poor rates, in 1837, £122.

BURTON, a chapelry in the parish and liberty of Much-Wenlock, county of Salop; 3 miles south-west by south of Much-Wenlock. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; gross income £50. Patron, the vicar of Much-Wenlock. Pop. with the parish.

BURTON, a hamlet in the parish of Stoke Courcy, county of Somerset, 9½ miles north-west from Bridge-water. A Baptist church was formed here in 1833. Pop. with the parish.

BURTON. See CHRISTCHURCH.

BURTON, in the north-east half-hund. of East Medina liberty, in the Isle of Wight, county of Southampton, in Whippingham parish, 4 miles north-north-east of Newport; at the mouth of the Medina river. "About A. D. 1282, John de Insula, rector of Shalfleet, and Robert de Winton, rector of Godshill, founded here an oratory dedicated to the Holy Trinity, consisting of six chapelries and one clerk, who were to officiate for the living and the dead under the rules of St. Augustine. The bishop of Winchester was patron, into whose hands it was surrendered, 18th Henry VI., and by his procurement was granted to Winchester college."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The endowments at the period of the surrender consisted of the manor of Whippingham, in which parish it is situated, with the demesne lands of Burton, or Barton, as it is now called, and some lands at Chale; and the site and demesnes of the oratory are still held under a lease from the warden and fellows of Winchester college. A part of the old building was remaining near the close of last century.

BURTON. See WARCOF.

BURTON AND LLAY, a township in the parish of Gresford, hund. of Bromfield, county of Denbigh; bounded on the east by the river Dee. Pop., in 1801, 759; in 1831, 1054. Houses 188.

BURTON WITH WALDEN, a township in the parish of Aysgarth, wapentake of Hang-West, north riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles west by south of Middleham. There are here two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 446; in 1831, 545. Houses 119. Acres 6,950. A. P. £3,157. Poor rates, in 1837, £212.

BURTON-AGNES, a parish in the wapentake of Dicker, union of Bridlington, east riding of Yorkshire; 6½ miles south-west by west of Bridlington; near a branch of the river Hull. It includes the townships of Gransmoor, Haisthorpe, Thornholm, and Burton-Agnes. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Harpham, in the archd. and dio. of York, rated in the king's books at £20 6s. 3d.; gross income £914. Patron, in 1835, R. Raikes, Esq. This parish possesses a day and Sunday school endowed with a freehold farm for teaching, reading, and writing; the children pay for learning accounts. Pop., in 1801, 502; in 1831, 653. Houses 101. Acres 6,540. A. P. £8,746. Poor rates, in 1837, £382. Pop. of the township in 1901, 283; in 1831, 350. Houses 54. Acres 3,010. A. P. £3,368. Poor rates, in 1837, £196.

BURTON-BISHOP, or SOUTH BURTON, a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Beverley, east riding of Yorkshire; $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles west of Beverley; intersected by the post road. Living, a discharged vicarage and peculiar in the jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of York, rated in the king's books at £5 6s. 8d., and in the parliamentary returns at £90; gross income £110. All tithes, the property of the dean and chapter of York and the vicar, were commuted in 1767. The Baptists have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1770. In 1714, Mrs. Elizabeth Gee left £100 for the purchase of land, the rental to be applied for the instruction of poor children; the produce is about £20 per annum. There are in this parish five daily schools, one of which has the benefit of the endowment mentioned above, and two Sunday schools. There is also an endowed almshouse for four poor persons. Fairs are held on March 10th, May 6th, August 30th, September 26th, November 3d and 4th. Pop., in 1801, 412; in 1831, 556. Houses 104. Acres 3,970. A. P. £6,935. Poor rates, in 1837, £340.

BURTON-BLACK, a township in the parish of Thornton-in-Lonsdale, west division of Staincliff and Ewcross wapentake, west riding of Yorkshire; 12 miles north-west by west of Settle; on the river Creta. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £15; gross income £94. Patron, the vicar of Thornton. There are here five daily and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1821, 746; in 1831, 711. Houses 144. Acres 1,360. A. P. £3,154. Poor rates, in 1837, £466.

BURTON-BRADSTOCK, a parish in the liberty of Frampton, union of Bridport, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by east of Bridport; on the river Bredy. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Skepton George, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £25; gross income £409. Patron, in 1835, Lord Rivers. There are five daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. In 1838 there were three flax-mills here, employing 153 hands. Pop., in 1801, 654; in 1831, 1,068. Houses 208. Acres 2,260. A. P. £4,158. Poor rates, in 1837, £421.

BURTON-CHERRY, a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Beverley, east riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles west-north-west of Beverley; near the post-road. Living, a rectory, in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York, rated at £23 6s. 8d.; gross income £970. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. Ramsden. There is here a daily school. Pop., in 1801, 296; in 1831, 447. Houses 84. Acres 3,180. A. P. £4,369. Poor rates, in 1837, £318.

BURTON-COGGLES, a parish in the wapentake of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, union of Grantham, county of Lincoln; 2 miles west-north-west of Corby; on a branch of the river Glen. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £16 12s. 3d.; gross income £682. Patron, the lord-chancellor. This parish possesses a daily school, free to all the poor, endowed by John Speight in 1734, with land situated at Quadding, which lets for £18 per annum, and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 246. Houses 46. Acres 3,010. A. P. £3,663. Poor rates, in 1837, £196.

BURTON-CONSTABLE, a township in the parish of Finghall, wapentake of Hang-West, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-east of Middleham. There are here two daily schools. Races are held in the month of March. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 257. Houses 44. Acres 2,480. A. P. £2,469. Poor rates, in 1837, £117.

BURTON-DASSET, a parish in the Burton-Dasset division of the hund. of Kington, union of Southam, county of Warwick; 4 miles east of Kington, and near the Oxford canal. Living, a vicarage formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £14; gross income £174. Patrons, in 1835, Lord W. de Broke and R. Blencowe. This parish possesses a day and Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 600; in 1831, 673. Houses 135. Acres 5,400. A. P. £6,212. Poor rates, in 1837, £532.

BURTON (EXTRA), a township in the parish of Burton-upon-Trent, north division of the hund. of Offlow, county of Stafford, contiguous to the southern part of the town of Burton-upon-Trent; close upon the Birmingham and Derby railway, and near the Grand Trunk canal. There are here a Baptist church, formed in 1824, and a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 716; in 1831, 910. Houses 183. A. P. £3,611. Poor rates, in 1837, £526.

BURTON-FLEMING, or NORTH BURTON, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, union of Bridlington, east riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles north-north-west of Bridlington; on the Gipsy race. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York, rated at £6 4s. 2d., and in the parliamentary returns at £70 18s.; gross income £84. Patron, in 1835, H. Osbaldestone, Esq. The great and small tithes of the township, the property of the lord of the manor, lay-impropriators, and vicar, were commuted in 1768. There are two daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 414. Houses 77. Acres 3,590. A. P. £2,240. Poor rates, in 1837, £47.

BURTON-GATE, a parish in the wapentake of Wells, parts of Lindsey, union of Gainborough, county of Lincoln; 5 miles south-south-east of Gainborough; on the east side of the Trent. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £8 10s. 10d.; gross income £88. Patron, in 1835, W. Hutton, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 101. Houses 16. Acres 1,160. A. P. £1,086. Poor rates, in 1837, £116.

BURTON-HASTINGS, a parish in the Kirby division of the hund. of Knightlow, union of Hinckley, county of Warwick; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Nuneaton; intersected by the Roman road called Watling-street. The Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal also passes through it. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester, rated at £12, and valued in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £90. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Grove, Esq. The great and small tithes, the property of the lay-impropriator, were commuted in 1783. This parish possesses a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 253. Houses 53. Acres 1,910. A. P. £2,327. Poor rates, in 1837, £131.

BURTON-JOYCE, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 5 miles north-east by east of Nottingham; on the northern bank of the Trent. It includes the hamlet of Bulcote. Living, a discharged vicarage with the chapelry of Bulcote, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln, rated at £4 19s. 2d., and in the parliamentary returns at £121; gross income £145. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Chesterfield. The great and small tithes of Burton-Joyce and Bulcote, the property of the lord of the manor and vicar, were commuted in 1768. There are two daily and two Sunday schools in the parish. Pop., in 1801, 595; in 1831, 676. Houses 132. Acres 1,940. A. P. £3,152. Poor rates, in 1837, £167.

BURTON-IN-KENDAL, a market-town and parish in Lonsdale ward, union of Kendal, county of Westmoreland, part of the parish extending into the hund. of Lonsdale south of the sands, county of Lancashire; 10 miles south of Kendal, and 251 miles north-east of London; comprising the township of Burton in Kendal, Dalton, and Holme, and the chapelry of Preston-Patrick; situated on the high road leading from Kendal to Lancaster. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, rated at £15 17s.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Simeon. The church is an ancient structure, with side-aisles and a square tower. The vicarial tithes, the property of the vicar, were commuted in 1815. Here is a place of worship for Independents. This parish possesses nine daily schools, three of which have endowments, and four Sunday schools. Charities connected with it produce about £45 per annum. The town is small, but from the neatness and regularity of its buildings, has rather a prepossessing appearance, and has several very good inns. It possesses but little trade; the inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. In 1838 there was a flax-mill here, employing 397 hands. The market-place is a spacious area, with good houses and shops. The market-day is Tuesday. A fair is held on Easter-Monday for cattle and horses. The petty sessions for the counties of Westmoreland and Lancaster, are held here every alternate Tuesday. Dr. Launcelot Dawes, Dr. Gerard Langbaine, Dr. W. Lancaster, and several other eminent literary characters in the reign of Charles I., were natives of this town. Pop., in 1801, 1,182; in 1831, 1,931. Houses 272. Acres 9,170. A. P. £11,826. Poor rates, in 1837, £579. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 548; in 1831, 733. Houses 152. A. P. £3,688. Poor rates, in 1837, £388.

BURTON-KIRK, See KIRK-BURTON.

BURTON-LATIMER, a parish in the hund. of Huxloe, union of Kettering, county of Northampton, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Kettering; on the post road. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, rated at £29 10s.; gross income £800; nett income £690. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. S. Grimshaw. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1803. The Baptists have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1744. There are here four daily schools, one of which is endowed with an estate at Northampton realizing £30 per annum, and also with a rent charge of £7 per annum on an estate situated in the parish, five infant, and four Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce about £107 per annum. In 1838 there was a worsted mill here, employing 57 hands. Pop., in 1801, 669; in 1831, 995. Houses 187. Acres 2,690. A. P. £4,235. Poor rates, in 1837, £423.

BURTON-LAZARS, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east by south of Melton-

Mowbray; south of the Melton-Mowbray and Oakham canal. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Melton-Mowbray. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. The following is from Tanner's Not. Mon.:—"Roger de Mowbray, temp. R. Steph., giving two carucates of land, a house, mill, &c. here, to the lepers of St. Lazarus, without the walls of Hierusalem, laid the foundation of a well-endowed hospital, consisting of a master, and eight sound, as well as several poor leprous brethren, which was the chief of all the spittles of lazar houses in England, but dependent upon the great house at Hierusalem. This was also dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary and St. Lazarus. Its possessions, 26° Henry VIII. were valued at £265 10s. 2d. ob. per ann. as Dugd. and Speed, and the house itself was granted to John Dudley, Lord Lisle, 36° Henry VIII." This hospital is said by some to have been built in the beginning of the Norman reigns, by a general collection throughout England, but chiefly by the assistance of the Mowbrays; but Leland tells us, that it was founded in the reign of King Henry I. by the Lord Mowbray, for a master and eight brethren, who were to profess the order of St. Augustine, and on that account in their common seal gave the picture of St. Augustine, with the arms of the Mowbrays, and a red cross. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 258. Houses 49. Acres 2,060. A. P. £4,529. Poor rates, in 1837, £261.

BURTON-LEONARD, a parish, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the lower division of the wapentake of Clare, west riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Knaresborough. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £3 0s. 0d., and in the parliamentary returns at £73 10s.; gross income £140. Patrons, the dean and chapter of York. The Independents have a chapel here. There are three daily schools in this parish. Charities connected with it produce £30 5s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 352; in 1831, 553. Houses 124. Acres 1,760. A. P. £1,898. Poor rates, in 1837, £170.

BURTON-BY-LINCOLN, a parish in the wapentake of Lawres, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Lincoln. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 15s. 2d., and in the parliamentary returns at £47; gross income £326. Patron, in 1829, Lord Monson. There is here a daily school. Pop., in 1801, 164; in 1831, 177. Houses 38. Acres 2,260. A. P. £2,708. Poor rates, in 1837, £160.

BURTON-OVERY, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Billesdon, county of Leicester; 7 miles south-east by east of Leicester; north-east of the Union canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £18 5s. 10d.; gross income £500. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Thorp. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1765. The Independents have a place of worship here. This parish possesses a daily school, and a Sunday school, supported by the interest of £100, bequeathed by Mrs. Catherine Palmer. Charities connected with this parish produce about £16 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 369; in 1831, 418. Houses 96. Acres 1,660. A. P. £3,476. Poor rates, in 1837, £391.

BURTON-PEDWARDINE, a parish in the wapentake of Aswardburn, parts of Kesteven, union of Sleaford, county of Lincoln; 6 miles north by east of Folkingham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 12s. 8d.; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, H. Handley, Esq.

Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 106. Houses 21. Acres 2,680. A. P. £2,100. Poor rates, in 1837, £62.

BURTON-PIDSEY, a parish, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the middle division of the wapentake of Holderness, east riding of Yorkshire; $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Kingston-upon-Hull; situated on an eminence, and commands an extensive view of the surrounding country. Living, a discharged vicarage and peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; rated at £6, and in the parliamentary returns at £38 2s.; gross income £42. Patrons, the dean and chapter of York. The great and small tithes, the property of the dean and chapter of York, were commuted in 1761. There are three daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 272; in 1831, 387. Houses 79. Acres 1,980. A. P. £3,106. Poor rates, in 1837, £226.

BURTON-SALMON, a township in the parish of Monk-Fryston, lower division of the wapentake of Barkston-Ash, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north-east of Ferry Bridge; intersected by the York and Sheffield railway. The tithes of Burton-Salmon and Bryam-cum-Poole, the property of the dean and chapter of York, and the prebend of Wiston, were commuted in 1817. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 132. Houses 28. Acres 640. A. P. £905. Poor rates, in 1837, £83.

BURTON-UPON-STATHER, a market-town and parish in the north division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; 11 miles west by south of Barton-upon-Humber, and $16\frac{1}{4}$ miles west by north of London; at the mouth of the river Trent. Living a vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Flixborough. Great and small tithes of the townships of Burton-upon-Stather, and the hamlets of Stather, Darly, and Theaby, the property of the clerical rector, lay-impropriator, and vicar were commuted in 1803. This parish possesses five daily and two Sunday schools. Petty-sessions are held here for the hund. of Manley, east of the river Trent. Pop., in 1801, 482; in 1831, 760. Houses 146. Acres 3,860. A. P. £5,408. Poor rates, in 1837, £412.

BURTON-ON-TRENT, a market-town and parish, partly in Repton and Gresley hund., county of Derby, and partly in the north division of the hund. of Offlow, union of Burton-on-Trent, county of Stafford; 125 miles north-west by north of London, and 21 miles east of Stafford, comprising the townships of Branson, Burton-Extra, Horninglow, Stretton, and Winhill, and the chapelry of Chilcote. The Birmingham and Derby Junction railway has a station here, about $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile west of the town. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, exempt from jurisdiction; valued in the parliamentary returns at £28; gross income £192. Patron, the Marquess of Anglesea, who is impropiator of its tithes. The church is a well-built edifice, erected in 1720, on the site of the ancient church which had been so dilapidated during the parliamentary war, that it was found necessary to pull it down. Tanner says,—"Wulfic Spot finished and endowed, A. D. 1004, an abbey here for monks of the order of St. Benedict. It was dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary and St. Modeven, and valued, 26^o Henry VIII., at £267 14s. 5d. per annum, Dugd., £356 16s. 3d. ob. Speed.; but on the record, in the first Fruits office, the whole yearly valuation of this monastery is, £501 7s. 0d. ob., and after £80 0s. 2d. ob. repairs deducted, remained clear £412 6s. 10d. The abbot and convent surrendered this house, Nov. 14th, 1539, and about 3d Nov., 1541, King Henry VIII. founded on the site and in the church of the same, a college of a dean and canons, to the honour of Jesus Christ and his mother Mary, and granted, for their support, the manor of Burton, and thirteen other manors, &c., belonging to the monastery. This collegiate church was but of short continuance, for it was dissolved before 31st Jan., 1545, when all the lands and endowments of the same were conveyed by the said king to Sir William Paget."—A new church was erected here in 1823. Living, a perpetual curacy, of the yearly value of £261. Patron, in 1835, the Marquess of Anglesea. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan and Primitive M.thodists; the Independent church was formed in 1682; the Wesleyan Methodist in 1795; the Primitive Methodist in 1820; the first Baptist church in 1802; the second in 1823.—The free grammar-school was founded by Wm. Bean, and endowed with lands now worth £450 per annum, two-thirds of this sum is given to a master, the remainder to an usher; there are 50 boys on the foundation. There are twenty-seven daily and ten Sunday schools; and also endowed almshouses for eleven poor women. Other charities produce about £300 per annum.—Burton derives its name from having been an important Saxon burgh. The modern town consists chiefly of two principal streets one running parallel with the river Trent; well-paved, lighted with gas, and plentifully supplied with water. The river is navigable for barges up to the town; and is crossed by an ancient bridge of 36 arches, and 1545 feet in length. The chief manufacture is that of cotton, power-looms being used in weaving it. In 1838 there were four cotton mills here, employing 425 hands. Here are extensive iron-forges, and tool manufactories. Burton has long been celebrated for the excellence of its ale. A canal from this place to the Grand Trunk canal facilitates considerably the transport of goods. The market is on Thursday. Fairs are held on Candlemas day, 5th of April, Holy Thursday, 16th of July, 1st of Sept., and 29th of October, for cattle, the last continues for 6 days and is a great horse fair. Races take place in the month of August. Pop., in 1801, 5,755; in 1831, 6,968. Houses 1,358. Acres 9,030. A. P. £26,236. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,677.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Burton-on-Trent, by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £5,400, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Burton-on-Trent poor-law union comprehends 52 parishes, embracing an area of 133 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 25,246. The guardians state "that although the relief to the aged and really impotent throughout the union has been raised by the law more than 20 per cent., the gross expenditure in relief from the poor rates has, nevertheless, been reduced, the first year 37 per cent., and that the last quarter shows a still greater reduction;" that although "in former years, in the parish of Burton-upon-Trent, out of a population of 5,000, there have been from 50 to 60 able-bodied men chargeable at one time, during the last severe winter there was not one single application to the guardians for relief from any able-bodied man of that parish." The guardians also declare, "that the condition of the labouring classes has been improved in every particular; that they are become more prudent, more independent, and more comfortable in their circumstances; and that numerous opponents of the law, some even amongst the poor themselves, are, after a more intimate knowledge of its character and tendency, become more friendly to it."—The manor of Burton-upon-Trent, including the town and several hamlets, was granted 37th Henry VIII. to an ancestor of the Marquess of Anglesea, the present owner of the manor, together with all such privileges, liberties and franchises belonging to the same as had been theretofore enjoyed by the abbots of Burton, of the possessions of whose then recently dissolved abbey it had formed a part. In the exercises of these privileges, the lord of the manor appoints a steward and a bailiff, who retain their offices during his pleasure. The steward presides as judge in a court for the recovery of debts under 40s., called the Genter's court. This court was judicially acknowledged by the court of King's Bench, on an information in the nature of a quo warranto, brought by the attorney-general in the reign of Queen Elizabeth against Thomas then Lord Paget, who claimed the same as a prescriptive right in the abbots of Burton beyond the memory of man. The Genter's court is held at the town-hall in Burton on every third Friday, and has exclusive jurisdiction over the manor. The process is by summons and distringas, similar to the practice of the county courts. The bailiff, in right of his office, has exclusive jurisdiction over the manor as coroner. He has also a concurrent jurisdiction with the county magistrates as a justice of the peace, but being a practising attorney he does not act in that capacity. In addition to the Genter's court, the lord of the manor annually holds a court-leet and view of frankpledge, at which the local police, consisting of three constables and six assistants, called deciners, for the town, and one constable for each of the hamlets, are appointed for the year ensuing. The bailiff has the management of the police and the general regulation of the town, except as to the paving and lighting thereof. The juries, both at the Genter's court and the court-leet, are selected by the steward or his deputy from the inhabitant householders. The town contains no prison, except a black-hole or cage for the custody of offenders till commitment.

BURTON-UPON-URE, a township in the parish of Masham, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west by south of Bedale; east of the river Ouse. It is occupied chiefly by farmers. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 254. Houses 33. Acres 2,920. A. P. £2,244.

BURTON (WEST), a parish in the North Clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of Gainsborough, county of Nottingham; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Gainsborough; bounded on the east by the river Trent. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12 13s. 4d., and valued in the parliamentary returns at £68; gross income £65. Patron, in 1835, D. Walters, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 33; in 1831, 40. Houses 6. Acres 710. A. P. £1,810. Poor rates, in 1837, £36.

BURTON-ON-THE-WOLDS, a township in the parish of Prestwold, east division of the hund. of Goscote, county of Leicester; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles east by north-east of Loughborough; east of the river Sour. Pop., in 1801, 315; in 1831, 411. Houses 87. Acres 1,690. A. P. £3,801. Poor rates, in 1837, £330.

BURTON-WOOD, a chapelry in the parish of Warrington, hund. of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-west of Newton-in-Makerfield; close upon the Liverpool and Manchester railway and the Sankey canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued in the parliamentary returns at £82 13s. 4d.; gross income £96. Patron, the rector of Warrington. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 773; in 1831, 944. Houses 143. Acres 4,250. A. P. £6,354. Poor rates, in 1837, £506.

BURWARDSLEY, a chapelry and township in that part of the parish of Bunbury which is in the upper division of the hund. of Broxton, co.-palatine of Chester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Tarporley; north of the Chester and Birmingham railroad, and Newton and Nantwich canal. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Bunbury, in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued in the parliamentary returns at £40 12s.; gross income £56; in the patronage of trustees. There are a daily and a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 394. Houses 74. Acres 1,400. A. P. £1,171. Poor rates, in 1837, £112.

BURWARTON, a parish in the hund. of Stot-tesden, union of Bridgnorth, county of Salop; $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Ludlow; a streamlet of the river Rea passes through it. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4 6s. 8d., and in the parliamentary returns at £118; gross income £129. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Churton. Pop., in 1801, 107; in 1831, 112. Houses 22. Acres 1,170. A. P. £626. Poor rates, in 1837, £50.

BURWASH, or BUWONERSH, a parish in the hund. of Hawksborough, rape of Hastings, union of Ticehurst, county of Sussex; 6 miles south-east by south of Wadhurst; on a branch of the river Rother. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £18; gross income £700. Patron, in 1835, Joseph Gould, Esq. The Independents have a place of worship here. This parish possesses five daily schools, and two day and Sunday National schools, endowed with £34 per annum. This place gives the title of Viscount to the Earl of Westmoreland. Fairs are held on May 12th and October 4th for cattle and pedlery. Petty-sessions are held here and at Heathfield, for the northern division of the rape of Hastings. Pop., in 1801, 1,524; in 1831, 1,966. Houses 329. Acres 6,840, of which 417 were in hops in 1837. A. P. £5,513. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,262.

BURWELL, a parish in the Wold division of the hund. of Louth Eske, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-east of Louth; on the post-road. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Walmgate, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8, and in the parliamentary returns at £60; gross income £51. Patron, in 1835, M. B. Lister, Esq. There is a daily National school in this parish. "Here was," says Tanner, "an alien priory of Benedictine monks, given by some of the lords of Kyme to the abbey of St. Mary Silve Majoris, near Bourdeaux. After the general seizing of these houses, this came to the college of Tateshall, and as part of the possessions thereof was granted, 36th Henry VIII., to Charles, duke of Suffolk." This was the birth-place of the celebrated Sarah Jennings, duchess of Marlborough. Fairs are annually held here, May 14th and Old Michaelmas-day. Pop., in 1801, 83; in 1831, 181. Houses 28. Acres 2,190. A. P. £2,575. Poor rates, in 1837, £114.

BURWELL, a village containing the united parishes of St. Andrew and St. Mary, in the hund. of Staploe, union of Newmarket, county of Cambridge; 4 miles north-west by west of Newmarket; east of the river Cam or Granta. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; gross income £335. The university of Cambridge nominate two persons,—the earl of Guildford presents. The church presents a beautiful specimen of the Gothic style of architecture. The Independents have a chapel here, formed in 1747. There are seven daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. This village consists chiefly of one irregular street. Here are the ruins of a castle which was built previous to the Conquest, and besieged in the war between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, by the earl of Essex, who was killed on the spot. There is on record the occurrence of a dreadful calamity, which took place here on the 8th of September, 1727, when a thatched barn accidentally caught fire, whereby 78 persons, who had assembled to witness a puppet-show, lost their lives. The door of the barn had been so constructed as to open inwardly; but the pressure of the people within rendered escape by it impossible until it was destroyed by the crowd without. Pop., in 1801, 1,250; in 1831, 1,668. Houses 284. Acres 6,505. A. P. £5,420. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,099.

BURY, a parish in the hund. of Hurstingstone, union of St. Ives, county of Huntingdon; 1 mile south of Ramsey; on a branch of the river Nen. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; valued at £25, but valued in the parliamentary returns at £125; gross income £167. Patroness, in 1835, Lady O. B. Sparrow. The church is situated on an eminence. It is an ancient Gothic structure, exhibiting some fine specimens of Norman architecture. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 358. Houses 47. Acres 2,480. A. P. £2,082. Poor rates, in 1837, £167.

BURY,

A thriving market-town and parish in the hund. of Salford, union of Bury, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 194 miles north-north-west of London, and 44 south-south-east of Lancaster; comprising the townships of Coupe-Lench Newhall, Elton, Henheads, Musbury, Walmersley, and the chapels of Heap, Tottington Higher and Tottington Lower; on the east bank of the Irwell, over which is a stone-bridge. Pop., in 1801, 24,482; in 1831, 47,829. Houses 8,145. Acres 22,600. A. P. £52,047. Poor rates, in 1837, £6,016. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 7,072; in 1831, 15,086. Houses 2,743. Acres 2,370. A. P. £16,545. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,096.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £29 11s. 5½d., and in the parliamentary returns at £125; gross income £2,094; nett income £1,937. Patron, in 1835, Earl of Derby. The church was erected in 1776 at an expense of £3,500. Bury St. John's is a chapel-of-ease, the living of which is a perpetual curacy, of the yearly value of £159. Patron, the rector of Bury. The foundation-stone of a new church was laid here in October 3d, 1838. The Independents have two places of worship here;—one formed in 1793, the other in 1807. A Presbyterian church was formed in 1719; a church of New Connexion Methodists in 1812; a Primitive Methodist church in 1829. The Wesleyan Methodists have a handsome meeting-house here, built in 1815, and there are two Roman Catholic chapels. The free grammar-school was founded in 1726 by the Rev. M. Kay, and endowed by him with estates which produce £442 0s. 9d. per annum. It has two exhibitions of £25 per annum each, continued seven years, during residence at either of the universities. Ten girls receive instruction at this school,—£7 per annum being paid to a mistress. There are also 67 daily schools, one of which, a Central National school, and four others, are endowed, and 36 Sunday schools. Charities connected with the parish produce about £52 per annum.

Town, Trade, &c.—The general appearance of this town is rapidly improving by the widening, paving, and lighting of its streets, and the removal of many old dilapidated buildings. An act for supplying it with water was passed in the session of 1837-8. There are a public subscription library, a news-room, a botanical institution, a mechanics' library, a medical library, and a savings' bank. The ancient staple manufacture of woollen is still carried on here; but the great manufacture is that of cotton. In 1838 there were 17 woollen mills here, with 888 hands; and in the same year there were 114 cotton-mills, in which 13,652 hands were engaged. The large calico-printing and other establishments of Sir R. Peel extend a considerable way along the banks of the Irwell; there are also large bleaching grounds in the neighbourhood. The canal from this town to Manchester conduces very materially to its trading prosperity. Some very important improvements in different arts have been made here. In 1738 John Kay, a native of this place, but at the time residing at Colchester, invented a new mode of throwing the shuttle, by means of the picking-peg; and in 1760 his son, Robert, invented the drop-box, by which the weaver can, at pleasure, use any one of three shuttles. The invention of setting cards by machinery also belongs to this place.

Franchise and Government.—This town now, under 3^o W. IV., returns one member to parliament. The returning officer is appointed annually by the sheriff of Lancashire, under 2^o W. IV. c. 45. s. 11. The number of electors is about 765. The government of Bury is vested in three constables, chosen annually at a court-leet held under the Earl of Derby, and under whose authority the deputy-constable (who holds his office for life) acts in conjunction with the neighbouring magistrates. The jurisdiction extends over the whole parish. A court-baron is held once in three weeks for the recovery of small debts. The market is on Thursday, and fairs are held on March 5th, May 3d, second Thursday after Whit-Sunday, September 18th, for horned cattle, horses, and woollen cloth. The Bury banking company was established in July, 1836. Number of partners 90. It has no branches or agencies. The Bury and Heywood banking company was formed in September, 1836. There is also a branch of the Manchester and Liverpool District bank here.

History.—Bury is a place of considerable antiquity, although its present importance is of modern origin. In the 'Magna Britannia,' published in 1788, it is described as "a little market-town." By some it is supposed to have been a Roman station. There is little doubt of its having been a Saxon town, as its name implies, the Saxon word byri signifying 'a fortified place.' Leland tells us, that near the church stood one of the 12 baronial castles of Lancashire, which was destroyed by the parliamentary troops in 1644; fragments of the building are still occasionally discovered upon digging near its site. In the reign of Henry II. the estates here belonged to John de Lacy, from whose family they passed to the Burys and the Pilkingtons, and on the attainer of the latter, in the reign of Henry VII., to the Stanleys, who hold them now.

BURY HUNDRED, in the rape of Arundel, county of Sussex. Area 17,670 acres. Houses 668. Pop., in 1831, 3,959.

BURY, a parish in the hund. of Bury, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; 4 miles north of Arundel; bounded on the east by the river Arun, and on the north by the Rother. It includes the tything of Westburton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £7 5s. 5d., and in the parliamentary returns at £30; gross income £59. Patron, the prebendary of the cathedral of Chichester. Lands left to the poor of this parish by Elizabeth Nash produce £13 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 361; in 1831, 547. Houses 80. Acres 3,340. A. P. £2,497. Poor rates, in 1837, £261.

BURY-ST.-EDMUND'S,

A borough, and a market-town,—the former comprising and co-extensive with the two parishes of St. James and St. Mary,—having separate jurisdiction, in the hund. of Thingoe, county of Suffolk. The borough is traversed from south to north by the river Larke, which skirts the eastern edge of the town, and is navigable to within about a mile of it. It is situated in the midst of a richly cultivated tract of country, and is celebrated for the salubrity of the air; 26 miles north-west of Ipswich, and 7½ north-east of London. Pop., in 1801, 7,655; in 1831, 11,436. Houses 2,231. Acres 3,040. A. P. £13,026. Poor rates, in 1837, £6,627.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Livings of the two parishes, perpetual curacies, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; that of St. James is valued in the parliamentary returns at £110 14s., and St. Mary's at £110; gross income of the former £106; of the latter £110; both in the patronage of the corporation. The original church of St. Mary was erected in 1005, but rebuilt in 1424; it is a spacious and elegant Gothic structure, and contains the remains of Mary Tudor, third daughter of Henry VII. The original church of St. James was built in 1200, on the site of which the present beautiful edifice was erected in 1500. The church-gate is considered one of the finest specimens of Saxon architecture in the kingdom.—There are two places of worship for Independents, and one each for Unitarians, Baptists, Quakers, and Methodists, besides a Roman Catholic chapel; the Independent churches were formed in 1646 and 1828; the Unitarian in 1689; the two Baptist churches in 1800 and 1837; the Methodist in 1811.—The grammar-school is one of high reputation. It was founded by Edward VI. One hundred and ten boys are educated on the foundation, each of whom pays £2 2s. per annum. It has four exhibitions valued at £20, and two at £18 15s. each per annum, in either of the universities. There are also nine daily, three day and Sunday, and four Sunday schools; and also four endowed alms-houses for five poor persons.—The donations of lands, money, and houses for charitable purposes in this town are very considerable.—Clopton's hospital for the support of six decayed house-keepers of both sexes, was founded by P. Clopton, M. D., who endowed it with £300 per annum.—Here is the Suffolk general hospital, accommodating forty patients, and gratuitously attended by the neighbouring faculty. An institution called the East Suffolk hospital was founded in 1836. The Suffolk public library, formed by the union of two libraries, the one instituted in 1790, and the other in 1795, is situated in Abbey-gate street.

Buildings.—The town is well-built, and contains some handsome public edifices. The most remarkable buildings are the shire-hall, on the site of the ancient church of St. Margaret,—the guild-hall, wool-hall, the market-cross, and theatre. The county-gaol, erected in 1805, is a good spacious building, surrounded by a stone-wall 20 feet high. This prison is placed at a short distance from the town, and embraces the liberty of Bury-St-Edmund's, consisting of seven hundreds of the county of Suffolk. The marquis of Bristol is lord of the liberty, and appoints the keeper. Prisoners from the borough of Bury are sent here in accordance with an agreement made between the respective magistracies in 1770, for a period of 99 years. The enclosure formed by the boundary wall is an oblong, the angles of which are cut off at their junction. The interior buildings and yards form a regular octagon, and consist of a centre and four detached radiating wings, independently of two additional, apart from them, erected at a later period, quite at variance with the simplicity of the original design.—The house of correction for females stands in an extensive garden, at the distance of a few hundred yards from the exterior walls of the county-gaol. It was formerly the house of correction for the county-prisoners, and consists of a dwelling for the keeper and a small chapel on the ground-floor; two infirmaries, three chambers, and store-rooms on the first floor; and five cells for prisoners in the attics. Prisoners, in 1835, 863.

Trade, Government, &c.—The only manufacture carried on in Bury is one of light woollen stuffs—camlets—lately established in the workhouse. The town is lighted with gas, watched and paved under the powers of a local act, and presents, on the whole, an appearance of prosperity. The chief business carried on is the wool-trade. The market is on Wednesday and Saturday,—the former for grain, the latter for provision. Fairs are held on the Tuesday in Easter week, October 2d, continuing three weeks or longer, for millinery goods, butter, and cheese, and December 1st for cattle. “The greatest of these fairs is on St. Matthew's day, and is famous all over England, not so much for merchandises as for the company, of which we shall give a short account presently. It is kept upon the Angel-hill, which is a large and spacious plain, encompassed with the best of the gentlemen's houses, before which, in the fair time, are erected tents and booths for the traders. All the neighbouring nobility and gentry come to it every afternoon, as the Duke and Duchess of Grafton, the Lord and Lady Cornwallis, the family of the late Lord Jermin, many knights and gentlemen of estates, and with them an infinite number of knights and gentlemen's daughters from Norfolk, Cambridgeshire and Suffolk, who come here to market, and that not in vain, for this fair seldom concludes (as our author tells us) without some considerable matches or intrigues, very advantageous to the knights-errant, who venture themselves. The diversions of this fair are raffling, till it is time to go to the comedy, which is acted every night, which being ended, the company goes to the assemblies, which are always in some gentleman's house or other under the fair.” [‘Magna Britannia,’ 1738, vol. v. p. 253.]

The National Provincial bank, and the East of England bank, have branches here. The government of this borough was vested—by charters 4^o, 6^o, and 12^o, of James I.—in an alderman, recorder, 12 burgesses, and 24 common-councillmen, assisted by subordinate officers. It is now under the Municipal act vested in 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors. The income of the corporation is about £1,200. The county assizes and the petty-sessions for the joint hundreds of Thingoe and Thedwestry are held here. This town has had a commission of the peace granted to it, and a court of quarter-sessions appointed. This burgh sent members to parliament in the 30th Edward I., but not afterwards until the 18th of James I., since which time it has always returned two representatives. The right of election formerly belonged exclusively to the corporation, and the number of voters was only 37. The number of voters registered, in 1832, was 590; in 1837, £665. The number of houses, in 1832, valued at £10, and under £20, was 459; under £40, 208; and above £40, 59.

History.—This was a place of considerable importance previous to the introduction of Christianity into Britain, and is thought to have been the Villa Faustina of the Romans. Soon after the settlement of the Saxons it was made a royal burgh, and named Beodric's worthe, or 'the dwelling of Beodric,' whose possession it was at the time of the heptarchy, and by whom it was bequeathed to Edmund, who succeeded his uncle Offa, as king of the East Angles, in 835, and being murdered by the Danes, was canonized as a martyr. It was from this St. Edmund that the town derived its present name. His remains were deposited in a small chapel at Hoxne, and a new church erected to his memory by some secular priests. The following is from Tanner's Not. Mon.:—"Sigebert, king of the East Angles, about the year 633, quitted his crown, and took upon him a religious life in a monastery which he had founded here, but after the death of that prince we have no certain account of the state of this place, though probably—as far as the incursions of the Danish wars would permit—some sort of religious persons continued to live together, and to officiate in the church here. For hither, as to a place of some note, the body of St. Edmund the king was translated from the obscure wooden chapel at Hoxne, A. D. 903. Immediately whereupon the town changed its name, and several secular priests settling here, built a new church to the honour of that royal martyr. There were at first not above seven or eight in number, but increased in a few years to be nineteen, viz., fourteen priests, and five deacons, all having their several prebends, and became a perfect college about A. D. 925, when King Ethelstan is said to be their founder. This minster from thenceforward was augmented in privileges and revenues by King Edmund, by Theodulf, bishop of London, and other benefactors, but, A. D. 1020, King Canute expelled the secular clerks, and placed herein a convent of Benedictine monks from Hulin in Norfolk. These, he and others endowed with so many estates, royalties, and immunities, that this abbey of St. Edmund's was inferior to very few in revenues, and to none in England as to situation, buildings, ecclesiastical exemptions, or civil franchises and liberties. In the valuation of 26^o Henry VIII., its yearly income was computed at £1,659 13s. 11d. ob. Dugd., £2,336 16s. Od., Speed. The site was granted, 2^o Elizabeth, to John Eyere." In the 3d vol. of the Antiquarian Repertory is a view of the ruins of this once magnificent structure as they appeared in 1779.—Lambarde says of this town: "It is named of Kinge Edmund, whom the comon chronicles call St. Edmund, or Edmund the Martyr; for Bury is but to say, a court or palaice. It was first a colledge of priestes, founded by Athelstane the kinge of Ingland, to the honour and memorye of Edmund that was slayne at Hoxton (then called Eylesdund, as Leland thinketh) whose bones he removed thither. The hole hystorie of this matter is so entrelaced with miracles, that Polydor himselfe, (who beleaved them better than I,) began to dalye with it, sayinge, that monkes weare muche delighted with them; I meane therefore to follow the hystorie, and balke them al. In the yeare 1015, Sueno the Dane spoyle and brent this house; but Canut or Cnout his son made thamendes, for he (by the intreatie of Alwyne, bishop of Helmam, to whome Polydor imputeth the hole foundation,) made it a monasterie, enlarged the possessions, and made that trenche for the bond of their libertie, which is yet to be sene on New Market heathe. As for the towne, one Harvey the keeper of the churche walled it somewhat after the Conquest. This abbay, and some other within the realme, weare of suche and so holye estimation, that (as Mathew Paris witnesseth) not only their churches and cloisters, but also their hole buildinges and territories, wear sure sanctuaries to al offendours. In tyme of Hen. II. Robert therl of Leycester, (after the spoile of his towne of Leicester) came from beyonde the seas withe a rable of Fleminges and Normanes, whome he made to beleve that al was theirs before hand, and as he was on his way, he purposed to spoil this towne and thabbe; but bycause he might come upon them the more unawares, he swarved a litle out of the way, as though he ment not to come neare them. Now while his gallantes paused upon the heathe, they fell to daunce, and singe,

Hoppe Wylkin, hoppe Willykin, Ingland is thyne and myne, &c.

In the meane tyme the kinge's army came sodenly upon them, and eyther slew, drowned, or toke them all. In tyme of Kinge John, the barones of the realme assemblinge at this place by pretence of devotion, conspired to enforce the kinge to ratifie the charter of the liberties of Ingland, now called Magna Carta. In the yeare 1258, under Hen. III. the friers minors got into this towne, by the auctoritie of the pope, and stronge hand of the earl of Gloucester, maugre al the monkes. Edward the First held a parliament in this abbey, wherein was graunted that cities and borowghes should pay the eight part of their goodes, and the rest of the realme but the twelfe part of the same. This respect of parsons is not used in the parlementes of latter age. Humfrey the renowned duke of Gloucester, was slaine in St. Saviour's hospital in this towne, by the hand of Pole then duke of Suffolke, in the 25 of Hen. VI. his reigne. Thabbe was valewed at 1,659 poundes yearly."

Henry I., on his return from Chartres, did homage at the shrine of St. Edmund, for his safe return to his own dominions. Henry II., when marching to oppose his rebellious sons, caused the standard of St. Edmund to be borne in front of his troops, and ascribed to its influence the victory he obtained. This town shares with Runymede the honour of producing Magna charta, a meeting of the barons having been convened here to deliberate on the charter of Henry I., John was compelled to confirm the grant. The ecclesiastics of Bury abbey, and the inhabitants of the town, were often involved in litigation and open hostilities. During the reign of the Plantagenets, several parliaments were held here. In 1381, Sir J. Cavendish, lord-chief-justice, was brought to this place and beheaded by the insurgents of Suffolk and Norfolk. In 1526, the dukes of Suffolk and Norfolk assembled their troops here to quell the insurrection of the inhabitants of Lavenham. In 1556, twelve persons were burned here on account of religious tenets. Subsequently 40 persons—two of whom were tried before Sir Matthew Hale—were put to death here for the imaginary crime of witchcraft. In 1583, Queen Elizabeth visited Bury, and was magnificently entertained. During the succeeding reign a destructive fire occurred here of which Stow gives the following account:—"In the year 1608, April 11th, being Monday, the quarter-session was held at St. Edmund's Bury, and by negligence, an out-malt-house was set on fire, from whence, in a most strange and sudden manner, through fierce winds, the fire came to the farthest side of the town, and as it went, left some streets and houses safe and untouched. The flame flew clean over many houses, and did great spoil to many fair buildings farthest off; and ceased not till it had consumed 160 dwelling-houses, besides others; and, in damage of wares and household stuff, to the full value of £60,000." The celebrated John Lydgate, translator of Boccaccio's Latin poem, 'De casibus Virorum et Fœminarum Illustrium,' was born here. It was also the native place of the able but cruel Bishop Gardiner; and of Humphry Repton, the celebrated landscape-gardener.—There are some curious notices of Bury in the 'Antiquitates Rutupenæ.'

BURYAN (St.), a parish in the hund. of Penwith, union of Penzance, county of Cornwall; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Penzance. Living, a rectory with the curacies of St. Levan and Sennen annexed, in the dio. of Exeter, a royal peculiar; rated at £48 12s. 1d.; gross income £1,012. Patron, the lord-chancellor. The church, from its situation on an eminence, serves as a land-mark to mariners; it is a spacious building, and contains several interesting monuments. There are seven daily schools here, one of which is endowed. Buryan is a place of great antiquity. Tanner, in his Not. Mon., tells us,—"King Ethelstan is said to have built and endowed a collegiate church almost at the Land's End, and to have granted the benefit of a sanctuary and other privileges to the same, in honour of St. Buriena or Beriena, a holy woman from Ireland, who had an oratory, and was buried here. At the Conquest here were secular canons, as there were a dean and three prebendaries at the time of making the Lincoln taxation, 20th Edward I., and also down to 26th Henry VIII., though this deanery was seized into the king's hands, temp. Edward III., by reason that Mr. John de Maunte, then incumbent, was a Frenchman, and as alien, was given, 24th Henry VI., to King's college, Cambridge, and afterwards by King Edward IV. (an. reg. 7) to Windsor college. Yet neither of those societies long enjoyed, or had any benefit from it; for it was all along, and still continues, an independent deanery, in the gift of the Crown, or of the duke of Cornwall, of exempt jurisdiction as a royal free chapel." Many Druidical remains, and other objects of curiosity, exist in the vicinity. Pop., in 1801, 1,161; in 1831, 1,707. Houses 286. Acres 6,970. A. P. £7,288. Poor rates, in 1837, £192.

BURYTHORPE, a parish in the wapentake of Buckrose, union of Malton, east riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south of New Molton; east of the river Derwent. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £6 16s. 3d., and in the parliamentary returns at £110; gross income £270. Patron, the lord-chancellor. There are two daily schools in this parish. In 1768, Francis Conrith died here at the advanced age of 150. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 211. Houses 46. Acres 1,020. A. P. £1,394. Poor rates, in 1837, £43.

BUSBY (GREAT and LITTLE), two townships in the parish of Stokesley, west division of Langbaugh liberty, north riding of Yorkshire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Stokesley. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 106. Houses 17. Acres 2,090. A. P. £2,686. Poor rates, in 1837, £132.

BUSCOT, a parish in the hund. of Shrivenham, union of Farringdon, county of Berks; 4 miles north-west by west of Great Farringdon; on the river Thames or Isis. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £21 2s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £510. Patron, in 1835, P. Pryse, Esq. Charities connected with the parish produce £37 4s. per annum. This place was anciently called Burwardscot. Pop., in 1801, 409; in 1831, 416. Houses 84. Acres 2,910. A. P. £5,186. Poor rates, in 1837, £237.

BUSHBURY, a parish in the north division of the hund. of Seisdon, union of Penkridge, county of Stafford; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by east of Wolverhampton, containing the hamlet of Mosley and the township of Easington; intersected by the Grand Junction railroad from Birmingham to Liverpool, and close upon the Stafford and Worcester canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £7 11s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £159. Patrons, — Phillips, and others. The church was built in 1460. This parish possesses a daily and a day and Sunday school. Charities connected with it produce about £35 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 857; in 1831, 1,275. Houses 134. Acres 7,610. A. P. £8,802. Poor rates, in 1837, £430.

BUSHBY, a hamlet in the parish of Thurnby, hund. of Gartree, county of Leicester, 4 miles east by south of Leicester. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 86. Houses 18. Acres 760. A. P. £1,288. Poor rates, in 1837, £37.

BUSHEY, a parish in the hund. of Dacorum, but located in the hund. of Cashio, union of Watford, county of Hertford; 2 miles south-east by east of Watford; intersected by the post-road, and close upon the Birmingham and London railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of St. Alban's and dio. of London; rated at £18 2s. 1d.; gross income £910; nett income £773. Patrons, the master and fellows of Exeter college, Oxford. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1806. An Independent church was formed here in 1814. There are here two daily, four boarding, and two Sunday schools, and a dissenting chapel. Pop., in 1801, 856; in 1831, 1,586. Houses 329. Acres 3,130. A. P. £6,847. Poor rates, in 1837, £593.

BUSHLEY, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Pershore, county of Worcester; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-west of Tewksbury; bounded on the east by the river Severn. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, valued in the parliamentary returns at £31; gross income £58. Patron, in 1835, J. Dowdeswell, Esq. This parish possesses a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 282; in 1831, 313. Houses 65. Acres 1,740. A. P. £3,290. Poor rates, in 1837, £69.

BUSHMEAD, in the hund. of Barford, county of Bedford; 5 miles west of St. Neot's, in the county of Huntingdon.—"A priory of Black canons founded by Hugh, son of Oliver Beauchamp, temp. Hen. II., and dedicated to St. Mary. Its annual revenue at the suppression was £71 13s. 9d. ob. Dugd., £81 13s. 5d., ob. Speed. The house and good part of the possessions came by exchange to Sir W. Gascoigne, 29 Hen. VIII."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

BUSHY-PARK, situated in the parish of Teddington, and hund. of Spelthorne, county of Middlesex; 12 miles of London, bounded on the south and east by the river Thames, is a royal park, containing 1,110 acres, and comprising all the enclosures belonging to Hampton-court, except the Homepark. The avenues in the park, amounting to nine, are formed of chestnut and lime trees, and are noted for their beauty and magnificence. A right of passage through this park having been withheld from the public, was recovered by the exertions of a spirited individual, in humble life, residing at Hamptonwick.

BUSLINGTHORPE, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of Lawres, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 3 miles south-west by west of Market-Raisen. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £2, and in the parliamentary returns at £147 13s.; gross income £244. Patrons, the governors of the charter-house. Pop., in 1801, 48; in 1821, 55. Houses 9. Acres 1,220. A. P. £1,087. Poor rates, in 1837, £35.

BUSTABECK, a township in the parish of Castle-Sowerby, Leath ward, county of Cumberland; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Hesketh-Newmarket. Pop., in 1801, 423; in 1831, 237. Houses 46. Other returns with the parish.

BUSTON (HIGH AND LOW), two townships in the parish of Warkworth, county of Northumberland; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Alnwick; on the coast, north of the Coquet river. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 195. Houses 34. Poor rates, in 1837, £91.

BUTCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Hartcliff with Bedminster, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; 8 miles north-east of Axbridge; north of the river Ye. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 17s. 10d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. P. Hasell. The church is a very ancient edifice. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 242. Houses 45. Acres 2,010. A. P. £1,922. Poor rates, in 1837, £88.

BUTELAND AND BROOMHOPE. See BIRTLBY, Northumberland.

BUTLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Whitley, union of Wells, county of Somerset; 4 miles south-south-east of Glastonbury. Living, a vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Baltonsborough, in the exempt jurisdiction of Glastonbury, in the dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £12 6s. 8d., and in the parliamentary returns at £56; gross income £433. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. and Rev. G. Neville Grenville. There are here five daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 694; in 1831, 952. Houses 177. Acres 4,670. A. P. £6,962. Poor rates, in 1837, £406.

BUTLEY, a township in the parish of Prestbury, hund. of Macclesfield, co.-palatine of Chester; 3 miles north by west of Macclesfield; intersected by the Manchester and Birmingham railway. There are here three daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 516; in 1831, 806. Houses 138. Acres 1,500. A. P. £3,946. Poor rates, in 1837, £204. The returns from Butley, in 1801, include the township of Newton.

BUTLEY, a parish in the hund. of Loes, union of Plumestage, county of Suffolk; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Woodbridge; on the west of an estuary formed by the river Butley, and near the sea. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £13; gross income £85. Patrons, in 1835, the trustees of P. J. Thelluson. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Tanner says, "Ranulph de Glauvil, the famous lawyer, (and after justiciary of England,) founded here, A. D. 1171, a priory of Black canons, which was dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary. Its annual income at the dissolution amounted to £318 17s. 2d. ob. q., and the site of this monastery was granted, 32^d Henry VIII., to Thomas, duke of Norfolk, and 36^d Henry VIII., to William Forth." The walls and ruins of this abbey occupy nearly 12 acres of ground. Pop., in 1801, 250; in 1831, 356. Houses 73. Acres 1,690. A. P. £1,139. Poor rates, in 1837, £81.

BUTLERS-MARSTON, a parish in the Kington division of the hund. of Kington, county of Warwick; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-west of Kington; on a small branch of the Avon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £8 3s. 4d., and in the parliamentary returns at £68 11s.; gross income £89. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Christ church, Oxford. The great and small tithes, moduses, &c., the property of the dean and chapter of Christ church, Oxford, were commuted in 1771. This parish possesses a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 200; in 1831, 332. Houses 65. Acres 1,620. A. P. £1,968. Poor rates, in 1837, £133.

BUTSFIELD, a township in the parish of Lanchester, W. division of Chester ward, co.-palatine of Durham, 11 miles west by north of Durham; south of the Stanhope and Tyne railway. Pop., in 1821, 226; in 1831, 285. Houses 52. Acres 1,390. Other returns with the parish.

BUTTER-CRAMBE, a township in the parish of Bossall, wapentake of Bulmer, north riding of Yorkshire; $12\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of York; pleasantly situated on the river Derwent. Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 176. Houses 32. Acres 1,550. A. P. £3,123. Poor rates, in 1837, £118.

BUTTERLAW, a township in the parish of Newburn, county of Northumberland; 5 miles west-north-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Pop., in 1801, 24; in 1831, 30. Houses 7. Poor rates, in 1837, £5.

BUTTERLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Clifton, but located in the hund. of Hayridge, union of Tiverton, county of Devon; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by east of Tiverton; east of the Exeter river. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £10 8s. 8d., and in the parliamentary returns at £120; gross income £180. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 142. Houses 29. Acres 2,520. A. P. £856. Poor rates, in 1837, £69.

BUTTERLEY. See EDWIN-RALPH with BUTTERLEY.

BUTTERLEY, a hamlet in the township of Ripley, parish of Pentrich, hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, county of Derby; 3 miles south of Alfreton. The extensive iron-works, collieries, and lime-works in this place and in the vicinity, belong to a company formed in 1792. There are 1500 workmen employed here, half of whom are employed in the mines and the rest in the iron-works and other manufactories, and the number of steam-engines used in the works and mines is 26, affording a power equal to that of 700 horses. Among the magnificent castings executed at Butterley, are the Vauxhall iron bridge; a cast-iron bridge to cross the river Gomptra, at Lucknow in the East Indies, executed for the Nabob of Oude; the iron roof for the Rum-quay, West India docks; the cast-iron colonade in front of the opera house, London; the iron bridges for the harbour of Dublin; the iron bridge for Leith harbour. Here also were made the whole of the large main pipes to supply the city of Edinburgh with water; and among the steam-engines made here were those powerful ones by which the draining of the fens at Misterton, occupying more than 50,000 acres of land, was effected. In 1829 there were two furnaces in blast, at Butterley, producing, on an average, 70 tons of pig iron per week. The Cromford canal affords a medium for the conveyance of goods by water to Cromford, where the High Peak railway commences, extending to Walley-bridge, near Stockport, where it meets the Stockport junction railway, which connects it with the Manchester and Liverpool line. A branch to the Midland counties railway has been proposed. Its length would be 1 mile, 68 chains.

BUTTERMERE, a chapelry in the parish of Brigham, Allerdale ward above Darwent, county of Cumberland; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Keswick; beautifully situated between the lake of Buttermere and Crummock water. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £21; gross income £56. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Lonsdale. Buttermere lake is a small sheet of water about a mile and a quarter long, and nearly half-a-mile wide, surrounded by superb mountain scenery. The eastern margin is richly adorned with wood, and on the west the mountains of Red Pike, High Stile, and High Crag, rise precipitously to a sublime elevation. "At the north end, or outlet of the lake, it is separated from Crummock water by an enclosed and verdant plain, beautifully ornamented with wood and hedge-row trees. This plain descends in a easy inclination from the village to the stream connecting the two lakes. Buttermere is a good station for those whose object is the study of lakes and mountains, but it is greatly inferior to Borrowdale or Ambleside, in its river scenery." [Green's Guide, vol. ii. pp. 179.] Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 89. Houses 19. Acres 3,480. A. P. £809. Poor rates, in 1837, £61.

BUTTERMERE, a parish in the hund. of Kinwardstone, union of Hungerford, county of Wilts; 5 miles south of Hungerford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £10; gross income £246. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 137. Houses 18. Acres 1,340. A. P. £1,138. Poor rates, in 1837, £43.

BUTTERTON, a township and chapelry in the parish of Mayfield, south division of the hund. of Totmonlow, county of Stafford; 6 miles east of Lecke; near the Manifold river. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £17, and in the parliamentary returns at £30; gross income £91. Patron, the vicar of Mayfield. In 1754 W. Mellor bequeathed property, now producing £16 per annum, for which 20 children are taught reading. There are here three daily schools, one of which has the endowment mentioned above. Pop., in 1801, 297; in 1831, 346. Houses 79. Acres 1,940. A. P. £3,118. Poor rates, in 1837, £291.

BUTTERTON, a township in the parish of Trentham, north division of the hund. of Pirehill, county of Stafford; 2 miles south of Newcastle-under-Lyne, in the vicinity of the Birmingham and Manchester railway, and the Grand Trunk canal. Pop., in 1801, 22; in 1831, 35. Houses 6. Acres 470. Other returns with the parish.

BUTTERWICK, a township in the parish of Sedgely, co.-palatine of Durham; 11 miles south-east by south of Durham; south of the river Skern. Pop., in 1801, 60; in 1831, 38. Houses 7. Acres 1,010. A. P. £1,120. Poor rates, in 1837, £38.

BUTTERWICK, a parish in the wapentake of Skirbeck, parts of Holland, union of Boston, county of Lincoln; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Boston; on the coast, near Boston Deepa. Living, a discharged vicarage, united in 1751 to that of Frieston. There is here a daily school endowed with an annual income arising from land, amounting to £240, or £250. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 504. Houses 90. Acres 1,370. A. P. £3,170. Poor rates, in 1837, £238.

BUTTERWICK, a chapelry in the parish of Foxholes, wapentake of Dickering, east riding of Yorkshire; 10 miles north by west of Great Driffield. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; gross income £47. Patron, the rector of Foxholes. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1771. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 100. Houses 17. Acres 1,540. A. P. £1,402. Poor rates, in 1837, £53.

BUTTERWICK, a township in the parish of Burton-le-Street, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north-west of New Malton; on the river Rye. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 56. Houses 12. Acres 500. A. P. £1,336. Poor rates, in 1837, £50.

BUTTERWICK (EAST), a township in the parish of Messingham, county of Lincoln; 11 miles west of Glandford Bridge. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 228. Houses 58. Acres 680. A. P. £1,929. Poor rates, in 1837, £137.

BUTTERWICK (WEST), and KELFIELD, a township and chapelry in the parish of Owston, west division of the wapentake of Manley, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; 11 miles north-east of Gainsboro-rough; intersected by the river Trent. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; gross income £80. Patron, the vicar of Owston. There are four daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 473; in 1831, 798. Houses 163. A. P. £3,494. Poor rates, in 1837, £173.

BUTTERWORTH, a township in the parish of Rochdale, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles east of Rochdale. A Baptist church was formed here in 1780. There are here six daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum by R. G. Townley, Esq., together with £7 annually, the interest of £140; another with £30, and another with £24 per annum; the two last mentioned endowments are paid by the trustees of Hill's charity lands. There are also four Sunday schools. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the cotton and woollen manufactories in the neighbourhood. Pop., in 1801, 3,930; in 1831, 5,648. Houses 987. A. P. £8,247. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,161.

BUTTINGHILL HUNDRED, in the rape of Lewes, county of Sussex. Area 68,210 acres. Houses 1,751. Pop., in 1831, 11,423.

BUTTINGTON, a parish partly in the hund. of Pool, and partly within the jurisdiction of the borough of Welshpool, county of Montgomery, North Wales, on the banks of the Severn. Offa's dyke passes through this parish, and separates the county from Shropshire. It includes the townships of Clet-terwood, Hope, and Trevern. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; valued at £101, and in the parliamentary returns at £71; gross income £107; in the patronage of the vicar of Welshpool. The ancient name of this parish is Tal-y-Bont. In 894 a fierce battle was fought here between the Saxons and the Danes, in which the former were victorious. Several Danish forts are visible in the vicinity. Nearly the last of the sanguinary struggles of the Welsh for national independence was made on this spot. Of these, or perhaps earlier contests, an immense number of skulls and human bones recently discovered in digging the foundation for a school-house near the church, were the probable relics. Pop., in 1801, 577; in 1831, 755. Houses 144. A. P. £3,222. Poor rates, in 1837, £354.

BUTTSBURY, a parish in the hund. and union of Chelmsford, county of Essex; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Chelmsford; on the river Wid, and close upon the London and Norwich railway. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to the rectory of Ingatestone. This parish possesses two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 512. Houses 100. Acres 1,440. Its annual value is included with that of Stock. Poor rates, in 1837, £291.

BUTTULPH, a parish in the hund. of Steyning, rape of Bramber, union of Steyning, county of Sussex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east of Steyning; the river Agur is navigable on the eastern boundary of this parish. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Bramber. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 81. Houses 10. Acres 910.

BUXHALL, a parish in the hund. and union of Stow, county of Suffolk; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Market-Stow; intersected by the upper and lower Ged and the river Orwell. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £20 0s. 5d.; gross income £578. Patron, in 1835, Copinger Hill, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 466. Houses 73. Acres 2,120. A. P. £2,905. Poor rates, in 1837, £306.

BUXLOW, a hamlet in the parish of Knodishall, hund. of Blything, county of Suffolk; 3 miles south-east of Saxmundham. Living, a rectory annexed to that of Knodishall. Pop. returned with the parish.

BUXTED, a parish in the hund. of Loxfield Dorset, rape of Pevensey, union of Uckfield, county of Sussex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Uckfield; intersected by a branch of the river Ouse. Living, a rectory with the perpetual curacy of Uckfield, in the exempt deanery of South Malling, and one of the 22 parishes in Sussex which are in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury; rated at £37 5s. 2d.; gross income £792. In 1718 the Rev. A. Saunders made a bequest of land for teaching and apprenticing six boys, and a small donation for instructing six girls. Sir H. Fermor bequeathed £3,000, the interest of which is applied in educating and clothing 10 children of this parish, and 30 from Rotherfield. There are also three daily schools, two of which have small endowments. "Here was an hospital begun for four or six poor persons, by William Hown, who, by his will, bearing date A. D. 1404, enjoined the same to be finished." Tanner's Not. Mon. A fair is held on July 31st for cattle and pedlery. Pop., in 1801, 1,063; in 1831, 1,642. Houses 290. Acres 7,020, of which 204 were in hops in 1837. A. P. £4,417. Poor rates, in 1837, £663.—The first pieces of cast iron made in England were run here.

BUXTON, a market-town and chapelry in the parish of Bakewell, hund. of High Peak, county of Derby; 36 miles north-west by north of Derby, and 160 north-west by north of London, on the high road from Derby to Manchester; near the source of the river Wye, in a valley surrounded by bleak elevated tracts of moorland. It is one of the most agreeable of our watering-places, and is supposed to have been the Roman station Bucostenum.—Living, a perpetual curacy in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Lichfield; valued at £5; gross income £105. Patron, the vicar of Bakewell. A new church, an elegant structure of free-stone, of the Tuscan order, was erected here by the duke of Devonshire. It was opened in 1812, and the patronage of the chapel, with that of Baslow, given by act of parliament to his Grace. A Baptist church was formed here in 1796. There are also places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Independents. Buxton possesses four daily schools, one of which is endowed with land principally by the duke of Devonshire, and has a lending library attached. Here is a charity for the benefit of poor invalids resorting to this place for the use of the waters: besides having permission to bathe, they receive a weekly allowance of 6s. from a fund chiefly raised by a contribution of 1s. from every visitor who remains more than one day in town.—"Strangers entering Buxton from the south must be greatly disappointed in their expectations. The Crescent, and the numerous buildings by which it is surrounded, together with the whole of the modern part of the town, are hid in the deep hollow below, over which the eye passes to the hills beyond, and nothing is seen but a miserable village placed in as miserable a country as the mind can possibly conceive. Approaching the Eagle inn the place improves; but it is not until we arrive at the brow of St. Anne's cliff that the new part of Buxton, with its elegant buildings and splendid hotels, is beheld. The transition is so sudden, and the change of scene so complete and entire, that the mind, bewildered and confused, almost doubts the reality of so extraordinary a contrast. The upper part of Buxton is truly a Derbyshire village; the lower, in the elegance of its buildings, its show, and its parade, approximates to Bath. Nothing can be more instantaneous or more forcibly felt than the change of passing from one part to the other of this fashionable bathing-place; and the company who visit it during the summer-season, furnish a contrast equally striking and impressive. The bloom of health and the sallow hue of disease—the elastic bound of youth, and the failing step of infirmity—wealth and poverty, and all the gradations that society produces between, are here mingled together, teaching a salutary lesson to the observing stranger as he passes along." [Rhodes's 'Peak Scenery,' p. 99.] The Crescent, erected in 1781 by the Duke of Devonshire, is a magnificent range of buildings in the Grecian style. At the eastern extremity of this crescent, two hot baths have been constructed; they are supplied from Bingham's well, temperature 81°. Fronting the crescent is a rising ground, planted with trees, and tastefully laid out in shrubberies and walks. The new square nearly adjoining has an arcade communicating with that of the crescent, and forming a continued promenade of considerable extent. St. Anne's well, near the crescent, is enclosed within a handsome building in the style of a Grecian temple, and is the resort of those who drink the waters, which are conveyed thither, into a white marble basin, from the original spring. It is regarded as one of the seven wonders of the Peak, mainly from the circumstance of both hot and cold water being obtained within twelve inches of each other. The water is generally taken in moderate quantity before breakfast, and again before dinner. It is pleasant to the taste, and has a clear and sparkling appearance in the glass. The active ingredients in the Buxton water appear to be the hydrochlorate of soda, and carbonate of lime. Some part of the stimulating properties of the Buxton water may perhaps be imputed to the mere quantity of fluid taken into the stomach, for the water itself is but weakly impregnated. "Medicinally," Mr. Glover remarks, "these waters seem entitled to the appellation of a mild saline mineral: they are perfectly pellucid, and, owing very probably to the presence of azotic gas, they are devoid of that rapid taste, so observable in common water when heated to the same temperature." The Buxton season commences in June, and ends in October. The number of visitors varies from 10,000 to 12,000 annually.—About three-fourths of a mile south-west of the town is Pool's hole, a large dreary cavern under Coltmoss hill, abounding with stalactites representing various natural forms. Into this cavern Mary, queen of Scots, it is reported, penetrated to a considerable distance, from which circumstance one of the stalactite pillars has received her name.—Half-a-mile from this cavern is Diamond-hill, so called from the profusion of detached crystals found upon it, which are denominated Buxton or Derbyshire diamonds.—The suburbs of the town abound with picturesque and romantic scenery, and there are some delightful walks and rides. Axedge, one of the highest summits in the peak of Derbyshire, is generally visited from Buxton. It is about 3 miles from the town, and rises 1,000 feet above the level of the Crescent. "Within the last half-century the neighbourhood of Buxton has been much improved by cultivation and plantations, judiciously arranged on the adjacent hills by the command of the Dukes of Devonshire. The present noble Duke, following the example of his illustrious father, is continually adding to the rides, walks, and plantations in the vicinity. The serpentine walk commences opposite the square, winding beautifully on each side of the Wye. The walks are well laid out, the cascades and bridges have a good effect, and the trees, which are shooting into beauty, render it a delightful spot. The more recent improvements on St. Anne's cliff were designed by Sir Jeffery Wyatville, and render that hill a highly ornamental pleasure-ground, harmonizing with the classic architecture of Carr. A series of terrace walks, one above another, sweep in a circular direction, to agree with the convex form of the hill, and communicate with each other by flights of steps at right angles, and in the centre of the different walks. A century ago, Buxton was described as being "the most dreary and cheerless scenery in the Peak of Derbyshire; and the country as exhibiting one wide extent of hopeless attraction." —The government of Buxton is vested in a constable, and the trade consists chiefly in the manufacture and sale of ornaments in alabaster, spar, and other minerals of the peak. The market-day is on Saturday. Fairs are held on the Monday before Chapel-in-le-Frith fair, April 1st, May 2d, Monday before 2d Wednesday in September, and October 28th. Races take place in the month of June. Pop., in 1801, 760; in 1831, 1,211. Houses 211. Acres 540. A. P. £5,810. Poor rates, in 1837, £355.

BUXTON, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Erpingham, union of Aylsham, county of Norfolk; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-west of Coltishall; western bank of the river Bure. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Skepton. Here is a Baptist chapel; the church was formed in 1796. Petty sessions are held here and at Aylsham for the southern division of the hundred of Erpingham. This parish possesses three daily schools, one of which is partly supported by a bequest of the late John Wright. Other charities connected with the parish produce about £140 per annum. This place is supposed to have been a Roman station. Pop., in 1801, 488; in 1831, 610. Houses 127. Acres 1,460. A. P. £1,506. Poor rates, in 1837, £207.

BUXTON AND COXALL, a township in that part of Bucknill parish which is in the hund. of Wigmore, county of Hereford; $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Knighton; bounded on the north and west by the river Clun, and on the south by the Teme. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 120. Houses 22. Acres 1,430. A. P. £1,608. Poor rates, in 1837, £67.

BWLCH, a township in that part of the parish of Cwmyoy which is in the hund. of Abergavenny, county of Monmouthshire; on the northern bank of the river Monnow. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 87. Houses 16. Acres 650. A. P. £713. Poor rates, in 1837, £38.

BYERS-GREEN, a township in the parish of St. Andrew's Auckland, south-east division of Darlington ward, co.-palatine of Durham; 4 miles north-north-east of Bishop-Auckland. A branch of the Clarence railway intersects this township. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 207. Houses 49. Acres 790. A. P. £1,326. Poor rates, in 1837, £207.

BYFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Chipping-Warden, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by south of Daventry; east of the Oxford canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £28; gross income £995; in the patronage of Corpus Christi college, Oxford. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1778. An Independent chapel was founded here in 1827. There are in this parish four daily schools, one of which has a small endowment and two Sunday schools. Forty-eight pecks of wheat are given yearly to the poor of the parish by the rector. Other charities produce £46 10s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 842; in 1831, 952. A. P. £4,587.

BYFLEET, a parish in the first division of the hund. of Godley, county of Surrey; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-north-west of Cobham; 2 from Weybridge common, on the Southampton railway; and $1\frac{1}{2}$ from London by railway; situated between the river Wey and the Junction canal, and close upon the London and Southampton railroad. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £9 11s. 8d.; gross income £187. Patron, the lord-chancellor. This parish possesses three daily and two Sunday schools. Charities connected with it produce £28 per annum. Edward II. presented this manor to his favourite, Piers Gaveston; and Henry VIII. was nursed here. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 510. Houses 212. Acres 2,760. A. P. £3,191. Poor rates, in 1837, £567.

BYFORD, a parish in the hund. of Grimsworth, union of Weobley, county of Hereford; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Hereford; on the northern bank of the river Wye. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £7 1s. 8d.; gross income £200. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 187. Houses 41. Acres 910. A. P. £924. Poor rates, in 1837, £106.

BYGRAVE, a parish in the hund. of Odsey, union of Hitchin, county of Hertford; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east by north of Baldock; near the Icknield Way, and Metley Hill. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £17 9s. 7d.; gross income £404. Patron, in 1835, the Marquess of Salisbury. Pop., in 1801, 52; in 1831, 145. Houses 22. Acres 1,860. A. P. £2,069.

BYKER, a township in the parish of All Saints, Newcastle, county of Northumberland; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile east of Newcastle-upon-Tyne; bounded on the south by the river Tyne. Here are several manufactories. There are in this township, a Wesleyan Methodist chapel, and fourteen daily, and seven Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 3,251; in 1831, 5,176. Houses 835. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £17,501. Poor rates, in 1837, £647.

BYLAND-CUM-MEMBRIS, a township in the parish of Coxwold, wapentake of Birdforth, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west by west of Helmsley. Formerly there was a convent in this place. The following is from Tanner's Not. Mon.:—"Roger de Mowberry, at the instance of his mother, Gundreda, A. D. 1143, removed the convent of Cistercian monks from Hoda to a part of her jointure near the river Rye, almost opposite to the abbey of Rywall, (Rievaulx) since called Old Byland, which place being thought inconvenient for the habitation of these religious, four years after they removed to Stocking, near Crickwold, and at last, A. D. 1177, fixed a little more easterly, near Whitaker, where the abbey of Byland, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, continued in a flourishing state till the general dissolution, when its yearly revenues were valued at £238 9s. 4d. Dugd.; £295 5s. 4d. Speed. The site and most of the demesne lands were granted 32^d Henry VIII., to Sir William Pykering." The western front, one end of the transept, and part of the aisles, are still remaining, and from them it may be judged that the convent itself was a magnificent edifice of a date and style of architecture co-eval with Rievaulx, from which it is about 5 miles distant. The abbey has been built of oolitic limestone from the immediate neighbourhood. The site is in the possession of the Stapylton family. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 365. Houses 76. Acres 3,130. A. P. £2,461. Poor rates, in 1837, £59.

BYLAND-OLD, a parish in the wapentake of Birdforth, union of Helmsley Blackmoor, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles west-north-west of Helmsley; close on the river Rye. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York.

valued at £14; gross income £55. Patron, in 1835, G. Wombwell, Esq. The chapel is an ancient dilapidated structure. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 163. Houses 25. Acres 3,120. A. P. £1,147. Poor rates, in 1837, £112.

BYLAUGH, a parish in the hund. of Eynsford, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 5½ miles north-east of Dereham; on the river Wensum. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; gross income £84. Patron, in 1835, E. Lombe, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 92. Houses 9. Acres 1,590. A. P. £1,094. Poor rates, in 1837, £154.

BYLEY WITH YATEHOUSE, a township in the parish of Middlewich, hund. of Northwich, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles north of Middlewich; near the Trunk canal. Pop., in 1801, 130; in 1831, 123. Houses 22. Acres 820. A. P. £1,535. Poor rates, in 1837, £205.

BYRKLEY, or BURTLE-HOUSE, in the hund. of Whitley, county of Somerset. "A hermitage, or small priory founded by William, son of Jeffry of Edyndon, in the year 1199. It was of the order of St. Austin, and dedicated to St. Stephen. It was valued at £6 5s. 2d. ob. per ann.; and a parcel of the possessions of the monastery of Bath: it was granted 7^o Edward VI., to John and James Bisse." —Tanner's Not. Mon.

BYRNESS, or BERENESS, a chapelry in the parish of Elsdon, south division of Coquetdale ward, county of Northumberland; 13¼ miles north-north-west of Bellingham; on the river Reed. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northumberland, and dio. of Durham; gross income £82. Patron, the rector of Elsdon. The chapel was rebuilt by subscription in 1793. Pop., returned with the parish.

BYROME WITH POOLE, a township partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in Brotherton parish, lower division of the wapentake of Barcastone-Ash, west riding of Yorkshire; 1½ mile north-north-west of Ferry Bridge; on the river Aire, and close upon the York and Derby railway. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 84. Houses 12. Acres 850. A. P. £1,008. Poor rates, in 1837, £79.

BYSHAM-MONTAGUE. See BISHAM.

BYSHOTTLES. See BRANDON, Durham.

BYTHAM (CASTLE), a parish in the wapentake of Beltilsloe, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; 5 miles south by west from Cooby, comprising the chapelry of Holywell with Awnby, and the hamlet of Counthorpe; east of the Great north road. Living, a vicarage annexed to the rectory of Little Bytham. There are here two daily schools, one of which is allowed £25 per annum out of an estate belonging to the parish, and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 506; in 1831, 781. Houses 129. Acres 776. A. P. £6,056. Poor rates, in 1837, £358.

BYTHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the wapentake of Beltilsloe, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; on the river Glen. Living, a rectory, with the vicarage of Castle-Bytham, and the curacy of Holywell, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 8s. 4d.; gross income £665. Patrons, the bishop, and dean and chapter of Lincoln, alternately. The great and small tithes, &c. of Little Bytham and the hamlet of Awnby, the property of the dean and chapter of Lincoln, clerical rector and vicar, were commuted in 1801. This parish possesses two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 189; in 1831, 237. Houses 50. Acres 1,010. A. P. £1,267. Poor rates, in 1837, £51.

BYTHORN, a parish in the hund. of Leighton, stone, union of Thrapston, county of Huntingdon; 6½ miles north-west by north of Kimbolton. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Brington. The great and small tithes, the property of the clerical rector, were commuted in 1799-1800. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1811. This parish possesses a daily and Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 269; in 1831, 313. Houses 65. Acres 1,510. A. P. £1,867. Poor rates, in 1837, £185.

BYTON, a parish in the hund. of Wigmore, union of Presteigne, county of Hereford; 4 miles east of Presteigne, in Radnor; south of the river Lug, near Shobden-hill-wood. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £5; gross income £120. Patron, the lord-chancellor. The interest of John Woodhouse's charity, amounting to £8 15s., is distributed annually amongst the poor of the parish. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 153. Houses 32. Acres 1,030. A. P. £1,000. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

BYWELL (ST. ANDREW'S), a small parish in the east division of Tindale ward, union of Hexham, county of Northumberland; containing the township of Beal, Broom-haugh, Riding, Stocksfield-hall, and Styford; 13¼ miles west of Newcastle, on the river Tyne, and intersected by the Newcastle and Carlisle railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £3 9s. 2d.; gross income £172. Patron, in 1835, T. W. Beaumont, Esq. The church is small, with a lofty steeple. There is a daily school in this parish. The river Tyne runs through the parish. Pop., in 1801, 402; in 1831, 436. Houses 81. Acres 3,680. A. P. £4,368. Poor rates, in 1837, £191.

BYWELL (ST. PETER'S), a parish of nearly 8 miles in length, and 5 miles in breadth, in the eastern division of Tindale ward, union of Hexham, county of Northumberland; on the north of the Tyne, comprising the following townships:—Acomb East, Apperley, Bromley, Bywell St. Andrew's and St. Peter's, Espersfields with Millshields, High Fotherly, Heally, Newton, Newton Hall, and Stelling, with Whittonshall, and Newlands (a chapelry and township united). Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £9 18s. 1½d.; gross income £120. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham. There are also places of worship here for dissenters. This parish possesses six daily and three Sunday schools. Bywell was formerly the head of a barony; the remains of the castle are still visible at a short distance from the village, which is partly in the parish of Bywell St. Andrew, and partly in that of Bywell St. Peter. The appearance of the village is very pleasing. From the road near the brink of the river the ruined piers of the bridge are seen as front objects, and behind them, in a regular cascade, the whole river is precipitated over a wear extended from bank to bank, and about 10 feet in height; a mill is seen on the right hand, a salmon loch on the left; along the banks of the upper basin of the river the town and its two churches stretch with a fine curvature, while the solemn ruins of the ancient castle of the Baliols appear towering above the trees on the right: the whole back ground of the landscape is covered with wood. In the river Tyne, which flows south of this parish, two stone piers of an ancient bridge are to be seen. Pop., in 1801, 1,303; in 1831, 1,478. Houses 265. Acres 21,780. A. P. £13 627. Poor rates, in 1837, £584.

C

CABOURN, a parish in the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 2 miles north-east by east of Caistor. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £5 18s. 4d.; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, Lord Yarborough. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 175. Houses 21. Acres 2,860. A. P. £545. Poor rates, in 1837, £112.

CABUS, a township in the parish of Garstang, co.-palatine of Lancaster, 2 miles north of Garstang; intersected by the Lancaster canal, and close upon the Lancaster and Preston railway. There is here a daily school. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 267. Houses 41. Acres 1,220. A. P. £2,198. Poor rates, in 1837, £171.

CADBURY, a parish in the hund. of Haybridge, union of Tiverton, county of Devon; 6 miles east-north-east of Crediton, in the neighbourhood of the Exeter and Bristol railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £9 4s. 4d.; gross income £175. Patron, the lord-chancellor. This parish possesses a daily and a Sunday school, to which a library is attached. Pop., in 1801, 238; in 1831, 256. Houses 47. Acres 2,620. A. P. £2,003. Poor rates, in 1837, £114.

CADBURY (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Catsash, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 3 miles south of Castlecary. It includes the hamlets of Galhampton, Yarlington, Woolston and Clapton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £28 17s. 3½d.; gross income £809. The patronage is in the master and fellows of Emanuel college, Cambridge. There are in this parish two daily and three infant schools. Pop., in 1801, 810; in 1831, 1,109. Houses 218. Acres 2,630. A. P. £4,334. Poor rates, in 1837, £463.

CADBURY (SOUTH), a parish in the hund. of Catsash, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 6 miles west-south-west of Wincanton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £10 3s. 1½d. Patron, in 1835, J. Bennett, Esq. In the neighbourhood are the remains of an ancient fortification, called Camalet, situated on the northern extremity of a ridge of hills, and encircled by several trenches. Camden is of opinion that this camp marks the site of Cathbregon, where Arthur routed the Saxons in a great battle. Pop., in 1801, 214; in 1831, 231. Houses 53. Acres 900. A. P. £2,025. Poor rates, in 1837, £97.

CADDINGTON, a parish and township partly in the hund. of Flitt, union of Laton, county of Bedford, and partly in the hund. of Dacorum, county of Hertford; 2 miles south-west by west of Luton. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £10; gross income £327. The patronage is vested in the dean and chapter of St. Paul's. There are here two Sunday and three daily schools, one of which is partially endowed. Pop., in 1801, 1,073; in 1831, 1,563. Houses 312. Acres 4,500. A. P. £4,602. Poor rates, in 1837, £452.

CADEBY, a parish in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, union of Market-Bosworth, county of Leicester; 1½ miles east-south-east of Market-Bosworth. It includes the township of Osbaston. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £4 10s. 2½d.; gross income £230. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. W. Dixie. There are in this parish a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 175. Houses 75. Acres 2,130. A. P. £1,254. Poor rates, in 1837, £274.

CADEBY, a township in the parish of Sprotborough, wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, west riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles west-south-west of Doncaster, in the vicinity of the Dearn and Dove canal. There are here two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 155; in 1831, 178. Houses 34. Acres 1,110. A. P. £1,434. Poor rates, in 1837, £102.

CADELEIGH, or CADLEY, a parish in the hund. of Haybridge, union of Tiverton, county of Devon; 4½ miles south-west of Tiverton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £13; gross income £234; nett income £198. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Moore. This parish possesses three daily schools. Charities connected with it amount to £17 10s. per annum. Pop., in 1801, 226; in 1831, 312. Houses 59. Acres 2,020. A. P. £2,491. Poor rates, in 1837, £89.

CADER-IDRIS, a mountain 1½ mile south of the town of Dolgelly, county of Merioneth. It is the highest mountain in North Wales, Snowdon excepted. It rises almost perpendicularly from the margin of the lake Tallylyn, and is on every side extremely steep and craggy. From its summit are seen Snowdon on the north; Plinlimmon on the south; the bay of Cardigan on the west; and on the east, the lake of Bala, the Arrenig, and the Arran mountains, with the long chain of hills reaching to the confines of Shropshire, including, in clear days, the Wrekin itself. Its component parts are silicious porphyry, quartz, and schorle. Colonel Mudge ascertained the elevation of this mountain to be 2,914 feet. Warner describes the prospect from the summit of Cader-Idris, as follows:—"The afternoon was gloriously fine, and the atmosphere perfectly clear, so that the vast unbounded prospect lay beneath, unobscured by cloud, vapour, or any other interruption, to the astonished and delighted eye; which threw its glance over a varied scene, including a circumference of at least 500 miles. To the north-east was Ireland, like a distant mist upon the ocean; and a little to the right Snowdon and the other mountains of Caernarvonshire. Further on, in the same direction, the Isle of Man, the neighbourhood of Chester, Wrexham, and Salop; the sharp head of the Wrekin, and undulating summit of the Clee hills. To the south I saw the country round Clifton, Pembrokeshire, St. David's, and Swansea; to the west a vast prospect of the British channel, bounded by the horizon. Exclusive of these distant objects, the nearer views were wonderfully striking. Numberless mountains, of different forms, appearances, and elevation, rose in all directions; which with the various harbours, lakes, and rivers, towns, villages, and villas, scattered over the extensive prospect, combined to form a scene inexpressibly august, diversified, impressive."

CADLEY, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Kinwardstone, county of Wilts; 3½ miles north-east of Ludgershall. Returns with the parish of Chute.

CADLEY. See CADELEIGH.

CADNAM, a hamlet, partly in the parish of Eling, and partly in the parish of Minstead, county of Southampton; intersected by the post-road. Returns with the parishes.

CADNEY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Yarborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Glandford-Brigg, county of Lincoln; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Glandford-Brigg. It includes the township of Househam, and the extra-parochial of Newstead. Living, a discharged vicarage, with that of Househam annexed, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 18s. 4d.; gross income £230. Patron, in 1835, Lord Yarborough. Pop., in 1801, 236; in 1831, 384. Houses 53. Acres 5,100. A. P. £4,378. Poor rates, in 1837, £162.

CADOXTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Neath, county of Glamorgan, South Wales. The hamlets of Blaen-honddan, Coed-frank, Dyffryn-Clydach, Dylais Lower and Upper, Neath Middle, Lower, and Upper, and Ynis-y-mond, form the parish of Cadoxton. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the chapels of Aber-Pergwn and Crynant, in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; valued at £5 11s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £240. There is a place of worship here for Calvinistic Methodists; and, in 1834, there were seven daily and four Sunday schools. Patron, in 1835, C. H. Leigh, Esq. This parish is hilly, abounds with coal, possesses several copper mines, and, having the benefit of the Neath canal, has become thriving and populous. It is $\frac{1}{2}$ mile north of Neath. Pop., in 1801, 3,492; in 1831, 4,536. Houses 903. A. P. £17,886. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,892.

CADOXTON NEAR BARRY, a parish in the hund. of Dinas-Powis, union of Cardiff, county of Glamorgan, South Wales, situated near the Bristol channel; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Cardiff. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; valued at £5 2s. 1d., by the parliamentary returns at £69 10s. 7d.; gross income £117. Patron, in 1835, C. H. Leigh, Esq. There are in this parish two daily and four Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 196; in 1831, 285. Houses 63. A. P. £868. Poor rates, in 1837, £36.

CADWELL. See BRIGHTWELL-BALDIN.

CADWELL-PRIORY. See BEDFORD.

CADWORTH, a hundred in the new southern division of Wiltshire.

CAENBY, a parish in the eastern division of As-laceo, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 7 miles west of Market-Raisin, $12\frac{1}{2}$ north of Lincoln. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £117; annual value by the parliamentary returns £90. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. M. L. Monck, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 176. Houses 26. Acres 1,760. A. P. £1,680. Poor rates, in 1837, £88.

CAER-CARODOC, a hill in Shropshire, near the conflux of the Clun and Temd, where are still some vestiges of the fortification erected by the famous Caractacus, and gallantly defended by him against Ostorius and the Roman legions. This is called in some of our maps Cradock-hill.

CAERDIFF. See CARDIFF.

CAERGURLEY, or CAERGWYLE, a township in the parish of Hope, hund., of Mold, and county of Flint, North Wales; situated upon the river Alyn or Allen; 5 miles north-north-west of Wexham. It is one of the contributory boroughs with Flint in sending a member to parliament. It has four yearly fairs for the sale of cattle; Shrove Tuesday, the 16th of May, the 12th of August, and the 27th of October. Pop. with the parish of Hope. Here is a castle, now in ruins, once the dwelling-place of Eleanor, queen of Edward I. Numerous Roman remains have been discovered here. "The castle at present exhibits a most picturesque ruin, consisting of a mutilated circular tower, and some fragments of walls. It does not appear to have ever been a large structure, yet the site was uncommonly favourable. Aided by the British post, Caer Eatyn, stationed upon the opposite elevation, formed of ditch and rampart, the castle was calculated to defend this pass. The valley here narrows so as to leave little more space than is sufficient for the Alyn to pass through its romantic di-gles. The country, however, opens in the distant vale, and the river expands at the village of Gresford. Nearly the whole of this rock is composed of breccia, or that mixed kind of grit-stone so coarse in its texture, as to bear the appearance of small pebbles imbedded in mortar. It has been applied to the purpose of forming mill-stones, but they are inferior to French-burs. The surrounding hills consist of limestone, which is burnt upon the spot and mostly sold into Cheshire. In the overlay of loose earth are numerous organic bodies called entrochi and astroites. A singular kind has been found here, with protuberant joints, conjectured to have been parts of the species called Asterias arborescens, arborescent sea-star; the branches of which resemble these substances, the shape being cylindrical made up of several articulations. On the demesne of Rhyddyn, almost close to the river Alyn, are two springs strongly impregnated with muriate of soda, resembling the celebrated fountain at Barrowdale near Keswick in Cumberland. These were formerly much frequented by scorbutic patients. The dose was from 1 to 2 quarts in a day. To increase the strength, people boiled the water till half was wasted by evaporation, the effect was then purging, acting as a powerful cathartic, producing nausea. In small doses they operate diuretically." [Nicholson's Cambrian Guide, col. 259, 260.]

CAERHUN, a parish in the hund. of Isaf, union of Conway, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; situated on the west bank of the Conway river; 4 miles south of Aberconway. Living, a vicarage annexed to the rectory of Llanbedr. This parish possesses six Sunday and three daily schools, in one of which a few are instructed from an endowment. Pop., in 1801, 807; in 1831, 1,117. Houses 256. A. P. £2,671. Poor rates, in 1837, £503.

CAERLEON, a market-town in the parish of Llangattoch, lower division of the hund. of Usk, and county of Monmouth; situated near the post-road on the north of the river Usk; 144 miles west of London; 20 miles south-south-west of Monmouth, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Newport. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; valued at £8 1s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; no return. The church is a handsome edifice. Patron, the chapter of Llandaff. There are here four daily schools, two of which are National schools, and the other two are supported from an endowment. Caerleon is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Usk, over which there is a handsome stone bridge of modern structure. It consists principally of two streets. The houses are mostly old, irregularly built, and fast hastening to decay. It is, however, of great antiquity, and was once a place of considerable importance. Besides the established church, there are places of worship here for Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists. The Baptist church was formed in 1771; and the Independent, in 1815. There is here a free school for 30 boys and 20 girls, founded and endowed in 1724 by Charles Williams, Esq. There are extensive iron and tin works in the vicinity. The market-day is Thursday. The fairs are held on the second Monday of February, May 1st, July 20th, September 21st &c. cattle. Pop., in 1801, 667; in 1831, 1,072. Houses 224. Acres 550. A. P. £2,878. Poor rates, in 1837, £173.—"Much of the present town stands," says Warner, "within the precincts of an ancient Roman camp, the walls of which still partially exist, though deprived of their facings, and so dilapidated as to leave their foundation scarcely visible in many places. Their form is parallelogramical, and their extent nearly six hundred yards by five hundred. A little to the north-west of these, in a meadow, a circular depression or concavity of the ground occurs, which is supposed by the initiated to be a Roman amphitheatre; though the profane vulgar consider it as the place of revelry between Arthur and his knights of the Round table, and assert that the hero, when he quitted mortal existence, sank into the earth at this his favourite spot. The present name, Caerleon, that is, 'the Castle or camp of the legion,' clearly points out a Roman origin. Horsley—than whom we cannot follow a better authority—supposes that the Romans arrived at this spot in the reign of Antoninus Pius, about the middle of the second century; and finding it to be a place agreeing in the circumstances of its situation with their system of castrametation, they made it the station, or headquarters, of the second Augustan legion. In allusion to this disposition of a particular body of troops, they called it Isca Legionis Secundæ Augustæ; or Isca Silurum, as being the capital city of the Silures or South-Wallians. Here, it appears, the legion continued till within a short time of the departure of the Romans from Britain; since inscriptions towards the close of the empire, and coins of some of the later emperors, have at different times been discovered on this spot. From these circumstances, as well as from the extensive ruins which have accidentally presented themselves in a circle round the present town of a mile in diameter, it cannot be questioned that Caerleon became, under the auspices of the Romans, a large and magnificent place,—exhibiting those specimens of grandeur and refinement which generally decorated a Roman city—a forum, temples, baths, and theatres. The arts, indeed, seem to have been cultivated here to a high degree, as the many elegant relics of antiquity, and beautiful fragments of Roman masonry, formerly to be seen in the possession of different people at Caerleon, sufficiently testify. But its chief glory arose from the success with which intellectual acquirements were pursued; for if we give credit to the testimony of an ancient author, cited by Camden, we are to believe, that Caerleon was a second Crotona, since he tells us (just previous to the arrival of the Saxons in Britain) there was an academy of two hundred philosophers at this place! Even during the times of the Romans in Britain, it appears that Caerleon enjoyed the blessings of the Christian religion. Three noble churches are said to have been erected in it, almost as soon as the gospel found its way into this country, one of which was constituted the metropolitan church of all Wales. Here the archiepiscopal seat continued till the time of St. David, who, towards the close of the 6th century, translated it to Menevia, or, as it was afterwards called, from the name of this canonized prelate, St. David's. The deities of classical mythology, however, had their worshippers also, and the great goddess of the Ephesians boasted a temple erected to her honour in the city of Caerleon. How long the Roman forces were continued at Caerleon is not to be ascertained. The second Augustan legion had retired from it, previous to the final desertion of Britain by that people; but as coins of the Valentians have been discovered here, we may conclude that it was a station as low down as the beginning of the fifth century. The enfeebled and emasculated Britons, when deprived of the aid of the Romans, became an easy prey to the fierce hordes of Saxon invaders who flocked to this country about the middle of the fifth century. Caerleon, with the country surrounding it, fell into their hands, and doubtless suffered severely in the undistinguishing destruction which followed all the conquests of these barbarous tribes. It soon recovered its pristine splendour, however, and under the protection of the British hero, the renowned Arthur, who wrested it from the Saxons after a fierce battle, it became once more a place of consideration. Here it was that he received the crown from the hand of Dubritius bishop of Llandaff, on being elected king of all Britain; and here he instituted that order of chivalry, the Round table, which makes so conspicuous a figure in the old romances. Thus Caerleon became the scene of royal amusement, in which the British dames of Arthur's court were, at Easter and Christmas, entertained with the jousts and tournaments of his hundred and thirty noble knights. Little occurs relative to Caerleon, during that period of darkness and confusion known by the name of the Middle ages. It successively felt the fury of the Saxon and the Dane, and was afterwards alternately in the possession of the English and Welsh. The castle, a remain of which is seen on the north side of the bridge, seems to have been erected about the middle of the twelfth century, if, indeed, it be the same called by Powel the 'New Castle upon Usk.' At that time the English held the town, but surrendered it, after a desperate resistance, to Jorweth ap Owen, prince of South-Wales, in 1173. In the ensuing year, Caerleon experienced another change of masters, when a large army of English and Normans took possession of it; they retained it, however, but a few months, king Henry II. again restoring it to its rightful owner, Jorweth ap Owen, on this prince and the other South-Wallian leaders doing homage to him at Gloucester. In the year 1218, Caerleon fell once more into the hands of the English, under William earl of Pembroke, and experienced all the horrors of a complete sacking, the frequent effect of military ferocity in the feudal ages. Llewellen ap Jorweth recovered it in 1231, and it was retained by his descendants till the complete reduction of Wales by Edward I."

CAERMARTHEN. See CARMARTHEN.

CAERNARVON. See CARNARVON.

CAERPHILLY, or ENERGLYN, a market-town in the parish of Eglwys Ilan, hund. of Caerphilly, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; situated on a small branch of the river Rumney; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by west of Cardiff, in a broad plain surrounded by barren mountains. It has some well-built houses, and there are numerous collieries and iron-works in the vicinity. The manufacture of blankets, shawls, and other woollen articles, however, is the principal occupation of the inhabitants. In 1838 there were 3 woollen mills here, employing 43 hands. The market-day is Thursday; Thursday before January 25th, first Thursday in March, and the first Thursday in May, are great markets. Fairs are held on April 5th, June 6th, July 19th, August 25th, October 9th, November 18th, and Thursday before Christmas day, for horned cattle, horses, sheep, pigs, and yarn stockings. Here are the remains of a magnificent castle connected with much of the history of North Wales. The hundred of Caerphilly is one of the most prosperous and populous districts in the principality. Returns with the hamlet of Ener-Glynn. Mr. Wyndham remarks that there is a striking transition in the language of Caerphilly, when compared with that of Monmouth, at only 2 miles distance. The buildings, manners, dress, and language of the former are strictly Welsh; but he adds, "the Welsh language is sensibly declining in every place where the connection with England is easy; and possibly, within a century, a traveller may meet with as much difficulty, in his researches after the remains of the Welsh language, along the coasts and marches of Wales, as Mr. Barrington did in his tour through Cornwall, in pursuit of the Cornish, where he found but one old woman, nearly 90 years of age, who could speak it, and but two other old women, who could understand her."

CAERSEDDFYN, a township in the parish of Darowen, hund. of Marhynlleth, county of Montgomery; it is 6 miles east-north-east of Marhynlleth. Pop., in 1811, 391; in 1831, 475. Houses 88. A. P., along with Noddfa, £2,732.

CAERTON-ULTRA-PONTERN, a hamlet in the parish of Christ church, hund. of Caldicot, county of Monmouth; situated on the south of the river Usk, and joined to Caerleon by a bridge across the river. Returns with the parish.

CAERWENT, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Caldicot, union of Chepstow, county of Monmouth; 5 miles west-south-west of Chepstow, on the post-road. It includes the hamlet of Crick. Living, a discharged vicarage, united with the vicarage of Mathern, and perpetual curacy of Llanvair-Discoid, in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £7 11s. 8d.; gross income £352. Patron, the chapter of Llandaff. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1816. There are three daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. Caerwent, though now a mean village, was anciently a Roman station, the Venta Silurum of Antoninus, and the supposed site of the capital city of the Britons in Siluria. Leland, who visited it in the beginning of the 16th century, thus describes its appearance at that time: "Caiguent in Base Venteland is iiii miles from Chepstow in the way to Caerlion. It was sumtyme a fair and a large cyte. The places were the iiii gates was yet appere, and the most part of the wal yet standith, but al to minichyd and torne. In the towne yet appere pavimentos of the old streates, and yn digging they find fundacions of great brykes, tessalata pavimenta, & numismata argentea simul & area." The most remarkable and curious proof of the presence of the Romans here was a beautiful tessellated pavement, discovered in the year 1767. Pop., in 1831, 444. Houses 75. Acres 1,900. Poor rates, in 1837, £192.

CAERWYS, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Rhuddlan, county of Flint; North Wales; situated on a small branch of the river Clydd; 4½ miles south-west of Holywell. Living, a united rectory and vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; rated at £19; gross income £361; nett income £265. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Tithes commuted in 1809. The Calvinistic Methodists have a place of worship here. There are here four Sunday schools and one daily school, which is partly supported by the rent of an allotment of common. Caerwys is governed by two bailiffs, who are chosen at the court-leet of the lord of the manor, and is a contributory borough with Flint in returning a member to parliament. Formerly the assizes were held here, but they are now removed to Mold. There was also in the olden time, at this place, an Eisteddfod, or annual assembly of bards, when a silver harp was given by the Welsh nobles to the best bard, a custom which ceased in the 9th of Queen Elizabeth. The market-day is Tuesday, and it has fairs for cattle on March 5th, last Tuesday of April, Trinity Thursday, first Tuesday after 7th July, August 29th, and November 5th. Pop., in 1801, 773; in 1831, 985. Houses 209. A. P. £1,614. Poor rates, in 1837, £414.

CAINE (THE), a river in Merionethshire, which falls into the Avon near Benrose wood.

CAINHAM, a parish in the hund. of Stottesden, union of Ludlow, county of Salop, southern division;

3 miles east-south-east of Ludlow, on a branch of the river Teme. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £360. Patron, in 1835, J. Mainwaring, Esq. Tithes commuted in 1779. There are four daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 711; in 1831, 1,005. Houses 180. Acres 3,040. A. P. £3,555. Poor rates, in 1837, £351.

CAIRE, or CAIRAU, a parish in the hund. of Kibbor, union of Cardiff, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 3½ miles west by south of Cardiff, in the vicinity of Llandaff canal. Living, a perpetual curacy not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff. value, by the parliamentary returns, £42; gross income £62. Patron, the prebendary in Llandaff cathedral. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 77. Houses 17. A. P. £544. Poor rates, in 1837, £64.

CAISTOR, CAISTER, or CASTON, a market-town and parish in the south division of the wapentake of Yarborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 7½ miles south-east of Glandford brigg, and 12 south-west of Grimaby. It includes the chapelry of Holton-le-Moor. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacies of Houghton and Clixby; rated at £7 6s. 8d.; gross income £215. Patron, the prebendary of Caistor in Lincoln cathedral. Tithes of the lordship of Caistor commuted in 1796. There are in the parish two Sunday and nine daily schools, one of which is endowed with lands of the annual value of about £300.—Caistor is a pleasant little town, finely situated on the side of a hill. There are here, besides the established church—an ancient edifice within the area, and built out of the ruins of Thong castle—several places of worship for dissenters. The free grammar-school was founded in 1630 by the Rev. Francis Rawlinson, and subsequently further endowed by William Hansard, Esq. The market-day is Saturday. Fairs are held on the Friday and Saturday before Palm-Sunday, May 10th, June 1st, and Saturday after old Michaelmas, for horned cattle and sheep. The Lincoln and Lindsey, and the Hull banking companies, have branches here. The town is within the jurisdiction of the county-magistrates. Pop., in 1801, 8,061; in 1831, 1,375. Houses 301. Acres 4,470. A. P. £3,069. Poor rates, in 1837, £772.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Caistor by the poor-law commissioners. The Caistor poor-law union comprehends 76 parishes, embracing an area of 261 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 23,919. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,439. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,793.—This place has evidently been a Roman station. Tradition says that it was rebuilt by the Saxon Hengist, on as much land as the hide of an ox cut into thongs would compass; hence its ancient name of Thrang Ceastre, or 'Thong Castle.' The tenure by which certain lands in the parish of Broughton are held may have some connexion with this appellation. The service—which is still kept up—consists in the lord of Broughton manor, or his agent, cracking a gadwhip three times in the church-porch, while the clergyman is reading the first lesson in the morning-service on Palm-Sunday. He then enters a pew assigned to Hundon farm; when the minister commences the second lesson he kneels on one knee, in front of the reading-desk, and after waving the whip three times round his head, holds it in a diagonal position till the lesson is finished. When he again retires to the pew. The thong of the whip, with a leathern purse containing a few silver coins attached thereto used to be presented to the minister. Some accounts say that the purse and whip are carefully carried back and deposited in the manor-house at Hundon. The marriage of Rowena, daughter of Hengist, to Vortigern, was solemnized at this place in 453. Here also, in 827, Egbert, who finally brought the several kingdoms of the heptarchy under his dominion, obtained a signal victory over Wiglof or Wycklaff king of Mercia.

CAISTOR, or CAISTER-ST.-EDMUNDS, a parish in the hund. of Henstead, union of Henstead, county of Norfolk, eastern division; 4 miles south of Norwich, in the immediate vicinity of the Norwich and London railroad. Living, a rectory, consolidated with the rectory of Merksball, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £9; gross income £462. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. H. Dashwood. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. The charities connected with it amount to about £44 per annum. Though at present an inconsiderable village, this was the Venta Icenorum of the Romans, and the principal station of that people in the country of the Icenii. Many Roman urns and coins have been found here. Pop., in 1801, 205; in 1831, 193. Houses 45. Acres 910. A. P. £14,115. Poor rates, in 1837, £113.

CAISTOR NEAR YARMOUTH, a parish in the hund. of East Flegg, county of Norfolk, eastern division; situated on the sea-shore, 2½ miles north of Yarmouth, in the vicinity of the Norwich railroad. Living, a vicarage, consolidated with the rectory of St. Edmund; rated at £10; gross income £888. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. W. Steward. This parish possesses three daily schools. This place has, by Sir Henry Spelman and some other antiquaries, been deemed the Garianonum of the Romans, which others place at Burgh castle, on the other side of the river, in Suffolk. "There had been," says Tanner, "an ancient free chapel in the manor-house here, dedicated to St. John Baptist, as early as the reign of Edward I., wherein Sir John Fastolfe (who died 38° Henry VI.) intended to have erected a college for seven monks or secular priests (one of whom to be head) and seven poor men, and to endow the same with 120 marks, rent charge, out of several manors which he gave or sold to his cousin, John Paston, senior, Esq., charged with this charity. This Mr. Paston, senior, laboured to establish this pious foundation according to Sir John Fastolfe's design till his death—6° of Edward IV.—as did afterwards his son and heir Sir John Paston, Knt. But whether ever it was incorporated and fully settled I much doubt, there being no further mention of it either in the rolls, or in the bishop of Norwich's registry, only in the valuation, 26° of Henry VIII., there is said to have been a chantry in Castore hall of the foundation of Sir John Fastolfe, Knt., worth £2 13s. 4d. per annum." Pop., in 1801, 498; in 1831, 864. Houses 168. Acres 2,920. A. P. £4,106. Poor rates, in 1837, £297.

CAISTRON, a township in the parish of Rothbury, county of Northumberland, northern division; north of the Coquet river; 1 mile south-west of Flotterton. There is here one daily school. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 43. Houses 9. Poor rates, in 1837, £55.

CALBOURNE, a parish in the liberty of West Medina, Isle of Wight, county of Southampton; 5 miles west by south of Newport. It includes the ancient chapelry and borough of Newton. Living, a rectory with that of Newton, in the dio. of Winchester, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent; rated at £19 12s. 8½d.; gross income £500; nett income £464. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. There are three daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 695; in 1831, 844. Houses 137. Acres 5,090. A. P. £4,929. Poor rates, in 1837, £549.

CALCEBY, a parish in the Marsh division of the hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 4½ miles west of Alford. Living, a discharged vicarage, united to the rectory of South Ormsby. The village is depopulated, and the church in ruins. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 54. Houses 9. Acres 430. A. P. £857. Poor rates, in 1837, £40.

CALCETHORPE, a parish in the Wold division of the hund. of Louth Eske, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 6 miles west by north of Louth, in the neighbourhood of Louth navigation. Living, a rectory and a sinecure; rated at £6 2s. 6d.; gross income £16. Patron, in 1835, W. Briscoe, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 72. Houses 11. Acres 710. A. P. £904. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

CALCEWORTH HUNDRED, or WAPENTAKE, in the parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln. It is separated into the Marsh and Wold divisions. Area 58,670 acres. Houses 1,961. Pop., in 1831, 10,266.

CALDBECK, a parish in Allerdale ward below Darwent, union of Wigton, county of Cumberland, western division; 8 miles south-south-east of Wigton, and 12 south-south-west of Carlisle. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £45 13s. 8½d.; gross income £442. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. This parish possesses seven daily schools. It includes the three townships of Caldbeck High, Caldbeck Low, and Caldbeck Haltcliffe. The village is scattered, but highly picturesque. In 1838 there was a woollen-mill, employing thirteen hands, within this parish. "Two-thirds of the parish," it has been remarked by a writer on Cumberland, "is supposed to consist of mountains and moors; these being estimated at not less than 13,000 acres. Even the bleakest and most bare of these wastes, however, is not wholly useless: they afford a good summer-pasture to between 7 and 8,000 sheep, whose yearly produce of lambs is estimated at upwards of 2,000. In several of the estates the flock of sheep is considered as a sort of heir-loom, being sold and bought along with the land; and also leased out with it when the land is left,—the tenant being bound to deliver, on the termination of his lease, as many sheep as he receives, and of the same kind, age, and quality." The hills contain a great variety of mineral productions, the principal of which are lead and copper ores, limestone, and coal. The Caldbeck, a small stream running through the village, joins the Caldew near the church. The Caldew presents some striking scenery. In a romantic glen, about half-a-mile below the church, it is crossed by a natural bridge of stone, and dashing impetuously among the rocks, forms two interesting cascades, by the sides of which are singular excavations, called the 'Fairies' Kirk,' and the 'Fairies' Kettle.' Pop., in 1801, 1,171; in 1831, 1,578. Houses 201. Acres 24,290. A. P. £6,902. Poor rates, in 1837, £710.

CALDBRIDGE, or CALDBURGH, a township in the parish of Coverham, in the wapentake of Hang-west, north riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-west of Middleham. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 107. Houses 23. Acres 1,200. A. P. £645. Poor rates, in 1837, £27.

CALDECOT, a township in the parish of Shocklach, co.-palatine of Chester; 10 miles south-east of Chester; about a mile west flow the river Dee. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 75. Houses 12. Acres 430. A. P. £964. Poor rates, in 1837, £38.

CALDECOT. See CHALVESTON.

CALDECOT, a parish in the hund. of Wrang-dike, union of Uppingham, county of Rutland; 4½ miles south of Uppingham; on the post-road near the river Eye. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Liddington. There are in this parish a daily and a Sunday school, to which a library is attached. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 266. Houses 56. Acres 1,440. A. P. £2,383. Poor rates, in 1837, £97.

CALDECOT, a parish in the hund. of Longstow, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of Caxton. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Toft. There is a daily school in this parish, endowed with £18 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 112. Houses 20. Acres 833. A. P. £508. Poor rates, in 1837, £96.

CALDECOT, a parish in the hund. of Odsey, union of Hitchin, county of Hertford; 3 miles north by west of Baldock, the post-town. Living, a discharged vicarage; valued at £8 annually; by the parliamentary returns at £64 11s. 2d.; gross income £75. Patron, in 1835, William Hale, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 44; in 1831, 39. Houses 5. Acres 310. A. P. £430. Poor rates, in 1837, £31.

CALDECOT, a parish in the hund. of South Greenhoe, union of Sraffham, county of Norfolk; western division; 4 miles north-east of Stock-Ferry. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £3 1s. 10d.; gross income £6. Patron, in 1835, Sir H. Bedingfield. Pop., in 1801, 26; in 1831, 63. Houses 9. Acres 930. A. P. £468. Poor rates, in 1837, £37.

CALDECOT, or CALDICOTT, a hamlet divided into Upper and Lower, in the parish of Northhill, county of Bedford; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-west of Biggleswade. Pop., in 1821, 369; in 1831, 415. Houses 71. Other returns with the parish.

CALDECOTE, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hund. of Hemlingford, union of Nuneaton, county of Warwick; 3 miles east by south of Atherstone, intersected by the Coventry canal. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated in the parliamentary returns at £148 1s. 6d.; gross income £149. Patron, in 1835, D. Hemming, Esq. This parish possesses a daily and a Sunday school.—Caldecot hall, in the parish, is famous for the bravery of its owner, George Abbot, who, during the civil wars, with only eight men, assisted by his mother and her maids, successfully defended it against an attack by several troops of horse under Rupert and Maurice. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 48. Houses 19. Acres 820. A. P. £823.

CALDER, or CALDERBRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of St. Bridget Berkermet, and ward of Alledale above Darwent, county of Cumberland, western division; 4 miles south-south-east of Egremont, on the north side of the river Calder. Tanner informs us that, "Ranulf, second earl of Chester and Cumberland, founded here, A. D. 1134, an abbey for Cistercian monks to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, which was endowed at the suppression with £50 9s. 3d., ob. per annum. Dugd.; £64 3s. 9d., Speed. The site was granted, 30th Hen. VIII., to Thomas Leigh." Not. Mon. The ruins of this abbey are thus described by Mr. Hutchinson:—"The first part you come to is the colonnade, having five circular arches supported on clustered pillars, in length 27 paces. A fascia remains above the arches, as it anciently supported the roof. The tower is supported by light clustered pillars of excellent workmanship, about 24 feet in height, with capitals ornamented with a roll, from whence spring very beautiful pointed arches, which formed the cupola or lantern. This church has been but small, the width of the choir being only 25 feet, the square of the tower 21 feet, and the limb of the cross, which we could trace, 22 feet wide, the monastery has adjoined to the church. The upper chambers show a row of eight windows to the west, and seven to the east. There are the remains of three arches on one side upon the ground-floor, which appear to have belonged to a small cloister; the members of the arches are numerous and semicircular. At the end adjoining to the church is a large window, which appeared to us to have appertained to the chief apartment of the house, the chapter-house, or refectory, only the outside walls are standing. It appears that many eminent persons have been interred here, from the fragments of effigies preserved, and now placed against the walls; but no inscription or other evidence remains, save the devices on the shields, to point out to whose tombs the sculptures belonged. One of them is represented in a coat of mail with his hand upon his sword; another bears a shield reversed, as a mark of disgrace for treachery or cowardice."

CALDER (THE), of Yorkshire, has its source on the eastern borders of Lancashire, at Cliviger dean, not far from Burnley. It pursues a course nearly eastward through Todmorden valley to Wakefield; after which it turns to the north, till it joins the Aire near Ferrybridge, at the village of Castleford. This river is connected with various canals, which form a junction between the eastern and western seas, and water-communication across the kingdom from Liverpool to Hull. In 1758, an act was passed for extending the navigation of the Calder to Sowerby-bridge, in the parish of Halifax, and for making the Hebble navigable from Brookmouth to Salterhebble bridge. This navigation extends 22 miles from its junction with that of the Aire and Calder, near Wakefield to Sowerby, where it joins the Rochdale canal. On its banks are numerous iron and coal-works, and stone-quarries, to some of which railways have been made for the convenience of carriage.—In 1825, an act was passed for making a cut from this canal at Salterhebble to Bailey-hall, near Halifax.—The Rochdale canal is $31\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, and joins the Bridgewater canal at Manchester.—The Barnsley canal, between Wakefield and the Derne and Dove canal, is 15 miles in length. From Ferrybridge to Goole there is a canal $18\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, and 60 feet wide.

CALDER (THE), of Lancashire, rises near the same spot as the preceding river, and runs in a north-west direction through the hundred of Blackburn till it joins the Ribble, a little below Whalley.

CALDERBROOK. See BLATCHINGWORTH and CALDERBROOK.

CALDEW (THE). See CALDECK.

CALDEWGATE, a suburb of the city of Carlisle, and now comprised in part within the boundaries of that burgh; intersected by the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. There are here eight daily and three Sunday schools, all of which commenced since 1818. Pop., in 1801, 1,990; in 1831, 5,104. Houses 617. Acres 1,880. A. P. £7,343. Poor rates, in 1837, £724.

CALDEY, a small island off the south coast of Pembrokeshire; 2 miles distant from Tenby. It is about a mile in length, and has a superficial area of 611 acres, upwards of one-third of which are in good cultivation. In William of Worcester's time it had thirty inhabited houses upon it. At the north-west end of the island lies an inlet called St. Margaret's, or Little Caldey.

CALDEY (GREAT AND LITTLE), a township in the parish of West Kirby, lower division of the hund. of Wirral, co.-palatine of Chester, southern division; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Great Norton; at the mouth of the river Dee. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 102. Houses 17. Acres 740. A. P. £800. Poor rates, in 1837, £23.

CALDICOT HUNDRED, in the county of Monmouth, consists of two divisions,—upper and lower. Area 52,550 acres. Houses 2,222. Pop., in 1831, 11,349.

CALDICOT, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Caldicot, union of Chepstow, county of Monmouth; $\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Chepstow, and near the post-road. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; valued at £6 0s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, C. K. K. Tyne. There are in this parish five daily and two Sunday schools. The charities connected with it amount to about £23 per annum. Here on a plain called Caldicot level, about a mile from the shore, stand the picturesque ruins of Caldicot castle. "The history of this fortress is obscure; but from the varied and ponderous style of the building, it was probably erected at two distinct, but early periods. The most ancient part, containing the circular bastions, &c., might have been begun by Harold when he was attempting the conquest of Gwent; but the greater part was added by the early Normans when they proceeded to complete it. This fortress, which must have been of considerable importance in the subjugation of the south-eastern parts of Monmouthshire, was early in the possession of the great family of Bohun; for, according to Dugdale, Humphrey, earl of Hereford, the fifth of that line, did homage in 1221 for the livery of this castle, among other possessions of his late father. Coming into possession of the crown, it was annexed to the duchy of Lancaster; of which, under lease, it is at present held by Capel Hanbury Leigh, Esq. From a statement given by the jury at a court of inquisition held in the year 1813, it then appeared to have been in a very dilapidated state. Situated in a flat, the ruins do not produce that picturesque effect which others of a similar kind do, that have the advantage of more elevated sites. The ground environing the castle was formerly overflowed, so that the edifice stood upon an island, and it is still surrounded by a moat: in a distant view the shape seems quadrangular; but on a nearer approach it exhibits a polygonal form. The side fronting the village is flanked by a large round tower, and at the northern angle is a circular tower on a mound of earth, evidently the keep, encircled by a ditch. By means of galleries this was connected with the rest of the buildings. Another circular dilapidated tower is at the southern angle. The principal entrance to the south-west consists of a grand arched gateway, flanked with massive turrets, mantled with ivy, and was formerly guarded by portcullises. The greatest length of the inner area is 100 yards: the breadth differs from 75 yards to 40 towards the east. The thickness of the walls varies from five to nine feet, which are formed of coarse grit-stone. Within side are the remains of several apartments, particularly the baronial-hall; and opposite to the grand gateway is another entrance through a fine hexagonal tower, with a machicolated roof. A high ridge of land, perhaps formerly fortified, connects the castle with the village." [Beauties of England, vol. xi. pp. 173, 174.]—The level was at one time subject to continual inundations, but, having been drained, is now in a high state of cultivation, and forms a rich grazing district. Pop., in 1801, 465; in 1831, 583. Houses 120. Acres 1,850. A. P. £1,829. Poor rates, in 1837, £400.

CALDICOT. See TOWCESTER.

CALDICOTE, a parish in the hund. of Norman-Cross, county of Huntingdon; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile west-south-west of Stilton. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £7 3s. 6d.

annual value; by the parliamentary returns at £130; gross income £167. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Warren. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 48. Houses 13. Acres 740. A. P. £823. Poor rates, in 1837, £16.

CALDWELL. See CAULDWELL.

CALDWELL. See CHADWELL.

CALDWELL, a township in the parish of St. John Stanwick, in the wapentake of Gilling-West, north riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles north of Richmond, and in the neighbourhood of the Great North of England railway. There are here a daily and a Sunday school. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 204. Houses 42. Acres 2,000. A. P. £1,627. Poor rates, in 1837, £122.

CALEHILL HUNDRED, in the lathe of Scray, county of Kent. Area 21,980 acres. Houses 790. Pop., in 1831, 5,170.

CALKE. See CAULK.

CALLALEY AND YETTINGTON, a township in the parish of Whittingham, Coquetdale ward, northern division, county of Northumberland; 10 miles west-south-west of Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 327; in 1831, 303. Houses 63. Poor rates, in 1837, £88.

CALLERTON (BLACK). See BLACK CALLERTON.

CALLERTON (HIGH), a township in the parish of Ponteland, southern division, county of Northumberland; 7 miles north-north-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 136. Houses 26. Poor rates, in 1837, £106.

CALLERTON (LITTLE), a township in the same parish as the above. Pop., in 1801, 22; in 1831, 168. Houses 6. Poor rates, in 1837, £5.

CALLINGTON, formerly KELLINGTON, a borough, market-town, and chapelry, in the middle division of the hund. of East, union of Liskeard, county of Cornwall; 12 miles south of Launceston. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to the rectory of Southhill. There are here five daily and three Sunday schools, one of the former being supported by an endowment. Charities connected with the chapelry amount to £8 per annum. The town stands on a gentle acclivity, and consists principally of one broad street; the houses in which are irregularly built. Callington was constituted a borough in the 27th of Elizabeth, and returned two members to parliament from that time, till disfranchised by the reform act. The Western District banking company have a branch here. A fair is held here on the first Wednesday of every month except May and September, when it is held on the first Thursday. There is a literary and philosophical society in this town. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. Pop., in 1801, 819; in 1831, 1,388. Houses 248. Acres 2,600. A. P. £4,142. Poor rates, in 1837, £645.—About 2 miles to the north of Callington is Kit hill, or St. Kit's hill, a huge mass of granite shooting up from Hengeston downs to the altitude of 1,067 feet above sea-level, and commanding a noble view of the Hamoaze, the course of the Tamar, and the whole surrounding country. See also art. HENGESTON-DOWNS.

CALLOW, a hamlet in the parish of Wirksworth, county of Derby. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 101. Houses 16. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £1,566. Poor rates, in 1837, £68. This hamlet is 2 miles distant from Wirksworth and 6 from Ashbourne.

CALLOW, a parish in the hund. of Webtree, union and county of Hereford; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Hereford; in the neighbourhood of the Hereford railway, and 2 miles from Allensmoor. Living, a perpetual curacy, united to the curacy of ACON-BURY: which see. This parish possesses two daily schools. There are in it, on a rising ground, the remains of two Roman camps. Pop., in 1801, 109;

in 1831, 148. Houses 30. Acres 640. A. P. £486. Poor rates, in 1837, £25.

CALMSDEN. See NORTH CERNEY.

CALNE HUNDRED, in the county of Wilts. bounded on the north by Kingsbury hundred; on the east by that of Selkley; on the south by the hundreds of Swanborough and Pottern; and on the west by Chippenham hundred. Area 21,540 acres. Houses 1,330. Pop. in 1831, 6,663.

CALNE, a borough, market-town, and parish, in the hund. and union of Calne, county of Wilts; 5 miles east by south of Chippenham, and 6 north-west of Devizes; on the post-road, 87 miles west from London, and in the neighbourhood of the Great Western railway. It includes the liberty of Boodwood.—Living, a vicarage with the curacies of Barwick-Basset and Cherhill, in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 5s.; gross income £771. Patron, in 1835, the Treasurer of Salisbury cathedral. There are here six Sunday and twelve daily schools, four of which are supported by endowment. The charities connected with the parish amount to £13 per annum.—The town of Calne is of remote antiquity, and is supposed to have arisen on the ruins of a Roman station. It consists principally of one long street, lighted with gas. The town is clean and respectable, the houses being in general of stone, and well-built. The number of houses included within the limits of the borough, in 1831, was 461. The limits of the borough and the town are not co-extensive. The Marlan, a small stream, which a little farther on falls into the Avon, runs through it. A branch of the Wilts and Berks canal reaches the town, which, uniting with the Kennet and Avon canal, and the latter with the Thames at Abingdon, affords an easy communication with London, Bristol, and the intermediate places. In 1838 there were 3 woollen mills and 1 silk mill, employing 98 hands within this parish. Five or six cloth factories have been shut up; and the population is now principally agricultural. The market-day is Tuesday. Fairs are held on the 6th of May for horses, cattle, sheep, and cheese; and on the 22d of July for pedlery. The North Wilts banking company have a branch here.—Though a borough by prescription, Calne is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the county-magistrates. The corporation consists of an indefinite number of burgesses, out of which two guild-stewards are elected annually. A court of requests is held here once in six weeks. It was established by 5^o Geo. III. for the recovery of debts under 40s. within the hundreds of Calne, Chippenham, Damerham (North,) and Corsham. The sittings are in succession at Calne, Chippenham, and Corsham. Members were first sent to parliament from this borough in the 23d of Edward I., and occasionally till the reign of Richard II. Since that time it returned two members, until deprived of one by 2^o W. IV. c. 45, s. 2. The elective franchise was formerly vested in the burgesses, 23 or 24 in number. The new electors are about 307 in number. The borough, as formed by the boundary act for the purpose of parliamentary representation, comprises the whole of the parish of Calne, and a great part of the parish of Blackland. There are here places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Methodists, and Unitarians. There is also a free school founded in 1660 by John Bently. There was an hospital here dedicated to St. John, so early as the reign of Henry III., the revenue of which at the dissolution was valued at £2 2s. 8d.—Pop., in 1801, 3,767; in 1831, 4,795. Houses 976. Acres 9,670. A. P. £26,502. In 1830, the assessed taxes paid by the borough amounted to £654; by the parish, to £925.—Poor rates, in 1633, £500; in 1837, £2,530. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Calne by the poor-law commissioners. The Calne poor-law union comprehends 11 parishes, embracing an area of 46 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 8,973. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £9,133. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,518.—Calne is famous as the place where, in 977, the controversy was terminated between Dunstan, then archbishop of Canterbury, on the part of the Benedictine monks, and the secular friars. "The priests had a powerful champion, one Beornhelm, a Scotch bishop, who, with no less eloquence than strength of scripture and reason, pleaded their cause, which while he was doing, behold on a sudden the beams and whole timber frame of the room in which the bishops and nobility of the kingdom were assembled broke and fell to the ground, many of the chiefs were wounded or hurt, and some killed; but as to the secular priests, they were most of them slain and buried under the ruins, but the place or seat where Dunstan sat remained firm; and he being the chief advocate for the monks, as well as president of the synod, his miraculous preservation (as it was then esteemed) was thus interpreted, viz. that Heaven had appeared in defence of the monks, and confirmed their cause, intimating by the preservation of their patron, that their order should be upheld; and thereupon the secular priests were every one outed in Dunstan's province, and monks put in their room. But some of our historians make this accident a judgment upon the nobility, who had a little before betrayed and murdered the young king Edward, who indeed got the name of a saint by his death, but king Ethelred got his throne." [Magna Britannia, vol. vi. 1738, p. 67.]—Three miles to the east of the town is a figure of a horse, 157 feet in length, cut in 1780, on the side of a chalk hill near Cherhill.

CALOW, a hamlet in the parish of Chesterfield, county of Derby; 2½ miles east of Chesterfield; in the vicinity of the Derby and Leeds railway. There are here four daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 269; in 1831, 569. Houses 105. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,217. Poor rates, in 1837, £149.

CALSTOCK, a parish in the middle division of East hund., union of Liskeard, county of Cornwall; 4½ miles east of Callington, on the north bank of the river Tamar. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £26 7s. 8½d.; gross income £520. Patron, the Crown. There is a Baptist chapel here; the church was formed in 1818. This parish possesses twelve daily and five Sunday schools. Here are copper, tin, and lead mines. Pop., in 1801, 1,105; in 1831, 2,328. Houses 449. Acres 5,450. A. P. £5,801. Poor rates, in 1837, £612.

CALSTONE-WILINGTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Calne, county of Wilts; 2½ miles south-east of Calne, north of the Roman road. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £200. Patron, the marquess of Lansdowne. Pop., in 1801, 26; in 1831, 81. Houses 6. Acres 1,130. A. P. £2,250. Poor rates, in 1837, £40.

CALTHORPE, or CATTORPPE, a parish in the hund. of Gouthlaxton, union of Lutterworth, southern division, county of Leicester; 4 miles south of Lutterworth, on the north side of the river Avon. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £5 5s. 2½d., annual value by the parliamentary returns £96 14s. 4d.; gross income £240. Patron, in 1835, L. Harpur, Esq. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Charities con-ned with it amount to from £13 to £16 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 159; in 1831, 199. Houses 44. Acres 590. A. P. £1,208. Poor rates, in 1837, £149.—About a mile to the south-west of the village is a bridge across the Avon which Dr. Stukeley considers to indicate the site of the Tripointium of Antoninus, although Camden assigns this station to Towcester, and Dr. Henry fixes it at Rugby. Dr. Stukeley describes the bridge as "placed in a sweet little valley, with the sides pretty steep. The stream here divides into two, with a bridge over each; upon one a stone inscription, very laconic, showing the three counties that repair it. Hard by antiquities have been found, both at Cat-thorpe and Lilburn, one on the north, the other on the south side of the river; so that the Roman city stood on both sides. Castle-hills, a place of Lilburn, where are some old walls." Vestiges of encampments appear both on the Northamptonshire and on the Leicestershire sides. The Roman road passed through the middle of an encampment, which, Mr. Ireland says, "was indisputably the Roman station mentioned by Antoninus, in his journey from London to Lincoln, under the denomination of Tripointium. The circular tumulus, called by different writers the Prætorium Angulare, or Augustale, is sixty feet in height, having its base formed by a rampart or vallum, washed on the north side by the river Avon. This elevated spot, which commands a view of the whole encampment, was allotted to the general, the superior officers, and young men of rank who served as volunteers. On the eastern side of the Prætorium, and adjoining to it, is the upper camp, the north side of which is in like manner washed by the Avon. The northern side of the Prætorium, with that of the upper camp, form one line, two hundred and seventy-six feet in length. The inner vallum, or agger of the middle camp, is only twenty-eight feet in height, being defended by the river." South of this encampment is another of larger dimensions, which is separated from the former by a foss.

CALTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of South Erpingham, union of Aylsham, eastern division, county of Norfolk; 3 miles north of Aylsham, near the post-road. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £35 annual value, by the parliamentary returns £110; gross income £143. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Norwich. This parish possesses two daily schools. The charities connected with it amount to £23 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 434. Houses 48. Acres 850. A. P. £1,697. Poor rates, in 1837, £76.

CALTHWAITE, a township in the parish of Hesketh-in-the-Forest, eastern division, county of Cumberland; 7 miles north-north-west of Penrith, near the post-road. The river Petterill flows on the eastern side of the village. Pop., in 1801, 617; in 1831, 954. Houses 17.

CALTON, a chapelry, partly in the parish of Blore, and partly in the parishes of Croxden, Mayfield, and Waterfall, southern division of the hund. of Totmonslow, county of Stafford; 5½ miles west-north-west of Ashborne, and 2½ miles west of the river Dove. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; gross income £86. Patrons, in 1835, the inhabitants. Pop., in 1831, 215. Houses 47. Acres 2,480. A. P. £708. Poor rates, in 1837, £60.

CALTON, a township in that part of the parish of Kirby in Malham-Dale, which is in the eastern division of the wapentake of Staincliff and Ewcross, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles south-east by east of Settle, on a branch of the river Aire. This township has a school with a small endowment. Major-general Lambert, one of the principal leaders on the side of the parliament during the civil wars, was born here about the year 1620. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 79. Houses 15. Acres 1,730. A. P. £1,166. Poor rates, in 1837, £54.

CALVER, a hamlet in the parish of Bakewell, northern division, county of Derby; 4 miles north by east of Bakewell, on the east bank of the river Derwent. Here are extensive lime-quarries and cotton-mills. Pop., in 1801, 494; in 1831, 616. Houses 112. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £993. Poor rates, in 1837, £133.

CALVERHALL, a chapelry in the parish of Preea, in the Whitechurch division of the hund. of Bradford North, northern division, county of Salop; 4½ miles south-east of Whitechurch. It includes Williston and Millenheath. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; annual value by the parliamentary returns £35; gross income £65. Patron, in 1835, J. W. Dodd, Esq. Pop., in 1821, 293; in 1831, 322. Houses 52. Other returns with the parish.

CALVERLEIGH, a parish in the hund. and union of Tiverton, northern division, county of Devon; 2 miles north-west of Tiverton, in the vicinity of the western canal, and 7 miles from the Exeter railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter, rated at £12; gross income £184. Patron, in 1835, C. Chichester, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 91. Houses 16. Acres 550. A. P. £810. Poor rates, in 1837, £26.

CALVERLEY, a township in that part of the parish of Bunbury, which lies in the first division of the hund. of Eddisbury, co.-palatine of Chester; 6 miles north-north-west of Nantwich, in the vicinity of the Birmingham railway and Chester canal. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 170. Houses 27. Acres 1,910. A. P. £1,629. Poor rates, in 1837, £145.

CALVERLEY, a parish in the wapentake of Morley, union of Bradford, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-west of Leeds, south of the river Aire. It includes the townships of Bolton, Calverley-cum-Farsley, Idle, and Pudsey; and is within the jurisdiction of the new court of requests for debts under £15, established in 1839. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £9 11s. 10d.; gross income £150. Patron, the lord-chancellor. A new church has been erected by the parliamentary commissioners, at Calverley-Pudsey, in the Gothic style, with tower and pinnacles, at an expense of £13,362 8s.; sittings 2,000; and another at Calverley-Idle, with 1,020 sittings. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here. There are in this parish twenty-seven daily and twenty-one Sunday schools. The charities connected with it amount to about £45 per annum. In 1838 there were 20 woollen and 5 worsted mills, employing 2,109 hands, within this parish. Pop., in 1801, 10,375; in 1831, 16,184. Houses 3,240. Acres 8,390. A. P. £21,557. Poor rates, in 1837, £3,189. Calverley-hall, in this parish, was the residence of an ancient family of that name, amongst whom, in 1604, the horrible catastrophe occurred which gave the subject of the 'Yorkshire Tragedy,' often, though without any good grounds, ascribed to Shakspeare.

CALVERLEY-CUM-FARSLEY, a township in the above parish, 4 miles north-east of Bradford. There are here five daily and five Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 2,081; in 1831, 2,637. Houses 520. Acres 3,640. A. P. £5,997. Poor rates, in 1837, £574. There is a dissenting chapel here.

CALVERTON, a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Potters-Pury, county of Buckingham;

1 mile south of Stony-Stratford, south of the river Yare, in the vicinity of the Buckingham canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £26 2s. 11d.; gross income £414. Nett income £346. Patron, in 1835, Lord Arden. The charities connected with this parish amount to £32 yearly. Pop., in 1801, 321; in 1831, 425. Houses 82. Acres 1,980. A. P. £2,846. Poor rates, in 1837, £268.

CALVERTON, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 6½ miles north-north-east of Nottingham, near a branch of the Trent. Living, a discharged vicarage and a peculiar of Southwold; rated at £4; gross income £150. The patrons are alternately the prebendaries of Oxtou and Southwold churches. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. There are in this parish three Sunday and two daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. The charities, exclusive of this, amount to £12 per annum. Lee, the ingenious inventor of the stocking-frame, was a native of this parish. Pop., in 1801, 636; in 1831, 1,196. Houses 226. Acres 3,320. A. P. £2,080. Poor rates, in 1837, £331.

CALWICH, a township in the parish of Ellastone, south division of the hund. of Totmonslow, county of Stafford; 3½ miles south-west of Ashborne, west of the river Dove. There was anciently a hermitage in this township, which was granted, 34° Henry VIII., to John Fleetwood. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 136. Houses 22. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,047. Poor rates, in 1837, £90.

CAM, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Berkeley, union of Dursley, Gloucestershire; 1 mile north of Dursley. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £95. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester. This parish possesses three daily and three Sunday schools. Fifty-three acres of land were bequeathed to support one of the former—at which a number of poor children are clothed and educated—by Mrs. Frances Hopton, in 1730. Other charities produce upwards of £50 per annum. In 1838 there were 2 woollen mills, employing 122 hands, within this parish, which is celebrated for the quantity and the superior quality of its cheese. A battle was fought here between the Danes and the Saxons in the reign of Edward the Elder. Pop., in 1801, 1,265; in 1831, 2,071. Houses 403. Acres 3,430. A. P. £7,356. Poor rates, in 1837, £867.

CAM (THE), or GRANTA, a river of Cambridgeshire, which rises in Essex, flows north-east, and falls into the Ouse at Stratham-mere, about 3½ miles south of Ely. See CAMBRIDGESHIRE.

CAM (THE), a river in Gloucestershire, which falls into the Severn.

CAMARON (THE), a river in Radnorshire, Wales, which falls into the Ython near Llanbadon.

CAMBERWELL, a parish, including the hamlets of Dulwich and Peckham, and part of Norwood, in the east half-hund. of Brixton, union of St. Giles, Camberwell, county of Surrey; 4 miles west of Greenwich, in the vicinity of London.—Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £20; gross income £2,120. Nett income £1,820. Patron, in 1835, Sir Thomas Smyth, Bart. There is also a district church, in the Doric style, erected under the authority of the parliamentary commissioners; sittings 1,734. The living of this new church is a perpetual curacy in the patronage of the vicar of Camberwell; gross income £500. Besides the established churches, there are here places of worship for the Baptists, Independents, and Methodists. The Independents have three churches; the first was formed in 1800, the second in 1819, and the third in 1827; a Baptist church was formed in 1825. In 1619, Edward Alleyne founded and endowed Dulwich college in this parish; the yearly income of which is now about £8,000. See article DULWICH.—A collegiate school was opened at Camberwell in 1835, with the view of uniting at a moderate expense, a good education with religious instruction, and also the advantages of a public school, with the superintendence of private tuition. The course of education comprises religious instruction according to the principles of the church of England, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and the modern languages, mathematics, arithmetic, geography, history, and other branches of useful and polite learning. The free grammar-school, intended originally for 12 boys of the parish, was founded in 1618 by the Rev. Edward Wilson. There is here a fund for charitable purposes of £98 10s. per annum, arising from premises and land bequeathed in 1626 by Sir Edmund Bowyer. Five acres of land were also bequeathed for the relief of the poor by Mrs. Abigail Bowles in 1676, and Mrs. Harriet Smith, in 1808, left £1,000 three per cent. annuities, the dividends on which are annually distributed amongst ten of the oldest poor house-keepers in the parish. The village is delightfully situated, and the beauty of its environs has made it a favourite residence with the more wealthy citizens of the metropolis. The ancient part of the village is the green and its vicinity; the more modern occupies the rising ground to the south-east, and comprises the Grove, Champon, Denmark, and Herne hills. Camberwell is one of the polling-places for the members for the eastern division of Surrey.—A fair is here held annually, in the month of August, which continues for three days. By the more sober and respectable part of the inhabitants it is generally regarded as a nuisance; but being at once a manorial right, and a source of emolument, all attempts to suppress it have hitherto proved ineffectual. In 1839, this fair was attended during the three days by about 150,000 persons. There were about sixteen shows, seventeen booths for drinking and dancing, in some of which were scenes of the grossest iniquity, and about thirty-eight stands for gambling. Among the visitors were persons of great respectability, while others were of the lowest and most debased character. Many schools, conducted by their teachers, visited the fair, while children of all classes were taken to it by their parents. Pop., in 1801, 7,059; in 1831, 28,231. Houses 5,010. Acres 4,570. A. P. £84,392. Poor rates, in 1837, £12,267.—The Camberwell St. Giles' poor-law union comprehends 1 parish, embracing an area of 7 square miles, with a population returned in 1831 at 28,231. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union was £15,980. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,946.

CAMBLESFORTH, a township in the parish of Drax, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north of Snaith, between the rivers Ouse and Aire. There is in this township a charity school with a small endowment. Pop. in 1801, 190; in 1831, 260. Houses 56. Acres 1,970. A. P. £1,716. Poor rates, in 1837, £77.

CAMBO, a township in the parish of Hartburn, and north-east division of Tindale ward, county of Northumberland; 12½ miles west of Morpeth. Pop. in 1801, 87; in 1831, 108. Houses 24. Poor rates, in 1837, £42.

CAMBOIS. See BEDLINGTON.

CAMBORNE, a market-town and parish in the east division of the hund. of Penwith, union of Red-

Published by Archibald Pullar & Co. Glasgow.

ruth, county of Cornwall; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Penryn, intersected by the Redruth railway, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant from Redruth. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £39 16s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £833. Nett income £790. The church is an ancient structure, built of granite, like many of the churches in this county, in the perpendicular English style, with an altar-piece of Sienna marble, and an oaken pulpit curiously carved. Patron, in 1835, Lord de Dunstanville. There are here ten daily and seven Sunday schools. The charities amount to £82 per annum. There are here places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists and Bryanites. Attached to the Methodist chapel is a school-house capable of accommodating 400 scholars. The town is situated in the centre of an extensive district abounding with copper, tin, and lead mines. One copper mine in this parish, that of Dolcoath, about 8 miles west of Carn Brè has been sunk to the depth of 1000 feet, and extended laterally in a direction from east to west more than a mile. In this single mine the number of persons employed has been at times upwards of 1,800, and the annual expenditure of the proprietors considerably more than £50,000. The market—which was established in 1802—is held on Saturday. Fairs are held on March 7th, Whit-Tuesday, June 29th, and November 11th, principally for cattle. Here are holden the petty-sessions for the hundred. According to Borlase, there were formerly several chapels in this place: he mentions St. Margaret's, St. Anne's, St. Derwe's, St. Ye's, and St. James's. He also notices the walls of a chapel on the teneament of Trewn: it stood a few paces from a well called Fentoner, celebrated for its medicinal virtues. In the vicinity is Tehidy-park, the elegant seat of Lord de Dunstanville. Pop., in 1801, 4,811; in 1831, 7,699. Houses 1,327. Acres 6,900. A. P. £11,783. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,026.

CAMBRIDGESHIRE,

An inland county of England; bounded on the north by Lincolnshire; on the east by Norfolk and Suffolk; on the south and south-west by Hertfordshire and Essex; and on the west by Bedfordshire, Huntingdonshire, and Northamptonshire. Its extreme length is about 50 miles; its greatest breadth about 30; and its circumference 138. It contains an area of 857 square miles, or about 584,480 acres. Pop., in 1801, 89,346; in 1831, 143,200. Houses 26,712. Assessed property, in 1815, £645,554. Assessed taxes, in 1830, £31,212. The amount raised by the parish rates, in 1837, was £78,046, and the expenditure was £77,232; of which £62,722 was applied to the relief of the poor. The poor-rates in 1803 amounted to £105,376.

Face of the Country.—The surface of this county, being in most places very level and thinly wooded, affords no great variety of scenery. On the south, the landscape, heaved into little hills, with woods, open downs, and rich corn-fields, is pleasing. The Gogmagog hills, a bleak bare range, a few miles to the south-east of Cambridge, though of no great elevation, yet, rising from a level country, command extensive and interesting prospects. To the south-west of Cambridge is Orwell hill, which rises to an altitude of 300 feet above sea-level. The vale of the Granta, or Cam, between Cambridge and Bartlow, abounds with elm trees, and here the scenery around the villages is fine. The northern part of the county, including the Isle of Ely, is, for the most part, a dead level, intersected by canals and ditches. Of that vast expanse of fen land known by the name of the Bedford level, (see article BEDFORD LEVEL), the full half, comprehending nearly the whole of the Middle and a great part of the South level, lies in this county. Over this vast expanse, the towns and villages, built upon little elevations, through the moist and foggy air rise upon the view like so many islands, and the turrets and spires can be seen at the distance of many miles. The principal of these elevated spots is that on which the city of Ely is placed. All the low grounds are naturally a bog, formed by the stagnation of water from the overflowing rivers of this tract; but, by infinite labour and expense in cutting drains and raising banks, much of them has been rendered either rich meadows, proper for the fattening of cattle, or arable land covered especially with some of the finest oats in the kingdom. The principal of the drains are the Old and New Bedford rivers—as they are called—which run in a straight line upwards of 20 miles across the country, from the Great to the Little Ouse. Of this work Dyer gives the following poetical account:—

Bedford level, erst
A dreary pathless waste, the coughing flock
Was wont with hairy fleeces to deform;
And, smiling with her lure of summer-flowers,
The heavy ox, vain-struggling, to ingulph;
Till one of that high honour'd patriot name,
Russel, arose, who drain'd the rushy fen,
Could'n'd the waves, bid groves and gardens bloom,
And, through his new creation, led the Ouse
And gentle Camus, silver-winding streams.

The general nature and products of the Ely fens are the same with those of Lincolnshire, which they join. Their air and water are bad; and though the soil is rich, and in dry years very productive, they are still subject to frequent inundations; and the farmer is occasionally liable to lose all the labour of his year. The fenny country extends south of the Ouse, and even runs up to the neighbourhood of Cambridge. There are still about 150,000 acres of unimproved fen land in this county. Considerable districts of fenny land have been much improved of late years by the employment of steam-engines in draining. March-Fen district, comprising 2,700 acres, is kept in the finest possible state of drainage, by a steam-engine of 30 horse-power. "According to the description of William of Malmesbury, an ancient historian, who lived about 1300 years ago," says Carter, "this level was then a firm dry land, and a most beautiful country; but by what accident, and at what time it came to be overflowed, I find no mention; though most probably it was occasioned by an earthquake. Beneath the surface have often been found large oak-trees, and several other kinds; and once was found, at sixteen feet deep, a smith's shop, with forge, tools, and a great many horse-shoes ready made: from whence it is reasonable to suppose, that the sea, when it first broke in, came with such violence, that woods, buildings, and every thing on the face of the ground, were overturned and thrown down, and so great a quantity of filth and soil was brought with the waters, as covered the surface of the earth to a great depth for many miles, in some places to twenty feet deep. In this condition it lay many ages, the water putrid and maddy, the earth loose and spongy, and incapable of cultivation so as to yield any great degree of profit; the principal thing it produced was reed and sedge, of which they made baskets."

Soil, Agriculture, &c.—The soil of this county is exceedingly diversified, but the greater part is fertile. The marshes in the vicinity of Wisbeach consist of sand and clay; that of the fens is a strong black earth on a gravelly bottom; the uplands consist of chalk, gravel, loam, and clay. In the fen districts, the soil, consisting of mud and decayed vegetable matter, is very rich; but the farmer is often subjected to considerable damage from heavy rains and consequent inundations.—In the south-east part of the county, particularly those portions of it watered by the Cam, the dairy is the great object of attention. The parishes of Cottenham, Soham, and Willingham, are famous for their cheese: the superiority of which is attributed to the quality of the herbage on the grazing tracts. Ely is noted for its garden-vegetables.—Besides the butter and cheese produced in this district, a vast number of calves are fattened for the London market. The oxen are usually of the Norfolk and Suffolk breed; the cows of the Cambridgeshire horned breed. The south-east of the county, from Gogmagog-hills to Newmarket, being bare and heathy, is appropriated chiefly to sheep-walks. This district is an open thinly inhabited and bleak country, being connected with that vast tract of land, which, extending southwards into Essex, and northwards across Suffolk into Norfolk, forms one of the largest plains in the kingdom. The soil is lean and gravelly. The best parts produce light crops of barley; but much of it is only used as sheep-walks. A great number of sheep are also kept in the fens; and the breed preferred is a cross between the Leicester and the Lincolnshire. The extent of highland country depastured by sheep within this county was estimated in 1808 at 243,000 acres.—This county may be said to have no manufactures, if we except that of white bricks and coarse pottery. The fens abound in wild fowl, which, by means of decoys, are caught in vast numbers for the London market.

Rivers.—The rivers of Cambridgeshire—the principal of which are the Ouse, the Cam, the Lark, and the Nen—abound in fish, particularly pike and eels.—The Old Ouse, entering the county in the parish of Haddenham, below St. Ives, and crossing it from west to east, passes Ely, and forms the southern and south-eastern boundary of the Isle of Ely. It receives the Cam at Harrimere, and the Lark, which is navigable to Bury-St.-Edmund's, at a place called Prickwillow, below Ely. At Brand creek it receives the Little Ouse, and enters Norfolk, through which it flows northward to the Wash. In its modern course the Ouse, entering the county to the north-west of Earith bridge, runs down the New Bedford river, in a direction nearly north-east, and enters Norfolk a little to the west of Welney. It is navigable in its whole course through the county.—The Cam, or Granta, navigable to Cambridge, is formed by two small streams which unite between Grantham and Harston. Its length above Cambridge is 25 miles; and from Cambridge to its junction with the Ouse, 15 miles.—In its old course, the Nen enters the county from Huntingdonshire at Benwick, and, flowing north-east, enters Norfolk at Outwell. In its modern or northern course, it separates Huntingdonshire from the Isle of Ely, till it enters the Isle at Moreton's Leam, whence it proceeds to the Wash. A new tidal channel has been cut for this river along the western side of the Sutton wash.

Canals and Roads.—The numerous canals which intersect the Isle of Ely were cut for the purpose of drainage, but a number of them are also navigable. Vermuyden's canal, commencing at Ramsey in Huntingdonshire, enters the Isle of Ely near Ramsey-mere. At Welche's dam it joins the Old Bedford river, and leaves the county a little to the west of Welney. This cut is seldom used.—The New Bedford river is the main channel for barges passing from the upper to the lower parts of the Ouse. The Old Bedford river, running parallel with the New, excepting the lower part of it near Denver-sluiice, is now seldom navigated, being nearly choked up since the New was made.—A canal has been cut from Peterborough, through Whittlesea-dyke to the Old Nen below Benwick, and thence to Marsh. There are also short cuts from the Ouse to Soham and Rech.—The great north road from London to York and Edinburgh passes through the western border of Cambridgeshire, entering it at Royston, 37½ miles from London, and quitting it at Papworth-St.-Agnes. The road from London to Norfolk enters the county at Great Chesterford, 46 miles from London, and leaves it about 5 miles beyond Newmarket.—A railway is projected from London to Cambridge; and from Cambridge to Leicester. This and other proposed lines would, in connexion with existing railways, unite the Ouse and Mersey, the Cam and the Tyne.

Divisions, &c.]—With the exception of fifteen parishes in the eastern part of it, which belong to the archdeaconry of Sudbury and diocese of Norwich, and the parish of Iselham, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Rochester, Cambridgeshire forms an archdeaconry in the diocese of Ely, and province of Canterbury; and comprises the deaneries of Barton, Bourne, (otherwise Knopwell,) Cambridge, Camps, Chesterton, Ely, Shangeryard, Wisbeach. It contains 169 parishes, of which 66 are rectories, 84 vicarages, and 14 perpetual curacies. The dissenting churches in it are also numerous. The number of daily schools in the county, in 1831, was 550, attended by 14,500 children; of Sunday schools 194, attended by 14,031.—Of these, 7 daily schools, with 290 children, and 52 Sunday schools, with 4,475 children, belong to dissenters.—It is divided into 18 hundreds, Armingford, Chesterton, Cheveley, Chilford, Ely, Flendish, Longston, Northstow, Papworth, Radfield, Staine, Staplow, Thriplow, Wetherley, Whittleford, Wisbeach, Witchford North, and Witchford South; and contains the city of Ely; the university, borough, and market-town of Cambridge; the market-towns of Linton, March, Thorney, and Wisbeach, with part of the market-towns of Newmarket and Royston.

Courts, &c.]—Cambridgeshire is within the Norfolk circuit. The assizes and quarter-sessions for the county are held at Cambridge. The Isle of Ely, with all its privileges, having been restored to the abbey of Ely after the re-establishment of that monastery by King Edgar, the abbots, and after them the bishops, exercised the privileges of a county-palatine till the reign of Henry VIII., when, in common with those of other palatinates, these privileges were abridged; the bishop being still, however,—till recently,—Custos rotulorum of the Isle of Ely, including the three hundreds of Ely, Wisbeach, and Witchford. His jurisdiction was intitled the Royal franchise, or liberty of the bishop of Ely. The civil officers of this franchise were a chief justice, a chief bailiff, a deputy-bailiff, two coroners, and a few subordinate officers, all of whom were appointed by the bishop. The spring-assizes, and the April and October sessions for the Isle were held at Ely; the summer-assizes and the other sessions at Wisbeach; but by 6^o and 7^o of Will. IV., the bishop's secular jurisdiction is abolished.—See ELY.—Formerly two knights were returned for the shire, two for the borough of Cambridge, and two for the university. Under the reform act the county now returns three members, who are polled for at Cambridge, Newmarket, and Royston.—The county-gaol is situated at the extremity of the town of Cambridge, on the site of the old castle. The boundary walls are of an octagonal form, and the interior buildings consist of a central house for the keeper, and four detached radiating wings. There is a tread-mill for the male prisoners. Besides the customary services of the chaplain, there is no regular system of instruction. Total number of prisoners, in 1835, 443.

Antiquities.—Roman antiquities are rare in this county, Cambridge itself being the only important place which that people seem to have occupied within its limits. Some remains of this people have been found in the neighbourhood of Trumpington. The Icknield Street, an ancient road, entering from Suffolk near Newmarket, and quitting at Royston, and the great Roman road from Colchester to Chester, which enters near Withersfield in Suffolk, and crosses the county from east to west, can still be distinctly traced in many places.—Of religious houses before the Reformation, there were within this county 32, including two houses of the knights-templars, two preceptories of the knights-hospitallers, and three alien priories. There were four ancient colleges and eleven hospitals, one of which, St. John's at Cambridge, was converted into St. John's college. Of the numerous monastic remains, those of Ely abbey are by far the most interesting: see article ELY. There are also some fine remains at Thorney and at Whittlesey.—Ancient castles, with the exception of the earth-works, have almost wholly disappeared. There is a considerable encampment called Vandlebury, on the highest part of the Gogmagog-hills, supposed to be of British origin. There are also two remarkable trenches extending from the woods on the east side of the county to the fens: the most entire of these is called the Devil's ditch. It consists of a deep ditch and an elevated vallum, and runs 7 miles nearly in a straight line. The other, called Fleam-dyke, runs parallel with this at the distance of 7 miles, extending from Balsham to the fens at Fen-Ditton, but it is in many places levelled. See Lyson's Cambridgeshire.

History.—This county, at the time of the Roman invasion, formed part of the kingdom of the Iceni, "who were," says Carter, "a valiant and stout people: and though they at first submitted to the Romans, we find them in arms, and inviting the Trinobantes and other Britons to join them, and to oppose and revenge the cruelty and oppression of their tyrannical and foreign masters, who had wasted their country, whipped their queen Boadicea, now a widow, ravished her daughters, and endeavoured to reduce them all into a state of slavery, by disarming them, and exacting a contribution or tax of £300,000: in those days an immense sum. And it was that very Boadicea, who shines in our annals at the head of a British army, that with an irresistible fury engaged the Romans, and after slaying 80,000 of them, razed their colony of Camulodunum, or Malden in Essex, and Verulamium, or St. Alban's in Hertfordshire, routed the ninth legion, and having put Catus Decianus, the procurator, to flight, must certainly have freed her people from their oppression, had not the Roman lieutenant, Paulinus Suetonius, with a more powerful army, vanquished her, bravely encountering that general with 230,000 Britons. The consequence of this defeat was not only the death of Boadicea, who broke her heart at the loss of her country, but the entire subjection of the Britons, and abolition of the Iceni. In the time of the heptarchy, when several Saxon chiefs settled in this county upon the ruins of the Roman government, Cambridgeshire became part of the East Angles (which consisted of this county, with those of Huntingdon, Norfolk, and Suffolk), and was so called on account of its easterly situation in respect of the other Saxon kingdoms. It was under these two masters that arts and sciences began to flourish, about the year 609, at the town of Cambridge, which was then an ancient city. And the county received its present name from the said town; and the town its name from being situated on the bank of the river Cam, or Grant, as some etymologists rather choose to derive its name." Ely formed a separate district, with an independent jurisdiction, from a very early period, and was called by the Saxons South Girwa. On the conquest of East Anglia by the Danes, in 870, this county was laid waste; and, for fifty years, during which East Anglia remained under the Danish dominion, the city of Cambridge appears to have been one of their principal military stations. Here it was that their army was compelled to surrender to Edward the Elder in 921. Ely being destroyed by the Danes, the isle was annexed to the kingdom of Mercia. Cambridgeshire, with the whole of East Anglia, was again ravaged by the Danes in 1010. After the overthrow of Harold at the battle of Hastings, and the consequent advance of the conqueror, the isle of Ely became the refuge of the Anglo-Saxon prelates and nobility, who here successfully defended themselves, and bade defiance to the power of the Normans from 1066 to 1074. The county in general, and the isle of Ely in particular, suffered severely during the civil wars in the reigns of Stephen, John, and Henry III. During the troubles in the reign of Charles I., Cambridgeshire and the isle of Ely were associated under Lord Grey of Werke for the parliament; and though the university voted its plate for the king's service, yet Lord Clarendon enumerates this among the associated counties in which the king had no visible party, nor so much as one fixed quarter. Triplow-beath and the neighbourhood of Royston were places of general rendezvous for the parliamentary army during its stay in Cambridgeshire.

CAMBRIDGE,

The county-town of Cambridgeshire, is locally situated in the hund. of Flendish, but possesses separate jurisdiction; 51 miles north by east of London. It extends about 3 miles 1 furlong from east to west, and has an average breadth of 1½ mile, comprising an area of 3,194 acres, 2 roods. In 1836 it contained 4,506 houses, and the annual value of real property in the borough was £91,501.

Parishes.—Cambridge borough contains 14 parishes in the union of Cambridge. Only two of them—St. Giles and St. Andrew the Less—extend much beyond the limits of the town. The latter is situated on the east of the town, and comprises the populous suburb of Barnwell and New Town; consisting principally of recently erected houses, which are daily becoming more connected with the town by the building of other streets. It appears to be an unsettled point whether the colleges in general are extra-parochial. Downing college, the new buildings of St. John's, and the grove of Catherine-hall, are admitted to be within the parochial limits by the payment of the poor's rate; and the parish officers, in their perambulations, pass through some of the others; but they are considered by the present university authorities to be extra-parochial, and consequently not within the borough. The livings are, 1st, All Saints, a discharged vicarage; rated at £5 6s. 3d., by the parliamentary returns at £105; gross income £120; in the patronage of Jesus' college. The annual income of charity, connected with this parish, amounts to £123. Pop., in 1801, 704; in 1831, 1,422. Houses 200. A. P. £2,606. Poor rates, in 1837, £750.—2d, St. Andrew the Less, a curacy not in charge; gross income £48. Patron and incumbent, in 1835, Dr. Geldart. There are here 28 daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 252; in 1831, 6,651. Houses 1,419. A. P. £4,080. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,369.—3d, St. Andrew the Great, a curacy not in charge; annual value by the parliamentary returns £100; gross income £121. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Ely. This parish possesses eight daily and three Sunday schools. The charities of which, the greatest is that of the widow of the celebrated Captain Cook, amount to £33 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 1,082; in 1831, 1,644. Houses 327. A. P. £2,808. Poor rates, in 1837, £936.—4th, St. Benedict, a perpetual curacy; valued at £4 7s. 11d., by the parliamentary returns at £60; gross income £151. Patron, Corpus Christi college. Pop., in 1801, 650; in 1831, 964. Houses 146. A. P. £2,008. Poor rates, in 1837, £672.—5th, St. Botolph, a discharged rectory, valued at £2 14s. 4½d., by the parliamentary returns at £106 18s. 9½d.; gross income £100. Patron, Queen's college. There are here three daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 645; in 1831, 759. Houses 106. A. P. £2,022. Poor rates, in 1837, £570.—6th, St. Clements, a curacy; valued at £4 5s. 7½d., by the parliamentary returns at £36 17s. 7d.; gross income £102. Patron, Jesus' college. Pop., in 1801, 651; in 1831, 880. Houses 161. A. P. £1,785. Poor rates, in 1837, £468.—7th, St. Edward, a discharged rectory; rated at £0 3s. 4d., by the parliamentary returns at £9; gross income £66. Patron, Trinity hall. There are in this parish eight daily schools, one of which is endowed by Dr. Perne with £180 per annum. The yearly income of charities amounts to about £20. Pop., in 1801, 665; in 1831, 727. Houses 116. A. P. £1,947. Poor rates, in 1837, £269.—8th, St. Giles and St. Peter's, united parishes, not in charge; valued in the parliamentary returns at £120; gross income £172. Patron, the bishop of Ely. There are here two daily and two Sunday schools, and also ten well-endowed alms-houses. Pop., in 1801, 916; in 1831, 1,917. Houses 510. A. P. £3,874. Poor rates, in 1837, £831.—9th, St. Mary the Great, a curacy not in charge; valued in the parliamentary returns at £150; gross income £153. Patron, Trinity college. The charities connected with this parish produce about £100 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 761; in 1831, 944. Houses 146. A. P. £2,686. Poor rates, in 1837, 819.—10th, St. Mary the Less, a curacy not in charge; valued in the parliamentary returns at £47 17s. 1d.; gross income £95. Patron, Peter House college. A few poor children are annually bound out to some lawful employment by the produce of land, bequeathed by John Westfield in 1684. Pop., in 1801, 555; in 1831, 810. Houses 149. A. P. £1,661. Poor rates, in 1837, £661.—11th, St. Michael, a curacy, not in charge; valued in the parliamentary returns at £150; gross income £98. Patron, Trinity college. The yearly income of charities amounts to £29 10s. Pop., in 1801, 810; in 1831, 711. Houses 68. A. P. £915. Poor rates, in 1837, £168.—12th, St. Peter's, a curacy united with St. Giles. This parish possesses three daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 393; in 1831, 702. Houses 124. A. P. £715. Poor rates, in 1837, £293.—13th, St. Sepulchre, a vicarage; rated at £6 11s. 0½d., by the parliamentary returns at £87 9s. 4d.; gross income £124. Patrons, the parishioners. Pop., in 1801, 479; in 1831, 674. Houses 130. A. P. £1,223. Poor rates, in 1837, £374.—14th, Holy Trinity, a perpetual curacy; rated at £7 6s. 8d., by the parliamentary returns at £87 9s. 4d.; gross income £96. Patron, the bishop of Ely. There are in this parish eight daily and two Sunday schools, and also eight endowed alms-houses. Pop., in 1801, 1,214; in 1831, 2,104. Houses 405. A. P. £2,810. Poor rates, in 1837, £997. Pop. of all the parishes, in 1801, 10,087; in 1831, 20,917. Houses 4,007. Acres 3,470. A. P. £31,150. Poor rates, in 1837, £10,147.—A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Cambridge, capable of accommodating 250 persons. The Cambridge poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, embracing an area of 5 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 20,917. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £9,907. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,359.

Name and Description.—Cambridge derives its modern name from the river Cam, by which it is divided into two unequal parts. It was the Grætan brycege or Græta-brige of the Saxon chronicle, signifying 'the bridge over the Granta,' the ancient name of the river Cam. "It once extended," says Carter, "from the castle of Grandchester, or Grantchester, (i. e. a grand city,) now a small village, two miles south-west of the town, to the castle of Cherterton, three miles in length along the west bank of the river Cam. But we have nothing remaining of that ancient city, except the village of Grandchester, and the parishes of St. Giles and St. Peter, now part of modern Cambridge, being the two extremities of that ancient city, the first near the southern castle, (or at least where once it stood,) the latter near the northern; and the numerous coins, and many urns that have been dug up in the neighbourhood of both places, prove them indisputably to have been Roman fortifications." "The site of the Roman Granta," says Dr. Stukeley, "is very traceable on the side of Cambridge towards the castle, on the north-west side of the river, of an irregular figure, containing thirty acres, surrounded by a deep ditch, great part of which yet remains on the south-west, and in the grounds behind Magdalen college. At this time the ditch is nearly filled up, but the banks may in several places be discovered; and the Roman agger, in the garden of Magdalen college, which has been converted into a fine terrace for the exercise of the fellows, is in excellent preservation. The river, which from the deeds in the Cottonian library relative to the foundation of St. Giles's church, seems to have bounded the terrace, now flows from 150 to 300 yards eastward. Within the works, which include the north-west end of the town, are the remains of three considerable bastions, which were raised by the orders of Cromwell; the gateway of the castle, now used as the county prison, and the churches of St. Giles and St. Peter. St. Peter's church was repaired some years ago; at which time, many Roman bricks are reported to have been found in the decayed walls. Numerous fragments of urns have also been picked up in the adjoining fields, and many Roman coins of Vespasian and the later emperors." The approach is by no means striking, and the town owes its picturesque attractions entirely to the magnitude and beauty of the buildings belonging to the university, with the rich and extensive walks and gardens attached to them. The town of Cambridge is situated nearly in the middle of the borough, and reaches from the northern to the southern extremity, occupying about one-fifth of the whole space. The Cam flows through the town, entering on the south side, and pursuing a northerly direction, along the back of the colleges, on the west side of the town, to its northern extremity, where it turns to the east, and thence forms the boundary of the borough to the north-eastern corner. Two principal roads enter the borough, on the south side, from London—the one by way of Royston, the other by way of Chertford—and after uniting in Bridge-street, in the northern part of the town, proceed across the Cam to Huntingdon. A road from Newmarket enters the borough on the east, and passes through Barnwell to the northern part of the town. The principal lines of streets are those of the two first-mentioned roads; but the houses in some of the streets lying between them, in the centre of the town, are equally valuable, and in some instances more so than those in the principal streets. Nearly all the colleges and grounds are on the west side of the town; they are all extra-parochial, with the exception of Downing college, and the recent additions and improvements made in some of the other colleges. The streets are generally narrow and winding, and the houses irregularly built; but Bridge street, St. Andrew's, and Trumpington streets are broad, airy, and pleasant, and the whole town is well-paved. The streets and many of the public buildings are lighted with gas. Cambridge possesses no manufactures; but, by the Cam, which is navigable up to the town, a considerable trade is carried on with the port of Lynn. The commodities forming the staple of this traffic are corn, coal, timber, and iron; the warehouses for which are situated on the banks of the river, at the two extreme ends of the town. Great quantities of oil, pressed from flax, hemp, and cole seed, at the numerous mills in the Isle of Ely, are brought up the river; and large cargoes of butter are, by the same means, conveyed hither weekly from Norfolk and the Isle of Ely to be forwarded by the waggons to London. The principal market-place, consisting of two oblong squares, is spacious and centrally situated. Here stands a conduit, erected in 1614 for the benefit of the town, by the eccentric Thomas Hobson, carrier and hackneyman, whose tenacity, in letting out his horses in strict rotation, gave rise to the proverb of 'Hobson's choice—this or none,' and who was honoured by an epitaph from the pen of John Milton. The pease market is situated in St. Edward's parish. It is appropriated to the sale of corn and fish. There is a considerable market called the Hog-market, held in St. Andrew's hill, for the sale of pigs and other cattle; and also a hay market in St. Giles, near the northern extremity of the town. The weekly market-day is Saturday. Cambridge has two fairs; one for horses, cattle, timber, and pottery, beginning on the 24th of June, and continuing for a week. The other, called Stourbridge or Sturbitch fair, was anciently one of the most celebrated and best frequented in the kingdom. It commences on the 18th of September, and continues for fourteen days. The staple commodities are leather, timber, cheese, hops, wool, hardware, and cattle. The 25th of the month is appropriated to the sale of horses. This fair seems to have been granted by king John, in aid of an hospital of lepers, who had an ancient chapel here, still existing. It was ultimately granted by Henry VIII. for 1,000 marks to the magistrates and corporation of Cambridge. This fair has greatly declined; but when Carter wrote, in the middle of last century, it seems to have been a flourishing mart. His words are: "In the time of Sturbitch fair there is a great resort of people from all parts of the nation, when coaches, &c. are continually running backwards and forwards, and the town at that time is very agreeable. The fair is scarce ended, when the Newmarket races begin, to partake of which diversion so many resort from Cambridge, that during the races a hackney-horse in Cambridge is not to be got for money. The races are no sooner over but the hunting season begins, for which sport Cambridge is never without a pack or two of good hounds, and as for game 'there is plenty.'" See article BARNWELL.

Municipal Government and Franchise.—Though a borough by prescription, this town was not incorporated till the early part of the reign of Henry I. Many valuable and important privileges have been granted to it by succeeding sovereigns, particularly by John, Henry III., Edward II., and Richard II. By the municipal act of 1835 the government of the town has been vested in a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors. The same act divided the town into five wards; viz. East Barnwell, West Barnwell, Market Ward, Trinity Ward, and St. Andrew's Ward,—and assigned to it a commission of the peace. The court of quarter-sessions is always held on the Monday before the sessions for the county. Petty-sessions are held every Friday, and a civil court once in every lunar month on Tuesday. In 1827 an act was obtained, empowering the magistrates to expend £15,000 in building a new gaol. The amount of all the rates levied is £11,275 7s. 11½d.; the sum expended, including the expenses of obtaining the act, the purchase of the site, the cost of building the gaol, of drainage, erecting a tread-mill, interest on loans, salaries, allowances and other miscellaneous matters, up to the audit on the 27th August, 1833, is £15,738 3s. 1½d. The spinning-house, situate in St. Andrew's street, was founded by Thomas Hobson, in 1623, for the purpose, as expressed by him, in the endowment, "of setting the poor people of the university and town of Cambridge, to work, and for a house of correction; for correcting unruly and stubborn rogues, beggars, and other poor people which shall refuse work, and to provide wool and flax for their occupation." The spinning-house, as fronting the street, presents a modern brick elevation, pierced by a gate in the centre, on each side of which are the keeper's apartments. The interior buildings form a parallelogram, of which the central area is divided into four compartments, intended for as many classes of prisoners. The university and the town of Cambridge, being both named in the endowment as participators in Hobson's benefaction, the trustees have appropriated it between them.—The borough has returned two members to parliament ever since the 23d of Edward I. The elective franchise was formerly vested with the freemen not receiving alms, in number somewhat below 200, and of whom more than the half were non-resident. Under the new franchise the number of electors is about 1,500. The mayor is the returning officer.

Chapels and Schools.—Besides the established churches already mentioned, there are several places of worship for the Baptists, the Society of Friends, the Congregationalists or Independents, and the Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists.—There is here a free grammar-school, established in pursuance of the will of Dr. Stephen Perse, senior fellow of Caius college, who, in 1615, bequeathed property for its erection and endowment. Scholars, having been three years at least at this school, are eligible before all others to the Perse fellowships and scholarships at Caius college.—The free school, founded in 1808, in the parish of St. Peter, for the children of the poor, was, in 1813, united to the National society.—Whiston's charity schools for both sexes were instituted in 1703.—In 1816, a school-room for 300 girls was erected in King-street. This establishment also is now united to the National society.—Here are three infant schools.—Addenbrooke's hospital, situated at the south entrance into the town, was founded by Dr. John Addenbrooke, in 1766. The funds being found insufficient for its support, it was, by act of parliament, converted into a general hospital or infirmary, supported by donations and subscriptions. In 1813, John Bowtwell bequeathed to this institution £7,000. The number of patients of late years annually cured or relieved is about 1000, the number of beds 105, and the annual expense about £2,700, of which about £900 is raised from the permanent funds. The hospital has a good collection of calculi.—Here are alms-houses founded and endowed by different individuals for upwards of 50 poor persons.—Of the numerous religious houses at Cambridge the most ancient appears to have been founded in the close of the 11th century. "In or near the church of St. Giles, in Cambridge," says Tanner in his Not. Mon., "Picot, a Norman lord of Bourne, and many years sheriff of Cambridgeshire, at the instance of Hugolina, his wife, began a religious house for a prior and six regular canons, A.D. 1092, which was, twenty years after, removed to a place on the other side of the river called Barnwell, by Pain Peverell, that famous soldier who was standard-bearer to Robert, duke of Normandy, in the holy wars. Here he new-built and enlarged the priory in honour of St. Giles and St. Andrew, designing it for thirty canons of the order of St. Austin. At the dissolution its yearly revenues were valued at £656 11s. 10d. q. Dugd. £351 15s. 4d. Speed. Its site was granted 38° Henry VIII., to Anthony Broun; and 6° of Edward VI. to Edward Lord Clinton." Some part of the buildings belonging to this convent are said still to be seen. "About A.D. 1291," adds Tanner, "a convent of white canons from Sempringham settled themselves at the old chapel of St. Edmund the king, over against Peter House, which they had by the gift of B. fil. Walteri, and here they continued till the dissolution, when this small priory was valued at £14 8s. 8d. ob. per ann. Dugd. £16 16s. 0d. Speed; and the site of it was granted 35° Henry VIII. to Edward Elrington and Humphrey Metcalf.—John de Cranden, prior of Ely in the beginning of King Edward III.'s reign, bought a house near Burden Hostle, wherein he placed a few Benedictine monks from Ely for their better improvement in university learning. But within a few years this house was granted to William Bate-man, bishop of Norwich, who thereon built part of Trinity Hall.—Here were also an hospital, dedicated to St. Anthony and St. Eligius, an hermitage and lazaret-house, and houses of Black, Grey, White, and Bethlehemite friars; together with the houses of friars de Sacco and Fratres S. Marie."—A Benedictine nunnery, dedicated to St. Mary, appears to have been founded here about the year 1130.—The castle, built by William the Conqueror, on the site of the Danish fortress, was long an occasional residence of our early monarchs. During the civil war it was garrisoned for the parliament. All that now remains of the ancient building is a gate-house.—The most poetic and eloquent of all prose writers, Jeremy Taylor, was a native of Cambridge, as was also Richard Cumberland, the dramatist.—It gives the title of duke to Adolphus Frederick, fifth and youngest surviving son of George III.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY is a society of students in all the liberal arts and sciences, incorporated by the name of 'the Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Cambridge,' and is formed by the union of 13 colleges, and 4 halls possessing equal privileges with the colleges. It is situated in the county-town of Cambridge, over which it possesses both a special and a concurrent jurisdiction. The revenues of this university were estimated in 1835 as follows: Heads of houses, 17 in number, £12,650; 431 fellows whose revenue is £90,330; 793 scholarships with £13,390; 179 college-officers with £17,750; 252 prizes of the value of £1,038; 591 benefices and incumbents with £93,300; rent of rooms, £15,680; and college-revenues, £133,268.

History.—The honour of having laid the foundation of this most splendid and effective establishment, seems due to Sigebert, king of the East Angles, who, according to Bede, with the advice of Bishop Felix, in the early half of the seventh century, established in his own dominions a school in imitation of certain institutions for education which he had seen in France. This school is supposed to have been set up at Cambridge. Edward the Elder, according to the chronicle of Hyde abbey, erected halls for the students; but a regular system of academic education seems to have been first introduced in the early part of the 12th century. "Petrus Blasensis, Jeffrey, abbot of Crowland, having lost his monastery by fire about A.D. 1110, partly to get money to rebuild it, and partly to settle his monks in the meantime, sent four of the most learned of them to his manor of Cottenham near Cambridge, viz. Gilbert, Odo, Terricus, and William. These men being furnished with the knowledge of divinity, and the other ancient sciences, repaired often to Cambridge, the seat of the muses, and having gained a permission to teach their several arts, hired a barn, made open profession of their several sciences, and in a short time drew a great number of hearers to them. In the second year after their coming, the number of their scholars grew so great, that no one place would hold them; whereupon they (taking the university of Orleans for a pattern) separated themselves to several places, and divided their auditors between them thus: Odo, a singular grammarian and poet, read grammar to the younger sort, according to the doctrine of Priscian and Remigius; Terricus, a subtle sophister, taught the elder sort of young men Aristotle's logic, after the introduction of Porphyry, and the comments of Averroes; Monk William read a lecture in Tully's rhetoric, and Quintilian's Flores, and all at their distinct hours: but the great Dr. Gislebert, upon every Sunday and holiday, preached God's word unto the people, most particularly against Judaism, because the town was everywhere overspread with that sort of people. The scholars were wonderfully pleased with the learning and diligence of these monks, and rewarded them so liberally, that they returned 100 marks yearly to their abbot, in order to rebuild their monastery. Jeffrey seeing his monks thus successful, went to them, and joined in his preaching with them, by whose labours Cambridge became of a sudden a noble seat of learning. Inns, halls, and hostels, were built for the reception of students. Fuller gives us a catalogue of above 30, too tedious to be set down, where students lived under the rule of a principal or master; but none of them were endowed for above 200 years after. In King John's reign the number of these students increased by the resort of many from Oxford, which that king's injustice to three students, who were executed by his order for their chamber-fellow's crime in killing a woman accidentally, had driven from thence. The prosperity of these schools induced the lovers of learning to provide better for the subsistence both of the professors and convenience of students; whereupon they built the colleges, which, though but inconsiderable at first, were a foundation for our present great endowments." [Magna Britannia, vol. i. p. 244.] Edward III., in 1333, granted most important privileges to the university, making its authority paramount to that of the borough. In 1534, the university renounced the supremacy of the pope, and in the following year resigned all its charters to the king, who soon after restored them, and reinstated the university in its privileges.—The following account of this celebrated seat of learning is compiled chiefly from Dyer's History, and the University Calendar.

Government.—Of the 17 colleges, or halls, or societies, which form the university of Cambridge, each is a body corporate, and ruled by its own particular statutes; but each is also subject to general laws which regulate the practice of the confederated body as a university. Each of the 17 departments, so to speak, of this literary union, has its allotted share in the general administration; each, through its individual members, deliberating upon, rejecting, or decreeing laws in the senate, and enforcing them through the executive branches of its government.—The senate takes cognizance of the whole business of the university. Here the office-bearers are elected; and without a grace passing through it, no degree can be granted. It is composed of all the masters of arts, and the doctors in divinity, civil law, and physic, having their names upon the college-boards, holding any university office or resident in the town, the whole amounting to nearly 2,000. The senate is divided into two classes, or houses,—masters of arts of less than five years' standing, and doctors of less than two, compose the regent, or upper house,—the remainder constitute the non-regent, or lower house. The latter wear black silk hoods, the former hoods lined with white silk. Hence they are also denominated the white-hood house, and the black-hood house. Doctors of more than two years' standing, and the orator of the university, are privileged to vote with either of the houses they think proper.—The right of electing the two members of parliament is vested in the doctors and masters of arts who have their names on the boards of their respective colleges. The returning officer is the vice-chancellor.—Besides the two houses of the senate, a council called the Caput is chosen annually, by which every university grace must be unanimously approved before it can be introduced to the senate. It consists of the vice-chancellor, a doctor of each faculty—law, physic, and theology—a regent, and a non-regent master of arts. A meeting of the senate is called a Congregation. A list of the days on which congregations are to be held for transacting university business, is published by the vice-chancellor a few days before the commencing of each term. These days occur generally once a fortnight; but the vice-chancellor can convene the senate when he pleases; and any member not below five-and-twenty, with the proper officers or their legal deputies, may transact whatever business is brought before them. Meetings are enjoined by the statutes on certain days, and a congregation may be held at any time when forty members can be convened.

The executive administration of the university is committed to a chancellor, a high steward, a vice-chancellor, a commissary, a public orator, an assessor, two proctors, two pro-proctors, two moderators, a registrar, two taxors, two scrutators, classical examiners, syndics, marshal, three esquire bedells, yeoman bedell, university printer, library keeper, under library keeper, school keeper, &c.—The chancellor is the head of the whole university, and presides over all cases relative to that body. The office is biennial, but tenable for life, if the university chooses tacitly so to allow.—The vice-chancellor, in the absence of the chancellor, is governor of the university according to the statutes. He possesses magistratival authority both in the university and the county; and he must be the head of some college.*—The moderators nominated by the proctors, and appointed by a grace of the senate, act as substitutes for the proctors in the philosophical schools, and are generally deputed to officiate for the proctors in their absence.—The registrar, elected by the senate, attends personally, or by deputy, all congregations, to give requisite directions for the due form of such graces as are to be propounded, to receive them when they have passed both houses, and to register them in the records.—The scrutators—who are non-regents, and chosen by the non-regents only—attend all congregations to read the graces in the lower house, to gather the votes, and publicly to pronounce the assent or dissent of that house.—Classical examiners are nominated by the several colleges. Their business is sufficiently indicated by their official appellation.—Syndics are members of the senate chosen to transact special affairs relating to the university, such as the framing of laws, regulating fees, inspecting buildings, &c.

Particular professorships.—Besides the regular professorships in the several colleges and halls, professorships have at different periods been founded for the university generally: some of them by the university itself, others by individuals who took a special interest in promoting the study of particular subjects. Of these, the first in order of time is Lady Margaret's professorship of divinity, founded in 1502, by Margaret, countess of Richmond, and mother to Henry VII. The regius professorship of divinity and civil law, physic, and Hebrew, was founded by Henry VIII in 1540. A professorship of Arabic was founded by Sir Thomas Adams, Bart., in 1632. In 1663, Henry Lucas, Esq., M. P. for the university, founded a professorship of mathematics, named from him the Lucasian professorship. In 1683, John Knightbridge, D. D., fellow of St. Peter's, founded a professorship of caesutry. In 1684, the professorship of music was founded by the university. A professorship of chemistry was also founded by the an authority external to itself, will be sufficient to prove that those inconveniences are neither few nor unimportant, and are such as not merely justify, but absolutely require, a decisive and comprehensive reform." The statutes by which the university, as well as the various colleges, are governed, were framed in a semi-barbarous age, and contemplate a state of things as remote from that which now exists as the habits and literature of the 14th and 15th centuries are unlike those of the present times. Every fellow of Queen's college is obliged to swear that whenever the name of the founder or founders is mentioned in his presence he will pray for their souls. Dr. Peacock says, however, that the statutes of this college have lately been revised by the Queen in council, and possibly this clause may have been erased. The fellows of Christ's college are directed by the founders to pray for the soul of her son, Henry VII., &c. This clause, it is true, is not administered; but this only shifts the burden to other shoulders. The statute remains, and, whether actually administered or not, is equally binding upon, or rather equally distressing to, the fellows of the college, whose oath runs in this form—"I will never at any time seek, nor, if others seek and obtain, will I accept of any dispensation of the college statutes, or of this my oath." The oath taken by the kindred society of St. John's is framed to the same effect, though still more rigidly expressed:—"I swear that I will never seek a dispensation affecting any particle contained in the statutes, nor avail myself of dispensations obtained by any other person or persons, secretly or openly, directly or indirectly." But if the oaths and statutes of other colleges lash the consciences of their respective societies with whips, those of King's college sting with scorpions. The vengeance of Heaven is arrayed against provost, fellow, or scholar who shall seek, or even contemplate, new statutes, or interpret the existing one otherwise than according to their obvious meaning and literal construction. The bishops and archbishops are solemnly inhibited from proposing or sanctioning any such alterations, and "our heirs and successors, the kings of England," are in a similar manner for ever forbidden to interfere! Eton is governed by the same code; but, as the provost and fellows find it impossible to obey the statutes, they adopt the expedient of mutilating and omitting "more than half of the whole body, some of which relate to various superstitious practices and Roman Catholic services, which the good and pious founder most strictly and rigorously imposed, and also many others, relating to important personal rights of various members of the foundation."

* "The statutes of the university of Cambridge," says Dr. Peacock, "and of nearly all the colleges of which it is composed, have undergone few essential changes in the course of nearly three centuries, whilst very few vestiges remain of the system of education which they prescribe, or of the practical regulations which they enforce. If the inconveniences which resulted from the continuance of this remarkable discrepancy between the theory and practical working of the constitution of these bodies were confined to the retention of a few unimportant forms which have lost their original import, and which neither tended to weaken the sense of the strict obligations of oaths, nor to embarrass and retard the progress of important improvements in the scheme of academical education of government, they could hardly be considered as sufficient to justify a departure from a system which not only possessed the sanction and authority of antiquity, but which had been shown by experience to be capable of accommodating itself to the varying wants, as well as to the varying habits, of different ages: but a very slight examination of some of those statutes, which the university possesses no power of altering without an appeal to university, in 1702. In 1704, Dr. Plume, archdeacon of Rochester, founded the professorship of astronomy and experimental philosophy. In 1707, the professorships of anatomy and botany were founded by the university; and, in 1724, the professorship of modern history by George I. In 1727, the famous Dr. Woodward founded the professorship of geology. In 1749, Thomas Lowndes, Esq., founded that of astronomy and geometry. In 1768, John Norris, Esq., of Whitcham, in the county of Norfolk, founded a professorship of divinity, named from the founder the Norrisian professorship. In 1783, the Rev. Richard Jackson, M.A., founded the professorship of natural and experimental philosophy. A professorship of the laws of England, and a professorship of medicine were founded, in 1800, by Sir George Downing, Bart., K.B. A professorship of mineralogy was founded by the university in 1808, and soon after endowed by government; and, in 1823, a professorship of political economy.—In addition to this long list of professorships, there are a number of distinct lectureships and literary offices. The Barnaby lectureships are four in number, viz., mathematics, philosophy, rhetoric, and logic. The Sadlerian lectureships, seventeen in number, were founded by Lady Sadler. In 1789, the Rev. John Hulse, who received his education at St. John's college, Cambridge, founded and endowed the offices of Christian advocate, and Christian preacher. The Christian advocate must compose annually, so long as he holds the office, an answer to some of the objections brought against the Christian religion. The Christian preacher, or as he is named, Hulsean lecturer, is elected annually, and is bound to preach and print, during that time, twenty sermons on the evidences of revealed religion, or explaining some of the more obscure parts of the holy scriptures. In addition to this, the same individual, besides founding two scholarships in St. John's college, bequeathed £40 annually for the best dissertation on any argument proving the truth and excellence of the Christian religion. Two pensions of £100 per annum, bequeathed by William Worts, M.A. of Caius college, formerly one of the Esquire bedells to the university, are given to two junior bachelors of arts, elected by the senate, who are required to visit foreign countries, taking different routes, and to write each during his travels two Latin letters descriptive of manners, customs, and curiosities. The pension is continued for three years. The prizes for the encouragement of literature, which are open to the university at large, amount annually to a sum not less than £1,200, and in the different colleges cannot be less than £300.

Orders.—The several orders in the different colleges are a head, fellows, noblemen-graduates, doctors in the several faculties, bachelors in divinity, graduates, bachelors in civil law and in physic, bachelors of arts, fellow-commoners, pensioners, scholars, and sizars. The head is generally a doctor in divinity. Fellows are doctors in divinity, civil law, or physic, bachelors in divinity, masters or bachelors of arts,—their number is between four and five hundred. Noblemen graduates are doctors in the several faculties, bachelors in divinity, who have been masters of arts, and masters of arts who are not on the foundation, but keep their names upon the boards for the purpose of being members of the senate. Graduates are bachelors in divinity, neither members of the senate, nor in statu pupillari, denominated four-and-twenty men, or ten-year men. Bachelors of arts, who are in statu pupillari, and pay for tuition, whether resident or not, keep their names on the boards to become candidates for fellowships, or members of the senate. Fellow-commoners are generally the younger sons of the nobility or young men of fortune, and have the privilege of dining at the fellows' table. They are equivalent here to gentlemen commoners at Oxford. Pensioners and scholars both pay for their rooms, commons, &c.; but the latter are on the foundation, and, from the enjoyment of scholarships, read the graces in the hall, the lessons in chapel, &c. The number of scholarships and exhibitions in the university is between 700 and 800. Sizars are generally men of inferior fortune; if on the foundation they have their commons free, and receive various emoluments.—In conferring degrees, the several statutes by which they are regulated must be strictly observed. The candidate for bachelor of arts must have resided twelve several terms, with the exception of the first and the last. A master of arts must be a bachelor of three years' standing. A bachelor in divinity must be a master of arts of seven years' standing. A ten-year man may, by the statute, obtain this degree without having taken any other. To attain the degree of doctor in divinity, the candidate must be a bachelor in divinity of five years' standing, or a master of arts of twelve years' standing. To obtain a bachelorship in civil law, six years' standing, and a residence of nine terms is required; if the candidate is already bachelor of arts, four years' standing will be sustained. A bachelor of civil law of five years' standing, or a master of arts of seven years' standing may be admitted a doctor of civil law. A bachelorship in physic requires a residence of nine terms, and a standing of six years. For a doctorship in physic the same rules must be observed as for that of civil law. An M.A. or M.B. of two years' standing may be a licentiate in physic. For a bachelorship in music the aspirant must enter his name at some college; and, as an exercise, compose and perform before the university a piece of music. He may afterwards, by going through the same routine, be made doctor of music. These rules, it may be observed, are dispensed with in the case of privy councillors, bishops, noblemen, dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons; sons of noblemen; persons related to the king by consanguinity or affinity, provided they be also honourable; the eldest sons of such persons; and, for the degree of M.A., baronets and knights; proving clearly that, though there is no royal road to learning, there is a very smooth one to its honours. These lettered grandees, however, cannot vote in the senate till they have resided three terms. Before receiving any degree from this university, the candidate must subscribe a declaration that he is bona fide a member of the church of England, as by law established; and for all degrees, those of B.A., M.B., and B.C.L. excepted, it is necessary to subscribe to the 36th canon of the church of England.

Courts.—The university possesses two law-courts—the consistory of the chancellor, and the consistory of the commissary. In the former, justice is administered in all personal pleas, arising within the limits of the university, wherein a member of the university is a party. The chancellor, or his vice-chancellor, is assisted by some of the heads of colleges, and by one or more doctors of the civil law, according to the course of which the proceedings are conducted. From his judgment an appeal lies to the senate, who appoint delegates, not fewer than three, nor more than five, with power to examine the case, and to confirm or reverse as they see cause. The latter sits both in the university and at midsummer and Sturbridge fairs, to judge in all cases, mayhem and felony excepted, where one of the parties is a member of the university. The procedure is similar to that of the former, to which an appeal lies, and thence to the senate. The university counsel are appointed by a grace of the senate, and the solictor by the vice-chancellor. The terms are three;—Michaelmas term begins October 10th, and ends on the 16th of December. Lent, or January term, begins on the 13th of January, and ends on the Friday before Palm Sunday. Easter or midsummer term begins on the 11th day after Easterday and ends on the Friday after commencement day, which is always the first Tuesday in July.

Public buildings.—The senate house, the public schools, and the library, are the principal public buildings belonging to the university. The senate house was designed by Sir James Burrell. It is an elegant building of Portland stone, and was erected at the expense of the university, aided by an extensive subscription. The foundation was laid in 1722, but it was not entirely completed till 1766. The exterior is of the Corinthian order, the interior Doric. The galleries are of Norway oak, and calculated to accommodate 1,100 persons.—The public schools were commenced on or near their present site in 1443. They were built at the expense of the university, aided by liberal benefactions. They form three sides of a small court. The whole quadrangle of apartments over the schools, consisting of four large and commodious rooms, is occupied by the public library, which is now rebuilding in a magnificent style.—The botanical garden on the south-east side of the town occupies between three and four acres conveniently laid out and well watered.—The anatomical school contains a large collection of rare and valuable preparations.—The observatory stands on an eminence about a mile from the college walks on the road to Madingley. It was completed in 1832 at an expense of £19,000. The front extends 120 feet. The principal entrance is under a portico supported by fluted Doric columns.—For the purpose of promoting scientific inquiries, and of facilitating the communication of facts connected with the advancement of philosophy and natural history, a philosophical society was instituted in the winter of 1819. It has published several very interesting volumes of transactions.—The Pitt press, in Trumpington-street, is a very elegant building. It was finished in 1833.

Fitzwilliam museum.—Lord Viscount Fitzwilliam bequeathed, in trust, to the university of Cambridge, £100,000, the interest of which was to be applied to the erection of a building for the reception of the collection which bears his name, and which he presented to the university. The university having resolved that a new building should be forthwith erected, competition was invited, and the works of various architects were duly exhibited for six months. The senate, then, following the course recommended in the report of the Syndicate, met on the 29th of October, 1835, and adjudged the prize, and consequently the execution of the work, to Mr. George Basevi, jun. The new Fitzwilliam museum is situated in the open part of Trumpington-street, in front of the grove of Peterhouse college. The situation possesses the advantage of a clear space of a hundred feet on each side of the building, through which the grove appears forming a most effective background. The edifice itself is of the Corinthian order, covering an area of 160 feet in length, by 162 feet in depth. The façade, which is 76 feet in height, presents an octastyle portico, pseudo-dipterally arranged, with side-colonnades or wings. The broad flight of steps ascending to the portico, elevates the latter considerably above the adjacent buildings: it is imposing in its proportions; and a great richness of effect is given by the sculpture with which it is decorated. The other three fronts are also highly ornamented with fluted Corinthian pilasters, niches, and statuary; and the bold and florid modillion cornice of the portico is carried in its full projection round the whole building. The material employed is Portland stone. Entering the portico, a lofty door leads into the Great hall and Statue gallery, 70 feet long, 46 broad, and 50 high: the vaulted roof of this apartment being supported on twenty Corinthian pillars of marble. On each side of the hall a flight of marble steps ascends to the Picture galleries; while a broader flight in the centre descends to the Library and Print rooms.

St. Peter's college.—Of the colleges, the union of which forms the university which we have above described, St. Peter's, called Peter house, is the most ancient. It was founded in 1257 by Hugh de Balsham, bishop of Ely, on the west side of Trumpington-street. "He settled no revenue on it at first, but only allowed the students chambers and studies, which was very acceptable to them, because they were freed thereby from the extortion of the townsmen, who required exorbitant rents for their lodgings. The same Hugh being made bishop of Ely, was careful to enrich his college, and endowed it with maintenance for one master, fourteen fellows, two bible-clerks, and eight poor scholars, to be increased or diminished as the revenues did increase or abate. He appointed his successors, the bishops of Ely, to be honorary patrons, yea, nursing fathers, to this his college, and they have well discharged their trust. Divers bishops of the same see and others have been great benefactors to this house." It consists of three courts, but has little of architectural character. The chapel, built in 1632, is chiefly remarkable for its fine east window of painted glass representing the crucifixion. Cardinal Beaufort, the poet Crawshawe, the learned Walton editor of the polyglot Bible, Law, Markland, Sherlock, and South, were educated at this college. St. Peter's has fourteen foundation fellowships, and eight bye fellowships. The former are restricted to two fellows of a county, excepting Cambridgeshire and Middlesex, seven of which are disposed of to men from the counties of Westmoreland, Cumberland, Northumberland, Durham, York, Lancaster, Chester, Derby, Stafford, Nottingham, Leicester, Lincoln, Shropshire, Worcester, Rutland, Norfolk, Bedford, Huntingdon, Anglesey, Caernarvon, Flint, Merioneth, Montgomery and Denbigh. Cambridgeshire and Middlesex may have each four fellows at the same time. The scholarships in number are forty-eight, of different value, according to residence, with a preference to men from Hertford school. Only two sizars are admitted here.

Clare hall.—Clare hall, originally University hall, was founded in 1326 by Dr. Richard Badew. Having been burnt to the ground about 1342, it was rebuilt and liberally endowed by Elizabeth de Burgh, one of the sisters and coheirresses of Gilbert, earl of Clare, whence its name of Clare hall. Clare hall stands on the east bank of the Cam, over which it has an elegant stone-bridge, leading by a fine avenue into a charming lawn surrounded by lofty elm-trees, and commanding a prospect towards Coton and Madingley. It was rebuilt in 1638, and is the most uniform of the university buildings. It consists of a court 150 feet long by 111 broad. The chapel, rebuilt in 1768 at an expense of £7,000, is celebrated for the neatness of its stucco work. Among other eminent persons who have belonged to this society, are the names of Bishop Latimer, Archbishop Tillotson, the ingenious theorist Dr. Burnet, Holcroft the father of dissent in Cambridgeshire, Parkhurst the lexicographer, and Cudworth, author of the intellectual system. On the authority of Mr. Tyrwhitt, we may add the illustrious Chaucer to this list.—This college has in its gift nineteen foundation fellowships and three bye fellowships. The ten senior fellowships are restricted to two of a county, but the nine junior fellowships are open to all the counties of England. Two of the bye fellowships are appropriated to Kent, with a preference to Blackheath, and the third is for a Norfolk man. The scholarships here are four of £50 each per annum, and four of £20 each per annum, so held that two become vacant every year: one of £20 per annum, tenable till M. A. Two of a guinea and a half a-week each during residence for men from Wakefield school. One of twelve shillings a-week, during residence, for Hull school. Thirty or more from two shillings to six shillings a-week each, during residence. Four exhibitions of £13 per annum, with preference to men from Oakham and Uppingham schools. Not more than three sizars are here admitted. This college has sixteen benefices.

Pembroke hall.—Pembroke hall or college was founded by Mary countess of Pembroke, in 1347. Its endowments were greatly enlarged by Henry VI. Pembroke hall stands on the east side of Trumpington-street, nearly opposite to St. Peter's. It consists of two courts of nearly equal dimensions, being about 95 by 55 feet, with the hall between them. The chapel, built by Dr. Matthew Wren, bishop of Ely, from a design by his nephew Sir Christopher Wren, is considered to be among the most elegant and best proportioned in the university. Among eminent persons who have been members of this college, are the names of Archbishops Grindal and Whitgift; Bishops Ridley and Andrews; the martyrs Rogers and Bradford; the poets Spencer, Gray, and Mason, Edmund Calamy, ejected for nonconformity, and William Pitt. This college has fourteen foundations and two bye fellowships, open to all counties, with this restriction, that not more than three men of the same county be fellows at the same time. The scholarships here, which are rather numerous for the size of the college, are worth £10 a-year, with three of £12 a-year, always given to sizars; also six of £40 each per annum, for superannuated scholars from Merchant Tailors' school, and for one man from Bowes' school in Yorkshire; one of £50 per annum for a superannuated scholar from Merchant Tailors' school; some others of £40 each per annum, to men from Christ's hospital.

Caius' college.—Gonville hall was founded by Edmund, son of Sir Nicholas Gonville of Torrington, in the county of Norfolk, in 1348. It was consolidated with the new foundation by Dr. John Caius, in 1557, and under the charter then obtained the united foundations received the name of Gonville and Caius college. Caius college consists of three courts. The south court and three remarkable gates of Grecian architecture, built by Dr. Caius, one of the founders, are supposed to have been designed by John of Padua, architect to Henry VIII., and to be the only works of his now remaining in the kingdom. The chapel is small but greatly admired for its beauty. The library is also small, but contains books and manuscripts of great value, particularly in heraldry. This college has been a celebrated seminary for medicine and anatomy, ever since the time of its second founder, Dr. Caius; and among many celebrated names connected with it are those of Dr. William Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, Dr. William Hyde, Wollaston, Sir Thomas Gresham, Bishop Taylor, and the learned Dr. Samuel Clarke. — Caius college is endowed with twenty-nine fellowships, of which twenty-one are open to all counties. Five for Norfolk men, two for the diocese of Norwich, and one for Devon. The number of scholarships is seventy-seven: ten for Norwich men, twenty-six for Norwich diocese, three for London men, two for Cambridge men, two for Hertfordshire, one for Bedfordshire, one for Canterbury, one for a man educated in London and Westminster, and thirty-one open to all counties. Also fourteen exhibitions.

Trinity hall.—Trinity hall was founded by William Bateman, bishop of Norwich, in 1350. The chapel is remarkable for its finely painted altar-piece, and the library, for containing a complete body of the canon, Roman and common law. Among many names of celebrity who have been students or members here are those of Bilney the martyr, Bishop Horsley, and the celebrated earl of Chesterfield. — This college has twelve fellowships, unrestricted as to county, also fourteen scholarships of ten shillings and sixpence per week, during residence; two of £12 each per annum, and a sizarship of about £60 per annum. It is almost entirely devoted to the study of civil law.

Corpus Christi college.—Corpus Christi college was founded 1351 by the brethren of two guilds in Cambridge, bearing the names of Gilda Corporis Christi, and Gilda Beate Mariæ Virginis. The west front of the new court is 222 feet long. It has a lofty and massive tower at each extremity, with a superb gateway in the centre flanked with towers corresponding with those at each end. The exterior is built of Ketton stone and richly ornamented. The court is 158 feet long and 129 broad, having the chapel on the east, the library on the south, and the hall on the north sides. The chapel is 66 feet long and its exterior is richly adorned with sculpture. The library contains many valuable manuscripts bequeathed to the college by Archbishop Parker. These manuscripts are chiefly documents relating to the Reformation, with the original record of the thirty-nine articles. Among the college plate is still preserved a curious drinking horn which belonged to the guild of Corpus Christi. Among celebrated names that have belonged to this college, are those of Archbishops Parker, Tenison, and Herring, Salmon the well-known topographer, and John Fletcher, the dramatic poet. — This college has twelve fellowships, two of which are appropriated to Norwich, and four must be given to Norfolk men in preference to others. The scholarships and exhibitions are nine, open to all counties; three by Archbishop Parker for Norwich men; two by the same for native scholars from Norwich, Windham, or Aylsham schools; three of £20 each per annum. Nomination vested with dean and chapter of Canterbury, who must appoint such men from the school of that city, as are sons of their Norfolk, Suffolk, and Lincolnshire tenants; or with the dean and chapter of Westminster, for Westminster scholars; or with the master and fellows for any men from the province of Canterbury. Two for natives of Kent, from Canterbury school, in the patronage of the dean of Canterbury, and master of Eastbridge hospital; one for Norwich; one for Cambridgeshire; six in the patronage of the heirs male of Sir Nicholas Bacon, the founder, with the advice of a fellow of the college and the master of Redgrave school, also in the patronage of the master and fellows, in which case the scholarships are restricted to men from Redgrave school, if any. Three, one of which is presented by the Archbishop of Canterbury, to a native and scholar of that place; the other two must be given to men from the schools of Aylsham and Windham, who must also be natives of those places. Seven unappropriated, three of them being with preference to the names of Caston, Clench, Brownrig, or Amfield. One by John Borage of £5 per annum for his name and kin, or a native of Norfolk. One of £20 per annum for the founder's name of Colman, or in default to four men from Norwich and Windham schools. Two of £10 per annum each, for natives of York or Mansfield, or for natives of the York diocese. One of £20 per annum, unrestricted. Three of 1s. a-week each. Four of £10 each per annum, for men from St. Paul's school. One of £30 per annum, for a man from St. Paul's school, in the patronage of the governors of that school. Eight of £30 per annum and four of £40 per annum, given to such students as excel in the annual examinations.

King's college.—King's college—the most magnificent foundation in Cambridge—was founded in 1441 by Henry VI.; it consists of a provost and seventy fellows and scholars, the latter of whom are supplied in regular succession from Eton college. The college appoints its own coroner, and no writ of arrest can be executed within its walls, where the provost possesses absolute and undisputed authority. The members, by special composition between this society and the university, are, within the limits of the college, exempt from the power of the proctors and the university-officers, neither by usage do they keep any public exercises in the schools, nor are they in any way examined for the degree of bachelor of arts. The several buildings of this college form altogether the most superb groupe in Cambridge. To the south of the old court stands the chapel, one of the finest specimens of the later style of English architecture in the kingdom. It was begun in 1441 by Henry VI., continued by Edward IV., Richard III., and Henry VII., and completed with money bequeathed by the latter for that purpose in 1515. Its extreme length is 316 feet, forming the north side of the grand court, its breadth 84 feet, its height to the summit of the battlements 90 feet, to the top of the pinnacles 101, and to the summit of the corner-towers 146 feet. About the middle of the interior a wooden screen very richly carved, supports the organ gallery and separates the anti-chapel from the choir. The choir is paved with marble. Of this splendid edifice nothing excites greater admiration than the vast roof of stone, wrought like fanwork, which hangs above the spectator without the support of a single pillar. The spectator is also impressed with the magnitude and beauty of its painted windows, of which there are twelve on each side nearly 50 feet in height, which, with the window to the east, are filled with various subjects from scripture history. This beautiful glass was put up in the early part of the reign of Henry VIII., and is interesting as one of the few specimens of ancient church decoration that has escaped the ravages of time and the more destructive breath of popular fury. It was the intention of the royal donor that the chapel should form the south side of a large court, and for this purpose he granted the liberty of two stone-quarries in Yorkshire, besides £1,000 per annum, payable out of the duchy of Lancaster, till the college should be completed. In consequence of Edward IV. having deprived the college of this money along with nearly two-thirds of its possessions, nothing was done towards completing the design till 1724. The buildings have been recently repaired and embellished after designs by Wilkins. Among the names that have adorned this society, are those of the martyrs Fryth, Saunders, Glover, and Fuller; the statesmen and scholars Sir John Cheke, Sir Francis Walsingham, Sir William Temple, Sir Robert Walpole, and Edmund Waller the poet.

Queen's college.—Queen's college was founded in 1446 by Margaret of Anjou, consort of Henry VI., and refounded in 1465 by Elizabeth Wydeville, consort of Edward IV. The grove and gardens are particularly beautiful, lying on both sides of the river, and connected by a wooden-bridge of one arch which is greatly admired for the ingenuity of its construction. The celebrated Erasmus was for some time a student at this college.—This college consists of a president and 19 foundation fellowships, under certain restrictions. Besides these there is one bye fellowship perfectly open. There are also 26 scholarships, payable weekly, according to residence, consisting of 8 foundation scholarships of £25 each per annum, restricted like the fellowships and tenable till M.A. One of £20 per annum by Mr. Smith, for his kin and name from Saffron Walden school, then to the name of Alston, or Suffolk men. Three Smither's scholarships of £16 each per annum. Three Stokes's of £15 per annum each, restricted to two of a county. Two Sedgwick's of £15 each per annum, one to Bucks the other to Northamptonshire, sons of clergymen preferred, tenable with other scholarships or even fellowships. One Mountaigne's of £13 per annum. Two James's of £13 each per annum. Three Clark's of £10 each per annum; and two Davenant's £9.

Catherine hall.—Catherine hall was founded in 1475 by Robert Woodlark, D.D., chancellor of the university and provost of King's college. Among eminent members and students of this college are the names of Hoadly, Bradford the martyr, John Strype, Ray the naturalist, and Dr. Lightfoot the orientalist.—The 6 foundation fellowships are restricted to there being no more than two of the same county at the same time; there are also one, for men from Coventry school, one called the conduct fellowship; and six with preference to Yorkshire and then to Lincolnshire men. The scholarships are ten, of £35 each per annum and rooms rent free, with preference to Yorkshire and then to Lincolnshire men; one of £10 per annum for a man from Tamworth school; two of £6 each per annum for men from Eton college or Merchant Tailors' school; three of £20 12s. 4d. per annum; eight of £20 each per annum; one of £12 per annum; five of £5 each per annum; seven of £4 each per annum; two of £3 6s. 8d. each per annum; two of £2 13s. 4d. each per annum; and two of £2 each per annum, all perfectly open.

Jesus' college.—Jesus' college was founded in 1496 by John Alcock, bishop of Ely. Its site was a Benedictine nunnery established about the year 1130, and dedicated to St. Rhadegund. Among eminent names that have been members and students at this college, are those of Crammer, archbishop and martyr, Flamstead the astronomer, Hartley, Lawrence Sterne, Tyrwhitt, Jortin, Gilbert Wakefield, and Dr. Edward Daniel Clarke.—This college has 16 foundation fellowships, eight of which go to men from the northern counties of Leicester, Worcester, Wales, Nottingham, Warwick, Derby, Lancaster, Chester, Stafford, York, Cumberland, Westmoreland, Northumberland and Durham, and the other eight to the other counties; one to which the bishop of Ely has the appointment. The scholarships are four of £10 per annum each, for Nottinghamshire and Yorkshire; eleven of £45 per annum, for clergymen's orphans of England and Wales, founded by Tobias Rustal, yeoman of the robes to King Charles II.; one of £40 per annum to a living clergyman's son, with a preference to a native of Nottinghamshire or Lancashire; one of £15 per annum to the son of a clergyman, with the preference to an orphan; three of £8 each per annum, and one of £2 per annum, open to all counties; one of £10 per annum for Doncaster or Acksay free schools; two of £70 each per annum, for Seven Oaks and Tunbridge schools; two of £16 each per annum, tenable from the degree of Bachelor of Arts to that of Master of Arts, for orphans of the clergy; one of £6 8s. 6d. per annum, for Caister, Louth, or Alford schools; one of £3 6s. 8d. per annum, for Lancashire, Herefordshire, Cumberland, or Essex; two of £4 10s. per annum each, one to the county of Anglesey or Merioneth, the other to St. Peter the Poor or St. Foster in London; one of £60 per annum for Loughborough school; fifteen of £3 each, open to all counties.

Christ's college.—Christ's college was originally founded by Henry VI. in 1456, under the name of God's house. In 1505, the name was changed and the former society was incorporated with the present college, at the instance of the lady Margaret, countess of Derby, who endowed it liberally for the maintenance of a master and twelve fellows. The buildings of Christ's college consist of a principal court, a quadrangle 138 feet by 120, and a second court built on two sides, that next the garden and fields being an elegant and uniform pile of stone 150 feet long. The chapel, 84 feet in length, is floored with marble, and has in the window towards the east portraits of Henry VII. and others of the family of the foundress. Within the rails of the altar is the gravestone of Dr. Ralph Cudworth, author of the Intellectual System, and master of this college. The garden contains a large mulberry tree planted by John Milton, when he was a student here. Among the eminent men who have been members or students at this college besides Milton, are the poets John Cleland and Francis Quarles, Leland the antiquary, Dr. Joseph Mede, Dr. Laurence Echard the historian, Sanderson the mathematician, and Archdeacon Paley.—This foundation is for divinity, and the fellows are required to take priests orders within twelve months after they have attained the proper age. Some objections having been made to the number, Edward VI. added another fellow, who shares in emolument with those on the original foundation. He may be of any county, and is not obliged to take holy orders. Sir John Finch and Sir Thomas Baines founded two more fellowships, unappropriated as to county, but with preference to the kindred of the founders. These may be held by laymen, and the revenues are independent of the college. The scholarships are forty-seven, of twelve shillings a-week during residence, not more than three of the same county being eligible; also six to students from Giggleswick school, Yorkshire; one to Upton school, Hants; one to Brentwood, Maldon, or Chelmsford school, Essex; one each to natives of Newmarket and Huntingdon; one each to Durham, Suffolk, and Bedford men; three to Norfolk men; four of £12 each per annum, to Buntingford grammar-school, and six open to all schools and all counties.

St. John's college.—St. John's college was founded by the executors of Margaret, countess of Richmond and Derby, in 1511. The buildings of St. John's college, which are mostly of brick, form four courts. The first and most ancient is about 228 feet by 216. It is entered from the street by a handsome gateway, surmounted by turrets coeval with the foundation. The second is about 270 feet by 240. It was built by the benefaction of Mary, countess of Shrewsbury, is very handsome, and appropriated principally for the fellows' apartments. The third lies next the river, and is of smaller dimensions than either of the former. The fourth, or new court, consists of a very handsome range of rooms for the students. The chapel, 120 feet long, occupies the north side of the first court. The ancient gallery, nearly 155 feet in length, with a richly ornamented ceiling, is now divided into a suite of rooms containing numerous portraits of benefactors to, and members of, the college. The library, built by Archbishop Williams, occupies the north side of the third court. It is a spacious room, and contains the most extensive and valuable collection of books in the university. During the civil wars, in the time of Charles I., this college was plundered, among other valuable articles, of its communion plate, with a large collection of silver coins and medals.

The outer court was at the same time converted into a prison for the royalists. The spacious gardens and extensive walks belonging to the college, lie on the west side of the river, over which there is a handsome stone bridge of three arches. Among other great names which reflect lustre upon this college, as members or students, are those of Roger Ascham, Sir Thomas Wyatt, Lord Burleigh, Thomas Wentworth, earl of Strafford, Lord Falkland, Bishops Stillingfleet and Beveridge, the critics Wotton and Bentley, the poets Ben Jonson, Ambrose Philips, Prior, Otway, Brome, and Hammond.—There are here 53 fellowships, 32 of which, on the old foundation, were thrown perfectly open to all natives of England and Wales, by letters patent from King George IV. Twenty-one fellowships have been founded by several benefactors, which are all appropriated to particular schools, districts, counties, families, or choirs. At this college there are also 114 scholarships, all of which are unappropriated, excepting 16, founded partly by the duchess of Somerset and partly by the college, which are given to students from the schools of Manchester, Hereford, and Marlborough. There are also here a great number of exhibitions of different value.

Magdalene college.—Magdalene college was begun by Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham, by the name of Buckingham-house, in 1519. Being unfinished at the time of the duke's attainder, it was granted to Thomas, Baron Audley, lord-high-chancellor, who endowed it in the year 1542. The library was bequeathed to this college by Samuel Pepys, Esq., secretary to the admiralty in the reigns of Charles II. and James II.—In this college are 4 foundation fellowships and 11 bye fellowships, open to all counties; also one appropriated to Shrewsbury school, and one travelling fellowship for Norfolk men. There are 38 scholarships belonging to this college, of different value, founded by several benefactors; four of these of £20 per annum each, to men from Shrewsbury school; two of £20 each per annum, to men from Shropshire; two of £40 each, to scholars from Wisbeach school; three of £20 each, to Leeds, Halifax, and Heversham schools; and one of £5 is in the gift of the Haberdashers' company.

Trinity college.—Trinity college occupies the site of seven hostels and two colleges, Michael house and King's hall. The former college, founded in 1324 by Hervey de Stanton, chancellor of the exchequer to Edward II., the latter, in 1337, by Edward III. In 1546, both these colleges were suppressed, and in the same year the magnificent establishment of Trinity college was founded by Henry VIII. The magnificent quadrangle, called King's court, in honour of George IV., who headed a subscription for its erection with a donation of £2,000, was commenced in 1823, and completed in 1825, after designs by Wilkins, at an expense of £40,000. The chapel, the hall, and the master's lodge in the first court, are large and lofty buildings. The latter has, since the time of Elizabeth, been the residence of the sovereign, when the university has been honoured with a royal visit, and the judges always reside there during the assizes. The library in Neville's court is a magnificent room, 200 feet in length, and proportionably lofty. It cost £20,000, collected by subscription, chiefly through the influence and exertions of Dr. Barrow. The collection of books is large and valuable. Among the multitude of illustrious men who have taught or studied at Trinity college, are the names of Bacon, Newton, and Barrow, the poets Cowley, Dryden, Donne, Lee, and Byron.—The fellowships are open to all counties, and all are required to go into priest-orders within seven years after they commence master of arts, excepting two, who are appointed by the master, and are permitted to remain laymen; the one is supposed to study law and the other physic. The scholarships are open to men of any country, excepting three or four, which are appropriated to scholars chosen annually from Westminster school; and one of £37 per annum for a native of Kent and Cambridgeshire, alternately. There are fourteen exhibitions, most of which are under £10 per annum, given by several benefactors. Various donations to the amount of £163 are consolidated and divided amongst the resident sizars, to whom also all noblemen pay two guineas, and fellow commoners one guinea each per quarter. The mastership of Stevenage school in Hertfordshire, and of Uttroter and Stone schools in Staffordshire, are in the presentation of the college.

Emanuel college.—Emanuel college was founded in 1584, by Sir Walter Mildmay, chancellor of the exchequer, and privy councillor to queen Elizabeth. The buildings of this college are the greater part of them modern, and of stone. They form one principal court, 128 feet by 107. The chapel was designed and commenced by Archbishop Sancroft, 1668, and completed the following year. Among eminent members of Emanuel college are the names of Bishops Hall, Bedell, Hurd, and Percy; Matthew Poole, author of the Synopsis Criticorum, Dr. Wallis, and Dr. Farmer.—There are 12 foundation fellowships and one bye fellowship, open to Englishmen of all counties, with the restriction that not more than one of a county be fellow at the same period. Sir Wolstan Dixie, lord mayor of London, a contemporary of the founder, gave lands for the support of two fellows and two scholars, distinct from those of the foundation; these have no vote in the society, nor have they any claim to college livings; the fellowships are in the gift of Sir Wolstan Dixie's heirs, and the candidates must be the founder's kin, or have received their education at Market Bosworth school. The scholarships at this college are, the foundation ones of 11s. 4d. each per annum and 7s. 6d. a-week during residence, they are unrestricted, excepting that not more than three be of the same county at the same time; also five of £25 each per annum, with a preference, ceteris paribus, to the sons of orthodox clergymen; one of £12 per annum, to the best of the former five; ten of £10 each per annum, with preference to men from Oakham and Uppingham schools; one of £16 per annum, with preference to men from Durham and Newcastle schools; two of £12 each per annum, with preference to men from Christ's hospital; four of 4s. a-week, during residence; one of £10, with a preference to a medical student, and many smaller ones.

Sidney-Sussex college.—Sidney Sussex college was, pursuant to the will of Frances Sidney, countess of Sussex, who died in 1588, founded in 1596. Oliver Cromwell was a student at this college: in the master's lodge there is a portrait of him, in crayons, by Cooper, and, in the library, a bust of him, by Bernini, taken from a cast after his death.—Besides the 9 foundation fellowships, there are two by Mr. Peter Blundell, appropriated to his scholars of this college, one to be nominated by the company of Fishmongers. There is a mathematical lectureship of about £140 per annum. Its scholarships are 20 of 7s. each a-week, during residence; two by Mr. Blundell, to men from Tiverton school; and six of £60 each. The exhibitions are four of £13 each per annum, with preference to Oakham and Uppingham schools; two of £40 each per annum, for sons of the clergy, with preference to men from Grantham or Oakham schools; two of £12 each for clergymen's sons.

Downing college.—Downing college was founded by charter, which passed the great seal in the month of September, 1800. The founder, Sir George Downing, Bart., of Gamlingay Park, by will dated 1717, devised his estates in the counties of Cambridge, Bedford, and Suffolk, first to Jacob Garrard Downing, and afterwards to other relatives in succession, failing whom, to found a college in the university of Cambridge, upon a plan to be approved of by the two archbishops and the masters of St. John's college, and Clare hall. In 1764, Sir Jacob died, the other devisees having died before him without issue. After a litigation of 36 years, the charter was obtained, as above stated; after five years more the statutes for the government of the college were framed, and the stipends of the members began shortly after to be paid. The first stone was laid on the 18th of May, 1807, since which the building has proceeded at intervals, at an expense of upwards of £60,000. A portion of the buildings, sufficient for opening the college, being completed, undergraduates were admitted to reside and keep terms in the month of May, 1821. The buildings form a quadrangle in the Grecian style.

CAMDEN-TOWN, a hamlet in the parish of St. Pancras, county of Middlesex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of St. Paul's, intersected by the Regent's canal, and the London and Birmingham railway. It is of recent origin, and takes its name from Marquess Camden, lessee of the prebendal manor of Cantelows on which it is situated, and who has here erected a chapel. There are also chapels for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists: Independent church formed in 1815. There is a National school. Pop. with parish. From Euston-square the railway train is drawn to Camden-town at the rate of 20 miles per hour, up an inclined plane, the largest gradient of which is 1 in 60 and the lowest 1 in 35, by means of an endless rope, worked by a stationary engine of 60 horse power. The rope, which weighs about five tons and cost £400, is attached at Euston-square by men appointed for that purpose, technically called 'bank riders.' On a signal being given, by means of compressed air passing through iron pipes to the engine-house at Camden-town station, the train is set in motion. On arriving there, to the right will be seen the coke-ovens in which about 22 tons of coke are made at one time; the engine-house, capable of holding twenty engines and tenders; the sheds, lately erected, for transacting the carriers' business; the workshops for repairing the waggons, &c.

CAMEL (THE). See ALAN.

CAMEL (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Somerset, union of Yeovil, eastern division, county of Somerset; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Ilchester, on the river Yeo. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £13 8s. 9d.; gross income £300. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. This parish possesses two daily and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 322. Houses 44. Acres 2,100. A. P. £2,324. Poor rates, in 1837, £125.

CAMEL-QUEEN'S, or QUEEN'S CAMEL, a parish in the hund. of Catsash, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east from Ilchester. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £17 16s. 8d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, T. Mildmay. There are three daily schools in this parish. The charities connected with it amount to £11 13s. per annum. Fairs are held on June 1st and October 25th for all sorts of cattle. Pop., in 1801, 584; in 1831, 664. Houses 102. Acres 2,280. A. P. £3,629. Poor rates, in 1837, £267.—“Near this village, by the side of a little river, stands Camalet, a steep mountain of a very difficult ascent; on the top whereof are the plain footsteps of an old decayed camp, and a triple rampire of earth cast up, including 20 acres. The inhabitants call it King Arthur's palace; but that it was really a work of the Romans, is evident from the Roman coins daily dug up there. The hill is a mile in compass at the top, four trenches circling it, and between each of them an earthen wall. On the very top of the hill, as hath been said, is an area of 20 acres or more, where in several places, as Leland observes, might be seen the foundations of walls. And there was much dusky blue stone, which the people of the adjoining villages had in his time carried away. Besides the coins, Stow tells us of a silver horse shoe dug up there in the memory of that age; and Leland describes it in a kind of ecstasy, thus: 'Good Lord, what deep ditches, what high walls, what precipices are here! In short, I look upon it as a very great wonder, both of art and nature!' What the Romans might call it we are altogether ignorant, unless it be that Caer Caemlon, which we meet with in Nennius's Catalogue by a transposition of letters for Camelion: but of that let the learned judge."—[Mag. Brit., vol. iv. p. 804.]

CAMELEY, a parish in the hund. of Chewton, eastern division, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by south of Pensford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 18s. 4d.; gross income £305; nett income £256. Patroness, Lady Hippley. There are three daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 453; in 1831, 658. Houses 115. Acres 1,630. A. P. £3,013. Poor rates, in 1837, £234.

CAMELFORD, a borough and market-town in the parish of Lanteglos, hund. of Lesnewth, union of Camelford, county of Cornwall. It is situated on the banks of the Camel. The parish-church is at Lanteglos, about 1 mile distant; but there was anciently a chapel here. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. The only charter of Camelford is one granted by Charles II. in 1669. A perambulation of the boundaries took place in 1805. The government is vested in a mayor, 8 aldermen, and an indefinite number of freemen. The petty sessions for the county are held here. The market-day is Friday. Fairs are held on Friday after March 10th, May 26th, July 17th, and Wednesday after Michaelmas, for cattle. Camelford returned two members to parliament from the reign of Edward VI. till its recent disfranchisement deprived it 12 or 20 voters of their envied privilege. Its patrons appear to have held it in a peculiar state of subjection. The commissioners on municipal corporations remark, that "the improvement of the town of Camelford has obviously been retarded by the wretched state of its municipal government, and by its political corruption, and already, since the passing of the reform bill, the commencement of a better system is visible." It was at this place that the celebrated battle between King Arthur and his rebellious nephew, Mordred, was fought in the year 543, in which the latter was slain, and the former mortally wounded. Tintagel castle, the reputed birth-place of King Arthur, lies about 5 miles to the north-west of Camelford: see TINTAGEL. Returns with the parish.—The Camelford poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, embracing an area of 80 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 6,943. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £2,865. Expenditure, in 1838, £2,007.

CAMERINGHAM, a parish in the western division of the hund. of Aslaoce, parts of Lindsey, union of Lincoln, county of Lincoln; 7 miles north-north by west of Lincoln, near the post-road. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 5s. 2d.; gross income £140. Patron, Lord Monson. Pop., in 1801, 111, in 1831, 134. Houses 27. Acres 4,450. A. P. £1,737. Poor rates, in 1837, £109.

CAMERTON, a parish in the hund. of Wellow, eastern division, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Bath, intersected by the Somerset coal canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £15 9s. 2d.; gross income £502; nett income £481. Patron, in 1835, John Jarret, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 594; in 1831, 1,326. Houses 231. Acres 2,020. A. P. £2,663. Poor rates, in 1837, £466.

CAMERTON. See RYHILL and CAMERTON.

CAMMERTON, a parish in Allerdale ward, below Darwent, western division, county of Cumberland; 3 miles east-north-east of Workington, on the river Derwent, near St. George's channel. It includes the townships of Cammerton and Seaton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; certified value £15 10s.; gross income £95. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Carlisle. Pop., in 1801, 633; in 1831, 826. Houses 183. Acres 2,880. A. P. £3,178. Poor rates, in 1837, £229. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 71; in 1831, 101. Houses 23. A. P. £751. Poor rates, in 1837, £59.

CAMPDEN-BROAD, a hamlet in the parish of Campden-Chipping, county of Gloucester. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 262. Houses 61. Other returns with the parish.

CAMPDEN-CHIPPING, a market-town and parish in the upper division of the hund. of Kiftsgate, county of Gloucester; 6 miles north-north-west of Moreton, and 27 north-east of Gloucester, and in the vicinity of the Stratford railway. It includes the hamlets of Berrington, Campden-Broad, Wessington, and Combe.—Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester; rated at £20 6s. 8d.; gross income £685. Patron, in 1835, Lord Barham. The church is an elegant Gothic structure, with a tower at the west end 120 feet high. It contains a sumptuous monument to Sir Baptist Hicke. There are places of worship here for the Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists; the Baptist church was formed in 1724. A free grammar-school was founded here in 1487, and endowed by Mr. John Varby. There is also a charity school endowed by James Thynne, Esq., for clothing and instructing 30 girls. There are, besides, three daily and three Sunday schools. An alma-house for six poor old men and six poor old women was also endowed here by Sir Baptist Hicke, first Viscount Campden.—The town is pleasantly situated in a fertile valley on the borders of Worcestershire. It consists principally of one street, nearly a mile in length, towards the centre of which are the court and market-houses. In 1838 there was a flax-mill here, employing 47 hands. Campden is one of the polling-places for the eastern division of the county. It received a charter of incorporation from James I. by which its government was vested in two bailiffs, a steward, 12 capital and 12 inferior burgesses. The charter, however, has been forfeited by neglect. The market-day is Wednesday; and it has four annual fairs, Ash-Wednesday, April 23d, August 5th, and December 10th, for horses, cows, sheep, linen cloth, and stockings; for the manufacture of which last this place was once celebrated. In the 14th century this town became a principal mart for wool, and the residence of many opulent merchants. But after the establishment of the cloth trade in England, and the more general diffusion of the wool-business, Campden was gradually deprived of its consequence; and both the manufactures and merchandise of early days are now nearly lost. Campden church stands on an eminence above the town, in the hamlet of Berrington, said to have received its name from the tumuli, or barrows, raised over the bodies of those who were slain in a great battle, fought here between the Mercians and the West Saxons. To the munificence of the wool-merchants it is probable that this beautiful building owed its erection: several of them are here interred, with brass effigies and memorials. Near the church are some remains of a very magnificent mansion erected by Sir Baptist Hickes early in the 17th century. From an accurate plan and elevation still extant, it appears to have been an edifice in the boldest style of that day. It is reported to have occupied, with its offices, a site of eight acres, and to have been erected at the expense of £29,000. Its destruction was occasioned by the loyal spirit of Baptist Lord Noel, grandson of Sir Baptist, who, during the civil wars, commanded it to be set on fire, that it might not be garrisoned by the parliament's forces, which, he understood, were advancing. —The Coteswold games, in the reigns of James I. and his successor, were celebrated in the neighbourhood of this town. They were instituted by a public-spirited attorney of Barton-on-the-Heath, in Warwickshire, named Robert Dover, and consisted of various manly exercises. The prizes were distributed by the institutor, who, arrayed in a discarded habit of King James's, superintended the games for many years. The meetings were annually held on Whit-Thursday. Ben Jonson, Drayton, and other poets, wrote verses on this festivity, which were collected into one volume, and published under the title of 'Annalia Dubrensis.' These diversions were terminated by the civil wars; but were afterwards renewed and kept up till a recent period, and there is still an annual meeting of young persons at Dovers-hill, an eminence about $\frac{1}{2}$ mile from the town. Pop., in 1801, 1,700; in 1831, 2,038. Houses 419. Acres 4,660. A. P. £1,044. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,086.

CAMPSALL, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, union of Doncaster, west riding of Yorkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Doncaster, and 5 south of the Goole canal. It includes the townships of Askerne, Campsall, Fenwick, Moss, Norton, and Sutton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £16 16s. 8d.; gross income £128. Patron, in 1835, J. and G. C. Yarburgh. There are in this parish three daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 1,441; in 1831, 1,974. Houses 386. Acres 3,930. A. P. £10,626. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,011. —Pop. of the township, in 1801, 317; in 1831, 386. Houses 71. Acres 1,470. A. P. £2,120. Poor rates, in 1837, £187.

CAMPSEA-ASH, a parish in the hund. of Loes, eastern division, union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Woodbridge, and south of the river Alde. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £14 5s.; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, the trustees of the Thelluson property. Pop., in 1801, 327; in 1831, 392. Houses 46. Acres 1,900. A. P. £2,656. Poor rates, in 1837, £293.

CAMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Clifton, union of Biggleswade, county of Bedford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Silsoe, on the river Ivel. Living, a rectory with Shefford, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £11 9s. 7d.; gross income £427; nett income £374. Patron, in 1835, Sir George Osborne, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 316; in 1831, 449. Houses 220. Acres 1,120. A. P. £1,526. Poor rates, in 1837, £310.

CAMROSE, or CAMRHOS, a parish in the hund. of Roose, union of Haverford-west, county of Pembroke; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Haverford-west, on a branch of the river Cleddy. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £6 10s. 5d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £89; gross income £127. Patron, in 1835, H. W. Bowen, Esq. Fairs are held here on February 13th and November 12th for cattle, horses, and sheep. Pop., in 1801, 831; in 1831, 1,259. Houses 235. A. P. £3,617. Poor rates, in 1837, £452.

CANDLESBY, a parish in the Wold division of the wapentake of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Spilsby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 9s. 4d.; gross income £200. Patrons, the master and fellows of Magdalene, Oxford. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 216. Houses 46. Acres 850. A. P. £1,870. Poor rates, in 1837, £148.

CANDLESHOE HUNDRED, in the county of Lincoln. It is divided into the Marsh and Wold divisions. Area 52,040 acres. Houses 1,639. Pop., in 1831, 8,516.

CANDOVER-BROWN, a parish in the hund. of Mainsborough, union of Alresford, Fawley division of the county of Southampton; 5 miles north-north-west of Alresford. Living, a rectory with Woodmancott curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £23 4s. 2d.; gross income £500. Patron, in 1835, Lord Ashburton. Pop., in 1801, 265; in 1831, 284. Houses 39. Acres 1,230. A. P. £1,501. Poor rates, in 1837, £311.

CANDOVER-CHILTON, a parish in the hund. of Mainsborough, union of Alresford, Fawley division of the county of Southampton; 5 miles north of New Alresford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £6 6s. 3d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, Lord Ashburton. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 130. Houses 19. Acres 2,190. A. P. £784. Poor rates, in 1837, £136.

CANDOVER, or PRESTON-CANDOVER, a parish in the hund. of Bermondspit, Basingstoke division and union, county of Southampton; 6 miles north-north-east of New Alresford. Living, with Nutley curacy, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £16; gross income £228. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Winchester. There are four daily and two Sunday schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 442. Houses 97. Acres 3,430. A. P. £2,433. Poor rates, in 1837, £415.

CANEWDON, a parish in the hund. and union of Rochford, southern division, county of Essex; 3 miles north-north-east of Rochford. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £34 1s. 8d.; gross income £507. Patron, the bishop of London. Here are an Independent chapel and an endowed day school. Charities, in 1836, £124 10s. 8d. per annum. Canute the Dane held his court at Canewdon. A fair is held on 24th June, for toys. Pop., in 1831, 675. Houses 78. Acres 2,800. A. P. £6,353. Poor rates, in 1837, £375.

CANFIELD (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Dunmow, northern division, county of Essex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Great Dunmow, on the river Roding. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £13; annual value, according to the parliamentary returns, £62; gross income £140. Patron, in 1835, John M. Wilson, Esq. Here are the remains of a castle belonging to the De Veres. Pop., in 1801, 337; in 1831, 511. Houses 93. Acres 3,070. A. P. £3,636. Poor rates, in 1837, £352.

CANFIELD (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Dunmow, county of Essex; 3 miles south-west of Great Dunmow. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £12 0s. 7½d.; gross income 350; nett income £327. The patrons are the master and fellows of Christ's college, Cambridge. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 277. Houses 52. Acres 1,510. A. P. £1,601. Poor rates, in 1837, £282.

CANFORD MAGNA, a parish in the hund. of Cogdean, Shaston division, union of Poole, county of Dorset; 2 miles east of Wimborne-Minster, on the river Stour. It includes the chapelry of Kingston or Kinson, and the hamlets of Longfleet and Parkston. Living, with Kinson curacy, a vicarage exempt from visitation; rated at £11 9s. 9½d.; gross income £514. Patron, in 1835, Hon. H. W. Ponsonby. Pop., in 1801, 1,894; in 1831, 3,100. Houses 565. Acres 16,870. A. P. £9,037. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,189.

CANN (Sr. RUMBOLD), a parish in the hund. of Sixpenny Handley, Shaston division, union of Shaftesbury, county of Dorset; 1½ mile south-east of Shaftesbury, on the post-road. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £9 2s. 1d.; gross income £196. Patron, in 1835, the earl of Shaftesbury. This parish is now comprised within the boundaries of the burgh of Shaftesbury. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 435. Houses 86. Acres 910. A. P. £3,337. Poor rates, in 1837, £153.

CANNINGS (BISHOPS), a parish in the hund. of Potterne and Cannings, union of Devizes, north division of the county of Wilts; 3 miles north-east of Devizes, in the vicinity of the Kennet and Avon canal. It includes the tything of Chittoe, and the chapelry of St. James. Living, a vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Sarum; rated at £17 19s. 2d.; gross income £398; nett income £351. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Sarum. This parish possesses five daily and two Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 1,330; in 1831, 3,350. Houses 643. Acres 10,290. A. P. £17,103. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,143.

CANNINGTON HUNDRED, in the county of Somerset, is bounded on the north by Bridgewater bay; on the east by the estuary of the Parret, and hundred of North Bridgewater; on the south by Anderfield hundred and the Quantock hills; and on the west by that range of hills, and the hundreds of Whitley and Williton. Area 25,480 acres. Houses 1,001. Pop., in 1831, 5,695.

CANNINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Cannington, union of Bridgewater, western division of the county of Somerset; 3¼ miles north-west of Bridgewater, south of the Parret river, and in the neighbourhood of the Bristol and Exeter railway. It includes the hamlets of Edstock and Beer.—Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £7 10s. 10d.; by the parliamentary returns at £11 15s. 4d.; gross income £502. Patron, in 1835, Lord Clifford. This parish has four daily and two Sunday schools, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a Benedictine nunnery. There is here a fund of £800 per annum, bequeathed by a Mr. Roger, from which 20 poor receive each £6 per annum, the remainder goes to the poor generally. Cannington is a place of considerable antiquity. It was formerly the residence of the Cliffords, and is supposed to have been the birth-place of the Fair Rosamond, of ballad-notoriety. Here was a Benedictine nunnery founded by Robert De Courcy, sewer to the empress Maud, in the reign of King Stephen, whose yearly revenues were rated at £39 15s. 8d. Pop., in 1801, 878; in 1831, 1,437. Houses 260. Acres 3,970. A. P. £10,914. Poor rates, in 1838, £718.—Kithill in this neighbourhood has an altitude of 1,067 feet, according to the Trigonometrical survey.

CANNOCK, a parish in the eastern division of the hund. of Cuttlestone, union of Penkridge, county of Stafford; 5 miles south-east of Penkridge, in the neighbourhood of the Stafford canal, and the Birmingham and Liverpool railway. It includes the townships of Cannock, Cannock-Wood, Hednesford and Leacroft, Cheslyn-Hay, Huntington, and Wyrley-Great.—Living, a curacy and peculiar of the dean and chapter of Lichfield, not in charge; annual value by the parliamentary returns £100. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lichfield. There is an independent church here, formed in 1815. There are in this parish five daily schools, one of which is supported by an endowment. Charities connected with it amount to nearly £30 per annum. There are several coal and iron mines here. Cannock has three annual fairs, May 8th, August 24th, and October 18th, for cattle, sheep, horses, and pedlery. Pop., in 1801, 2,143; in 1831, 3,116. Houses 582. Acres 11,970. A. P. £8,088. Poor rates, in 1837, £950. Pop. of the township, in 1821, 766. Poor rates, in 1837, £499.—Castle Ring on the summit of Castle Hill, a circular area of 8 or 10 acres, surrounded by a double trench, occupying three or four acres more, is supposed to have been a British encampment. Near it at Radmore, is a place called the Old Nunnery, where a Cistercian abbey was founded in the reign of Stephen, but which was shortly after transferred to Stoneleigh in Warwickshire. In the vicinity is the celebrated Cannock-chace which stretches from hence to the river Trent, and contains about 25,000 acres.

CANNONBY (CROSS), a parish in Allerdale ward, below Darwent, western division, county of Cumberland; 7 miles north-north-west of Cockermouth, in the vicinity of the Carlisle railway. It includes the townships of Birkby, Cross-Cannonby, Crosby, and the chapelry of Mary-Port. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, of the certified value of £25; gross income £76. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Carlisle. Pop., in 1801, 3,252; in 1831, 4,243. Houses 781. Acres 2,400. A. P. £6,362. Poor rates, in 1837, £863. Pop. of the township, in 1821, 60; in 1831, 59. Houses 11.

CANONS-ASHBY. See ASHBY (CANONS).

CANON-FEE. See CREDITON.

CANON-FROME, a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Ledbury, county of Hereford; 6 miles north-north-west of Ledbury, on the river Frome. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £195. Patron, in 1835, Rev. John Hopton. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 96. Houses 17. Acres 1,040. A. P. £1,457. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

CANON-PION, a parish in the hund. of Grims-worth, union of Weobly, county of Hereford; 4 miles south-west of Weobly. Living, a discharged vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of Hereford. Pop., in 1801, 621; in 1831, 663. Houses 142. Acres 3,730. A. P., including that of West Hope, £3,676. Poor rates, in 1837, £350.

CANSFIELD. See CANTSFIELD.

CANTERBURY,

The metropolitan see of all England, and a city and a county in itself, under the name of the city and the county of the city of Canterbury, but locally situated in the hund. of Bridge and Petham, lathe of St. Augustine, eastern division of the county of Kent; in N. lat. 51° 17', E. long. 1° 15'; 55 miles east-south-east of London, on the river Stour, and 6 miles distant from the port of Whitstable, with which it is connected by a railway. Pop. of the city and precincts, in 1801, 9,000; in 1821, 12,745; in 1831, 14,463. Houses, in 1831, 2,889, of which 2,395 were in the city strictly so called. Acres 3,204. A. P., in 1815, £26,508. Poor rates, in 1837, £7,073.—The limits of the city of Canterbury, previous to the late act for the regulation of municipal corporations, comprised, for municipal purposes, the parishes of All Saints, St. Alphage, St. Andrew, St. Margaret, St. Mary Bredman, St. Mary Magdalen, St. Peter, St. George, St. Mary Bredin, St. Mary Northgate, St. Mildred, and St. Martin, the part of Holy Cross Westgate commonly called Westgate Within, and parts of the parishes of St. Paul's, St. Stephen or Hackington, Nackington, Patricbourne, and of the borough of Fordwich. There were several peculiar precincts and extra-parochial places locally situated within this district, which were not within the jurisdiction or liberties of the city; such as the precincts of the palace, and the cathedral, and others. By the boundary act the above limits were considerably extended. The whole of the borough of Longport, a part of Holy Cross Westgate-Without, parts of the parishes of Thanington and St. Dunstan, and a further part of St. Stephen's parish, together with all the above-mentioned precincts and extra-parochial places, being added for parliamentary purposes. By the recent act above referred to, the parliamentary boundary is also to be taken for municipal purposes. This includes the whole of the city and its suburbs, with the exception of a few houses in the parish of Thanington on the Ashford road, along which the suburbs extend upwards of half-a-mile from the old walls.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—St. Alphage is a rectory, with the vicarage of St. Mary Northgate; rated at £20 13s. 7½d.; gross income £226; nett income £189. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury.—The church of St. Alphage, situated on the west side of Palace-street, is of considerable antiquity, and consists of two aisles, two chancels, and a square tower, with three bells at the west end.—St. Andrew and St. Mary Bredman are united rectories; rated at £22 6s. 8d.; gross income £224. Patrons, the archbishop of Canterbury two turns, and dean and chapter of Canterbury one turn. The church of St. Andrew is a brick structure with one steeple. It consists of two aisles and a chancel, and was built to replace the old church, which stood in the centre of the road,—an act of parliament having been obtained in 1762 for this purpose.—St. Cosmus and Damian in Bleau is a vicarage; gross income £423. Patron, the master of Eastbridge hospital.—St. Dunstan is a vicarage; rated at £5; gross income £121. Patron, the archbishop. The church is an ancient structure, consisting of two aisles, a small chancel at the west end, and two large ones at the east end. It is noted from its being the burial-place of the Roper family. One of the vaults contains the coffin of Margaret Roper, beside which, is the skull of her father, the able but unfortunate Sir Thomas More.—St. George the Martyr and St. Mary Magdalen, are united rectories; rated at £12 7s. 11d.; gross income £170. Patrons, the dean and chapter. St. George's church consists of two chancels and two aisles, and a square tower at the westward, with a narrow turret or steeple. It possesses an illuminated clock.—Holy Cross Westgate, is a vicarage united with the rectory of St. Peter; rated at £16 11s. 0½d.; valued in the parliamentary returns at £120; gross income £181. Patrons, the archbishop and dean and chapter alternately. Holy Cross church consists of three aisles, a chancel, and a square tower.—St. Mary Bredin is a vicarage; rated at £4 1s. 5½d.; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, H. Lee Warner. The church is situated near the Dane-John, and consists of a nave, a chancel, and one aisle. It was erected in the time of the Conqueror.—St. Margaret is a donative rectory; gross income £101. Patron, the archdeacon of Canterbury. The church consists of three chancels and three aisles, with a square tower at the west end.—St. Mildred, All Saints, and St. Mary de Castro, are united rectories; rated at £17 17s. 11d.; gross income £129. Patron, the lord-chancellor. The church of St. Mildred consists of three aisles and three chancels with a square tower. It is a very ancient structure, and exhibits many traces of Roman workmanship.—St. Paul's is a vicarage, with the rectory of St. Martin; rated at £9 18s. 9d.; gross income £365. The church of St. Paul comprises two chancels and two aisles, with a rudely formed square tower.—Besides the above-mentioned churches, there are the following places of worship, viz.: the Independent chapel, in Guildhall-street; the Antipædobaptist chapel, in King-street; Countess of Huntingdon's chapel, in Watling-street; the Catholic chapel, Hales'-place, St. Stephens; the Unitarian Antipædobaptist chapel, Blackfriars; the Wesleyan Methodist chapel, St. Peter's-street; the chapel of the Society of Friends, Canterbury-lane; and the Jewish synagogue, St. Dunstan's.

General description.—This city is pleasantly situated in a valley surrounded by hills, from which flow several fine springs of water; the river Stour runs through it, forming several islands in its branching and meandering course. From whatever point the city is viewed, its appearance is highly picturesque; the eye, wandering in succession over the magnificent central tower of the venerable cathedral,—the ruins of St. Augustine's monastery,—the lesser spires of the churches,—and the western gate of the city,—to the verdant hills surrounding the whole. The city is of an oval shape, and extends, within the walls, about half-a-mile from east to west, and somewhat more from north to south. The wall extends in circumference to about a mile and three quarters. Great improvements have been made in the general appearance of this city within the last few years; it is now well-paved, lighted with gas, and furnished with a good supply of water from the river Stour; and an efficient police has been established. The city stands on nearly the same spot on which it was originally built, as is evident from the remains of antiquity which have been at various periods discovered here. Roman bricks, tessellated pavements, vases, lachrymatories, and personal ornaments, have frequently been found about six to nine feet beneath the surface of the ground. At what period Canterbury was first walled is not certain, but that it was enclosed in the time of the Anglo-Saxons is evident, from mention being made of the wall prior to the Norman conquest. In the reign of Richard I. the city was encircled with a wall and ditch, the space over the river between the postern and the waterlock near Northgate being left open. On the walls were erected 21 turrets, placed at equal distances, five or six of which only are left, and these, together with the walls, are now in a very decayed condition. The walls measured 6 feet in thickness, and were composed of large masses of chalk cemented with a strong mortar, and lined and faced with flint. The ditch that surrounded the walls was originally 150 feet wide; the greater part of it, at the present time, is built upon, or converted into gardens. [See Stapleton and Co.'s Directory.] The arches which carried the wall over the river have been taken down, and of the six gates that formed the principal entrances, only the west gate is standing. It is a noble embattled structure, and consists of a centre flanked by two round towers having their foundations in the bed of the western branch of the Stour. The streets, the principal of which are four in number, intersect each other at right angles. In some parts of the city, particularly in Mercery lane, the ancient La Mercerie, the houses have still the projecting upper stories, and the narrow streets of the 14th century. But these features of the olden time are rapidly disappearing before the progress of modern improvement. The old Checquers inn, noted by the lively and laughter-loving Chaucer as the resort of the pilgrims visiting the shrine of Becket, has been converted into shops and dwelling-houses; and the remains of the house of Sir Thomas More are now used as a store-house for wool. In other parts of the town the houses are modern, handsome, and substantially built. The environs of the city are very pleasant, and the surrounding scenery is agreeably diversified. On the road to the Isle of Thanet, barracks for cavalry, infantry, and artillery, have been erected on an extensive scale. To the south-east is a field containing about 6 acres, called the Dane-John field, from its conical mount said to have been thrown up by the Danes in the siege of the city, in 1011, which has of late years been converted, with part of the old ramparts, forming a broad and beautiful terrace, into a city-mall 1130 feet in length, tastefully laid out in spiral walks and shrubberies and planted with lime trees.—A town-hall was first erected here in 1318, on the site of the present corn-market. The present hall, at the corner of Guildhall-street, was erected in 1439, and re-edified in 1683, and 1697. The front, or principal entrance, is handsome, and consists of a pediment supported by four Corinthian pilasters on a rustic base. The interior consists of a large court-hall, of rather antique appearance; the sides decorated with ancient pikes, matchlocks, and other weapons of defence, which were taken from Lady Wotton's palace at the time of Cromwell. The council-room, which is also the depository of the city-archives, is situated at the north end.—The ruins of St. Augustine's abbey are situated at Longport, in the eastern suburb of the city. It was founded by Augustine soon after his arrival in this country, and was built for him by Ethelbert; the chief object in its foundation being to provide a cemetery or burial place for Augustine and his followers. The ruins which are left, though trifling in extent, still indicate the site of a magnificent foundation. At the east end is a pointed Gothic arch of a window, protected only by the ivy with which it is covered. The west front of this enclosing wall extends about 250 feet, and at each end is a great gate. The Great gate is in the pointed Gothic style, having two towers flanking a pointed arch. It is now a private dwelling. The gate at the north-west end, a more recent structure, is considered the finest specimen of the style of architecture which it represents in England. The lower part is now turned into a brewery!

Trade, &c.—Previously to the dissolution of the religious houses, Canterbury had no trade nor any manufacture except that of relics. It depended entirely upon the number, the zeal, and the liberality of pilgrims who came to worship at the shrine of its patron saint, Thomas à Becket. The depopulation that ensued at the Reformation prepared the city for the reception of the persecuted Walloons and French protestants, who found here a ready reception and a grateful asylum, bringing along with them a useful art, that of silk-weaving. The ingenuity and diligence of these industrious refugees restored in some degree the prosperity of the city, which now became the principal seat of the manufacture of silk in England. The silk-manufacture gave place in its turn to that of cotton and silk; but this branch of trade has entirely ceased. Some trade, however, is still carried on in wool. There are numerous mills on the river, some of them extensive, particularly that called the Abbot's mill, which has been the property of the corporation since the year 1543.—Frequent attempts have been made to improve the navigation of the Stour. In 1825 an act was obtained for making it navigable to Sandwich, and for constructing a canal from that port to a harbour to be formed near Deal. An act was at the same time obtained for the formation of a railway to Whitstable, whence there is water-conveyance to London. This latter scheme led to the abandonment of the former; and the railway was opened in 1830. It runs nearly in a straight line from North Lane to Whitstable, where it terminates at the harbour. There is a tunnel upon it about half-a-mile in length at St. Thomas hill. It is held in 1172 shares of £50 each, and has been let on lease for ten years to a private company. Since it was opened a large portion of the coals and timber, which used to be imported through Faversham, is now imported at Whitstable. See WHITSTABLE.—The markets for all kinds of agricultural produce are well-kept up; and great quantities of hops, wool, and flour, are sent to London. Wednesday and Saturday are the market-days; Wednesday for hops, toll free; but there is a market for provisions every day. The cattle-market has been holden on a spot of ground under the city-wall, in the parish of St. George, from time immemorial. The corn, hop, and seed market is held in a spacious room in the exchange, a large and handsome building erected in 1824. Behind this building is a large area for the daily market for meat and vegetables. There is an annual fair, called Jack and Joan fair, held on October 10th, for hiring of servants, and for cattle and pedlery. The neighbourhood of Canterbury is chiefly planted with hops, which form a great source of wealth to the owners of land, and afford employment to great numbers of the labouring poor, both men and women.

Municipal government.—Henry II. granted this city to the inhabitants at a fee-farm-rent of £60, and empowered them to elect two bailiffs. Henry VI., by charter in the 26th year of his reign, superseded the bailiffs by a mayor, and granted the privilege of choosing a coroner. All preceding charters—which are numerous—were confirmed by Edward IV. who remitted one-fourth of the fee-farm-rent and constituted the city a county of itself. The number of aldermen was limited to 12, and of common-councilmen to 24, by Henry VII. The former charters and privileges were confirmed by James I., who, in the 1st year of his reign, re-incorporated the citizens under the title of 'The mayor and commonalty of the city of Canterbury.' Under these several charters the government was vested in a mayor, recorder, chamberlain, sheriff, 12 aldermen, and 24 common-councilmen, assisted by subordinate officers. By the new municipal act the city has been divided into three wards—Westgate ward, Dane-John ward, and Northgate ward—to each of which six councillors have been assigned, and incorporated under the title of 'The mayor and commonalty of the city of Canterbury.' The revenue of the borough, in 1837, was £7,746; of which £637 arose from rents, £677 from markets and fairs, £2,300 from premiums on leases, and £2,855 from borough rates. The expenditure was £7,140. The freedom of the city is inherited by birth, acquired by servitude, by gift, by marriage with a freeman's daughter, or by a payment of £20 to the corporation. Courts of quarter-session are held for the trial of capital offenders and misdemeanants, in January, April, July, and October. Petty-sessions are held at the Guildhall every Thursday. The mayor's court is but rarely held, nor has it exercised any jurisdiction in civil pleas for nearly forty years past. A court of requests is held, under act of 25^o George II., every Thursday, for the recovery of small debts within the city and liberties. The commissioners are 23 in number, 5 of whom must be members of the town-council, and 14 householders. The number of cases decided in this court, in 1837, was 852. In the sessions-house are held the quarter-sessions for the eastern division of the county, and the petty-sessions on the first Saturday of every month. A king's commission of sewers having jurisdiction over the several limits of East Kent, meet here also four times in the year. The precincts of the cathedral, the archbishop's palace, St. Augustine's abbey, &c., are exempted from its jurisdiction. The sessions-house, common gaol, and house of correction, form an extensive pile within the precincts of the abbey of St. Augustine. The prisoners committed within this borough were formerly confined in the West gate, at the entrance of the city. In 1826 an addition was made to this, to which the new buildings are slightly connected by a bridge. All descriptions of prisoners are sent to this gaol, except those summarily convicted, who are sent to the city-bridewell,—a place of confinement attached to, and within the walls of the workhouse.—The county gaol and house of correction, situated in St. Augustine's, a suburb of the city of Canterbury, was erected in 1808, and is on the radiating plan, with the keeper's house and chapel in the centre. It adjoins the court-house, in which are held the quarter-sessions for East Kent, and is surrounded by a boundary wall 20 feet high. The prison is divided into 9 wards, with day-rooms and airing yards attached, and contains 51 cells, or sleeping apartments. The description of hard labour consists of 4 tread-wheels, which together will hold 42 prisoners, and a crank-mill for grinding corn. At the period when the gaol-commissioners inspected this prison there were very few juvenile offenders. The number of prisoners, in 1836, was 440.—Since the 23d of Edward I. Canterbury has returned two members to parliament. The 40s. freeholders in this city now vote for the county of Kent. The number of electors registered for 1836-7 was 1,835, of whom 1,152 were freemen, and 633 householders.

Archbishopric.—During the time of its occupation by the Romans, Canterbury was visited by the heralds of the cross, and Christianity, such as it then was, found so much acceptance with its inhabitants, that, so early as the 2d century, this city could boast of two Christian churches. Becoming afterwards the metropolis of the Saxon kingdom of Kent, one of these churches was appropriated for the use of Bertha, the Christian queen of Ethelbert, who having, before leaving her native country, France, stipulated for the free exercise of her religion, and brought in her train the bishop of Soissons, had the church consecrated by him in due form, and dedicated to St. Martin. Eager to convert the Britons, and perhaps stimulated by the report of the Bishop of Soissons, Pope Gregory, about this time, sent the missionary Augustine over to England for this purpose. Augustine took up his station with Queen Bertha, at Canterbury, and made a convert of Ethelbert, who, in return for his spiritual services, resigned to him his palace. This the saint converted into a priory for brethren of his own order, and founded besides, in conjunction with Ethelbert, an abbey without the city walls, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. These services to the church Gregory rewarded by investing him with the dignity of archbishop, constituting Canterbury the seat of his see, and from that day to this, it has claimed and enjoyed metropolitan dignity, under a succession of ninety-one archbishops, amongst whom were distinguished for turbulence and ambition

St. Dunstan, Stigand, and the notorious Becket; for fiery zeal in enforcing the practice of ceremonies Lanfranc, Bancroft, and Laud;—and for pre-eminent zeal in the cause of truth and holiness, Thomas Cranmer. Since the erection of the see, 18 archbishops of Canterbury have been canonized, 9 elevated to the dignity of cardinals, 12 appointed lord-chancellors of England, 4 lord-treasurers, 1 lord-chief-justice, and 9 chancellors of the university of Oxford. As metropolitan of all England, the archbishop of Canterbury ranks as first peer of the realm, taking precedence, with the exception of the royal family, of all the nobility and chief officers of state. At coronations, he places the crown upon the sovereign's head; and, wherever the court may be, the king and queen are deemed his parishioners. The bishop of London is his provincial dean, the bishop of Winchester his sub-dean, the bishop of Lincoln his chancellor, and the bishop of Rochester his chaplain. In right of his primacy, he is a privy councillor; and he has the power of conferring degrees in the several faculties of divinity, law, and physic, except within the immediate jurisdiction of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. His province comprehends the sees of 20 suffragan-bishops, and his diocese comprises 258 parishes in the county of Kent, and nearly 100 parishes in that and other counties are in his peculiar jurisdiction; he has, besides, the privilege of nominating the several officers belonging to the ecclesiastical courts over which he presides, and has 149 livings, and 3 prebendal stalls in his gift. The establishment attached to his cathedral, as fixed in the reign of Henry VIII., on the dissolution of the priory of Holy Trinity or Christ-church, consists of a dean, 12 prebendaries, 6 preachers, 6 minor canons, 12 lay clerks, 10 choristers, 2 masters, 50 scholars, and 12 almsmen. The deaneries under the see are ten, namely—Canterbury, Bridge, Charing, Dover, Elham, Lympne, Ospringe, Sandwich, Sittingbourne, Sutton, and Westbere deaneries. The first is in the patronage of the Crown. The ecclesiastical commissioners propose increasing this diocese by additions from those of Rochester and Winchester. At the dissolution, the revenues appertaining to the see, and of Christ-church, amounted to £5,171 16s. 11d. per annum; and in 1834, the gross revenue of the archbishop was £22,216, and that of the dean and chapter, £21,551 yearly. The present establishment was founded by Henry VIII. on the 8th of April, 1541, and consists of a dean and 12 prebendaries, 6 minor canons, 6 preachers, 12 lay-clerks, 10 choristers, 12 almsmen, and other officers. The prebends reside upon the establishment, and the minor canons have residences assigned to them within the precincts. After deducting the stipends allowed to the minor canons, preachers, and others, the dean receives two shares out of the remainder of the revenues (about £15,000) belonging to the dean and chapter, and the prebends each one year. The prebendaries perform in rotation the office of vice-dean, and the service is performed in like manner, each prebend preaching four Sundays in the year. The first, fourth, and sixth prebends are appointed by the archbishop, and the others by the Crown. The preachers are nominated by the archbishop, and their duty is to preach at the cathedral on eleven holidays during the year. The masters of the king's school are appointed by the dean and chapter, as also are the minor canons, whose duty is to assist in the performance of the service at the cathedral. The almsmen are in the appointment of the Crown. An ecclesiastical court is held by the archbishop once in four years. The archdeacon (or, in his absence, his official) holds two visitations annually,—one for the clergy, and the other for the churchwardens. Those parishes without the pale of his jurisdiction are visited by the archbishop's commissary. For the trial of causes relating to fornication, defamation, and disputes connected with church-matters, a court is held, in which surrogates appointed for those purposes preside. The summer-audit commences on the 23d of June, and that in the winter on the 25th of November, annually.

Cathedral.—The cathedral of Canterbury, dedicated to our Saviour, was originally the chapel of the monastery founded by St. Augustine, on the site of the palace of Ethelbert, king of Kent. Having been nearly destroyed by fire in 1080, it was rebuilt by Lanfranc, the first archbishop after the Conquest, who also erected the archbishop's palace, founded and endowed a priory dedicated to St. Gregory, and built the hospitals of St. John and St. Nicholas. In 1174, it was again nearly destroyed by the same element, but speedily restored, and by succeeding archbishops enlarged and enriched into a magnificent and splendid structure, exhibiting, in the highest degree of perfection, specimens in every style of architecture, from the earliest Norman down to the latest English, the whole so skillfully adapted and so ingeniously blended that the best judges find themselves at a loss whether most to admire the justness of its proportions, the correctness of its details, or the richness of its decorations. It is situated in the north part of the city, and covers a great extent of ground. Its form is that of a double cross, with an elegant tower 235 feet in height, in the later style of English architecture, with a pierced parapet and pinnacles, and having octagonal turrets at the angles, terminating in minarets rising from the intersection of the nave and the western transepts. At the west end are two massive towers, both, though they are somewhat different, in the Norman style. That on the south-west is crowned with battlements, and is little inferior to the central tower. The northern tower at this end is at present rebuilding. There is a narrow entrance between the western towers through a sharply pointed arch with deeply receding mouldings, surmounted by canopied niches, over which is a lofty window of six lights, filled with richly stained glass. The principal entrance is by the south-west porch, a highly enriched specimen of the later style of English architecture, and profusely ornamented with niches of elegant design. The roof is groined with numerous shields at the intersections of the ribs. The nave, with the western transepts, also in the later style, are peculiarly fine. The eastern part derives a peculiar grandeur from the numerous avenues which lead from it to the different chapels in the interior. Among these the chapel of Henry IV. is conspicuous for the elegant simplicity of its design. The lady-chapel, separated from the eastern side of the transept by a stone screen richly carved, is small but exquisitely beautiful. Behind the great altar is the chapel of the Holy Trinity, in which was the gorgeous shrine of Thomas à Becket, and around which the pavement is worn into hollows by the knees of the myriad hosts of devout pilgrims, that for so many ages frequented it. It contains the episcopal chair composed of three pieces of grey marble, with many interesting monuments erected to the memory of eminent individuals. The choir is entered from the nave, from which it is separated by a stone screen of most exquisite workmanship, by a triple flight of steps. The roof, plainly groined, is supported on slender shafted columns alternately circular and octagonal, with highly enriched capitals of various design. This part of the structure is in the early English intermixed with the Norman style, which prevails also in the triforium and in the eastern transept. The archbishop's throne on the south side of the choir, and the stalls of the dean and prebendaries, from their striking elegance command universal admiration. The new altar-piece, erected with the Caen stone of St. Augustine's monastery, was designed by Sir James Burroughs; it is of the Corinthian order and very lofty, with a handsome pediment supported on fluted columns. The whole length of the cathedral from east to west is 514 feet within the walls. The length of the choir, by far the most spacious in the kingdom, is 180 feet. The length of the eastern transept is 154, and the length of the western 124 feet. The breadth, including the aisles, is 71, and the height of the vaulted roof 80 feet. Beneath, occupying the whole extent of the building, is a spacious crypt, the several parts of which correspond with the cathedral. The western part is in the Norman, and the eastern in the early style of English architecture. Its vaulted roof, 14 feet in height, is supported on massive pillars, here and there sculptured with foliage and grotesque ornaments, but the prevailing character of which is simplicity and strength. This crypt was granted by Queen Elizabeth for a place of worship to the Walloons and the French refugees. It is still occupied by their descendants, and the service conducted in the French language, whence it has the name of the French church. The precincts of the cathedral comprehend an area three-quarters of a mile in circumference. The library on the north side contains a valuable collection of books with a series of Grecian and Roman coins. The chapter-house, a large and elegant building, contains a hall 92 feet in length, 37 in breadth, and 54 in height. Along the sides are stone seats anciently used by the monks.

Schools, &c.—The king's free grammar-school was founded by Henry VIII. for the education of 50 scholars from all parts of the kingdom. The management of this seminary is vested in the dean and chapter. It possesses a number of scholarships and exhibitions in the university of Cambridge. The blue-coat school was founded by the mayor and commonalty out of a gift by Queen Elizabeth of an hospital with the lands belonging to it. In it 16 boys are clothed, maintained, and instructed in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and on leaving school, apprenticed with premiums. They are nominated by the mayor and commonalty.—The grey-coat school, at which 30 boys and 30 girls are educated, is principally supported by the dean and chapter.—Two schools on Dr. Bell's plan, for children of both sexes, have been united to the National school society. The scholars are upwards of 400.—There are besides these, several Sunday schools, and small bequests for the education of poor children through the various parishes, which it would be tedious to enumerate.—Of the various hospitals, that of Eastbridge, founded by Archbishop Lanfranc, for the entertainment of pilgrims, is the principal. It consists of a master, and 10 brothers, and 10 sisters. The in-residents receive £25 per annum, and the out-residents £3 per annum each. A school for 20 children is annexed to this hospital.—Jesus' hospital was founded in 1595 by Sir John Boys, city-recorder, for a warder 9 brothers and 4 sisters, above 55 years of age, who receive each the fixed sum of £20, with a considerable amount of surplus money. The funds of this hospital amount to £584 per annum. A school for four boys is attached to it.—St. John's hospital was founded it is supposed by Archbishop Lanfranc, who endowed it with £70 per annum, for 60 poor, infirm, lame, and blind men and women. Its revenue, at the time of the dissolution, was £93 15s. 0d. It is now £411. The archbishop has the exclusive patronage.—Maynard's and Cotton's hospital, consisting of 10 dwellings under one roof, has an income of £306.

Alms-houses are numerous in this city. Cogan's was founded in 1657, by John Cogan, who gave his mansion in trust to the corporation to be the residence of six clergymen's widows. To this there have been numerous benefactions, and each widow receives an annual stipend of £35. The annual income arising from the several charities in Canterbury which are under the control of trustees, is £917.—The infirmary, called the Kent and Canterbury infirmary, is liberally supported by annual subscriptions. It is built on a part of the ancient cemetery of St. Augustine's abbey, and can accommodate about 200 patients. A dispensary was established in 1836. Canterbury gives the title of baron to the Right Hon. Charles Manners Sutton, late speaker of the house of commons, and son of Dr. Sutton, the predecessor of the present archbishop of Canterbury. He was created a baron in 1835.

History.—The origin of this city is far beyond the era of authentic British history, has even dropped from the tongue of Tradition, and credulous Conjecture has groped after it in vain. Most probably it was a seat of superstition, and a principal scene of Druidic barbarity, long before the era of Christianity. It was made a principal station by the Romans, and under the Saxons it became the metropolis of the kingdom of Kent, under the name of Caer-cant, whence Cantuaria and Canterbury. "Our historians assure us, that when Hengist and Horsa, the first Saxon leaders, came over, Vortiger, who was then king of the Britons, resided and entertained them here; and though, soon after, Vortiger was forced to resign his palace to these his encroaching guests, this city lost not its prerogative to be the residence of kings, for Hengist kept his court here, as did also his successors, till King Ethelbert becoming a convert to the Christian religion, by the preaching of Augustine the monk, gave him not only his palace, and built himself another at Reculver; but the royalty of the city, and its territories, which, when Augustine was created an archbishop by Pope Gregory I. he made it the seat of himself and successors; and that he might heap on him as great honour as his labours deserved, the same pope removed the archiepiscopal dignity from London, the greater city at that time, to Canterbury; and the succeeding popes confirmed this settlement with such dreadful anathemas on such as should remove it, that it has in a manner continued there ever since. Kenulf, king of Mercia, seems to affirm, that the archiepiscopal see was settled here by parliament, i. e. all the wise men of the nation, who thought it most just that that city should have the metropolitan honour, where the body of St. Augustine, of blessed memory, was buried, because he had there first preached the gospel to them, and presided over all the Saxon churches. Whether this were so or not we inquire not; however it was, this city much flourished ever after; and though it was greatly shattered in the Saxon and Danish wars, and several times almost quite destroyed by fire, yet it rose again with greater beauty, and in the conqueror's time, when his great survey, called Domesday-book, was taken, it was in this condition: 'In the city of Canterbury, King Edward the confessor had 51 burgesses, (i. e. free-traders, licensed by the king, who were to pay him a certain gablum, or rent, yearly,) and 212 others, under his privilege and jurisdiction, of 40s. rent. Now the burgesses paying rent are but 19, for of the other 32, 11 in the city ditch are wasted; the archbishop has 7, and the abbot of St. Augustine 14, in exchange for the castle. There are yet 212 burgesses under the king's privilege and jurisdiction, and three mills, paying rent 108s. In the time of King Edward, the whole was worth £51, but now the tenant pays £30 of money, refined and weighed, and £24 of money by tale. Over and above all these, the sheriff has 110s., through the whole city the king has jurisdiction and protection-money, except the lands of the churches of the Holy Trinity and St. Augustine, and of Queen Edwige, Arnold Cild, Ester Biga, and Siret de Cilleham. The archbishop lays claim to forfeitures made in the public ways without the city, where his lands lie on both sides; but the king to all the rest, to the distance of 1 league, 3 perches, and 3 foot.' By this account from Domesday-book, it appears that the jurisdiction of the king and archbishop lay intermixed; and though this later had some considerable privileges, as a mint, &c. and rents; yet the king had the supreme royalty, till William Rufus, (according to the register of St. Augustine's Abbey,) dedit civitatem Cantuarie, &c.; i. e. gave the city of Canterbury to Archbishop Anselm wholly and entirely, which Archbishop Lanfranc held before, out of courtesy only. As to the corporation, it is beyond all question that it had always a special and distinct magistrate to preside over it, and govern it, though in different times and reigns called by different names. We know nothing in the times of the Britons, because we have no records to inform us; but in the Saxon days he was called a prefect; for A. 780, we read of one Aldhune, hujus civitatis prefectus, in certain charters belonging to Christ's-church in Canterbury. Afterwards his name was changed into Portgrove, as we find in a deed of sale, A. 956, among the witnesses Hlothewig, Portgeres; but this title did not hold long, for anno 1011, we find, that Alword or Alfred, the præpositus regis, i. e. king's provost of Canterbury, was one of the persons of quality that were taken prisoners by the Danes, in the reign of King Ethelred, when those barbarians slew Archbishop Alphege, many monks, townsmen and others, to the number of 42,200. This provost continued single for a time, and was then doubled. King Henry III. at his coming to full age, granted to the citizens of this city sundry liberties, and ordaining their government under two bailiffs, made them his fee-farmers, under a reserved rent of £60 per annum, and allowed them to choose their own bailiffs, who ruled the city for many successions, but were at length changed into a mayor and aldermen, 26 Henry VI. as it now stands. After this, this city grew into a very flourishing state, partly by the liberality and expense of such superstitiously devout persons, who came from all parts to visit Archbishop Thomas Becket's shrine, (whom they called St. Thomas,) and partly by the continual passage of travellers, who went to the sea-side about their private affairs and business; but chiefly by the residence, hospitality, and munificence of the archbishops, who were great benefactors to it; for Theodore, the 7th archbishop, founded a school, or college, and placed in it professors of the liberal sciences, and Archbishop Lanfranc did much to the reparations of the wall, which it is probable was built by the Britons, but had been ruined and demolished in many places by the Danes, and other enemies. But the chief benefactor to this city was Simon Sudbury, the archbishop, who built the western gate of this city, and the long wall, as far as the north gate, and was purposed to have encompassed the whole city, if he had lived; however, the town itself seeing the necessity of that work, went on with it and completed it, and the succeeding archbishops so assisted and encouraged the citizens, that Canterbury did not only recruit, but rose up to that splendour, as even, for the beauty of its private dwellings, to equal most of the cities of Britain, and for the magnificence of its churches, and their number, to exceed them." [Mag.

Brit. vol. ii. pp. 1144, 1145.] The jubilees which, by the allowance of the pope, were here celebrated every fiftieth year in honour of Thomas à Becket, were every one of them sufficient for enriching an entire generation of the inhabitants. The last of these was celebrated in 1520. The dissolution of the priory of Christ-church was shortly after this period effected,—the festivals in honour of the martyr abolished,—his gorgeous shrine stripped of its costly ornaments, which Henry wisely appropriated to his own use,—and the bones of the saint himself burnt and scattered to the winds. The arrival of the emigrant Walloons, who established silk-weaving here, gave a sound impulse to the prosperity of the place. Charles I. solemnized his marriage with Henrietta Maria of France in this city, in 1625. During the war between that monarch and the parliament, this city was occupied by a regiment of Cromwell's horse. Charles II., on his return from France, held his court for three days in the royal palace of Canterbury. The same monarch, in 1676, granted a charter of incorporation to the refugee silk-weavers established here.

CANTLEY, a parish in the hund. and union of Blofield, county of Norfolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south west of Acle, on the north of the river Yare. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £14; gross income £205. The patron, in 1835, was W. A. Gilbert, Esq. There is a daily school in this parish with about 27 children. Pop., in 1801, 247; in 1831, 265. Houses 38. Acres 2,970. A. P. £2,048. Poor rates, in 1837, £157.

CANTLEY, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Doncaster, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-east of Doncaster, near the river Idle, on the Great north road. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £6 6s. 5d.; gross income £233. Tithes of the townships of Cantley, Brampton, Bessacarr, and High Ellers commuted under 17th Geo. III. c. 141. The patron, in 1835, was J. W. Childers, Esq. There is a day and Sunday National school here. Pop., in 1801, 500; in 1831, 634. Houses 127. Acres 5,160. A. P. £6,248. Poor rates, in 1837, £173.

CANTREFF, a parish in the hund. of Penkelly, or Pen-celle, union of Brecknock, county of Brecon, South Wales; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Brecknock, near the river Usk. The range of hills called the Brecknock-beacons runs through this parish. It includes the chapelry of Nantddu. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £9 10s. 7d.; gross income £127. The church is romantically situated on the banks of the Cynnyg. The patron, in 1835, was Gabriel Powel, Esq. of Swansea, who inherits it from the Aubreys, to whom it was granted upon the attainder of the duke of Buckingham, the original patron. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 192. Houses 43. A. P. £1,467. Poor rates, in 1837, £112.

CANTSFIELD, or CANSFIELD, a township in the parish of Tunstall, county of Lancaster. It is $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Kirkby-Lonsdale; near the river Lune. Pop., in 1801, 138; in 1831, 88. Houses 19. Acres 1,560. A. P. £1,674.

CANVEY-ISLAND, a chapelry belonging to nine several parishes, but principally connected with South Bemflett, in the county of Essex; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Leigh, and 30 miles from London. It is opposite the Hope, and encircled by a branch of the Thames, which is here 2 miles wide: the strand is passable at low water by a causeway. It contains about 3,600 acres of marshy land. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; gross income £58. Patron, the bishop of London. The inhabitants, amounting to about 200, are mostly fishermen. It has an annual fair, June 25th, for toys.

CANWELL, an extra-parochial liberty in the south division of the hund. of Offlow, county of Stafford; in the neighbourhood of the Fazeley canal. Geva, daughter of Hugh earl of Chester, and widow of Jeffry Ridell, about the year 1142, founded here a priory for monks of the order of St. Benedict. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 24. Houses 4. Acres 260. A. P. £396. Poor rates, in 1837, £28.

CANWICK, a parish in the union of Lincoln, county of the city of Lincoln; 2 miles south-south-east of Lincoln, near the river Brant. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £231. Tithes commuted in 1786. Patrons, the master and wardens of the Mercers' company, London. There is a daily school here. Canwick-common is now included within the boundaries of the city of Lincoln. Pop., in 1801, 215; in 1831, 201. Houses 33. Poor rates, in 1837, £147.

CAPEL, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Wotton, union of Dorking, county of Surrey; 6 miles south of Dorking. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, not in charge; annual value by the parliamentary returns £50; gross income £84. Patron, in 1835, the duke of Norfolk. There are two daily schools in this parish, one of which was built in 1819 by Robert Barclay, Esq., and endowed with £50. Pop., in 1801, 675; in 1831, 915. Houses 119. Acres 4,990. A. P. £3,329. Poor rates, in 1837, £796.

CAPEL (ST. ANDREW), a parish in the hund. of Wilford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 7 miles south-east of Woodbridge, and west of the river Butley. Living, a curacy annexed to Butley. Pop., in 1801, 162; in 1831, 190. There is a daily school here. Houses 23. Acres 2,400. A. P. £1,121. Poor rates, in 1837, £104.

CAPEL-CURRIG, a chapelry and hamlet in the parish of Llandegai and hund. of Uchaf, county of Carnarvon, on the banks of the river Llugwy, and at the foot of Snowdon. It is a most romantic district interspersed with lakes and fishing streams. Living, a chapelry not in charge, to the rectories of Llandegai and Llanllechid, in the archd. and dio. of Bangor; gross income £89. Patron, in 1835, the bishop of Bangor. The chapel is a very small one. It is one of the polling-places in the election of a member for the county. Copper and lead are found in this neighbourhood, but the mines are wrought upon a small scale. An annual sheep-fair is held here on the 28th of September.

CAPEL-CYNOG, a chapelry in the parish of Llandisiliogoge, county of Cardigan. Fairs are held here on Ascension-day, Thursday after St. Michael, September 29th, for cattle, horses, sheep, &c.

CAPEL-VOELAS, properly PENTRE-VOELAS, or TYB-YR-ABBOT, a parish in the hund. of Isaled, union of Llanrwst, county of Denbigh, North Wales; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Llanrwst, on the river Conway. Though it stands high it is central, the parliamentary road being here intersected by a new line of turnpike road from Denbigh passing into the counties of Carnarvon and Merioneth. Living, a curacy, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; valued in the diocesan report at £60. There is a daily school here containing 52 pupils. Pop., in 1801, 436; in 1831, 616. Houses 119. A. P. £2,288. Poor rates, in 1837, £324.

CAPEL-GARMON, or GARTHEARMON and TYBRITH UCHAF, a parochial chapelry in the hund. of Isdulas and county of Denbigh; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Llanrwst. Living, a chapelry, not in charge, to the rectory of Llanrwst, in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph's; gross income £110. There is an Independent chapel here; the church was formed in 1822. Pop., in 1821, 709. Other returns with the parish of Llanrwst.

CAPESTHORNE, a chapelry in the parish of Prestbury, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles south-west of Macclesfield. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge; annual value by the parliamentary returns £72; gross income £76. Patron, in 1835, D. Davenport, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 72. Houses 12. Acres 960. A. P. £972. Poor rates, in 1837, £52.

CAPHEATON, a township forming the southern and smaller division of the parish of Kirk-Whelpington, Northumberland; 4 miles north-east of Hexham. There are two daily schools here. The village consists of a long row of neat-looking cottages. This manor was in possession of the Swinburns as early as the 12th Henry VI. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 232. Houses 42. Poor rates, in 1837, £52.

CAPLE, or CAPEL, a parish in the hund. of Washlington, lathe of Aylesford, extending into the lowey and union of Tonbridge, Kent; 3 miles south-east of Tonbridge, near the South-eastern railway. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Tudely, in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, not in charge; gross income £388. Patron, in 1835, the Baroness de Despenier. This parish possesses a daily and a day and Sunday National school. Pop., in 1801, 314; in 1831, 399. Houses 48. Acres 1,630. A. P. £1,813. Poor rates, in 1837, £363.

CAPENHURST, a township in the parish of Shotwick, hund. of Wirrall, co.-palatine of Chester; 6 miles north-north-west of Chester; near the Chester and Birmingham railway. Pop., in 1801, 147; in 1831, 159. Houses 28. Acres 1,130. A. P. £1,339. Poor rates, in 1837, £113.

CARBROOKE, a parish in the hund. and union of Wayland, county of Norfolk; 2 miles north-north-west of Watton, near the Wissey river. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 12s. 6d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £37; gross income £113. Patron, in 1835, Sir William Clayton, Bart. Here was a commandery of knights templars, founded by Roger, earl of Clare, about the middle of the 12th century. At the dissolution it was valued at £65 2s. 9¹/₂d. per annum. There are three daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 536; in 1831, 789. Houses 152. Acres 3,020. A. P. £5,230. Poor rates, in 1837, £420.

CARBURTON, a chapelry in the parish of Edwinstow, county of Nottingham; 4 miles south-south-east of Worksop. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 122; in 1831, 143. Houses 28. A. P. £778. Poor rates, in 1837, £107.

CAR-COLSTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Bingham, union of Bingham, county of Nottingham; 8 miles south of Southwell, in the vicinity of the river Trent. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 1s. 10¹/₂d.; annual value in the parliamentary returns at £96; gross income £203. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Harmerie. There is a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 249. Houses 52. Acres 1,200. A. P. £2,365. Poor rates, in 1837, £106.

CARDEN, a township in the parish of Tilston, higher division of the hund. of Broxton, co.-palatine of Chester; 4¹/₂ miles north-north-west of Malpas. Pop., in 1801, 124; in 1831, 207. Houses 39. Acres 730. A. P. £1,200. Poor rates, in 1837, £55.

CARDESTON WITH WATTLESBOROUGH,

a parish in the hund. of Ford, union of Atcham, county of Salop; 6¹/₂ miles west of Shrewsbury, on a branch of the river Severn. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £3; gross income £321. Patron, in 1835, Sir B. Leighton, Bart. There is a day and Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 314. Houses 59. Acres 1,980. A. P. £1,073. Poor rates, in 1837, £122.

CARDIFF, CAERDIFF, or CAERDYDD, a borough and town having separate jurisdiction, situated in the hund. of Kibbor, union of Cardiff, county of Glamorgan; 160 miles west of London, intersected by the Pennarth and Merthyr-Tydvil canal. The parliamentary and municipal boundaries are co-extensive, and extend nearly 3 miles from north to south, and upwards of a mile from east to west.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—It is divided into two parishes,—St. Mary's and St. John's. The livings of both are discharged and united vicarages in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated, St. Mary's, at £4 5s. 10d., St. John's at £13 14s. 10d.; annual value united, by the parliamentary returns, £130; gross income £272. The patrons are the dean and chapter of Gloucester. The spire of the church of St. John's, a lofty tower of light appearance and elegant workmanship, having open corners and lantern pinnacles, forms a beautiful feature in the general aspect of the town, especially if viewed at a little distance. Its other church, that of St. Mary, was carried away by the Taff in the great inundation in 1607, and has never been restored. There are places of worship here for Independents and Baptists; the Independent church was formed in 1828, the Baptist in 1806. There is a small endowment for a free school in the parish of St. John. There were 10 day-schools here in 1834.

Government, &c.—Cardiff lies on the eastern bank of the Taff, over which there is a handsome bridge of five arches leading to Swansea. The principal streets are paved, and lighted with gas, and possess several respectable houses and shops. It is the capital of the county, and joins with Cowbridge and Llan-Trisant in returning one member to parliament. In 1832 the parliamentary constituency of Cardiff and its contributory boroughs, was 687; in 1837, 590. Of this last number 153 freemen, and 168 householders, or 321 in all, belonged to Cardiff. The returning officer is the mayor. Numerous charters have been granted to this borough by different kings of England, and are in possession of the corporation, which formerly consisted of a steward, constable of the castle, 2 bailiffs, 12 aldermen, and office-bearers; but, by the new municipal act, is composed of 2 bailiffs, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors. The income of the borough, in 1837, was £1,313, of which £803 arose from market-dues, but £300 was borrowed for extraordinary repairs. A court of record is held here every Thursday for the recovery of debts; and the assizes for the county are held here in April and August. Petty-sessions are held every Monday and Thursday. Cardiff county-gaol and house-of-correction stands apart from other buildings at a convenient distance from the town. It is a modern edifice, being opened in 1832, and cost about £12,000 in erection. It comprises 43 cells, 12 wards, and 14 day and work-rooms, with 12 airing courts. The tread-wheel labour, to which the inmates are subjected, is applied to the pumping of water and the turning of a fly-regulator. The number of prisoners, in 1836, was 210.

Trade, &c.—The town is thriving, and has a considerable trade. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday, and the markets are in general well-supplied. Fairs are held on the 2d Wednesday in March, April, and May, June 29th, September 19th, and November 30th; all of them for cattle. Cardiff has branches of the following joint-stock banks: viz., the National Provincial bank of England, the North and South Wales bank, the West of England and South Wales District bank, and the Mounmouthshire and Glamorganshire banking company. The export trade is principally carried on with the port of Bristol; and consists of iron, tin, oats, barley, butter, and poultry. By means of the canal from Pennarth to Merthyr-Tydvil, Cardiff has become the connecting link between the extensive iron-works carried on there and the English market. It is in fact the port of Merthyr-Tydvil. In 1832 the number of vessels entering the port was 2,482, and the tonnage 183,480. A railroad from Cardiff to Merthyr was opened on 21st April, 1841; and steam-packets now run between Cardiff and Uphill, on the line of the Bristol and Exeter railway, so that the whole distance, between Bristol and Cardiff, may now be accomplished in two hours.

Bute Ship-canal.—The Taff, which falls into the sea at Cardiff, forms a principal outlet for the mining-districts of Glamorganshire; the produce of these mines has hitherto found its way to market through the Glamorganshire canal; but its sea-lock, constructed about forty years ago, has long been found inadequate to the demands for increased accommodation, consequent upon the extraordinary increase of trade since the canal was opened, some idea of which may be formed from the fact, that according to the Canal company's report, 123,234 tons of iron, and 226,671 tons of coal, passed down in 1837, making a total of 349,905 tons, or about 1,000 tons per day. The Marquis of Bute possessing lands in the neighbourhood of Cardiff, and especially an extensive tract called Cardiff moors, where docks, wharfs, and warehouses, might be constructed to any extent, and a convenient outlet made into the well-known safe roadstead protected by the headland of Pennarth, obtained in 1830, an act for constructing a new harbour, to be called 'The Bute Ship-canal,' and has completed this great work at his individual expense. The principal advantages of the undertaking are as follow:—A straight open channel north-north-east and south-south-west, about three-fourths of a mile in length from Cardiff roads to the new sea-gates, which are 45 feet wide, with a depth of 17 feet water at neap, and 32 feet at spring tide. On passing the sea-gate, vessels enter a capacious basin, having an area of about an acre and a half, called the outer basin, calculated to accommodate vessels of great burden and steamers; the main entrance lock is situated at the north end of this outer basin, 152 feet long, and 36 feet wide, sufficient for ships of 600 tons. Beyond the lock is the inner basin, which constitutes the grand feature of this work. It extends in a continuous line from the lock to near the town of Cardiff, 1,450 yards long, and 200 feet wide, an area of nearly 20 acres of water, capable of accommodating in perfect safety from 300 to 400 ships of all classes. Quays are built on each side for more than two-thirds of its length, finished with strong granite coping, comprising nearly 6,000 feet, or more than a mile of wharfs, with ample space for warehouses, exclusive of the wharfs at the outer basin. To keep the channel free of deposit, a feeder from the river Taff supplies a reservoir 15 acres in extent adjoining the basin. This reservoir can be discharged at low water by means of powerful sluices, with cast-iron pipes five feet in diameter, and by ten sluices at the sea-gates, so as to deliver at the rate of 100,000 tons of water per hour. The feeder was commenced in 1834, the first stone of the docks laid on the 16th of March, 1837, and the last coping-stone laid on the 25th of May, 1839. Some doubts existed whether sufficient water could be supplied to keep the channel clear; but experience has already shown that the daily discharge is more than adequate to the removal of the daily deposit, and in fact a considerable portion of the entrance was cleared by loosening the clay and mud, so as to be carried out by the power of the sluices. Some idea of the vastness of this undertaking may be formed from the fact of its having already cost the noble marquis about £300,000; and an additional expenditure of considerable amount will be incurred in the erection of warehouses, &c., along the quays.

Castle and Antiquities.—The castle, which stands insulated on a high mound of earth, in the midst of a large area, but was rapidly going to decay, by the carrying away of the stones for building houses in the town, has been gracefully restored by the proprietor, the Marquis of Bute, and retains much of its original grandeur. It was in a dungeon near the entrance to this anciently strong castle, or according to others, in one of the towers of the castle itself, that Robert, duke of Normandy, was confined for 26 years by his brother, Henry I., who had previously usurped his throne, and deprived him of his eyesight. During the civil war, in the reign of Charles I., this castle stood a bombardment of three successive days, and was yielded at last only in consequence of the treachery of some of the persons composing the garrison.—There was a priory founded here by the first earl of Gloucester, who died in the year 1147. It had also a priory of Benedictine and Black monks. A house of Black friars stood west out the west gate, and a house of Grey friars Crockerton-street, under the wardenship of Bristol. From the mound, on the summit of which are the ruins of the ancient keep, is obtained a most extensive and delightful prospect of the town and the surrounding country.

Population, Rates, &c.—Pop., in 1801, 1,870; 1831, 6,137. Houses 1,191. A. P. £9,086. Rates, in 1837, £1,729.—A work-house has been erected here for the union of Cardiff by the poor-law commissioners. The Cardiff poor-law union comprehends 44 parishes, with a population returned in 1831, at 24,997. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three preceding the formation of the union, was £11,000. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,613.

CARDIGANSHIRE,

A maritime county of South Wales, bounded by counties of Montgomery and Merioneth on the north; by Radnor and Brecon on the east; by Carmarthen the south; and on the west by the Irish sea. It is about 45 miles in length, and 35 in breadth, and contains an area of 67 square miles. It is divided into five hundreds, and according to the last parliamentary returns, viz. 1831, 64 parishes. It is a diocese of St. David's.

Physical features.—The northern and eastern districts are mountainous, with fertile valleys interspersed; towards the south and west the surface is level, and the soil productive. In the north-east of the county rises Plinlimmon, altitude 2,463 feet. See PLINLIMMON. The next mountain in elevation is Tregaron-Down, which has an altitude of 1,400 feet. In the vales the predominating soil is a rich but yielding, by the application of lime, rich both of grain and grass; on the higher grounds a sandy loam, and the mountains are composed of clay slate.—The principal rivers are the Teivy, by which it is separated from the county of Pembroke and Carmarthen; the Dovy, which div

oy
h
t

it from Merioneth; the Ridol, the Ystwith, Aeron, Arth, Towy, and Cledon; besides innumerable rivulets which, having their sources among the mountains, are often swollen into dangerous and impassable torrents. See articles AERON, ARTH, DOVY, and TEIFI.

Productions.—The agricultural produce of this county is comparatively trifling; little more than a third of the surface is arable, and corn has often to be imported from other counties. Black cattle, sheep, and wool, are its only staples. Perhaps few counties in the kingdom are so rich in mineral treasures, while none derive less benefit from them. Silver, copper, and lead, have been found here in abundance for centuries. The immense fortune which Sir Hugh Middleton expended in bringing the New river to Islington, is well known to have been acquired in the silver and lead mines of Cwm-symlog; yet this and many others in this county that have been successively opened are now totally abandoned. There are no manufactories of importance in this county. Gloves and coarse flannels are made, but to a small extent. The principal exports are butter, slates, and oats.

Boroughs, Rates, &c.—Besides Cardigan the county-town, it has the market-towns of Lampeter, Aberystwith, Tregarron, and part of Newcastle-in-Emlyn, and it returns one member to parliament who is polled at Cardigan, Aberystwith, Lampeter, and Tregarron. The number of freehold electors registered for this county in 1837, was 613; of leasehold, 462; as tenants paying £50 yearly rent, 754. Total, 1,829. Pop., in 1801, 42,956; in 1831, 64,700. Houses 13,045. A. P. £141,889. The average of the poor rate assessment in this county, in the middle of last century, was £303; in 1783, it was £2,435; in 1813, £18,154; in 1824, £17,234; in 1837, £20,681, of which £16,753 was applied to the relief of the poor.—The county-rate, in 1804, was £1,528; in 1824, £1,500; in 1838, £1,920. The number of daily schools in this county, in 1835, was 92, attended by 4,082 children; of Sunday schools, 175, attended by 18,649 children. Of these, 5 daily schools, including 267 scholars, and 105 Sunday schools, including 14,021 children, were established by dissenters.

CARDIGAN, a market, borough, union and county-town in the hund. of Troedryaur, and county of Cardigan, on the river Teifi, 5 miles from its mouth, and 231 miles from London. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £9 15s. 10d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £130; gross income £201. Patron, the lord-chancellor. There are places of worship here for Independents, and Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists; the Independent church was formed in 1802.—Cardigan has a free grammar-school, endowed about the year 1765 by the lady Lætitia Cornwallis of Aber-Marles in Carmarthenshire, with £21 10s. 6d. per annum. There are also 5 daily, and 2 boarding-schools here.—The town lies within the parish of St. Mary, with which the old borough was co-extensive. The parliamentary boundary includes the hamlets of Bridge-end and Abbey in the parish of St. Dogmel, Pembroke. The new municipal boundary includes Bridge-end, but does not extend over the parish. Cardigan occupies a steep hill on the northern side of the Teifi, and consists of two principal streets containing some handsome houses. The river is crossed by a bridge of seven arches, leading to Milford. The church, which is ancient, has a fine tower rising from the west end, and is upon the whole a stately as well as venerable edifice. There is no local act for lighting or watching the town.—Cardigan claims to be a borough by prescription. It was formerly governed by a mayor, 2 bailiffs, and 13 aldermen, assisted by a coroner and a town-clerk; under the new municipal act it is governed by a mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors. In conjunction with Aberystwith, Atpar, and Lampeter, it returns one member to parliament. 'The parliamentary constituency of Cardigan and its contributory boroughs, according to the register of 1836, was 920, of whom 161 were freemen, and 118 householders, or 279 in all, belonged to Cardigan. The mayor is the returning officer.

The coasting trade is here considerable, employing upwards of 10,000 tons of shipping and 1,000 seamen, but there are no manufactures. The limits of the port extend from 4 or 5 miles beyond Fishguard, on the coast of Pembroke, to a point on the coast north-east of Aberaeron, and 24 miles from the mouth of the Teifi. With respect to Cardigan itself, the bar is a very great impediment to the navigation, and the entrance to the harbour is extremely dangerous in winter. Vessels of 300 or 400 tons can come up to the town in spring tides; but the general trade is confined to vessels of from 15 to 100 tons burthen. About 300 vessels are registered as belonging to this place, many of which seldom come to it; it contains many ship-owners, and many vessels were formerly built here, though at present there is not one on the stocks. Vessels of 15 tons, and under, are registered here, though that is not requisite, from the mere custom of the place; the consequence is, that the registration appears larger than it ought to do, relatively to other ports. At present many shipwrights, whose houses are at Cardigan, work elsewhere. Ships, which in the summer bring limestone from Pembrokeshire, or are otherwise employed in the coasting trade, often are used as fishing-boats, in the autumn, frequently taking their decks off. In the war, some ships brought in an income of £500 or £1,000 a-year from their being continually in the employment of government as transports. Many vessels are engaged in carrying on the trade between England and Ireland. The imports of Cardigan are coal and culm; the latter from South Wales, the former principally from Liverpool, sometimes from South Wales or Staffordshire, and still more rarely from Gloucestershire; limestone from Pembrokeshire; and Memel and American timber. This last branch of trade has increased much since the peace. The exports are corn, chiefly oats, to Bristol and Liverpool, butter, and slates; which last may in fact be considered the staple article of the place, though the slate is not of a good quality, and fetches only half the price of the North Welch slate. The market days are Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs are held on February 13th, April 5th, September 8th, and December 19th, for small horses, cattle, and pedler's wares. There is a branch of the North and South Wales bank here.

Cardigan county-gaol and house-of-correction stands by the side of the high-road. It was built in 1796 at an expense of about £7,000, and contains 20 cells, 8 day and work-rooms, with 6 airing yards. The principal hard labour for the inmates is that of the treadmill. The number of prisoners, in 1837, was 23.—The land in the neighbourhood of this town is, in great measure, held in small lots, of the value of from £10 to £30 per annum. The land there is let at from £1 10s. to £3 per acre. Further off, it is let in portions of from 40 to 130 acres, and at about 15s. an acre, on the average. The tenures are generally from year to year; there are however a few small freeholders.—Of the castle, famous in Welsh history, there remain only two round towers connected by a curtain wall venerably mantled with ivy. It was originally founded by Gilbert de Clare about 1160, but was shortly after seized by Rhys ap Gryfydd. It was successively occupied by Maelgon, Owen ap Rhys, and Llewellyn ap Jorwerth, from whom it was taken by the Flemings. After being razed and rebuilt it had the honour of being the residence of Edward I. for one month. Mrs. Phillips the celebrated Orinda, dwelt here in a house which occupies the site of the ancient priory.—Cardigan gives the title of Earl to the noble family of Brudenel. Pop. of the borough and parish, in 1801, 1,911; in 1831, 2,795. Houses 578. Pop. within parliamentary boundary, in 1831, 2,967. Houses 610. A. P. £3,596. Assessed taxes, in 1830, £404. Poor rates, in 1837, £967. The Cardigan poor-law union comprehends 26 parishes, with a population returned, in 1831, at 18,990.—Bridge-end lies in Bridge-end hamlet. It is usually called Bridge-end, Cardigan, not Bridge-end, Pembrokeshire. One of the Cardigan fairs is held here. Almost all this place has been very recently built.

CARDIGAN ISLE, an island, extra-parochial, in the hund. of Troedyraur, and county of Cardigan; on the north-east point of the estuary of the Teifi. It occupies an area of about forty acres, and is pastured by sheep, no part of it being submitted to tillage.

CARDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Wixamtree, union and county of Bedford; 2 miles south-west of Willington, on the river Ouse. It includes the chapelry of East-Cotts. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £7 17s. 0d.; gross income £256. The patrons are the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. A tablet to the memory of Howard the philanthropist, who lived some time here, has been put up in the church; and a monument, by Bacon—the last of his works—was erected in 1799 to the memory of Samuel Whitbread, Esq., whose family first settled here in 1650. There is an Independent and Baptist chapel here; the church was formed in 1777. There are also two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 509; in 1831, 594. Houses 258. Acres 5,050. A. P. £7,753. Poor rates, in 1837, £336.

CARDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Munslow, union of Church-Stretton, county of Salop; 4 miles east-north-east of Church-Stretton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £6 2s. 6d.; gross income £294. Vicarial tithes commuted in 1814. The patron, in 1835, was B. Hunt, Esq. There are four daily schools here, one of which has an endowment of £10 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 623; in 1831, 718. Houses 129. Acres 6,500. A. P. £3,462. Poor rates, in 1837, £334.

CARDINHAM, a parish in the hund. of West, union of Bodmin, county of Cornwall; 4 miles north-east of Bodmin, intersected by the Fowey river. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £24 17s. 8½d.; gross income £561. Patron, in 1835, T. Alliston, Esq. There are 3 daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 552; in 1831, 728. Houses 123. Acres 8,550. A. P. £3,029. Poor rates, in 1837, £274.

CAREBY, a parish in the wapentake of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; 5 miles south-west of Bourn, on the river Glen. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 17s. 1d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £117 12s.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, Gen. Reynardson. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 75. Houses 15. Acres 1,590. A. P. £1,742. Poor rates, in 1837, £44.

CAREW, a parish in the hund. of Narbeth, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales; 4 miles east-north-east of Pembroke. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; annual value by the parliamentary returns £74 15s. 3½d.; gross income £182. The patron is the bishop of St. David's. There are 5 daily schools here. With Rhys ap Thomas this was a favourite residence; and in the park attached to the castle he held a tournament, in the reign of Henry VII., which lasted five days, and was attended by upwards of 600 persons of quality. Pop., in 1801, 871; in 1831, 1,020. Houses 189. A. P. £4,203. Poor rates, in 1837, £462.—Of the castle Fenton gives the following account: "The noble edifice of Carew castle is situated on a neck of land washed by the tide of two estuaries with a gentle fall towards the water, and consists of a superb range of apartments round a quadrangle, with an immense bastion at each corner, containing handsome chambers. In almost all the rooms were elegant chimney-pieces of wrought freestone, some of which that had been built over to be preserved were carried to Devonshire, but many, where that precaution had not been used, were disfigured and destroyed by the people of the neighbourhood for the sake of the freestone powder to scour their wooden ware, in the course of twenty-years since I saw them before. I trace the barbican, and passing through the portcullised gateway enter a grand doorway, now miserably defaced and stripped of its rich freestone casings, into the great court or inner ballium, looking into which, as well as into the park and towards the water, there were windows. The ground rooms of the north front may boast of windows than which nothing more nobly magnificent is known in the kingdom, giving light to the great state room one hundred and two feet long by twenty. On the east side, over a chimney-piece of no inelegant workmanship, there is an escutcheon bearing the royal arms, perhaps placed there in compliment to Henry the Seventh, who is said to have been entertained and lodged there by his great adherent and supporter Sir Rhys ap Thomas, on his way to Bosworth field, and this might have been the royal bed-chamber. Looking to the same front, and facing the rising sun, there is a beautiful oriel window in a small apartment handsomely groined with stone, connecting with others of nearly the same size and character, probably a suite of rooms appropriated to the lady of the castle. These are included in an octagon tower to the right of the grand entrance. All the south-west side of the castle shows old towers of various height, diameter, and form. The whole north side is very majestic, ending in the return of a bastion to the east of the same character. The building is evidently of various eras, yet I make no doubt but what some parts are coeval with its first possessor; but I apprehend, and it is confirmed by old Leland (and there cannot be better authority) that Sir Rhys ap Thomas new modelled the whole and much enlarged it, giving to the north front the magnificence it now displays, by lighting the apartments contained therein with a species of bow window richly wrought in freestone; though some ascribe this splendid decoration to Sir John Perrott, on no probable ground, and in contradiction to the inference we are justified in drawing from Leland's expression: and it was not likely, though his spirit and his taste 'might have had stomach for it all,' that he, possessing another seat in the county, the place of his birth, and to which he felt the attachment of family pride, Haroldstone, and only holding Carew for a short term of years, would have lavished such an enormous expense on a residence he held by so slender a tenure, and retired to in his disgrace, more for privacy than on any other account, where he might smother his incensed feelings, and in sulky dignity brood over his misfortunes. The castle stands in a paddock bounded by the water on three sides, and on the other by the road leading to Carew church and village, but it had to the south a very extensive deer-park, whose outer wall is still visible in many places, though it is now subdivided into many enclosures. In part of this ground, at a small distance from the castle, and the 'hoary-headed swain' will still exultingly point to the spot, Sir Rhys ap Thomas held a tilt and tournament, the first show of this kind on record ever exhibited in Wales, forming one act of a great drama represented to entertain his noble guests there assembled in honour of his being admitted companion of the illustrious order of the Garter, and in commemoration of the anniversary of St. George celebrated then at court, where at that time he was not, by reason of his age, able to attend."

CAREY, or CARY-COATS, a township in the parish of Throckington, county of Northumberland; 11 miles north of Hexham. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 42. Houses 8. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

CARGO, or CRAGHOW, a township in that part of the parish of Stanwix which is in Cumberland ward, county of Cumberland; 3 miles north-west of Carlisle, on the river Eden, and in the vicinity of the Ship canal. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 242. Houses 55. Other returns with the parish.

CARHAM, a parish in the western division of Glendale ward, union of Glendale, county of Northumberland; 3 miles south-west of Coldstream on the river Tweed. It includes the townships of Carham and Shidlaw, Downham, Hagg, New Learmouth, West Learmouth, Mindrim East and West, Moneylaws, Preston, Tythehill, Wark and Wark-Common. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; gross income £248. Patrons, in 1835, the heirs of A. Compton, Esq. There is a daily school here. There is a beautiful and extensive prospect from the hamlet of Shidlaw into Scotland, with whose foraging bands the inhabitants of this parish had the misfortune, from the proximity of the important stronghold of Wark castle, to come too often into hostile contact in former times. There was here, according to Leland, a desperate battle fought between the Saxons and the Danes, in which eleven bishops and two English counts were slain. In 1018, it was the scene of a sanguinary contest between the English and the Scots. It was the scene of another battle in 1370, in which the English were totally defeated. An abbey of Black monks founded here as a cell to the priory of Kirkham, in Yorkshire, was burnt by the Scots under Wallace, the scene of whose encampment is to this day called the Camp field. Pop., in 1801, 1,192; in 1831, 1,174. Houses 230. Acres 11,470. A. P. £16,751. Poor rates, in 1837, £625.—See WARK.

CARHAMPTON HUNDRED in the western part of the county of Somerset, bordering on Devonshire and the Bristol channel. Area 60,350 acres. Houses 1,487. Pop., in 1831, 8,102.

CARHAMPTON, a parish in the above hundred, union of Williton; 1½ mile south-east of Dunster. Living, with Nodhuish curacy, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of Bath and Wells, and a peculiar of the dean's; rated at £11 8s. 0d.; gross income £182. Patron, in 1835, J. F. Luttrell, Esq. There are three daily schools here, one of which is endowed. Pop., in 1801, 601, in 1831, 658. Houses 109. Acres 6,460. A. P. £5,541. Poor rates, in 1837, £437.

CARINGTON, or CARRINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Bowdon, co.-palatine of Chester; 10½ miles north of Nether-Knutsford, on the river Mersey. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Bowdon, in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge; annual value by the parliamentary returns £100; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, the earl of Stamford.

There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 435; in 1831, 552. Houses 88. Acres 2,070. A. P. £2,604. Poor rates, in 1837, £191.

CARISBROOKE, a parish in the liberty of West Medina, Isle of Wight division of the county of Southampton; 1½ mile south-west of Newport, near Medina river. It includes the hamlets of Billingham, and Barcombe, and the Isle of Wight poor-house. Living, a vicarage, with curacy of Newport, and vicarage of Northwood, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £23 8s. 1½d.; gross income £1,144. The patrons are the provost and fellows of Queen's college, Oxford. The church, which consists of a body and south aisle, with a handsome Gothic tower, was built by William Fitzosborne, earl of Hereford, the first Norman lord of the island. The same nobleman founded a convent of Cistercian monks in the neighbourhood. There are an Independent chapel here, and 8 daily schools, one of which, a National school, contains 201 pupils.—The castle is supposed to have been a fortress previous to the Roman invasion, but the first time it occurs in history is in the year 530, when it was taken by Cerdic, the Saxon. Its present appearance, however, evinces a Norman renewal. The works of the Norman fortress, with the keep, which occupies the summit of an artificial mount between 60 and 60 feet high, include an acre and a half of ground; but the outworks are about three quarters of a mile in circumference, and occupies a space of about 20 acres. The outward, or the latest fortifications, are said to have been added by Queen Elizabeth; and military architecture began at that period to be understood, though from the structure of these fortifications, it appears to have been then in its infancy. The walls and bastions are perfect in many places, which may be well surveyed by a walk or ride, round the circumference of the castle. The apartments in the castle are large and well-proportioned; the upper have coved ceilings; they were improved and made habitable about the year 1700. The well is the greatest curiosity within the walls of the castle, it is 200 feet in depth, and produces, in the driest seasons, water of the purest quality. It is common for strangers to drop a pin into this well, the depth and echoing vault of which reverberates a sound, when the pin touches the water, that is really astonishing. It is also common to drop a lighted sheet of brown paper into the well, when the reaction of the air beneath, upon that which is rarified by the flame of the paper, keeps it somewhat buoyant, and makes it descend in so slow and spiral a direction, that the whole cavity of the well becomes discernible, till the fire is extinguished in the water below. The street of Carisbrooke is situated upon the banks of a rivulet, and lies immediately under the castle. The interest attached to Carisbrooke castle, in modern times, arises principally from its having been for thirteen months the prison of the ill-advised and unfortunate Charles I., previous to his trial and subsequent execution. The garrison assigned to the Isle of Wight is always stationed here. The governor or lieutenant-governor has apartments in the castle, which are kept in tolerable repair, though, generally, it is fast verging to ruin. The principal entrance, however, has still an imposing appearance, and some of the out-walls are pretty entire. The whole is surrounded by a trench, with a terrace walk nearly a mile long.—Pop., in 1801, 2,368; in 1831, 4,713. Houses 757. Acres 8,880. A. P. £10,781. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,347.

CARKIN, a township in the parish of Forcett, north riding of Yorkshire; 8½ miles north-east of Richmond. Pop., in 1801, 55; in 1831, 46. Houses 9. Acres 770. Poor rates, in 1837, £6.

CARLATTON, an extra-parochial hamlet in Eskdale ward, county of Cumberland. It has had no church for several ages, and it is only known by tradition where the church stood. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 70. Houses 7. Acres 1,810.

CARLBY, a parish in the wapentake of Ness, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; on the river Glen. Living, a discharged rector in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 1s. 10d.; gross income £200. Tithes commuted in 1804. The patrons, in 1835, were the Marquess of Exeter and Sir John Smith alternately. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 162; in 1831, 206. Houses 34. Acres 1,020. A. P. £1,333. Poor rates, in 1837, £29.

CARLETON, or CARLTON, a parish in the hund. of Willey, union and county of Bedford; 4½ miles north-east of Olney, bounded on the west by the river Ouse. Living, a rectory consolidated in 1769 with that of Chellington, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £15 6s. 8d.; gross income £420. Tithes commuted in 1805. Patron, in 1835, Hon. G. B. Trevor. There are a Baptist chapel here, and 3 Sunday schools. Pop., in 1801, 376; in 1831, 424. Houses 87. Acres 1,530. A. P. £1,497. Poor rates, in 1837, £37.

CARLETON, a township in the parish of Dregg, Allerdale ward, above Darwent, county of Cumberland. It is 2 miles north-north-west of Ravenglass; on the river Mite. Pop., in 1801, 149; in 1821, 144. Other returns with the parish.

CARLETON, or CARLTON, a township in that part of the parish of St. Cuthbert, Carlisle, which is in Cumberland ward, county of Cumberland; 2½ miles south-east of Carlisle; on the post-road, and east of the river Eden. Tithes, the property of the dean and chapter of Carlisle, commuted in 1777. Pop., in 1801, 185; in 1831, 189. Houses 33. Other returns with the parish.

CARLETON, a chapelry in the parish of Red Marshall, south-west division of Stockton ward, co-palatine of Durham; 4 miles north-west of Stockton-upon-Tees; in the immediate vicinity of the Clarence railway. There are 2 daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 183. Houses 35. Acres 1,630. A. P. £1,418. Poor rates, in 1837, £46.

CARLETON, or CARLTON, a township in the parish of Poulton, county of Lancaster; ¾ mile west of Poulton, intersected by the Preston railway. There is a daily school here, endowed by the late Mr. James Baines with £20 3s. per annum, and a farther sum of £2 annually by Mr. Weld. Pop., in 1801, 269; in 1831, 319. Houses 63. Acres 1,960. A. P. £4,161. Poor rates, in 1837, £116.

CARLETON, or CARLTON, a chapelry in the parish of Market-Bosworth, county of Leicester. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Bosworth-market. There is an infant-school here. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 201. Houses 44. Acres 680. A. P. £1,204. Poor rates, in 1837, £119.

CARLETON, or CARLTON, a parish in the hund. of Loddon, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 8 miles south-east of Norwich; south of the river Yare. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Pop., in 1801, 109; in 1831, 96. Houses 16. Acres 930. A. P. £864. Poor rates, in 1837, £78.

CARLETON, or CARLTON-EAST, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 3 miles south-west by west of Rockingham; south of the river Welland. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12 16s. 3d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £132; gross income £110. The patron, in 1835, was Sir J. H. Palmer, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 82; in 1831, 95. There is a daily school here. Houses 18. Acres 1,420. A. P. £2,372. Poor rates, in 1837, £37.

CARLETON, or CHARLTON, a township in the parish of Gedling, county of Nottingham; 3 miles east-north-east of Nottingham; north-east of the river Trent. There are 4 daily schools here. Tithes commuted in 1792. Pop., in 1801, 819; in 1831, 1,704. Houses 361. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £3,878. Poor rates, in 1837, £410.

CARLETON, or CARLTON, a township in the parish of Hushwaite, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north-north-west of Easingwold; east of the Great North of England railway. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1811, 153; in 1831, 163. Houses 36. Acres 1,120. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

CARLETON, a parish in the west division of the liberty of Langbaugh, union of Stokesley, north riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-south-west of Stokesley, on a branch of the river Tees. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York, of the certified value of £7 7s. 4d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £52 15s.; gross income £203. Patron, in 1835, C. Reeve, Esq. This parish possesses 2 daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 256. Houses 62. Acres 830. A. P. £2,084. Poor rates, in 1837, £148.

CARLETON, a chapelry in the parish of Snaith, wapentake of Barkstone Ash, west riding of Yorkshire; 1½ mile north by east of Snaith, north of the river Aire. Living, a curacy with that of Snaith, in the archd. and dio. of York, of the certified value of £25; gross income £179. Tithes commuted in 1799, and 1800. Patrons, in 1835, trustees of J. Day, and of T. Leigh. There are here 2 daily schools and 4 almshouses. Pop., in 1801, 536; in 1831, 808. Houses 166. Acres 3,070. A. P. £5,268. Poor rates, in 1837, £298.

CARLETON, or CARLTON with LOFFHOUSE, a township in the parish of Rothwell, in the wapentake of Agbrigg, west riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles north of Wakefield, 2 miles south of the river Aire, and the Leeds and Liverpool canal. There were 4 daily schools here in 1835. Pop., in 1801, 978; in 1831, 1,463. Houses 296. Acres 1,810. Other returns with the parish.

CARLETON, a township in the parish of Pontefract, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles south-east by south of Pontefract, with which borough it is included by the new boundaries act. Tithes commuted in 1797. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 155. Houses 35. Acres 620. A. P. £1,133. Poor rates, in 1837, £102.

CARLETON, or CARLTON, a township in the parish of Guiseley, west riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles south-east of Otley; south of the river Warp. Tithes commuted in 1772. There is a daily school here, with a small lending library attached. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 181. Houses 24. Acres 1,270. A. P. £785. Poor rates, in 1837, £70.

CARLETON, or CARLTON, a parish in the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewercross, union of Skipton, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles south-west of Skipton, on the river Aire, and near the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £5 2s. 1d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £52 15s.; gross income £424. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. There is here an hospital for 18 poor widows, founded in 1700 by Mr. Spence. In 1709, a school-house was built by Elizabeth Wilkinson, and endowed with land for educating four boys. The annual income is now £120, which goes to the educating of 20 boys, 4 of whom are clothed annually; and a fee of £7 is given to each on being put out apprentice at the age of 14. There are also a daily and a day and Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 845; in 1831, 1,265. Houses 246. Acres 2,390. Poor rates, in 1837, £494.

CARLETON, or CARLTON, a township in the parish of Royston, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-north-east of Barnesley; close upon the York and Derby railway, and the Barnesley canal. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1831, 340. Houses 69. Acres 2,090. A. P. £2,509. Poor rates, in 1837, £254.

CARLETON, or CARLTON-FORHOE, a parish in the hund. of Forehoe, county of Norfolk; 3½ miles north-north-west of Wymondham, on the river Yare. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 17s. 1d.; gross income £120. Patron, in 1835, Lord Wodehouse. Tithes commuted in 1766. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 132. Houses 22. Acres 700. A. P. £1,036. Poor rates, in 1837, £79.

CARLETON (CASTLE), a parish in the Marsh division of the hund. of Louth-Eske, union of Louth, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; 6½ miles east-south-east of Louth. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; certified value £12, annual value by the parliamentary returns £60; gross income £69. Patrons, in 1835, G. Frere and sons. Tithes commuted in 1770. There is no school here, but the children of this parish have access to a free school at Great Carlton. This was once a populous market-town enjoying many privileges. There are in the parish three artificial mounts, on one of which stood the castle of Sir Hugh Bardolph, lord of the manor in the reign of Henry I. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 54. Houses 10. Acres 500. Poor rates, in 1837, £111.

CARLETON-COLVILLE, a parish in the hund. of Mutford and Lotheringham, county of Suffolk; 4 miles south-west of Lowestoft. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12 10s. 7½d.; gross income £345. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Anguish. There is a day and Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 497; in 1831, 745. Houses 157. Acres 2,130. A. P. £3,359. Poor rates, in 1837, £294.

CARLETON IN LINDRICK, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of Worksope, county of Nottingham; 4 miles north-north-east of Worksope; a branch of the river Ryton passes through this parish; it is near the Chesterfield canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £15 13s. 4d.; gross income £587. Patron, the Archbishop of York. Tithes commuted in 1767. There are three daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 737; in 1831, 974. Houses 187. Acres 3,980. A. P. £4,164. Poor rates, in 1837, £303.

CARLETON-RODE, a parish in the hund. and union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 6 miles west-south-west of Mary-Stratton, and west of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £16; gross income £725. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. J. Buxton, Bart. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount £922 12s. 6d. There are a Baptist chapel here and two daily schools, one of which is a National school. Pop., in 1801, 769; in 1831, 916. Houses 176. Acres 2,680. A. P. £4,036. Poor rates, in 1837, £903.

CARLFORD HUNDRED in the county of Suffolk. It lies on the east side of the county, between Woodbridge and Ipswich. Area 22,550 acres. Houses 1,014. Pop., in 1831, 6,346.

CARLISLE.

A city, inland port, and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, situated in the ward and county of Cumberland, union of Carlisle; 301 miles north-north-west of London, 96 south of Edinburgh, and 63 miles distant from Newcastle by railway. It comprehends a part of each of the ecclesiastical parishes of St. Mary and St. Cuthbert, and now consists of nine townships or quarters. The ancient city is included between the townships of Botchergate and Rickergate; and the river Caldew, which bounds it on the west. Within these limits is not included the larger part or the buildings and streets which form the city in the more popular acceptance of the term. By the parliamentary boundary act a large district has been added, viz. the townships of Botchergate and Rickergate, and part of the township of Caldewgate. The population of the different townships or quarters, in 1763, was 4,158; in 1801, 9,521; in 1831, 20,015. Houses 2,924. Acres 6,740. A. P., in 1815, £31,739. Poor rates, in 1837, £3,184. The Carlisle poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, with a population returned, in 1831, at 35,027.—The following are the districts within the parliamentary borough:

	Annual value in 1825.	Poor rate in 1834-5.	Houses in 1831.	Population in 1831.
Abbey-street,	£2,300	£101	136	1,246
Castle-street,	2,375	170	174	1,007
Fisher-street,	2,207	119	67	443
Scotch-street,	6,523	284	200	1,897
English-street,	9,393	756	521	3,773
Cathedral precinct,	227		10	50
Botchergate,	4,906	273	537	4,161
Rickergate,	3,731	214	191	1,448
Caldewgate (the whole township)	6,740	1,154	1,000	6,000
	£39,664	£3,081	2,924	20,015

General description.—This very ancient city is pleasantly situated on a gentle eminence at the confluence of the Eden and Caldew. Its three principal streets, which are wide and handsome, diverge from the market-place, and are called English-street, Scotch-street, and Castle-street. At the upper end of English-street, on opposite sides of the street, stand two elegant court-houses constructed in the Gothic style from designs by Robert Smirke, junior, on the site of the ancient citadel. The crown-court communicates by a subterranean passage with the gaol. Over both the Eden and the Caldew are stone bridges. That over the Eden, consisting of 5 elliptical arches, is connected with the city by an arched causeway nearly a quarter of a mile in length, and was executed from a design by Smirke, at an expense of upwards of £70,000. The county-gaol and house-of-correction were completed in 1827, at an expense of £40,000. At the north end of the market-place stands the town-hall, where the mayor's court and the city-sessions are held; a more modern erection, at the east end of the court, contains the council-chamber and other corporation-offices. Of the town, the houses in general are handsome and well-built; the streets wide, carefully paved, and brilliantly lighted with gas. The roads approaching the place are excellent, and the number of houses is rapidly increasing.

The Cathedral.—The buildings we have particularized do credit to the taste and liberality of the citizens; but the cathedral must still be allowed to be the principal ornament of the city. Standing on the highest ground, in the parish of St. Mary, in the centre of the ancient city, it forms the most prominent object from whatever quarter you view it. Its origin is Saxon; but its additions and embellishments have been the work of many successive generations. It is 137 feet in length and 75 in height; the aisles are 71 feet in breadth. The tower is 130 feet in height. Several parts of the building are highly beautiful; but it suffered greatly in the civil wars, when about thirty yards of the nave was pulled down, to erect guard-houses and batteries. The opening was afterwards closed with a wall, and the space between the wall and the transept fitted up as the parochial church of St. Mary, as the entire west end had formerly been; and in which divine service is regularly performed. The arches in this part of the cathedral, and in the transept, are circular, and the shafts extremely massive; the height of each being only 14 feet 2 inches, while the circumference is 17 feet 6 inches. The east end of the cathedral, from the transept, is in the Gothic style of architecture. The choir, which is the most magnificent part of the building, was begun by Bishop Welton, in the reign of Edward III., and finished by the succeeding bishops, Appleby and Strickland. The expenses were chiefly defrayed by subscription; and indulgences and remissions of penance were also granted to such of the laity as should by money, materials, or labour, contribute to the pious work. The arches of the choir are supported by clustered pillars, and have a very elegant appearance: the inner mouldings of the capitals are ornamented with figures and flowers in carved open work. The stalls are embellished with tabernacle-work; and the bishop's throne is elegant and stately. The east window is partially decorated with painted glass. The height of this window is 48 feet, its breadth 30. The choir is wainscotted with oak. In the aisles on each side are some singular legendary paintings from the histories of St. Anthony, St. Cuthbert, and St. Augustine, with a distich over each subject in uncouth rhyme. In the cathedral are several ancient monuments, supposed to be those of Bishops Welton, Appleby, and two or three others; and on the north side of the choir, near the altar, is a curious monumental brass plate, erected to the memory of Bishop Henry Robinson, who was born in this city about the year 1558. In the south aisle, adjoining the transept, is a small chapel, dedicated to St. Catherine, which was founded and endowed by John de Capella, a citizen of Carlisle. There are many interesting monuments within the cathedral; among others one to the memory of Archdeacon Paley, who composed several of his works while resident in this city, and who is buried here.

The Castle.—The castle stands at the north-west angle of the city. A fine view is obtained from its elevated site. "The foreground is formed of level meads, washed by the Eden in one part, and insulated by a separation of the river. This plot is ornamented by two substantial stone bridges, one of four, the other of nine arches; the hanging banks are crowned with the village and church of Stanwix, and the distance filled up with the mountains of Bewcastle. To the south you command the plains towards Penrith, shut in on either hand by a vast chain of mountains, over which Crossfell and Skiddaw are distinctly seen pre-eminent. To the east a varied tract of cultivated country, scattered over with villages and hamlets, mingling beautifully with woodlands, on the extensive landscape the distant horizon, formed by the heights of Northumberland. To the west, the frith spreads out its shining expanse of waters, margined on the one hand by a cultivated tract, and on the other by the coast of Scotland, where Criffel and a chain of mountains extend towards the coast."

Trade, Canal, and Railway.—The port of Carlisle nominally extends from the mouth of the Sark to Bankend near Maryport; but large vessels cannot discharge their cargoes nearer than within 12 miles of the city. A canal, however, has been executed between the city and the Solway frith, by which vessels of 80 tons can come up to the west side of the city. This canal is 12 miles in length, and is supplied with water from the Eden, which is pumped into it by a steam-engine, delivering 763,200 cubic feet every 12 hours. The water is raised a height of about 56 feet. The coastwise tonnage inwards at this port, in 1823, was 14,226 tons; and outwards, 7,908; in 1832, inwards, 22,820 tons; outwards, 23,392. The foreign tonnage inwards, in 1832, was 2,739 tons; outwards, 741 tons. The manufactures consist principally of cotton goods for the West India market. In 1838 there were eight cotton-mills here, employing 1,486 hands, and 186 power-looms. The fisheries on the Eden are extensive, and the markets, besides other provision, have always an abundant supply of fish. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs are held on August 26th for horned cattle and linen, and September 19th for horses and horned cattle. During these fairs, agreeably to the terms of the ancient charter, no person can be arrested for a civil suit within the liberties of the city. On the first and second Saturday after October 10th, fairs are held for Scotch horned cattle. In April there is an annual show of cattle, when prizes are distributed by the agricultural society. Races are run in September on a fine piece of race-ground in the township of Rickergate. The city of Carlisle has a mechanics' institution, a public library, a theatre, several news-rooms, and extensive assembly-rooms at the two principal hotels.—The Newcastle and Carlisle railway, opened on 18th June, 1838, is 63 miles in length, from the Close in Newcastle-upon-Tyne to the Carlisle canal. The level at the Carlisle terminus is 45 feet above that at Newcastle. It runs by Milton, (near Brampton,) Haltwhistle, and Hexham. The original capital of the company is £300,000, in £100 shares; but new shares have been created; and the company is authorized by act to raise to the extent of £950,000. The remainder of the funds is obtained by loan. The total cost of the railway will be about £850,000. The number of passengers conveyed on it, in 1838, was 196,051. The average fare per mile on this railway is 13d. The total charge between Newcastle and Carlisle, in 1839, was, first class, 11s.; open carriage, 8s. 6d. The journey is accomplished in three hours. In 1837, an act was passed for making a railway from the town and port of Maryport to the borough of Carlisle.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—The city stands within the two parishes of St. Mary and St. Cuthbert, both of them in the deanery and dio. of Carlisle. St. Mary's parish comprises the northern and western parts of the city; St. Cuthbert's the southern; both are perpetual curacies; gross income of the former, £179; of the latter, £126; and both are in the patronage of the dean and chapter. Certain tithes in both parishes were commuted in 1777, by 17th Geo. III. c. 60. A handsome district church has been built in each parish by the parliamentary commissioners, the livings of which are subordinate to the original churches. They are in the Gothic style, with tower and spire, and each capable of accommodating 1,000 persons. Carlisle is the seat of a diocese, having been by Henry I., in 1133, erected into a see under Adeluph, his father-confessor, with jurisdiction over the greater part of Cumberland and Westmoreland.—Besides the established church there are here places of worship for Independents, Presbyterians, Friends, Baptists, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, and Roman Catholics.—The grammar-school, founded by Henry VIII. has an endowment of £190 per annum, by means of which between 40 and 50 scholars are classical.

educated on paying a small quarterage each. There were, in 1835, 35 daily schools, two of which were connected with the National society, and 10 Sunday schools. Charitable institutions are numerous.

Government.]—The city of Carlisle is a corporation by prescription. The first charter that can be traced is from Henry II., which was renewed, confirmed, and enlarged by succeeding sovereigns till the reign of Charles I., upon whose charter it was governed till the passing of the municipal act of 1835, by which the city has been divided into five wards, viz., Botchergate ward, St. Cuthbert's ward, St. Mary's ward, Caldewgate ward, and Rickerate ward, to each of which six elective councillors and two aldermen have been assigned. A court of record is held every Monday for the recovery of debts to any amount. The income of the city is about £2,000. The assizes for the county are always held here; and the Easter and summer quarter-sessions. Carlisle county-gaol and house-of-correction is a convenient appendage to the county-courts of justice, and is connected with the one where the criminal business is disposed of, by a Gothic screen, which harmonizes well with the imposing effect of these noble structures. The principal front with the gateway is in English street. The accommodation for prisoners consists of six wings, radiating from a central building, the house of the keeper, and containing 130 cells, 13 wards, 26 day and work rooms, and 13 airing-yards. The number of prisoners, in 1836, was 459.—The city of Carlisle has returned regularly two members to parliament since the 23^d of Edward. The right of election was formerly vested in freemen who had been admitted into any of the eight fraternities or guilds resident, or not resident, whose total number is said to have been about 1,000, but of whom only 280 were resident. The new electors are about 800 in number; the townships of Botchergate and Rickerate, with part of Caldewgate, being included within the boundaries of the borough. The mayor is the returning officer.

History.]—The origin of this city is by some attributed to Luel, a British potentate; and the time of its erection is supposed to have been prior to the Roman invasion: by others it is thought to be of the same antiquity as Severus' wall, and to have been a fortress on that celebrated rampart. "That it was a place of consequence in the time of the Romans," observes Camden, "appears plainly from the various evidences of antiquity occasionally dug up, and from the frequent mention of it in the writers of those days: and even after the ravages of the Picts and Scots, it retained something of its ancient splendour, and was accounted a city." In the Itinerary of Antoninus it is called Luguvallio,—a name which Burn supposes to have been formed from the British Llu gyda gwal, signifying 'the Army by the wall.' This appellation was by the Saxons contracted into Lu-ell and Lu-all: to which the British Caer, a city, being afterwards prefixed, it became Caer-lu-ell; a term which, by an easy transition, has in more modern times, been changed into Carlisle; though the peasantry of Cumberland still pronounce it according to the former orthography. It was surrounded with walls, and had a strong citadel and castle under both the Saxons and Normans. The former are said to have been built by Egfrid, king of Northumberland, in the 7th century. They enclosed a triangular space, and had three gates, named, from their position with respect to the different countries, English, Irish, and Scottish gates. The west wall, forming the base of this triangle, was 2,000 yards in length; the eastern, 460; and the northern, 650 yards. In the progressive improvement of the city, these walls, gates, and fortifications, have been completely swept away, with the exception of a small portion of the west wall and of the castle, which was erected by William Rufus, on a bold eminence overlooking the Eden. It was taken possession of by David I. of Scotland, to whom it was afterwards ceded by Stephen. This monarch greatly improved its means of defence, and here he resided for some time after the unfortunate battle of the Standard. Restored to England by Malcolm IV., it suffered a severe siege, in 1173, by William the Lion; it successfully resisted him, but was taken by his successor Alexander. Restored again to England, it was, about 1292, reduced to ashes through the vindictive malice, it is said, of a ruffian who wilfully set fire to his father's house. To this place Edward I. retreated after the battle of Falkirk, and here he assembled a parliament in 1298. Here too he appointed the rendezvous of his forces, destined for the final subjugation of Scotland, and celebrated his birthday, shortly before he died, on his march against Scotland in 1307. In the long and desperate wars between the two countries that succeeded, Carlisle was repeatedly reduced to great extremity. Here, in 1568, Mary, queen of Scots, was taken into custody; and here, in 1596, 'the bauld Buccleugh' performed the notable exploit of carrying off the celebrated reaver, Kimmont Willie. Standing out for Charles I. against the parliament, it was besieged by General Leslie, and after suffering almost incredible hardships, was obliged to surrender in June, 1645. In 1745 it was invested by the young Chevalier, Prince Charles Stuart, and most disgracefully surrendered at the first summons. "When the insurgents came before it," says Gilpin, "it was garrisoned only by two companies of invalids, and two raw undisciplined regiments of militia. General Wade lay at Newcastle with a considerable force; and the governor of Carlisle informing him how unprovided he was, begged a reinforcement. The single hope of this relief enabled the gentlemen of the county, who commanded the militia, to keep their men under arms. In the meantime the rebels were known to be as ill prepared for an attack as the town was for a defence. They had now lain a week before it, and found it was impracticable, for want of artillery, to make any attempt. They feared also an interruption from General Wade; and, besides, were unwilling to delay any longer their march towards London. Under these difficulties they had come to a resolution to abandon their design. At this critical time the governor of Carlisle received a letter from General Wade, informing him he was so circumstanced, that he could not possibly send the reinforcement that had been desired. This mortifying intelligence, though not publicly known, was, however, communicated to the principal officers; and to some others, among whom was a busy attorney, who was then addressing a young lady, the daughter of a gentleman of the county; and to assist his cause, and give himself consequence with his intended father-in-law, he whispered to him, among his other political secrets, the disappointment from General Wade. The whisper did not rest here. The father frequented a club in the neighbourhood, where, observing—in the jollity of a cheerful evening—that only friends were present, he gave the company the information he had just received from the attorney. In that company there was a gentleman of some fortune, who, though a known papist, was at that time thought to be of very entire affection to the government. This man, possessed of such a secret, and wishing for an opportunity to serve a cause which he favoured in his heart, took horse that very night, after he left the club-room, and rode directly to the rebel camp, which he found under orders to break up the next morning. He was carried immediately to the duke of Perth, and others of the rebel leaders, to whom he communicated the intelligence, and assured them that they might expect a mutiny in the town if they continued before it one day longer. Counter-orders were immediately issued; and the next day the Cumberland and Westmoreland militia, being under no discipline, began to mutiny and disperse; and the town, defended now only by two companies of invalids, was thought no longer tenable. It was then surrendered by the mayor and corporation, who made the best terms they were able; but the inhabitants were obliged to raise £2,000 to prevent their houses being plundered. This capitulation was made on the 14th of November. In the following month the city was attacked by the duke of Cumberland, who planned and directed the operations himself, and on the 27th opened a six-gun battery of 18 pounders against the castle. Two days afterwards the rebels displayed a flag of truce, and on the 13th surrendered on the laconic terms offered to their acceptance by the duke, and conceived in these words: 'All the terms his royal highness will, or can grant to the rebel garrison of Carlisle, are, that they shall not be put to the sword, but be reserved for the king's pleasure.'—No inquiry was ever instituted into the conduct and character of the authorities of the city; but ample vengeance was taken upon a few unhappy men left in it by Charles on his retreat, who were carried to London, many of them executed as traitors, and their heads sent down to be set upon public places, where the magistracy must have been conscious their own were far more deserving to stand. This, however, was the last of its fields; and distant be the day which shall put either the loyalty or the courage of its authorities to the proof.—Carlisle gives the title of Earl to a branch of the Howard family.*

CARLTON, a parish in the hund. of Hoxne, union of Blything, county of Suffolk; about a mile north-west of Saxmundham. Living, a rectory with Kelsall, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £3 11s. 0^d.; gross income £700. Patron, in 1835, Lieut.-Col. Bruce. There is a daily school in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 130. Houses 20. Acres 2,070. A. P. £905. Poor rates, in 1837, £142.

CARLTON, a township in the parish of Coverham, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west by west of Middleham. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 236; in 1831, 301. Houses 54. Acres 3,380. A. P. £3,234. Poor rates, in 1837, £120.

* From the comprehensive table of mortality prepared by F. Bailey, Esq., for the committee of the House of Commons which sat in 1827, to consider the laws respecting benefit-societies, it appears that Carlisle is a remarkably healthy place.

STATEMENT of the number of persons alive out of 1,000 born at the several ages and places mentioned.

AGE.	LONDON.	CARLISLE.	VIENNA.	BERLIN.
0	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000
1	680	846	512	613
2	548	778	471	528
3	468	707	430	485
4	458	720	400	434
5	426	680	377	403
6	410	628	357	387
7	397	659	311	376
8	388	654	337	367
9	380	649	331	361
10	373	648	327	366

This shows that in London half of the children born die without reaching the age of three years, and gives for London, as a whole, an average rate of mortality, between the ages of one and ten, of nearly six per cent.; the rate being still greater for Vienna and Berlin, but much less for Carlisle: and as further appears in the table, less also, although in different degrees, for other smaller towns in England.

CARLTON WITH CHELLINGTON. See CARLETON, Bedford.

CARLTON. See CARLETON, Cumberland.

CARLTON. See CARLETON, Lancaster.

CARLTON-FOREHOE. See CARLETON, Norfolk.

CARLTON-CASTLE. See CARLETON (CASTLE).

CARLTON WITH WILLINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Radfield, union of Linton, county of Cambridge; 7 miles south of Newmarket. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £29; gross income £377; nett income £287. Patron, in 1835, the trustees of the incumbent. There are 3 daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 383. Houses 68. Acres 2,200. A. P. £2,589. Poor rates, in 1837, £117.

CARLTON (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Humbleyard, union of Henstead, county of Norfolk, formed of the united parishes of St. Mary and St. Peter the apostle; 5 miles east of Wymondham, and near the London and Norwich railway. Living of St. Mary's a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £4; gross income £181. Patrons, in 1834, the corporation of Norwich.—The living of St. Peter's is also a discharged rectory in the same archd. and dio. as St. Mary's; rated at £6; gross income £188. Patron, the lord-chancellor. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 314. Houses 62. Acres 1,140. A. P. £1,224. Poor rates, in 1837, £137.—Certain lands were here held at one time by a very singular tenure, viz. that of carrying to the king, in whatever part of England he might be, 100 herrings, made up into 24 pies, when they came first into season. The herrings were furnished by the town of Yarmouth, and sent to the lord of the manor by the sheriffs of Norwich.

CARLTON (GREAT), a parish and village in the Marsh division of the hund. of Louth-Eske, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 6½ miles east-south-east of Louth. Living, a vicarage, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; gross income £382. Tithes commuted in 1770 and 1839. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lincoln. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed. Pop., in 1801, 202; in 1831, 280. Houses 57. Acres 2,190. A. P., with Castle Carlton, £3,082. Poor rates, in 1837, £208.

CARLTON (LITTLE), a parish in the Marsh division of the hund. of Louth-Eske, union of Louth, parts of Lindsey, and county of Lincoln; 4½ miles east-south-east of Louth. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £3 16s. 10^d.; gross income £165. Patron, in 1835, E. Forster, Esq. The children of this parish attend the schools at Great Carlton. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 131. Houses 18. Acres 940. A. P. £1,061. Poor rates, in 1837, £70.

CARLTON (NORTH), a parish in the wapentake of Lawress, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 5 miles north-north-west of Lincoln. Living, a curacy in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Lincoln; certified value £15 15s.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £35; gross income £35. Patron, in 1835, the prebendary in Lincoln cathedral. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 181. Houses 27. Acres 1,940. A. P. £1,704. Poor rates, in 1837, £99.

CARLTON (SOUTH), a parish in the same wapentake, union and county of Lincoln; 4 miles north-north-west of Lincoln. Living, a curacy in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Lincoln; certified value, £15 15s.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £70; gross income £56. Patron, Lord Monson. The church, which was extensively repaired in 1812, contains several monuments of the Monson family. There are two daily schools here, one of which is endowed by Sir John Monson. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 204. Houses 29. Acres 2,040. A. P. £1,971. Poor rates, in 1837, £126.

CARLTON-CURLIEU, WITH ILSTON, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Billesdon, county of Leicester; $\frac{7}{8}$ miles north-north-west of Market-Harborough, and near the Union canal. It includes the chapelry of Ilston-on-the-Hill. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Ilston, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £18 15s. 10d.; gross income £420. Patron, in 1835, Sir John Palmer, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 224; in 1831, 182. Houses 31. Acres 2,970. A. P. £4,003. Poor rates, in 1837, £124.

CARLTON-HIGHDALE, a township in the same parish. It possesses two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 328; in 1831, 365. Houses 80. Acres 12,480. Poor rates, in 1837, £202.

CARLTON-ISLEBECK, OR MINIOR, a township in the parish, and included within the boundaries of the borough of Thirsk, north riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles west-south-west of Thirsk, and close upon the Great North of England railway. Living, a curacy with that of Thirsk, of the certified value of £4 12s.; gross income £103. The patron is the archbishop of York. Pop., in 1801, 185; in 1821, 238. Houses 51. Acres 2,070. A. P. £2,338. Poor rates, in 1837, £98.

CARLTON-LE-MOORLANDS, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Boothby-Graffo, parts of Kesteven, union of Newark, county of Lincoln; 8 miles east-north-east of Newark, bounded on the east by the river Brant, and on the west by the Witham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 0s. 10d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £100; gross income £91. Patron, in 1835, Lord Middleton. There are a Baptist chapel here, and two daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 258; in 1831, 328. Houses 71. Acres 2,610. A. P. £3,524. Poor rates, in 1837, £135.

CARLTON-SCROOP, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, union of Grantham, county of Lincoln; 6 miles north-east of Grantham, on a branch of the river Witham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 1s. 5d.; gross income £445. Patrons, in 1835, Earl Brownlow, G. Langton, Esq., and G. White, Esq. in turn. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 199. Houses 40. Acres 1,460. A. P. £2,225. Poor rates, in 1837, £103.

CARLTON-UPON-TRENT, a chapelry in the parish of Norwell, Nottinghamshire; $\frac{6}{8}$ miles south of Newark. There are two daily schools in this chapelry. Pop., in 1801, 308; in 1831, 265. Houses 43. Acres 1,160. A. P. £1,579. Poor rates, in 1837, £97.

CARMARTHENSHIRE.

Or CAERMARTHENSHIRE, a county of South Wales; bounded on the north by Cardiganshire; on the east by Brecknockshire and Glamorganshire; on the south by the Bristol channel, and on the west by Pembrokeshire, Glamorganshire, and the sea. Its form is that of a parallelogram, extending from east to west about 45 miles, and from north to south about 25 miles. Its contents have been calculated by some at 590,640 acres; by others at 623,360 acres. It has the greatest superficial area of any of the Welch counties.

Divisions.—It is divided into 8 hundreds, which comprise 79 parishes, 12 chapelries, and 6 market-towns. The hundreds are Carnwallon, Cathinog, Cayo, Derllys, Elvet, Iskennen, Kidwelly, and Perfedd. The chief towns are Carmarthen, Llandovery, Kidwelly, Llandilowawr, Llanelly, Llandybie, Newcastle-Emlyn, and St. Clear's. This county is chiefly in the dio. of St. David's and archd. of Carmarthen; a small portion of it is in the archd. of Cardigan. It is in the South Wales circuit. It contained, in 1801, a population of 67,317; in 1831, 100,800. Houses 18,920. A. P., in 1815, £277,455. Assessed taxes, in 1830, £6,858. The amount raised, of the parish rates, in 1837, was £40,218, and the expenditure was £38,289; of which £29,177 was applied to the relief of the poor. The county now sends two members to parliament, who are polled for at Llandilowawr, Carmarthen, Llandovery, Newcastle-Emlyn, St. Clear's, Llanelly, and Llansawel.

Rivers and Mountains.—The chief rivers are the Towy, or Tywi, the Cothy, and the Tave. The Towy rises in Cardiganshire, and flowing southwards enters this county at the north-east extremity, runs south-south-west past Llangadock, Llandilowawr, and Carmarthen, and falls into the English channel about 8 miles below Carmarthen, after a course of about 60 miles.—The Cothy rises on the northern side of the county, and runs mostly in a south-west course for 25 miles, till it joins the Towy about 5 miles above Carmarthen.—The Tave, or Teify, rises in Pembrokeshire, flows first south-west, and soon after south; then turning to the south-east passes St. Clear's, and flows into Carmarthen bay, after a course of 30 miles. Among the less remarkable streams are the Dulas, the Branc, the Gwendrath-vawr, the Cowen, the Towa, and the Amond.—The lakes of this county are not remarkable for extent. Llyn Tegwyn, on the highest elevation of Mynydd-Mawr, or 'the Great mountain,' a few miles to the westward of Llandybie, is plentifully stored with fish. Another lake, abounding with trout of a superior quality, and eels of extraordinary size, occurs near the foot of the Carmarthenshire Vann or Beacon, in so elevated a situation that the snow remains undissolved on its shores during seven months of the year. The awful grandeur of the precipitous rocks which overhang this lake render the surrounding scenery indescribably romantic. At the base of a considerable hill, near Edwinsford, on the banks of the Cothy, and close to the ruins of Talley abbey, are two other lakes, which communicate with each other so as to present, from some points of view, the appearance of an unbroken sheet of water.—Carmarthenshire may be termed a hilly, rather than a mountainous district. On the north, a chain, connected with Plinlimmon in Cardiganshire, skirts the borders of the county from Brecknockshire to the sea; forming, in the greater part of its range, one side of the vale of the Teify, which it separates from that of the Cothy. On the eastward, the county is shut in by the long chain of the Mynydd-Du, or the Black mountain, which stretches into Monmouthshire; and in the Vann, or Beacon, attains the height of 2,596 feet above the level of the sea. The only tracts that can be called level, are the vale of Towy, which is about 20 miles in length, by 3 in breadth; and the plain of Llaugharne which has been reclaimed from the sea.

Soil and Productions.—A large part of the county is waste, but it is pretty well wooded; and, with the exception of the mountains, is generally fertile, and the farmers are esteemed the best in Wales. Numerous herds of a small breed of black cattle are reared on the hills, and considerable quantities of barley and oats are grown in the valleys.—The mineral products of the country are iron and lead, coal and limestone. Tinned iron plates, coal and limestone, are exported from Llanelly, to which there is a railway from Castell-y-Garrig. Coals are also exported from Kidwelly, to which place they are brought from the pits by a small canal, which also unites this town with Llanelly. Woollen stockings are manufactured in various quarters, also leather. Considerable quantities of corn and butter are conveyed to Bristol from Carmarthen and St. Clear's. There are several railroads in different parts to connect the mines in the interior with the coast; there are numerous and excellent roads in all directions; and taking into account the number of stage-waggon and coaches, the district may be considered to possess considerable facilities for the application of commercial industry.

History.—Of the history of this district, antecedently to the subjugation of South Wales by the Romans, nothing is known, excepting that it was inhabited by the Demetæ, the Dified of British writers. There has been much diversity of opinion respecting the etymology of its name. It has been derived by some from Caer Ferddin, 'the city of Merddin,' or Merlin, the far-famed British prophet; but it has been justly objected that Carmarthen was so called before the birth of Merlin. The etymology seems to be referred with greater propriety to Caer Mur Din, which may signify a fortified city surrounded by a wall,—a description which corresponds with the Maridunum of Antoninus, by general consent identified with the town of Carmarthen, and also with the description of Giraldua. Roman antiquities have been frequently discovered in various parts of the county. A Roman road still exists at Llandoverly, and coins of that nation have been found in different places. The independency of Wales was decided near Llandilovawr in this county, where was fought the last battle for native dominion, between the forces of Edward I and Llewellyn, prince of Wales.

CARMARTHEN, or CAER FRYDDYN, the county-town of Carmarthenshire, having a separate jurisdiction in the district called the county of the borough of Carmarthen; union of the same name, situated on the right bank of the river Towy, over which there is a bridge consisting of six spacious arches, with four auxiliaries to increase the water-passage during floods. It is 20 miles above the junction of the Towy with the Bristol channel, and 17 by land from Llanelly. The municipal and parliamentary boundaries of Carmarthen are co-extensive, and comprise the parish of St. Peter, embracing an area reaching from north to south about 4 miles, and from east to west nearly 5 miles.—Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Carmarthen and dio. of St. David's; rated at £6 13s. 4d., by the parliamentary returns at £91 12s. 8d.; gross income £177; in the patronage of St. David's college, Lampeter. A district church has been erected here by the parliamentary commissioners in the Gothic style, at a cost of £4,150. Sittings 1,062. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists, have places of worship here; the first Baptist church was formed in 1660, the second in 1786. The parish-church is very large, and stands outside the town.—The town commands a most extensive and beautiful prospect. The streets are steep and irregular, but the houses are handsome and well-built. The market-house is a good structure, and the town-hall, built of freestone, is adorned in front with Ionic columns. The borough appears to be in a flourishing condition, and the trade is extensive,—Carmarthen supplying a large district with almost all imported commodities, and the river being navigable for vessels of 200 tons burthen up to the bridge. There are no manufactures of any kind in the town. Ships are built here of from 50 to 150 tons; and the shipping trade has considerably increased. In 1835 there were 40 vessels belonging to Carmarthen. The exports consist of corn, butter, oats, timber, bark, and lead-ore. The imports are chiefly articles for domestic consumption. Carmarthen claims to be a borough by prescription. By the municipal act of 1835 it has been divided into two wards,—eastern and western; to each of which nine councillors have been assigned. Carmarthen with Llanelly sends one member to parliament. The two sheriffs are the returning officers. The ancient right of election was in the burgesses of Carmarthen and Llanelly, in number about 723. The number of voters registered, in 1832, was 684. The 40s. freeholders in this town vote for Carmarthenshire. There is a court for the registry of wills held here, under the jurisdiction of the see of St. David's. The sessions of the peace are held twice in the year, in January and August; and petty-sessions once every week. There is also a fortnightly court, in which the mayor, recorder, and town-clerk, have authority to hold pleas of all manner of actions arising within the borough. The county-gaol and house of correction is extremely spacious, and contains more cells than prisoners. It is part of the old castle, and without a boundary wall. The hard labour to which the prisoners are subjected is supplied by the tread-wheel. The number of commitments in 1836 was 104. The town-gaol comprises four airing-yards, nine cells, and two day-rooms; and contained, in 1837, 113 prisoners. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs are held on June 3d and 4th, July 10th, August 10th, September 9th, October 9th, and November 14th and 15th, for cattle, horses, and pedlery. Carmarthen was, until recently, a creek to Llanelly, but is now a separate and independent customs station. There is a free grammar-school endowed by Dr. Owen, bishop of St. David's, and endowments for the maintenance of an almshouse and marine school.

The Maridunum of Antoninus, Carmarthen, was considered to be the capital of Wales, and upon its erection into a principality, the chancery and exchequer of the southern half were fixed here; and here they continued till the jurisdiction of the Welsh marches was abolished. It was the residence of the Welsh princes till 1116, when they removed to Dynefawr. It was given to hold in trust for Henry I to Owen-ap-Caradoc, and Rhuddarech ap Tudor, the former of whom lost his life in its defence. In 1137 it was burned to the ground by Owen Gwynedd, and a few years after rebuilt by Gilbert, earl of Clare. Of the old town walls the memorials are slender; and of its princely castle not a vestige remains. In romantic history this town is celebrated as having been the birth-place of the renowned Welsh prophet, Merlin. Three miles distant from the town is a spot called Merlin's cave, where tradition records the Lady of the Lake entombed the unhappy magician. The chair from which he uttered his prophecies is also to be seen. The Lady of the Lake appears to have been a fairy or nymph of whom Merlin was enamoured. The story of a fatal deception which she passed on him is quoted by Malin, from a romance called 'Morte Arthur,' printed by Caxton in 1485, as follows:—"The Lady of the Lake and Merlin departed, and by the way as they went Merlin showed to her many wonders, and came into Cornwall; and always laid about the lady for to have her favour; and she was ever passing weary of him, and fain would have been delivered of him:

for she was afraid of him because he was a divell's son, and she could not put him away by any means. And so upon a time it hapned that Merlin showed to her in a roche whereas was a great wonder, and wrought by enchantment, which went under a stone; so by her craft and working she made Merlin to go under that stone, to let him wit of the mervailes there. But she wrought so there for him, that he never came out." Merlin appears to have been neither more nor less than a man of extraordinary wisdom and learning, which, no doubt, occasioned him to be looked on as a magician in that dark age, and transmitted as such to posterity by monkish writers, who regarded with a jealous eye all knowledge possessed out of their own pale. Here also was born Lewis Bayly, chaplain to James I., afterwards bishop of Bangor, and author of the celebrated 'Practice of Piety.' A small estate in the vale of Towry was the last retreat of Sir Richard Steele, under limited circumstances, where he suffered a paralytic stroke, which greatly impaired his mental faculties. The farm he possessed is within a quarter of a mile of the town, and is called Ty Gwyn.—Carmarthen gives the title of Marquess to the Duke of Leeds. Pop., in 1801, 5,548; in 1831, 9,995. Houses in the borough and parish, in 1831, 1,614, of which 738 were worth £10 a year and upwards. A. P. £16,684. Assessed taxes paid by the borough, in 1830, £1,660.—Poor rates, in 1837, £4,009. A work-house has been erected here, for the union of Carmarthen, by the poor-law commissioners. The Carmarthen poor-law union comprehends 29 parishes, with a population returned, in 1831, at 36,968. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £14,566. Expenditure, in 1838, £11,440.

CARNABY, a parish in the wapentake of Dickering, union of Bridlington, east riding, county of York; 3 miles south-west of Bridlington. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £7 8s. 11½d.; annual value, by the parliamentary returns, £40; gross income £44. The patron, in 1835, was Sir William Strickland, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 155. Houses 22. Acres 1,950. A. P. £2,270. Poor rates, in 1837, £111.

CARNARVONSHIRE,

Or CAERNARVONSHIRE, a county of North Wales; bounded on the west and north by Carnarvon bay, and the Menai strait; on the east by Denbighshire; on the south-east by Merionethshire; and on the south by Cardigan bay. It extends from north to south about 48 miles; from east to west about 20; and has been calculated to contain 348,160 statute acres, scarcely one-half of which is fit for cultivation.

Divisions.—It is divided into 10 hundreds, and comprises 71 parishes, and 3 market-towns. The chief towns are Carnarvon, Bangor, Pwllheli, Conway, Crickieth, and Nevin. The hundreds are Commintnaen, Creuddyn, Dinllaen, Erionydd, Gafflogian, Isaf, Is-Gorfa, Nant-Conway, Uchaf, and Uwch-Gorfa.—The county sends one member to parliament, who is polled for at Carnarvon, Conway, Capel-Cerrig, and Pwllheli. It is in the diocese of Bangor, province of Canterbury, and Northern circuit.—Pop., in 1801, 41,521; in 1831, 66,500. Houses 13,221. A. P. £125,198.—The amount of poor rates raised in this county, in 1785, was £1,688; in 1803, £9,138; in 1815, £15,197; in 1819, £23,152; in 1837, £24,325, of which £18,941 was applied to the relief of the poor; and in 1839, £27,600, of which £20,000 was expended on the poor. The county-rate, in 1816, was £2,745; in 1826, £2,279; in 1838, £3,817.

Physical features.—This is the most elevated county of Wales, and its mountain-ranges are among the most lofty in Britain. Here, wreathing his head in clouds, rises the celebrated Y-Wyddfa, or Snowdon, 3,557 feet above the level of the sea; and here—though shorn of half their terrors by an excellent turnpike road, which carries the traveller round their base with ease and safety—still frown "the cliffs or Penmaen Mawr, heaped hideous to the sky." Numerous lakes glitter among the mountains, and innumerable rivulets brawl around their bases, bearing beauty and fertility into the long and narrow valleys, where the simple inhabitants cherish the customs, and preserve in a high degree the simple manners of their ancestors.

Rivers.—The principal river is the Conway or Conwy, which rises in Llyn Conwy, and flows into the Irish sea after a course of 30 miles, for 12 of which it is navigable. Its tributaries are the Machno, the Lleder, and the Llugwy.—The Glas Llyn is a romantic stream, which discharges itself into Cardigan bay after a course of about 16 miles.—The Seiont and the Gwrfai both descend from the sides of Snowdon, and flow north-west into the Menai.

Productions, Trade, Roads, &c.—The mountains, composed of clay-slate of sundry formation, in many places contain copper, and in others lead; they also afford pure slate of the finest quality, great quantities of which are exported. The vale of Conway, in which the river of that name runs along the whole eastern border of the county, is a long and narrow tract, equally romantic and beautiful. It affords rich pasturage, and a succession of corn-fields and groves; and forms a pleasing contrast to the bleak region of Snowdon frowning above it. The agriculture is necessarily of the pastoral kind: dairy-farming and cattle, horse and sheep-breeding, are the principal occupations of the farmer. Where corn is grown, the principal crops are barley and oats. Black cattle are bred on the hills, and sold to the English drovers. The cattle are smaller than those of Anglesey; the sheep are a very diminutive breed, not unlike Merinoes; goats are reared, but not in such numbers as formerly; the pigs resemble those of Ireland, being tall and meagre; few domestic fowls are kept; indeed the farmers are chiefly dairymen, making their rents from the sale of butter, wool, and lambs. It would be unjust not to observe that agriculture here, formerly at so low an ebb, has been much improved; and that consequently the quantity of produce has been augmented. The employment of the poorer inhabitants, in summer and winter, after the necessary attention to their cattle and domestic concerns, is carding and spinning the wool of their own flocks, from which they manufacture large quantities of cloth and stockings. By the erection of the suspension-bridge over the Menai, this county has been connected with Anglesey on the one hand, while that at Conway opens an easy communication with Denbigh on the other. The construction of the great parliamentary road through the wild and untrodden tracts of Carnarvonshire has, besides improving what was before valuable, imparted a real value to dreary wastes once utterly valueless. Railroads have been introduced at Llanberis, Llandegai, Penrhyn, and Carnarvon; and have opened a wide field for profitably employing the labour of the poor, and the increasing capital of the rich.

History.—Carnarvonshire, in common with four of the neighbouring counties, was called Gwynedd in early times. In the successive and protracted endeavours of Romans, Saxons, Normans, and English, for the subjugation of Wales, this county was the scene of continued and desperate warfare, because the last retreat of unconquered freedom,

The Briton's last resource—his mountains hoar—
Where weeping Freedom from the contest fled,
And Cambria saw her dearest heroes dead.

Among the antiquities of the county may be mentioned the Welsh castles of Dolwyddelan, Crickieth, and Dolbadern, and the stately structures of Carnarvon and Conway castles, built by Edward I. Numerous Roman antiquities have at different times been discovered in this county.

CARNARVON, or CAERNARVON, a borough and town in the parish of Llanbeblig, hund. of le-Gorfa, union and county of Carnarvon; 235 miles north-west of London; on the east side of the Menai strait, which is here 2 miles broad; and at the mouth of the river Seiont.—Living, a curacy, not in charge, subordinate to the vicar of Llanbeblig. The Independents, and Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists, have also places of worship here; the Independent church was formed in 1791, the Calvinistic Methodist in 1786. The borough comprises about three-fourths of the parish, and reaches in some directions 2 miles beyond the town. The town is not large, nor of much importance; but many new houses have been erected of late years. Within the walls the town consists of ten streets, of which the principal is High-street, running from the Land to the Water-gate. Without the walls, the town consists of double the number of streets, with many handsome villas in the suburbs. It is paved at the expense of the corporation, and, until lately, this body lighted the town with gas from their own works. Now, however, they have let these works, and the town is under the provisions of the general highway act. Water is supplied partly by the corporation and partly by a private company. The new baths deserve to be particularly noticed, as uniting elegance and utility; they consist of two suites of hot and cold sea-water baths, with a large swimming-bath and dressing-rooms attached to each. The water is drawn from the sea, at the distance of half-a-mile, by a steam-engine, through iron pipes, and received into large iron reservoirs. They were erected by the Marquess of Anglesey, and cost upwards of £10,000. Without the wall is a beautiful terrace. At the north end of the terrace is a pier, which it is proposed to extend a mile out into the river. At the south end of the terrace stands the custom-house, from which the quay extends along the bank of the river, under the walls of the castle. The quay and harbour, which was dangerous from the nature of its bar, has been of late enlarged, and greatly improved, under the authority of an act of parliament, which established additional port-dues to defray the expense. The port is frequented by vessels of from 50 to 400 tons burden. The principal exports are slate and copper ore. The former are brought from the quarries of Llandberris and Llanliffn, a distance of 10 miles, by a railroad of recent construction; and are sent to all parts of Europe and America. The coasting-trade of this port is carried on with London, Dublin, Bristol, Glasgow, Cork, Waterford, and Liverpool, to which latter port there is steam conveyance. The imports are colonial produce, Manchester and Birmingham goods, groceries, London porter, &c.—Carnarvon received from Edward I. the first royal charter granted in the principality. The town, until the passing of the late municipal act, was governed by a mayor, who is constable of the castle by patent, 2 bailiffs, assisted by a town-clerk, and 2 sergeants-at-mace; and the Marquess of Anglesey was perpetual mayor of the town. It is now divided into two wards, and governed by a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors.—The county-gaol and house of correction stands in one of the public streets, and is small and insecure. It contains 6 cells, 4 airing-yards, and 7 rooms for debtors. The hard labour consists of the tread-wheel. The number of prisoners on 22d August, 1837, was 17.

Carnarvon has, in conjunction with Crickieth, Pwllheli, Nevin, and Conway, sent one member to parliament ever since the 37th of Henry VIII. The right of election was formerly in the burgesses of these five boroughs, amounting to about 800. The borough of Bangor has been added to the contributory district by the Reform act. The new electors are about 500 in number. Saturday is market-day. Fairs are held on March 12th, May 16th, August 4th, and December 5th, for cattle and pedlars' ware.

Edward II., who was afterwards the first of Wales, as the eldest son of the king of England, was born here, in one of the towers of the castle built by his father, Edward I., one of the finest of the kind in Europe, and externally still entire. The castle occupies a strong position at the west end of the town, and, before the use of artillery, must have been impregnable. You enter from the street, over what was formerly the bridge across the foss, from whence another well-built regular street extends to the gateway on the rampart, which surrounds the walls on the sea-side. On this rampart is a very agreeable walk. The castle and castle-yard seem about a mile in circumference; the latter having four sides not quite equal, and four round towers, about seventy yards between each, including the gateways on each side, in all twelve. The castle is an uncommonly majestic pile of building, and though a ruin, has still strong marks of its ancient grandeur. The founder's statue is placed over the gateway in the act of putting up his sword, in token of the peace he had concluded with this country. The castle appears to have had four portcullises, and several apertures from the top, for the purpose of annoying the assailants. The Eagle tower, so called from an enormous image of that bird placed on one of the battlements, is a noble building, having ten sides, the number of steps to the top 300. In this tower Edward II. was born. There still remains a gallery in one of the walls 60 feet long, about a yard and half wide, and 7 feet high. There are seen from the outside 12 towers, from which issue several smaller angular turrets. On the south of the castle is a gateway, called the Queen's gate, through which, by a temporary bridge, the queen entered. On the north and west sides, (as it did formerly also on part of the south,) the sea washes the walls of the castle, of which the foundation placed on a rock adds doubly to the magnificence of the whole. It was completed, say some, in the space of a single year; and was immediately garrisoned under John de Havering. Twelve years afterwards, in 1294, the constable, then Sir Roger de Puleadon, was seized by the natives in one of their hasty revolts, hanged, and afterwards decapitated. On the breaking out of civil warfare in the reign of Charles I., Carnarvon was seized for the parliament by Captain Swanley, who took in the town 400 prisoners, and a considerable quantity of arms and ammunition. The royalists regained the place, but were expelled again in 1646. In 1648 Sir John Owen attempted the recovery of the town for the king; but raised the siege to engage Colonels Carter and Twisselton; in which encounter he was taken prisoner. The property of the castle is still vested in the Crown; but it is held by the Earl of Uxbridge.—Behind the town is a hill called Twt hill, which has a near resemblance to the Calton hill at Edinburgh, and, like it, commands a most extensive and varied prospect. The neighbourhood has many fine seats, particularly those of the Marquess of Anglesey, Lord Boston, and Lord Newborough. Among the antiquities of this place are the ruins of Segointium, part of a Roman road, several Roman stations, and some of the ancient mansions of the first English settlers.

Pop., including the parish of Llanbeblig, in 1801, 3,626; in 1831, 7,642, of whom 6,877 were in the borough. Houses, in 1831, 1,477. A. P. £9,618. Assessed taxes, in 1830, £1,149. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,214. A workhouse for the union of Carnarvon has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners. It is capable of accommodating 200 persons. The Carnarvon poor-law union comprehends 16 parishes, with a population returned, in 1831, at 22,019.—There are penny-posts from Carnarvon to Tanybwllch, Beddgelert, and Tremadoc.

CARNFORTH, a township in the parish of Warton, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 6½ miles north-east of Lancaster; close on the Lancaster and Kendal canal. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 299. Houses 59. Acres 1,410. A. P. £2,254. Poor rates, in 1837, £192.

CARNGIWCH, a parish in the hund. of Gafflagian, union of Pwllheli, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 4½ miles north-west of Pwllheli. Living, a chapelry, not in charge, to the rectory of Ederri, in the dio. of Bangor. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 117. Houses 24. A. P. £336. Poor rates, in 1837, £44.

CARNO, a parish in the hund. of Llanidloes, union of Newtown and Llanidloes, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 10 miles west-north-west of Newtown, on the river Severn. It includes the townships of Llyslyn and Troascord, with Dirlwyn. Living, a discharged vicarage, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Bangor; rated at £10, by diocesan report at £67 3s. 9½d.; gross income £100. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. W. Wynn, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 741; in 1831, 1,010. Houses 178. A. P. £1,210. Poor rates, in 1837, £635.

CARNWALLAN HUNDRED, in the county of Carmarthen. Houses 2,010. Pop., in 1831, 10,899.

CARON, or TREFF-GARON, or ISCLAUDD, a small town and parish in the hund. of Pennarth, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 204 miles west-north-west of London. It lies in a hollow upon the banks of the river Berwyn, a small distance above its union with the Teifi. It includes the townships of Argoed and Ystrad, Blaen-Aeron, Blaen-Caron, Croes and Berwyn, Tre-Cefel, Tref-Lynn, and the chapelry of Caron-Urwch-Clawdd, otherwise Strata-Florida. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cardigan and dio. of St. David's; rated at £8; gross income £157. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. There are a Calvinistic Methodist chapel here, founded in 1774, and a day and Sunday school. Caron was formerly a corporate-town, but was disfranchised for corruption in 1742. Fairs are held on March 15th, 16th, and 17th, for the sale of horses, pigs, flannel, and hosiery, and the 2d Tuesday in October for cattle and horses. Thursday is the market-day. Pop., in 1801, 1,558; in 1831, 2,282. Houses 452. A. P. £5,095. Poor rates, in 1837, £357.

CARPERBY, a township in the parish of Aysgarth, north riding of Yorkshire; 8½ miles west-north-west of Middleham. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 320. Houses 69. Acres 3,460. A. P. £2,515. Poor rates, in 1837, £158.

CARRIGHOVA, a township in the parish of Llan-y-Mynorch, county of Denbigh; 5½ miles south-south-west of Oswestry in Salop; on the river Virniew, and near the Montgomeryshire canal. There is a day and boarding school here. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 362. Houses 84. A. P. £1,213. Poor rates, in 1837, £114.

CARRINGTON. See CARINGTON.

CARRINGTON, an extra-parochial township in the eastern division of the soke of Bolingbroke, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; 8 miles north of Boston. Living, a perpetual curacy with the curacies of Frith-Ville and West-Ville, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; gross income £96. Patrons, in 1835, trustees. The township was rendered parochial by act of parliament on the draining of Wildman fen, in 1812, and named after Lord Carrington, the principal proprietor. Pop., in 1821, 139; in 1831, 149. Houses 19. Acres 2,660. A. P. £5,869. Poor rates, in 1837, £90.

CARROCK, a mountain in Cumberland; 2 miles north of Keswick; rising over Mossdale to the altitude of 2,409 feet above sea-level, and 2,268 above the Derwent. It is a precipitous ridge rent with horrid chasms.

CARROW. See WARDEN.

CARSHALTON, or CASEHORTON, a parish and village, formerly a market-town, in the second division of the hund. of Wallington, union of Epsom, county of Surrey; 11 miles south-south-west of London. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £11 12s. 6d.; gross income £800; nett income £600. Patron, in 1835, J. Cator, Esq. The river Wandle runs through this parish, which is also intersected by a branch of the Surrey iron railway from Wandsworth to Croydon. There are a Roman Catholic chapel and a seminary connected with it, also 6 daily, 2 day and Sunday National schools, and 2 infant schools, in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 1,449; in 1831, 1,919. Houses 352. Acres 2,680. A. P. £11,335. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,338.

CARSINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Wirksworth, county of Derby; 2 miles west of Wirksworth, south of the Cromford and High Peak railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £5 1s. 10d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £120; gross income £176. Patron, the dean of Lincoln. There are here a school for 20 poor children belonging to the parish, with the adjoining township of Hopton, endowed with £60 per annum, and a daily and a boarding school. One side of the village is built under a ridge of limestone rock, whose grey crags jut over the tops of the houses. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 286. Houses 53. Acres 1,080. A. P. £1,858. Poor rates, in 1837, £173.

CARSWELL. See BUCKLAND with CARSWELL.

CARTHORPE, a township in the parish of Burneston, north riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles south-east of Bedale; near the river Swale. There are two daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 342. Houses 76. Acres 1,960. A. P. £2,286. Poor rates, in 1837, £57.

CARTINGTON. See CHARTINGTON.

CARTMEL, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Lonsdale, north of the sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster, union of Ulverstone. It includes the townships of Allithwaite Lower and Upper, Holker Lower and Upper, and Staveley, and the chapelries of Broughton-East and Cartmel-fell; 12 miles north-west of Lancaster. It stands in a valley surrounded by lofty and picturesque hills; the romantic fells of Conistone rising majestically behind them to the north. The bay of Morecambe bounds the parish on the south and south-east, where, at ebb-tide, there is a passage over the sands, called Lancaster sands, to Bolton. They are passed by two routes, one of them 9, the other 4 miles in length; but as neither of them can be taken by strangers without danger, guides are always in waiting. "For many centuries the priory of Cartmel was under the necessity of providing a proper person for this charge, and received Synodals and Peter-pence, to reimburse their expenses; but since the dissolution, the duchy of Lancaster grants it by letters-patent to a trusty man, whose yearly allowance from the receiver-general is £20. Nor should it appear, from the many accidents which have repeatedly occurred on these wastes of sand, that the precaution of a director over the fords is at all unnecessary; but larger still is the list of unfortunate people who have perished on their dreary surface, overtaken by darkness, or involved in unexpected mist. Inevitable destruction is the consequence of either of these disasters; since the moment the traveller has lost the distant marks which guide his course, diverted from the line he should pursue, he either turns towards the ocean; or, taking a contrary direction, wanders over the waste, 'still more and more astray,' till he is overtaken by the tide returning with an impetuosity not to be escaped, to cover the flat which for a time it had deserted." [Warner's Northern Counties, vol. ii. p. 125.] Living, a curacy, not in charge, united to that of Cartmel-fell, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; annual value by the parliamentary returns £88 6s. 9d.; gross income £113. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Burlington. The church is a spacious cruciform structure in the early style of English architecture, with a curious tower rising from the centre, and supported by firm central clustered pillars. In the choir are several handsome stalls decorated with carved foliage, which belonged to the canons before the Reformation. Under the north wall of the chancel stands the tomb-stone of William de Walton, one of the first priors of Cartmel; opposite to which is a monument to John Harrington, of Wraysholme tower. There are also monuments of the Lowther and Preston families, of Holker-hall. This parish possesses 15 daily and 2 boarding schools, besides 2 day and Sunday National schools, chiefly maintained by Lady Burlington. The streets are irregular and narrow, but the houses, built of stone and white-washed, give them a neat and cleanly appearance. In 1838 there were 2 cotton mills here, employing 314 hands. The market-day, formerly Monday, is now Tuesday. The fairs are two,—Whit-Monday and the Monday after the 23d of October, for pedlery. According to Camden, Egfrid, king of Northumberland, in A. D. 677, made a gift of this parish with all the Britons inhabiting it to St. Cuthbert. Here Ethelred, after being restored to the throne of that kingdom, having decoyed from their sanctuary at York the two sons of Alfwold, who had been advanced to the throne upon his expulsion, murdered them, and here "William Marschal, the elder Earl of Pembroke, founded, A. D. 1188, a priory of regular canons of the order of St. Austin, which was dedicated to the blessed Virgin, and rated, 26th of Henry VIII., at £91 6s. 3d. per annum, Dugd.; £124 2s. 1d., Speed; £212 11s. 10d. second valuation. Herein, about the time of the dissolution, were reckoned 10 religious, and 48 servants. The site of this monastery was granted, 32nd of Henry VIII., to Thomas Holcroft." Tanner's Not. Mon. Three miles south of the town is the Holy-well, issuing from the base of Humphry-head, a limestone rock, which projects over Lancaster sands; it is much resorted to during the summer months. Near it is Wraysholme tower, formerly a seat of the Harrington family. Pop., in 1801, 4,007; in 1831, 4,802. Houses 905. Acres 23,960. A. P. £20,318. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,738.

CARTMEL-FELL, a chapelry in the above parish, of the certified value of £8 10s. 2d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £46 10s.; gross income £67. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Burlington. There is a daily school here with a small endowment. Pop., in 1801, 322; in 1831, 347. Houses 62. Acres 2,900. A. P. £2,133. Poor rates, in 1837, £182.

CARTWORTH, a township in the parish of Kirk-Burton, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles south of Huddersfield; on a branch of the river Colne. There are two day and Sunday schools here, one of which is a National school, and contains 21 pupils. Pop., in 1801, 997; in 1831, 1,786. Houses 315. Acres 2,820. A. P. £1,252. Poor rates, in 1837, £308.

CARWOOD. See SIBDON-CARWOOD.

CARY. See CAREY.

CASCOB, a parish and township, partly situated in the borough of New Radnor, union of Presteigne, county of Radnor, and partly in the hund. of Wigmore, county of Hereford; 5½ miles west-north-west of Presteigne. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; rated at £7 0s. 7½d., annual value by the parliamentary returns £145; gross income £148. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. Pop., in 1831, 158. Houses 26. Poor rates, in 1837, £50.

CASEHORTON. See CARSHALTON.

CASHIO HUNDRED, formerly called the Liberty of St. Alban's, in Hertfordshire. Area 87,220 acres. Houses 5,225. Pop., in 1831, 28,519.

CASHIO. See WATFORD with CASHIOBERTY.

CASSINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Wootton, union of Woodstock, county of Oxford; 5 miles north-west of Oxford, north of the river Isis, and west of the Oxford canal. It includes the hamlet of Worton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £12; gross income £184. The patrons are the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. There is a daily school here with a small endowment. Pop., in 1801, 374; in 1831, 428. Houses 87. Acres 2,900. A. P. £3,332. Poor rates, in 1837, £146.

CASSOP, a township in the parish of Kelso, county of Durham; 4½ miles south-east of Durham; near the Hartlepool and Great North of England railway. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 69. Houses 11. Acres 1,150. A. P. £1,006. Poor rates, in 1837, £10.

CASTERTON. See HAM with THROWLEY and CASTERTON.

CASTERTON, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Lonsdale, Westmoreland; 2 miles north-east of Kirkby-Lonsdale, and to the east of the river Linn. In Casterton there are two houses called Chapel-houses, and a place near unto them called Chapel-head-close, where a chapel formerly stood; but the ground is now ploughed up; and there is a well nigh unto it called St. Coumes (St. Columba) Well. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 302. Houses 58. Acres 4,320. A. P. £2,648. Poor rates, in 1837, £160.

CASTERTON (GREAT), or BRIGG-CASTERTON, a parish in the hund. of East, union of Stamford, county of Rutland; 2½ miles north-north-west of Stamford, on the Great North road. Living, a rectory with Pickworth, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £11 2s. 11d.; gross income £760. Patron, in 1835, the Marquess of Exeter. There are two daily schools in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 306; in 1831, 353. Houses 67. Acres 1,590. A. P. £1,556. Poor rates, in 1837, £97.

CASTERTON (LITTLE), a parish in the hund.

of East, union of Stamford, county of Rutland; 2 miles north-north-west of Stamford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £6 15s. 5d.; gross income £266. Patroness, in 1835, the Countess of Pomfret. There is a day and Sunday National school here. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 135. Houses 21. Acres 1,450. A. P. £1,634. Poor rates, in 1837, £50.

CASTLE-ACRE, or EAST-ACRE, a parish in the Lynn division of the hund. of Freebridge, union of Freebridge Lynn, Norfolk; 4 miles north of Swaffham, northern bank of the river Setch. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 6s. 8d., annual value by the parliamentary returns £70. Tithes commuted in 1840. The church is a spacious structure, with a lofty tower. Patron, in 1835, T. W. Coke, Esq. There are also places of worship for Baptist and Wesleyan Methodists here, and 3 daily schools. This parish takes its name from a magnificent castle, founded here by the Earl of Warrene, soon after the Conquest, of which nothing now remains but ruins. He also founded a priory here for monks of the Cluniac order, who were subordinate to the house of Lewes, in Sussex. This was dedicated to the blessed Virgin Mary, valued the 26th Henry VIII. at £306 11s. 4d., ob. q. Dugd.; and £324 17s. 5d., ob. q. as Speed; and granted 29th Henry VIII. to Thomas, Duke of Norfolk. Of this priory, the ruins are venerable, and exceedingly picturesque. It has fairs for toys on May 1st and August 5th. Pop., in 1801, 842; in 1831, 1,333. Houses 277. Acres 3,210. A. P. £3,954. Poor rates, in 1837, £575.

CASTLE-ASHBY. See ASHBY CASTLE.

CASTLE-BARNARD. See BARNARD CASTLE.

CASTLE-BYTHE, a parish in the hund. of Kemees, union of Haverfordwest, county of Pembroke; 10 miles north-east of Haverford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £6, in the parliamentary returns at £90. Patron, the lord-chancellor. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 174; in 1831, 284. Houses 48. A. P. £733. Poor rates, in 1837, £63.

CASTLE-CAER-EINEON, a parish, partly in the hund. of Cawrse, and partly in that of Mathrafel, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 4½ miles west-south-west of Welsh Pool. It consists of the townships of Trehellog and Gaer. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; rated at £12 17s. 6d.; gross income £672; nett income £575. Patron, the bishop. There is a daily school here, partly supported by an endowment of £400. Pop., in 1801, 741; in 1831, 783. Houses 134. A. P. £3,324. Poor rates, in 1837, £415.

CASTLE-CAMPS, a parish in the hund. of Chilford, union of Linton, county of Cambridge; 5 miles east-south-east of Linton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £16 4s. 2d.; gross income £571. The patrons are the governors of the Charter-house, London, to which foundation the manor belongs. There are a Baptist church here, formed in 1817, and three daily schools. Here are the ruins of a magnificent castle, formerly the residence of the Vereas, Earls of Oxford. Pop., in 1801, 546; in 1831, 734. Houses 144. Acres 2,613. A. P. £3,222. Poor rates, in 1837, £469.—“Not far from hence,” says Carter, “are the remains of those great and large ditches which were undoubtedly thrown up by the East Angles to prevent the incursions of the Mercians, who frequently ruined all before them. The first begins at Hinkston, and runs eastward by Hildersham, towards Horseheath, for 5 miles together. The second, called Brent-ditch, runs from Melborne by Foulmere.”

CASTLE-CAREY, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Catsash, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 113 miles south-west of London, romantically situated, and deservedly admired. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £11 16s. 3d.; gross income £405. The church, which is placed upon an eminence, is seen from all sides to great advantage. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here, and there are 11 daily and 4 boarding schools. In 1838 there were 2 flax-mills, employing 77 hands, within this parish. The market-day is Tuesday. The fairs are the Tuesday before Palm-Sunday, May 1st, and Whit-Tuesday, for bullocks and sheep. It was in the manor-house here that Charles II. found refuge after the battle of Worcester. Pop., in 1801, 1,281; in 1831, 1,794. Houses 328. Acres 3,640. A. P. £3,877. Poor rates, in 1837, £879.

CASTLE CARLETON. See CARLETON (CASTLE).

CASTLE-CARRACK, a parish in Eakdale ward, union of Bampton, county of Cumberland; 10½ miles east of Carlisle. The river Gelt runs through this parish. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £5 12s. 11d., annual value by the parliamentary returns £130; gross income £102. Patron, in 1835, the dean and chapter of Carlisle. There is a day and Sunday school here, endowed with £12 per annum, arising from 20 acres of land allotted for this purpose on the enclosure of the moors, pursuant to an act of parliament in 1801. There is abundance of both lime and free-stone in this parish, and near the church there is a mineral spring, the water of which is similar to that of Gilsland spa. Pop., in 1801, 250; in 1831, 383. Houses 72. Acres 3,640. A. P. £2,208. Poor rates, in 1837, £73.

CASTLE-CHURCH, a parish in the east division of the hund. of Cuttlestone, union and county of Stafford; 1 mile south-west of Stafford, close upon the Birmingham and Liverpool railway. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; certified value £9 6s. 8d., annual value by the parliamentary returns £52 10s.; gross income £122. Patron, the lord-chancellor. This parish possesses 4 daily schools, one of which is a National school, besides a boarding and a day and Sunday school. There is a dissenting chapel at Forebridge. Pop., in 1801, 563; in 1831, 1,374. Houses 239. Acres 3,460. A. P. £7,333. Poor rates, in 1837, £450.

CASTLE-COMBE, a parish in the union and hund. of Chippenham, county of Wilts; 5½ miles north-west of Chippenham, in the neighbourhood of the Great Western railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £9. Patron, in 1835, H. Scroop, Esq., in whose family the manor has remained for upwards of four centuries. There are an Independent church here, formed in 1762, and also a day and Sunday National school, with a lending library attached. Castle-Combe is a considerable village, and in ancient times was the residence of many opulent districts, and was celebrated for its castle, the baronial residence of the Dunstanvilles. This celebrated strength occupied the summit of a hill on the north side of the town, but was dismantled before the close of the 14th century, and its remains are now scarcely discernible. A fair is held on May 4th for horned cattle, sheep, and horses. Pop., in 1801, 567; in 1831, 655. Houses 137. Acres 1,770. A. P. £2,731. Poor rates, in 1837, £133.—“Castle-Combe,” says Britton, “was anciently noted for a custom, once generally practised, but now discontinued. The inhabistants used to meet annually about Whitsuntide, at what was termed a Church-ale, to distribute alms to the indigent, and to make merry. Near the church was a house furnished with the utensils requisite for dressing victuals. After a sober entertainment the younger individuals of the party amused themselves with dancing, bowling, and shooting with the long bow at a mark, under the inspection of their seniors. Aubrey, who mentions this custom, supposed it to have originated from the Agapæ or Love Feasts of the primitive Christians. From the contributions at such meetings, and the produce of the boxes for alms placed in churches, the poor were chiefly supported before the institution of parochial rates.

CATTLE-DURRAN, or DWYRHAN, a chapelry in the parish of Kilmaenllwadd, hund. of Derllys, county of Carmarthen, South Wales. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Kilmaenllwadd. Pop., in 1821, 80; in 1831, 85. Houses 17. Poor rates, in 1837, £28.

CATTLE-DYKES. See BARTON-UPON-HUMBER.

CATTLE-EATON, a parish in the hund. of Highworth, Cricklade, and Staple, union of Highworth and Swindon, county of Wilts; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Highworth, on the river Thames, and close upon the Thames and Severn canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £19; reported gross income £650; aggregate amount of tithes £558 5s. 10d. Patron, in 1835, H. Goddard, Esq. There is a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 295; in 1831, 302. Houses 67. Acres 2,020. A. P. £3,224. Poor rates, in 1837, £185.

CATTLE-EDEN, a parish in the south division of Easington ward, union of Easington, co.-palatine of Durham; 10 miles east by south of Durham. The river Eden runs through this parish, intersecting a deep valley, and surrounded with rich scenery. Living, a curacy, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Durham; certified value £12 4s., annual value by the parliamentary returns £63 5s.; gross income £62. The chapel was built at the expense of Rowland Burdon, Esq., who is also patron. There is a daily school here. Castle-Eden house, the mansion of Rowland Burdon, Esq., is a handsome modern building, and commands a number of admirable views both of land and water. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 260. Houses 46. Acres 1,630. A. P. £1,521. Poor rates, in 1837, £123.

CATTLEFORD, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, west riding of Yorkshire; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Wakefield, on the river Aire, and close upon the York and Derby railway. It includes the township of Castleford and Houghton-Glass. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £20 13s. 1½d.; gross income £664; nett income £55. The church is supposed to occupy the site of a Roman camp; and the place has been identified by some antiquaries with the Lagecium of that people. Patron, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. This parish possesses 8 daily schools. Pop., in 1801, 1,175; in 1831, 1,587. Houses 342. Acres 2,040. A. P. £2,851. Poor rates, in 1837, £361. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 793; in 1831, 1,141. Houses 255. Acres 540. A. P. £1,457. Poor rates, in 1837, £246.

CATTLE-FROME, a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Ledbury, county of Hereford; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Ledbury; bounded on the west by the river Frome. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £5 13s. 4d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, F. Truman, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 223. Houses 38. Acres

1,320; of which 127 were in hops in 1834. A. P. £1,562. Poor rates, in 1837, £169.

CATTLE-GRESLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Church-Gresley, Derbyshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Burton-upon-Trent. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 126. Houses 25. Poor rates, in 1837, £52.

CATTLE-HEDINGHAM. See HEDINGHAM-CASTLE.

CATTLE-HOWARD, the seat of the Earl of Carlisle; situated 4 miles south-west of New Warton, in Yorkshire. This magnificent mansion was built by Charles, third Earl of Carlisle, on the site of the old castle of Hunderskelf. It consists of a rich centre of the Corinthian order, with a cupola, and two extensive wings, and is reckoned the masterpiece of its architect, Sir John Vanbrugh. The hall is 35 feet square, and 60 feet high: the walls were painted by Pellegrini. The saloon is 34 feet by 24. The dining-room is 28 feet by 21, and the drawing-room 23 feet by 27; the latter room is hung with very rich tapestry. The museum is 24 feet square, and the antique gallery 160 feet by 20. The collection of paintings is very valuable; all those over the doors in the state-apartments, being 23 in number, were painted by Sebastian Ricci.

CATTLE-INN, an extra-parochial part of the borough of Bruen, county of Brecon, South Wales. It occupies the site of the old castle of Brecknock. Pop., in 1821, 20; in 1831, 24. Houses 2.

CATTLE-LEAVINGTON, a township in the parish of Kirk-Leavington, north riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Yarm. A branch of the river Tees runs through this parish. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £55 17s. 6d. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 45. Houses 7. Acres 730. A. P. £1,348. Poor rates, in 1837, £107.

CATTLE-MARTIN HUNDRED, in the county of Pembroke, South Wales. Its situation is peninsular, having Milford haven on the north and west, and the Bristol channel on the south and east. Houses 834. Pop., in 1831, 5,024.

CATTLE-MARTIN, an extensive parish, containing a village of the same name, in the hund. of Castle-Martin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales; 5 miles south-west by west of Pembroke. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £7 17s. 6d.; annual value, by the parliamentary returns, £98; gross income £90. The patron and impropriator is Lord Cawdor. There is a daily school here. The remains of the castle, or ancient British earthwork, which gives name to the parish, are still to be seen in the village. Pop., in 1801, 338; in 1831, 457. Houses 71. A. P. £2,572. Poor rates, in 1837, £455.

CATTLE-MORTON, or MORTON-FOLIOT, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Preshore, union of Upton-upon-Severn, county of Worcester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Upton-upon-Severn. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to the vicarage of Longdon. There are three small daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 659; in 1831, 673. Houses 160. Acres 3,780. A. P. £4,510. Poor rates, in 1837, £162.

CATTLE-NORTHWICH, a township in that part of the parish of Great Budworth, which is in the second division of the hund. of Eddisbury, co.-palatine of Chester; 6 miles north-north-west of Middlewich, intersected by the Warrington and Newton railway. There are two daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 692. Houses 141. Acres 100. A. P. £991. Poor rates, in 1837, £22.

CATTLE-RISING, a parish and borough—formerly a market-town—having separate jurisdiction, locally in the Lynn division of the hund. of Freebridge, union of Freebridge Lynn, county of Norfolk; 5 miles south-south-east of King's Lynn. It is a borough by prescription, with a jurisdiction extending over the parishes of Castle-Rising, Roydon, North Wootton and South Wootton. The number of occupied houses within borough, in 1831, was 166; assessed taxes, same year, £126 19s. 4d. Living, a rectory united with that of Roydon, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the rector, formerly in the dio. of Norwich, now in that of Ely; rated at £8; gross income £428. The church is an ancient structure with a square tower rising from the centre. The patrons, in 1835, were the Hon. Fulke Howard and Mrs. Howard. There are two daily schools here. Castle-Rising was formerly a considerable sea-port. Its harbour, however, became gradually choked up, its trade declined, and its bustling market, which was held twice in the week, has long been discontinued. It derives its name from an ancient castle which stood on an eminence to the south of the town. The castle has long been in ruins, but its ruins still attest its ancient strength and magnificence. "It was surrounded by a vast circular ditch, the form of which, according to Procopius's description, answers the Gothic manner of fortifying; and therefore 'tis probably a work of the Normans, who are descended from the Goths. The Saxons indeed made their fosse circular; but then it was both narrow and less deep, and generally of greater circumference. But the Romans also seem to have had something of a fortification here, the shore being much exposed to piracies, (in which the Saxons showed themselves cunning artists,) and the place as it were guarding and overlooking one of the best harbours in these parts; which conjecture may seem well-grounded from hence, that there was dug up near this place a coin of Constantine the Great, which Sir Henry Spelman says was brought him. There were three towers in the walls of this castle, which the lords of Hunstanton, Watton and Ridon were bound to defend and maintain; and to support their men, they had a power to take provision of the circumjacent villages, paying for it within forty days, according to a statute made anno 3 Edward I. This place was from the Conqueror's time the manor and seat of the family of the Albinies, earls of Arundel, who enjoyed, by virtue of their castle here, a third part of the customs of the port of Lynn, till the people of Lynn besieged him in his castle, and so streightened him, that he was forced to release his right to them, and swear never to attempt their recovery."—[Magna Britannia, Edn. 1738.] It was the property of the Howards; and was often the temporary residence of royalty. Here, the 'she-wolf of France,' Isabel, after the murder of her husband, Edward II., and the death of her paramour, Mortimer, was shut up from the year 1330 till her decease in 1358. The government of the borough was originally vested in a mayor, 12 aldermen, a recorder, high-steward, and other officers; in more recent times the whole was vested in two aldermen who alternately elected each other to the office of mayor! and who, until the disfranchisement of their snug little borough by the reform bill, enjoyed the privilege of sending a representative each to parliament! This place gives the title of baron to the duke of Norfolk. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 358. Houses 65. Acres 2,330. A. P. £1,400. Poor rates, in 1837, £218.

CASTLE-THORPE, a parish about 2½ miles in length, and 1½ in breadth, in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport Pagnell, county of Buckingham; 4 miles north-north-east of Stony-Stratford, intersected by the Birmingham railway, and bounded on the west by the river Yare. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Hanslope, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln. Patronage with the rectory, of Hanslope. There is a Sunday school in this parish. Here was the ancient castle of the barony of Hanslope. A deep ditch and a lofty artificial mount are the only remains of this building. Earl Spencer is the chief proprietor in this parish. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 366. Houses 70. Acres 1,380. A. P. £1,767. Poor rates, in 1837, £289.

CASTLETON, a parish in the hund. of High Peak, union of Chapel-en-le-Frith, county of Derby; 5 miles north of Tideswell. The river Nen flows through this parish. It includes the chapelry of Edale. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £6 7s. 6d.; gross income £190. The church is a fine specimen of early architecture. Patron, the bishop of Chester. There are three daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £20 6s. per annum. Castleton is a considerable village, situated at the bottom of a rugged eminence, on which is seated the ancient castle from which it derives its name. The inhabitants draw their means of subsistence principally from the mining-district by which it is surrounded. In 1838 there was a cotton-mill here, employing 93 hands. Fairs are held on April 21st and October 3d.—Directly below the keep of the castle rises a precipitous edge of limestone rock; at the height of fifty feet in the face of this rock, is the entrance to the cavern of the Peak—or as it is vulgarly called, the Devil's Cave—through a tolerably well-formed though somewhat depressed Gothic arch, 46 feet high, and 120 feet wide. Within this arch the cavern recedes about 90 feet. Beyond the first recess the light of day does not penetrate; the remainder must be examined with torches. A low and narrow arch leads into a spacious opening called the Bell-house, whence a path leads to First Water. This is a piece of water 42 feet in breadth, passing below a massive arch of rocks, which is in some places not more than 20 inches above the surface of the water. Laying himself along the bottom of a canoe, the visitor, with his guide, shoots through below the depending rocks into an opening 220 feet in breadth, and 121 feet in height. At the farther extremity of this excavation the stream, which flows along the bottom, forms what is called the Second Water; but this is generally passed on foot, and leads to Roger Rain's house, a projecting pile of rocks, so called from the petrifying water which incessantly dribbles from the numerous crevices. Beyond this is an appalling hollow called the Chancel, from which an opening leads into the Devil's cellar, and thence by a rapid descent to what is called the Half-way house. From the half-way house a passage leads into another immense concavity, which, from its being formed like a bell, is called the Great Tom of Lincoln. This is perhaps the finest of the whole; and, when brilliantly illuminated, has a sublime and pleasing effect. A little beyond this the opening becomes so narrow as to be barely sufficient to carry off the water. This astonishing excavation, wholly formed of limestone strata, abounding in marine exuviae, with an occasional intermixture of schist, extends from the entrance to its farthest extremity, 2,300 feet, and is supposed to be 645 feet in depth from the summit of the mountain.—About a mile distant from this is the Speedwell level, or Navigation mine. The descent is by about 100 steps, beneath an arched vault leading to the sough or level, where the explorer is by a boat conveyed over a broad stream, bounded by an immense gulf, the depth of which has never been accurately ascertained, though sounded by a line of 350 feet, above which the roof, so great is its elevation, cannot be seen even with the aid of rockets. A little to the west of the Speedwell mine is the Odin lead-mine, which although it has been carried on for many centuries, is still one of the most productive in the county. At a short distance from this, rising to the height of 1,300 feet above the vale of Castleton, is Mam-Tor, or the Mother-hill, called also, from the fragments of shale and gritstone continually falling from its southern side, the Shivering mountain. "It is an immense hill," says Rhodes, "composed of a very flaky substance; and sometimes in winter, during a severe frost, the decomposition is so rapid, that the shivering mountain, as it is called, keeps a continual discharge, accompanied with a gentle noise, resembling the sound of a river passing over its pebbled bed, as it comes upon the ear softened by distance. Once, during the stillness of a November night, heard the rush of this mountain very distinctly in my bed-room in Castleton, and I listened to the murmurs that it made, but was utterly unable to discover the cause. From the top of Mam-Tor we had a delightful view into Edale, which a modern tourist has described as a place in which the inhabitants, secluded in the bosom of the mountains from the bustle of the world, appear to enjoy all the quiet and security that pervaded the happy vale of Rasselas. The view from this eminence is not of a common description: the most striking features of the Peak of Derbyshire—its loftiest hills, and some of its loveliest dales—are included in the prospect." On its summit are the remains of a camp, supposed to be Saxon, with the greater part of the rampart entire. Not far from this is the Water Hall mine, from which is procured the beautiful fluor spar, locally known by the name of Blue John. The castle is supposed by Mr. King—who has minutely described it in the 6th volume of the Archæologia—to have been a place of royal residence during Saxon times. From William Peverel, a natural son of William the Conqueror, who bestowed upon him this, with 13 other lordships in the county, it received the name which it still bears,—Peverel's Palace in the Peak. The castle-yard, the walls of which are in some places still 20 feet high, and 9 thick, seems to have occupied the whole summit of the hill. Pop., in 1801, 1,240; in 1831, 1,323. Houses 264. Acres 10,100. A. P. £5,397. Poor rates, in 1837, £361.

CASTLETON, a parish in the hund. and union of Sherborne, Sherborne division, county of Dorset; about a mile north-east of Sherborne. Living, a curacy in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Salisbury; certified value £7; annual value by the parliamentary returns £137; gross income £81. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Digby. There are three small daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 125; in 1831, 186. Houses 28. Acres 30. A. P. £267. Poor rates, in 1837, £99.

CASTLETON, a township in the parish of Rochdale, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east by south of Rochdale; close upon the Rochdale canal. There are 37 daily schools here, two of which are supported by endowment. Pop., in 1801, 5,460; in 1831, 11,079. Houses 2,088. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £13,515. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,814.

CASTLETON, a hamlet in the parish of Marshfield, county of Monmouth; $\frac{3}{4}$ mile south-west of Newport. There are a Baptist and a Calvinistic Methodist church here; the former was organized in 1823. Fairs are held on May 6th, July 25th, and November 26th, for cattle.

CASTLEY, a township in the parish of Leathley, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles east-north-east of Otley; on the northern bank of the river Warfe. There is a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 82; in 1831, 118. Houses 23. Acres 440. A. P. £743. Poor rates, in 1837, £37.

CASTLE WARD, in the county of Northumberland, consists of two divisions,—east and west. Area 103,680 acres. Houses 11,875. Pop., in 1831, 71,533.

CASTLE-WRIGHT, a township in the parish of Mainstone, hund. and county of Montgomery, North Wales. It is in the immediate vicinity of Montgomery. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 182. Houses 28. A. P. £399. Poor rates, in 1837, £64.

CASTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Wayland, county of Norfolk; 4 miles south-east of Watton. Living, a rectory annexed to Nockland, All Saints, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich. There is a Sunday school here. Pop., in 1801, 307; in 1831, 541. Houses 108. Acres 1,680. A. P. £3,131. Poor rates, in 1837, £269.

CASTOR, or CASTRE, a parish in the liberty and union of Peterborough, county of Northampton; 5 miles west of Peterborough, bounded on the south-west by the river Nen. It includes the hamlet of Ailesworth and the chapelry of Sutton and Upton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £52 12s. 8d.; annexed to the see of Peterborough. The church is a spacious cruciform edifice, surmounted by a spire. There are three daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 815; in 1831, 1,198. Houses 201. Acres 7,020. A. P. £6,354. Poor rates, in 1837, £282.—Castor, and the village of Chesterton on the opposite side of the Nen, occupy the site of the Roman station Durobrivæ. "And doubtless it was a place of more than ordinary note, because in the fields adjoining, commonly called Normanton Fields, instead of Dormanton Fields, which is the proper name, such quantities of Roman coins are thrown up, that a man would really think they had been sown there: almost all of them are of copper. They are the coins of many emperors, all from Trajan to Valens. Some pieces of urns, and other antique vessels of earth have also been found there, as also stones of foundations and ruined walls, little tiles, ridge-tiles, and bricks. From the Roman highway, going from thence, called Erming-street, which, having gone single awhile, divides itself into two, the causeways whereof are still to be seen, the one called the Forty-Foot way, leading to Stamford, and the other, named Long Ditch, or High Street, by Lolham bridges, (bridges certainly of a very great antiquity, of which eleven arches are still to be seen, though cleft and ruinous with age,) through West-Deeping into Lincolnshire. These two ways part at Upton above-mentioned. From the way called by the inhabitants, the Lad, Conyburrow's Way, for Kyneburga's Way, which, from all conjectures, appears to be nothing but a Roman paved way, leading from a fortress on the other side of the river Nene to the castle or principal fort upon the hill, where now the church stands, which was the residence then of the Roman governor, or chief commander. The city was destroyed by the Danes. Domesday-book speaks thus of Castor:—The church of Petersburg holdeth Castra, where are two hides; the land consists of twelve carucates; in the demesne are two, with one servant, and thirteen villains, and two bordemen, with three carucates and an half. There is a mill of eight shillings, and fifteen acres of meadow, a wood, six quarentenes long, and four broad. It was formerly twenty shillings, but of late 'tis worth fifty pounds. The manor at present belongs to the dean and chapter of Peterborough, and is worth to them £51 10s. 7d. In Castor-field near Gunwade ferry are two long stones standing upon a balk, which erroneous tradition hath given out to be two draughts of arrows from Alwalton churchyard thither, the one of Robin Hood, the other of little John; but the truth is, they were set up to testify that the carriages of stone from Bernack to Gunwade ferry, and from thence to be conveyed to St. Edmunds-Bury, should pass that way toll free. They are still called St. Edmund's Stones, and the balk St. Edmund's Balk. The stones on the top are nicked after the manner of arrows, in memory of St. Edmund, who was shot to death with arrows."—Magna Britannia, vol. iii. Edn. 1738.

CASWELL-BAY, a bay in the Bristol channel, hund. of Swansea. There are the ruins of an ancient chapel here, and some highly romantic scenery. It is about 4 miles south of Swansea.

CATCH-BURN, a township in the parish of Morpeth, east division of Castle-ward, county of Northumberland; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Morpeth, within the new boundaries of which borough it is included; south of the river Wansbeck. It includes Morpeth castle, Parkhouse and Stobhil. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 189. Houses 35. Acres 1,570. Poor rates, in 1837, £43.

CATCHERSIDE, a township in the parish of Kirkwhelpington, county of Northumberland; 15 miles west of Morpeth; east of the river Reed. Pop., in 1801, 13; in 1831, 14. Houses 4. Poor rates, in 1837, £2.

CATCLIFFE, a township in the parish of Rotherham, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south of Rotherham; intersected by the York and Derby railway. There are two daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £10 per annum. Pop., in 1801, 185; in 1831, 196. Houses 42. Acres 930. Poor rates, in 1837, £66.

CATCOTT, a chapelry in the parish of Moorlinch, hund. of Whitley, union of Bridgewater, county of Somerset; 7 miles east-north-east of Bridgewater. Living, a donative not in charge; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £50. Patron, in 1835, Lord Henniker. There are two daily schools here. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 651. Houses 108. Acres 2,060. A. P. £2,445. Poor rates, in 1837, £135.

CATEBY. See CADEBY, Yorkshire.

CATESBY-ABBEY, a parish in the hund. of Fawsley, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 5 miles south-west of Daventry, east of the Oxford canal. It includes the hamlet of Newbold-Grounds. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10. Patrons, in 1835, T. and M. Scafton, Esqrs. "Robert, the son of Philip de Esseby, as early at least as the time of Richard I., built here a priory of Benedictine nuns to the honour of St. Mary and St. Edmund. It was endowed at the dissolution, when herein were ten religious, with £132 10s. 11d. q. per ann. Dugd.; £145 0s. 6d. Speed. The site was granted 28th Henry VIII. to John Onley." Tanner's Not. Mon. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 103. Houses 21. Acres 1,990. A. P. £3,892. Poor rates, in 1837, £139.

CATFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Happing, county of Norfolk; 12 miles north-west of Norwich, bounded on the west by the river Bure. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 10s. 0d.; gross income £500. Patrons, alternately the bishop of Norwich and the earl of Shrewsbury. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 476; in 1831, 602. Houses 100. Acres 2,400. A. P. £2,041. Poor rates, in 1837, £238.

CATFOSS, a township in the parish of Siggles-thorne, north division of the wapentake of Holderness, east riding of Yorkshire; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Beverley. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 54.

Houses 7. Acres 1,020. A. P. £1,261. Poor rates, in 1837, £43.

CATHEDINE, a parish in the hund. of Talgarth, union of Brecknock, county of Brecon, South Wales; 7 miles north-west of Crickhowell. A branch of the river Wye flows through this parish. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; rated at £5 2s. 11d.; in the parliamentary returns at £100; gross income £155. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £155. Patron, in 1835, Rich. Davies, Esq. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 158. Houses 35. A. P. £1,159. Poor rates, in 1837, £86.

CATHERINE (Str.), a parish in the hund. of Bathford, union of Bath, county of Somerset; 4 miles north-north-east of Bath. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Bath-Easton. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 154. Houses 30. Acres 750. A. P. £4,296. Poor rates, in 1837, £116.

CATHERINE (Str.), a precinct in the Tower division of the hund. of Ossulstone, county of Middlesex. Pop., in 1801, 2,652; in 1831, 72. Houses 12. Acres 14. A. P. £16,827. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,155. The extraordinary decrease in the population of this district was owing to the appropriation of a great part of it to the new docks.

CATHERINE'S (Str.), an ancient chapel and land-mark in the county of Dorset; 9 miles west-south-west of Dorchester.

CATHERINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Finch-Dean, Alton, union of Catherington, south division of the county of Southampton; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Peterfield. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £9 5s. 10d.; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, J. Maberly, Esq. There are five daily schools here, two of which are endowed. One—a national school—was commenced in 1827 for the parishes of Blendworth, Catherington, and the chapelry of Idsworth. Pop., in 1801, 1,199; in 1831, 944. Houses 163. Acres 3,540. A. P. £4,299. Poor rates, in 1837, £686. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Catherington, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 80 persons. The Catherington poor-law union comprehends 5 parishes, embracing an area of 20 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 1,950. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £2,796. Expenditure, in 1838, £1,279.

CATHERSTONE-LEWSTON, a parish in the hund. of Whitechurch Canonorum, union and division of Bridport, county of Dorset; 4 miles north-east of Lyme-Regis, on the east of the river Char. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £2 16s. 10d., annual value by the parliamentary returns, £50; gross income £67. Patron, in 1835, executors of John Ross, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 20; in 1831, 27. Houses 4. Acres 90. A. P. £1,153. Poor rates, in 1837, £8.

CATHINOG HUNDRED, in the county of Carmarthen. Houses 1,923. Pop., in 1831, 9,683.

CATON, a chapelry in the parish of Lancaster, county of Lancaster; 5 miles north-east of Lancaster, on the river Lune. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, valued in the parliamentary returns at £145; gross income £100. Patron, the vicar of Lancaster. There are four daily schools here, one of which has a small endowment. Pop., in 1801, 1,190; in 1831, 1,166. Houses 205. Acres 8,070. A. P. £5,293. Poor rates, in 1837, £550.

CATMERE, a parish in the hund. of Compton, union of Wantage, county of Berks; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Ilsley. Living, a rectory, united to the rectory of Peasemore, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £5 5s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, J. A. Heublen, Esq. Pop., in 1821, 85; in 1831, 88. Houses 13. Acres 660.

CATSASH HUNDRED, in the eastern division of Somerset. Area 25,340 acres. Houses 1,343. Pop., in 1831, 7,516.

CATSFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Ninfeld, rape of Hastings, union of Battle, county of Sussex; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Battle. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £7 9s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £311. Patron, in 1835, Lord Ashburnham. There is a daily National school here. Pop., in 1801, 464; in 1831, 619. Houses 84. Acres 2,430. A. P. £1,778. Poor rates, in 1837, £319.

CATTAL, a township in the parish of Hunsingore, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles east-south-east of Knaresborough; on the river Nidd. Pop., in 1801, 152; in 1831, 208. Houses 40. Acres 950. A. P. £1,299. Poor rates, in 1837, £62.

CATTERALL, a township in the parish of Garstang, co.-palatine of Lancaster, situated at the confluence of the West Calder with the river Wyse; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Garstang; in the immediate vicinity of the Lancaster canal. There is a daily school here. Pop., in 1801, 560; in 1831, 457. Houses 86. Acres 1,490. A. P. £2,615. Poor rates, in 1837, £298.

CATTERHAM, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Tandridge, union of Godstone, county of Surrey; 3 miles north-west of Godstone, intersected by the Surrey railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £8 0s. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £291. Patron, in 1835, Rev. J. Segrew. There are two daily schools in this parish, two of which are open on Sundays. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 449. Houses 78. Acres 2,610. A. P. £1,868. Poor rates, in 1837, £262.

CATTERICK, a parish partly in the wapentakes of Hang West, Hang East, and East Gilling, union of Richmond, north riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Richmond, on the river Swale. It includes the townships of Appleton, Brough, Catterick, Colbourne, Ellerton-upon-Swale, Hipswell and St. Martins, Killerby, Kiplin, Scorton, Scotton, Tunstall, Uckerby, and Whitwell, and the chapelry of Hudswell. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £25 2s. 1d.; gross income £830; nett income £678. The church is a large structure built in the reign of Henry V. Patron, in 1835, the Crown. Pop., in 1801, 2,535; in 1831, 2,921. Houses 606. Acres 21,180. A. P. £28,010. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,195.

CATTERICK, a township in that part of the parish of Catterick which is situated in the wapentake of Hang East. The village is supposed by some antiquaries to take its name from the Roman station, Cataractonum, which others, however, fix at Allerton. About a mile to the north of the village there is a bridge over the Swale, and not far distant a race-course on which races are held on the Wednesday and Thursday in Easter week. Pop., in 1801, 641; in 1831, 683. Houses 142. Acres 1,570. A. P. £5,468. Poor rates, in 1837, £159.

CATTERLIN, a township in the parish of Newton, county of Cumberland; 3 miles north-west by north of Penrith; the Patterill river flows through this parish. Pop. in 1801, 92; in 1831, 125. Houses 22. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £1,038. Poor rates, in 1837, £29.

CATTERTON, a township in the parish of Tadcaster, and lower division of the ainstey of the city of York; 3 miles north-east of Tadcaster. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 62. Houses 12. Acres 770. A. P. £948. Poor rates, in 1837, £50.

CATTHORPE. See CALTHORPE.

CATTISTOCK, a parish in the hund. of Cerne. Totcombe, and Modbury, union of Cerne, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Dorchester, on the river Frome. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 18s. 9d.; gross income £475. Patron, in 1835, E. Castleman, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 349; in 1831, 427. Houses 88. Acres 2,620. A. P. £3,955. Poor rates, in 1837, £221.

CATTO. See LANDMOTH with CATTO.

CATTON, a township and chapelry in the parish of Croxall, county of Derby; 6 miles south-south-west of Burton-upon-Trent, on the eastern bank of the river Trent, and close upon the Birmingham and Derby railway. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Croxall. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 75. Houses 6. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,406.

CATTON, a parish in the hund. of Taverham, union of St. Faith, county of Norfolk; 3 miles north of Norwich, east of the river Wensum. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £4 3s. 9d.; gross income £142. The patrons are the dean and chapter of Norwich. Pop., in 1801, 589; in 1831, 592. Houses 121. Acres 760. A. P. £2,149. Poor rates, in 1837, £522.

CATTON, a township in the parish of Topcliffe, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west of Thirsk; on the eastern bank of the river Swale. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 102. Houses 23. Acres 770. A. P. £1,236. Poor rates, in 1837, £43.

CATTON (HIGH), a township in the parish of Low Catton; 8 miles south of York. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 221. Houses 42. Acres 1,640. A. P. £1,206. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

CATTON (LOW), a parish in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Pecklington, east riding of the county of York; 7 miles east by north of York, on the eastern bank of the river Derwent. It includes the townships of Catton High and Low, Hexby, Stamford Bridge East and West, with Scoresby. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £21 12s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £510; nett income £410. Patron, in 1835, the earl of Egremont. Pop., in 1801, 730; in 1831, 1,095. Houses 177. Acres 8,150. A. P. £7,048. Poor rates, in 1837, £241. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 147; in 1831, 178. Houses 28. Acres 2,140. A. P. £1,012. Poor rates, in 1837, £62.

CATTON (NEW), a hamlet in the parish of St. Clement's, Norwich. Pop., in 1831, 1,941. This hamlet has been built within the last twenty years. A new church is about to be erected here.

CATWICK, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Holderness, union of Skirlaugh, east riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles north-east by east of Beverley. Living, a rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £10 5s.; gross income £163. The church is a small Gothic structure. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Pop. in 1801, 131; in 1831, 213. Houses 39. Acres 1,650. A. P. £3,344. Poor rates, in 1837, £178.

CATWORTH (GREAT), a parish and township in the hund. of Leightonstone, union of St. Neot's, county of Huntingdon, but locally situated in and now annexed to Northamptonshire; 4 miles north-west of Kimbolton. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £17 16s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £240. Patrons, the principal and fellows of Brazen-nose college, Oxford. Pop., in 1801, 386; in 1831, 564. Houses 81. Acres 2,090. A. P. £2,663. Poor rates, in 1837, £315.

CAUDERY. See RUDYARD and CAUDERY.

CAULDON, a parish in the north division of the hund. of Totmonslow, union of Cheadle, county of Stafford; 7 miles north-west of Ashborne. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, of the certified value of £8 19s. 8d.; gross income £57. Patroness, Mrs. J. Wilmot. Pop., in 1801, 256; in 1831, 347. Houses 68. Acres 1,570. A. P. £1,566. Poor rates, in 1837, £163.

CAULDWELL, a hamlet in the parish of Stapenhill, county of Derby; 4 miles north-north-east of Burton-upon-Trent. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1785. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 172. Houses 31. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,188. Poor rates, in 1837, £87.

CAULK, a parish in the hund. of Repton and Gresley, union of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, county of Derby; 4 miles north of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; gross income £34. Patron, Sir George Crewe, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 58. Houses 9. Acres 860. A. P. £793.

CAUNDLE-BISHOP and CAUNDLE-WAKE, a parish in the hund. and union of Sherborne, county of Dorset; 5 miles south-east of Sherborne. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £11 10s.; gross income £272. Patron, in 1835, the earl of Digby. Pop., in 1801, 282; in 1831, 376. Houses 85. Acres, 2,050. A. P. £958. Poor rates, in 1837, £161.

CAUNDLE-MARSH, a parish in the hund. and union of Sherborne, county of Dorset; 4 miles south-east of Sherborne. Living, a discharged rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Salisbury, rated at £5 16s. 3d.; and endowed with £400; gross income £153. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 70. Houses 15. Acres 440. A. P. £2,015. Poor rates, in 1837, £51.

CAUNDLE-PURSE, a parish in the hund. and union of Sherborne, Sherborne division of the county of Dorset; 4½ miles east-north-east of Sherborne. Living, a discharged rectory formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 8s. 8d.; gross income £176. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 180. Houses 30. Acres 1,610. A. P. £1,493. Poor rates, in 1837, £117.

CAUNDLE-STOURTON, a parish in the hund. of Brownshall, union and division of Sturminster, county of Dorset; 6 miles east of Sherborne. Living, a curacy formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; not in charge; gross income £50. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart. Pop., in 1801, 277; in 1831, 349. Houses 69. Acres 2,680. A. P. £1,973. Poor rates, in 1837, £135.

CAUNDLE-WAKE. See CAUNDLE-BISHOP and CAUNDLE-WAKE.

CAUNTON, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 5½ miles north-west of Newark, on a branch of the river Trent. Living, a discharged vicarage with Bisthorpe, in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 2s. 1d.; by the parliamentary returns at £114 12s.; gross income £171. Pop., in 1801, 366; in 1831, 542. Houses 103. Acres 3,130. A. P. £4,473. Poor rates, in 1837, £259.

CAUSEY-PARK, a township in the parish of Hebburn, county of Northumberland; 6 miles northwest of Morpeth; a branch of the river Coquet flows near it. Pop., in 1801, 107; in 1831, 98. Houses 18. Poor rates, in 1837, £68.

CAVE (NORTH), a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Howden, excepting South Cliff, which is in the union of Pocklington, east riding of Yorkshire; 6½ miles south-south by east of Market-Weighton, and in the vicinity of Market-Weighton canal. It includes the townships of North Cave, South Cliff, and Drewton, and Everthorp. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of South Cliff, in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £10 7s. 6d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, H. Burton, Esq. There are in this parish several dissenting places of worship. There is a branch of the Yorkshire District bank here. Pop., in 1801, 874; in 1831, 1,000. Houses 238. Acres 6,360. A. P. £7,497. Poor rates, in 1837, £517. Pop. of the township, in 1801, 639; in 1831, 747. Houses 188. Acres 3,270. A. P. £6,532. Poor rates, in 1837, £457.

CAVE (SOUTH), an extensive parish, partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, east riding of Yorkshire; 17½ miles south-south by east of Market-Weighton; the eminences of this parish command a fine view of Lincolnshire and the Humber, which bounds it for some miles. It includes the townships of Bromfleet, South Cave, and Faxfleet. Living, a discharged vicarage in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of South Cave, rated at £8; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £140; gross income £190. Patron, in 1835, H. G. Barnard, Esq. There are several dissenting places of worship in the parish. John Washington, grandfather of George Washington, the father and founder of the liberties of America, was proprietor of part of the estate of Cave-castle in this parish, from which he emigrated to America in 1657. Pop., in 1801, 962; in 1831, 1,200. Houses 246. Acres 7,480. A. P. £10,228. Poor rates, in 1837, £473.

CAVE (SOUTH), a small market and post-town in the above parish. Petty-sessions for the wapentake of Howdenshire are held here. A market is held on Monday; there is a fair on Trinity Monday, for horses and sheep; and there is a branch of the Hull Banking company here. Pop., in 1801, 707; in 1831, 835. Houses 173. Acres 4,630. A. P. £6,268. Poor rates, in 1837, £293.

CAVENDISH, a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Sudbury, county of Suffolk; 2½ miles east of Clare, bounded on the south by the river Stour. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £26; gross income £551. Patrons, the master and fellows of Jesus' college, Cambridge. Cavendish is supposed to have given name to the ducal family of Cavendish, which settled here very early, being a younger branch of the Gernons of Norfolk and Essex. A fair is held on June 11th, for cattle. Pop., in 1801, 1,042; in 1831, 1,214. Houses 270. Acres 3,450. A. P. £4,406. Poor rates, in 1837, £768.

CAVENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Lackford, union of Mildenhall, county of Suffolk; 4½ miles south-south by east of Mildenhall. The river Lack is navigable on the north of the parish. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £5 5s. 10d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £118; gross income £113. Patron, in 1835, the lord-chancellor. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 261. Houses 51. Acres 2,630. A. P. £1,178. Poor rates, in 1837, £212.

CAVERSFIELD, a parish partly in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Bicester, county of Oxford, but chiefly in the hund. and county of Buckingham; 1½ mile north of Bicester, on the post-road. It includes part of Market-and township, the returns of which are given with Bicester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8; gross income £64. The patron, in 1835, was — Bullock, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 123. Houses 22. Acres 1,200. A. P. £1,487. Poor rates, in 1837, £191.

CAVERSHAM, a parish in the hund. of Binfield, union of Henley, county of Oxford; about a mile north of Reading, delightfully situated on the banks of the Thames, and in the immediate vicinity of the Western railway. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, not in charge; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £70; gross income £116. The church is ancient. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. Caversham gives to Earl Cadogan the title of Viscount. Pop., in 1801, 1,069; in 1831, 1,369. Houses 260. Acres 5,100. A. P. £6,919. Poor rates, in 1837, £504.

CAVERSWALL, a parish and township in the north division of the hund. of Totmonslow, union of Cheadle, county of Stafford; 4 miles west of Cheadle. A branch of the river Trent flows through this parish. It includes the township of Weston-Coyney and Hulme. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £7 5s. 3d.; gross income £233; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £124 10s. 0d. The patron, in 1835, was J. H. Parker, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 756; in 1831, 1,207. Houses 202. Acres 5,380. A. P. £2,479. Poor rates, in 1837, £191.

CAVILL. See PORTINGTON.

CAWDEN AND CADWORTH HUNDRED, in the southern division of the county of Wilts, including part of Salisbury plain. Area 25,100 acres. Houses 638. Pop., in 1831, 4,532.

CAWKWELD, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Gartree, parts of Lindsey, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; 7 miles north of Horncastle. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 8s. 6½d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £90. Patron, the lord-chancellor. Pop., in 1801, 20; in 1831, 44. Houses 4. Acres 540. A. P. £621. Poor rates, in 1837, £43.

CAWOOD. See ARKHOLME.

CAWOOD, a parish, formerly a market-town, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the lower division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash, union of Selby, west riding of Yorkshire; 17 miles east-east by north of Leeds. Pleasantly situated on the western bank of the Ouse, over which there is a ferry, and in the vicinity of the York and Leeds railway. The living is a curacy in the archd. and dio. of York, valued by the parliamentary returns at £34 14s. 6d.; gross income £118. The patron is the prebendary of Wistow in York cathedral. The market day is Wednesday. It has two fairs, May 12th, for cattle and wooden ware, and Sept. 23d; the quarter-sessions for the liberty of Cawood, Wistow, and Otley, are held here. Cawood was long the residence of the archbishops of York, having been given by King Athelstan to Wulstan, the 15th archbishop. Here they had a magnificent palace, or rather castle, where several of them lived and died. To this castle Wolsey retired after his fall, and here he was arrested on a charge of treason by Northumberland. At the conclusion of the parliamentary war, it was dismantled, and in part demolished. Since that time it has been in a state of gradual dilapidation, but the principal gateway still remains. Pop., in 1801, 1,025; in 1831, 1,173.

Houses 245. Acres 2,840. A. P. £4,194. Poor rates, in 1837, £382.

CAWRSE HUNDRED, in the county of Montgomery, North Wales. Houses 451. Pop., in 1831, 2,712.

CAWSAND BEACON, on the north of Dartmoor, one of the stations of the great triangulation on which the Ordnance maps are based, rising 1,792 feet above sea-level.

CAWSTON, a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Erpingham, union of Aylsham, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles east of Reepham, near a branch of the river Wensum. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £15 13s. 1½d.; gross income £822. Patrons, the master and fellows of Pembroke-hall, Cambridge. Tuesday is market-day. It has three fairs yearly, February 1st, and the last Wednesdays in April and August, principally for sheep. Pop., in 1801, 840; in 1831, 1,110. Houses 222. Acres 4,430. A. P. £3,698. Poor rates, in 1837, £849.

CAWTHORNE, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Staincross, west riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles north-west of Barnesley. The Barnesley canal terminates at Barnbybridge, in this parish. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Silkstone, in the archd. and dio. of York, of the certified value of £33 4s. 4d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £100; gross income £119. The patrons, in 1835, Landowners. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Pop., in 1801, 1,055; in 1831, 1,492. Houses 293. Acres 3,440. A. P. £2,556. Poor rates, in 1837, £532.

CAWTHORPE (LITTLE), a parish in the Marsh division of the hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 3 miles south-south-east of Louth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £3 4s. 4½d.; gross income £86. The church is helden by sequestration. Pop., in 1801, 98; in 1831, 137. Houses 31. Acres 780. A. P. £236. Poor rates, in 1837, £120.

CAWTON, a township in that part of the parish of Gilling which is in the wapentake of Ryedale, north riding of Yorkshire, 5½ miles of Helmsley. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 89. Houses 16. Acres 900. A. P. £1,015. Poor rates, in 1837, £35.

CAXTON, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Longstow, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; 50 miles north-north-west of London, on the Roman Erming street. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £7 12s. 4d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £50; gross income £86. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. The market is on Tuesday, and the fairs, chiefly for pedlery, are on May 5th and October 12th. Matthew Paris, the celebrated historian, was a native of this place. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 417. Houses 67. Acres 2,000. A. P. £1,461. Poor rates, in 1837, £257. A workhouse has been erected here, by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Caxton and Arrington, capable of accommodating 160 persons. The Caxton and Arrington poor-law union comprehends 26 parishes, embracing an area of 77 square miles, with a population, returned in 1831, at 8,946. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,384. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,018.

CAYO HUNDRED, in the county of Carmarthen. Houses 1,481. Pop., in 1831, 7,926.

CAYTHORPE WITH FRISTON, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, union of Newark, county of Lincoln; 9 miles north-northeast of Grantham; the river Brant flows through the parish. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £20 11s. 2½d.; gross income £1,108. Patrons, in 1835, Devises of late Mrs. Pochin. Pop., in 1801, 437; in 1831, 720. Houses 139. Acres 3,820. A. P. £6,366. Poor rates, in 1837, £274.

CAYTHORPE, a township in the parish of Lowdham, county of Nottingham; 8 miles north-north-east of Nottingham; situated near the river Trent. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 289. Houses 60. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £558. Poor rates, in 1837, £94.

CAYTON, a parish in the eastern division of the wapentake of Pickering lythe, union of Scarborough, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-east of Scarborough on the coast. It includes the township of Cayton-Deepdale and Killerby, and Osgodby. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Seamer, in the archd. of the north riding and dio. of York, not in charge. Patronage with Seamer vicarage. Pop., in 1801, 413; in 1831, 514. Houses 107. Acres 2,430. A. P. £3,338. Poor rates, in 1837, £281.

CAYTON-DEEPPDALE AND KILLERBY, a joint township in the above parish. Pop., in 1801, 354; in 1831, 449. Houses 98. Acres 1,140.

CEFN, a township in the parish of Cilcen, county of Flint, North Wales. Pop., in 1821, 177; in 1831, 298. Houses 58.

CEFN-BRYN. See ARTHUR'S STONE.

CEFN-LLYS. See KEVENLEEC.

CEFN-PENNAR. See ABERDARE.

CEIDIO, a parish in the hund. of Dynnlaen, union of Pwllheli, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 6 miles north-north-west of Pwllheli. Living, a curacy in the dio. of Bangor, certified value £5, annual value by the parliamentary returns, £53; gross income £75. The patron, in 1835, was — Parry, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 185. Houses 18. A. P. £695. Poor rates, in 1837, £112.

CEIRCHIOG, a parish in the hund. of Llyfon, union and county of Anglesey, North Wales. Living, a chapelry, not in charge, to the rectory of Llan-beulan, in the dio. of Bangor. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 168. Houses 39. A. P. £258. Poor rates, in 1837, £82.

CEMMAES, a township in the parish of Llanbadrig, county of Anglesey, North Wales, situated near the little harbour of Yrwlfa. Pop., in 1801, 714; in 1831, 937. Houses 167. A. P. £1,594. Poor rates, in 1837, with Clygyrog, £434.

CEMMAES, or CEMMA, a parish in the hund. and union of Machynllaeth, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 8 miles north-east of Machynllaeth, on the river Dyfi. It includes the townships of Brynchil and Talog, and Gwernylwlch. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph's; rated at £7; gross income £350. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. The Independents have a chapel at Cemmaes; the church was formed in 1807. In 1838 there was a small woollen-mill here. Pop., in 1801, 777; in 1831, 917. Houses 195. A. P. £3,022. Poor rates, in 1837, £545.

CERNE SUBDIVISION, in the centre of the county of Dorset. It embraces the hundreds of Buckland-Newton, Cerne, Totcombe, and Modbury, and Whiteway, with the liberties of Alton and Pancras, Piddletrenthide, and Sydling St. Nicholas. Area 53,860 acres. Houses 1,509. Pop., in 1831, 8,517.

CERNE-ABBAS, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Cerne, Totcombe, and Modbury, union of Cerne, Cerne subdivision of the county of Dorset; 7½ miles north-north-west of Dorchester; situated on the river Cerne, in a valley surrounded by lofty chalk hills. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 16s., but returned at £95 5s.; gross income £86. The church is a plain structure, with a lofty tower. Patron, in 1835, Lord Rivers. Coarse linen, gloves, and parchment, are manufactured here; the tanning of leather is carried on to a considerable extent, and silk-winding gives employment to a few women and children; but the principal trade of the place is malting and brewing. The petty-sessions for the Cerne subdivision of the county are held here. The market-day is Wednesday; and fairs are held on March 18th, Midlent Monday, April 28th, and October 2d, for horses, bullocks, and hogs. There is an independent chapel here, with a rent-charge of £10 per annum for apprenticing poor children. The earl of Cornwall completed here, in 987, a noble abbey for Benedictine monks, dedicated to St. Mary, St. Peter, and St. Benedict, the revenues of which, at the dissolution, were estimated at £623 13s. 2d. Of this once splendid and extensive pile of buildings, the gate-house, and a large stone barn, are the principal remains. Pop., in 1801, 847; in 1831, 1,209. Houses 218. Acres 3,010. A. P. £3,623. Poor rates, in 1837, £547.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Cerne, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 130 persons. The Cerne poor-law union comprehends 20 parishes, embracing an area of 74 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 6,736. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £3,472. Expenditure, in 1838, £3,167.

CERNE, TOTCOMBE, AND MODBURY HUNDRED, in the Cerne subdivision of the county of Dorset. Area 14,600 acres. Houses 448. Pop., in 1831, 2,406.

CERNE (NETHER), a parish in the above hund. and union; 5½ miles north-north-west of Dorchester. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury, not in charge; gross income £60. Patron, in 1835, F. J. Browne, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 83. Houses 15. Acres 1,330. A. P. £816. Poor rates, in 1837, £9.

CERNE (UPPER), a parish in the hund. of Sherborne, union of Cerne, county of Dorset; 9 miles north-north-west of Dorchester. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £5 18s. 4d.; gross income £158. Patron, in 1835, John White, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 88. Houses 14. Acres 1,050. A. P. £870. Poor rates, in 1837, £17.

CERNEY (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Rapsgate, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 4 miles north of Cirencester. It includes the tythings of Calmaden and Woodmancote. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester; rated at £21 10s. 7½d.; gross income £668. Patrons, the master and fellows of University college, Oxford. Pop., in 1801, 545; in 1831, 622. Houses 130. Acres 4,000. A. P. £4,024. Poor rates, in 1837, £274.

CERNEY (SOUTH), a parish in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 4 miles south-south-east of Cirencester, close on the Thames and Severn canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £6 16s. 8d.; gross income £298. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester. Pop., in 1801, 798; in 1831, 980. Houses 230. Acres 3,100. A. P. £6,691. Poor rates, in 1837, £448.—

In 1834 a benevolent lady, of the name of Edwards, left the residue of her estate to the charity for the support of the widows and orphans of distressed clergymen of the diocese of Gloucester. At the annual meeting of the charity in August, 1837, it was unanimously resolved, that about one-half of the bequest should be expended in erecting a college as an asylum for these pensioners. This decision was expedited by the gift of land at South Cerney, near Cirencester, where the benevolent testatrix resided, as an eligible site for the college. This measure has been carried into effect, and a very chaste and beautiful building called Edward's college, has been erected. Admission into the college is confined to the distressed families of clergymen, who, at their death, were connected with the old diocese of Gloucester.

CERRIGCEINWEN, a parish in the hund. of Maltraeth, union and county of Anglesey, North Wales; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Llangefni. Living, a curacy not in charge, annexed to the rectory of Llangatristlue, in the archd. of Anglesey and dio. of Bangor. The patronage is with Llangrishole vicarage. Pop., in 1801, 277; in 1831, 374. Houses 86. A. P. £787. Poor rates, in 1837, £34.

CERRIG-Y-DRUIDION, a parish in the hund. of Isaled, union of Corwen, county of Denbigh, North Wales; on a branch of the river Dee. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph's; rated at £10 8s. 1½d; gross income £492. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph's. The Calvinistic Methodists have a church here, formed in 1811. Fairs are held on April 27th, August 27th, October 20th, and December 7th, for cattle. Pop., in 1801, 851; in 1831, 1,006. Houses 208. A. P. £4,016. Poor rates, in 1837, £463.

CHACKMORE. See RADCLIFFE, Bucks.

CHACOMBE, a parish in the hund. of King's Sutton, union of Banbury, county of Northampton; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Banbury; bounded on the west by the river Cherwell. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £7 17s.; reported gross income £250; aggregate amount of vicarial tithes £239 5s.; of rent charge for impropriator's tithes, £199 16s. Patron, in 1835, F. W. Martin, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 438; in 1831, 499. Houses 85. Acres 1,730. A. P. £3,237. Poor rates, in 1837, £144.

CHADESDEN, a parish in the hund. of Apple-tree, union of Shardlow, county of Derby; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Derby. A branch of the Derwent flows through the parish. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Spondon, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £22; annual value by the parliamentary returns £38 15s.; gross income £69. Patron, in 1835, Sir N. Wilmot. Pop., in 1801, 502; in 1831, 469. Houses 96. Acres 2,080. A. P. £3,860. Poor rates, in 1837, £311.

CHADESLEY-CORBETT, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Halfshire, union of Kidderminster, county of Worcester; 5 miles west-north-west of Bromsgrove. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £17 3s. 4d.; reported gross income £563; aggregate amount of tithes £675 10s. 5d. The church is a spacious edifice. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is here a place of worship for Roman Catholics. In 1838 there were 2 worsted mills, employing 50 hands, within this parish. Pop., in 1801, 1,249; in 1831, 1,404. Houses 278. Acres 5,780. A. P. £9,063. Poor rates, in 1837, £570.

CHADDERTON, a chapelry in the parish of Oldham-cum-Prestwich, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Manchester. The river Irk flows through the parish; it is close upon the Manchester railway and Rochdale canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester. Patron, the rector of Prestwich. Aggregate tithe composition £96 9s. This township is now included within the boundaries of Oldham borough. It is chiefly of an agricultural character, but there are two factories and some collieries in it. Pop., in 1801, 3,452; in 1831, 5,476. Houses 960. Tenements worth £10 per annum, in 1831, 156. Acres 3,020. A. P. £7,321. Poor rates, in 1837, £865.

CHADDENWICKE. See WOODLANDS and CHADDENWICKE.

CHADDLEWORTH WITH WOOLLEY, a parish in the hund. of Kintbury-Eagle, union of Wantage, county of Berks; 6 miles west-south-west of East Ilsley. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £9 4s. 7d.; gross income £275. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Westminster. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 494. Houses 82. Acres 3,660. A. P. £3,290. Poor rates, in 1837, £277.

CHADLINGTON HUNDRED, in the county of Oxford, bordering on the counties of Gloucester and Warwick. Area 69,990 acres. Houses 2,984. Pop., in 1831, 14,976.

CHADLINGTON (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of Charlbury, Oxford; 4 miles south-south-east of Chipping-Norton, north of the Evenlode river. It includes the tything of West Chadlington. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Charlbury, not in charge. Pop., in 1801, 593; in 1831, 681. Houses 131. Acres 3,300. Poor rates, in 1837, £194.

CHADSHUNT, a parish in Kington division of the hund. of Kington, union of Southam, county of Warwick; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Kington. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Bishops-Ichington, in the dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, and a peculiar of the dean and chapter, not in charge. Pop., in 1801, 25; in 1831, 45. Houses 8. Acres 1,230. A. P. £1,667. Poor rates, in 1837, £39.

CHADWELL (St. Mary's), a parish in the hund. of Barstable, union of Orsett, county of Essex; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Orsett. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £17 13s. 4d.; gross income £430. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £431 10s. 1d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Herringham. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 180. Houses 35. Acres 1,540. A. P. £2,676. Poor rates, in 1837, £138.

CHADWELL, a ward in the parish of Barking, hund. of Becontree, county of Essex; $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles of St. Paul's, London, and on the line of the Eastern Counties railway. Pop., in 1801, 317; in 1831, 733. Houses 135. Other returns with the parish.

CHAFFCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of South Petherton, union of Chard, county of Somerset; 3 miles south-south-east of Ilminster, and east of Church canal. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 10s. 2½d.; gross income £150. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £149 10s. 8d. Patron, in 1829, Earl Poulett. Pop., in 1801, 165; in 1831, 243. Houses 50. Acres 1,160. A. P. £361. Poor rates, in 1837, £93.

CHAFFORD HUNDRED, in the southern division of Essex, bordering on the Thames. Area 34,930 acres. Houses 1,784. Pop., in 1801, 9,988.

CHAGFORD, a parish and stannary town in the hund. of Wonford, union of Okehampton, county of Devon; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Okehampton, on the east Teign river. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £39 0s. 10d.; gross income £560. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs Hamea. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1829. The Bible Christians have also a place of worship. In 1838 there was a woollen-mill, employing 73 hands, within this parish. Pop., in 1801, 1,115; in 1831, 1,868. Houses 290. Acres 8,710. A. P. £5,420. Poor rates, in 1837, £632.

CHAIGHLEY. See AIGHTON, Lancaster.

CHAILEY, a parish in the hund. of Street, rape of Lewes, union of Chailey, county of Sussex; 6 miles north-north-west of Lewes. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £9 4s. 2d.; gross income £505. Patroness, Lady Poole. A fair is held on June 29th for pedlery. Pop., in 1831, 1,080. Houses 134. Acres 6,580. A. P. £3,427. Poor rates, in 1837, £586.—A work-house has been erected here for the union of Chailey by the poor-law commissioners. The Chailey poor-law union comprehends 11 parishes, embracing an area of 52 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 6,977. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £9,576. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,372.

CHALBURY, a parish in the hund. of Badbury, Shaston (East) division of the county of Dorset, union of Wimborne; 5 miles north-north-east of Wimborne. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 10s. 2½d.; gross income £175. Patron, the Earl of Pembroke. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 157. Houses 25. Acres 440. A. P. £1,060. Poor rates, in 1837, £72.

CHALDON, a parish in the hund. of Wallington, union of Reigate, county of Surrey; 5 miles north-east of Reigate, near the Surrey railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £7 10s. 7½d.; gross income £271. Patron, in 1835, Rev. J. Legrew. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 173. Houses 17. Acres 1,380. A. P. £1,630. Poor rates, in 1837, £79.

CHALDON-BOYS, or WEST CHALDON, in the parish of Chaldon-Herring, Wareham division, hund. of Winfrith, Dorsetshire. This place was formerly a manor and a distinct parish. The church having become desecrated, was united to the vicarage of Chaldon-Herring in 1446.

CHALDON-HERRING, or EAST CHALDON, a parish in the liberty of Bindon, union of Wareham, Blandford (South) division of the county of Dorset; 9½ miles west-south-west of Wareham. The living is a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Bristol; rated at £8 0s. 10d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns £30; gross income £62. Patron, in 1835, J. Weld, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 226; in 1831, 270. Houses 53. Acres 3,000. A. P. £1,500. Poor rates, in 1837, £125.

CHALE, a parish in West Medina liberty, Isle of Wight division of the county of Southampton; 7½ miles south-south-west of Newport. The bay is dangerous to seamen. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £14 3s. 11½d.; gross income £351. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Richards. The grey old church of Chale stands in the immediate neighbourhood of a tremendous precipice, on the brink of the sea, called Blackgang chine. Deep under this awful barrier, a small snug cove runs in, making what the islanders entitle Chale bay; in itself a wild and yet pleasing and generally tranquil spot, bordered by a curved beach of shining sand, and enlivened by tiny streamlets, trickling from the verge of the huge rocks above; but many gallant ships have gone down, in storm and surge, in this fatal cove. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 544. Houses 98. Acres 1,860. A. P. £2,913. Poor rates, in 1837, £408.

CHALFIELD (Great), a parish in the hund.

of Bradford, county of Wilts; 3 miles west of Melksham, on a branch of the river Avon. It includes Little Chalfield and Cottles extra parochial liberty. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £6; gross income £162. Patron, in 1835, Sir H. B. Neale, Bart. The manor-house is a beautiful specimen of the Tudor domestic architecture. It was probably erected towards the close of the reign of Henry VI. Pop., in 1801, 63; in 1831, 83. Houses 14. Acres 1,200. A. P. £2,520. Poor rates, in 1837, £68.

CHALFONT (St. Giles), a parish in the hund. of Burnham, union of Amersham, county of Buckingham; 3 miles south-east of Amersham, west of the Misbourn stream. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £19 9s. 4½d.; gross income £661. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Here are places of worship for the society of Friends, and for the Independents. In the cemetery belonging to the former lie the remains of William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania. It was here that Milton resided during the time the plague raged in London, 1665, and here he finished his divine poem, 'Paradise Lost.' Pop., in 1801, 762; in 1831, 1,297. Houses 242. Acres 3,550. A. P. £3,489. Poor rates, in 1837, £626.

CHALFONT (St. Peter), a parish in the hund. of Burnham, union of Amersham, county of Buckingham; 4 miles east-north-east of Beaconsfield. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £15 17s. 1d.; gross income £600. It is in the patronage of St. John's college, Cambridge. There is also a Baptist church here, formed in 1807. The petty-sessions for the division are held at this place. In 1838 there was a silk-mill here, employing 23 hands. A fair is held on the 4th of September for pedlery. Pop., in 1801, 1,174; in 1831, 1,416. Houses 275. Acres 4,930. A. P. £5,256. Poor rates, in 1837, £494.

CHALFORD, a tything and chapelry, partly in the parish of Bisley, partly in that of Minchinhampton, county of Gloucester; 2 miles north-east of Minchinhampton, intersected by the Stroudwater canal. The Baptists have a place of worship here. This is a delightful village, scattered over a romantic valley stretching along the banks of the Frome. Broad cloth is manufactured here to a great extent; but this branch of trade is greatly depressed at present. Out of 41 mills in the district only 15 were used in 1839.

CHALFORD. See ASTON ROWANT.

CHALGRAVE, a parish in the hund. of Manshead, union of Woburn, county of Bedford; 4 miles north-north-west of Dunstable. Living, a discharged vicarage, united, in 1772, to the rectory of Hockliffe, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely.—At Chalgrave-Field, in this parish, in the month of June, 1643, a detachment of the parliamentary army was attacked and defeated by the royalists under Prince Rupert, when several officers in the service of the parliament were killed, and the prince of patriots, John Hampden, mortally wounded. Pop., in 1801, 534; in 1831, 746. Houses 110. Acres 2,130. A. P. £3,541. Poor rates, in 1837, £542.

CHALGROVE, a parish in the hund. of Ewelme, union of Thame, county of Oxford; 5 miles south-west of Tetworth, east of the river Thames. It includes the liberty of Rafford. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Berwick-Salham, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, rated at £10 5s. 5d.; gross income £301. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Christ church, Oxford. Pop., in 1801, 509; in 1831, 549. Houses 133. Acres 2,120. A. P. £3,641. Poor rates, in 1837, £527.

CHALK, a parish in the hund. of Shamwell, lathe of Aylesford, union of North Aylesford, county of Kent; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Gravesend, bounded on the north by the river Thames, and intersected by the Thames and Medway canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £6 3s. 8d.; gross income £202. The church is very ancient. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a manufactory of gun-flints here, reckoned the best in Europe. A fair is held on Whit-Monday. Pop., in 1801, 322; in 1831, 333. Houses, 62. Acres 2,040. A. P. £2,862. Poor rates, in 1837, £185.

CHALK HUNDRED, in the southern division of the county of Wilts. Area 26,610 acres. Houses 576. Pop., in 1831, 3,143.

CHALLACOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Sherwill, union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; 10 miles north-east of Barnstaple. The river Bray runs through this parish. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £11 9s. 2d.; gross income £164. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £155 16s. 8d. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fortescue. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 240. Houses 47. Acres 5,450. A. P. £1,471. Poor rates, in 1837, £36.

CHALLOCK, a parish in the hund. of Felborough, lathe of Scray, union of East Ashford, county of Kent; 4 miles east of Charing; bounded on the east by the river Stour. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Godmersham, not in charge. There is a fair held here annually on the 8th of October, for horses, cattle, and pedlery. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 363. Houses 63. Acres 3,620. A. P. £1,867. Poor rates, in 1837, £363.

CHALLOW (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of Letcomb-Regis, Berks; 1 mile west of Wantage, intersected by the Berks and Wilts canal, and north of the Great Western railway. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Letcomb-Regis, not in charge. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 328. Houses 56. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £3,074. Poor rates, in 1837, £181.

CHALLOW (WEST), a chapelry in the same parish, not in charge. Pop., in 1801, 185; in 1831, 148. Houses 38. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £934. Poor rates, in 1837, £103.

CHALTON, a parish in the hund. of Finch-Dean-Alton, union of Catherington, South-Alton division of the county of Southampton; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Petersfield. It includes the chapelry of Idsworth. Living, a rectory, with Clanfield rectory and Idsworth curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £20 0s. 10d.; gross income £660; nett income £580. Patrons, the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. Pop. in 1801, 127; in 1831, 550. Houses 101. Acres 3,470. A. P. £752. Poor rates, in 1837, £669.

CHALVEY. See Uppon.

CHALVINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Ship-lake, rape of Pevensey, union of West Fife, county of Sussex; 5 miles west of Hailsham, bounded on the east by the river Cuckmere. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £8; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, A. T. Fuller, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 188. Houses 21. Acres 1,690. A. P. £746. Poor rates, in 1837, £190.

CHAMBOIS, a township in the parish of Bedlington, Durham; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Morpeth, situated at the mouth of the river Wansbeck.

CHAPEL. See PONTISBRIGHT.

CHAPEL-ALLERTON. See ALLERTON-CHAPEL.

CHAPEL-BILLINGE. See BILLINGE (CHAPEL-END).

CHAPEL-BRAMPTON. See BRAMPTON-CHAPEL.

CHAPELBROKE. See ASTERLEY.

CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH, a market-town and parish in the hund. of High Peak, union of Chapel-en-le-Frith, county of Derby; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Buxton and 167 north-north-west of London. It includes the townships of Bowden's-Edge, Bradshaw-Edge, and Coombe's-Edge. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Bakewell, of the certified value of £16 16s. 8d.; gross income £145. Patrons, Trustees. There is a place of worship here for Wesleyan Methodists. The principal manufactures carried on here are those of cotton and paper. In 1838 there was a cotton-mill here, employing 117 hands. Chapel-en-le-Frith is one of the polling-places for a member for North Derbyshire. Thursday is the market-day. Fairs are held the Thursday before February 14th, March 3d and 29th, Thursday before Easter, April 30th, Holy Thursday, and the third Thursday after for cattle; July 7th for wool; Thursday preceding August 24th for sheep and cheese; Thursday after September 29th, and Thursday before November 11th for cattle. Petty-sessions are held here once a fortnight; and a court-baron for the hundred and liberty of the High Peak is held every third week for the recovery of debts under £5. Pop., in 1801, 2,500; in 1831, 3,220. Houses 615. Acres 13,220. A. P. £10,956. Poor rates, in 1837, £496. The Chapel-en-le-Frith poor-law union comprehends 16 parishes, embracing an area of 106 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 10,448.

CHAPEL-HILL, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Ragland, union of Chepstow, county of Monmouth; 4 miles north of Chepstow; bounded on the east by the river Wye. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff, of the certified value of £11; gross income £66. Patron, the duke of Beaufort. The abbey of Tintern, founded in 1141, by Walter de Clare, stood within the limits of this parish. See TINTERN. Pop., in 1801, 390; in 1831, 590. Houses 110. Acres 820. A. P. £970. Poor rates, in 1837, £210.

CHAPEL-SUCKEN, a township in the parish of Millom, Cumberland; 12 miles south-east by south of Ravenglass; bounded on the east by the river Duddon. Pop., in 1821, 251; in 1831, 291. Houses 49. Other returns with the parish.

CHAPEL-THORPE, a chapelry in the parish of Great Sandall, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-west of Wakefield, close on the York and Manchester railway. Living, a perpetual curacy with the vicarage of Great Sandall, of the certified value of £21 19s.; gross income £192. Patron, the vicar of Great Sandall.

CHAPELWICK. See ASHBURY, Berks.

CHAPMANSLADE, a village in the hund. of Westbury, county of Wilts. It consists of one long street, the north side of which is a hamlet to the parish of Westbury, and the south side in the parishes of Upton-Scudamore, and Corsley. The Independents have a place of worship here.

CHARBOROUGH, formerly a parish in the hund. of Loosebarrow, Shaston, county of Dorset; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Wimborne Minster. A branch of the river Stour flows through the parish. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to the vicarage of Morden, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury.

CHARD, a borough and parish in the east division of the hund. of Kingsbury, union of Chard, county of Somerset; 139 miles west-south-west of London, at the southern extremity of the county, on the highest ground between the north and south seas, a stream of water in the streets being divertible.

at pleasure into the English or the Bristol channel. There is a canal from Taunton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £36 18s. 9d.; gross income £440. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. This parish comprises the market-town of Chard, the tythings of Crim-Chard, Old Chard, South Chard, and 'at-worth-with-Forton. The Independents and Baptists have places of worship here; the Independent church was formed in 1700, the Baptist in 1652. Of late years the town of Chard has been growing in importance. In 1838 there was a woollen-mill here employing 20 hands. There are now 3 factories in Chard, one of which employs more than 600 hands, and another at South Chard. The manufacture of lace was introduced in 1821. Monday is the market day. There are fairs on the first Wednesday in May, August, and November, for cattle and pedlery. Chard was constituted a borough in the reign of Edward I., and sent representatives to parliament till the 2^d Edward III. Its government was vested in a portreeve and two bailiffs. It is now governed by a mayor, aldermen, and town-council. Petty-sessions are held here once a-month. Chard was the scene of battle between the partisans of Charles I. and the parliamentarians, in which the former sustained a signal defeat. On Brown Down, in the neighbourhood of Chard, are several barrows, called Robin Hood's butts, which the vulgar maintain marked the distance to which Robin Hood and Little John were accustomed to throw their quoits. This distance is not less than a quarter of a mile! Pop., in 1801, 2,784; in 1831, 5,141. Houses 935. Acres 5,140. A. P. £13,238. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,593.—A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Chard, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Chard poor-law union comprehends 34 parishes, embracing an area of 89 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 23,434. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,056. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,268.

CHARDSTOCK, a parish in the hund. of Beaminster, Forum and Redhone, union of Axminster, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Chard. The river Kitchbridge flows through the parish. Living, a discharged vicarage and a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury; rated at £14 2s. 6d.; reported gross income £450; aggregate tithe composition, for vicarial tithes, £426 1s.; ditto for prebendal tithes £486 6s. 3d. Patron, the prebendary of Chardstock in Salisbury cathedral. In 1838 there were a flax-mill here employing 10 hands, and 3 woollen mills employing 200 hands. A fair is held on old Michaelmas day. Pop., in 1801, 1,085; in 1831, 1,357. Houses 276. Acres 5,540. A. P. £6,287. Poor rates, in 1837, £684.

CHARFIELD, a parish in the upper division of Grombold's-Ash, union of Thornbury, county of Gloucester; 2 miles north of Wickwar, near a branch of the Severn. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £10 1s. 3d.; gross income £38. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £304 13s. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. P. Jones. Pop., in 1801, 247; in 1831, 487. Houses 97. Acres 1,430. A. P. £2,639. Poor rates, in 1837, £188.

CHARFORD (NORTH), a parish in the hund. and union of Fordingbridge, New Forest, west division, county of Southampton; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Fordingbridge. It includes the tything of South Charford. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Winchester. The church is now in ruins. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 138. Houses 25. Acres 350. A. P. £1,759. Poor rates, in 1837, £141.

CHARFORD (SOUTH), a tything in the above parish. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 67. Houses 13. Acres 280. A. P. £929. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

CHARING, a parish in the hund. of Caleshill, lathe of Scray, union of West Ashford, county of Kent; $13\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-south-east of Maidstone. Living, a vicarage in the dio. of Canterbury, exempt from visitation; rated at £13; reported gross income £250; aggregate composition for vicarial tithes £480; ditto for prebendal tithes £735. Patron, the dean and chapter of St. Paul's, London. Charing has two annual fairs for horses, cattle, and pedlery, held on the 29th days of April and October. Pop., in 1801, 851; in 1831, 1,237. Houses 193. Acres 4,060. A. P. £5,147. Poor rates, in 1837, £527.

CHARINGWORTH. See ERRINGTON.

CHARLBURY, a parish, partly in the hund. of Banbury, and partly in the hund. of Chadlington, union of Chipping Norton, county of Oxford; 73 miles west-north-west of London, on the eastern bank of the river Evenlode. It includes the hamlets of Fawler, Finstock, and Walcot, the chapelries of Chadlington East, and Chilson and Pudlicott, and the tything of Chadlington West. Living, a vicarage with the curacies of Chadlington and Southampton, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £25 5s. 10d.; gross income £800. Patron, the master and fellows of St. John's college, Oxford. The market is held on Friday; there are four fairs held annually,—the 1st of January, the 2d Friday in Lent, the 2d Friday after May 12th, unless it falls on a Friday, and then the Friday following, for live stock, and October the 10th for cheese and cattle. Pop., in 1801, 965; in 1831, 1,433. Houses 614. Acres 11,320. A. P. £10,906. Poor rates, in 1837, £993.

CHARLCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Hampton and Clavering, locally in the hund. of Bath-Forum, union of Bath, county of Somerset; 2 miles north of Bath. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £5 15s. 10d., annual value by the parliamentary returns £119 11s. 6d.; gross income £245. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £134. Former patrons, the mayor and corporation of Bath. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 107. Houses 17. Acres 570. A. P. £1,426. Poor rates, in 1837, £92.

CHARLCOT. See WHITTCURCH, Hampshire.

CHARLCOTE, a parish in the Warwick division of the hund. of Kington, union of Stratford-on-Avon, county of Warwick; 6 miles north-west of Kington. The river Avon bounds the parish on the west. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £6; annual value by the parliamentary returns £43 17s. 6d.; gross income £183. Patron, George Lucy, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 265; in 1831, 297. Houses 64. Acres 2,190. A. P. £4,600. Poor rates, in 1837, £173.

CHARLES, a parish in the hund. of Sherwill, union of South Molton, county of Devon; 5 miles north-north-west of South Molton, on the river Bruy. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £9 10s.; gross income £160. Patron, the Rev. John Blackmore. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 343. Houses 62. Acres 710. A. P. £1,369. Poor rates, in 1837, £91.

CHARLESTOWN, a sea-port in the parish of St. Austell, county of Cornwall. It was formerly known by the name of Porthmear, and in 1790 contained only nine inhabitants. It is now a thriving port, and is rapidly increasing in extent and importance. It is defended by a battery of heavy ordnance on Crinnis cliff. The great article of export is China clay and stone, a substance artificially prepared from granite. "It appears," says De La Beche, "that 1,757 tons of this clay were exported from Charlestown to the potteries in 1809, 1,888 tons in 1810, 2,086½ tons in 1811, and 1,252 tons in 1812. Between 25th March, 1816, and the same day in 1817, 1,775 tons were shipped at the same port for the china manufactories in Worcestershire. It also appears that this export had greatly increased in 1826, for we find that 7,090 tons were shipped from Charlestown in that year for various places; making, with 400 tons at Pentuan, 30 at Porthleven, and 18 from St. Michael's Mount, 7,538 tons shipped from Cornwall in 1826. If in round numbers the artificial china-clay, at present exported from Cornwall and Devon, were estimated at about 7,600 tons per annum, it would probably be not far wrong." See article AUSTELL (St.).

CHARLES WORTH, a hamlet in the parish of Glossop, Derby; 8½ miles north-north-west of Chapel-in-le-Frith; bounded on the west by the river Etherow; and about a mile south of the Manchester and Sheffield railway. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Glossop. Pop., in 1821, 1,005; in 1831, 1,206. Houses 206. Other returns with the parish.

CHARLETON, a parish in the hund. of Cole-ridge, union of Kingsbridge, county of Devon; 2 miles south-south-east of Kingsbridge, on an estuary near the English channel. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £31 8s. 4d.; reported gross income £525; aggregate amount of tithe composition £490 17s. 6d. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Morley. Pop., in 1801, 522; in 1831, 644. Houses 129. Acres 1,940. A. P. £3,857. Poor rates, in 1837, £278.

CHARLETON. See NEWBOTTLE, Northampton.

CHARLETON (QUEEN), a parish in the hund. and union of Keynham, county of Somerset; 2½ miles north-north-east of Pensford, in the vicinity of the Bristol and Bath railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells, of the yearly value of £10; gross income £48. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Dickenson. A fair is held here on the 20th of July. Pop., in 1801, 43; in 1831, 168. Houses 24. Acres 1,060. A. P. £2,173. Poor rates, in 1837, £70.

CHARLEY, an extra-parochial liberty in the western division of the hund. of Goscombe, county of Leicester; 5½ miles of Loughborough. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 41. Houses 7. Acres 500. A. P. £505. Poor rates, in 1837, £13.

CHARLEY. See FAREWELL with CHARLEY.

CHARLINC, a parish in the hund. of Cannington, union of Bridgewater, county of Somerset; 4½ miles west of Bridgewater, near a branch of the Parrot river. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 15s. 5d.; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, J. A. Starkey, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 199. Houses 37. Acres 1,900. A. P. £1,916. Poor rates, in 1837, £211.

CHARLTON, a hamlet in the parish of Wantage, county of Berks; 1 mile north-east of Wantage; close upon the Berks and Wilts canal. Pop., in 1801, 247; in 1831, 255. Houses 47. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,277. Poor rates, in 1837, £143.

CHARLTON, a tything in the parish of Henbury, Gloucestershire; 6 miles north of Bristol. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 310. Houses 51. Acres 1,320.

CHARLTON NEAR DOVER, a parish, partly in the hund. of Bewsborough, but chiefly within the liberty of the cinque port of Dover, lathe of St. Augustine, union of River, county of Kent; north of Dover, in the vicinity of the South-Eastern railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; gross income £101. Patron, in 1835, Rev. John Morris. Pop., in 1801, 279; in 1831, 1,637. Houses 315. Acres 190. Poor rates, in 1837, £551.

CHARLTON-NEXT-WOOLWICH, a parish in the hund. of Blackheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Lewisham, county of Kent; 8 miles south-east of London, bounded on the north by the river Thames. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £10 7s. 8½d.; gross income £700; nett income £600. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. M. Wilson, Bart. A weekly market and an annual fair were formerly held here; the market has long been discontinued, but the fair is still holden on St. Luke's day. It is called Horn fair, some say, from the custom of carrying small horns at this fair in honour of St. Luke; others are of opinion it is so called from an intrigue of the ill-starred King John, who, being detected by the husband, was obliged to compound for his offence by a liberal grant of land and the establishment of this fair. It does not appear that there is any existing document of such a transaction; but a grotesque, and not very decorous procession, which took place annually at this fair, till considerably in the latter half of the last century, and was accompanied by so many indecencies, as to give rise to the proverb, 'All is fair at Horn Fair,' gives some countenance to the suspicion that it really happened. The jurisdiction of the court of requests for the recovery of debts under £5, which is held at Bromley, Greenwich, Woolwich, and Croydon alternately, extends over this parish. Nearly opposite the church stands the noble old manor-house, built by Sir Adam Newton, tutor to Prince Henry. In front of this house is a row of cypress trees, said to be the first planted in England. Dr. Plot says, that there was a marble chimney-piece in the dining-room of this house, so exquisitely polished, that the lord of Doune saw reflected in it a robbery committing on Shooter's-hill. Pop., in 1801, 747; in 1831, 2,327. Houses 403. Acres 1,250. A. P. £5,652. Poor rates, in 1837, £790.

CHARLTON. See KILMERSDON.

CHARLTON. See SINGLETON, Sussex.

CHARLTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Malmesbury, county of Wilts; 2 miles north-east of Malmesbury, now included within its new boundary. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of St. Mary, Westport, in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, not in charge. Pop., in 1801, 428; in 1831, 645. Houses 98. Acres 5,940. A. P. £6,041. Poor rates, in 1837, £388.

CHARLTON, a parish in the hund. of Swanborough, union of Pewsey, county of Wilts; 4 miles south-west of Pewsey; on the east flows the river Avon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £6 15s. 6d., returned at £111; gross income £100. Patron, the dean and canons of Christ church, Oxford. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 183. Houses 38. Acres 1,290. A. P. £1,926. Poor rates, in 1837, £121.

CHARLTON, a hamlet in the parish of Cropthorne, Worcester. Pop., in 1801, 248; in 1831, 276. Houses 67. A. P. £3,225. Poor rates, in 1837, £151.

CHARLTON-ABBOTS, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Kiftgate, union of Winchcombe, county of Gloucester; 3 miles south-east of Winchcombe. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, of the certified value of £6, returned at £30; gross income £38. Patron, in 1835, Francis Pym, Esq. Pop., in 1801,

100; in 1831, 111. Houses 21. Acres 2,190. A. P. £949. Poor rates, in 1837, £48.

CHARLTON (ADAM), or EAST CHARLTON, a parish in the hund. of Somerton, union of Langport, county of Somerset; 7 miles east by north of Castle-cary. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 17s. 4d.; gross income £139. Patrons, in 1835, the family of Strangways. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 483. Houses 94. Acreage, with Charlton-Mackrel, 3,910. A. P. £1,452. Poor rates, in 1837, £131.

CHARLTON (EAST AND WEST). See BELTINGHAM, Northumberland.

CHARLTON HUNDRED, in the county of Berks. Area, 12,940 acres. Houses 573. Pop., in 1831, 3,108.

CHARLTON (KING'S), a parish in the hund. and union of Cheltenham, county of Gloucester; 2 miles south-south by east of Cheltenham. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Cheltenham, in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, not in charge, returned to parliament at £40; gross income £177. Patrons, the principal and fellows of Jesus' college, Oxford. Pop., in 1801, 730; in 1831, 2,478. Houses 452. Acres 5,020. A. P. £5,863. Poor rates, in 1837, £475.

CHARLTON (NORTH), a township in the parish of Ellingham, county of Northumberland; 6½ miles north-west of Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 244. Houses 43. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £2,389. Poor rates, in 1837, £58.

CHARLTON (SOUTH), a township in the parish of Ellingham, Northumberland; 5½ miles north-west of Alnwick. Pop. in 1801, 166; in 1831, 187. Houses 36. Acreage with the parish. A. P. £1,712. Poor rates, in 1837, £31.

CHARLTON-UPON-OTMOOR, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Bicester, county of Oxford; 5 miles south of Bicester, east of the Roman road, and bounded on the east and south by the river Ray. It includes the hamlet of Fencot and Murecot. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £21 9s. 4½d. Patron, Queen's college, Oxford. Pop., in 1801, 478; in 1831, 658. Houses 136. Acres 1,810. A. P. £2,892. Poor rates, in 1837, £112.

CHARLTON-HORETHORNE, a parish in the hund. of Horethorne, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 5½ miles south-west of Wincanton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £8 10s. 5d.; gross income £384. Patron, in 1835, the marquis of Anglesey. Pop., in 1801, 512; in 1831, 485. Houses 88. Acres 2,340. A. P. £3,524. Poor rates, in 1837, £340.

CHARLTON-MACKREL, a parish in the hund. of Somerton, union of Langport, county of Somerset; about a mile east of Somerton, on the river Carey. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £16 0s. 2½d.; gross income £525. The patron, in 1835, was the Rev. W. T. P. Brymer. Pop., in 1801, 268; in 1831, 366. Houses 67. Acreage, with Charlton-Adam, 3,910. A. P. £1,539. Poor rates, in 1837, £170.

CHARLTON-MARSHALL, a parish in the hund. of Cogdean, union of Blandford, Shaston (East) division of the county of Dorset; 2 miles south of Blandford-Forum, bounded on the east by the river Stour. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Spetisbury, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury, not in charge. The patronage is with Spetisbury rectory. Pop., in 1801, 289; in 1831, 324. Houses 67. Acres 2,100. A. P. £1,260.

CHARLTON-MUSGRAVE, a parish in the hund. of Norton-Ferris, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 1 mile north-north-east of Wincanton, on the river Cale. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £13 10s. 0d.; gross income £466. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Paul Leir. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 415. Houses 75. Acres 2,180. A. P. £3,371. Poor rates, in 1837, £180.

CHARLWOOD, a parish in the first division of the hund. and union of Reigate, county of Surrey; 6½ miles south-south-west of Reigate, intersected by the London and Horsham railway. Living, a rectory in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury, rated at £19 16s. 8d.; reported gross income £550; aggregate tithes composition £872 15s. 0d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Henry Wyse. There is an Independent chapel here; the church was formed in 1815. Pop., in 1801, 860; in 1831, 1,176. Houses 159. Acres 6,290. A. P. £5,079. Poor rates, in 1837, £864.

CHARMINSTER, a parish in the hund. of St. George, union and division of Dorchester, county of Dorset; 2½ miles north-north-west of Dorchester, on a branch of the river Frome. Living, with Stratton perpetual curacy, a curacy in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Salisbury, not in charge; gross income £140. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Pickard. Pop., in 1801, 416; in 1831, 596. Houses 107. Acres 4,910. A. P. £5,255. Poor rates, in 1837, £231.

CHARMOUTH, a parish in the hund. of Whitechurch Canonorum, Bridport division, union of Axminster, county of Dorset; 2 miles north-east of Lyme-Regis. Living, a discharged rectory formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 16s. 8d., returned to parliament at £84; gross income £125. Patron, in 1835, Isaac Cooke, Esq. An Independent church has existed here since the year 1688. Pop. in 1801, 369; in 1831, 724. Houses 119. Acres 790. A. P. £1,779. Poor rates, in 1837, £236. The ancient village of Charmouth is at the mouth of the Char, on the Bristol channel, at the foot of a steep hill, and well-known as a watering-place. On Christmas-eve 1839, the new road from Charmouth to Lyme was destroyed by an earthquake. The shock was felt along the coast between Lyme and Seaton. At a part of the coast called Downlands, a quarter of a mile from the sea, it was found that a large portion of land, on which there were several cottages, orchards, and a coppice, had been separated from their sites, leaving huge chasms in a lateral direction along the coast between Sidmouth and Seaton to the extent of upwards of 4 miles. The convulsions of the earth continued at various intervals from the night of the 24th to the evening of the 27th December. A huge rock, fifty feet high, appeared in the sea off Culverhole, nearly a quarter of a mile from the spot where the principal scene of mischief presents itself. The cliffs on the coast do not appear to have suffered any disruption, all the mischief being inland.

CHARNDON, a hamlet in the parish of Twyford, Buckingham; 7 miles west-south-west of Winslow. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 160. Houses 35. Acres 1,880. A. P. £1,335. Poor rates, in 1837, £114.

CHARNESS, a township, formerly a chapelry, in the parish of Eccleahall, Stafford; near the river Sow. Pop., in 1811, 91; in 1831, 79. Houses 14. Acres 570. Other returns with the parish.

CHARNEY, a chapelry in the parish of Longworth, Berks; 4½ miles north-north-west of Wantage, north of the river Ock. The chapel is subordinate to the rectory of Longworth. Pop. in 1801, 216;

in 1831, 270. Houses 58. Acres 1,220. A. P. £2,282. Poor rates, in 1837, £214.

CHARNHAM-STREET, a tything in the parish of Hungerford, Wilts. Pop., in 1801, 305; in 1831, 432. Houses 68. Acres, 2,490.

CHARNOCK-HEATH, a township in the parish of Standish, Lancaster; 3 miles south-east of Chorley; in the vicinity of the Wigan and Preston railway. Pop., in 1801, 565; in 1831, 841. Houses 142. Acres 1,560. A. P. £2,769. Poor rates, in 1837, £207.

CHARNOCK-RICHARD, a township in the same parish; 3 miles south-west by west of Chorley; close upon the Wigan and Preston railway. Pop., in 1801, 587; in 1831, 755. Houses 120. Acres 2,070. A. P. £3,680. Poor rates, in 1837, £189.

CHARSFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Loes, county of Suffolk; 3½ miles west-north-west of Market-Wickham. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; of the certified value of £8, returned to parliament at £70; gross income £66. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £160. Patron, in 1835, Earl Howe. Pop., in 1801, 411; in 1831, 558. Houses 68. Acres 1,650. A. P. £1,903. Poor rates, in 1837, £325.

CHART AND PITFOLD, a tything in the parish of Frensham, county of Surrey; 5½ miles north-west of Haslemere. Pop., in 1801, 508; in 1831, 618. Houses 105. Other returns with the parish.

CHART-NEXT-SUTTON-VALENCE, a parish in the hund. of Eyhorne, lathe of Aylesford, union of Hollingbourn, county of Kent; 4½ miles south-south-east of Maidstone. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £8 12s. 8½d. The church, with its beautiful spire, was, in 1775, greatly injured by lightning. The patrons are the dean and chapter of Rochester. Pop., in 1801, 381; in 1831, 610. Houses 103. Acres 2,100. A. P. £3,015. Poor rates, in 1837, £466.

CHART (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Chart and Longbridge, lathe of Scray, union of West Ashford, county of Kent; 2 miles west-west by south of Ashford, intersected by the South-eastern railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £25 6s. 0½d.; gross income £864; nett income £668. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £746 11s. 8d. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. A fair is held here on the first Monday of April, for horses, cattle, and pedlery. Pop., in 1801, 544; in 1831, 771. Houses 120. Acres 3,190. A. P. £3,960. Poor rates, in 1837, £372.

CHART (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Catehill, lathe of Scray, union of West Ashford, county of Kent; 2 miles south-west of Charing. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £13 10s. 10d.; gross income £388; nett income £298. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 315. Houses 48. Acres 1,590. A. P. £2,232. Poor rates, in 1837, £196.

CHARTER-HOUSE on MENDIP, a village in the parish and liberty of Witham friary, Somerset; 5 miles east-east by north of Axbridge. Pop., in 1801, 76; in 1831, 105. Houses 17. Acres 2,410. A. P. £482. Poor rates, in 1837, £35.

CHARTER-HOUSE, an extra-parochial liberty in Finsbury division, in the hund. of Ossulston, union of Axbridge, county of Middlesex; ¼ mile north of St. Paul's cathedral. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 164. Houses 14. The history of this place is thus given by Tanner:—"Sir Walter de Manny, one of the first knights of the most noble order of the Garter, in the year of the great plague, 1349, bought a piece of ground without West Smithfield bars, which he enclosed. and got consecrated for the burial of the dead. It was thereupon called the New Chirchew, and a chapel was built, wherein, about the year 1360, the above-mentioned knight intended to found a college for a warden, or dean, and twelve secular priests; but in the next year that design was altered, when Michael de Northbury, bishop of London, joined with him in the building and endowing a priory in this place for double the number of Carthusian monks, which was to be called the 'Salutation of the mother of God,' and was finished about A.D. 1370. The yearly revenues of this house, which was surrendered June 10th, 1535, were valued 26° of Henry VIII. at £642 0s. 4d. ob. Dagd. £736 2s. 7d. Speed. The site was first granted, as it is said, to Sir Thomas Audley, but to Sir Edward North, knight, 36° Henry VIII. and 1° Marie. Upon which site Thomas Sutton, Esq. temp. Jac. I. founded and largely endowed a most magnificent hospital, consisting of a master, a preacher, a head schoolmaster and second master, with forty-four boys and eighty decayed gentlemen, who have been soldiers or merchants, besides physician, chirurgions, register, and other officers and servants of the house. The greatest and most bountiful gift, saith Mr. Stow, that ever at any time was given in England—no abbey (at the first foundation thereof) excepted, or therewith to be compared, being the gift of one man only."—Mr. Sutton, the eminent founder of this hospital, was born at Knaith, in Lincolnshire, in 1532. He was educated at Eton, and studied the law at Lincoln's inn. By the death of his father, who left him a handsome fortune, and by various other means, he became one of the richest citizens of London. He lived in splendour, and exercised great hospitality; but, on the death of his wife, he retired to private life, purchased this property, and founded this establishment. James I. granted him a charter, dated 22d June, 1611, in which the governors are incorporated as "the governors of the lands, possessions, revenues, and goods, of the hospital of King James." They held their first meeting on 30th June, 1613; and on 12th December, 1614, the anniversary of the death of this benevolent individual, a leaden coffin, containing his embalmed body, was borne from Christ-church, where it had been temporarily deposited, to a vault, under a magnificent tomb, on the north side of his new chapel, where it was finally interred. It is said that he left a fortune of £5,000 a-year in land, and £60,000 in money.—Oliver Cromwell was elected governor of this hospital in 1652, and was succeeded by his son, Richard, in 1658. Notwithstanding a loss of £8,000 sustained in 1624, and great reverses experienced during the civil wars in the reign of Charles I., the Charter-house is now in a very flourishing condition; most of our monarchs, since the Reformation, having contributed to its success. It has given education to some of the first scholars of the day. Its name is a corruption of chartreuse, the name originally given to this place by the Carthusian monks, who belonged to an order founded by St. Bruno in the Chartreuse, a steep rock in an awful solitude, amidst the sublime scenery of the Alps, near Grenoble, in the department of Isère, in France.

CHARTERHOUSE-HINTON, a parish in the hund. of Wellow, union of Bath, county of Somerset; 5 miles south-south-east of Bath. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, not in charge; gross income £88. Patron, the vicar of Norton St. Philips. In 1838 there were 2 woollen-mills here, employing 127 hands. Pop., in 1801, 619; in 1831, 735. Houses 130. Acres 2,890. A. P. £3,313. Poor rates, in 1837, £206.

CHARTHAM, a parish in the hund. of Felborough, lathe of Scray, union of Bridge, county of Kent; 3 miles west-south-west of Canterbury, on the river Stour. It includes Horton chapelry. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Horton, in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £41 5s. 10d.; gross income £748; nett income £531. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Pop., in 1801, 776; in 1831, 895. Houses 160. Acres 4,990. A. P. £4,582. Poor rates, in 1837, £539. The residence of the priors of Christ church, Canterbury, and subsequently of the deans of Canterbury, was, of old times, in this parish. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is a spacious edifice, built in the form of a cross, without aisles, with an embattled tower at the west end. It contains various sepulchral memorials, consisting of slabs inlaid with brazen figures, and finely-executed monuments. A vast number of barrows or tumuli, described in ancient deeds as Danes banks, are scattered over Chartham Downs, which extend along the south side of the high road between Ashford and Canterbury. Several of these have been opened, and the remains of bodies, both male and female, with various trinkets, urns, fibulae, &c., found enclosed. The village of Chartham, called Certeham in the Domesday book, is situated on low ground bordering on the river Stour, which passes through this parish. A fair is held here on June 29th.

CHARTINGTON, a township in the parish of Rothbury, county of Northumberland; 5 miles north-north-west of Rothbury; a branch of the Coquet river flows on the west of the town. It includes Bankland township. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 93. Houses 18. Poor rates, in 1837, £38.

CHART AND LONGBRIDGE HUNDRED, in the lathe of Scray, and centre of the county of Kent. Pop., in 1831, 7,408. Houses 1,238. Area 24,930 acres.

CHARTLEY-LODGE, an extra-parochial liberty in the southern division of the hund. of Pirehill, county of Stafford; 7½ miles north-east-east of Stafford. Pop., in 1831, 9; in 1831, 9. House 1.

CHARTRIDGE. See CHESHAM, Buckinghamshire.

CHARWELTON, a parish in the hund. of Fawley, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 5 miles south-south-west of Daventry. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £20 2s. 11d.; gross income £600. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. Knightley. Pop., in 1801, 185; in 1831, 266. Houses 50. Acres 2,770. A. P. £3,575. Poor rates, in 1837, £123.

CHASELEY, a parish, forming, with the parishes of Eldersfield and Staunton, a separate portion of the hund. of Lower Pershore, union of Tewkesbury, county of Worcester, 3 miles south-west of Tewkesbury; bounded on the east by the river Severn. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of London in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £5 14s. 7d.; gross income £134. The church is a very ancient edifice. Patron, the vicar of London. Pop., in 1801, 336; in 1831, 354. Houses 53. Acres 1,710. A. P. £2,580. Poor rates, in 1837, £157.

CHASEWATER, a hamlet, partly in the parish of St. Kea, but chiefly in the parish of Kenwyn, west division of the hund. of Powder, Cornwall; 5 miles south-west of Truro. This is the principal detached village in the parish of Kenwyn. There are two Independent and two Baptist churches here; one of the former was formed in 1795, the two latter in 1745 and 1748.—There are several rich copper mines in the vicinity, where, according to Tonkin, such mines were first successfully worked in Cornwall.

CHASTLETON, or CHASTLEDON, a parish in the hund. of Chadlington, union of Chipping-Norton, county of Oxford; 5 miles north-west of Chipping-Norton, near the post road. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £9 0s. 2½d.; gross income £365. Patron, in 1835, M. Adams, Esq. A fierce battle was fought here in 1016 between Canute and Edmund Ironside, when the former suffered a severe defeat, and afterwards, as Plot supposes, cast up a large circular tumulus to the memory of his dead, which still exists; but this opinion is probably erroneous. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 238. Houses 42. Acres 1640. A. P. £3,202. Poor rates, in 1837, £162.

CHAT MOSS, a large tract of land in South Lancashire consisting of about 6,000 acres, and divided into portions taking the designation of Worsley, Barton, Astley, &c. according to the respective townships in which the estates are situated. One part of this moss, Worsley moss, consists of about 1,500 acres, and is in the possession of Lord Francis Egerton; another portion of it called Barton moss, is in the possession of Mr. Baines, M.P. for Leeds, and consists of between 1,000 and 1,100 acres; and the other estates of the same kind are held by other persons, some in large and others in small portions. A considerable part of Worsley moss has been reclaimed by the noble proprietor or his predecessor, the Duke of Bridgewater. Barton moss has also undergone considerable improvement. About twenty years ago Mr. Baines directed his attention to this object, and his first operations were to drain the moss, and to plough, marl and manure the portion marked out for cultivation; he has also nearly surrounded his land with plantations consisting principally of fir, larch, poplar, and beech, which all grow well in this soil. The progress of these improvements has not been rapid, but it has been steady; the construction of the Liverpool and Manchester railway, while it considerably increased the value of the property, accelerated the progress of the improvements, and Mr. Baines's own improvements and those of his tenants now comprehend something more than 500 acres. The effect has been that good crops of wheat and oats are now produced, with fair crops of clover, potatoes, and turnips; and a dairy-farm has been formed here; and that while twenty years ago the estate did not yield provisions for a dozen individuals, it now supports several hundreds with the necessaries of life, and that number is every year increasing. Another beneficial effect has been to give employment to the principal part of the inhabitants of the neighbouring village of Irlam, which, from having been one of the most poverty-stricken villages in the county, has become the residence of a comfortably-provided and contented peasantry. The degree of success that has attended this experiment may lead to erroneous conclusions, which it is proper to guard against, particularly as many Irish and English landlords, possessing land of the same description, have visited these farms with the hope of making similar improvements on their own estates. It must be borne in mind that Barton moss is only 7 miles from Manchester, where there is an unlimited supply of manure, and a never-failing demand for farm produce; that the Manchester and Liverpool railway passes through the whole length of the estate, from east to west; that the navigable river Irwell runs parallel with the railway on the opposite side of the land; and that the means of drainage is complete, while the beds of marl are inexhaustible. In all places where these advantages are enjoyed this kind of cultivation may be prosecuted with success, and on this account the whole of the 6,000 acres we have mentioned will eventually be reclaimed.

CHATBURN, a township in the parish of Whalley, Lancaster: $\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Clitheroe; southern bank of the river Ribble. Pop., in 1801, 415; in 1831, 591. Houses 105. Acres 720. A. P. £1,584. Poor rates, in 1837, £187.

CHATHAM AND GILLINGHAM HUNDRED, in the lathe of Aylesford, county of Kent. Pop., in 1831, 6,919. Houses 1,185. Area 4,310 acres.

CHATHAM.

A market-town and parish, adjoining, or forming a suburb, to the city of Rochester, but chiefly in the hund. of Chatham and Gillingham, lathe of Aylesford, union of Medway, county of Kent; 30 miles south-east of London, on the south-east bank of the Medway, on the north side of Chatham-hill. With Rochester and Stroud, Chatham forms one continuous street two miles in length, but has been rendered much less of a thoroughfare by the new road to Canterbury being carried to the south of the town without entering it. The whole parish of Chatham is very extensive, running for three or four miles to the southward; a small part of it is within the liberties of the city of Rochester. There is a row of houses a short distance out of the town on Chatham-hill;—the rest of the parish is entirely agricultural, containing the small hamlet of Luton, and a few other scattered houses. Chatham communicates with London by the Dover and Canterbury road; the distance by this road varying but little from the direct distance; but the most important channel of communication is the Medway, which falls into the estuary of the Thames at Sheerness, and floats the largest ships to Chatham. Indeed, in consequence of works begun in the reign of Charles II., and at various periods subsequently resumed, the Medway has been rendered navigable as far as Tonbridge, affording a channel of communication of great utility to Chatham and all the surrounding country.—Notice was given on 18th February 1840, that application is to be made to Parliament, next session, for leave to bring in a bill for a line of railway between London and Chatham, commencing by a junction with the London and Greenwich railway at Ravensbone river, or Deptford creek, and thence proceeding, through various places, such as Woolwich, Dartford, Gravesend, and Chalk, to Frindsbury, where it is to terminate, in a marsh adjoining the Medway, opposite the town of Chatham, with which it is to be connected by floating bridges, or ferry-boats, worked by steam. Pop., in 1801, 10,505; in 1831, 17,936. Houses 2,988. Acreage with the city of Rochester, 6,156. A. P. £23,222. Poor rates, in 1837, £5,714.

Ecclesiastical Affairs.—The living is a perpetual curacy with the curacy of St. John, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; gross income £1,083; nett income £961. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rochester. The church is a plain modern structure of brick containing a number of elegant monuments. It stands on the chalk cliff rising above the Ordnance wharf, and is dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It was almost entirely rebuilt in the year 1786; the expenses being partly defrayed by brief, and partly by parochial contributions. The ancient church, mentioned in the Domesday-book, is supposed, by the late Mr. Thorpe, to have been enlarged, or re-edified, by the Crevecoeurs; which is probably the fact; but it is certain that the whole building was nearly destroyed by fire in the beginning of the fourteenth century. In the year 1316, the bishop, Thomas de Woldham, bequeathed ten shillings towards the charges of rebuilding it; yet the inhabitants seem to have been too poor to accomplish the work; as, in the year 1352, the pope granted a year's relaxation of penance to all persons who should become contributors. The edifice then built, was enlarged and repaired about the year 1635, at the expense of the commissioners of the navy, it being considerably too small for the increased number of inhabitants at that period. The present church is a neat edifice of brick, nearly square: the west wall, though greatly altered and modernized, formed part of the ancient Norman church, and still exhibits, on the inside, some remains of semicircular arches, with zig-zag mouldings. In the old chancel, on the south side, was one of the most elegant triple stone seats that has yet been noticed. The coverings of the arches were ornamented with trefoils and quatrefoils, beautifully sculptured with laurel, oak, vine, and rose branches. The whole back part of the easternmost stall was wrought into oak, vine, and other branches, intertwined; the leaves and fruits being executed in a very superior style; various small animals were represented devouring the fruits; and among them appeared a goat, a dog, a parrot, a serpent, and a man in a tunic and girdle, as if watching them from between the branches. In digging a grave in the churchyard, in the year 1772, a petrified human hand was found grasping the brass hilt of a sword. The blade of the sword had been completely oxidated, and had consequently perished. To accommodate the increasing population, a district church has been erected by the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £13,920 4s. 1d.; sittings 1,624. There is also an elegant chapel in the dock-yard. The living of the former is a perpetual curacy in the gift of the perpetual curate of Chatham, the latter a perpetual curacy in the gift of the lords of the admiralty. The Independents, Baptists, Bible Christians, and Unitarians, have chapels here; one of the Baptist churches was formed in 1630, the other in 1824.—There are two charity hospitals in this parish, St. Bartholomew's hospital and Hawkins's hospital. There seems to be no precise evidence in existence of the foundation or endowment of the former; but Hasted, in his history of Kent, taken principally from other historical works, has stated that it was founded by the celebrated Gundulph, bishop of Rochester, in 1078, and was originally instituted as a leprosy-house. The hospital was used in 1836 as a chapel, and the whole institution consisted of five persons, the patron or master, which office is held by the dean of Rochester for the time being, without any specific appointment, and four brethren, two clerical, and two laymen. The brethren, as vacancies occurred, were appointed by the dean; and out of the income, the clear yearly sum of £27 was paid to each of them; the residue being received by the dean to his own use. The emoluments derived from this hospital have been considered as inseparable from the deanery. The estimated annual value of this charity at the dates of the leases existing in 1836 was £2,951 5s. 4d., besides £36 2s. as the dividends on a sum of £1,200 3s., three per cent. consols, the produce of purchase-money on a sale many years ago, of part of the estates for some public purpose. These dividends are also received by the dean of Rochester. Hawkins's hospital stands on the north side of the high, or principal, street of Chatham. It was founded by Sir John Hawkins, knight, in 1592, and incorporated by Queen Elizabeth in 1594, for the relief and support of 10 or more poor mariners and shipwrights who have served in the royal navy. There are 26 governors, of whom 4 usually attend to the business; the dean of Rochester, and the officers of Chatham dock-yard. The income in 1836 was £441, and there were 15 individuals in the hospital. The income was much more than sufficient to provide for these; but it was not thought advisable to increase the stipends of the inmates, most of whom had pensions for their services, and did not require any additional allowance. In the 3 years preceding 1836, £363 7s. 6d. had been invested in the purchase of stock. There are several minor charities in this parish.

General description of the Docks.—Till it was converted into one of the naval arsenals of England, Chatham was nothing more than what its name implies, a paltry cluster of cottages anciently called Cettham, from the Saxon cyte, a cottage, and ham, a village. Its celebrity and consequence have arisen entirely from the suitability of its position as the site of a national dock-yard and naval arsenal. Conveniently situated on the banks of a river, which, considering the shortness of its course, is one of the deepest of European rivers,—and in sufficient proximity to the metropolis,—it became the site of an extensive naval establishment, including the finest naval arsenal in the world. These important works occupy an extensive area on the north side of the town, measuring nearly a mile in length, and defended, on the land side, by strong fortifications, principally of modern origin. The dock-yard, extending over an area of 90 acres, was commenced in the reign of Elizabeth. The original part of it is now the ordnance wharf, to which purpose it was appropriated by James I., who, finding it too small and inconvenient for the increasing business of the navy, had the present dock made, somewhat further to the north. This was again enlarged, and greatly improved by his son, Charles I., who erected spacious store-houses, and constructed docks to enable ships to float in with the tide. It was further improved by Charles II., in whose reign the Dutch, under De Ruyter and Von Ghent, after taking and destroying Sheerness, sailed up the Medway to the very front of Upnor castle, destroying several sail of the line, and a great quantity of stores. They accomplished this daring and brilliant achievement, without incurring any material loss; but the fortifications were soon after so much improved, and strengthened, as to render a coup de main of this sort no longer possible. The dock-yard is surrounded by a high wall; the entrance is by a spacious gateway, flanked by embattled towers. The houses of the principal officers are handsomely built, and the offices in the several departments of the yard neatly and commodiously arranged. The numerous and extensive store-houses contain immense quantities of every essential for naval equipment; so arranged, that even a first-rate can be fully equipped in a few days. There are great mast-houses, and capacious basins, with floating mast timber. In the new rope-house, which is above 11,000 feet long, enormous cables are twisted by powerful machinery. In the smith's shop, which contains 40 forges, every article necessary for ship-building, from the smallest bolt to an anchor of five tons in weight, is made. A newly invented blast-engine, consisting of fanners worked by steam-power, and so disposed as to send the air, with great force, through pipes, from a distance, to the smithery fires, was first tried here in June, 1840, and was found to be so effective, that one-half of the blast—which can be turned on like gas or water to any requisite degree—produces welding heats; while the whole force blows the fire entirely out. A duplicate of Mr. Brunel's block-making machine is kept here ready for use, in case the machine at Portsmouth should get out of order. The saw-mills, erected under the superintendence of Mr. Brunel, are upon a most extensive scale. In the sawing-room, which is 90 feet square, are fixed eight saw-frames, each capable of carrying from one to thirty saws, and two circular saw-benches, with windlasses and capstans for supplying them with wood, the whole being set in motion by a most powerful steam-engine which produces eighty strokes of the saws per minute. Connected with this steam-engine are extensive water-works for the supply of the yard, and in the iron pipes laid down in various parts of the yard are fire-plugs, from which, when opened, the water is thrown far above the summits of the highest buildings. The wet-docks, four in number, are sufficiently capacious for first rate men-of-war, and there is a new stone-dock constructed upon a still larger scale. In the docks are six slips or launches for building or repairing ships of the largest dimensions, and they are for the most part full. Second and third rates have also been built here, besides frigates, &c. The wood is floated into the yard by a canal which passes under a tunnel 300 feet long, into an elliptic basin of immense depth, whence it is raised by machinery.—On the ordnance wharf, which occupies a narrow neck of land between the chapel and the river, the guns belonging to each ship are laid up in tiers, with the weight of metal and the name of the ship to which they belong marked on them. The gun-carriages are laid up under cover, and immense quantities of shot are piled up pyramidally in various places. Every department has its proper officer, and nothing can exceed the order and despatch with which every thing is executed. The number of artificers and labourers employed is at all times great, but in the time of war it commonly exceeds 3,000.—The defence of this important arsenal was originally confided principally to guard-ships stationed in the river, aided first by Upnor castle, and by fortifications thrown up at Sheerness, which were strengthened and extended at different periods, with the special purpose of adding security to Chatham. As its stores were accumulated, however, its importance became more apparent; and, in 1758, an act was passed for purchasing ground and constructing such works as should place it in perfect security. Under this act the extensive fortifications called the lines were erected. These lines commence on the banks of the Medway, above the ordnance wharf, and continue, from the banks of the river, round an oblong plot of ground, measuring about half-a-mile in width, and a mile broad, to beyond the extremity of the dock-yard, where they again join with the river. Within this area, besides the naval establishments, are included the Upper and Lower barracks, the church of Chatham, and the village of Brompton, pleasantly situated on the summit of the high ground to the south-east of the yard. These lines are enlarged and strengthened by ramparts, palisades, and a deep broad ditch, and by the erection of a strong redoubt on the summit of an eminence towards the south-east, commanding the river. This redoubt was constructed during the American war, when the fortifications were repaired and augmented at a great expense. By subsequent acts the lines have been still further improved and strengthened by the erection of Fort Pitt on an eminence overlooking the town, and commanding the upper part of the river. Since the conclusion of the war, this fort has been used as an hospital. The dock-yard barracks and other military and naval establishments at Brompton, are thus entirely separated from the town of Chatham, being enclosed by the line of fortifications preventing the possibility of their union with the town. The houses at Brompton within the lines are for the most part inhabited by persons connected with the barracks and dock-yard. It seems probable that the Romans had a castrum æstivum in this vicinity, as various Roman antiquities and remains were dug up in forming the lines, &c. That they had a burying-place here is certain, as a number of graves and other excavations were opened, and Roman bricks, tiles, coins, and weapons, were found.

Barracks, &c.]—Connected in some degree with the defences of the town are the barracks, of which there are first, the Lower or Marine barracks, a large and uniform range of building, enclosing a spacious quadrangle. Second, the Upper or Brompton barracks, also neatly built, extensive and commodious. Third, the New or Artillery barracks, built in 1804, forming three sides of a quadrangle, and containing suitable apartments for the officers, and accommodation for 1,200 men. The open side of this quadrangle commands a most charming view of the Medway, with the Thames in the distance. The garrison consists of five companies of soldiers and a battalion of artillery. There is a school for engineers here, which was established in 1812, and in which young officers and recruits of the engineer service are trained to a practical knowledge of their duties. There is an establishment for convicts on the river, consisting of four ships, one being appropriated for juvenile offenders, and another used as an hospital. The artillery hospital, erected in 1809, contains wards for 100 patients, with offices for the medical establishment; and Melville hospital, intended for the use of the whole naval department, has been recently erected at a short distance from Chatham, at an expense of £70,000. It forms a beautiful range of building, and has apartments for 340 patients. The premises formerly occupied as a victualling office for supplying the ships lying at Chatham, Sheerness, and the Nore, stand at the entrance into the town from Rochester. They were held upon lease from the dean of Rochester; and the lease being out, they have been appropriated to private purposes.

Municipal affairs, Trade, &c.]—The principal part of the borough of Chatham is in the parish of Chatham; but a part of it extends into the parish of Gillingham on the east. The estimated number of the population within the boundary is 19,000;—the number of qualifying houses 1,174;—the estimated amount of assessed taxes £3,500;—and the registered voters for 1837 were 777. By the Reform act, Chatham was united with Rochester in returning members to parliament; but it was afterwards separated, and now returns a member for itself. The town of Chatham is partly in the jurisdiction of the county-magistrates, and partly in the jurisdiction of the town of Rochester. For the recovery of debts below £5, it is wholly within the jurisdiction of a court of requests held at Rochester. The education returns of 1835 give 9 daily schools and 10 Sunday schools, as then existing in Chatham. The market-day is Saturday. Horse-races are annually held in the month of August; and there are fairs for horses, bullocks, and all sorts of commodities, of three days' continuance, each commencing on 15th May and 20th October. The inhabitants of Chatham are chiefly employed in the dock-yard, or in trades connected with maritime pursuits. The town was paved and lighted under the provisions of an act passed in 1772; but, like most sea-port towns, the streets are narrow, and the older houses mean and ill built. Great improvements, however, have latterly taken place, in consequence of fires and other circumstances.

CHATHILL, a township in the parish of Ellingham, county of Northumberland; 8½ miles north of Alnwick. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 30. Houses 5. Poor rates, in 1837, £9.

CHATLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Great Leighs, Essex. Pop., in 1801, 366; in 1831, 539. Houses 93. Acres 1,810. A. P. £1,883.

CHATSWORTH, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of High Peak, county of Derby.—See EDENSOR with CHATSWORTH.

CHATSWORTH-HOUSE, the seat of William Spencer Cavendish, duke of Devonshire, stands in a wide and deep valley, near the foot of a lofty eminence, covered with wood, in the liberty of Chatsworth, east of the river Derwent; 3½ miles north-east of Bakewell, hund. of High Peak, county of Derby. The building is of the Ionic order. It is a vast pile of architecture, and is completed in a style which entitles it to be ranked among the wonders of the Peak. The form is nearly a square; the south front is 183 feet 2 inches in length, enriched with pilasters of the Ionic order, resting on a rustic base; the west front is 172 feet in length, with similar enrichments, and also a pediment supported by half columns of the same order, enclosing a quadrangular court, formed by the four sides of the mansion, and which, in general style and richness of ornament, corresponds with the principal fronts of the building. The principal entrance on the west is by a grand flight of steps to a terrace that extends the whole length of the building, which has a very noble effect. The hall, which is 60 feet by 27, is very grand. A magnificent double flight of steps and a long gallery leads to the chapel, which is a most beautiful room with seats of cedar, and ornamented with fine carvings. The music-room adjoins the gallery of the chapel in which the organ is placed. The interior is splendidly adorned with painted walls and ceilings, and a variety of exquisite carvings by Gibbons.—The dancing gallery, 100 feet by 22, is exceedingly splendid.—The conservatory, which was erected in 1839, is 375 feet long, 127 wide, and 70 feet high in the centre,—being thus by far the largest in the world.—A recent number of Mr. Loudon's Gardener's Magazine contains an account of the new arboretum, in which Mr. Paxton remarks that an estate of three acres may be planted, with an eye to beauty as well as science, with 1,200 species of trees and shrubs. At Chatsworth there will be 2,000 species, each with all the accommodation a tree could desire, and there is room for 2,000 more if they should be discovered. There are already 1,670 kinds of trees in 75 natural groups, covering about 40 acres. Chatsworth park is nearly 11 miles in circumference, and is beautifully diversified with hill and dale, wood and water. Extensive plantations range in masses over the inequalities of the ground. The river Derwent winds with a serpentine course through the park, which is stocked with nearly 1,500 head of deer, besides sheep and cattle.—The pleasure-grounds and gardens are laid out in the antique style, and most gorgeously decorated with fountains, cascades, and streams poured out of the mouths of lions, and dragons, and the urns of river and sea-nymphs. "Few noble mansions," says Rhodes, in his 'Peak Scenery,' "have been more lavishly praised and indiscriminately censured than Chatsworth, which was once the pride and boast of Derbyshire; 'where,' as Gilpin expresses it, 'trim parterres and formal water-works were in fashion; but now fallen from its high estate, it has become a butt for every pretender to taste to shoot an arrow at.'" The estate of Chatsworth anciently belonged to the family of Leech, but was purchased by Sir William Cavendish, ancestor of the Devonshire family, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It was in an old mansion, on the site of the present one, that Mary, queen of Scots, spent a large proportion of the melancholy years of her captivity; and it was in the present mansion, then only newly finished, that Marshal Tallard was sent to reside, when brought over to England a prisoner after the battle of Blenheim. But perhaps the most conspicuous personage connected with the local history of Chatsworth was the once celebrated Latin poet and philosopher Hobbes, who occasionally resided with the Devonshire family.

CHATTERIS, a parish in the northern division of the hund. of Witchford, Isle of Ely, union of North Witchford, county of Cambridge; 10 miles north-west of Ely. Living, a vicarage in the dio. of Ely, and exempt from visitation, rated at £10; gross income £1,420. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Dr. Chatfield. There are three Baptist churches and an Independent chapel here, one of which was formed in 1654, the other in 1819. Chatteris is a franchise under the bishop of Ely. Pop., in 1801, 2,393; in 1831, 4,177. Houses 763. Acres 15,090. A. P. £22,234. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,065.

CHATTERLEY, a township in the parish of Wolstanton, Stafford. Pop., in 1811, 209; in 1831, 308. Houses 48. Other returns with the parish.

CHATTISHAM, a parish in the hund. and incorporation of Samford, county of Suffolk; 5 miles east-south-east of Hadleigh, in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; annual value by the parliamentary returns, £135; gross income £168. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £145 1s. 3d. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Eton college. Pop., in 1801, 161; in 1831, 241. Houses 28. Acres 3,480. A. P. £917. Poor rates, in 1837, £29.—Four or five poor children of this parish are educated at the charity school at Hintlesham out of the proceeds of a sum of £200 bequeathed by the Rev. Thomas Warren for that purpose.

CHATTON, a large parish in the eastern division of Glendale ward, union of Glendale, county of Northumberland; 4½ miles east of Wooler; the river Till flows through the parish. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £12 16s. 0½d.; gross income £199. Patron, in 1835, the duke of Northumberland. Pop., in 1801, 1,135; in 1831, 1,632. Houses 285. Acres 1,630. A. P. £14,910. Poor rates, in 1837, £811.

CHAURETH. See BROXTED.

CHAWLEY, a tithing in the parish of Cumnor, Berks; 3 miles south-west of Oxford. Pop., in 1801, 72; in 1831, 69. Houses 17. Other returns with the parish.

CHAWLEY, or CHAWLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of North Tawton, union of Crediton, county of Devon; 2 miles south-south-east of Chumleigh; the Dart river flows on the south. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £25 14s. 2d.; gross income £501. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. N. Fellows. Cattle Fairs are held here on May 6th and December 11th. When either of these days falls on Saturday, Sunday, or Monday, the fair is held on the Tuesday. Pop., in 1801, 759; in 1831, 865. Houses 150. Acres 5,020. A. P. £3,854. Poor rates, in 1837, £375.—There are various charities in this parish, the origin of the only important one of which is involved in obscurity. It consists in certain lands and tenements disposed to trustees successively appointed by indentures of lease and release for the purpose of repairing the parish church; the residue of the annual rents to be distributed among the poor of the parish.

CHAWTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Alton, Alton north division of the county of Southampton, 1½ mile south-south-west of Alton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £11 5s. 6d.; gross income £402. Tithes commuted in 1839, aggregate amount, £441 19s. 2d.

Patron, in 1835, E. Knight, Esq. Pop., in 1801, 372; in 1831, 446. Houses 77. Acres 2,870. A. P. £2,366. Poor rates, in 1837, £261.—There are various small gifts and charities connected with this parish which produce about £10 per annum.

CHAYLEY. See CHAILEY.

CHEADLE, a parish in the hund. of Macclesfield, union of Stockport, co.-palatine of Chester; 7 miles south-south-east of Manchester, on a branch of the river Mersey. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £13 0s. 7½d.; gross income £759. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. D. Broughton. This parish includes the townships of Cheadle-Bulkeley, Cheadle-Moseley, Hanforth, and Bosden. There are places of worship here belonging to the Methodists and Roman Catholics, the latter licensed under the new marriage act. Acres 6,470. Houses 1,441. Pop., in 1801, 3,582; in 1831, 8,154. A. P. £18,248. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,696. In 1838 there were 4 cotton mills and 1 silk mill, employing 970 hands within this parish. Besides the charities in the townships of Cheadle-Bulkeley and Cheadle-Mosley, in this parish, a free school was founded here by subscription in 1788. In 1837 there were 25 children at this school. They generally leave it about 8 or 9 years of age, and are employed in the print-works or factories in the neighbourhood.

CHEADLE, a market-town and parish in the south division of the hund. of Totmonslow, union of Cheadle, county of Stafford; 9 miles east-east by south of Stoke-upon-Trent, on the river Tean, and in the neighbourhood of the river Chusnet, and of the Uttoxeter canal. Acres 5,730. Houses 827. Pop., in 1801, 2,750; in 1831, 4,119. A. P. £1,348. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,070. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Cheadle, by the poor-law commissioners. The Cheadle poor-law union comprehends 15 parishes, embracing an area of 86 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 14,473. A free school was established in this parish in 1685. It was endowed with a rent-charge of £20 for teaching 6 poor children belonging to this, and 6 to Kingsley parish. There are also a workhouse and garden, with several other premises here derived from a benefaction of Charles Beech in 1726, besides various other small charities for behoof of the poor. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £12 9s. 2d.; gross income £566. Patrons, the masters and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. The church stands on an eminence partly artificial, which must have been a work of extreme labour, supposed to be the site of a place of worship of the ancient Britons. It is an old and elegant fabric. The interior roof, consisting of massive wooden arches, embellished with many hideously-carved heads, is very curious. The church contains some ancient and curious monuments. The Independents have a place of worship here. There is also a Catholic chapel. About 4 miles from the town stand the ruins of Croxden abbey, founded in 1176 for Cistercian monks. In 1838 there was a cotton mill, employing 205 hands, within this parish, but its principal trade consists in its copper, brass, and tin works. Tape is the chief article manufactured in the town. Coal and limestone are abundant in the neighbourhood. The market is held on Friday; and there are fairs January 1st, March 25th, Holy Thursday, August 21st, and October 18th.

CHEADLE-BULKELEY, a township in the parish of Cheadle, co.-palatine of Chester. Acres 2,100. Houses 723. Pop., in 1801, 1,577; in 1831, 4,228. A. P. £8,700. Poor rates, in 1837, £680. There are two charities here; annual proceeds £25

The Macclesfield branch of the Manchester and Birmingham railway passes through this township.

CHEADLE-MOSELEY, a township in the parish of Cheadle, co.-palatine of Chester. Acres 2,350. Houses 364. Pop., in 1801, 971; in 1831, 1,946. A. P. £5,890. Poor rates, in 1837, £500. There are two small charities in this township besides that common to it and Cheadle-Bulkeley.

CHEAM, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Wallington, union of Epsom, county of Surrey; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east by east of Ewell. Acres 1,850. Houses 175. Pop., in 1801, 616; in 1831, 997. A. P. £4,805. Poor rates, in 1837, £549. There are two small charities connected with this parish; annual revenue £23. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Canterbury and a peculiar; rated at £17 5s. 5d.; gross income £613. Patrons, the master and fellows of St. John's college, Oxford. It is not a little remarkable that out of six successive rectors in this parish between the years 1581 and 1662, five became bishops. This manor was given by King Athelstan to the monks at Canterbury with a wish decorously expressed in Latin, that he who infringed upon the grant might be sent to the devil.

CHEAPSIDES, an extra parochial liberty in the wapentake of Howdenshire, east riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Howden; close upon the Leeds railway. Returns with Blacktoft.

CHEARSLEY, a parish in the hund. of Ashendon, union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Thames. Acres 1,130. Houses, 47. Pop., in 1801, 214; in 1831, 337. A. P. £1,648. Poor rates, in 1837, £110. Living, a donative in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 15s.; gross income £52. Patron, in 1835, C. C. Dormer. There are two small charities in this parish. Chearsley is supposed by some authors to have been the Cerdicesleah of the Saxon chronicle, where Cerdic and Cynric defeated the Britons. At the intersection of old trackways from Chilton, Crendon, Cuddington, and Winchendon, several skeletons have been dug up which seem to confirm the traditionary account of this being the site of the gallows, one of the feudal privileges of the lords of the place.

CHEBSEY, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Pirehill, union of Stone, county of Stafford; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Eccleshall, on the river Sow, and close upon the Grand Junction railway from Birmingham to Liverpool. The Manchester and Stockport railway here join the Grand Junction. This parish includes the township of Cold-Norton. Acres 3,760. Houses 80. Pop., in 1801, 379; in 1831, 414. A. P. £5,834. Poor rates, in 1837, £124. There are two small charities for behoof of the poor in this parish. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £5 7s. 6d.; gross income £229. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Lichfield.

CHECKENDON, a parish in the hund. of Langtree, union of Henley, county of Oxford; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Wallington, near the Chiltern hills. Acres 2,800. Houses 68. Pop., in 1801, 278; in 1831, 346. A. P. £2,306. Poor rates, in 1837, £241. In 1655, Roger Hall left an annual-rent of 9s., to be given in shirts and smocks for two poor men and two poor women. In 1675, Henry Parslow left an annual-rent of £5 for five coats for five poor men, each coat to have four yards of cloth at 2s. 6d. per yard, and to have the letters H. P. upon them. The coats are distributed as directed. There is a similar bequest by the owner of an estate in South-stoke, termed the Blue Gown money, for clothing five poor women in blue frieze gowns. There are three other charities for the benefit of poor boys in this parish. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £19s. 9s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £590. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £660 9s. 3d. Patrons, the master and fellows of University college, Oxford.

CHECKLEY with WRINEHILL, a township in the parish of Wybunbury, co.-palatine of Chester; 7 miles south-east by east of Nantwich; near the Birmingham railway. Acres 1,630. Houses 40. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 235. A. P. £1,455. Poor rates, in 1837, £126.

CHECKLEY AND TEAN, a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Totmonalw, union of Cheadle, county of Stafford; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Uttoxeter, on the river Tean. It includes the townships of Madeley-Holme, Nether-Tea, and Upper-Tea. Acres 5,710. Houses 444. Pop., in 1801, 1,374; in 1831, 2,247. A. P. £8,425. Poor rates, in 1837, £814. Charities—Poor's lands, the gifts of Anne and Mary Barber and others. Income, 1824, £50 5s. 9d. There is a parish workhouse belonging to this charity. John Philips' gift, the interest and dividends of £3,000 three per cent. consols, bequeathed in 1810 for the relief and support of poor and distressed weavers employed in the tape manufactory here, besides the interest or dividends of £300 to the poor of Upper-Tea, a township in this parish, the £3,000 stock to stand invested in the name of his nephews, executors, or others, as trustees, until the dissolution of the partnership of the tape manufactory carried on by his brother and nephews, when the dividends were to be applied for the relief of the poor of the parish as the trustees might think proper. Catherine Philips' gift—the interest of £1,000, bequeathed in 1813 by the widow of John Philips, for behoof of the poor of Upper-Tea. The principal was invested in the purchase of navy five per cents.; the dividends amounted, in 1824, to £36 3s. 4d. There are several other minor charities, the annual rents of which amounted, in 1824, to £2 5s. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £20 2s. 6d.; gross income £580. There is an Independent church here, formed in 1821. A very extensive tape manufactory was established here in 1748. In 1838 there was a cotton-mill, employing 323 hands, within this parish. Fairs are held here on April 10th, and November 12th, for pedlery.

CHEDBURGH, a parish in the hund. of Risbridge, union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Clare. Acres 550. Houses 53. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 295. A. P. £645. Poor rates, in 1837, £62. There are two small charities in this parish; revenue, in 1829, £12 10s. per annum, besides a charity school, the income of which, in 1829, was £16 10s.; the number of free scholars 12. Living, a discharged rectory, united with that of Ickworth.

CHEDDER, a parish in the hund. of Winterstoke, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Axbridge, at the foot of the Mendips hills. It includes Batcombe and Nyland. Acres 6,690. Houses 393. Pop., in 1801, 1,150; in 1831, 1,980. A. P. £3,434. Poor rates, in 1837, £397. In 1752 Sarah Corners left the residue of her estate to James Birch, Esq., and the churchwardens in trust, for various purposes beneficial to the poor of this parish. The clear residue amounted to £6,052 2s. 11d., three per cent. bank annuities, producing, in 1819, an annual dividend of £181 11s. 4d. There are several minor benefactions to the second poor of this parish. Living, a vicarage and a peculiar of the dean and chapter of Wells; rated at £23 16s. 8d.; gross income £245. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Wells. The church is a handsome structure, with a square tower 100 feet in height, surmounted by pinnacles. The rich pasturage of this parish, which has the appearance of a continued garden, has rendered its dairies long famous for producing cheese of almost unrivalled excellence,—being even held by many as no way inferior to the celebrated Parmesan. Camden says it was “famous in his time for the excellent and prodigious great cheeses made there, some of which require more than one man's strength to set them on the table.” Cheddar is a decayed village: it had formerly a considerable market, which has been discontinued for more than a century; but the market-cross, which is beautiful, and of an hexagonal shape, is still standing, and in good preservation. Here is, or was recently, a paper manufactory; and the spinning and knitting of hose furnish the chief employment of the more humble inhabitants. Cheddar, or Cheddar, is said to be derived from Ced, a conspicuous brow or height, and dur, water. The village is situated at the entrance of a deep gorge or ravine in the Mendip hill, which, extending 2 or 3 miles, displays a succession of bold and rocky scenery, unparalleled in grandeur by any thing to be met with elsewhere in England. The ravine is narrow, and the cliffs on each side ascend abruptly to the height of many hundred feet. Some portions of the Cheddar cliffs remind one of a lofty Gothic structure, the action of the elements having worn the rock into niches and columns, and the lofty summits and surrounding portions of stone, without much exercise of imagination, seem to assume the appearance of turrets and spires. Immense numbers of jackdaws are constantly flying about the middle and upper sections of the cliffs,—hawks, too, of different kinds, make their series in these rocky fastnesses; and the visitor to this sublime scenery may constantly witness them sailing on steady wing in mid air, in all the security of an uninhabited region. Part of the town is close to the mouth of the cleft or fissure in the side of the prominent hill where these famous limestone cliffs commence. The chasm which runs across the south-west or southerly ridge of hill, extends in a north-easterly direction for more than a mile, being, however, exceedingly serpentine, when it slopes away in gentle declivities, one valley diverging towards the right hand, and the other towards the left. Near the entrance into the passage through this chasm are several copious springs of singularly clear water. These, almost immediately uniting, form the Cheddar, a river of respectable size, which, after it has wound its way for a considerable distance through the adjoining level meadows, falls into the river Axe; but before it has run a course of more than a few hundred yards, it affords admirable water-power to five or six mills, three or four of which are paper-mills, and the others grist-mills. At one period a dozen mills were in operation at this place, the whole of them driven by this new-born but impetuous torrent. The proprietor of one of these mills was making some enlargement of his buildings in 1839, when, on clearing away some portion of the side of the hill, he opened a way into a series of caves until then unknown. These caves are entirely covered with beautiful calcareous incrustations, which assume the most curious and fantastic forms. In some places they present the appearance of elegant drapery, hanging in festoons from the roof, or ornamenting the sides of the pillars; and the illusion is almost complete when the guide places the candle on the opposite side, and they are seen to be as translucent as real drapery. The stalactites depending from the roof, and the stalagmites which have formed from the floor, are equally curious and beautiful; some of them are like pillars of exquisite form and hue; some are easily imagined to be like fountains, images, and other objects familiar to the view. In one cave every traveller recognises the appearance and furniture of a Hindoo temple; and there is little doubt it would be used as such if it were in the possession of our eastern fellow-subjects. There is a freshness and beauty about these caverns which make them superior to other exhibitions of the kind; they have had the advantage of careful preservation since their discovery; and Mr. Cox, the proprietor, has spared no pains or expense to make the entrance easy and pleasant even to the most delicate and fastidious. It may be doubted whether an equal view of the curious and fantastic operations of nature can be found elsewhere, and it is certain that nowhere can the view be obtained with less inconvenience, as there is even a good carriage-road through the whole extent of the valley.

CHEDDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Cottesloe, union of Leighton-Buzzard, county of Buckingham; 2 miles north-west of Ivenhoe, intersected by the London and Birmingham railway. Acres 1,170. Houses 67. Pop., in 1801, 273; in 1831, 375. A. P. £1,602. Poor rates, in 1837, £239. Charities,—annual rent, in 1833, £9 6s. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Ely; rated at £15 9s. 7d.; gross income £256. Patroness, the Countess of Bridgewater.

CHEDDLETON, or CHEDLETON, a parish in the hund. of Totmonslow, union of Chedale, county of Stafford; 3 miles south-west of Lick; intersected by the Caldon canal. It includes the townships of Basford and Cunsall. Acres 9,080. Houses 304. Pop., in 1801, 1,174; in 1831, 1,664. A. P. £6,778. Poor rates, in 1837, £556. There are a number of small gifts in this parish for behoof of the poor, and for educating and apprenticing their children, the annual rents of which amounted, in 1824, to about £27, besides tithes of the yearly value of 40s. or upwards, which were alleged to have been purchased for the poor; but their right to these was at that time disputed. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £7 15s. 10d., in the parliamentary returns at £130; gross income £170. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Edward Powys.

CHEDDON-FITZPAINE, a parish in the hund. of Taunton and Taunton-Dean, union of Taunton, county of Somerset; 3 miles north-east of Ilchester. Acres 1,050. Houses 41. Pop., in 1801, 268; in 1831, 325. A. P. £2,227. Poor rates, in 1837, £173. Charities,—revenue in 1820, £5 per annum, besides a school-house, as rent for which 12 poor children were then educated. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £13 10s. 10d.; gross income £653. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. F. Warre.

CHEDGRAVE, a parish in the hund. of Loddon, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 7 miles north-north-west of Beccles, on the north bank of the small river Thirn, a branch of the river Yare. It forms a suburb of the town of Loddon, 9 miles south-east by east of Norwich. Acres 900. Houses 76. Pop., in 1801, 247; in 1831, 353. A. P. £1,904. Poor rates, in 1837, £108. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £186. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. B. Proctor, Bart. The church is a small edifice, with a low tower and one bell. It has a fine Norman door-way built in 1297, and an east window filled with ancient stained glass.

CHEDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Beaminster, Forum, and Redhorne, union of Beaminster, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; 16 miles north-west of Dorchester. It stands very high, and most of its eminences afford superb views of the surrounding counties. Acres 2,690. Houses 31. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 178. A. P. £1,584. Poor rates, in 1837, £109. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 8s. 4d.; gross income £138. Patron, in 1835, W. H. Cox, Esq.

CHEDISTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; 2 miles north-west by west of Halesworth. Acres 1,910. Houses 73. Pop., in 1801, 368; in 1831, 409. A. P. £2,421. Poor rates, in 1837, £360. Charities:—The town-estate—a farm comprising a house, barn, stable, and about 30 acres of land, called Cheston Town Farm—which has been vested in feeffees since the reign of Henry VII., for the repairs of the church and the payment of other charges incidental to the office of the churchwardens by whom the rent is applied. In 1828 this farm was let at £30 a-year. An alms-house, with a small piece of ground divided into separate gardens, was settled in trustees by Henry Claxton, by deed dated 1575, for the use of the poor of the town of Chediston. Three poor families inhabited the premises in 1828. There are two other charities for behoof of the poor of this parish; annual revenue, in 1828, varying from £15 to £20. Living, a discharged vicarage united with the rectory of Halesworth. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £198 10s.

CHEDWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Rapsigate, union of Northleach, county of Gloucester; 4½ miles south-west of Northleach. Acres 4,800. Houses 223. Pop., in 1801, 848; in 1831, 1,026. A. P. £4,727. Poor rates, in 1837, £449. Charities, the church and poor's lands; annual rent, in 1828, £26 13s. 2d.; other charities about £15. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £7 8s. 4d.; gross income £309. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Queen's college, Oxford. The Independents have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1750. From this parish the family of Howe took the title of Baron, which became extinct on the death of the late John, Lord Chedworth.

CHEDZOY, a parish in the hund. of North Petherton, union of Bridgewater, Somerset; 3 miles east of Bridgewater. Acres 1,570. Houses 87. Pop., in 1801, 457; in 1831, 549. A. P. £4,781. Poor rates, in 1837, £330. Charities, annual rent, in 1820, £5 0s. 8d. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £38 7s. 11d.; gross income £111. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Dr. Coney.

CHEESEBURN-GRANGE, a township in the parish of Stanfordham, county of Northumberland; 11½ miles north of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Houses 13. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 71. Poor rates, in 1837, £28. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of bishops' and vicars' tithes, £9 6s. 9d. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here within the dwelling-house of Edward Riddell, Esq.

CHEETHAM, a chapelry in the parish of Manchester, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles north-north-west of Manchester. Acres 1,110. Houses 727. Pop., in 1801, 752; in 1831, 4,025. A. P. £8,651. Poor rates, in 1837, £914. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £300. Patron, the incumbent. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. Cheetham hill, in this township, is a beautiful village, containing many handsome residences of the opulent manufacturers of Manchester. Smedly hall, an ancient mansion here, was the residence of Edward Chetham, the last of his ancient family, who died in 1768. By the reform act Cheetham is included within the boundaries of Manchester.

CHELBOROUGH (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Tollerford, union of Beaminster, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 5½ miles north-east of Beaminster. Acres 1,450. Houses 13. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 83. A. P., including that of Chelborough West, £1,922. Poor rates, in 1837, £21. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8; gross income £260. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £160. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Blakeley Cooper.

CHELBOROUGH (WEST), a parish in the same hund., union, and county; 4½ miles north-north-east of Beaminster. Acres 590. Houses 12. Pop., in 1801, 45; in 1831, 62. Poor rates, in 1837, £32. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £4 15s. 7½d., returned at £133; gross income £96. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £77 14s. Patrons, in 1835, Lord Rolle and J. Bragge, Esq.

CHELDON, a parish in the hund. of Witheridge, union of South Molton, county of Devon; 3 miles east-south-east of Chumleigh; on the southern bank of the Dart river. Acres 1,610. Houses 19. Pop., in 1801, 91; in 1831, 90. A. P. £601. Poor rates, in 1837, £30. Charities, annual rent, in 1823, £1. There is also a poor-house in this parish. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £4 18s. 6½d., returned at £126; gross income £120. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. N. Fellowes.

CHELFORD, a chapelry in the parish of Prestbury, co.-palatine of Chester; 7 miles west of Macclesfield; intersected by the Manchester and Birmingham railway. Acres 290. Houses 32. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 191. A. P. £2,129. Poor rates, in 1837, £82. Charities,—see Prestbury. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £12 9s. 11d., returned at £130; gross income £135. Patron, in 1835, T. Parker, Esq.

CHELL, a township in the parish of Wolstanton, Stafford; 4 miles north-north-east of Newcastle-under-Lyne; east of the Manchester and Birmingham railway. Houses 84. Pop., in 1811, 356; in 1801, 335. Other returns with the parish.

CHELLASTON, a parish in the hund. of Repton and Gresley, union of Shardlow, county of Derby; 5 miles south-south-east of Derby, near the Grand Trunk and Derby canal. Acres 810. Houses 74. Pop., in 1801, 205; in 1831, 352. A. P. £1,315. Poor rates, in 1837, £106. Living, a vicarage, not in charge, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; returned at £80; gross income £80. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle.

CHELLESWORTH, a parish in the hund. and union of Cosford, county of Suffolk; 1 mile south-west of Bildeston, on the river Bret. Acres 610. Houses 45. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 346. A. P. £1,319. Poor rates, in 1837, £85. Charities.—Robert Nightingale, in 1580, devised a copyhold estate, held of the manor of Chellesworth, for the use of the poor. The estate is vested in three trustees. It comprises about 21 acres of land; yearly rent, in 1828, £32, which is laid out in the purchase of coals and clothing for the poor of this parish. Thurloe's Dole,—a yearly rent charge of 30s. distributed to the poor in bread, on Lady-day, at the church. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £8 8s. 9d.; gross income £267. Patron, the King.

CHELLINGTON. See CARLETON, Bedfordshire. CHELLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Willey, union and county of Bedford; 6 miles north-north-east of Olney; bounded on the north and west by the river Ouse. Acres 610. Houses 25. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 119. A. P. £622. Poor rates, in 1837, £14. Living, a rectory, united in 1769 to that of Carleton.

CHELMARSH, a parish in the hund. of Stot-tesden, union of Bridgnorth, county of Salop; 4 miles south-east of Bridgnorth; bounded on the east by the river Severn. Acres 3,190. Houses 87. Pop., in 1801, 411; in 1831, 439. A. P. £3,694. Poor rates, in 1837, £209.—Chelmarsh is a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £6 5s. 8d.; gross income £264. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Sebright, Bart.

CHELMERTON, a chapelry in the parish of Bakewell, county of Derby; 5 miles south-west of Tideswell, in the vicinity of the Cromford and High Peak railway. Houses 53. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 268. A. P. £1,778. Poor rates, in 1837, £102. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Bakewell; certified at £7 15s. 4d., returned at £52; gross income £86. Patron, the vicar of Bakewell. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Presbyterians have places of worship here.

CHELMONDISTON, a parish in the hund. and incorporation of Samford, county of Suffolk; 6 miles south-south-east of Ipswich, east of the river Orwell, near its estuary. Acres 1,840. Houses 53. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 480. A. P. £1,639. Poor rates, in 1837, £141. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8 10s.; gross income £312. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The Baptists have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1824.

CHELMSFORD HUNDRED, in the centre of the county of Essex, surrounding the town of Chelmsford. Area 81,560 acres. Houses 4,916. Pop., in 1831, 27,179. By the boundary and division acts this hundred belongs to the south division of the county.

CHELMSFORD, anciently CHELMERSFORD, a parish, market, and county-town, in the above hundred, union of Chelmsford; 29 miles east-north-east of London, on a pleasant site near the centre of the county, at the confluence of the rivers Chelmer and Can. It is the great thoroughfare between London and the towns of Colchester, Harwich, and Braintree, and the county of Suffolk, and many parts of Norfolk. It has a navigable canal to the Blackwater river, and is intersected by the London and Norwich railway. It includes the hamlet of Moulsham. Acres 1,750. Houses 987. Pop., in 1801, 3,755; in 1831, 5,435. A. P. £14,935. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,701. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Chelmsford, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 400 persons. The Chelmsford poor-law union comprehends 31 parishes embracing an area of 128 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 26,455. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £19,248. Expenditure, in 1838, 13,458.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £31 2s. 6d.; gross income £663. The church is a handsome and spacious structure, lately rebuilt. At the west end is a square flint tower with pinnacles. It is uncertain when the original church was founded; but it appears to have been repaired in 1424 by subscription. In rebuilding the body of the church the ancient character of its architecture has been preserved; but the interior is elegantly ornamented in the modern style. The archdeacon holds his court in this church. Patroness, in 1835, Lady Mildmay. Within the hamlet of Moulsham in this parish, and near the river stood a Dominican priory, the site of which is still called The Friars. The revenue of this convent, at its dissolution, was £9 6s. 5d. The chapelry of St. John's has recently been erected into a distinct ecclesiastical district. There are places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Methodists, and Society of Friends; the Independent church was formed in 1705; and a fine new chapel, seating 2,000, was opened for its use in July, 1840. The Baptist church was formed in 1802.

Charities.—Chelmsford has ever been eminently distinguished by a spirit of benevolence, which induces the higher classes to contribute largely to the relief of the poor. During the inclement season of winter, coals are given for firing, and a liberal supply of excellent soup is distributed. The following charitable institutions have also been established here. Chelmsford lying-in-charity, instituted in 1799; Benevolent society for visiting and relieving poor persons under affliction, established in 1819; Chelmsford auxiliary charity to supply linen for infants; Blanket society for supplying blankets, sheets, and counterpanes; Dorcas charity, the members of which make garments to give to poor women. "The free grammar-school of King Edward the Sixth, for the education, teaching, and instruction of boys and youths in grammar," which was founded in 1551, and is regulated and conducted by four governors, one tutor or master, and one under-master or usher. The income, in 1837, amounted to £488 16s. 5d. The master's salary to £220, the assistant's to £100, and the treasurer's to £20. The remainder is expended in the payment of rates, tithes, taxes, insurance, &c. In 1830 the number of free scholars was limited to 40;—20 from Chelmsford and Moulsham, and 20 from the vicinity, limited, in the first instance, to a distance of 6 miles from the school-house; but if 20 free scholars were not provided from Chelmsford and Moulsham, a number equal to that below 20, so deficient, to be provided from the vicinity; and if 40 were not provided thus, the deficiency to be supplied from the children of the inhabitants of places within 12 miles. There were 21 boys educated on the foundation in 1837, who were appointed by the governors; no applications, however, had been refused. Of these, all but four were children of the inhabitants of Chelmsford and Moulsham. One boy was of the Jewish persuasion, and to him no religious instruction was imparted. The boys are admitted at seven years of age, and are allowed to remain at the school till they go to college. Till 1837, the branches of education taught were confined to grammar, Latin, and Greek.—The Charity-school;—founded in 1720. Donations have at various times been made towards the support of this school; but it is chiefly supported by voluntary contributions. In 1837, 30 boys and 20 girls were here taught reading, writing, and arithmetic, and the principles of the Christian religion according to the doctrines of the established church.—There are a number of other charities in this parish, one of them for the benefit of the free school; others for supporting and clothing the poor, and apprenticing their children. A sum of £200, bequeathed, in 1771, by Sir William Mildmay towards repairing the public wells, and a small gift to poor debtors in gaol. There are also four alms-houses founded by an unknown donor in 1603, which are occupied by poor persons placed there by the churchwardens, and which are kept in repair by the parish. Besides the charity schools, there are a Lancasterian, a National, and an infant school for both sexes, in this parish.

General Remarks.—Chelmsford derives its name from an ancient ford on the river Chelmer, near its junction with the Can. In the reign of Edward the Confessor, and at the time of the Norman survey, it was in the possession of the bishops of London; but it was never a place of importance till the reign of Henry I., when Maurice, bishop of London, built a stone-bridge of three arches over the Can, and, diverting the road, which previously passed through the village of Writtle, 2 miles to the eastward, into the line of his new bridge, made Chelmsford the great thoroughfare to the eastern parts of the county, as well as the counties of Suffolk and Norfolk. From this period its importance rapidly increased. A charter of privileges was obtained from King John; and in the reign of Edward III. it was honoured with the privilege of sending four representatives to a grand council held at Westminster. At present the town consists principally of three streets, all macadamized and lighted with gas. The houses are in general modern, and many of them have gardens behind them extending to the river. A beautiful iron-bridge has recently been thrown over the Chelmer, and an elegant stone-bridge, of one arch, over the Can, sometime ago replaced that erected by Bishop Maurice. It is by this bridge that the populous hamlet of Moulsham is joined to the town. Contiguous to the shire-hall, in the centre of the town, there is a neatly sculptured conduit having the figure of a Naiad at the top. A plentiful supply of water is conducted through pipes into it from a spring called Purge's well, about a mile from the town. The shire-hall is an elegant structure, fronted with Portland stone. The basement, which is rustic, supports four Ionic pillars, between which are three figures in basso-relievo, of Wisdom, Justice, and Mercy. In the basement of this building is an open space for the corn-exchange, and apartments for the courts of assize, sessions, &c. Above is an elegant assembly or county-room, which extends the whole length of the building, and is furnished with a music-gallery, two handsome chandeliers, and sculptured marble chimney-pieces. Behind this is a jury-room, witness-room, &c. The assizes, general quarter-sessions, petty sessions, county courts, and sittings of the commissioners of the land tax, &c., are held here; and here also the elections take place for the county representatives in parliament. The old county jail fronts the street, and is bounded on one side by the river Chelmer. It was erected upwards of 60 years since, and is now exclusively appropriated to debtors, as the adjoining house of correction is to female prisoners. This jail is out of repair and insecure, and a new one has been erected at Springfield, about a mile from the town. It is built on the radiating principle, and is capable of holding 272 prisoners, although it has contained many more. During the late war with France, two extensive ranges of barracks were erected here, which could accommodate 4,000 men; but they have been since taken down. At a short distance west of the southern barracks, there was the beginning of a line of embankment for defending the approach to the metropolis, consisting of star batteries and parapets: it ran in a south-east direction. This was one among the numerous works undertaken to defeat the purposes of the projected invasion. There being no manufactures here, the support of the labouring classes is chiefly derived from the general agricultural business of the county, and from the multitude of carriers and passengers that take this road to the metropolis. Several flourishing plantations of hops are established in the neighbourhood. The market is held on Friday, and there are fairs for cattle on May 12th and November 12th. There is a very neat and commodious theatre which is opened occasionally; assemblies and concerts take place periodically in the shire-hall; and horse-races, which continue for three days, are held in the latter end of July.

C H E L S E A,

A parish in the Kensington division of the hund. of Ossulstone, union of Kensington, county of Middlesex; 4½ miles south-south-west—but now a suburb—of London, north of the Thames, at a broad part of the river, over which there is a bridge connecting it with the parish of Battersea. Acres 780. Houses 4,635. Pop., in 1801, 11,604; in 1831, 32,571. A. P. £126,467. Poor rates, in 1837, £11,790. Charities:—There are various small gifts in this parish collected into a general fund, termed the bread and coal fund. Income, in 1825, £17 5s. 8d. Other minor charities amounted, in 1825, to about £36. The charity school, which now comprises both boys and girls, was founded originally, for boys only, in 1706, and is maintained principally by voluntary contributions. This parish has the privilege of sending two parishioners as alma-people to Emanuel hospital in Westminster, and also two children of parishioners to the school under that establishment. Schools:—In the educational returns of 1835 it was stated that there were 41 daily schools—exclusive of the royal military asylum—in Chelsea, and 30 other schools, besides a number not enumerated in the return. There is a united Sunday school and school of industry, in which 30 girls are instructed and employed in sewing, knitting, and plain-work. It has been conducted under the patronage of Lady Cremorne.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—The original living is a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Middlesex; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £1,003. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Cadogan. The parish of St. Luke, Chelsea, was divided into two parishes in 1832. The old church, now used as a chapel, is a small brick edifice, by no means conspicuous for its beauty. It was found too small for the increasing population of the parish. It contains many curious monuments, especially one to Sir Thomas More, who constructed a chapel at the east end of the south aisle, but whose body, it is most probable, was interred within the Tower after his execution. Against the south wall of the church on the outside is placed a monument to Edward Chamberlayne, LL. D. and F. R. S., author of 'Angliæ Notitia, or the present state of England, with divers reflections on the ancient state thereof, 1668;' and of several other publications and manuscripts, some of the latter of which he ordered to be "covered with wax, and buried with him, which may be of use in times to come." The mysterious peculiarity relating to these buried volumes did not fail to excite much curiosity; but time, in general the great solver of mystery, tended only to confirm it in this instance; for even the tomb, a few years since, yielded to its dread influence,—and on examination, the damp and moisture were found to have utterly destroyed these mysterious manuscripts. There is a monument to Sir Hans Sloane in the churchyard, where many other eminent persons are also interred. Adjoining the work-house in the King's road, and at the distance of about a quarter of a mile from the church, is an additional piece of ground for the purpose of burial, given to the parish by Sir Hans Sloane in 1733, and enlarged in 1790 by a grant from Lord Cadogan. A second auxiliary burying-ground, centrally situated, and containing about four acres, was also consecrated in 1813. This place of sepulture is surrounded by high iron rails, and possesses a chapel for the performance of burial service. The ground, buildings, &c., cost the parish the sum of £11,000. The new church is a magnifirent and spacious edifice: built in 1824 at an expense of £40,000. It is in the pointed style of architecture, with a lofty square tower. It is a perpetual curacy, of the yearly value of £300; in the patronage of the rector of St. Luke's. The chapel in Sloane-street, a handsome edifice, built in 1830, is a perpetual curacy in the gift of the rector. To these may be added Park episcopal chapel, built by Sir Richard Manningham in 1718. There are also places of worship for Independents, Baptists, and Calvinistic Methodists; one of the Independent chapels was originally built for the French refugees; another was founded in 1800; the first Baptist church was formed in 1817, the second in 1824, and the third in 1830. There is also a dissenting chapel licensed under the new marriage act.

General Description.—The village of Chelsea has been rendered deeply interesting from the number of eminent and literary persons who have resided in it, as well as from the institution of two National establishments in it of the most munificent description. From the beauty of its situation, and its vicinity to the metropolis, it was, long ago, selected as a place of retirement from the fatigues of business or of dissipation, and the splendid mansions reared up by the illustrious loungers who courted a temporary repose in its solitude, justified its honorary appellation of the village of palaces. Here was the residence of Sir Thomas More, the witty, the upright, but bigoted chancellor of Henry VIII.; here was the princely dwelling of the bishops of Winchester; here was a favourite palace of the good Queen Bess; and here the notorious Sir Robert Walpole spent some of his years 'unclogged with cares of state.' The buildings which sheltered these great men and women of other ages, have all been taken away; but they have been replaced by others not less worthy of admiration, though they may be tenanted by less ambitious spirits. At the western extremity of the village is the elegant villa of Lord Cremorne, who has a good collection of pictures of the Italian and Flemish schools, and adjoining is a house formerly the property and residence of Dr. Hoadley, author of the comedy of the 'Suspicious Husband.' Ranelagh also stood in the parish; but its glories are faded, and its once splendid walls are desolate and deserted. There are many elegant houses in Cheyne walk, in the old town, and in the new, a line of houses, of respectable appearance, named Sloane-street, nearly a mile in length. The buildings of Chelsea now extend on the north-east nearly to Hyde Park corner, and proportionally in other directions. They are beautifully situated on the widest reach of the Thames westward of London bridge. The streets are brilliantly lighted with gas.

Water Works.—The Chelsea water works are under the management of a company incorporated by act of parliament passed in the year 1724. Two years afterwards the basin in the Green-park was constructed to supply Whitehall and part of Westminster. They also formed the reservoir in Hyde-park. At that time they possessed the means of supplying 10,000 houses, at a cheaper rate than the New River company. In the year 1742 the extraordinary severity of the winter destroyed the works, and a new act was passed to increase their capital. In 1767 the daily supply raised by their works amounted to 1,740 tons; it was shortly after increased to 3,500; in 1809 it exceeded 6,500; and it now may amount to 20,000 tons; but it was necessary that not only the quantity, but the quality should be considered. To effect this object many different plans have, therefore, been tried; many have failed, after enormous sums expended. The means by which the Chelsea company have endeavoured to succeed has been by applying the principle of the filter on a scale of greater magnitude than has hitherto been attempted. In the beginning of the year 1810 the Chelsea water works were removed from the original site, at the east end of the cut made from the river, which now forms the Belgrave-basin, to the bank of the Thames, nearly opposite the Red-house, Battersea. The ground which they occupy is about six acres and a half. The supply of water from the river was, till the late improvements, received into the mains from a building called a Dolphin, which stood about 50 feet from the bank. This was fabricated of brick, to within about eight feet of the surface of the stream at low-water-mark: above it was a structure of iron, pierced in holes in every direction, through which the element flowed, and which, by preventing any large or foreign body from passing, to a certain extent supplied the purpose of a filter. A little higher, near the Ranelagh-basin, was the mouth of a large sewer; and thus this contrivance could not by any possibility have been of much use in purifying the supply. This building has been removed, and the main pipes are now laid across the bottom of the bed of the river to the Surrey side, from whence they receive their supply, and which, from having nothing but a few land-drains opening into it for some miles, is in a great degree free from those objections of which the densely populated state of the northern side was the occasion. The water, being received from the mains into the first reservoir, which is 100 feet in length by 70 in breadth, and 10 in depth, then enters a basin lined with stone and brick, from which it is forced up into the southern reservoir, 300 feet in length, by 160 in breadth, and into the northern one, 540 feet by 140. Both these reservoirs are lined throughout with what is called brick-on-edge paving, and being located at a considerable elevation above the filtering beds, the water flows from them into the filters, of which there are two—the southern one 240 feet in length by 180 in breadth, and the northern 351 feet by 180, the latter being placed at a greater elevation than the former. Having passed through both of these, it is slowly received into an open culvert immediately from them, of about 15 feet in depth, and from thence being taken into the mains, some of which pass under, and are affixed to, the bridge over the Belgrave-canal, then supplies the district. The formation of these filtering beds, and the great scale on which they are constructed, is curious. The sides are elevated about 12 feet above the level of the ground, strongly embanked, and covered with turf: the bottom is formed of clay, which is 18 inches in depth. Upon this are placed, in the northern 9, and in the southern 11, brick tunnels, which extend from one end of the bed to the other, each three feet in diameter, and two bricks in thickness, and so constructed that every other brick is left out, and the water has a free passage through them. They are then surrounded on all sides, and covered to the height of 24 inches with gravel stones: above this is a layer of six inches of a shelly concrete, and upon that a bed of coarse sand, upon which is another of fine sand. These two beds may be about five feet in depth. Between the tunnels placed on the sand are wooden troughs, three feet in length by six inches in width, and three deep, at about ten feet distance from each other. The use of these—and it is most ingenious—is to prevent the water from washing the sand into holes when it is admitted into the filter. The deposit which the water makes on the surface of the sand is easily removed, and requires the sand, with which it becomes mixed to the depth of two or three inches, to be raked off once in three weeks or a month, which is done in a few hours, the intervals of removal depending, to a certain extent, on the action of the wind and tide. A steam-engine of 120 horse power raises the water, to the amount of 3,500 gallons a minute, or upwards of 5,000,000 gallons in the course of the day. The expense, we understand, has exceeded the sum of £60,000.

Botanic Gardens.—The apothecaries' garden on the margin of the Thames comprises between 3 and 4 acres. In 1673 Charles Cheyne, Esq., lord of the manor, demised to the company of apothecaries this plot of ground for a lease of 61 years; and the garden was soon stocked with a satisfactory variety of medicinal plants. Sir Hans Sloane studied his favourite science here, and at the expiration of the original lease he granted the freehold of the premises to the company of the apothecaries, on the salutary condition of their paying a quit-rent of £5, and delivering annually to the Royal society specimens of fifty different plants, the growth of the garden, till the number should exceed 2,000. He himself enriched the establishment with many rare and estimable plants; and contributed largely to the increase of the buildings. In the centre of the garden is a fine statue by Rysbach of Sir Hans Sloane, in front of which, towards the river, have been planted two remarkably fine Libanus cedars. To the garden are attached a hot-house, green-houses, and a library of natural history. Periodical lectures are delivered here, at stated periods, for the improvement of the apprentices of the apothecaries' company, by a demonstrator appointed for that purpose. A second botanic garden in Sloane-street of considerably larger extent, well stocked with plants, arranged after the Linnean system, in 17 compartments, was founded by Mr. William Curtis, whose name is well known by his two great works, the 'Flora Londinensis,' and the 'Botanical Magazine.' The grounds comprise rather more than six acres, and are disposed with much taste. Lectures are delivered here annually in the months of May and June. In several other parts of this parish are large nursery gardens.

The Royal Hospital.—The most remarkable object, however, in Chelsea, is the national asylum for maimed and worn out soldiers, the Royal military hospital, one of the noblest foundations in the world, the buildings of which alone were finished at an expense of £150,000, and of which the annual expenditure comes little short of £1,000,000. The buildings were originally commenced by James I. shortly after his accession to the English crown, as a foundation for a college devoted solely to the study of controversial theology, more particularly of the points at issue between the English and the Romish churches. He accordingly incorporated a provost and fellows by the title of King James' college of Chelsea, and this corporation he endowed by his letters patent with certain lands in Chelsea, authorizing it at the same time to receive from any of his loving subjects who were willing to bestow them, lands not exceeding in whole the annual value of £3,000. From the frivolity and natural indolence of his character,—from his extreme poverty,—his contentings with his parliaments, and his negotiations for a splendid match to his son, 'baby Charles,' James made but little progress with the building of his new college, though collections were made for it in 1616 in a number of parishes: still it was kept on foot. Charles I., intent only upon extending his prerogatives, had neither the time, the means, nor the inclination to extend the interests of learning; and the college of Chelsea fell into the hands of Charles II. at the restoration just as his grandfather had left it. A convenient Hospital for sick, maimed, and superannuated soldiers having been long wanted, that monarch converted the unfinished buildings of King James' college of Chelsea to that use; hence the name of the military hospital to this day—"the college of Chelsea." Tradition bestows the honour of the design on Eleanor Gwynn, one of the King's mistresses. Thus, recommended by Charles II., the buildings were somewhat forwarded by James II.; but they were completed by William and Mary in 1692, under the direction of Sir Christopher Wren. The building is of brick, in the form of a parallelogram, ornamented with freestone quoins, cornices, pediments, and columns. It is solid, commanding, and of elevated proportions; and, in general architectural character, is judiciously suited to its object; viewed in its relations to which, it constitutes one of the noblest ornaments which a brave and free nation can possess. It stands at a short distance from the river, towards which it affords an advantageous display. Large gardens extend to the edge of the water, and finish with an elevated terrace. To the north is a field of 13 acres, laid out in walks, with avenues of beautiful trees for a promenade. The building consists of three courts, the principal of which is open on the south side, towards the river, and is ornamented, in the centre, with a bronze statue of the royal founder Charles II., larger than life, and in a Roman habit. The two wings are each 365 feet in length, and consist chiefly of the pensioners' wards. The whole length from east to west is 790 feet. In the centre of the north side is a large vestibule lighted by a dome, on one side of which is the chapel, containing an admirable painting of the 'Resurrection,' by Ricci, and on the other, the grand hall in which the pensioners dine. The care of this institution is vested in the following commissioners appointed by patent under the great seal. The lord president of the council; the first lord of the treasury; the secretaries of state; the pay-master-general of the forces; the secretary at war; the comptrollers of army accounts; and the governor and the lieutenant-governor of the royal hospital. Of these the latter five only act, and they hold boards occasionally for the admission of pensioners, and for the internal regulation of the hospital. The establishment consists of a governor; a secretary; two chaplains; a physician; a surgeon; and an apothecary; a comptroller; a steward; a clerk of the works; and other subordinate warrant officers. The number of in-pensioners is usually about 500. In 1839 they amounted to 539. They are provided with clothes, lodging, and diet, and an allowance, varying according to rank and service, from 8d. to 3s. 6d. per week. They are lodged in 16 wards, to each of which two sergeants and two corporals are appointed, with a matron, under the immediate inspection of the house-keeper. The hospital being considered as a military station, the pensioners mount guard, and perform other garrison duties. The allowance to the out-pensioners, or those who live in dwellings of their own throughout the country, is 5d. to 3s. 6d. a-day; and they always have half-a-year's pension in advance. Their number is not limited by law, and in 1836-37 it amounted to 79,500, the annual expense being £1,359,463. The expense of the hospital is chiefly defrayed by an annual grant from the parliament, voted with the army estimates. The comforts of the hospitaliers are also augmented by various annual rents, and other donations. York hospital, in this parish, is a receptacle for wounded soldiers arriving from foreign stations, who are waiting to have their claims to a vacancy in the royal college examined.

Military Asylum.—The royal military asylum hospital was founded in 1801 by parliamentary grant.

under the auspices of the late duke of York. Its objects are to support and educate the orphan children of soldiers, and non-commissioned officers, and the children of those who are on foreign stations. This institution is an appropriate auxiliary to the hospital, founded by King Charles. It is upheld by parliamentary grants, and by the annual contribution of one day's pay from the whole army. The building is on an extensive plan, and is chiefly formed of brick, with embellishments of stone. The principal parts compose three sides of a quadrangle; and the western or chief front has, in the centre, a spacious stone portico of the Doric order. Four pillars, of noble and commanding proportions, support the pediment; and on the frieze is the following inscription:—"The royal military asylum for the children of soldiers of the regular army." On the tympanum of the pediment are the imperial arms. The asylum is enclosed by high walls. An iron railing opens towards the great front; and the grounds connected with that part of the building are disposed in a simple, but ornamental manner: attached to either wing is a spacious play-yard, or area, for exercise; and, in several parts of these grounds, are arcades, for the protection of the children while taking air in inclement seasons. The domestic affairs are regulated by commissioners appointed by the Queen's sign-manual, who hold four quarterly boards yearly. The official establishment consists of a commandant; adjutant and secretary; chaplain; quarter-master; surgeon; matron; and various subordinate persons. In 1833 this institution contained 450 boys, being considerably less than half the number under instruction during the time of the late war; but at present, in 1840, it contains only about 350 boys, varying from 5 years old to 14, who are taught chiefly reading, writing, and the more useful branches of arithmetic; besides which, at the age of eleven, they are employed, five hours a-day in summer, and four hours a-day in winter, on alternate days, in works of industry; and, in this short period, they make every article of clothing required for their own use. In the report of the National school society it is stated that, "rather less than a hundred boys work as tailors; fifty each day alternately: about the same number are employed in a similar manner, as shoemakers, capmakers, and in covering and repairing their old school-books; besides which, there are two sets or companies of knitters and of shirt-makers, and others who are engaged as porters, and gardeners, in kitchen-work, &c. &c. Every thing is done by those who work at the trades except the cutting-out. This branch, requiring more experience, is managed by the old regimental shoe-makers, tailors, &c., who, with aged sergeants and corporals, and their wives, manage the concerns of the institution. The system of monitors and teachers to overlook the other boys at work is generally adopted; while, in addition to the various branches of industry mentioned, the school furnishes a company of drummers and fliers, and an excellent band of music; the players necessarily devoting a considerable part of their time to the practice of their instruments." On parade days, the boys, dressed in full military uniform, with their flags flying, drums beating, and full band playing, proceed to the parade, where they are marched in military order, and perform various military evolutions. After parade they go through a course of gymnastic exercises. It is said, however, that there are defects in the arrangements of this establishment—as, that the children are sometimes on particular exigencies kept away from school in order to work, and that they are allowed no share of their earnings, and thus do not obtain "that lesson of providence which might be inculcated by a savings' bank." Nevertheless, the royal military asylum is allowed to be "an evidence that a greater degree of progress may be made in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and in other branches of learning, than is attained in the great majority of schools, and yet that the boys may be taught music, gymnastic exercises, and various useful trades; thus improving their health, increasing their means of enjoyment, and promoting their future interests, much more effectually than by the prevailing methods."* When a regiment is in want of recruits, a notice, it appears, is placed in the school-rooms, and any boys above fourteen years of age who may wish to go into the army are allowed to join that regiment. For those who prefer trade or other occupations, situations are provided, and if their conduct merit reward, they are at the end of a certain number of years, upon producing certificates of good behaviour from their employers, publicly rewarded in the chapel of the institution. There is no compulsion upon any to become members of the military profession. This institution has been honoured by visits from emperors, kings, and rulers, of all ranks and degrees.

CHELSEFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Bromley. Acres 3,330. Houses 127. Pop., in 1801, 605; in 1831, 796. A. P. £3,174. Poor rates, in 1837, £477. Charities—Annual rent £22 10s. for repairs of church and for behoof of the poor, besides 6 cottages and gardens occupied by poor persons, and three acres of parish lands. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Farnborough, in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £24 14s. 2d.; gross income £908. Patrons, the master and wardens of All Souls college, Oxford.

CHELISHAM, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Tandridge, union of Godstone, county of Surrey; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Croydon. Acres 2,700. Houses 47. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 279. A. P. £2,018. Poor rates, in 1837, £192. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Warlingham.

CHELTENHAM HUNDRED, in the eastern division of the county of Gloucester. Area 10,810 acres. Houses 4,691. Pop., in 1831, 26,574.

CHELTENHAM,

A market-town and parish in the hund. and union of Cheltenham and county of Gloucester; 96 miles north-west of London; 16 from Cirencester; 14 from Stroud; and 9 miles from Gloucester and Tewksbury. With the city of Gloucester it was connected in 1815 by a railway running between the basin of the Gloucester and Berkeley canal in Gloucester, and the Knapp toll-gate at Cheltenham. The principal advantage contemplated in the establishment of this railroad was the supplying of the town with coal at a cheap rate; an object in which the undertaking has proved successful. A railway line of communication between Cheltenham and Birmingham, with a continuation to Gloucester, is now in progress; and likewise a branch railway to connect Cheltenham with the Great Western railway. This latter line proceeds by Cirencester, and joins the Great Western at Swindon. The Great Western railway, according to the statement of Mr. Brunel, will probably be completed, as far as Swindon, in the summer of 1840, and, from the spirit with which the directors of the Cheltenham and Great Western railway company are now proceeding, it seems very likely that soon after that time Cheltenham will possess the advantage of a railway communication with the metropolis and the west and south of England. To the clothing district of Gloucestershire the Cheltenham and Great Western railway holds out great advantages. A small rivulet called the Chelt—whence Cheltenham—runs through the town and falls into the Severn.—Acres 3,740. Houses 4,013. Pop., in 1801, 3,076; in 1831, 22,942. A. P., in 1815, £35,637. Poor rates, in 1837, £4,273. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Cheltenham, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Cheltenham poor-law union comprehends 13 parishes, embracing an area of 38 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 29,862. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £5,770. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,517.

* "Some Account of the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea." Second publication of the Central Society of Education, p. 190.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Living, a perpetual curacy, with the curacies of St. Paul and Trinity annexed, in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; gross income £1,170. Patron, in 1835, the trustees of the late Rev. C. Simeon. The church is an ancient structure, in the centre of the town, and for the most part of the architecture of the middle ages. It consists of a nave, chancel, side-aisles, and transept, with a square tower rising from the intersection and terminated by a lofty octagonal spire. In the north transept is a beautiful circular window 15 feet in diameter, divided into compartments by singular ramifications. The east window, in the pointed form, is also large and handsome. The church seats 1,600 persons. The living of St. James is a curacy; gross income £250: that of St. John is also a curacy; gross income £250. The church of the Holy Trinity, in Portland street, is a neat Gothic edifice erected chiefly at the expense of Lord Sherburne, and made a chapel-of-ease to the parish church. It seats 900. St. James' church, in Suffolk square, is a beautiful Gothic structure, capable of seating 1,000 persons. St. Paul's church, built by voluntary subscription for the accommodation of a poor and populous district, seats 1,400. Christ-church in the hamlet of Alstone is a beautiful edifice, 130 feet in length by 107 at the transept. There are two chapels belonging to the Countess of Huntingdon's connexion: viz. Cheltenham chapel, in St. George's place, built in 1809, and seating 1,000 persons; and another in North Place, built by R. Capper, Esq., in 1816, and seating 600. The Baptists have two chapels: viz. Bethel chapel, originally built in 1700, but rebuilt in 1821; and Salem chapel, built in 1837. The latter chapel seats 1,200. Ebenezer chapel, in King street, was opened by the Wesleyan Methodists in 1803. This body has a new chapel now in course of erection in George street, which will seat 1,000; and there is a small chapel belonging to the same body in Norwood street. Highbury Independent chapel, in Grosvenor street, opened in 1831, seats 600. There are also a Catholic chapel, a Unitarian chapel, a Quakers' meeting-house, and a Jews' synagogue.—There are several endowed charities. Poor's lands—income, in 1824, £57. Two charity schools' income, in 1824, £63 10s. Other charities £70. Schools.—In 1835 there were 50 daily and Sunday schools in this parish including a National school. There are a Mechanics' institute, and a Literary and Philosophical society.

General description.—Cheltenham is delightfully situated in an extensive and fertile valley, open to the south and west, but on the north, east, and south-east sheltered and its temperature rendered agreeable by the Malvern hills, and by the immense amphitheatre formed by the Cotawold ridge meeting with the Leckhampton hills. These latter terminate abruptly about 2 miles to the south-east of the town, which consists principally of one noble street called the High Street, upwards of a mile in length and contains, with a few houses of ancient date and mean appearance, many fine ranges of buildings. Branching off from this main street, numerous side streets have been formed, which display, in all their beauty, the elegant and tasteful varieties of architectural decoration. All of them are well-paved and brilliantly lighted with gas. A number of detached villas, some of them very handsome, adorn the suburbs and the surrounding country. Altogether Cheltenham is a very agreeable residence; and one of the most fashionable towns in the kingdom. Its leading feature is that of the "rus in urbe;" the trees and shrubs which surround the squares, and line the streets which branch off from the High Street, present a peculiarly beautiful mingling of rural and city charms. The scenery in the immediate neighbourhood is also very rich and beautiful, but the want of water is a great deficiency. The Chelt or Chilt, is but a small and scanty stream.

Mineral springs.—The town derives its importance as well as celebrity solely from its mineral springs, the first of which, the Spring or Spa, as it was long called by way of distinction,—was discovered by accident in the year 1716. In 1718, a small thatched shed was thrown over it. The spring is now known as the Old or King's well. Several others have at different periods been since discovered, possessing, in varied proportions, chalybeate, aperient neutral salts, chiefly sulphate of soda, sulphate of magnesia, and oxide of iron, held in solution by carbonic acid, and iodine. In 1721 the Old well was let for £61; and it must have been considerably frequented in 1738, when Captain Killiecrankie erected over it a brick pavilion supported on four arches,—built a pump-room, and laid out walks for the visitors; which led to it through the churchyard under a fine alcove of lime-trees, and from thence in a serpentine direction through orchards and gardens, into a beautiful meadow. The present pump-room is 66 feet by 23. The Montpellier spa was opened in 1809. An elegant and commodious pump-room is connected with this spring. Cambray saline and chalybeate spa was discovered in 1833; and Pritwell was opened in 1830. As a building, the latter is the most splendid in Cheltenham. It is in the Grecian style, 90 feet in length by 43 in depth; with a colonnade 20 feet wide. There are fine walks and rides in the surrounding plantations and lawns, which are adorned by a small lake. There are numerous lodging-houses and hotels fitted up with the greatest attention to comfort and splendour, and every way suitable for visitors of the highest grade in society. For their convenience and gratification, there are excellent libraries, reading-rooms, and musical and other repositories, all tastefully embellished, and carefully conducted. The amusements of Cheltenham include musical promenades, morning and evening promenades in the walks of the different pump-rooms, and balls in Montpellier rotunda. Hunting is the principal amusement from November to April. The theatre, an uncommonly neat one, was burnt down 12 months since. There are also horse-races annually in the month of July. The season continues from May to the end of November.

Trade, &c.—Cheltenham is entirely dependent on its visitors, who are generally either persons who have no occupation, or invalids of the more affluent classes. Its convenient situation, between the Cotawold hills and the vale of Gloucester, renders it always a considerable mart for sheep and corn. The making of malt was once its chief business. Coal is brought by the Severn to Gloucester, from Staffordshire, from Shropshire, and the Forest of Dean, and thence by railroad to the wharfs at the west end of the town. Salmon and other favourite fish are obtained fresh from the Severn, and the market is supplied with a superabundance of all sorts of necessaries and luxuries from the surrounding towns and villages. There is an excellent market-house; and a pig-market. Thursday is market-day. Fairs are held on the 2d Thursday in April, Holy Thursday, 2d and 3d Thursday in September, December 7th and 18th for all sorts of cattle and pedlery, and on August 5th for lambs only and pedlery. —Cheltenham was enfranchised by the Reform act, and now returns one member to parliament. The number polled at last election, in 1837, was 930. The boundaries of the parish and borough are usually represented as coinciding, but this is at present a point in dispute. The number of houses taxed at £10 a-year and upwards, in 1831, was 2,067; assessed taxes, in 1830, £21,184 19s. 1½d.; in 1839-40, £14,228 17s. 0½d.

CHELVESTON, or CHELSTON, a parish in the hund. of Higham-Ferrers, union of Thrapston, county of Northampton; 2 miles east by North of Higham-Ferrers. It includes the hamlet of Caldicot. Acres 1,730. Houses 67. Pop., in 1801, 266; in 1831, 332. A. P. £1,907. Poor rates, in 1837, £190. Charities:—With Caldicot, this parish possesses a charity school, founded in 1760. The estate consists of a farm, comprising a house and 20 acres of land; annual rent, in 1830, £24, paid to the schoolmaster to teach all the children of applicants in both parishes, reading, writing, and arithmetic. Neale's charity to the poor of Chelveston-with-Caldicot, interest £1 per annum. Four alms-houses and other property bequeathed to the poor of the parishes of Chelveston-with-Caldicot, and Raunds; annual rents of the latter, in 1830, £18 10s., at which time the alms-houses were all inhabited by poor of the parish of Chelveston, at a rent of £1 ls. a-year. The rents were all expended for the general relief of the poor of the respective parishes. Living, a curacy with Caldicot to the vicarage of Higham-Ferrers.

CHELVEY, a parish in the hund. of Hartcliffe with Bedminster, union of Bedminster, county of Somerset; 8½ miles south-west by west of Bristol; intersected by the Bristol and Exeter railway. Acres 320. Houses 9. Pop., in 1801, 43; in 1831, 70. A. P. £622. Poor rates, in 1837, £30. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £4 9s. 7d.; gross income £142. Patron, in 1835, C. K. K. Tynte.

CHELWOOD, a parish in the hund. of Keynsham, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; 2 miles south-east of Pensford. Acres 1,130. Houses 42. Pop., in 1801, 192; in 1831, 246. A. P. £1,972. Poor rates, in 1837, £122. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £5 7s. 6d.; gross income £280. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. The Independents have an endowed chapel here. It is situated in a woody country, full of hills and deep valleys.

CHENEYS, or CHENIES, a parish in the hund. of Burnham, union of Amersham, county of Buckingham; 4½ miles east-east by north of Amersham, and south of the river Chess. Acres 229. Houses 100. Pop., in 1801, 423; in 1831, 649. A. P. £2,400. Poor rates, in 1837, £414. Charities,—Lady Warwick's alms-house founded in 1603; annual rent, in 1832, including a gift from the earl of Bedford a few years subsequent to its foundation, and also a gift from the duke of Bedford, £63. The alms-house contains 10 tenements, all occupied by poor women, who receive also each 50 faggots per annum, cost 10s. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12 16s. 0½d.; nett income £380. Patron, the Duke of Bedford. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1760. John Russell, Esq., ancestor of his grace the duke of Bedford, was raised to the peerage in 1538-9, by the title of Baron Russell of Cheney, a title still borne by his descendants.

CHEPSTOW, a parish, port, and market-town, in the upper division of the hund. of Caldicot, union of Chepstow, county of Monmouth; 15 miles east-east by north of Newport, and 135 west of London; pleasantly situated on the side of a hill among the cliffs, that rise on the western bank of the Wye, near its confluence with the Severn. Acres 1,020. Houses 685. Pop., in 1801, 2,060; in 1831, 3,524. A. P. £6,280. Poor rates, in 1837, £784. A work-house has been erected here for the union of Chepstow by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 150 persons. The Chepstow poor-law union comprehends 38 parishes, embracing an area of 101 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 14,787. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £5,389. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,063.

Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £6 16s. 8d., gross income £214; in the patronage, in 1835, of Mrs. Burr and E. Bevan, Esq. A new church, in the early Norman style, was erected here in 1838. There are also an Independent and a Baptist church; the former was formed in 1824, the latter in 1818; also a Roman Catholic chapel built in 1826. The church was formerly the conventual church of a priory of Benedictine or Black monks, alien to the abbey of Cormeil in Normandy, founded here as early as the reign of King Stephen. The remains of this priory, though in a very dilapidated state, exhibit an exceedingly curious specimen of ancient ecclesiastical architecture. The interior has a venerable appearance, and its general features point out its great antiquity. In the neighbourhood are the remains of several other religious houses. There are a number of charities connected with this parish, the principal of which consist of Powis's hospital or alms-house, for six men and six women; income, in 1833, besides the hospital, £179 4s. Bowsher's charities to ten poor aged bachelors; income, in 1833, £104, at which time one poor bachelor and nine other poor men enjoyed the benefaction. Sir Walter Montague's alms-house or hospital for ten or twelve poor people, two of whom from the parish of Lammarton and Pencoyde; income, in 1833, besides the hospital, £38. Bowsher and Watkins' charities for lighting the town with gas; income, in 1833, £34 2s. 6d. Other charities for children and adults; income, in 1833, £45 8s. 8d. There are 21 daily and Sunday schools in the parish.

The streets of the town are neatly built and lighted with gas. The advantageous situation of Chepstow, near the mouth of the Wye, is supposed to have rendered it a desirable position both in Roman and Saxon times; hence its encampments, and its castle, and fortifications. The Wye is navigable for large vessels only to Chepstow bridge, but barges from 18 to 30 tons burthen can go as high as Hereford. The tide is said to rise here higher than in any other part of the world. It runs up the river with wonderful rapidity, frequently rising above 50 feet, but it has been known to rise even to 70 feet. "From the form of the British channel," says De La Beche, "and the absence of a free passage for the waters, such as exists at the Straits of Dover in the English channel, westerly winds force up and sustain a great body of water, thereby raising the sea above the mean level several feet. It appears from an account of the great storm of the 26th November, 1703, that the tide flowed over the top of Chepstow bridge, inundating all the low lands on both sides of the Severn, washing away farm-yards, drowning cattle, &c.; and it is worthy of remark, that the barometer is recorded to have then fallen lower than had ever been previously noticed." There is a well here which ebbs and flows inversely with the flow and ebb of the tide. When the tide is at its height it is perfectly dry; a little before which it begins to subside, and soon after the ebb it returns: neither wet nor dry weather affects it; but its increase and decrease regularly correspond with the tide. The well is 32 feet deep, and has frequently 14 feet water, which is remarkably good. Ship-building is carried on to a considerable extent in the convenient docks on the banks of the Wye. In these, vessels of 600 tons are built for the Baltic trade. Great quantities of salmon are caught in the Severn, and the Wye fisheries, and sent from Chepstow to London and other places. There are no manufactures carried on here, but the foreign trade is considerable. Wines are imported from Oporto, and deals, hemp, flax, and pitch, from Norway and Russia. It is the port of all the towns on the rivers Wye and Lug, and supplies Herefordshire and the eastern part of Monmouthshire with all the necessary imports. It exports bark, iron, cider, coal, and millstones. It sends a vast quantity of timber to Plymouth, Portsmouth, and Deptford; and the Bristol market depends upon it in a great measure for its supply of grain. The gross receipt of customs duty at Chepstow, in 1834, was £902. The market-day is Saturday, and there are markets on the last Monday of every month for horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, and wool. The fairs are Friday in Whitsun-week, Saturday before June 23d, August 1st, Friday se'nnight after St. Luke, and October 18th. The petty-sessions for the upper division of Caldicot hundred, are held here by the county-magistrates. The duke of Beaufort is lord of the manor, and proprietor of the fisheries in the Severn from Conepill to the New passage, and in the Wye from Brockwar to the mouth of Chepstow river.

The rocky cliffs on each side of the river, and the beautiful scenery of Persefield, a seat in the neighbourhood of much celebrity, afford the most delightful prospects imaginable. Numerous ancient encampments are traceable in the vicinity, and Chepstow castle, or Castle Gwent, stands in a bold and commanding position on a rock of considerable elevation, of which it occupies the entire summit. It is constructed so near the river, that it appears to form part of the perpendicular cliff on which it stands; masses of ivy creeping down and concealing portions of the native rocks. The river flows close to its walls. The magnificent remains of this immense pile form a striking and picturesque object from almost every point in which it can be viewed. Towards the land side it was defended by a vast moat, and the walls were flanked with lofty bastion towers. The lords of the castle and town were the earls of Pembroke, of the house of Clare, the last of whom was Richard Strongbow, earl of Strigul, Chepstow, and Pembroke, who died in 1176. The castle was erected by William Fitz-Osborn, earl of Hereford, not long after the Conquest. About the same time that the castle was built, the town was fortified with strong walls, portions of which, with the bastions erected for their defence, are still in existence. Over the river Wye there was at one time a curious old wooden bridge of great height, erected on piles, which has been displaced by an elegant iron one, erected at the joint expense of the counties of Gloucester and Monmouth; the river Wye forming the line of separation between them. The passage over the Severn, within 2 miles of the town, has also been greatly improved by the erection of stone-piers and the establishment of steam-packets.

CHERHILL, a chapelry in the parish and hund. of Calne, county of Wilts; 2½ miles east of Calne, on the post road. Acres 2,370. Houses 80. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 404. A. P. £1,917. Poor rates, in 1837, £167. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Calne, not in charge. On the summit of a chalk hill near this village is an ancient square camp with double works, called Oldbury camp, the supposed retreat of the Danes after the battle of Etonden; and on the site of the same hill is the figure of a horse, 157 feet long, cut out of the turf. It was executed under the direction, and at the expense of Dr. Christopher Allsop, an eminent physician of Calne, and from its situation, being the highest land between London and Bath, is visible at the distance of between 20 and 30 miles in almost every direction.

CHERINGTON, a parish in the Brailes division of the hund. of Kington, union of Shipston-on-Stour, county of Warwick; 3½ miles south-east of Shipston-upon-Stour, south of the river Stour. Acres 890. Houses 70. Pop., in 1801, 290; in 1831, 328. A. P. £1,719. Poor rates, in 1837, £182. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £11 10s. 7½d.; gross income £290. Patron, in 1835, Joseph Turner, Esq.

CHERITON, a parish in the hund. of Folkestone, lathe of Shepway, union of Elham, county of Kent; 2½ miles west-north-west of Folkestone, close on the South-Eastern railway. Acres 1,790. Houses 213. Pop., in 1801, 727; in 1831, 1,143. A. P. £3,352. Poor rates, in 1837, £533. Living, a rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of Newington, in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £16 12s. 6d.; gross income £783. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Brockman.

CHERITON, a parish in the hund. and union of Swansea, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 14 miles west-north-west of Swansea, delightfully situated on the river Bury. Houses 45. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 242. A. P. £816. Poor rates, in 1837, £46. Living, a rectory in the dio. of St. David's; rated at £9 7s. 3½d., returned at £117; gross income £117. Patron, the Crown. The harbour has six feet of water at all times on the bar, but it is open to the north-west, and the tail of the Hopper sand bank, which is continually shifting, makes the entrance sometimes dangerously narrow.

CHERITON, a parish in the hund. of Fawley, union of Alresford, Fawley division of the county of Southampton; 3 miles south of New Alresford. It includes the tything of Beaworth. Acres 2,980. Houses 97. Pop., in 1801, 411; in 1831, 722. A. P. £3,484. Poor rates, in 1837, £223. Charities—Income, in 1824, £16. Living, a rectory with the curacies of Kilmestone and Titchbourn, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the incumbent; rated at £68 2s. 6d.; gross income £1,280; nett income, £1,193. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. This parish is within the jurisdiction of the Cheney court, Winchester.

CHERITON-BISHOP'S, a parish in the hund. of Wonford, union of Crediton, county of Devon; 6 miles south-west of Crediton. Acres 5,150. Houses 140. Pop., in 1801, 604; in 1831, 799. A. P. £3,110. Poor rates, in 1837, £217. Charities—Churchwardens' income, in 1823, £12 12s. applied to parochial purposes. Other charities—Income, in 1823, £3. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £22 13s. 4d.; gross income £360. Patron, the bishop of Exeter.

CHERITON (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Horethorne, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 3 miles south-south-west of Wincanton. Acres 1,290. Houses 47. Pop., in 1801, 233; in 1831, 246. A. P. £1,662. Poor rates, in 1837, £210. Charities—Income, in 1823, £8 2s. 6d. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £8 12s. 1d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Thomas Gatehouse.

CHERITON-FITZPAINE, a parish in the hund. of West Budleigh, union of Crediton, county of Devon; 5 miles north-north-east of Crediton, near a branch of the river Crudy. It includes the tythings of Bradley and Fulford. Acres 4,770. Houses 188. Pop., in 1801, 884; in 1831, 1,065. A. P. £5,135. Poor rates, in 1837, £802. Charities—Scutt's almshouse for 6 poor women; income, in 1823, £22 12s. Poor's land, including Courteney's gift; income, in 1823, £28. Other charities £6 13s. 6d. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £37 6s. 8d.; gross income £793. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. H. Arundell.

CHERRINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Longtree, union of Tetbury, county of Gloucester; 4 miles north-north-east of Tetbury. Acres 1,880. Houses 47. Pop., in 1801, 173; in 1831, 251. A. P. £2,096. Poor rates, in 1837, £114 17s. Charities—Income, in 1827, £6 10s. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £13; gross income £176. Patron, in 1835, W. George.

CHERRINGTON, a township in the parish of Edmond, in the hund. of Bradford South, county of Salop; $\frac{5}{4}$ miles east of Newport, south of the river Mees. Acreage with the parish. Houses 36. Pop., in 1801, 173; in 1831, 192. A. P. £1,527.

CHERRY-BURTON. See BURTON-CHERRY.

CHERRY-HINTON, a parish in the hund. of Flendish, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; $\frac{2}{4}$ miles south-east of Cambridge. Acres 2,043. Houses 125. Pop., in 1801, 819; in 1831, 574. A. P. £2,878. Poor rates, in 1837, £406 18s. Charities—Bridge's school. The late Rev. Bewick Bridge, when vicar of Cherry-Hinton, erected a school at his own expense, according to a plan furnished by the National society, to whom he paid £1,000 for its endowment. From 80 to 100 children are taught at this school at 1d. per week for each. Income, in 1837, £35. Churchlands—Income, in 1837, £31 12s. Poor's land—Rent, in 1837, £6 15s.; interest, charges, &c. £2 15s. 4d.; in all, £76 6s. 4d. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £9 14s. 7d.; gross income £164. Patrons, the master and fellows of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

CHERTSEY, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Godley and Chertsey, union of Chertsey, county of Surrey; 21 miles west-south-west of London, on the western bank of the Thames, over which there is a fine bridge of Purbeck stone with seven arches; 4 miles from the Southampton railway, and $\frac{2}{4}$ by railway from London. Acres 10,020. Houses 898. Pop., in 1801, 2,819; in 1831, 4,795. A. P. £18,022. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,225 6s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Chertsey, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 200 persons. The Chertsey poor-law union comprehends 9 parishes, embracing an area of 64 square miles, with a population returned, in 1831, at 13,369. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £8,237. Expenditure, in 1839, £6,453.

Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £13 13s. 4d.; gross income £307. Patrons, the Haberdashers' company, and the governors of Christ's hospital alternately. The church is handsome. With the exception of the chancel, it is in the Gothic style. About the year 666, Erkenwald, afterward bishop of London, founded a monastery of the Benedictine order here, valued 26^o Henry VIII. at £659 15s. 8d. ob. q. per annum, Dugd. The superior "was," says Salmon, "a sort of little prince hereabouts, whose lands and parcels of lands it were endless to enumerate." Here the body of the unfortunate Henry VI. was first interred, without any funeral pomp, and here it remained till removed by Henry VIII. to Windsor. Of this extensive edifice nothing is now left but some small fragments of walls. Upon its surrender 29^o Henry VIII., the king granted it with all its lands to the abbey of Besham in Berkshire, and after the dissolution of that house, the site of Chertsey was granted, 7^o Edward VI., to Sir William Fitz-Williams. There are here places of worship for Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians. Sir William Perkins's school here is an important charity. It was instituted by the founder, in 1725, while yet in life. Income, in 1823, £390 3s. 10d. It consisted of two school-houses, one for 25 boys, and the other for 25 girls, children of the poor of the parish of Chertsey; or, for the girls' part, of the poor of the parishes of Thorp, Egham, and Cobham, with competent revenues for their education and clothing. Sir William Perkins lived many years after he had bestowed these charities; and, after his death, in 1741, large savings having been effected out of the income of the charity property, reference was made, in 1818, to a master of chancery, to approve of a scheme for the extension and improvement of the charity; in consequence of which, two new school-houses were erected in 1820, and 132 boys and 81 girls were admitted at their opening. Subsequently, however, the income suffered a considerable diminution by the reduction of the dividend on bank stock from 10 to 8 per cent. Nevertheless, in 1823, there were 123 boys, and 89 girls, in the respective schools, of whom 30 boys and 30 girls received the benefit of clothing. These 60 were parishioners of Chertsey; the rest were, in part, from the adjacent parishes. Schoolmaster's salary, £73 10s. School mistress's £40; besides each a house and garden. There are 8 almshouses in this parish, inhabited by paupers. No income. Other charities—Income, in 1823, £59 10s.

The petty-sessions are held here. This is the polling-place of the Godley and Chertsey hundred. The government of the town is vested in a bailiff, appointed for life by letters patent from the exchequer. The bailiff, with the hundred, is exempt from the jurisdiction of the sheriff, but they are within that of the county magistrates, who hold meetings for the division here on the first and third Wednesday of every month. In 1838 there was a silk mill here, employing 65 hands. The trade is confined chiefly to malt and flour. Coarse thread, iron hoops, and brooms, form the principal articles of manufacture. Chertsey is the only market-town within the limits of its hundred. Near the church, in the principal street, there is a handsome market-house. The market-day is Wednesday; and there are fairs on the first Monday in Lent, for cattle and hops; on the 14th of May for sheep; on the 6th of August and 25th of September for horses, cattle, and hogs. A new cattle-market has been established here, the first monthly observance of which was held on 15th April, 1840, when there was an excellent supply of cattle, which realized good prices; and numerous buyers were present from the surrounding neighbourhood. Chertsey, of which the Saxon name was Ceorteseye, is supposed to have been insular in the time of Venerable Bede, who called it Ceroti Insula. It is supposed that it was near the town of Chertsey that Julius Cæsar crossed the Thames when he first attempted the conquest of Britain. On Oldbury Hill there are the remains of an ancient encampment. There are many elegant mansions in the vicinity. St. Anne's Well, in this parish, was once in great repute for curing diseases of the eyes, and St. Anne's Hill, one of the most delightful situations within its boundaries, was the residence of the celebrated C. J. Fox, in the latter years of his life. In the Porch House, Guildford-street, 'the melancholy Cowley' closed his days. The poet, Day, the author of Sandford and Merton, lived in this vicinity. Laurence Tomson, an accomplished scholar and traveller, died here in 1608.

CHESELBORNE, a parish in the hund. of Whiteway, union of Cerne, Cerne division of the county of Dorset; 10 miles west-south-west of Blandford Forum. Acres 1,850. Houses 61. Pop., in 1801, 268; in 1831, 351. A. P. £1,795. Poor rates, in 1837, £243 10s. Charities—Rent charge, in 1836, 5s. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £18 10s. 5d.; gross income £281. Patron, in 1835, Lord Rivers.

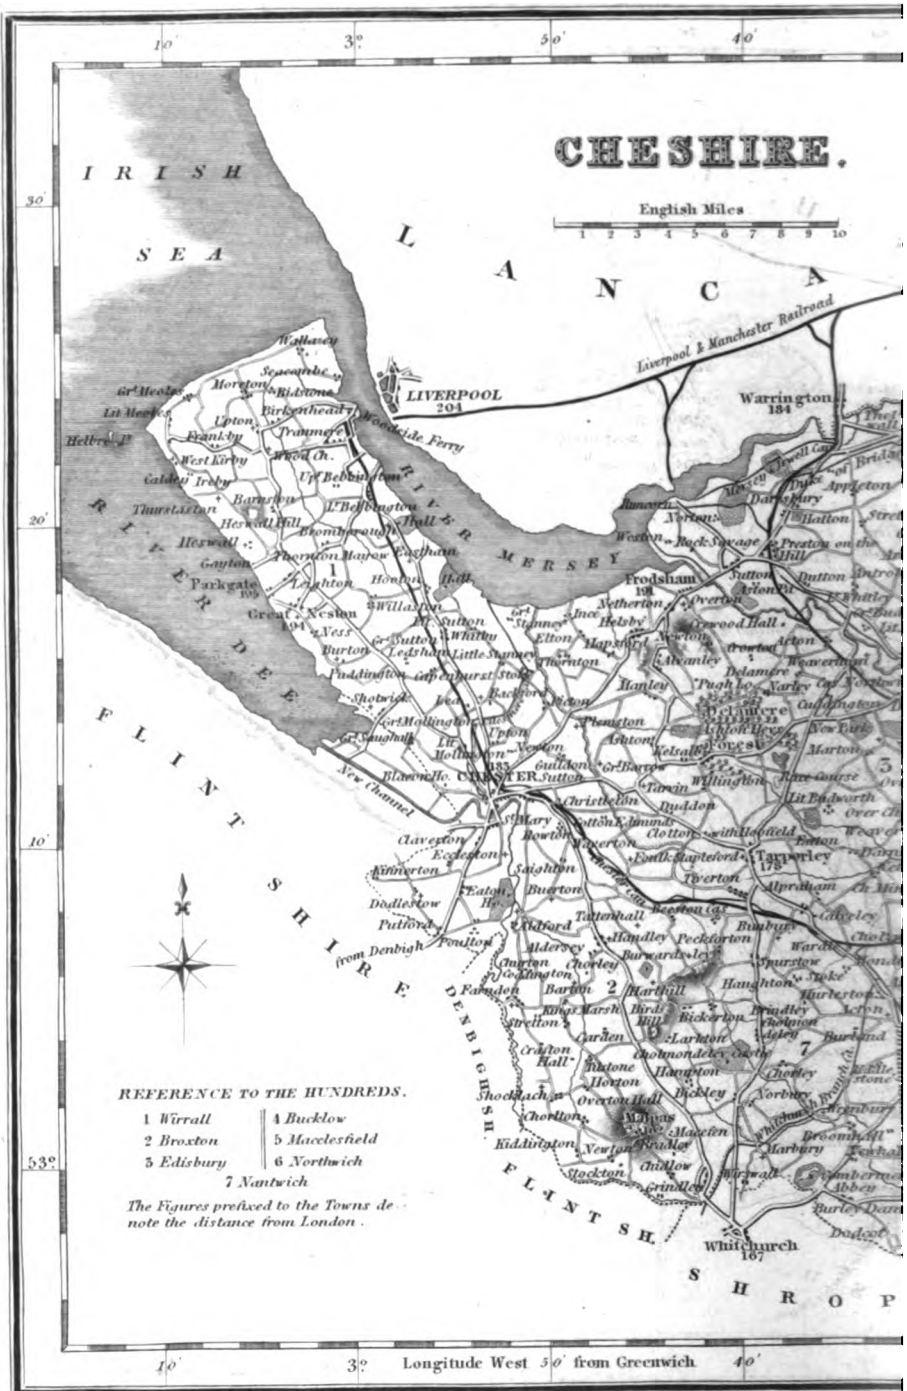

CHESHAM, a market-town and parish in the first division of the hund. of Burnham, union of Amersham, county of Buckingham; 29 miles north-west by west of London. It includes the hamlets of Ashley-Green, Billington, Chartridge, and Lattimer. Acres 11,890. Houses 1,052. Pop., in 1801, 3,969; in 1831, 5,388. A. P. £15,656. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,848 10s. Charities—Weeden's almshouses, consisting of 4 tenements, founded in 1624; besides an estate in the hamlet of Hurdridge in this parish; annual rent, in 1832, £75; expended in supporting the almshouses and repairing the almonry. The Devonshire charity, founded by William, earl of Devonshire, in 1630, consisting of 35 acres of land; annual rent, in 1832, £11, expended on 7 or 8 paupers. Eight church houses inhabited by paupers. Other charities—Income, in 1832, £11 10s.; besides 10 bibles, catechisms, &c. distributed to poor. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln in two medieties, Chesham-Leicester and Chesham-Woburn, consolidated in 1767; and each rated at £13 1s. 5d.; gross income £462. Patron, the duke of Bedford. The Baptists have three churches here; the first was formed in 1706, the second in 1714, and the third in 1820. There is also an Independent chapel, founded in 1724. The greatest part of the inhabitants consist of Dissenters. The manufacture of coarse woodenware is carried on here, and corn, and paper-mills are worked by a large stream which rises in the neighbourhood of the town. Wednesday is the market-day for corn, Saturday for provisions in general, straw-plait, &c. The fairs are on the 21st of April, 22d of July, and 28th of September. The two first are chiefly for cattle.

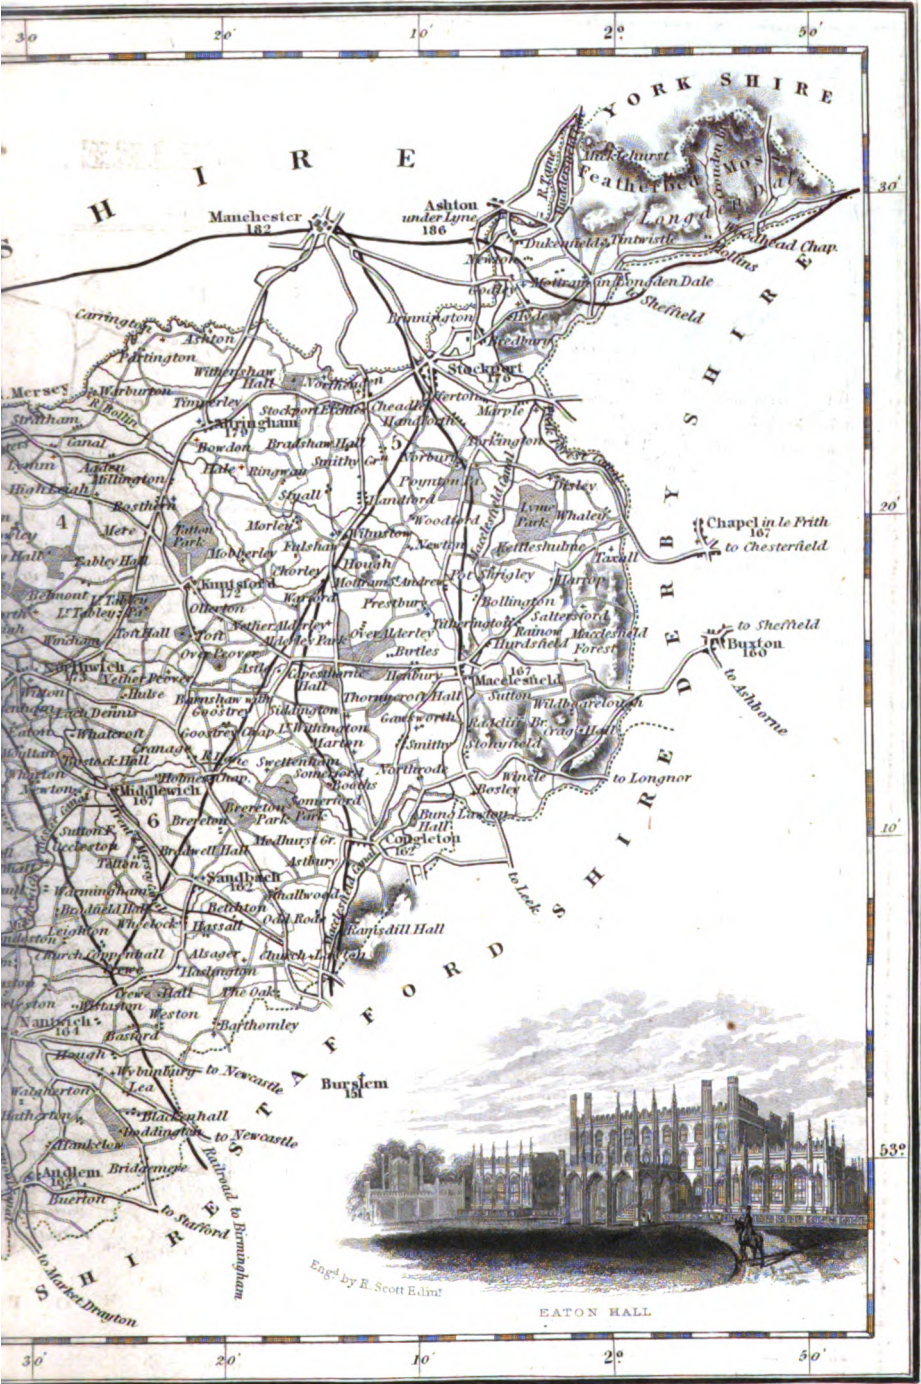

CHESHAM-BOIS, a parish in the first division of the hund. of Burnham, union of Amersham, county of Buckingham; 1½ mile north-north-east of Chesham. Acres 810. Houses 33. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 157. A. P. £1,186. Poor rates, in 1838, £46 2s. Charities—The inhabitants have the privilege of sending their sons to Lord Cheyne's charity school at Amersham. Other charities—Income, in 1832, £2. Living, a donative curacy in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £125. Patron, the duke of Bedford.

CHESHIRE,

A maritime county-palatine bounded on the north and north-west by a small part of the county of York, the co-palatine of Lancaster, the estuary of the Mersey, and the Irish sea; on the east by the counties of Derby and Stafford; on the south by the county of Salop and a detached part of the county of Flint; on the west by the estuary of the Dee, and the counties of Denbigh and Flint. It extends from 53° 10' 53" 3' N. lat., and from 1° 46' to 3° 22' W. long. Its greatest length, taking it at the extreme points, from east to west, may be somewhat better than 30 miles; and its greatest breadth, from north to south, about 30. Its form is oval, with a narrow neck of land on the west, of about six miles in breadth, projecting between the estuaries of the Dee and the Mersey, nearly 20 miles into the Irish sea; and a still narrower stripe on the east, projecting about 15 miles between the counties of York and Derby. It has been estimated to contain 1,052 square miles, or about 673,280 statute acres, which, Dr. Holland states, were distributed, in 1808, nearly as follows, viz.: arable, meadow, and pasture lands, including parks and pleasure-grounds, 620,000 acres; waste lands, heaths, commons, and woods, 28,600 acres; peats, bogs, and morasses, 18,000, the residue consisting of sea-sands within the estuaries of the Dee and the Mersey. But a good deal of the waste land, and of the bogs and morasses, has since been brought under tillage. It is divided into seven hundreds, namely, Broxton, Bucklow, Eddisbury, Macclesfield, Nantwich, Northwich, and Wirral hundreds; and 90 parishes, exclusive of the city of Chester. There are 12 market-towns in the shire, and, in 1831, 60,748 houses. Population, in 1801, 191,751; and, in 1831, 334,410. A. P. in 1815, £1,038,083. The amount of poor-rate assessment, on an average of three years, in 1748-50, was £14,946; in 1815, £142,409, whereof £108,138 was expended on the poor; in 1828, it was £139,412, whereof £100,692 was expended on the poor; and, in 1838, it was £97,424, of which £72,638 was applied to the relief of the poor. The county-rate, in 1792, was £10,800; in 1815, £29,077; in 1838, £36,193. The church-rates, in 1831-2, amounted to £8,978; in 1838-9, to £8,130. The highway returns, in 1839, gave a length of road in this county of 2,357 miles, the expenditure on which amounted to £27,729.

Rivers.—The two principal rivers are the Mersey and the Dee. The county is watered by numerous streams, most of them having a northerly course, and none of them going beyond its limits, being almost if not all conducted into the Irish sea through the estuaries of the Mersey and the Dee.—The Mersey has its remote sources in Derbyshire, and is formed by the junction of the Etherow and Goyt rivers, on the border of the county to the east of Stockport. From Stockport to the Irish sea it forms the boundary between this county and Lancashire, to which, as forming the port of Liverpool, it more properly belongs. The Mersey forms a grand estuary, averaging three miles in width, and from Liverpool, where its width is only one mile, forming a fine channel commodious for shipping; it is navigable, by vessels of considerable burthen, up to the mouth of the Irwell, a river in Lancashire. The Mersey has, from its flowing through the principal manufacturing district in the empire, and giving its name to the gulf or arm of the sea between Lancashire and Cheshire, become, in point of commercial importance, second only to the Thames. The Dee rises in the mountainous district of Merionethshire, and approaching Cheshire near Shocklach, forms the boundary between Cheshire and Denbighshire, thence it approaches Aldford, whence, with very few windings, it flows on to Chester, the walls of which it nearly encircles, and from Chester, by an artificial navigable channel, cut in 1754, at a vast expense, and which it is now proposed still further to improve, it is carried, near Flint castle, direct into the broad estuary which unites it with the Irish sea.—To these the next in importance is the Weaver, which has its rise in a mere, called Ridley mere, on Bulkeley heath, and flowing by Nantwich to Northwich, is there joined by the Dane, a considerable stream; and a little farther on by the Peover, also of some magnitude; after which it flows by Frodsham to Winton, where it falls into the grand estuary of the Mersey. Its whole course is about 30 miles, for 20 of which it has been rendered navigable, by means of various locks for vessels of 100 tons burthen. This was done at a considerable expense indeed, but latterly, with immense profits.—The Dane, rising in Macclesfield forest, near the Three Shire mere, has at first a southerly course; and, for a considerable distance, forms the boundary between this county and that of Stafford. Taking a westerly course, it flows by Congleton, and Middlewich to Northwich, where, as we have already seen, it falls into the Weaver.—The Bollin has its sources also in Macclesfield forest, and flowing in a northerly direction, falls into the Mersey, after a course of nearly twenty miles.—The Tame rises in Yorkshire, and, flowing to the west, forms the boundary between Cheshire and Lancashire, till it falls into the Mersey near Stockport.—The Peover, as we have seen, is a tributary of the Weaver, which it enters not far from Northwich.—The Weelock is a tributary of the Dane, which it enters near Croxton.

Canals.—Till the introduction of railroads had diminished the utility, and checked the progress of inland navigation, the Cheshire canals afforded a very constant and economical channel of commercial intercourse, and general communication, between Chester, Liverpool, and Manchester, the North of England, Staffordshire, and Shropshire, &c. Few counties derived, or still indeed derive, so many advantages from the internal intercourse produced by artificial navigation, as Cheshire. The principal canals which intersect various parts of the county, are the duke of Bridgewater's, the Trent and Mersey, the Ellismere, the Chester and Nantwich, and the Macclesfield and Peak Forest canals. The Bridgewater canal from Manchester enters Cheshire by crossing the Mersey to the east of Ashton, on an aqueduct bridge. It traverses about 20 miles of this shire, passing in a south-westerly direction near to Lymm, Thelwall, Groppenham, and Daresbury, and Preston Brook to Runcorn, where it is precipitately lowered, 95 feet, by a series of locks into the Mersey. This was the first canal projected by Brindley, at the expense of the duke of Bridgewater, to whose magnificent undertakings the inland navigation of England, in general, is so deeply indebted. It was completed in 1766; since which time the greatest part of the canals in England have been formed.—The Trent and Mersey, or Grand Trunk canal, which was commenced in 1766, proceeds south-easterly from Preston Brook, where the Bridgewater canal joins it, passing by Northwich, Middlewich, and Sandbach, to Church Lawton on the south side of this county, where it enters the county of Stafford; the whole length of this line in Cheshire being 20 miles. Near its commencement at Preston on the Hill, it passes through a tunnel 1,241 yards long; at Barnton, through one of 572 yards; at Saltersfield, through one of 350 yards; and at Hermitage, through another of 130 yards.—The Ellismere canal enters this county at Pulford, and running across the peninsula of Wirrall, effects a junction of the Dee and the Mersey. At Chester, it unites with the navigable channel of the Dee, and with the Chester and Nantwich canal; then running northwards by Stoke, it issues into the Mersey, thereby opening a short and easy passage between Chester and Liverpool.—The Chester and Nantwich canal was completed in 1778. At Chester it forms a junction with the Dee, and with the Dee and Mersey, or Ellismere canal; and passing Christleton, Waverton, Hargrave, and the north of Beeston castle, proceeds to Nantwich, where it is continued into the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction canal, which runs south, past Audlem, into Shropshire. Four miles north of Nantwich, a branch from the Chester and Nantwich canal runs, in a north-easterly direction, to Middlewich, and is called the Middlewich branch, which here meets the Trent and Mersey canal. Between Nantwich and the point where this branch joins the Chester and Nantwich canal, on the other hand, a branch proceeds in a south-westwardly direction to the neighbourhood of Whitechurch.—The Macclesfield canal leaves the Trent and Mersey canal at Church-Lawton on the borders of this county. It runs northward past Congleton and Macclesfield to Disley, and a few miles to the north, joins the Peak Forest canal, which enters the county at Whaley bridge, and passing near Disley, proceeds northwards by Chadkirk and Hyde chapel, to Ashton-under-Lyne, where it crosses the Tame, and quits the county. This canal crosses the Goyt, below the junction of the Goyt and Etherow, by an aqueduct 100 feet in height, which has three arches, each 60 feet span, and 78 feet high. The Mersey and Irwell canal meets the Trent and Mersey canal at Runcorn, and running to the north-east, along the border of the county, quits it near Thelwall. In 1795, a canal to Pennington, near Leigh in Lancashire, connected the canals of Cheshire through the Bridgewater canal with the Leeds and Liverpool navigation; and thus, by the numerous ramifications and intersections of the Cheshire canals, has a vast extent of internal and external facilities, for general and commercial intercourse, been opened up.

Roads.—Several important roads traverse this county. The London and Manchester road, by Derby enters it near Bosley, and passes through Macclesfield and Stockport; and another branch of this line of road enters at Whaley Bridge, and passes through Disley, Norbury, and Stockport. The London and Manchester road, by Lichfield, enters at Church-Lawton, and passes through Congleton, Wilmslow, and Cheadle. The London and Liverpool road also enters at Church-Lawton, and passes through Warrington by two branches, one through Middlewich and Northwich, and the other through Knutsford. Besides these, various roads radiate from Chester through the county, the principal of which are the London road, by Ecclesfield and Stafford, which passes through Nantwich; the London road by Newport and Coventry, which passes through Whitechurch; the Park-gate road, which passes through Great Neston, whence a branch crosses the peninsula to New Ferry and Woodside by Great Bebbington; the New Ferry and Woodside road, through Eastham and Bromborow; the road from Chester to Warrington, whence branches proceed to Liverpool and Manchester, and the Manchester road by Tarvin, Northwich, and Altrincham. There are also many cross roads meeting these in all directions.

Railways.—The Grand Junction railway between Birmingham and the Liverpool and Manchester railway, enters this county near Betley, on the south, and runs through Crewe, near Sandbach, to the north-east of Nantwich. It then runs a little to the west of Mid-dlewich and Northwich, and across the valley of the Weaver by a viaduct of 20 arches of 60 feet span, and upwards of 60 feet above the level of the valley. It then proceeds to the Mersey, which it crosses by a viaduct of 12 arches, under which flows the Mersey and Irwell canal, as well as the Mersey itself. A railway is in course of completion from Birkenhead to Chester. In April, 1840, 90 per cent. of the works have been completed along the entire line, and the completion of the whole is expected in August, 1840. In connection with this railway, another is projected between Chester and Crewe, where it is to meet the Grand Junction railway, and the projected railway from Manchester to Crewe: a viaduct for which is in progress at Stockport, consisting of 26 arches, and considered to be one of the most gigantic productions of art of a similar character in the kingdom. Chester will thus have the benefit of a direct communication with London, as well as with Manchester by railroad; and it is expected that an immense traffic will be brought on the Birkenhead line by the projected arrangement, which, it appears, is now, in April, 1840, fully decided on. Other railways are in contemplation,—especially the Great Anglo-Hibernian railway between Chester and Holyhead, commencing by a junction with the Chester and Crewe railway at Chester, and terminating on a common near Rhos-y-Gaer, in the parish of Holyhead. Notice of intended application to parliament for a bill for this railway was published in the London Gazette in February and March, 1840. Similar notice was, at the same time, given of an intended railway between Chester and Plas Madoc, commencing by a junction with the Chester and Crewe, and Chester and Birkenhead railways, and terminating at Plas Madoc: also of the projected Manchester and Derby railway, commencing at Cheadle in this county, at the line of the Manchester and Birmingham railway, and terminating near the joint station of the North, Midland, Birmingham, and Derby Junction railways at Derby. A railway between Chester and Ruabon, in Denbigh, is also in contemplation, which, it is expected, will bring most important districts, both for passengers and productions, into immediate connection with Chester and all the united lines of railway. The traffic in coals alone will be very considerable, as the Ruabon coal produces coke of the very first quality for locomotive engines, and the anticipation is, that the Ruabon coal is destined to supply coke, through Chester, for all the railways in the north-western and midland districts of England.

Physical features.—The surface of this county, being almost all a dead level, presents a landscape for the most part tame and uninteresting. A ridge of hills, but of no great altitude, runs along its eastern border from Lawton, on the confines of Staffordshire, to its north-eastern extremity; forming, as it were, the first steps towards the romantic mountains of Derbyshire. A ridge also extends from Malpas, on its western side, to Frodsham. The latter is, however, much broken. The most singular feature in it is the insulated rock of Buston, about 2 miles south from Tarporley, rising, on one side, almost perpendicularly from the plain, about 366 feet. But with these exceptions, the rest of the county, comprising four-fifths of its entire extent, is remarkable for the flatness of its surface; being, probably, not more on a medium, than from 100 to 200 feet above the level of the sea. Its appearance is that of an extended plain, thickly covered with woods, and interspersed with small lakes or meres, abounding with fish, and some of them not without beauty. Its woods, however, are nearly confined to the hedgerows, which are numerous, to the coppices, that adorn gentlemen's seats, and to the parks and pleasure-grounds that surround the residences of the nobility; but, on the whole, this county contains a great deal of valuable timber. More rain is believed to fall in this than in any other county in England, Westmoreland and Lancashire perhaps excepted. It is impossible to imagine a finer grazing district. "The grass," observes M'Culloch, in his 'Statistical Account' of Cheshire, "owing to the mildness and moisture of the climate, the favourable nature of the soil, and the shelter afforded by the luxuriant hedges and hedge-row trees with which the fields are surrounded, retains its verdure and its growth throughout almost the whole year." The principal part of the surface consists of arable, meadow, and pasture land, and the remainder of widespread mosses,—dreary, and apparently interminable wastes; and, at the ebb-tide, "broad and ribbed sea-sands."

Soil, Minerals, &c.—The soil consists, for the most part, of a red, rich, clayey, or sandy loam, and, with the exception of a few limited tracts of black moor, or bogs of peat moss and heath, it is eminently fertile. The under soil is commonly clay, or excellent marl, of which there are large supplies, the plentiful use of which has materially contributed to its fertility. Salt and coal are the principal mineral productions. There are inexhaustible beds of rock-salt near Northwich, Nantwich, Winsford, and Middlewich, or along the course of the Weaver and its tributaries, for which this county is celebrated, as well as for its contiguous brine springs. The salt-works at Northwich are the most famous, and we shall annex a particular account of them to the description of that town. The salt is of two kinds, white, or transparent, and reddish brown. The former has been found by analysis to be an almost pure muriate of soda: the latter to contain a small portion of oxide of iron from which its colour is derived. In the northern districts, coal, of good quality, is found in abundance. There are very extensive collieries, especially in the townships of Worth and Poynton. Lead and copper are found at Alderley Edge, and the Peck-fort-on-Hills, and at the former a considerable quantity of cobalt, from which smalt is manufactured, scarcely to be distinguished from that of Saxony. The red grit rock is the most prevalent stone of the county, and of this, most of the towns and villages are built. The quarries at Runcorn, Manley, and Great Bebington, are the most important.

Agriculture.—Dairy produce in cheese and butter is the principal object of attention with the Cheshire husbandman; but though the county has, for many ages, been famed for its cheese, especially for that which is made in the salt districts, yet it is rather a singular fact, that it was formerly as celebrated for its wheat. Dr. Holland, following Mr. Fenna, estimates the number of cows kept in this county, for dairy purposes, at 92,000. Supposing each cow to yield, at an average, $2\frac{1}{2}$ cwt. of cheese, the whole annual produce will be 11,500 tons. Considerable attention is now paid to the breed of cows. In some parts of the county potatoes are very extensively cultivated. Oats, wheat, and barley, are also grown; but arable husbandry, being deemed of inferior importance, is but indifferently understood, and is considerably behind; while sheep-husbandry, which is so profitable to the farmer in other counties, is here scarcely known. There are many parcels of land in this county, averaging 10 acres each, which have been appropriated as small farms; but the greatest portion of the county is retained and cultivated by gentlemen who reside on their own estates, which are generally large. On the whole, Cheshire is inferior to many other counties in agriculture; but it contains more means of improved husbandry than most. It wants only the application of capital, and the superintendence of men of true practical science, to become one of the finest agricultural counties in England.

Trade, Manufactures, &c.—The principal trade of this county consists in cheese, potatoes, and salt. In addition to the great home-consumption of cheese, immense quantities are sold not only throughout England, but also throughout the most part of Europe, where it is well-known, and highly esteemed. Potatoes are sent also in great quantities to Liverpool, Manchester, and other markets in Lancashire. In the parish of Frodsham alone, about 100,000 bushels are annually produced. The extensive trade carried on in salt, and the vast revenue derived from its duty, at one time rendered it an object of even national importance; and it is still one of the most important staple commodities of the county. About 60,000 tons of salt are annually taken from the pits of Northwich alone; besides not less than 45,000 tons manufactured at the same place from brine-springs, which are from 20 to 40 yards in depth. In 1831, about 300 men were employed in Eddisbury and Northwich hundreds in manufacturing salt. Lead, calamine, cast-iron, copper-plates, and brass, are also largely exported. Besides cheese, the most flourishing manufacture is that of cotton, which has extended from Lancashire, and is extensively carried on in and around Stockport, Macclesfield, Marple, Congleton, and Sandbach. Muslin and calico, thread and silk-buttons, are manufactured at Macclesfield, where there are thriving silk-mills. There are also silk-mills at Congleton and Stockport. Macclesfield hundred is the principal manufacturing district. In 1831 more than 6,000 men were employed in manufacturing cotton and calico in this hundred; nearly 1,000 in the manufacture of silk, and about 5,500 in manufacturing cotton and silk promiscuously. The manufacture of hats for exportation at Stockport, of shoes at Sandbach and Nantwich, of woollen-cloths in the same district, and of gloves at Chester, is extensive. Tanning is carried on throughout the whole county, but more particularly in the middle and northern parts, where there are extensive plantations and spontaneous growths of oak, which furnish abundance of tanner's bark. The copper, lead, and iron of the Alderly Edge, and Peckforton hills, are also manufactured in the county, and constitute a small item in the export trade.

Customs and Amusements.—Of those which are peculiar to certain parts of the kingdom, Cheshire has its full share. There is a custom among the young men, of placing, on the 1st of May, large birchen boughs over the doors of the houses where the young women reside, to whom they are paying their addresses; and an alder-bough is often found placed over the door of a scold. Another singular custom, which prevails at Easter, is lifting. On Easter Monday the young men deck out a chair with flowers and ribbons, and carry it about, compelling every young woman they meet to get into it, and suffer herself to be lifted as high as they can reach into the air, or to be kissed, or pay a forfeit. On Easter Tuesday the young women deck out their chair, and lift the men, or make them pay a fine. This custom, which also prevails, or something like it, in some of the neighbouring counties, seems to have been admitted amongst the highest ranks in the 13th century. But the most prevalent, as well as the most peculiar custom, is the shouting of the marlers, when money is given them. On such occasions they are summoned together by one of their number, who has been elected lord of the marl-pit, and joining hands around him in a ring, they bow themselves towards the centre three times, shouting every time, and a fourth time when they give a more lengthened and louder shout, which gradually dies away. When the marlers have finished their work, they dress up a pole with flowers and ribbons, silver watches, spoons, and other glittering articles on it, and carry it about to collect money. This is called carrying the Garland. A custom prevails in this county of taking names from towns, as Aston of Aston, &c.; and, observe the editors of the 'Magna Britannia,' published in 1738, "is worth our observation for this reason; to show the good husbandry and frugality of many of these families, who still are the inhabitants of the same places, though it be many hundred years since their ancestors took their names from them: whereas, in the southern parts of England, though the same custom was followed, there is hardly one in a county that bears the same name with the town he lives in."

History.—Under the Britons, Cheshire, or Chætershire, formed part of the territory of the Cornavii. By the first Roman division of the country it was included in Britannia-Superior, by the second in Flavia Caesariensis. After the conquest it was by the conqueror bestowed upon his nephew, Hugh de Avaranches. In the reign of Henry III., John, earl of Chester, dying without male issue, that monarch seized upon the earldom, which he bestowed upon his eldest son, Prince Edward. It was erected into a principality by Richard II. Under his successor, it again became a county-palatine, and continued under the king's eldest sons, as earls of Chester, to be governed by a separate and an independent jurisdiction. Under Henry VII., the city of Chester was separated from the county, being constituted a county of itself. Under Henry VIII., the privileges of the counties-palatine were greatly curtailed, and, in return, two knights were allowed in parliament to represent the county, and two burgesses the city of Chester. Acts passed in 1830 terminated the separate jurisdiction of the county-palatine. By the recent reform and division of counties acts this county is divided chiefly along the course of the Weaver river, across the county, into northern and southern divisions, each of which returns two members. The northern division consists of the Macclesfield and Bucklow, and the southern of the remaining hundreds. The boroughs of Chester, Macclesfield, and Stockport, each also return 2 members, making in all, 10 members from Cheshire, returned to parliament. The number of qualified voters for the county members is 10,235. The principal place of election for the northern division is Knutsford; for the southern Chester. The assizes for the county are held at Chester, the Epiphany and Easter quarter-sessions also at Chester, and the midsummer and Michaelmas sessions at Knutsford. Under the act 10th Geo. IV. cap. 97, the county magistrates appointed a paid constabulary force within the rural districts of this county, which is specially referred to in the report of the commissioners appointed by her present majesty to inquire as to the best means of establishing an efficient constabulary force in the counties of England and Wales. These commissioners "having specially investigated the cases of the trial of paid constables, in the case of the trial of a paid constabulary force, appointed and controlled according to an act of parliament for the county of Chester, by the magistrates at quarter and petty-sessions, find that the appointment and management of a paid constabulary force in separate divisions, separately managed at the discretion of the justices at the petty-sessions of those divisions, is an arrangement of itself incompatible with any efficient and economical system for the prevention of crime." They found "no combination of regulations deserving the name of a system;" no comprehensive "specifications of the duties of a constabulary;" no method "for securing regular information of the courses of delinquency, no well-regulated communication of intelligence between one division and another; no regular combined action between one set of officers and another;" no systematised control over the whole. They found the appointments frequently bad, and everywhere insufficient. They therefore, and for other specific reasons, recommended the substitution in this and all other counties in England and Wales, of a general trained constabulary force, well appointed, and trained on a uniform system, such as that of the New Metropolitan police, and placed under trained and responsible direction, for the whole county, the members not to be privately connected with the district in which they act, and at periods to be changed from district to district, acting always under general rules and principles, and in subordination to general direction from one general central and responsible executive authority.

CHESHUNT, a parish in the hund. of Hertford, union of Edmonton, county of Hertford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Hoddesdon, on the New river, and close upon the London and Cambridge railway. It includes Cheshunt street, Waltham cross, and Woodside. Acres 8,430. Houses 956. Pop., in 1801, 3,173; in 1831, 5,021. A. P. £22,204. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,242 19s. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £26; gross income £485. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Salisbury. A new church has been erected here, by the parliamentary commissioners, in the Gothic style, at an expense of £3,282 8s.; sittings 572. The Independents have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1781. Wolsey, in the palmy days of his glory, had large possessions here. Here, also, Burleigh built his mansion of Theobald's, which his son gave to James I. in exchange for Hatfield Regiamanor—see THEOBALD'S. Here that pedantic monarch trifled away much of his time. From this place issued many of his pithy and pleasant epistles to his 'faithful dog Steenie,' and his 'sweet baby Charles'; and here, bedrugged and beplastered by his faithful adherents, he died, not without strong suspicions of foul play, in 1625. In the village of Cheshunt, Richard Cromwell, in a house still carefully preserved, spent the latter days of his life under the name of Clarke, having died here in peace in 1712, at the advanced age of 80 years. This parish has been fixed upon by her trustees as the seat of the late Lady Huntingdon's theological academy, originally established at Talgarth, South Wales. Its revenues amount to upwards of £1,200 per annum, and are devoted to the education of students for the ministry, who are left entirely free in the choice of the denomination of Christians amongst whom they will exercise their ministry. The charities of this parish are considerable. The Beaumont charity is a trust consisting of the accumulation of 14 minor charities into one general fund, the nucleus of which was a compensation by King James the first, in lieu of a large portion of Cheshunt common, which he required for the extension of Theobald's park. Total income, in 1834, £310 5s. 2d., besides alms-houses for 10 poor widows, and other habitations, termed the spital houses, occupied by other 4 poor widows; all of whom are supported out of the revenues of this general fund, the residue being applied to purposes of general charity connected with the parish. "The free school" trust, founded by Sir Thomas Dacres, and others, in the 18th year of the reign of King Charles the first for the purposes of teaching poor children of this parish to read, and for clothing and apprenticing them to some "trade and mystery," &c. The original school has been enlarged, and, in 1834, accommodated 105 boys, 40 of whom are called foundation boys, from whom a selection is made for apprenticeship at the age of 14. The boys are all instructed in reading, writing, and accounts, partly on the national system of education. The foundation boys are not admitted before 7 nor after 9 years of age. From 1823 to 1833, there were 29 boys apprenticed at a premium of £10 each. Total income, in 1834, £149, out of which the poor widows in the Beaumont alms-houses derive a yearly benefaction. Minor charities, — total income, in 1834, £18 12s. 6d. There are some remains of a nunnery here. In 1834 the beautiful stone cross of Cheshunt was restored.

CHESIL BANK, a bank of sand and gravel thrown up by the sea, 9 miles in length, which connects the isle of Portland with the mainland. It stretches from Abbotsbury to the south-east, with a narrow sea running between it and the shore.

CHESLYN-HAY, a township in the parish of Cannock, Stafford. Acreage with the parish. Houses 117. Pop., in 1801, 443; in 1831, 648. A. P. £1,146. Poor rates, in 1838, £139 13s. The New Connexion Methodists have a place of worship here.

CHESSTINGTON, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Copthorne, union of Epsom, county of Surrey; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Ewell. Acres 1,231. Houses 35. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 189. A. P. £1,368. Poor rates, in 1838, £131 8s. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Maldon. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £305; aggregate amount £256.

CHESTER,

A city and county of itself, locally situated in the hund. of Broxton, co.-palatine of Chester, of which it is the capital; 183 miles north-west of London. Its situation is very picturesque, on the northern bank of the Dee, which bounds it on the south and west. Acres 3,018. Houses, in 1831, 4,096. Pop., in 1801, 14,977; in 1831, 21,363. A. P. £55,966. Assessed taxes, in 1830, £7,732 4s. 1½d. Poor rates, in 1838, £6,919 2s.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—This city is the seat of a diocese, comprehending the counties of Chester and Lancaster, with a portion of those of Cumberland, Westmoreland, Denbigh, Flint, and, until the erection of the new diocese of Ripon, that part of the archdeaconry of Richmond which is in the county of York, but now transferred to the diocese of Ripon. The gross yearly income of the see amounts to £3,951. The rectory of Waverton is permanently annexed to the bishopric, and a prebend in Durham cathedral is held in commendam. The gross yearly income of the dean and chapter is £2,135. The corporation consists of the dean and six prebendaries. The salary of the dean is £120; that of the prebendaries £26 13s. 4d. each. The fine-money is first divided into eight parts; one-eighth is carried to the church account, the remainder is again divided into eight parts, of which two go to the dean, and the other six to the prebendaries. After which payment of salaries and apportionment of fine-money, the remainder of the nett revenue is always applied in liquidation of the church account. There are also six minor canons with salaries of £15 each, and £48 each arising from lands left to them by Mrs. Barbara Dod, in 1703. The cathedral is situated on the east side of the North-gate-street. It was originally a nunnery, founded by Walphenes, king of the Mercians.

for his daughter St. Werburgh, to whom it was dedicated. It afterwards became the abbey church of a monastery of Benedictines, founded by Hugh Lupus. It is a spacious but irregular pile, formed of the red stone of the county; and, with the exception of a few fragments, appears to have been built in the reigns of Henry VI. VII. and VIII. The tower, which is 127 feet high, springs from four handsome pillars, and the western front is deemed very handsome. The choir is neat, and the bishop's throne, which is formed of the ancient shrine of St. Werburgh, is richly ornamented. Behind the choir is St. Mary's chapel. The two transepts are very dissimilar. The north one, which is very large, is dedicated to Oswald. The ancient chapter-house stands in the eastern walk of the cloister; it is a noble hall, of grand dimensions, erected by Randolph, the first Earl of Chester, and is the admiration of all the antiquarians who behold it. The fabric is generally sound. An estate, called the Tarporley estate, constitutes a sufficient fund for ordinary repairs. In the 12 years preceding 1835, upwards of £8,000 were expended in repairs upon this cathedral. Besides the castle and the liberties of the cathedral, which are extra-parochial, eleven parishes are within the city of Chester, viz.—St. Bridget's, a rectory not in charge, returned at £100; gross income £75. Patron, the bishop of Chester.—St. John's the Baptist, a vicarage not in charge; gross income £237. Patron, the marquis of Westminster.—St. John's the Little, a curacy not in charge; gross income £164. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of the city.—St. Martin's, a rectory not in charge, returned at £70; gross income £80. Patron, the bishop of Chester.—St. Mary's-on-the-Hill, a rectory; rated at £32; gross income £406. Patron, the marquis of Westminster.—St. Michael's, a curacy not in charge, returned at £90; gross income £84. Patron, the bishop of Chester.—St. Olave's, a curacy not in charge, returned at £54; gross income £89. Patron, the bishop of Chester.—St. Oswald's, a discharged vicarage; rated at £8 18s. 4d.; gross income £245. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Chester.—St. Peter's, a discharged curacy; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £120. Patron, the bishop of Chester.—St. Thomas's, the church of which is in ruins.—The Holy Trinity, a discharged rectory; rated at £8 15s. 6d.; gross income £310. Patron, the earl of Derby. There are also places of worship for Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan, Primitive, and Calvinistic Methodists.

Charities, Schools, &c.—Chester has had many public benefactors; so that the charitable institutions of the city are very numerous. Of the yearly revenues of those under the management of the corporation of Chester, it was found by the charity commissioners, in 1836, that no separate account had been kept; but that they were all carried into the general corporation funds, out of which certain small sums were annually paid, "regulated, in some instances, by the rent which the property produced when it first came into their possession, and in other instances, arbitrarily fixed at a considerably less amount. In many cases, both land and houses had been granted in perpetuity, subject to fee-farm rents, bearing no just proportion to their real value; and such grants were, in almost every instance, made to members of the corporate body; and again, many of these rents had been sold, at 20 or 25 years' purchase, for the purpose of raising sums of money for discharge of the city's debts." In such circumstances, it is impossible here to give any succinct account of these charities, and all that can be done, therefore, is briefly to enumerate a few of the most important of them:—St. John's hospital, founded by Randle, duke of Brittany, and earl of Chester and Richmond, "for the sustentation of poor and sille persons." The present hospital was partly occupied, in 1837, by the Blue school, which is supported by voluntary subscription, and partly used as a chapel, in the patronage of the corporation. Revenues of this charity—in 1837, nearly £600.—Lancaster's charity for 6 almsmen, freemen of the city; annual rent of consolidated property in 1837, £364 1s., out of which the 6 almsmen received £4 each, besides a coarse but comfortable blue gown, value £2.—Harvie's alms-houses; annual rents in 1837, £203 2s. 4d.—Broughton's charity estate, valued—in 1838; annual rents, £131 2s., intended for distribution amongst freemen and freemen's children of the city, and for other charitable purposes.—Green's charity for behoof of 20 freemen of Chester, or their widows, and for other purposes; annual rents in 1837, £150.—Sir Thomas White's charity; income in 1834, £104. The commissioners observe that "£1,100, or 44 portions of £25 each, ought now to be in the hands of as many young tradesmen of Chester from this charity alone."—Sir Thomas Smith's alms-houses, supposed to have been the hospital of St. Ursula, occupied, in 1837, by 6 widows of freemen of the city. The most important of the parochial charities are,—Oldfield's charity, in the parish of St. Michael, for sending poor boys of this parish to universities, and for premiums on apprenticeship; rental, in 1837, £404 10s. From 1815 to 1835, 123 apprentices were bound, with premiums of £15 each. Donations of £5 and £10 have also been given to boys who have faithfully served their apprenticeship. The annual expenditure of this charity, in 1837, did not average £150. The trustees were anxious that increased powers should be granted them for the further benefit of the city.—Jones's alms-houses, in the same parish, containing, in 1837, 10 poor people; annual rent £67 16s.—The king's school, in the same parish, founded by King Henry VIII. for 24 boys, is supported from property attached to the cathedral. Boys 9 years old are elected for 4 years by the dean and chapter. A part of the old refectory of Chester abbey was used, in 1837, as the school-room.—There are many minor charities possessed by the respective parishes of this city. There are also various charities connected with the Presbyterian chapel in Crook's street; income, in 1837, £155 17s. 10d.; over and above the income of other funds not enumerated, and the 4 Trinity lane alms-houses, inhabited by 4 poor widows. Besides these charities, there are the Marquis of Westminster's school for 400 or 450 boys and girls, who are educated at the expense of the Marquis; a diocesan school, and 3 infant schools. The general infirmary was opened in 1761, and is supported at an expense of upwards of £3,000 per annum. In 1763, an act of parliament was passed for the regulation of a house of industry; there is likewise a school of industry. The blue coat school for boys, at St. John's hospital, was founded in 1700, and in 1750 another was founded for girls.

Municipal affairs, &c.—The three earliest charters in the possession of the corporation of Chester, were granted by Ranulph or Randle, earl of Chester, early in the 13th century. Charters were granted or renewed by several monarchs, and its corporation and parliamentary annals exhibit the usual amount of party struggles and disputed rights; so that the reform act, and the municipal corporation reform act, will influence the future condition of Chester more than any thing else in its more recent history. Previously to the passing of the reform act, the election of members of parliament was in the freemen, who were usually about 1,200. The corporate officers were a mayor, a recorder, two sheriffs, 24 aldermen, and 40 common councilmen. There were 24 guilds or incorporate trades, and the city was divided into 12 wards and 9 parishes. Before the abridgment of its privileges as a county-palatine, Chester was allowed to send 2 members to parliament, a privilege which it still enjoys under the reform act. The boundaries of the new borough are the same with those of the old, except that the new includes a portion of the township of Great Boughton. It is divided into 5 wards. The income of the borough for 1837 was £5,807 18s. 2½d.; the expenditure £6,904 5s. 9½d., leaving a balance of £1,086 7s. 7d. due to the treasurer. The number of houses of the annual value of £10 and upwards, amounts to about 1,800. / The electors who voted at the election in 1832 were 2,718; in 1837, 1,457. The number of electors registered for 1836 and 1837 was 2,298, of whom 1,305 were freemen, and 993 £10 householders. The population of the parliamentary borough in 1831 amounted to 20,088; and in 1837 to 22,453. This city has had a commission of the peace granted, and a court of quarter-sessions, and a recorder appointed. There is also a pence court for the recovery of debts, held four times in the year, for the trial of causes, and for other purposes twice a week. The presiding officers are the recorder, the registrar and deputy registrar and the officer of court.

Trade, &c.—The modern history of the trade of Chester is rather the history of its decay, to which the prosperity of the port of Liverpool has in some degree contributed; but this decline is partly owing to the bad navigation of the Dee. The port is too shallow to be of importance; but has bonding warehouses for wine and spirits, wood-goods, and corn. It was at one time a place of great trade; but the gradual accumulation of sand in the mouth of the river, rendered it impossible for vessels of any burden to enter it, and as a port it was of necessity deserted about the middle of the 15th century. By the River Dee navigation company, incorporated about the beginning of the 18th century, a new channel was cut for the river, whereby between 2,000 and 3,000 acres of land were redeemed from the sea, and the navigation so much improved that vessels of 600 tons burden can come up to the port; yet its commerce has not been restored, being, with the exception of a few ships which visit Spain, Portugal, the Mediterranean, and the Baltic, chiefly confined to Ireland. Formerly a considerable trade was carried on in Irish linens, and a linen company was established, and a large hall or market-place built for their business; this trade has, however, disappeared, and the hall is now used for the purposes of the cheese fairs which take place eight times in the year. Its imports are butter, provisions, hides, tallow, timber, iron, hemp, flax, feathers, lamb and kid skins, fruit, oil, wine, barilla, and cork, from Spain and Portugal. Its exports are cheese, lead, calamine, copperplates, cast-iron, and coals, of which upwards of 90,000 tons were exported in 1836. Its manufactures are gloves, tobacco, tobacco-pipes said to be of a very superior quality, snuff, white lead, shot, leather, &c. The trade of the town has been greatly injured by the direct communication maintained between Wales and Liverpool by steam-boats. The new road to Holyhead and Dublin, through Shrewsbury, has also hurt the Chester road very much. There have been lately, however, in 1839, increasing manifestations of a revival in trade; 16 large vessels from London, Wales, Ireland, &c. besides numerous small craft, were lying at the wharfs at one time. Further improvements in the Dee navigation are also talked of, so that vessels of large burthen may be brought to the walls of the city. For a particular account of the various railroads, whether completed, in progress, or merely projected, and of the various canals which connect the city of Chester with the county-palatine and the surrounding counties, see CHEESHIRE. Ship-building is carried on here to a very considerable extent, ten or twelve ships being sometimes to be seen on the stocks at one time. The market-place is commodious and its markets at all times most plentifully supplied. There are separate markets for fish, flesh, and poultry, which are held in three roofed buildings in Northgate-street, contiguous to each other; there are also open markets held twice a-week for the sale of cattle, crockery, &c. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday, and the fairs are the last Thursday in February and April, July 5th to 10th, October 10th to 15th, for cattle, Irish linen, cloths, hardware, hops, drapery, and Manchester wares, and November 24th. The races, which are held in the beginning of May, are attended by an immense concourse of people. They are run upon a fine level called Roodee, belonging to the corporation, on the side of the city, and immediately beneath its walls, from which they can be seen to great advantage.

General description.—Chester is situated on the north bank of the Dee, on a rocky elevation, half encircled by a bend of that noble river, and has to the eye of a stranger a striking and picturesque appearance. It is walled all around, the walls being nearly 2 miles in circumference, and so broad as to admit, even where they are narrowest, of two persons to walk abreast. They form, indeed, a fine promenade for the citizens, and afford most delightful views of the estuary of the Dee, the neighbouring county of Flint, and the distant mountains of Wales. The town is composed of four principal streets running from a common centre, called here the pentice—elsewhere it would be called the cross—to the four cardinal points of the compass, each terminated by an arched gateway, named from their accidents, Bridge-gate, Water-gate, East-gate, and North-gate. The keeping of these gates was in former times an office of great importance and high honour, and as such, claimed by the first families of the kingdom. The streets are cut down several feet into the solid rock, and level with them are low shops or warehouses, above which are balustrated galleries, or rows, as they are called by the inhabitants, which serve the purposes of side-pavements for foot-passengers. Along these rows are shops and houses, the upper stories being built over them, so that they seem to run along the first floors of the houses. They are connected with the streets by flights of steps at convenient distances. In the old buildings they are closed in with heavy wooden railings and immense pillars of oak, with transverse beams supporting the upper stories: in the more modern buildings they have been greatly improved and their appearance rendered light and airy by the use of elegantly formed iron railings. The streets, though brilliantly lighted with gas, are very indifferently paved,—an inconvenience scarcely felt by foot-passengers, who are never seen in them except it be to cross from one row to another on the opposite side. The new bridge is particularly worthy of notice. It consists of only one arch, but one of the largest ever attempted with stone, being 200 feet in span. It is built of Peckforton stone with granite groins, and cost not less than £40,000.

The Mechanics' institution has an interesting museum which occupies the Water tower in the walls, and is open to the public every day.

Of the many fine buildings that adorn the city of Chester, we cannot pretend even to give the names. But we may notice a few of the most prominent and handsome amongst them. The Linen-hall, erected in Water-gate street by the Irish merchants, about the year 1780, is a splendid pile of building. The Exchange, in Northgate street, containing concert-rooms and courts of justice, is a handsome building ornamented with four fine columns. Unions-hall and Commercial-hall were built by subscription in 1809 and 1815, to accommodate the merchants from Manchester and Yorkshire at the fairs of July and August. In the townhall or exchange are held the quarter-sessions and meetings for electing the city officers. The city-gaol and house of correction are surrounded by a brick wall of an oblong form, slightly cut off at the angles. They consist of two stories, comprising 25 cells, 10 wards, 10 airing-yards, and 18 rooms. The number of prisoners, in 1836, was 315. Of all the buildings in the city, however, that called the castle is decidedly the most splendid. It stands on the site of the old castle, nearly the whole of which has been taken down, and constitutes a general and elegant design for county-courts, gaols, barracks, armoury, and other edifices. It was erected by the late Mr. Harrison, the accomplished architect, to whom Cheshire is so much indebted for its embellishments. The county gaol, a magnificent structure, which is scarcely exceeded by any in the kingdom, forms a prominent portion of this general design. As originally constructed, it consisted of two separate buildings, one forming three sides of a square, containing apartments for debtors; the other, of a semicircular shape, for criminal prisoners, with five divisions, and the same number of yards. The number of separate cells amounts to 56, independently of two detached ones used for condemned prisoners. A considerable addition has been made to the prison by the enclosure of an extensive area, and the erection of a new building containing 54 cells and other apartments. The number of prisoners, in 1836, was 206. On the east side of the yard are the range of barracks, and on the opposite side is the armoury, large enough, it is said, to store 30,000 stand of arms. The castle is a royal fortress, with a governor, lieutenant-governor, &c.

History and Antiquities.—Chester is unquestionably a place of great antiquity. The attempts, however, to illustrate its history, while it belonged to those respectable savages the Cornavii, have not been remarkably successful. That it has been noticed by the Roman statist and geographers, under the names of Dennana and Deva, and that it was occupied by the twentieth legion, under Agricola, and remained under the power of the Romans till their final departure from the island, seems to be all that is certainly known of its early history. In nothing is the evidence of the Roman possession of Great Britain more manifest than in the frequent occurrence of the name Chester, in places of note and importance. Chester is the Latin Castrum or Castra. It is found in Manchester, Dorchester, Grantchester, &c. Sometimes it assumes the form of Caster, as Doncaster, Tadcaster. Sometimes it becomes very much contracted, as in Exeter, Wrochester. It occurs here without any prefix; but anciently this city was frequently termed West Chester. There are other Chesters and Castors; and it might be inferred from the name alone, that these were military stations; but the crucial form of the streets, running from a centre towards the cardinal points of the compass, and each terminated by a gate, is quite the form of the Roman camp. Besides, the Roman modes of fortification are still evident in the remains of military architecture which surround the city, and the antiquities which distinguish their residence are not confined to any particular quarter. After the departure of the Romans, it is said to have been demolished by Egfrid the Northumbrian, and afterwards (we are not told who rebuilt it) by the Danes. At the Conquest, Cheshire having been almost all granted to Hugh of Avrauche, or Hugh Lupus, near relative of the Conqueror, with the Saxon title of Earl, but with privileges which seldom accompanied such concessions, the shire became a county-palatine with peculiar courts, and charged with the custody of its own records, and Lupus lived in Chester castle, where he held his courts and parliaments. The succeeding six earls of this family maintained the same state; but the line of succession terminated in the reign of Henry III., and from that time the earldom of Chester has been assumed by the Crown, or by other members of the royal house. During the contest between Henry III. and his barons, Chester was held by the earl of Derby for that monarch, who, in consequence, was particularly favourable to it, confirming all the privileges bestowed on it by the Norman earls, and embodying them under the form of a corporate government. The citizens, indeed, seem always to have ranked themselves on the side of prerogative, for which they have sometimes suffered considerable privations. In the contest with Charles I. the city suffered all the misery of a protracted siege, and from its towers that infatuated king had the mortification to witness the total rout of his forces, under Sir Marmaduke Langdale, on Rowston moor, by the parliamentary troops, under the generals Poyntz and Jones. The town was seized upon, in 1688, by the Catholic Lords Aston and Molyneux, for James II., whose pusillanimous abdication happily rendered their foolish interference unavailing.—In this city there was, pretty early in the Saxon times, a religious house, probably a nunnery, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul. It was ruined by the wars; and in the reign of King Ethelstan, re-edified for secular canons, by the noble Elfleda, countess of Mercia, and afterwards more amply endowed by the munificence of King Edmund and others. In the year 1093, Hugh Lupus, earl of Chester, expelled from hence the seculars, and settled here an abbot and convent of Benedictine monks from Bec in Normandy. The yearly revenues of the abbey were rated, 26th Hen. VIII., at £1,003 5s. 11d., Dugd.; £1,073 17s. 7d., ob. q. Speed. Here were also the monasteries of St. Mary and St. Michael; the colleges of St. John and the Holy Cross; the hospitals of St. Giles and St. John the Baptist; and houses of the Black, Grey, and White friars. The city of Chester was anciently famous for its theatrical representations, called mysteries. They appear to have been first performed here in 1323, and a thousand days of pardon from the pope, and forty from the bishop of Chester, was granted to all who attended them. In 1839 an ancient chapel was discovered nearly choked up with rubbish, behind the premises of Messrs. Powell and Edwards of this city. On clearing away the earth—the accumulation of centuries—this chapel was found to be upwards of 15 yards long, 153 broad, and 14 feet in height. The arches are Gothic, beautifully groined, resting on pilasters about half-way down the wall. The baptismal fonts—one of which has been placed in its original position—occupied the west end of the edifice. The whole is in an admirable state of preservation.

CHESTER (LITTLE), a township in the parish of St. Alkmund, county of Derby. Acreage with the parish. Houses 46. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 191. A. P. £974. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 18s.

CHESTERBLADE, a chapelry in the parish of Evercreech, and (though locally in the hund. of White-stone) hund. of Wells Forum, county of Somerset; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Shepton-Mallet. Living, a chapel to the vicarage of Evercreech.

CHESTERFIELD, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Scarsdale, union of Chesterfield, county of Derby; 24 miles north-north-east of Derby; on the side of a hill between the rivers Hipper and Rother. It includes the hamlets of Calow, Newbold, Dunstan, and Pilaley, the townships of Hasland, Temple Normanton, Tapton, and Walton, and the chapelry of Brimington. The Chesterfield canal, which commences in the midway of the Trent, and is 46 miles in length, terminates at Chesterfield. The North Midland railway between Derby and Leeds crosses this canal near Brimington, and passes Chesterfield. At Rotherham this railway is connected with Sheffield by the Sheffield and Rotherham railway. Acres 13,160. Houses 2,177. Pop., in 1801, 7,593; in 1831, 10,688. A. P. £39,621. Poor rates, in 1838, £3,220 10s. Houses in the township, 1,208. Pop., in 1801, 4,267; in 1831, 5,775. A. P. £17,488. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,820 19s. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Chesterfield by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Chesterfield poor-law union comprehends 34 parishes, embracing an area of 141 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 44,246. Living, a vicarage in the archdeaconry of Derby and diocese of Lichfield; rated at £15 0s. 2½d.; gross income £213, returned at £135. The church is cruciform, and is remarkable for its spire, which rises to the height of 230 feet; and, like the leaning tower of Pisa, is so singularly twisted and distorted, that it seems to lean in whatever direction it is approached. Patron, the dean of Lincoln. A new church was erected here in 1838: it is in the pointed Gothic style, and capable of accommodating 1,000 persons. Cost £3,300. There are also places of worship for Independents, Unitarians, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, &c. The Independent chapel, a handsome building, for the accommodation of 800 hearers, was erected in 1822, the former one being too small. In 1835, there were 26 daily and Sunday schools in the town, including a National and a Lancasterian school supported by subscription, where some hundreds of children are taught the common branches of education. There is also an infant school. There are various valuable charities connected with this parish; the most important of which are a grammar or free school, founded in the reign of Queen Elizabeth: income, in 1827, £110 10s. 9d. The Petty school, including various gifts to the original foundation, instituted in 1690, chiefly for the purpose of preparing children for the grammar-school: income, in 1827, £110 7s. 10d. These schools had then fallen into decay. The Heathcote charities, instituted chiefly for the purpose of apprenticing poor children of this borough: income, in 1827, £113 9s. During the previous 10 years, 103 boys had been placed out apprentices by the corporation, who administered this charity. The church lands; revenue, in 1827, £49 14s. 10d. The earl of Shrewsbury's charity; unimprovable annual rent, £12, disposed of in subscriptions to the Chesterfield dispensary, National school, &c., including the British and Foreign Bible Society, now in active operation. The earl of Devonshire's charity; unimprovable annual rent, £5, distributed in bread amongst the poor.

The Chesterfield charities were principally under the management of the corporation; but trustees were appointed on 16th March, 1837. The income derived from those under their management amounted, in 1837-8, to £733 9s. 11d.

From its Saxon name, Cæster, this place, like many other of our English towns, is supposed to have been a Roman station. From the Norman survey, where it is named Cestrefield, it appears to have been at that time a bailiwick to Newbold, now a very poor inconsiderable hamlet in this parish. How or by what means it rose into importance, it would, perhaps, be in vain now to inquire. It was erected into a free borough by Queen Elizabeth, and it gives the title of Earl to the family of Stanhope. The town is large and irregularly built. It is lighted with gas, and a police establishment has been instituted since 1837. It has a considerable trade, and extensive manufactories of lace, cotton, and silk, with tanneries and fellmongers works; but it is considered as more particularly belonging to the hosiery and lace districts, a large portion of the population being occupied in these manufactures. The lace trade has been considerably extended within the last few years: there were, in 1840, four extensive lace manufactories here; and 2 cotton mills and 1 silk mill, in 1838, employed 262 hands.—The neighbourhood abounds with coal, iron-stone, and lead-ore, all successfully wrought. There are several iron-foundries, where all kinds of machinery are made. The vivid but fitful blaze, which those in the vicinity of the town emit by night, sheds a peculiar air of grandeur over all the surrounding scene. Lead is sent in great quantities from Chesterfield by the canal that runs from that place into the Trent, a little below Gainsborough. There are potteries employing some hundreds of people. Under the municipal corporations act, the borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors, but is not divided into wards. Income, in 1837, £357 10s. 2d. Expenditure £336 18s. 11d. The sessions for the hundred, and, once a-year, for the county, are held in the town-hall. A court of requests for recovery of trading debts under £15, was established in 1840, under a special act of parliament obtained in the previous session. There is a gaol for debtors in the town. Chesterfield is a polling-place for the county. The market-day is Saturday. The fairs are held on January 25th, (St. Paul,) February 28th, (if either of these days falls upon a Sunday, the fair is held upon the preceding Saturday,) first Saturday and last Monday in April, May 4th and July 5th for cattle, horses, and pedlery, September 25th for cheese, onions, and pedlery, November 25th: toll free for sheep, cattle, &c. The races are held annually in autumn. The Chesterfield and North Derbyshire Bank was established here in 1834.

CHESTERFORD (GREAT), anciently CAMBORICUM, a parish in the hund. of Uttlesford, union of Saffron Walden, county of Essex; 4 miles north-north-west of Saffron Walden; intersected by the London and Cambridge railway. Acres 3,030. Houses 186. Pop., in 1801, 600; in 1831, 873. A. P. £2,362. Poor rates, in 1838, £554 18s. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Little Chesterford, in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £10; gross income £427. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Bristol.—In 1459 Thomas Hill granted rents of certain tenements in Great Chesterford in trust for relief of the poor; income, in 1837, £76.—John Hart made a benefaction for the education of the poor; income, in 1837, £64 8s. Girls as well as boys are admitted into this school. The number of scholars, in 1837, was about 90.—Minor charities; income, in 1837, £21 1s. 6½d.—The village of Chesterford is pleasantly situated on the eastern bank of the river Granta, with an open prospect into Cambridgeshire. Its market has been long discontinued, but it has still a fair for horses held on the 5th of July. This parish, which was once a considerable market-town, has afforded to antiquaries a rich harvest of coins, earthen-pots, stone-coffins, skeletons, urns of red clay, and scrolls of rotten parchments. It was, without doubt, a Roman station. The tenure in this parish is Borough English.

CHESTERFORD (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Uttlesford, union of Saffron Walden, county of Essex; 3 miles north-west of Saffron Walden. Acres 1,260. Houses 46. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 211. A. P. £1,777. Poor rates, in 1838, £144. Living, a rectory annexed to the vicarage of Great Chesterford. In 1617 Lady Hunsdon granted £50 for the relief of the poor of this parish; income, in 1837, £22. In 1733 Lady Osborn granted £200 for clothing poor persons; income, in 1837, £15 4s. 8d.; and, in 1837, the income of Viscount Falkland's charity for the poor was £3 13s. 2d.

CHESTER-LE-STREET, a parish partly in the middle division of Chester ward, and partly in the north division of Easington ward, union of Chester-le-Street, co. palatine of Durham; it includes the townships of Beamish Edmonsley, Harraton, Hedley, Kibblesworth, Lambton, Lumley Great, Lumley Little, Pelton, Plawsworth, Ravensworth, Urpeth, Ouston, and Waldrige, and the chapelries of Birtley, Lintgreen, Chester-le-Street, and Lamesley. A workhouse has been erected here, by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Chester-le-Street. The Chester-le-Street poor-law union comprehends 20 parishes, embracing an area of 49 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at £17,178. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £7,180. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,094. In 1686 Lumley hospital, in this parish, was endowed by John Duck for the support of 12 aged persons; income, in 1829, £40. Henry Smith's charity, with other gifts, for the support of the poor; income, in 1829, about £22. In the chapelry of Tanfield, in this parish, there is a charity school in which 14 boys are educated; income, in 1829, £25; and various legacies to the poor of this chapelry; interest, in 1829, £12 3s. Minor charities in this parish,—income, in 1829, £24 7s. Acres 31,260. Houses 2,824. Pop., in 1801, 11,665; in 1831, 15,378. Poor rates, in 1838, £3,717 2s. For the livings in this parish, see the chapelries of Chester-le-Street and Lamesley.

CHESTER-LE-STREET, a chapelry in the above parish; 6 miles north of Durham; situated in a valley west of the river Wear; intersected by the Great North of England railway. Acres 2,940. Houses 323. Pop., in 1801, 1,662; in 1831, 1,910. A. P. £7,455. Poor rates, in 1838, £5:9 10s. Living, a curacy, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Durham; gross income £480; in the patronage of H. Jolliffe and Lady Byron, in 1835. The church, which has a nave and side aisles, with an octagonal tower, is terminated by an elegant spire 160 feet high. The Independents have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1814. Chester-le-Street, according to Camden, occupies the site of the Condercum of the Romans. It consists of one street about a mile in length, on the Roman military road between Durham and Newcastle. It has an excellent foundry; and at Birtley, in its neighbourhood, is a remarkable salt spring rising from a great depth in the earth, and yielding a large quantity of salt. It is the seat of the petty-sessions for the ward, which are held once a fortnight. It gives name to the parish and the ward, and is one of the bishop's copy-hold manors. "Bishop Eardulfus being forced to fly with the body of St. Cuthbert from Lindisfarne, fixed his episcopal see here, A. D. 883, which being, by the bounty of good people, endowed with great revenues and privileges, had probably a chapter of monks, or rather of secular canons, attending it here also, translated with the bishopric to Durham, A. D. 985. But in memory of St. Cuthbert's body having been so long in this church, Anthony Beck, bishop of Durham, (and patriarch of Jerusalem,) A. D. 1286, made it collegiate, consisting of a dean, seven prebendaries, five chaplains, three deacons, and other ministers. The prebends of the seven portionists, with the vicarage of this church, were taxed in the Lincoln valuation, 26th Edward I., at £146 13s. 4d.; but the 20th Henry VIII. the deanery and seven prebends were valued at no more than £77 12s. 8d. in the whole, viz., the deanery, £41; prebend of Lamley, £5 16s. 8d.; Welton, £5 16s. 8d.; Chester, £6; Lamysley, £10; Tanfield, £3 6s. 8d.; Birtley, £3 6s. 8d.; and Urpeth, £2 6s. 8d." Tanner's Not. Mon.

CHESTER WARD, in the county of Durham, consists of three divisions,—east, middle, and west. It occupies the northern part of the county. Above a fourth of the land in this ward is heath. Area 158,060 acres. Houses 14,186. Pop., in 1831, 88,878.

CHESTERS (EAST, or LITTLE),—anciently Vindolana—in the parish of Halt-whistle, in the west division of Tyndale ward, county of Northumberland; 14 miles west-north-west of Hexham; near the Newcastle and Carlisle railway.

CHESTERS (WEST, or GREAT),—anciently Æsica—in the parish of Halt-whistle, west division of Tyndale ward, county of Northumberland; 17 miles west-north-west of Hexham; near the Picts wall.

CHESTERTON HUNDRED, in the county of Cambridge. It occupies the central part of the county. Area 16,599. Houses 741. Pop., in 1831, 4,168.

CHESTERTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; about a mile north of Cambridge, on the river Cam. Acres 3,080. Houses 238. Pop., in 1801, 741; in 1831, 1,174. A. P. £2,694. Poor rates, in 1838, £491 18s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Chesterton, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Chesterton poor-law union comprehends 38 parishes, embracing an area of 120 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 19,151. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £12,297. Expenditure, in 1838, £9,148. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £10 12s. 3d.; gross income £206. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £490. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. This parish is endowed with two charities—the church and town estate; income, in 1837, £68 18s. 6d.; expended in teaching poor children, procuring fuel for the poor, &c., and three minor gifts bestowed for purposes of general charity.—"In 1154 it appears that every one who kept a fire here was bound to pay a farthing to St. Peter's altar in Ely cathedral, by the name of Ely's farthings, and the fourth farthing arising from this town and that of Grancester [Grandchester] originally given to Ely by the king when lord of both these towns, used to be paid to the castle of Norwich by the name of Ely wardpenny.—Chesterton signifies the town next the castle or camp, and was given by King Henry I., 20th of February, in the 11th year of his reign, to the prior and canons of Bernwell, in as ample a manner as King John had leased it to them at £30 per annum fee-farm; which lease was now made perpetual by that annual payment, so that he and his successors be for ever acquitted from the annuity of £10 which that king had given them per alms for ever out of the said manor which had view of frank-pledge now confirmed to exempt it from the hundred and sheriff."—Blomfield's Col. Can. pp. 28 and 220.

CHESTERTON, a parish in the hund. of Norman-Cross, union of Peterborough, county of Huntingdon; 5 miles north-north-west of Stilton, bounded on the south by the river Nen. Acres 1,440. Houses 21. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 105. A. P. £2,331. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 8s. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £17 8s. 4d.; gross income £433. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Abingdon.

CHESTERTON, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Bicester, county of Oxford; 2 miles west by south of Bicester, on a branch of the river Ray. Acres 2,850. Houses 83. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 382. A. P. £3,104. Poor rates, in 1838, £206 10s. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £7 8s. 9d.; returned at £149 13s.; gross income £200. Patrons, the master and fellows of New college, Oxford.

CHESTERTON, a township in the parish of Wolstanton, Stafford; 2½ miles north-north-west of Newcastle-under-Lyne; close upon the Manchester and Birmingham railway. A church has been recently built here. Houses 196. Pop., in 1811, 356; in 1831, 960. Other returns with the parish.

CHESTERTON, a parish in Warwick division, hund. of Kington, union of Southam, county of Warwick; 5½ miles north-north-east of Kington, on a branch of the river Avon. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield, now in the dio. of Worcester; valued at £8; returned at £128; gross income £83. Patron, in 1835, Lord Willoughby de Broke. Acres 2,960. Houses 39. Pop., in 1801, 205; in 1831, 168. A. P. £4,876. Poor rates, in 1838, £299 8s.

CHESWARDINE, a parish in Drayton division of the hund. of Bradford (North), union of Market Drayton, county of Salop; 4½ miles south-south-east of Drayton, near the Birmingham and Liverpool canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £260. Patron, in 1835, G. S. Harding, Esq. There is a charity school in this parish with an endowment of £4 per annum for teaching 4 poor boys to read. Other charities, including an annual rent of £20 for general behoof of the poor of this parish; income, in 1830, £37 6s. Church lands; income, in 1830, £17 14s. Acres 6,070. Houses 189. Pop., in 1801, 682; in 1831, 1,051. A. P. £7,167. Poor rates, in 1838, £348 4s.

CHESWICK, a small village in the parish of Kyloe, co.-palatine of Durham, though locally in Northumberland; 10 miles north-north-west of Belford. Pleasantly situated on high ground.

CHETNOLE, a chapelry in the parish of Yetminster, county of Dorset; 6½ miles south-south-west of Sherborne. Acres 1,340. Houses 37. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 236. A. P. £1,758. Poor rates, in 1838, £144 1s. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Yetminster.

CHETTISHAM, a chapelry in the parish of St. Mary, city of Ely, county of Cambridge. Pop., in 1821, 91. Living, a curacy not in charge; returned at £79; gross income £79. Patron, in 1835, the dean and chapter of Ely.

CHETTLE, a parish in the hund. of Moeckton-Up-Wimborne, Shaston division, union of Wimborne and Cranborne, county of Dorset; 6½ miles north-east of Blandford Forum. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 2s. 9d.; returned at £140; gross income £181. Patron, in 1835, H. Chambers, Esq. Acres 1,510. Houses 31. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831, 129. A. P. £945. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 13s.

CHETTON, a parish in the hund. of Stottesden, union of Bridgenorth, county of Salop; 4 miles south-west by west of Bridgenorth. It includes the chapelry of Loughton. Living, a rectory, consolidated with the curacy of Loughton and the rectory of Deuxhill and Glazeley; rated at £11; gross income £885; nett income £772. Patrons, in 1835, representatives of R. B. Browne. There are various benefactions in this parish; income, in 1820, £18 11s. 6d., applied for the support of the poor and the education of poor children. Acres 7,140. Houses 119. Pop., in 1801, 526; in 1831, 627. A. P. £1,708. Poor rates, in 1838, £340 8s.

CHETWOOD, or CHETWODE, a parish in the hund. of Buckingham, union and county of Buckingham; 9 miles west-west by north of Winslow. Acres 1,200. Houses 23. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 149. A. P. £1,424. Poor rates, in 1838, £31 7s. Living, a curacy, not in charge, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; returned with Burton-Hartshorne, at £96. There was here a priory of the order of St. Augustine, founded by Sir Ralph de Norwich.

CHETWYND, a parish in Newport, south part of the hund. of Bradford, union of Newport, county of Salop; 1½ mile north of Newport, on the river Mees. Acres 3,330. Houses 133. Pop., in 1801, 594; in 1831, 766. A. P. £5,095. Poor rates, in 1838, £220 4s. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; rated at £10 16s. 3d.; gross income £775. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Borough, Esq. Charities; income, in 1821, £51 16s., carried chiefly to the parish poor rates.

CHETWYND-ASHTON, a township in the parish of Edmond, Salop; about a mile south of Newport. Acreage with the parish. Houses 57. Pop., in 1801, 263; in 1831, 246. A. P. £4,466. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 13s.

CHEVELEY HUNDRED, in Cambridgeshire. Area 12,867 acres. Houses 526. Pop., in 1831, 3,239.

CHEVELEY, a parish in the above hund., union of Newmarket, county of Cambridge; 3½ miles south-east of Newmarket. Acres 2,489. Houses 109. Pop., in 1801, 398; in 1831, 541. A. P. £2,386. Poor rates, in 1838, £410 17s. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £16 8s. 1½d.; gross income £522. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £708 2s. 6d. Patron, in 1835, J. T. Hand, Esq. In 1588 John Baye endowed a free grammar-school in this parish; income, in 1837, including an augmentation by Lord Dovers, £80. The school had become inefficient as a free grammar-school. Reeve's and Baye's benefactions to the poor, in 1837, £18 2s. 9d. Five small houses and gardens, built by Lord Dovers, had also been claimed on behalf of the objects of these benefactions.

CHEVELEY, a parish in the hund. of Faircross, union of Newbury, county of Berks; 4½ miles north of Newbury. It includes the chapelries of Leck-hamstead, and Winterbourne, and the tythings of Oare, Courage, and Snelsmore. Acres 9,410. Houses 391. Pop., in 1801, 1,422; in 1831, 1,857. A. P. £10,917. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,268 6s. Living, a vicarage with the curacies of Leckhamstead, Oare, and Winterbourn, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £26 11s. 3d.; gross income £1,220. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £735. Patrons, in 1835, T. T. Wasey, Esq., and Rev. C. Capel, alternately. In 1732 Dorothy Pocock bequeathed 21 acres of land for the support of the poor of this parish; income, in 1837, £21 4s. 8d. Mather's benefaction—income, in 1819, £40 5s., of which £15 are paid to a schoolmistress for the education of 14 boys and girls, the residue expended in books, firing, and necessaries for the children. Henshaw's annuity of £10, paid to the schoolmaster of Cheveley for the education of 10 poor boys and 10 poor girls of the parish.—Minor benefactions to the poor; income, in 1837, £15 0s. 4d.; besides 17 acres, 3 roads, 28 poles of common land not worth cultivation.

CHEVENING, a parish in the hund. of Codsheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Seven Oaks, county of Kent; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-west of Seven Oaks. Acres 3,550. Houses 156. Pop., in 1801, 756; in 1831, 901. A. P. £4,178. Poor rates, in 1838, £361 19s. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Canterbury, and a peculiar; rated at £21 6s. 8d.; gross income £650. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. There are several charities in this parish. The countess of Stanhope's charity for apprenticing poor children; income, in 1836, £48 5s. 6d. Rebecca Wyndham's and Catherine Strode's benefactions of £100 each, for a like purpose, and the latter's second benefaction of £100, proceeds to be laid out in setting up poor girls in trade.—It was at his seat in this parish that the late Lord Stanhope displayed his mechanical genius by various inventions, and, in particular, where he perfected and set up his improved printing-press, which has now come into such general use.

CHEVERELL (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Swanborough, union of Devizes, county of Wilts; 1 mile west of West Lavington. Acres 1,840. Houses 113. Pop., in 1801, 447; in 1831, 576. A. P. £2,893. Poor rates, in 1838, £390 7s. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £16; gross income £416. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Radnor.

CHEVERELL (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Swanborough, union of Devizes, county of Wilts; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west of West Lavington. Acres 1,930. Houses 55. Pop., in 1801, 159; in 1831, 259. A. P. £1,659. Poor rates, in 1838, £121 10s. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £11 7s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £470. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Radnor.

CHEVETT, a township in the parish of Royston, west riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Wakefield; close on the York and Derby railway. Acres 850. Houses 5. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 38. A. P. £1,505. Poor rates, in 1838, £43.

CHEVINGTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 5 miles south-west by west of St. Edmund's-Bury. Acres 2,240. Houses 100. Pop., in 1801, 445; in 1831, 573. A. P. £2,681. Poor rates, in 1838, £552 14s. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £16 3s. 9d.; gross income £427. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. White. Charities; income, in 1829, £20 12s.; residue distributed to the poor upon payment of land-tax and repairs of cottages.

CHEVINGTON (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of Warkworth, Northumberland. Houses 37. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 234. Poor rates, in 1838, £81 8s. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Warkworth, not in charge.

CHEVINGTON (WEST), a township in the parish of Warkworth, county of Northumberland. Houses, in 1831, 22. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 117. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 15s.

CHEVIOT HILLS (THE), an extensive and celebrated range of porphyritic hills, occupying a circle of about 15 miles in diameter, on the border of England and Scotland, but chiefly within the county of Northumberland, between the Scottish border on the north-west, and the upper part of the river Coquet on the south, round by Prendwick, Ilderton, Wooler, and Kirknewton to Mindrim, including an area, in England, of from 90,000 to 100,000 acres. Many of these hills are of a conical form, some of them being perfect cones. Almost all are pointed, and finely formed, with smooth steep sides, their bases being separated only by deep narrow and sequestered glens. The soil on the lower slopes is fertile, producing a rich, close, green sward; but on the higher acclivities, patches of heath, points of rocks, and loose stones appear. Their only produce is grass; but they are the most valuable of the mountain tracts in this vicinity, being depastured by numerous flocks of the valuable and peculiar breed of sheep termed the Cheviots, now widely diffused not only over the north of England, but also over almost all Scotland. Goats also are kept among them, and they abound with grouse. On the top of the mountain, called by way of eminence, the Cheviot, there are extensive tracts of heath, and a large lough, which is often frozen at midsummer. The elevation of this mountain is 2,658 feet above the level of the sea. It presents large craggy rocks of whinstone and hornblende.

CHEW AND CHEWTON HUNDRED, in the county of Somerset. Area 46,700 acres. Houses 3,285. Pop., in 1831, 17,932.

CHEW-MAGNA, or BISHOP CHEW, a parish in the above hund., union of Clutton; 3 miles west of Pensford, on a branch of the Avon. It includes the tythings of Bishops-Sutton, Knowle, Knighton-Sutton, North-Elm, and Stow. Acres 4,490. Houses 329. Pop., in 1801, 1,345; in 1831, 2,048. A. P. £70,070. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,078 4s. Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Dundry annexed, in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £30 13s. 4d.; gross income £708. Patrons, in 1835, heirs of Richard Roberts. Anciently this was a borough, and had an extensive woollen manufactory.

CHEWSTOKE, a parish in the same hund., union of Clutton; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Pensford. Acres 1,910. Houses 133. Pop., in 1801, 517; in 1831, 693. A. P. £3,691. Poor rates, in 1838, £253 3s. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £7 3s. 4d.; gross income £312. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. P. Tait. A free school was established here by subscription in 1718; income, in 1825, £91 7s.; 20 boys were taught reading, writing, and arithmetic, besides being supplied with copy and cyphering books, &c. A girls' school was also supported out of the income. Minor benefactions for the poor—income, in 1825, £29 14s., besides the interest of a benefaction of £90.

CHEWTON-MENDIP, a parish in the hund. of Chewton, union of Wells, county of Somerset; 6 miles north-north-east of Wells, among the Mendip hills. It includes the tything of Widcombe. Acres 7,020. Houses 278. Pop., in 1801, 1,015; in 1831,

1,315. A. P. £6,124. Poor rates, in 1838, £464 5s. Living, a discharged vicarage with the chapels of Emborrow, Farrington, Gournay, Paulton, and Stone-Easton, in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £29 11s. 8d.; gross income £450. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £352 10s. Patron, in 1835, W. Kingsmill, Esq. About the year 1745, part of the common was enclosed and dedicated for the support of a day school for boys; income, in 1825, £20. In 1759, John Dory bequeathed £100, to be laid out in the purchase of land towards establishing a charity school for the education of poor girls; income, in 1825, £10 10s. In this school 14 girls were taught to read and knit stockings. Near this place lead ore and calaminaris have been found. Chewton-Mendip gives the title of viscount to the Earl of Waldegrave.

CHICH. See OXYTH-ST.-CHICK.

CHICHELEY, a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport-Pagnel, county of Buckingham; 2½ miles north-east of Newport-Pagnel, on a branch of the river Ouse. Acres 1,620. Houses 43. Pop., in 1801, 189; in 1831, 218. A. P. £1,993. Poor rates, in 1838, £123 7s. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8; gross income £67. Patron, in 1835, C. Chester, Esq. Charities—rent charge, £2 12s., paid to poor widows and widowers.

CHICHESTER.

A city and county of itself, locally situated in the hund. of Box and Stockbridge, rape of Chichester, western division of the county of Sussex; 62 miles south-south by west of London, and about 6 miles from the sea-coast; on a plain which extends from Brighton to Portsmouth. The Lavant, a rivulet which is generally dry in the summer, nearly encircles the town, and falls into an estuary at Dell-key. There is a small harbour about a mile-and-a-half from the city, which communicates with it by means of a canal, forming a branch of the Portsmouth and London canal by the way of Arundel. There is a quay on the harbour to which vessels of 180 tons can come up at high tide. It is intended that the proposed railway between London and Portsmouth should run through Chichester. Acres 1,680. Houses, in 1762, 767; in 1801, 821; in 1831, 1,514. Pop., in 1739, 4,030; in 1762, 3,610; in 1801, 4,744; in 1811, 6,694; in 1821, 7,362; and in 1831, 8,270. A. P. £22,015. Poor rates, in 1838, £35,890 8s.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—This city is divided into 12 parishes:—1st, All Saints, sometimes called the Pallant, a discharged rectory, rated at £5 17s. 6d.; gross income £55. It is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury, who is also the patron.—2d, St. Andrew's, a discharged rectory, rated at £2 13s. 4d.; gross income £106; in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Chichester, who is also the patron.—3d, St. Bartholomew's, a rectory not in charge; gross income £65. Patron, General Crosbie.—4th, St. Martin's, a discharged rectory, rated at £1 6s. 8d.; gross income £69. It is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Chichester, who is also patron.—5th, St. Mary's, a rectory, rated at £2 13s. 4d. Patron, the Lord-chancellor.—6th, St. Olave's, a discharged rectory, rated at £4 18s. 9d.; gross income £86; and in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Chichester, who is also patron.—7th, St. Pancras (within), a discharged rectory, rated at £8 10s. 8d.; gross income £120. It is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Chichester. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Bliss.—8th, St. Pancras (without).—9th, St. Peter the Great, or the subdeanery, a discharged vicarage, rated at £16 8s. 4d.; gross income £159. It is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Chichester, who is also the patron.—10th, St. Peter the Less, a discharged rectory, rated at £1 6s. 8d.; gross income £59; in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean of Chichester. Patron, the King.—11th, St. Peter of the County near Gybald, rated at £4 8s. 6d.; but the church is in ruins.—12th, The Close of the Cathedral, a precinct.

The total amount of the gross yearly income of the see, on an average of three years, ending 1831, was £4,375. But as the average amount of fines, on renewals, for these three years was greater than the general average receipts under that head, it is considered that the average on which the whole income has been computed, should be reduced by £400, or £500, per annum. The amount of the average gross yearly income of the dean and chapter for the same three years, was £5,361; but, for similar reasons, it was expected, for the future, to be, communibus annis, about £2,500 per annum. The persons composing the corporation are a dean and four canons residentiary, who divide the nett income equally. There are also four minor canons, who receive from the funds of the dean and chapter, on an average of the three years above-mentioned, £117 8s. 1d., which is divided equally among them. They have houses assigned to them respectively, as have also the dean and two of the canons residentiary, who are bound to keep theirs in repair. Chichester is a diocese co-extensive with the county, 22 peculiars excepted.

The cathedral, erected in the 13th century, is the most conspicuous edifice in the city. As a cathedral church it is of an inferior class; but it is a very beautiful edifice, built in the usual form of a cross, with a fine tower rising from the centre, surmounted by an octagonal spire, 300 feet high, adorned with pinnacles at its base. Its style fixes the date of its erection about the middle of the 13th century. In 1721 it was struck by lightning, when several large stones were dislodged; one in particular, weighing near three quarters of a hundred weight, was thrown over the houses in West-street, without doing any damage in its descent. The fall of the spire was apprehended; but it was found, that though a considerable breach had been made about forty feet from the top, the remainder of the building was firm and compact: it was so completely repaired that no traces of the injury can now be discovered. The funds applicable to the repairs arise from dividends of money in the stocks, from the sale of timber, and from burial and monumental fees, which are sufficient for the substantial repairs. At the north-west corner of the church is a strong square tower, with four turrets and a lantern, containing a peal of eight bells. The cathedral is 410 feet in length, by 227 in breadth, along the transepts. The choir is fitted up in the most superb style. The stalls are of oak, beautifully carved and richly gilt, with the names of the dignitaries and prebendaries painted over them. In the south transept are portraits of all the kings of England, from William I. to George I. Here also is the tomb of St. Richard, bishop of the see, who is reported to have fed 3,000 people with bread intended for 901. The north transept is now used as a parish church. In the interior there are several curious ancient monumental stones and brasses. The nave is remarkable for having what appears to be a double aisle on each side; but these additional aisles are of later construction than the others, and were evidently divided into many chantries and chapels, in some of which are piscinas and traces of the altars formerly erected in them: in one of those on the north side is an ancient monument, with the effigies of a man in armour, and a lady at his feet. This is commonly supposed to be the tomb of one of the earls of Arundel, and appears to have been removed hither from some other situation; the head of the figure reposes on a coronet; and on the breast is a lion rampant, the arms of that illustrious house. Opposite to this monument is a neat tablet executed by Flaxman, and erected by public subscription to the memory of the unfortunate poet, William Collins, who was born and died in this city. There are various other monuments by Flaxman, and a statue of the late Mr. Huskisson, who was for some time member for the city, was erected a few years ago. Some parts of the cathedral which had fallen into decay have been lately restored in a judicious manner.

The parochial churches are remarkable for the poverty of their appearance. The octagonal chapel of St. John, however, is a handsome structure; so also is the new Gothic church, capable of containing 1,000 persons, which was erected without the walls in 1836. Another new church was built in 1838. Besides the Established churches, there are here places of worship for Independents, Presbyterians, Wesleyan Methodists, &c.; the Independent church was formed in 1785, the Presbyterian in 1688. There are three dissenting chapels licensed under the new marriage act.

Charities and Schools.—Among the charities, the most ancient is St. Mary's hospital, situated in St. Martin's square, parish of St. Martin. It is an old Gothic building, the date of which is unknown, but the style of its architecture is said to indicate that it was erected at least as early as the reign of Edward III. In Dallaway's History of Sussex, it is stated that the hospital was founded for the reception of nuns by William the dean, in 1173. This foundation, however, was not of long continuance; for in 1229 (13th Henry III.) letters patent were granted for the establishment of the hospital of the blessed Virgin Mary, and for annexing to it the church of St. Peter sub Castro. It was refounded by Queen Elizabeth as a corporation, consisting of one warden and five poor, to be nominated by the dean, and it is still continued on the terms, and subject to the regulations by her prescribed. The poor, who formed a part of the corporation in 1836, were 5 in number, 3 of them women and 2 men. The income of the custos or warden was £169 19s. 7d.; that of each of the poor was £30 9s. 1d. There are 3 other poor persons allowed to reside in the hospital, who receive pensions of 13s. 4d. each from the funds, with fuel and medical attendance.—In 1792, John Hardman, of the parish of St. Bride, tobacconist, bequeathed the interest of £15,500, with other funds, to the guardians or trustees of the city poor-house, to relieve the citizens in their poor's rates. In 1836, Hardman's estate produced an annual dividend of £652 10s. 6d. It appears that this valuable legacy always pays two, and generally three entire rates, in the year, the relief afforded by it being confined to the parishes, and parts of parishes, lying within the walls of the city, and to that part of the parish of St. Pancras which is within the liberties. If there should be a sufficient balance from the produce to pay the entire rate in the privileged district, the residents are altogether exempted, and the rate is called 'a dumb rate.'—There are five alms-houses, in the parish of St. Pancras, occupied by poor widows selected by the vestry, and endowed by Mrs. Martha Dear, in 1806, with an investment of £1,120 in the public funds, the annual dividend of which, amounting, in 1836, to £11 3s. 8d., is expended chiefly in supporting the alms-women, and repairing the alms-houses. The most important charity connected with this city, however, is the free school, endowed in 1702 by Oliver Whitby, Esq., for the maintenance and education of 12 boys; but from an increase in its funds, the number, in 1819, was augmented to 28, the revenue being then about £1,100. It has since been yearly on the increase, and now exceeds £1,300. This charity is, by the foundation charter, restricted to members of the church of England.—The grammar-school, or boys' gray-coat school, was founded by Bishop Story in 1497, for the education of the sons of freemen of the city; income, in 1819, £70, chiefly expended in clothing 20 poor boys, and educating them at the Chichester National school. The girls' blue-coat school was established in 1710 by private subscription; income, in 1819, £40 0s. 11⁴d., which, with the addition of subscriptions and collections at church, was applied to the education and clothing of 22 poor girls at the National school for girls in this city. In 1835 there were 29 schools, daily and Sunday, in this city, including two Sunday and daily National schools, and to these an infant school, accommodating about 250, has recently been added. There is one Bell's and one Lancasterian school very flourishing. Each of these has a girl's school belonging to it.

Trade, &c.—The trade of this town consists chiefly of malt, flour, corn, timber, coal, and wool. About two centuries ago it nearly, if not wholly, monopolized the trade of needle-making in England. This trade was principally carried on in the parish of St. Pancras, without the east gate, where, before the civil war under Charles I. almost every house was occupied by a needle-maker. In 1643 this quarter of the town was completely demolished; and though the houses were afterwards rebuilt, the trade was never perfectly restored. After the revolution manufactories of this article were established at Sheffield and Birmingham; and though their needles were far inferior in quality to those of Chichester, yet being sent to market at a lower price, they obtained a sale on that account alone. The business is now wholly extinct in this city. There is no manufactory at present in Chichester. Large quantities of corn are exported through the town for London and the West of England. Salt is made at Itchenor, about 3 miles distant; abundance of oysters are brought to the fish shambles, and prawns and lobsters are caught at Salses, about 7 miles distant, forming considerable items in its commerce with London, which is greatly facilitated by means of the Portsmouth and Arundel canal, which passes on the south side of the town. Wednesday and Saturday are the market-days; and the markets are most abundantly supplied. Every second Wednesday there is a market for cattle, horses, sheep, and hogs. This market is one of the greatest held within the precincts of any city or town in England, London excepted. Its fairs are,—May 4th, Whit-Monday, August 5th, October 10th and 20th, for horses and horned cattle. There are annual horse-races in the vicinity at Goodward park, the seat of the duke of Richmond, which attract many spectators.

Municipal government.—The first charter of incorporation seems to have been bestowed on Chichester by King Stephen, but it was ultimately governed, previous to the passing of the municipal act, in 1835, under a charter granted by James II. The government was vested in a mayor, a recorder, a bailiff, and 38 common councilmen, from among whom the mayor was chosen. Under the municipal corporations bill, the city is divided into two wards,—the Friary ward, and the Cathedral ward, with 6 aldermen and 18 councillors. The jurisdiction and liberties extend, in some directions, to a considerable distance from the walls, and in others, are almost commensurate with the space enclosed by them. Since the 23^d of Edward I. the city has sent two members to parliament,—a privilege which it still retains under the reform act. The elective franchise, while vested in the corporation, freemen, and resident householders, paying scot and lot, was enjoyed by nearly 886 voters. The number of electors under the new franchise, in 1832, was 690; in 1836, 885; and in 1837, 884. The returns for 1836 and 1837 are prepared correctly according to the registrations; but many persons being doubly registered, viz. as £10 electors, and as scot and lot or freemen, the number of persons actually entitled to vote is less than the numbers now stated. The number of electors who polled at the general election, in 1837, was 631. The boundary of the parliamentary borough was considerably enlarged round the city, especially in the western and southern precincts, and in the vicinity of the Arundel canal basin. The houses rated at £10, in 1832, inclusive of those in the extended boundary, were 518. The population, in 1831, about 8,200. The returning officer is the mayor. This city has a borough court of record; but no regular entries of the amount of debts sued for have been kept. It has also had a commission of the peace granted, and a court of quarter sessions appointed.

General description.—The city generally appears well-built, paved, watered, and drained. It is brilliantly lighted with gas. The principal streets are spacious, and contain many very large houses; but there is still room for considerable increase within the walls, which were originally very strongly built, having four gates fronting the cardinal points of the compass, and from these gates four principal streets, named after their gates, and respectively meeting in its centre nearly at right angles, where there still stands a cross erected in 1478 by Robert Storey, on his being translated from the see of Carlisle to that of Chichester. This cross, which is universally acknowledged to be one of the most elegant buildings of the kind existing in England, is an octagon in the decorated style of English architecture, and having a large central column from which spring numerous bold ribs beneath a vaulted roof. Eight pier buttresses support the superincumbent panelled wall, parapet, pinnacles, and flying buttresses, and the whole is surmounted by an open turret of modern and inferior workmanship. At one time the vicinity of this cross was used as a market-place; but the increased population requiring a more extensive area for the purpose, a large and convenient market house was erected in the North-street, on the completion of which, it was proposed to take down this cross as a nuisance. Fortunately, however, the city was exempt from the reproach of such a proceeding by the public spirit of some of the members of the corporation, who purchased several houses on the north side of the cross, in order to widen that part of the street by their demolition. The gates of the city have long ago been removed, but the walls remain nearly perfect, and were, upwards of a century ago, formed into terraces, covered with gravel, which, now shaded with rows of lofty elm-trees, afford a delightful promenade for the inhabitants, and are highly ornamental to the city. The friary, near the north gate, is an ancient building. "Every person," says Hay, "the least acquainted with ancient architecture, on viewing the friary in its present state, will be convinced that a considerable part of the building, still remaining, is of higher antiquity than the Conquest." In several places the walls are of flint, the arches elliptical, and many of the windows, and some of the door-places, have the Gothic arch enclosed in a square. The wall which separates the precinct from the city is built in the same manner, and of like materials as the city-walls, which are confessedly of Roman fabrication. The chapel, attached to this friary, was converted into a guildhall, and is still used as such.—The gaol is an old insecure building. It comprises three rooms and four small cells. The town-council are about to build a new one.—The palace of the bishop is chiefly remarkable for its extensive and admirably planned gardens. The palace itself is an ancient structure. It underwent a thorough repair in 1725, when it was considerably enlarged and improved. In digging the foundation for the new buildings, several coins of Nero and Domitian, and a curious Roman pavement, were found; from which, and other circumstances, it is conjectured that the mansion of the Roman proprietors once occupied this spot. The council-chamber is small, and by no means ornamental. Adjoining it are the assembly rooms, of spacious dimensions, wherein most of the public meetings are held. The corn exchange is an elegant building, recently erected by subscription. The theatre in South-street has some pretensions to elegance. The custom-house is in West-street. The infirmary is a beautiful building, situated on the northern slope outside the city, and surrounded with airing grounds for the patients. It was erected by subscription in 1826, and was opened in 1827. It is one of the best planned and regulated establishments in the kingdom, although on a small scale. It contains about sixty beds, and is supported at an annual expense of about £1,400.

History and Antiquities.—Chichester is a place of great antiquity. It was unquestionably a Roman station, probably Regnum. According to Camden, it was "built by Cissa the Saxon, the second king of this province taking also its name from him, for Cissacester is nothing else but 'the city of Cissa,' whose father Ælla was the first Saxon that here erected a kingdom; yet, before the Norman conquest, it was of little reputation, noted only for St. Peter's montery, and a little nunnery. After the Conquest, it was ordained that the bishops' sees should be translated out of little towns to places of greater note and resort; this city being honoured with the bishop's residence, which was before at Silsey, began to flourish. Not many years after, Bishop Ralph built here a cathedral church, which, before it was finally finished, was burnt down. Notwithstanding, by his endeavours, and King Henry I. his liberality, it was raised up again." The bishopric was valued, 26th Hen. VIII., at £698 7s. 5d. in the whole. At the Norman survey, Chichester consisted of only 238 houses, which were given to Roger de Montgomery, who was created the first Earl of Chichester, and who, it is believed, was instrumental in effecting the removal of the episcopal see of Selsea or Sussex, from Selsea, where it had been established 300 years, and which was then a considerable town to this city,—a step which proved highly beneficial to Chichester. Since that period Chichester, fortunately, perhaps, for itself, has not been the theatre of many of those events that claim a place in the pages of history, of which so large a portion is filled with calamities. The siege which it sustained under Charles I. seems to be the only circumstance worthy of particular record. Amongst the antiquities of Chichester and its vicinity, and besides those already referred to, perhaps the most interesting are the ancient camps, particularly the Broile on the west side of the city, about half-a-mile in length, and one-fourth in breadth, with a ditch and rampart. One of the most remarkable relics of the Romans discovered at this place, was an inscription preserved at Goodwood, the seat of the duke of Richmond. It was found in 1723 under the corner house on the north side of St. Martin's lane, about four feet below the surface of the ground, close to the two stone walls three feet thick, which united in an angle, and probably belonged to the temple mentioned in the inscription. The stone upon which it is engraved is of grey Sussex marble, and seems to have been about six feet long, by two and three quarters broad. The letters, beautifully and exactly drawn, are capitals from 2½ to 3 inches long. It is thus read and supplied by Gale:—Neptuno et Minervæ Templum pro Salute domus divinæ et auctoritate Tiberii Claudii Cogidubni regis legati Augusti in Britannia, Collegium fabrorum et qui in eo sodales, de suo dedicaverunt, donante aream Pudente Pudentini filio. Another inscription was found in a cellar in East-street, very near the same spot as the preceding. In making a pass at St. Pancras churchyard, in 1830, there was found a piece of fine red Samian pottery, eight inches by seven, being part of a circular basin of nine inches in diameter. Some of the figures are admirably delineated, and the drawing and character are remarkably spirited.—The celebrated Bishop Bradwardine, and the poets Collins and Hayley, were natives of this city, which gives the title of Earl to a branch of the Pelham family.

CHICHESTER RAPE, in the western part of the county of Sussex, comprehending the hundreds of Aldwick, Bosham, Box and Stockbridge, Dumpford, Easebourne, Manhood, Westbourn, and Singleton.

CHICKEREL (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Collifordtree, union of Weymouth, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 3¼ miles north-west of Weymouth. It includes the chapelry of Herringstone. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 16s. 0d.; gross income £337; tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £273 10s. Patrons, in 1835, the Earls of Darlington and Sandwich. Acres 1,780. Houses 99. Pop., in 1801, 255; in 1831, 406. A. P. £2,126. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 10s.

CHICKLADE, a parish in the hund. of Dunworth, union of Tisbury, county of Wilts; 1 mile north of Hindon. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £11 5s. 3d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, Marquis of Bath. Acres 1,000. Houses 24. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 127. A. P. £1,092. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 4s.

CHICKNEY, a parish in the hund. and union of Dunmow, county of Essex; 3 miles south-west of Thaxted. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £10; gross income £170. Patron, in 1835, H. Cranmer, Esq. Acres 680. Houses 8. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 72. A. P. £773. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 8s.

CHICKSANDS - PRIORY, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Clifton, county of Bedford; 6 miles east-east by north of Amptill, on the river Ivel. Pain de Beauchamp, about A.D. 1150, founded a priory here, of which the two quadrangles and cloisters are yet entire, and have been converted into a modern mansion. Houses 10. Pop., in 1801, 42; in 1831, 66.

CHICKWARD, PENBER'S OAK, and LILWALL, a township in the parish of Kingston, county of Hereford; 2½ miles west of Huntingdon. Houses 2. Pop., in 1801, 243; in 1831, 381. Other returns with the parish.

CHIDDEN. See HAMBLEDON.

I.

CHIDDINGFOLD, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Godalming, union of Hambledon, county of Surrey; 4¼ miles north-east of Haslemere. Living, a rectory, with Haslemere curacy, in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £26 6s. 7d.; gross income £560. Patron, the dean of Salisbury. Charities; income in 1824, £5 18s. Acres 5,590. Houses 201. Pop., in 1801, 848; in 1831, 1,095. A. P. £3,929. Poor rates, in 1838, £700.

CHIDDINGLY, or CHITTINGLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Shiplake, rape of Pevensey, union of Hailsham, county of Sussex; 5 miles north-west of Hailsham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £8; returned at £150; reported gross income £166; aggregate amount of tithes £552 10s. 8d. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Plymouth. There is an alms-house in this parish; income in 1836, £12. Acres 5,200. Houses 133. Pop., in 1801, 673; in 1831, 902. A. P. £2,344. Poor rates, in 1838, £672 7s.

CHIDDINGSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Somerden, union of Seven Oaks, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, county of Kent; 6 miles west-south-west of Tunbridge, near the source of the Medway, and in the immediate vicinity of the South Eastern railway. Living, a rectory, in the dio. of Canterbury, a peculiar valued at £28 9s. 4d.; gross income £555. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Charities; income in 1836, £14 10s. There are 3 daily schools in this parish, one of which is a National school, and contains 40 children. Acres 3,200. Houses 189. Pop., in 1801, 910; in 1831, 1,223. A. P. £4,264. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,180 16s.

CHIDEOCK, a parish in the hund. of Whitchurch-Canonicorum, union of Bridport, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; 2½ miles west of Bridport. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Whitchurch-Canonicorum, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1830; and a Roman Catholic chapel licensed in 1791. Acres 2,240. Houses 136. Pop., in 1801, 578; in 1831, 838. A. P. £4,188. Poor rates, in 1838, £341.

CHIDHAM, a parish in the hund. of Bosham, rape of Chichester, union of Westbourne, county of Sussex; 5 miles west-west by south of Chichester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £10 19s. 2d.; returned at £138 2s. 3d.; gross income £114. Patron, in 1835, W. Newland, Esq. Acres 1,200. Houses 40. Pop., in 1801, 209; in 1831, 320. A. P. £1,850. Poor rates, in 1838, £151 11s.

CHIDLOW, a township in the parish of Malpas, co.-palatine of Chester. Acres 1,400. Houses 2. Pop., in 1801, 17; in 1831, 15. A. P. £219.

CHIEVELEY. See CHEVELEY.

CHIGNAL (ST. JAMES), a parish in the hund. and union of Chelmsford, county of Essex; 3 miles north-west of Chelmsford, on the river Chelmer. Living, a rectory, united with that of Mashbury, in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £10 14s. 7d.; gross income £432. Patrons, in 1835, executors of the Rev. B. Hanbury. There were formerly in this parish two churches. Charities; income in 1837, £17 6s. 8d. Acres 930. Houses 43. Pop., in 1801, 176; in 1831, 222. A. P. £1,111. Poor rates, in 1838, £121 4s.

CHIGNAL-SMEALY, a parish in the hund. and union of Chelmsford, county of Essex; 4¼ miles north-west of Chelmsford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £5 6s. 8d.; gross income £124. Patron, in 1835, T. Austin and — Cook, alternately. Charities; income in 1837, £3 18s. Acres 1,050. Houses 10. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 75. A. P. £349. Poor rates, in 1838, £133 15s.

3 I

CHIGWELL, a parish in the hund. of Ongar, union of Epping, county of Essex; 6 miles south of Epping, bounded on the west by the river Roding. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £18; gross income £650. Patron, the prebendary of St. Pancras, in St. Paul's cathedral. A neat chapel has recently been built on Buckhurst hill, near Epping, in this parish. The Independents have a chapel at Chigwell. In 1629 Archbishop Harsnet erected two school-houses here, in which the youth of this and the adjoining parishes might be taught Latin, Greek, reading, writing, and arithmetic. Income in 1837, £340; besides interest of three £100 exchequer bills. Salary of English master £105; of grammar master £20. Minor charities; income in 1837, £66 6s. 2d.; besides interest of £132 three per cent. consols, and a rent-charge of £4 for an alms-house. A fair is held here on September 30th for hiring servants. Acres 5,360. Houses 324. Pop., in 1801, 1,351; in 1831, 1,815. A. P. £13,807. Poor rates, in 1838, £644.

CHILBOLTON, a parish in the hund. of Buddlegate, union of Andover, Fawley division of the county of Southampton; 4 miles south-south-west of Andover, near the Andover canal. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Winchester, a peculiar; rated at £26 9s. 4½d.; gross income £467. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. Charities; income in 1825, £6 5s. Acres 2,830. Houses 64. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 375. A. P. £2,309. Poor rates, in 1838, £142 7s.

CHILCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Fawley, union of Winchester, Fawley division of the county of Southampton; 2 miles south-east of Winchester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, a peculiar; rated at £8 6s. 8d.; gross income £169. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. Acres 2,390. Houses 36. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 192. A. P. £1,908. Poor rates, in 1838, £169 6s.

CHILCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Uggescombe, union of Bridport, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 4 miles north-east of Bridport. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £4 11s. 8d.; gross income £53. Patrons, in 1835, devisees of the Rev. E. Foyle. Acres 860. Houses 6. Pop., in 1801, 23; in 1831, 35. A. P. £479.

CHILCOMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Chewton, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; 6½ miles north-north-east of Shepton-Mallet. Living, a perpetual curacy, and one of seven peculiars belonging to the dean of Wells; gross income £129. The church has been recently rebuilt. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Tooker. In 1681 Henry Werreit charitably laid out the sum of £100 in the purchase of four per cents. stock, the income to be applied in apprenticing poor children of this parish. There is here also a benefaction of £32 7s. 6d., the interest of which is given to the poor. Acres 1,140. Houses 96. Pop., in 1801, 348; in 1831, 487. A. P. £2,097. Poor rates, in 1838, £190 7s.

CHILCOTE, a chapelry in the parish of Burton-upon-Trent, Derby; 6½ miles south-west of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. Acres 1,300. Houses 38. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 191. A. P. £2,209. Poor rates, in 1838, £42 18s.

CHILDERDITCH, a parish in the hund. of Chafford, union of Bellericay, county of Essex; 3 miles south of Brentwood, in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £8; gross income £162. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £164 5s. 4d. Patron, in 1831, Lord Petre. There is a Sunday National school here. Acres 900. Houses 38. Pop., in 1801, 171; in 1831, 251. A. P. £1,965. Poor rates, in 1838, £101 5s.

CHILDERLEY, a parish in the hund. of Chesterton, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 7½ miles west-west by north of Cambridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £9s. 2d.; gross income £20. The church is in ruins. Patron, in 1835, N. Calvert, Esq. Acres 1,160. Houses 17. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 96. A. P. £1,080. Poor rates, in 1838, £23 7s.

CHILDER-THORNTON. See THORNTON-CHILDER.

CHILD-OKEFORD, a parish in the hund. of Red Lane, union of Sturminster, Sherborne division of the county of Dorset; 5½ miles north-west of Blandford Forum. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7; gross income £413; net income £316. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £250. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. L. North. Acres 2,100. Houses 125. Pop., in 1801, 498; in 1831, 612. A. P. £2,765. Poor rates, in 1838, £370 14s.

CHILDREY, a parish in the hund. and union of Wantage, county of Berks; 2½ miles west of Wantage, close on the Berks and Wilts canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £5 17s. 7d.; gross income £804. Tithes commuted in 1772. Patrons, the master and fellows of Corpus Christi college, Oxford. There is an allotment of land in this parish vested in the churchwardens for behoof of the poor; income, in 1837, £16. Minor charities £2 17s. 10d. There are other charities at schools in this parish, the trusteeship and management of which are vested in the provost and fellows of Queen's college, Oxford; but the state of these have not been inquired into by the charity commissioners, in consequence of clause 16, in acts 5 and Will. IV. c. 71. Acres 2,850. Houses 106. Pop., in 1801, 402; in 1831, 562. A. P. £3,036. Poor rates, in 1838, £409 14s.

CHILDS-ERCALL, a parish in the Drayton division of the hund. of Bradford, union of Market Drayton, county of Salop; 7 miles north-west of Newport, east of the river Tern. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; valued at £20; gross income £72. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £729 19s. 6d. Patrons, in 1835, the trustees of Sir C. Corbett. Acres 3,340. Houses 77. Pop., in 1801, 466; in 1831, 516. A. P. £5,116. Poor rates, in 1837, £168 2s.

CHILDS-WICKHAM, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Kiftgate, union of Evesham, county of Gloucester; 5 miles west of Chipping Camden. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; a peculiar, rated at £7 16s. 10d., returned at £93 8s.; gross income £105. Tithes commuted in 1763. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. Pruett. Acres 2,040. Houses 91. Pop., in 1801, 351; in 1831, 415. A. P. £2,289. Poor rates, in 1838, £14 18s.

CHILDWALL, a parish in the hund. and union of West Derby, co-palatine of Lancaster; 4½ miles south-west of Prescot; intersected by the Liverpool and Manchester railway. It includes the townships of Allerton, Childwall, Halewood, Spike, Little Woolton, and Much Woolton, and the chapels of Garston, Hale, and Wavertree. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £5s 11s. 8d., returned at £120 18s. 6d.; gross income £467. Patron, the bishop of Chester. That profound critic, Jeremiah Markland, was a native of this parish. Acres 14,580. Houses 1,260. A. P. £42,920. Pop., in 1801, 4,194; in 1831, 7,706. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,142 2s. Acres of the township 880. Houses 23. A. P. £2,336. Pop., in 1801, 152; in 1831, 159. Poor rates, in 1838, £133 14s.

CHILFORD HUNDRED, in the south-east part of the county of Cambridge. Area 21,430 acres. Houses 1,063. Pop., in 1831, 5,310.

CHILFROOM, a parish in the hund. of Tollerford, union of Dorchester, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; 5 miles north-west of Stratton, on the river Frome. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £5; gross income £180. Patrons, in 1835, Lords Sherborne and Poltimore alternately. There is a free school at Toller Porcorum, an adjoining parish, to which the poor of Chilfroom have the privilege of sending their children; but as the distance is considerable, they are seldom sent. A number of Bibles are distributed at intervals to the poor of this parish, in terms of the wills of John Hall, bishop of Bristol, and Dr. Sloper. Acres 970. Houses 20. A. P. £741. Pop., in 1801, 81; in 1831, 111. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 5s.

CHILHAM, a parish in the hund. of Felborough, lathe of Scray, union of East Ashford, county of Kent; 6½ miles west-south-west of Canterbury, and west of the river Stour. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Moldash, in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £795; nett income £698. The church is cruciform, with an embattled tower, and contains a splendid mausoleum of the Colebrookes. Patron, in 1835, J. B. Wildman, Esq. Here are 2 daily and 1 Sunday National schools. Chilham was formerly a market-town, and it has still an annual fair or cattle-market on the 8th of November. The castle is a very ancient fabric. Its walls, venerably mantled with ivy, are from 10 to 12 feet thick; but greatly dilapidated. At a short distance, towards the south-east, is Chilham Park, the seat of J. B. Wildman, Esq., also a venerable edifice, but singular in its form. Acres 4,230. Houses 190. A. P. £6,951. Pop., in 1801, 807; in 1831, 1,140. Poor rates, in 1838, £476 3s.

CHILHAMTON. See NEWTON (SOUTH).

CHILLAND. See MARTYBORTHY.

CHILLENDEEN, a parish in the hund. and union of Easry, lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent; 3½ miles south-south-east of Wingham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5; returned at £80; gross income £130. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 180. Houses 28. A. P., with Knowlton, £809. Pop., in 1801, 122; in 1831, 154. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 5s.

CHILLESFORD, a parish in the hund. and union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; 3 miles north-west of Oxford, at an estuary near Oxford Raven. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 3s. 4d.; gross income £300. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £285 4s. 6d. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Smear. Charities; income, in 1829, £5. Acres 1,420. Houses 16. A. P. £1,514. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 179. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 1s.

CHILLINGHAM, anciently CHEVELINGHAM, a small parish in the eastern division of Glendale ward, union of Glendale, county of Northumberland; 4½ miles east of Wooler, on the river Till. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £4, returned at £73; gross income £340. Patron, the bishop of Durham. It comprehends the townships of Chillingham, Hibburn, and Newton. In the church there is a beautifully raised tomb of alabaster, curiously ornamented over one of the ancient family of the Greys, barons of Wark. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Acres 4,980. Houses 82. A. P. £4,978. Pop., in 1801, 451; in 1831, 477. Poor rates, in 1837, £206 17s. Houses of the township 36. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 199. A. P. £2,403. Poor rates, in 1837, £39 14s.

—CHILLINGHAM CASTLE, belonging to the earl of Tankerville, stands on a fine eminence, surrounded by trees. It is a square heavy structure of Elizabethan architecture, four stories high in the wings, and three in the centre. There is here a marble chimney-piece, in sawing which, a live toad of immense size was found. The nidus in which it lay has been filled up with cement; but a painting of this wonderful phenomenon is preserved in the castle. There are here also good portraits of Bacon, Burleigh, Buckingham, King Charles I., and James II. The castle stands in a very large and beautiful park, which is tastefully skirted with plantations. On a rocky eminence, at the head of the park, is a circular double intrenchment called Ros castle. This was undoubtedly a fort of the ancient Britons; for Ros, both in the old Celtic, and in the Gaelic, signifies a promontory. Ros-lin castle, also, stands on the point of a rocky prominence. Chillingham Park contains a large herd of deer, and it is celebrated for the only uncontaminated breed of wild cattle in the kingdom. This breed is called the white Scottish bison. There is a vague tradition that they were originally enclosed from the Northumbrian or Caledonian forests, in the reign of King John or Henry III., when the park was first surrounded; but their existence here has long been considered an interesting problem of natural history. The general opinion is, that they are remnants of the ancient breed of wild oxen which in earlier periods pastured over the country, particularly its northern parts. The herd consists at present of about 80 individuals, and they possess all the characters of the wild species, by hiding their young, feeding by night, remaining in security in the day, and moving their positions when any person approaches, even at a great distance. In some parts of the park they will, however, allow persons to come within a moderate distance, when they snuff the wind, and if alarmed retreat with great velocity, taking advantage of the irregularities of the ground, by which they are soon concealed from sight. They are described as beautifully shaped, having short legs and a straight back, and their horns differing from those of ordinary cattle; the muzzle of the animal is brown, the ears are red, and the body is of a pure white. When any of their number become old or diseased, the rest of the herd will set upon it, and gore it to death; and in addition to all these characteristics of wild cattle, they appear to be of a species quite distinct from the English oxen, although this has not before met with the attention of naturalists.

CHILLINGTON, a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Petherton, union of Chard, county of Somerset; 3¼ miles west-west by north of Crewkerne. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; certified at £15; gross income £60. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £237. Patron, in 1835, Earl Poulett. Acres 830. Houses 63. A. P. £1,500. Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 311. Poor rates, in 1838, £107 2s.

CHILLINGTON. See BREWOD.

CHILMARK, a parish in the hund. of Dunworth, union of Tisbury, county of Wilts; 4 miles west of Hindon. In includes the tything of Ridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £19 13s. 4d.; reported gross income £450; aggregate amount of tithes £473 7s. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Pembroke. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. A fair is held here on July 30th, for cattle, sheep, horses, swine, and cheese. Acres 3,210. Houses 107. A. P. £2,035. Pop., in 1801, 406; in 1831, 507. Poor rates, in 1838, £308 10s.

CHILSON, a chapelry in the parish of Charlbury, Oxfordshire; 5 miles south of Chipping-Norton, on the river Evenlode. It includes Shorthampton and Padlicote. Acres 1,010. Houses 44. Pop., in 1801, 242; in 1831, 251. Poor rates, in 1838, £308 6s.

CHILSWELL, a liberty in the parish of Cumner, Berks; 5 miles north-north-west of Abingdon. House 1. Pop., in 1801, 7; in 1831, 12. Other returns with the parish.

CHILSWORTH, a hamlet in the parish of Great Milton, Oxfordshire; on the river Thame. Acres 1,100. Houses 15. A. P. £2,647. Pop., in 1801, 35; in 1831, 85. Poor rates, in 1838, £107 15s.

CHILTERN-HILLS, a ridge of chalk and flint hills extending from Henley-upon-Thames in Oxfordshire, through the middle of Buckinghamshire to Tring in Hertfordshire, dividing the latter from Bedfordshire. But this ridge chiefly consists in and constitutes the high land in Bucks, in the centre of which county it bounds the rich vale of Aylesbury on the south. The average breadth of the Chiltern-hills is stated to be from 15 to 20 miles. The most elevated points in the ridge are Wendover-hill, in Bucks, 905 feet; and Kingsworth-hill, on the confines of Bedfordshire and Herts, 904 feet. The Grand Junction canal crosses this ridge near Tring, being there 389 feet above the level of the sea. The Chiltern-hills are the central and principal part of a most important range of hills, extending, according to some, even from Salisbury plain, and running in a north easterly direction, through Berks, Oxford, Bucks, and Bedford, to Cambridge and Suffolk, separating the waters of the Ivel, the Southern Ouse, the Nene, and other rivers that have their embouchure in the Wash, from those of the Western Colne, the Lea, Chelmer, Blackwater, Stour, &c., that fall into the Thames, or the sea, on the Suffolk coast. The Chiltern ridge, though not particularly rich in soil, has been rendered extremely productive from the sedulous attention given to the cultivation and improvement of the land. Every variety of materials that will either constitute or increase manure is carefully collected, and judiciously applied. Improved modes of culture are readily adopted, and the general management of the land is praiseworthy and unexceptionable. The soil is principally composed of chalk, strong clay, and light loam upon gravel. It is applied chiefly to the growth of wheat, barley, oats, and beans. In some places there are considerably extensive woodlands, and the higher eminences command beautiful prospects. Ancient historians allege that the whole of the Chiltern district was once a forest, in which numerous banditti harboured, and it is said that, "to put these down, and to protect the inhabitants of the neighbouring parts from their depredations, an officer was appointed under the crown, called the steward of the Chiltern hundreds." At all events, from time immemorial this district, which belongs to the crown, has given title to the now merely nominal and fictitious office of stewards of the Chiltern hundreds, which is retained to serve a convenient purpose, namely, to enable members of parliament, on whom the office may be intentionally conferred, to vacate their seats, when they desire it, but cannot do so otherwise than by accepting the stewardship of the Chiltern hundreds, as a nominal office under the crown. The strictness of the law, which prevents a member, not otherwise disqualified, from vacating his seat, is thus evaded by a crown appointment, which itself disqualifies the member, and vacates the seat. This nominal office may be withheld, but is seldom refused. Indeed, it has been frequently granted to three or four members in a week; but it is productive neither of honour nor emolument. Though a fiction now, the Chiltern hundreds were once a veritable locality, in which the knight of the shire, who was averse to entering parliament, might take refuge, and be secure from the pursuit of the sheriff; who at times had occasion to state in his returns that, "having grievously assaulted my bailiffs, in contempt of the king, his crown, and dignity, and absconded to the Chiltern hundreds, into which liberty, not being shire land or guildable, I cannot enter, I am unable to make any other execution of the writ, as far as he is concerned." But when once the member had taken his seat in the house, the Chiltern hundreds were no longer a sanctuary to him. There are three Chiltern hundreds, Desborough, Stoke, and Burnham. The office is in the gift of the chancellor of the exchequer.

CHILTERN-ALL-SAINTS, a parish in the hund. of Heytesbury, union of Warminster, county of Wilts; 4 miles east-north-east of Heytesbury. Living, a discharged vicarage united with that of Chiltern-St.-Mary, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 0s. 10d.; gross income £325. Patrons, the bishop and dean and chapter of Salisbury alternately. Acres 4,500. Houses 79. A. P., including that of Chiltern-St.-Mary, £4,657. Pop., in 1801, 314; in 1831, 382. Poor rates, in 1838, £216.

CHILTERN-ST.-MARY, a parish in the same hund. and union; on a branch of the Wiley river. Living, a curacy united to the vicarage of Chiltern-All-Saints. Acres 2,150. Houses 33. Pop., in 1801, 155; in 1831, 183. Poor rates, in 1838, £113 19s.

CHILTHORNE-DOMER, a parish in the hund. of Stone, union of Yeovil, county of Somerset; 2 miles south of Ilchester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £5 7s. 1d.; gross income £235. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. John Bayley. Acres 1,190. Houses 44. A. P. £2,772. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 228. Poor rates, in 1838, £146 5s.

CHILTINGTON (EAST), a chapelry in the parish of Westmeston, Sussex; 4 miles north-west of Lewes, on a branch of the river Ouse. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Westmeston. Charities; income in 1836, £2 10s. Houses 35. A. P. £1,645. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 258. Poor rates, in 1838, £58 15s.

CHILTINGTON (WEST), a parish in the hund. of West Easwith, rape of Arundel, union of Thakeham, county of Sussex; 7½ miles north-west of Steyning. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £12 16s. 10½d.; gross income £550; nett income £291. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £775 11s. 5d. Patron, in 1835, Lord Abergavenny. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 3,600. Houses 102. A. P. £1,331. Pop., in 1801, 556; in 1831, 718. Poor rates, in 1838, £465 3s.

CHILTON, a parish in the hund. of Compton, union of Wantage, county of Berks; 3¼ miles north of East Halsey. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio.

of Oxford; rated at £13 8s. 4d.; gross income £400. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Heneage. Charities; income in 1837, upwards of £11. Acres 1,500. Houses 50. A. P. £1,357. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 274. Poor rates, in 1838, £227 17s.

CHILTON WITH EASINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Ashendon, union of Thame, county of Buckingham; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Thames. Living, a donative in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; certified at £10 8s., returned at £80; gross income £67. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Ricketts. There is an alms-house at Studley, county of Oxford, founded, in 1639, by Sir George Croke, knight, and endowed by him with a rent charge of £90, issuing out of the estate of Easington in this parish. The foundation and endowment are chiefly for behoof of the poor of Chilton and Studley. Besides this charity, Almond's benefaction to the poor of this parish produced, in 1833, £27 10s. Minor charities £2 15s., besides 5 tenements occupied by poor families. Chilton is deserving of notice as the birth-place of the founder of the Studley charity, Sir George Croke, the patriot judge. This gentleman, who steadily opposed the levying of ship-money without the authority of parliament, in the reign of Charles I., was descended from the ancient family of Le Blount, who, being attached to the Lancastrians during the war of the rival houses, were obliged to conceal themselves under a fictitious name (Croke) till the accession of Henry VII., but afterwards retained it as a memorial of past danger. Sir George filled the office of Lord-chief-justice of the King's Bench many years; and during the perilous time which preceded the civil war, he performed the duties of his high station with the greatest integrity. He died in 1641. In the church are some ornamental monuments of the Croke or Blount family. Easington is a considerable hamlet of this parish, and formerly had a chapel of ease. Chilton house here was the seat of the Carters. Acres 2,080. Houses 70. A. P. £3,633. Pop., in 1801, 316; in 1831, 314. Poor rates, in 1838, £383 11s.

CHILTON-TRINITY, a parish in the hund. of North Petherton, union of Bridgewater, county of Somerset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north of Bridgewater, near the mouth of the Parrot river. Living, a discharged rectory united with the vicarage of Bridgewater. Tithes, exclusive of the hamlets of Idstoke and Beer, commuted in 1839; rent charge £193 10s. 6d. Anciently this parish was a hund. of itself. It is divided into the manors of East Chilton, West Chilton or Chilton-Trivet, Idstoke-Inverne, and Hunstille. Acres 1,250. Houses 7. A. P. £3,835. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 49. Poor rates, in 1838, £51 15s.

CHILTON, a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Sudbury, county of Suffolk; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Sudbury, bounded on the west by the river Stour. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £5 6s. 5d.; returned at £130; gross income £150. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £290. Patron, in 1835, Admiral Windham. Acres 1,090. Houses 23. A. P. with Great Waldingfield. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 108. Poor rates, in 1838, £130.

CHILTON, a township in the parish of Merrington, co.-palatine of Durham; 9 miles south-south-east of Durham; close upon the Great North of England railway, and connected with Stockton and Durham by a branch of the Clarence railway. Acres 2,350. Houses 31. A. P. £1,871. Pop., in 1801, 176; in 1831, 168. Poor rates, in 1838, £48 17s.

CHILTON-CANTILO, a parish in the hund. of Houndsborough, Berwick, and Coker, though locally situated in the hund. of Horethorne, union of Yeovil, county of Somerset; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Ilchester, on the river Yeo. It includes the chapelry of Nether-Adber. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 11s. 5d.; gross income £268. Patron, in 1835, John Bragge. In 1823, £50 were invested in the savings' bank here by William Toogood, the interest of which to be given to the poor. Acres 540. Houses 16. A. P. £1,868. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 127.

CHILTON-UPON-POLDEN, a hamlet in the parish of Moorlinch, Somerset; 5 miles east-north-east of Bridgewater. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Wells, and dio. of Bath and Wells; gross income £19. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. J. Bowden. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £70. Here is a Sunday National school. Acres 1,790. Houses 65. A. P. £3,314. Pop., in 1801, 310; in 1831, 423. Poor rates, in 1838, £120 1s.

CHILTON-FOLIAT, a parish partly in the hund. of Kintbury-Eagle, county of Berks, but chiefly in the hund. of Kinwardstone, union of Hungerford, county of Wilts; 2 miles north-west of Hungerford, on the river Kennet. It includes the tything of Leverton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £14 8s. 9d.; gross income £1,047. Tithes commuted in 1809. Patron, in 1835, E. W. L. Popham. Acres 3,740. Houses 136. A. P. £3,379. Pop., in 1801, 616; in 1831, 761. Poor rates, in 1838, £516 10s.

CHILVERS-COTON, a parish in the hund. of Hemlingford, Atherstone division, union of Nuneaton, county of Warwick; about a mile south-west of Nuneaton, intersected by the Coventry canal. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £7 4s., returned at £81; gross income £106. Tithes commuted in 1764. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The free-school, and other charities of the Newdigate family, possessed by this parish, including shares in the Coventry canal, realized, in 1833, an income of £250, expended in liberal distributions of money, clothing, &c. to the poor, and in educating their children, of whom there were, at that time, 92 boys, and about 40 girls, and in 1838, 83 boys and 67 girls, at the free-school, who were all taught the ordinary branches of education on Dr. Bell's system; the girls being also taught sewing and knitting: 12 boys and 12 girls are entirely clothed every year out of the proceeds of this charity. The other charities connected with this parish are, the towns lands; rents in 1834, payable to the churchwardens, £8 5s. 8d. Church money; income in 1834, £3 5s. 4d. Minor benefactions £1 10s. Besides the free-school, there are here two Sunday and daily, and two Sunday National schools; a Wesleyan Methodist school; and a Roman Catholic day, night, and Sunday school, instituted in 1837, at which 50 children are taught the ordinary branches of education. In all, there were 435 children receiving instruction at the schools in this parish in 1838.—Chilvers-Coton is a ribbon-weaving parish in connection with the county of the city of Coventry. In 1838 the ribbon-manufacture here seems to have been on the increase, while some of the looms were unemployed from want of weavers. The returns of the commissioners in their report on this parish, however, are chiefly mixed up with those on Nuneaton and Coventry: which see. There was at one time here an Augustine priory dedicated to the Virgin Mary, which, at the dissolution, was valued at £122 8s. 6d. per annum. In 1538 it was granted to Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk; and, in the reign of Elizabeth, it was sold to Sir Edmund Anderson, who totally demolished the whole fabric, and out of the ruins erected Ardbury hall, the splendid seat of the Newdigate family. Attached to the Newdigate estate, is a nondescript extent of manor, termed the manor of St. John of Jerusalem, for which the present proprietor regularly deputes a keeper. Chilvers-Coton includes the hamlets of Grist and Ardbury. Acres 3,730. Houses 523. A. P. £6,020. Pop., in 1801, 1,877; in 1831, 2,494. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,038 4s.

CHILWELL, a hamlet in the parish of Attenborough, Nottinghamshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Nottingham. There are two daily schools here. Acreage with the hamlet of Toton 1,930. Houses 184. A. P. £3,523. Pop., in 1801, 638; in 1831, 892. Poor rates, in 1838, £364 10s.

CHILWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Mansbridge, union of South Stoneham, Fawley division of the county of Southampton; 4 miles south-east of Romsey. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, not in charge; rated in the parliamentary returns at £12; gross income £33. Patron, in 1833, J. Fleming, Esq. Charities; in 1825, a cottage with garden, inhabited by a poor person. Acres 1,400. Houses 21. A. P. £556. Pop., in 1801, 132; in 1831, 150. Poor rates, in 1838, £66 1s.

CHILWORTH, or ST. MARTHA, a chapelry, extra-parochial and extra-judicial, in the hund. of Blackheath, county of Surrey; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by east of Guildford, north of the river Wey. Living, a donative curacy, in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; gross income £25. Patron, in 1835, W. Tinkler, Esq. Acres 930. Houses 37. A. P. £1,490. Pop., in 1801, 112; in 1831, 195. Poor rates, in 1838, £153 16s.

CHIMNELL. See HOLLYBURST.

CHIMNEY, a hamlet in the parish of Bampton, Oxford. Acres 620. Houses 7. A. P. £884. Pop., in 1801, 25; in 1831, 42. See BAMPTON.

CHINEHAM, a tything in the parish of Monk's-Sherborne, Southampton. Acres 520. Pop., in 1811, 32; in 1821, 41.

CHINGFORD, a parish in the hund. of Waltham, union of Epping, county of Essex; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of St. Paul's, London, bounded on the west by the river Lea. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £14 5s. 5d.; gross income £595. Patron, in 1835, J. Heathcote, Esq. Charities; income in 1834, £22. Acres 3,000. Houses 194. A. P. £6,426. Pop., in 1801, 612; in 1831, 963. Poor rates, in 1838, £408 15s.

CHINLEY, BUGSWORTH, and BROWN-SIDE, a chapelry in the parish of Glossop, Derby; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Chapel-in-le-Frith. There is an Independent chapel here; the church was formed in 1662, and originally belonged to the Rev. William Bagshaw, an eminent nonconformist divine, who was called the "Apostle of the Peak." The Wesleyan Methodists have also a church here, organized in 1808. There is here a Sunday and a daily National school, besides a school connected with the British and Foreign school society, attended by 100 scholars. Acreage with the parish. Houses 189. A. P. £3,838. Pop., in 1801, 738; in 1831, 993. Poor rates, in 1838, £267 5s.

CHINNOCK (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Houndsborough, Berwick, and Coker, union of Yeovil, county of Somerset; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Yeovil. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 7s. 8½d., returned at £130; gross income £180. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The charities here consist chiefly of the charity lands; income in 1823, £29 13s. 4d.; expended in the support of a free-school, and in general relief to the poor. There is also a small benefaction to the second poor; income in 1823, £4. Acres 2,090. Houses 121. A. P. £2,810. Pop., in 1801, 505; in 1831, 673. Poor rates, in 1838, £243 15s.

CHINNOCK (MIDDLE), a parish in the hund. of Houndsborough, Berwick, and Coker, union of Yeovil, county of Somerset; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Crewkerne, on the Parret river. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £7 9s. 7d.; gross income £230. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Ilchester. With West Chinnock there are 2 Sunday National schools here. Acres 280. Houses 26. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, with Chinnock West, 523. Poor rates, in 1838, £72 10s.

CHINNOCK (WEST), a parish in the same hund., union of Yeovil. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Chisleborough, not in charge. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £160 4s. 8d. The only charity possessed by this parish is a benefaction of Sir John Strangway to the poor; interest in 1823, £16. Acres 600. Houses 92. A. P. with Chinnock Middle, £2,466. Pop., in 1801, 327; in 1831 returned with Chinnock Middle. Poor rates in 1837, £184 4s.

CHINNOR, a parish in the hund. of Lewknor, union of Wycombe, Oxfordshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Thame. It includes the liberty of Henton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £26 0s. 5d.; gross income £541. Patron, in 1835, Sir James Musgrave. There is an Independent church here, formed in 1802. Acres 2,760. Houses 239. A. P. £2,277. Pop., in 1801, 667; in 1831, 1,009. Poor rates, in 1838, £869.

CHIPCHASE. See GUNNERTON.

CHIPPENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Staploe, union of Newmarket, county of Cambridge; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Newmarket. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £11 12s. 6d.; gross income £243. Patron, in 1835, J. Sharp, Esq. Lord Orford instituted a charity here for the education of poor children; income in 1837, £20, at which time there were 40 scholars in attendance. There are various other small benefactions, the income of which amounted, in 1837, to £24 17s. 3d. Acres 4,500. Houses 125. A. P. £3,347. Pop., in 1801, 525; in 1831, 665. Poor rates, in 1838, £441 3s.

CHIPPENHAM, a liberty in the parish and hund. of Burnham, county of Buckingham; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Windsor. It forms part of the ancient demesnes of the crown.

CHIPPENHAM HUNDRED in the north and north-west of the county of Wilts. Area 65,160 acres. Houses 3,929. Pop., in 1831, 20,460.

CHIPPENHAM, a parish, borough, and market-town, in the hund. and union of Chippenham, county of Wilts; 93 miles west of London; situated on the south bank of the Avon, on the great road from London to Bath. It is intersected by the Great Western railway, and the Wilts and Berks canal. It includes the tythings of Allington, Tytherton, Stanley, and Nethermore. Acres 9,100. Houses 765. A. P. £20,143. Pop., in 1801, 3,336; in 1831, 4,333. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,098 7s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Chippenham, by the poor-law commissioners. The Chippenham poor-law union comprehends 29 parishes, embracing an area of 88 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 19,265. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £12,489. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,984. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Tythot-on-Lucas, in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 19s. 4d.; gross income £321; tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £322 15s. 10d. The church, in the centre of the town, is a very ancient Gothic structure, consisting of a nave, south aisle, chancel, and chapel, with a tower and spire at the west end. Diversified in style, it has evidently been erected at different periods. There are several curious monuments in the church. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ's-church, Oxford. The Independents and Baptists have places of worship here; the Independent church was formed in 1770, the Baptist in 1804. There is also a Tabernacle, licensed under the new marriage act. There are 13 daily schools, 2 of which are Sunday and daily National schools. The charities consist of Chippenham church lands; income, in 1884, £110 ls. The charity school, founded and endowed by Richard Scott in 1661; further endowed, in 1733, by a descendant of the founder, and subsequently with other small gifts; in consideration of all which, 12 poor boys were taught, in 1834, the ordinary branches of education.—Boy's charity to poor clothiers; income, in 1834, £30.—Gale's benefaction to the poor, £20.—Sir Francis Popham's charity to poor freemen, £26.—Henry Smith's charity to the poor, £18 2s.—Wick's, £18 10s.—Cock's estate for the support of a girls' school, £8; and Colborne's gift of £1,000 three per cent. consols; the dividends to be applied to the support of freemen and their widows.

The town is pleasantly situated on the south bank of the Avon, by which it is nearly surrounded, and over which is a fine stone-bridge of 22 arches, which has been widened of late years, and constitutes a fine feature in the approach from the north road. The streets, which have outgrown the old borough, are lighted with gas, watched, and paved, under an act obtained in 1834. There were, some years ago, a number of woollen manufactories here; but, in 1838, there remained only one; the weavers being in great distress. Out of 86 persons here depending on this manufacture, 55 were unemployed; the earnings of the remainder averaging 8s. 2½d. per week. A silk-factory had been recently established, containing 56 looms. For the two previous years this factory had also been in a declining state; 12 looms and 30 women weavers only being employed, earning 3s. a-week throughout the year. No children could get employment. There is an extensive flour-mill here. The town is a great thoroughfare on the Bath and Bristol roads, and in the line of the Wilts and Berks canal and of the Great Western railway. As its name denotes, it has long been celebrated for its markets. The market-day has recently been changed from Saturday to Friday; and the fairs are held on May 17th, June 22d, October 29th, and December 11th for hogs, sheep, horned cattle, and horses. A fair was also originated, in 1836, for the sale of wool. There are branches of the North Wilts, and of the Wilts and Dorset banking companies, and a saving bank, here. There is also a literary and scientific institution. Chippenham is a borough by prescription, and by charters in the reign of Mary, as well as by the reform act. It was governed by a bailiff and 12 burgesses, and returned, as it still does, two members to parliament. The right of voting was burghage tenor. The returning officer was the bailiff, and the greatest number of electors polled within 30 years, previous to 1832, was 126. Assessed taxes, in 1831, £1,057 8s. 7½d. The several parishes of Chippenham, Hardenhuish, and Langley-Burrell, and the extra-parochial space called Pewisham, formerly the forest of Chippenham, are included within the borough by the new boundaries act; the new borough thus extending far beyond the old in every direction. Under the corporations' reform act, the municipal borough has 4 aldermen and 12 councillors; but it is not divided into wards. Income of the borough, in 1837, 179 4s. 1d. Population of the new and extended borough, in 1831, 5,270. Number of electors registered in 1836, 239; in 1837, 240. Number who polled at the election of 1832, 311. The election of 1837 was not contested. The petty-sessions for Calne and Chippenham division are held here, and a court of requests is also held for the recovery of debts not exceeding 40s. Its jurisdiction extends over the hundreds of Chippenham, Calne, and North Damerham, and the liberty of Coraham. Chippenham is a place of great antiquity, and under the West Saxon kings, was one of the first cities in the island. "In those times," says Camden, "it was the country house of the Saxon kings, which King Alfred, by his will, bequeathed to his younger daughter. Now there is nothing worth seeing but the church." In 1474, Maud Heath caused a paved path or causeway to be formed, from Chippenham cliff, through the town to Wick hill, a distance of 4 miles. At different parts of this causeway upright stones are erected, each of which bears inscriptions. There are in the vicinity of the town two chalybeate springs, formerly celebrated, but now altogether neglected, except by the poorer classes, who still continue to use one of them occasionally, and sometimes derive great benefit, the waters having lost none of their medicinal qualities, though they be now seldom visited by the rich and fashionable. The ancient abbeys of Stanley and Lacock are within 3 miles of Chippenham. Stanley abbey is converted into a farm house. Lacock is the seat of the Talbots.

CHIPPING, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Blackburn, union of Clitheroe, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7½ miles east of Garstang; on a branch of the river Hodder. It includes the townships of Chipping, and Thornley with Wheatley. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £36 13s. 4d., returned at £113 6s. 4d.; gross income £102; tithes commuted in 1839; nett amount £375 18s. 10d. Patron, the bishop of Ripon. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here. In 1683, John Brabin bequeathed certain properties for the support of a free school here, and for apprenticing the scholars, and other purposes of general charity; income, in 1826, £60. At this time, 50 boys and girls were instructed, 16 of the boys receiving an annual suit of blue clothes. There are here an estate, the annual rents of which are devoted to the apprenticeship of poor children; income, in 1826, £61; besides charities for the relief of the poor; income, in 1826, £11 11s.: for behoof of the alms-houses and free school, £68; and for the support of under master in free school, £4 9s.; besides a few other unimportant charities. In 1838 there were 2 cotton mills, employing 118 hands, within this parish. Fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, St. Bartholomew, and August 24th for cattle. Acres 8,990. Houses 311. A. P. £6,865. Pop., in 1801, 1,214; in 1831, 1,850. Poor rates, in 1838, £523 13s. Acres of the township, 6,010. Houses 224. A. P. £4,449. Pop., in 1801, 827; in 1831, 1,334. Poor rates, in 1838, £378 3s.

CHIPPINGHURST, a hamlet in the parish of Cuddesden, Oxfordshire. Acres 140. Houses 4. A. P. £696. Pop., in 1801, 22; in 1831, 30. Poor rates, in 1838, £36 ls.

CHIPPING-NORTON. See NORTON-CHIPPING.

CHIPPING-ONGAR. See ONGAR-CHIPPING.

CHIPPING-SODBURY. See SODBURY-CHIPPING.

CHIPPING-WARDEN HUNDRED, in the south-western part of the county of Northampton. Area 21,370 acres. Houses 972. Pop., in 1831, 4,697.

CHIPPING-WARDEN, a parish in the above hundred, union of Banbury; 6 miles north-north-east of Banbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £26 10s.; gross income £282. Patroness, in 1835, Lady S. North. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. The only important charity connected with this parish is the town-estate; income, in 1830, £75, expended in support of the poor, under deduction of expenses of repairing church-bells, &c. Acres 2,440. Houses 103. A. P. £2,762. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 500. Poor rates, in 1838, £379 8s.

CHIPPING-WYCOMBE. See WYCOMBE-CHIPPING.

CHIPSTABLE, a parish in the hund. of Williton and Free-Manners, union of Wellington, county of Somerset; 1½ mile south-west of Wiveliscombe. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £11 1s. 8d.; gross income £340. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. S. S. Richards. Charities £1 5s. Acres 2,420. Houses 68. A. P. £2,123. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 343. Poor rates, in 1838, £184 19s.

CHIPSTEAD, a parish in the second division of the hund. and union of Reigate, county of Surrey; 2½ miles north-east of Gatton; near the Surrey railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £17 13s. 11½d.; gross income £352. Patron, in 1835, H. Jolliffe, Esq. Here are a Sunday National school and several charities, the most important of which is Mary Stephen's charity for the education and apprenticeship of poor children; income, in 1825, £70; schoolmaster's stipend £21; scholars 40. The following charities are administered to the poor of this parish: Smith's charity; income, in 1821, £6 9s. Masere's charity; income, in 1824, £7 16s. 6d.; and Shaw's charity; income, in 1825, 16s. 4d. Acres 2,490. Houses 65. A. P. £2,079. Pop., in 1801, 347; in 1831, 522. Poor rates, in 1838, £123.

CHIRBURY HUNDRED, in the western part of the county of Salop; bounded on the north and east by Ford hundred, and on the south and west by Montgomeryshire. Area 26,890 acres. Houses 749. Pop., in 1831, 4,212.

CHIRBURY, a parish in the above hundred; pleasantly situated in a fine and fertile vale; 3 miles north-east of Montgomery. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £9 6s. 8d., returned at £120; gross income £180. The church consists of the nave of the conventual church of a priory of Austin canons. The tithes of this extensive parish were granted by Queen Elizabeth to the grammar-school of Shrewsbury. Patrons, the corporation of Shrewsbury. The Independents and Baptists have places of worship here; the Independent church was formed in 1829, and the Baptist in the same year. In 1675, the Rev. Edward Lewis founded a free school here; income, in 1830, £100; average number of scholars about 50; schoolmaster's salary £20. Out of the income a sum of £1 was given to each of 10 poor widows, and the remainder was laid out in repairs and other contingencies. Minor charities, in 1830, £1. Chirbury is principally noted as having given the title of Baron to the celebrated Edward Lord Herbert of Montgomery. Acres 11,860. Houses 296. A. P. £9,182. Pop., in 1801, 1,391; in 1831, 1,576. Poor rates, in 1838, £844 18s.

CHIRDON, a township in the parish of Garstead, Northumberland. Houses 11. Pop., in 1801 68; in 1831, 77. Poor rates, in 1838, £48 7s.

CHIRK HUNDRED, in Denbighshire, North Wales. Houses 2,221. Pop., in 1831, 12,048.

CHIRK, a parish in the above hundred; 173 miles west-north-west of London. The great Holyhead road and the Ellesmere canal pass through the parish. The latter is carried over the Dee and the picturesque vale of Ceriog, by a magnificent aqueduct, 710 feet long by 24 wide, with iron parapet and bottom; on 10 forty feet span arches, carrying it 70 feet above the river. It was begun by Telfer in 1796, and finished in 1801, at an expense of £20,898. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; rated at £6 11s. 5½d.; gross income £570. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. The parish is divided into Upper and Nether Chirk, or Chirk above and Chirk below. The charities here owe their origin principally to the ancient family of Myddleton of Chirk castle. The free school, capable of holding 100 children, is conducted upon the National system. The endowments are very trifling. Consolidated charities; income, in 1837, about £63; besides other proceeds, all of which were distributed, at Christmas and Easter, to several classes of the poor. Sir Thomas Myddleton's charity for bread and other benefactions to the poor; income, in 1837, £54 4s. Minor charities £7 4s. The village of Chirk is seated on the brow of a limestone hill, in the midst of coal and lime-works, with other concerns, and is a place of some business, having the appearance of a considerable town. In the vicinity the petty sessions are held for the division of Nanheudwy. The fairs are,—second Tuesday in February, second Friday in June, August 12th and November 12th for sheep, horned cattle, and horses. For the beauty and magnificent extent of its views, the vicinity of this village is nearly unrivalled. On the highly romantic road from Chirk to Ruabon, and about 100 yards above Newbridge, such a scene presents itself, that, with the pencil of a Claude, on an autumnal evening, might be sketched one of the most exquisite landscapes the eye, perhaps, ever beheld. The river dashes along its rugged bed, and the rocky banks, clad with umbrageous wood, cast a darkening shade upon the stream, where the sombre green of the oak, with all the different hues of the ash, the elm, and hazel, intermingle; and these again diversified by tints of yellow, brown, and fawn, so pensively pleasing in the fall of the year, produce a most beautiful variegation. A few cottages beyond the bridge, with the smoke, tinged by the rays of a setting sun, while the distant mountains are dyed with purple, by his declining light, add additional effect to scenery, at all times possessed of interesting charms. Within half-a-mile of the town stands the castle of Chirk, built in the early part of the 11th century, still in perfect preservation, and inhabited by the Myddletons, whose seat it has been for more than two centuries. It has a heavy appearance, and is devoid of grandeur. Situated on an eminence, however, it commands a most beautiful and varied landscape, comprehending views into no less than 17 counties. Houses 288. A. P. £7,346. Pop., in 1801, 1,099; in 1831, 1,596. Poor rates, in 1838, £354 5s.

CHIRTON, a township in the parish of Tyne-mouth, Northumberland; on the northern bank of the Tyne; 1 mile west-south-west of North Shields. Acreage with the parish. Houses 636. A. P. £6,865. Pop., in 1801, 1,152; in 1831, 4,973. Poor rates, in 1838, £804 19s. The rapid increase of population in this township is to be ascribed wholly to the extension of the collieries, from the introduction of railroads.

CHISELHAMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Dorchester, union of Abingdon, county of Oxford; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Oxford; on the river Thame. Living, a curacy in the dio. of Oxford, a peculiar of Dorchester, not in charge, returned at £50; gross income £54. Patron, in 1835, C. Peers, Esq. Acres 1,210. Houses 16. A. P. £1,725. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 126. Poor rates, in 1838, £127 14s.

CHISELHURST, a parish in the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; 11 miles south-east of London. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £16 3s. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £500. Patron, the bishop of Rochester. There are various charities in this parish. The boys' free school, founded by William and John Harvill of Chiselhurst in 1781. Premises, bequeathed, are occupied as the school and the schoolmaster's dwelling; income, in 1819, £15. There were then between 40 and 50 boys at this school, who were educated on the National system. The girls' free school, supported by the yearly proceeds of various bequests, amounting, in 1819, to £24, with which 8 girls were clothed and educated, in a school wherein 12 other girls were also clothed and educated by private subscription. There is also a school at Fooks Cray, partly for behoof of the poor of this parish. Sir Philip Warwick's charity, consisting of the dividends on £150 consols, for the apprenticement of poor boys. The objects of this charity are also promoted by various other small gifts. Benson's charity, producing, in 1836, dividends to the amount of £18 7s. 6d., expended in comfortable clothing to poor families. There are other charities of minor importance. The celebrated annalist and antiquarian, William Camden, died on the estate of Camden place here in November, 1623, and was carried hence in great solemnity to Westminster abbey. The estate of Camden place had its name from him. Earl Camden is its present owner. Sir Nicholas Bacon, the father of the great Francis Lord Bacon, was born in this parish in 1510. Acres 4,050. Houses 300. A. P. £6,784. Pop., in 1801, 1,217; in 1831, 1,820. Poor rates, in 1838, £513 17s.

CHISENBURY. See NETHER-AVON.

CHISHALL (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Uttlesford, union of Royston, county of Essex; 8 miles west-north-west of Saffron Waldon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £10, returned at £84 14s.; gross income £180; with Little Chishall tithes commuted in 1811. Patron, in 1835, J. Wilkes, Esq. Here is a Sunday National school. The income of charities, possessed by this parish, amounted, in 1837, to £5 4s. 4d. Acres 1,410. Houses 44. A. P. £2,180. Pop., in 1801, 309; in 1831, 371. Poor rates, in 1838, £201 7s.

CHISHALL (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Uttlesford, union of Royston, county of Essex; 8 miles west of Saffron Waldon. Living, a rectory annexed to that of Heydon. Here is a Sunday National school. Acres 1,420. Houses 16. A. P. £919. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 106.

CHISLEBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Houndsborough, Barwick, and Coker, union of Yeovil, county of Somerset; 4 miles north-north-east of Crewkerne; bounded on the west by the Parret river. Living, a rectory with the curacy of West Chinnoek, in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £14 5s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £542; tithes commuted in 1829; aggregate amount £246 17s. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Ilchester. Charities; income £1. There is an annual fair here the last Thursday in October for cattle of all sorts, cheese, hops, and pigs. Acres 810. Houses 93. A. P. 1,530. Pop., in 1801, 298; in 1831, 483. Poor rates, in 1838, £168.

CHISLEDON, a parish in the hund. of Kingsbridge, union of Highworth and Swindon, county of Wilts; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Swindon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 8s. 9d., returned at £113 17s.; gross income £173; tithes commuted in 1779. Charities; annual rents of land £12,—given to 20 poor housekeepers. Here are two Sunday and daily National schools. Patron, in 1835, T. Colley, Esq. Acres 5,710. Houses 210. A. P. £5,681. Pop., in 1801, 904; in 1831, 1,148. Poor rates, in 1838, £499 7s.

CHISLET, a parish in the hund. of Bleangate, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Blean, county of Kent; 7 miles north-east of Canterbury; on a branch of the river Stour. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £29 10s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £234. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. The charities in this parish consist of the charity school, instituted in 1787 by the archbishop, who demised certain lands on lease for 21 years, the rents to be applied for the maintenance and education of poor children of the parish. The lease was renewed in 1811, when the land was let at £40 per annum; and, in 1819, there were 27 children under tuition at this school; besides 60 instructed at the expense of the same funds in a Sunday school here. —Taylor's charity for general behoof of the poor; annual rents, in 1836, £80.—Church lands; various benefactions; annual rents, in 1836, £26.—Petyt's charity, £1. Acres 5,180. Houses 204. A. P. £8,401. Pop., in 1801, 84; in 1831, 1,145. Poor rates, in 1837, £505 2s.

CHISWICK, a parish in the Kensington division of the hund. of Ossulstone, union of Brentford, county of Middlesex; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of St. Paul's Cathedral; on the northern bank of the Thames. This parish comprises the hamlets of Stamford-brook, Strandon-on-the-Green, Little Sutton, and Turnham Green. Acres 1,120. Houses 876. A. P. £16,419. Pop., in 1801, 3,225; in 1831, 4,994. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,537 12s. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London, and in the peculiar jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of St. Paul's; rated at £9 18s. 4d.; gross income £629. The church is by no means a handsome structure. It is surmounted by a mean wooden turret and two flag-stones. There are various monuments in the interior, and in the churchyard are the remains of many distinguished persons, among whom we shall mention the celebrated Hogarth, who, with his wife, lies in a vault, over which is placed a monument, with a poetical inscription by his friend Garrick. Patrons, the dean and chapter of St. Paul's. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National, and 7 daily schools. A charity school was established here in 1706, by voluntary subscriptions for the education of 20 boys and 10 girls. Lady Capel endowed this school with an annual rent, amounting in 1819, to £37 10s. Other endowments followed, and, in 1819, the whole permanent income amounted to £47 4s. 1d. The receipts of 1817, arising from fixed income, subscriptions, charity sermons, and profits of girls' work, were £289 17s. 11d.; out of which 136 boys were educated, and 25 boys and 35 girls fully clothed. The school was united with the National society. There are various other charities for the general behoof of the poor, at discretion of the vicar or minister; total income, in 1825, £57 11s. 6d. The village of Chis-wick is delightfully situated on the north bank of the Thames, near the Henslow road, and is adorned with a great number of elegant mansions. Of these the most striking is Devonshire house, or Chiswick house, belonging to the duke of Devonshire. With the exception of two wings which have been added by Wyatt, it was designed by the celebrated Kent, the father of modern gardening. The central compartment is crowned by an octagonal dome of delicate proportions; and the entrance is by two flights of stone steps, each having a double approach. The portico is supported by six fluted columns of the Corinthian order; the architrave, frieze, cornices, &c., being of the richest possible character. On one side of the double flight of steps is a statue of Palladio; on the other a statue of Inigo Jones. The interior is enriched by a fine collection of paintings, chiefly formed by the earl of Burlington. The gardens were laid out by the earl of Burlington, in the Italian style, with a redundancy of statues, vases, and other sculptural embellishments; but many judicious alterations have been effected since the time of Lord Burlington. The pleasure-grounds comprise about 32 acres, and are amply adorned by wood and water. Many of the statues placed in different parts of the garden are antique; and three, which were dug up in Adrian's garden at Rome, are of most excellent workmanship. Here is a flower-garden of considerable extent, in which is an elegant conservatory, and a range of forcing houses, not less than 300 feet in length. Attached to the pleasure-grounds is a small park stocked with deer. The Right Hon. Charles James Fox died here in September, 1806; and subsequently, under very similar circumstances, the gifted George Canning. In 1814 the emperor of Russia, the king of Prussia, and many illustrious personages, were entertained here by the duke of Devonshire.

The extensive gardens belonging to the Horticultural society of London, are in this parish. They have been established about 18 years, and were intended both as a place of experimental research in horticultural science, and as a station whence the most valuable, useful, and ornamental plants of all kinds, might be distributed through the country. They extend over about 33 acres of ground, and are arranged into an arboretum, rich in ornamental trees and shrubs; an orchard, containing a very extensive collection of fruit-trees; some forcing-houses, chiefly employed in the determination of the quality of different kinds of grapes; a kitchen-garden, in which trials are made of new vegetables, or of new methods of cultivation, and where young gardeners receive practical training and instruction; and, lastly, some hot-houses and green-houses filled with rare plants. The gardens are considered to be a kind of normal school for young men intended as gardeners, who pass an examination in the principles of their business before they are recommended to places. It was originally intended to erect a magnificent range of hot-houses; but the funds of the society having been mismanaged, their operations were crippled for a time. "No association of individuals," says Dr. Lindley, the secretary of the society, "ever produced so marked an effect upon gardening in a few years, as has been brought about by the distribution of cuttings of improved fruit-trees, of the finest kinds of vegetable-seeds, and of new plants, mostly imported direct from the British colonies and from the west coast of America, made annually from the society's gardens, independently of the collections sent in return to all parts of the world." In these gardens "a Daniel's hygrometer is used for ascertaining the state of the vapour in the atmosphere. Those by which the maximum and minimum of the temperature of the air in the shade are ascertained, are placed in an open spot in the arboretum, screened from the rays of the sun, and sheltered from terrestrial radiation by a kind of umbrella of oiled cloth. They are attached to the northern side of the post which supports the umbrella, and stand four feet from the ground. That by which the maximum of heat is ascertained is filled with mercury; the one applied to registering the minimum of heat is a spirit thermometer. In addition to these, two other register thermometers of the same construction are used. The first is of mercury, and the ball is covered with black wool. It is exposed to the sun on the grass, in the arboretum, about two inches from the ground, and thus shows the maximum degree of heat to which vegetation is exposed during the day. The second thermometer is of spirit; its ball is also covered with black wool, and is fixed in the focus of a parabolic metallic speculum, and exposed to the full aspect of the sky. It registers the maximum degree of cold arising from radiation in such a situation. The rain gauge (Howard's) stands upon the level of the ground in the experimental garden."—[Medical Annual, 1839.]

CHISWORTH. See LUDWORTH and CHISWORTH.

CHITHURST, a parish in the hund. of Dumpsford, rape of Chichester, union of Midhurst, county of Sussex; 3½ miles west-north-west of Midhurst, on the river Rother. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Iping. By the new boundaries act this parish is included in the borough of Midhurst. Acres 1,100. Houses 27. A. P. £678. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 172. Poor rates, in 1838, £44 16s.

CHITTLEHAMPTON, a parish in the hund. of South Molton, union of South Molton, county of Devon; 5½ miles west of South Molton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £34 18s. 11½d.; gross income £435. Patron, in 1835, Lord Rolle. A chapel has been recently built at Chittlehamholt in this parish. There is also a Baptist church here, formed in 1835, and there are ten daily, and two daily National schools in the parish. The church lands were the only charitable property in this parish in 1822, when the charity commissioners gave in their report; annual rents £17 10s. 2d. Acres 5,700. Houses 373. A. P. £6,208. Pop., in 1801, 3,003; in 1831, 1,897. Poor rates, in 1838, £893 18s.

CHITTOE, a tithing in the parish of Cannings-Bishops, Wilts; 5 miles north-west of Devizes. The hamlet of Chittoe is distant upwards of seven miles from the parish church. Charles Lewis Phipps, Esq. of Wanshouse, has generously offered to give land, and a donation of £50 towards the erection of an Episcopal chapel here. There is no school here, but the children attend schools in the adjoining parish of Bromham. Acres 890. Houses 51. A. P. £968. Pop., in 1801, 222; in 1831, 220. Poor rates, in 1838, £136.

CHIVELSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Colebridge, union of Kingsbridge, county of Devon; 5½ miles south-south-east of Kingsbridge, near Start Bay. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Stokenham. There is an Independent church here, formed in 1690 or 1700. This parish possesses four daily schools. Acres 2,720. Houses 114. A. P. £2,586. Pop., in 1801, 562; in 1831, 601. Poor rates, in 1838, £399 11s.

CHIVINGTON (EAST). See CHEVINGTON (EAST).

CHIVINGTON (WEST). See CHEVINGTON (WEST).

CHOBHAM, a parish in the first division of the hund. of Godley, union of Chertsey, county of Surrey; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Bagshot; and 3 of the Southampton railway; and 26 by railway from London. The river Mole nearly encircles the village of Chobham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £10 2s. 1d.; gross income £166. Patron, in 1835, S. Thornton, Esq. There are a Baptist church here, and 7 daily schools. The church lands of this parish yielded an annual rent of £16 16s. in 1823. Other charities £2 5s. Bagshot-heath, at one time the last resource of gentlemen of desperate fortunes, and, of course, famous in the history of criminal trials, is in this vicinity. The Basingstoke canal crosses this district. Great part of it has now been brought under the dominion of the plough, and, though but of a light and sandy soil, yields tolerable crops. There is a large pond between Chobham and Byfleet which covers nearly 150 acres. It is used for feeding fish for the London market. Acres 9,470. Houses 349. A. P. £6,598. Pop., in 1801, 1,176; in 1831, 1,937. Poor rates, in 1838, £737 17s.

CHOCKNELL, a hamlet in the parish of Leigh, Worcester, formerly a parish of itself, but the church is now in ruins, and the living united with the rectory of Leigh.

CHOLDERTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Amesbury, county of Wilts; 5 miles east-north-east of Amesbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £11 0s. 7½d.; gross income £241. Patrons, the master and fellows of Oriel college, Oxford. There is a daily school here. The only charity possessed by this parish, in 1832, was Cracherode's charity; income £12, £7 16s. of which was expended in teaching 12 children, and the residue dispensed to the poor of this parish. The name of this parish is sometimes written, though inaccurately, Choldrington. Acres 1,390. Houses 35. A. P. £1,041. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 161. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 4s.

CHOLDERTON. See AMPORT.

CHOLLERTON, a parish in the north-east division of Tindale-ward, union of Hexham, county of Northumberland; 6 miles north of Hexham, bounded on the west by the river Tyne. Living, a vicarage with Chipchase curacy, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £6 14s. 4½d.; gross income £399. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Christopher Bird. This parish comprises the townships of Barrasford, Broomehope and Buteland, Chollerton, Colwell and Swinburn, Gunnerton and Chipchase. It contains 5 daily, and 1 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities; unimproveable annual rent £2. Within the limits of this parish stand the anciently strong castles of Swinburn and Chipchase, now modernized into quiet habitations. Acres 16,020. Houses 227. A. P. £13,873. Pop., in 1801, 1,075; in 1831, 1,252. Poor rates, in 1838, £598 5s. Houses of the township 30. Pop., in 1821, 149; in 1831, 187.

CHOLMONDELEY, a township in the parish of Malpas, hund. of Broxton, co.-palatine of Chester; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Nantwich. Cholmondeley castle was garrisoned in 1643 for the ill-fated Charles I., and in the course of a few months was repeatedly lost and won by the contending parties. It settled, of course, in the hands of the parliamentarians. Tithes commuted in 1639; aggregate amount, including those of Bickley, Bulkely, and Larkton, of rectorial £32 8s., impropriated £342. Acres 2,480. Houses 50. A. P. £2,507. Pop., in 1801, 292; in 1831, 272. Poor rates, in 1838, £132 2s.

CHOLMONDSTONE, a township in the parish of Acton, co.-palatine of Chester. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,470. Houses 32. A. P. £1,842.

Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 180. Poor rates, in 1838, £115 1s.

CHOLSEY, a parish in the hund. of Reading, locally situate in the hund. of Moreton, union of Wallingford, county of Berks; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Wallingford, intersected by the Great Western railway. Living, with Moulsoford curacy, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £18 9s. 9½d.; gross income £360. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school in this parish. Charities; interest in 1837, £2 14s.; besides an accumulated sum of £20 to be distributed, with other sums, at the church doors, at the end of the 4th year of accumulation. Here was one of the three old monasteries referred to in King Henry I.'s foundation charter of the abbey of Reading, as having been long before destroyed. Acres 5,060. Houses 194. A. P. £6,344. Pop., in 1801, 814; in 1831, 983. Poor rates, in 1838, £540 1s.

CHOPPINGTON. See BEDLINGTON.

CHOPWELL, a township in the parish of Ryton, co.-palatine of Durham; north of the river Derwent. Acres 3,150. Houses 51. A. P. £3,286. Pop., in 1801, 346; in 1831, 254. Poor rates, in 1838, £105 11s.

CHORLEY, a township in the parish of Wilmslow, co.-palatine of Chester; 6 miles north-west of Macclesfield; intersected by the Nantwich and Birmingham railway. Acres 770. Houses 86. A. P. £2,218. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 474. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 14s.

CHORLEY, a township in the parish of Wrenbury, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles west of Nantwich. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,280. Houses 28. A. P. £1,383. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 168. Poor rates, in 1838, £65 14s.

CHORLEY, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Leyland, union of Chorley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Lancaster, and 9 miles south-south-east of Preston; on the Great Western road to London, and on the Great Turnpike road between Liverpool and Preston. It is intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal, and is within $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile of the Wigan and Preston railway. Living, originally a curacy to the rectory of Croston, of the certified value of £23 6s. 0d.; but in 1793, upon Chorley being constituted a parish, erected into a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; gross income £1,031. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Master. To meet the increasing population, a new church has been built, under the authority of the parliamentary commissioners. It is in the Gothic style, with tower and pinnacles, and cost the sum of £11,845 12s. 5d. Free sittings 1,590; total accommodation 2,012. Living, a perpetual curacy. Patron, the rector of Chorley. Besides these, the Independents, Unitarians, and Wesleyan Methodists, have places of worship here. Of these the Independent chapel in Hollinshed street, and the Catholic chapel of St. Gregory, are licensed under the new marriage act. There is a charity school in the churchyard of Chorley, founded, in 1611, by the inhabitants, at the parish charges, and subsequently supported by various small endowments; income in 1825, £10, paid to the schoolmaster; but none of the scholars were taught here free of expense. The funds of this charity were, in 1800, applied towards building a workhouse upon the poor's lands in this parish, and the rents of the workhouse constituted the principal part of the income of the school charity. The annual rents of the poor's lands, in 1825, were £88 4s.; besides which, a yearly sum of £10 was paid by the parish, as interest of £200, in their hands, belonging to this charity. The residue of these and other proceeds were distributed to the poor of the parish, non-resident as well as resident. Cooper's alma-house, consisting of six tenements and gardens, are inhabited by poor widows or single women, and endowed with a yearly emolument, amounting, in 1825, to £11 5s., which is divided amongst the alma-women. Other charities; income in 1825, £5. There are 22 daily schools, and three Sunday, and daily National schools in this parish. The Yarrow, a large and beautiful stream, encompasses the southern part of the township, and gives motion in its progress to immense masses of powerful machinery for spinning and weaving cottons, the manufacture of which, in all its branches, especially that of muslins, has, of late, been flourishing in this vicinity. Besides the water power, steam-engines are at work on the same manufacture. In 1838 there were 9 cotton-mills here, employing, collectively, 1800 hands. Printing and bleaching establishments on the banks of the Yarrow, and around the country, are almost innumerable, and impart to the whole district a refreshing air of bustle and industry. Indeed Chorley has become one of the most thriving and agreeable places in the county. Coal is found in great abundance; and there are also mines of lead ore and alum shale in the vicinity. An extensive bed of iron ore was discovered in 1833 on the estate of H. Fazakerley, Esq. of Gillibrand hall, in this neighbourhood. The quarries on the declivities of the hills yield excellent flags, slate, ashler, and millstone; and the Lancaster canal, and the Leeds and Liverpool canal, which form their junction a little to the south of Whittle-le-Woods, passing within about $\frac{1}{4}$ a mile of Chorley, through the hamlet of Botany Bay, afford excellent media for the conveyance of these heavy materials. The facility with which building materials are obtained in this vicinity, and the enterprise of the inhabitants, have occasioned a great enlargement of the town within a few years. The streets and manufactories, &c. are lighted with gas. The market is held on Tuesday and Saturday; the fairs on the 5th of May and 20th of August, for horned cattle, and on the 5th of September for toys and small wares. The September fair is held as a sort of annual jubilee; Bartholomew fair on a small scale; and the people indulge freely in all the gaiety and amusements of these festive occasions. Acres 3,110. Houses 1,564. A. P. £16,771. Pop., in 1801, 4,516; in 1831, 8,262. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,752 10s.

CHORLTON, a township in the parish of Malpas, Chester; 7 miles north-west of Whitchurch. Acres 610. Houses 26. A. P. £778. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 155. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 17s.

CHORLTON, a township in the parish of Backford, Chester; 4 miles north of Chester, intersected by the Dee and Mersey canal. Acres 580. Houses 16. A. P. £1,043. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1838, £78 19s.

CHORLTON, a township in the parish of Wybunbury, Chester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Nantwich; intersected by the Birmingham railway. Acres 700. Houses 20. A. P. £728. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 109. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 17s.

CHORLTON WITH HARDY, a chapelry in the parish of Manchester, county of Lancaster; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Manchester, bounded on the south-west by the river Mersey. Living, a curacy subordinate to the collegiate church at Manchester; returned at £115; gross income £107. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here; the Independent church was formed in 1826, and was licensed under the new marriage act. Acres 1,400. Houses 123. A. P. £2,945. Pop., in 1801, 513; in 1831, 666. Poor rates, in 1838, £341 14s.

CHORLTON-ROW, a township in the parish of Manchester, county of Lancaster; about a mile south of Manchester; and comprised by the boundaries act in that borough. The number of electors resident here is about 1,905. Acres 700. Houses 3,972. A. P., in 1814, £19,484; in 1829, £66,445. Pop., in 1801, 675; in 1831, 20,569. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,948 4s.

CHORLTON, a chapelry in the parish of Eccleshall, Stafford; 6 miles north of Eccleshall, intersected by the Birmingham and Liverpool railway. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Eccleshall, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £71. Patron, in 1835, the bishop of Lichfield. Houses 37. A. P., with Chorlton-hill, £2,301. Pop., in 1821, 237; in 1831, 251.

CHORLTON-HILL, a township in the parish of Eccleshall, county of Stafford. Acreage, with Chorlton, 1,660. Houses 23. Pop., in 1821, 94; in 1831, 135.

CHOSELL, or CHOSELEY. See RINGSTAD (GREAT), Norfolk.

CHOULESBURY, a parish in the hund. of Cottesloe, union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; 4 miles north-north-west of Chesham. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; returned at £68; gross income £41. Patron, in 1835, Trustees, into whose hands Joseph Neale, of Gray's Inn, Esq., by indenture of lease and release, dated in 1705, conveyed the advowson and right of patronage to this church, together with certain lands for charitable purposes; namely, for the annual distribution of Bibles and other religious books to the value of twenty shillings amongst the poor, the residue to be set apart for the remuneration of an afternoon preacher or lecturer in the churches of Choulesbury and Wincanton alternately; income, in 1833, £120, which was paid to the incumbent of the parish for the purposes appointed by the original patron. Other charities in this parish; income, in 1833, £3 5s. Acres 170. Houses 24. A. P. £220. Pop., in 1801, 122; in 1831, 127. Poor rates, in 1838, £44 14s.

CHOWBENT. See ATHERTON. At Chowbent there is now a Presbyterian chapel, licensed under the new marriage act.

CHOWLEY, a township in the parish of Coddington, Chester. Acres 580. Houses 12. A. P. £808. Pop., in 1801, 56; in 1831, 70. Poor rates, in 1838, £44 17s.

CHRISHALL, a parish in the hund. of Uttlesford, union of Saffron Walden, county of Essex; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Clavering. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £19; gross income £200. Patron, the bishop of London. Charities; income, in 1837, £6 4s. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,690. Houses 74. A. P. £2,845. Pop., in 1801, 220; in 1830, 487. Poor rates, in 1838, £132 3s.

CHRIST-CHURCH, or ST. TRINITY, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Caldicott, union of Newport, county of Monmouth; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Newport, south of the river Usk. It includes the hamlet of Caerton-ultra-Ponerna. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £13 4s. 2d.; gross income £300; in the patronage, in 1835, of Eton college. Church lands; annual rents, in 1833, £64 12s. There is a day and Sunday school here. A fair is held on the 29th of November for cattle. Acres 5,320. Houses 162. A. P. £7,724. Pop., in 1801, 481; in 1831, 862. Poor rates, in 1838, £407 17s.

CHRIST-CHURCH, NEWGATE-STREET, a parish in the city of London, within the walls, county of Middlesex; on the northern banks of the Thames in the vicinity of St. Paul's. Living, a vicarage, with the rectory of St. Leonard, Foster-Lane, united, in the dio. of London; gross income £540; in the patronage, alternately, of the dean and chapter of Westminster, and St. Bartholomew's hospital. The church anciently belonged to a convent of grey friars, or Franciscans; but falling to the Crown at the dissolution of the religious houses, Henry VIII. gave it to the mayor, commonalty, and citizens, of London, for a parish church, in lieu of the two churches, of St. Ewen, in Newgate-market, and of St. Nicholas, in the Shambles; both of which were then demolished, and their parishes, together with as much of St. Sepulchre's as lay within Newgate, were added to this newly created parish. The old church was destroyed by the great fire in 1666; after which, the small parish of St. Leonard Foster, whose church was also destroyed, and not rebuilt, was annexed to Christ-church by the act for rebuilding the parish churches thus destroyed. The present church is one of the numerous works of Sir Christopher Wren, who finished it in 1704. It is well built of stone, strong, spacious, and handsome. The lofty columnar steeple, on its solid square tower, forms one of the most striking features in the architecture of the metropolis.

CHRIST-HOSPITAL, in the above parish, vulgarly called the Blue Coat school, is one of the five royal hospitals which ornament and honour the metropolis. It was founded by King Edward VI. in the year 1553, for the education and maintenance of fatherless and helpless children. The dilapidated monastery of the Grey friars—then become the property of the Crown, by the dissolution—was granted as the original foundation for the hospital. To the exertions, and the active intercession of the corporation of the city of London with the Crown, however, is the actual foundation of this and all the other royal hospitals to be attributed. They were originally endowed by subscriptions amongst the more distinguished citizens of London, stimulated, perhaps, in the first instance, by the extreme distress to which the suppression of the religious houses had reduced many of the mendicant poor. Four hundred children were admitted into this hospital in September 1552, and supplied with dress and all other necessities at the trust expense of the governors, the corporation of the city. The dress of the children, which was the fashion of the day, and exactly similar in pattern to that they now wear, was originally of "russet cotton;" but at the ensuing Easter, 1553, it was changed to the well-known and remarkable blue dress from which this hospital is often denominated the Blue Coat school. It consists of a long blue coat, enveloping the whole person, and secured by a leather girdle at the waist; a species of yellow apron or petticoat, called "the yellow;" corduroy or moleskin breeches and stockings of the same colour, and a pair of bands: a dress, as the charity commissioners justly observe, by no means tending to promote that freedom of action which is so natural to boys, and so necessary to their health and manly growth. The girls wear a purple frock, a green apron, and a white cap and tippet, with a straw bonnet.

It thus appears, however, that even in its infancy this was an institution of importance and magnitude, particularly when we consider the rudeness of the age in which it was established. Its progress towards its present affluent and enlarged state was most probably rapid; those who could no longer, as they thought, expiate their offences by donations to monasteries, now bequeathed money and lands to this and other foundations; so that it became and still continues one of the richest charitable establishments in Great Britain; its revenues, in 1835, amounting to no less a sum than £58,128 4s. 8d.

The hospital buildings, both in London, and at Hertford, being found inconvenient and dilapidated, shortly before the year 1795, it was resolved gradually to take down and rebuild several portions of them, and to erect various additional buildings. An act of parliament was therefore obtained, empowering the governors to purchase and take in several adjoining premises, and otherwise to effect the proposed enlargements and improvements of the hospitals. Under the powers of this act, great alterations have been gradually made; and the means of facilitating the final execution of the plans for rebuilding the London hospital were at length afforded, by the completion of an exchange with the governors of St. Bartholomew's hospital in 1819, which was highly beneficial to both parties. The new buildings, for which large subscriptions were raised, were begun in 1820, and are not yet entirely finished. It is impossible in a work of this kind, and especially without the aid of ground plans and elevations, to give any intelligible idea of the external appearance, or the internal economy of this extensive and somewhat irregular range of edifices; we shall therefore trace out merely a few of its obvious arrangements. The range extends chiefly from east to west, along the northern side of Newgate-street. It has various entrances, the principal of which is that which opens into the square on the north, denominated "The Ditch," from having been the boundary of the old town ditch, mentioned by Stowe and others, as "extending from the tower ditch to Christ's hospital." From this spot, the principal view of the hospital is obtained. The grammar-school and the mathematical-school, rebuilt in 1831-2, are situated on the north side of this spacious and airy court or square. The drawing-school is on the second floor. There are also wards here. On the south side are the head master's and the treasurer's houses, behind which are the treasurer's garden, fronting Angel-street, and Bull-and-mouth-street; with the range of counting-houses, offices, and yard, to the north of Christ-church. The eastern dormitories, built in 1836, also adjoin the counting-house yard. The writing-school, the garden, and the western dormitories, the steward's house, &c., are all situated to the west and south of the ditch. The hall and offices, with the hall play-ground, the infirmary and the counter prison limit the precincts on the west, to which there are entrances from Giltspur-street, through Green Dragon yard, and Windmill court. St. Bartholomew's stands to the north of Christ-church hospital.

The governors, according to the original charter, are the lord mayor, aldermen, and citizens of London; but an act of parliament passed in the year 1782, to settle the disputes occasioned by the indefiniteness of this nomination, limited the governorship, belonging to the corporation, to the lord mayor, aldermen, and twelve of the common council. Besides these ex officio governors, 88 in number, any person being elected by vote of the governors, in general court assembled, and paying a subscription of £400, becomes qualified, as a donation governor;—of £200,—as a nomination governor. There are also "governors by special vote," selected for some cause other than contribution to the funds of the hospital. In 1837, there were 1 special, 513 donation, and 54 nomination, governors; the number in all, including those acting ex officio, being 406. The lord mayor, who is considered the patron of the hospital, pro tempore, has the privilege of presenting to the institution two children annually; the president, who is invariably chosen from among the aldermen, three, two as president, and one as alderman; the treasurer two, and sometimes three; and the aldermen one each. The other governors present in rotation according to the number of vacancies. It is calculated that the benefaction-governors obtain one presentation in every 3 or 4 years. In addition to those already accounted for, there are some called "Gift Presentations;" these are such as the hospital, from estates bequeathed to it, are obliged to receive from different parishes, companies, &c. The Skinners and Fishmongers' companies possess a privilege of this kind; as does also Guy's hospital. The city authorities for a long time confined the benefits of this charity to the poor of their own corporation; but changes have been introduced by slow degrees, and certainly it cannot be inferred from the terms of any of the charters of the several royal hospitals, that it was the desire of their founders that the objects of these charities should be selected from any particular class, but from all indigent persons whatever, whether natives of the city, the country, or even other countries.

There are five grammar, two mathematical, one drawing, one music, and two writing, masters in this hospital. The grammar-masters instruct the pupils in classical knowledge, spelling, &c. The whole of the boys are taught writing and arithmetic, and proceed as far in the classics as their talent or age will allow; those, however, who are intended for any of the learned professions, cultivate the latter with greater assiduity, and learn only the fundamental parts of the former.

The grammar-school is conducted by the teachers in separate departments. The grammar-school boys generally receive an education half classical and half commercial. They are removed, as they advance, from the lower to the higher departments. There are scholarships, or exhibitions, at the two universities of Cambridge and Oxford, in the gift of the governors. Those pupils who are destined to supply the vacancies, as they occur, are termed Grecians, and are selected from the highest class of the grammar-school, the pupils in which are termed the Deputy Grecians. The number of Grecians chosen is regulated by the number of exhibitions allowed to students of this hospital; and of these, there are now eight at Cambridge, and one at Oxford, for periods of four years: thus there are two Grecians named yearly, to provide for the vacancies at Cambridge, and an additional one every fourth year, to supply the exhibition at Oxford. The sum of £560 per annum is at present applied in the maintenance, for 4 years, of 8 probationers, at Cambridge, with £60 a-year each; and 1 at Oxford with £80. This of course enables two to be sent to Cambridge yearly, and one to Oxford every fourth year. The head grammar and the mathematical masters now nominate the Grecians. They receive a complete classical tuition, and are instructed in Hebrew and mathematics. Each Grecian has a study in his ward, and is granted many privileges while in the hospital; and an allowance of £87 10s., for books, apparel, degrees, &c., is made to him when he proceeds to the university, and takes his degrees.

The mathematical school was originally ingrafted on this foundation by Charles II., for the nautical tuition of 40 boys, intended for the naval or mercantile service. The number is still implemented; but, in consequence of various subsequent endowments for the purpose, there were in 1837, 65 to 70 other boys receiving a mathematical education here. These, however, constitute an entirely distinct establishment, though they chiefly form a nursery, whence, as well as from the grammar-school, the boys on the Royal foundation, or "the Royal Boys," are chosen on their own application. The 70 are superannuated at the age of 15, while the Royal boys may be retained till 16. The Grecians and deputy Grecians are also taught here those branches of mathematics which are most requisite for their future studies at the university. The Royal boys, and the 70, wear distinctive badges on the right or left shoulder, though they are otherwise all dressed alike, and observe the same school hours and holidays. Of the Royal or King's boys, 20 are sent to sea, in the course of each period of 2 years; 9, 10, or 11, as the case may be, being sent yearly. If their conduct and progress have proved satisfactory, they receive each a watch as a reward, worth from £9 to £13; besides being fitted out with clothes, books, nautical instruments, &c., and afterwards receiving other gifts. Many of these boys obtain situations under surveyors: some are made captain's clerks; but many are not so fortunate. The drawing-school is appropriated chiefly to the use of the mathematical students; but those boys who are willing to cultivate their genius for this delightful and useful art, or whose future situations in life require a knowledge of it, receive lessons likewise. For the reward of industry, and for the excitement of emulation, there are two examination-days in the year, when every boy is examined according to his class, and prizes for arithmetic, writing, and drawing, consisting of silver pens, medals, and half-crowns, are contended for. There are also, at intervals, small money presents, and leave tickets given for good behaviour; and for the further instruction and amusement of the scholars, libraries have been instituted.

The number of children maintained and educated at the charge of this hospital, in 1837, was 1,148, 675 of whom were in London, and the remainder at Hertford, where there is a preparatory seminary for the boys, and an hospital for the girls, connected with this great establishment. See article HERTFORD. The hospital is divided into 14 wards, to each of which there are nurses amenable for the cleanly appearance and behaviour of their boys, and subordinate to a matron, who superintends the delivery of the provisions from the kitchen to the table, pays the weekly salaries of the nurses, and always attends in the hall. The medical and surgical department is conducted by a physician, a surgeon, and a surgeon apothecary who resides at the infirmary, which is also continually under the care of resident nurses, who have servants proportionate to the number of invalids. The greatest attention is paid to the patients; and no measures conducing to health, and consistent with reason, are neglected by the governors. In no institution, moreover, can the masters be more sedulously attentive to the morals of children than they are in this.

The charity-commissioners, in their report, observe, that complaints were addressed to them by judicious and respectable individuals at the time of their inquiry, in respect both to the description and the amount of the education afforded by this institution. The commissioners entirely agreed with them in thinking, that the boys educated here ought to be taught the principal modern languages; no system of education having any pretensions to be termed satisfactory or complete, in the present state of the intercourse between this country and the continent, that does not embrace the study of the French and German languages; and considering how large a proportion of these boys prosecute commercial pursuits of some kind or other after leaving the hospital, this knowledge is likely to prove serviceable to a much greater number than even that of the classics.

They further observe, that every disposition to improvement appears to prevail among those to whom the management of this most important institution is chiefly confided, and that some of the most valuable amendments have been effected in comparatively modern times.

There is another hospital or school in this parish, termed the Ward school, of Farringdon within, in Bull-and-mouth-street, which contains 80 boys and 60 girls; 60 of the former of whom, and 40 of the latter, are clothed; 12 of the girls are likewise boarded and lodged in the house.

CHRIST-CHURCH HUNDRED, in New Forest, west division of the county of Hants or Southampton. Area 39,500 acres. Houses 1,934. Pop., in 1831, 9,544.

CHRIST-CHURCH, SPITALFIELDS, a parish in the hund. of Ossulston, tower division, union of White-chapel, county of Middlesex, on the northern bank of the Thames, at the commencement of the Eastern Counties railroad. It was formerly only a hamlet in the extensive parish of Stepney; but from the great increase of inhabitants within its precincts, arising from the settlement of the persecuted French Protestants after the revocation of the edict of Nantz, it was made, in the year 1723, a distinct parish, under its present name. For brevity's sake it is frequently called the parish of Spitalfields; but not correctly, as Spitalfields is an extensive district, comprehending within its limits not only the parish of Christ-church, but also that of Bethnal-Green; and portions of various other parishes. Acres of Christ-church 70. Houses 2,271. A. P. £29,988. During the present century the population has not greatly increased. In 1801, it was 15,091; in 1811, 16,200; in 1821, 18,650; and in 1831, there was a diminution of 701, the numbers being only 17,949. Increase from 1801 to 1831, 2,858. Poor rates, in 1838, £5,158 11s.—Living, a rectory, not in charge, in the dio. of London, exempt from visitation; gross income £448; in the patronage of Brazen-Nose college, Oxford. The church, situated in Church-street, Spitalfields, is built of stone, with a lofty spire over a Doric portico. It is considered to be exceedingly handsome, particularly in the interior. It is one of the 50 churches ordered by parliament to be erected in 1710. It was begun, in 1723, by Nicholas Hawksmore, the favourite pupil of Sir Christopher Wren, and was finished in 1729. There is here also Sir George Wheeler's chapel, besides places of worship for Independents, Universalists, and Wesleyans; the latter of which was a French church till the year 1809. In all, the church accommodation, in 1838, consisted of 5,590 sittings; the average attendance being from 3,000 to 3,500, not much more than one-third of what ought to be expected.—Here is a parochial charity-school partly supported by endowments yielding £241 per annum. The children attending it are 60 boys and 60 girls, who are fully clothed in the charity uniform, with a conspicuous pewter badge, and the boys have an apprentice fee of £2 at the age of 14. The schoolmaster's salary is £85 a-year, that of the schoolmistress £38. Besides other minor charities, there are almshouses in the parishes of St. Dunstan-Stepney, St. Ann-Limehouse, and St. Leonard-Shoreditch, the latter belonging to the company of drapers, to all which the poor of this parish are eligible.—There are here 5 infant schools, and 34 daily, including a National, and three Jewish, schools; but the assistant hand-loom weaver's commissioner, J. Mitchell, Esq. remarks that none of these are carried on by schoolmasters on their own account, all being, in some degree, of a public nature; and that the amount of education is as deficient here as in Bethnal-Green. The inhabitants, like those in Bethnal-Green, are chiefly journey men silk-weavers, who work in their own houses for the master weavers in Spitalfields. For a long period, the weaving population of Spitalfields was chiefly confined to Christ-church; but it emigrated into Bethnal-Green, which is, more particularly, now the abode of the weavers; while this parish has been found, by the commissioners, to contain a much smaller number of looms than has ever been supposed. In July 1838, there were only 669 looms employed as follows: viz., 169 on velvets; 1 on jacquard velvets; 24 on jacquard or figured goods; and 475 on plain goods. To these may be added 147 unemployed, and 10 which had been parted with. The employed looms were possessed by 383 families. For full particulars respecting the earnings, hours of labour, and, in general, the history, present state, and prospects of the weavers of Spitalfields, including those of Bethnal-Green, Christ-church, and other parishes in the district, see article SPITALFIELDS.

CHRIST-CHURCH, TWYNHAM, a parish, market-town, and, with the chapelry of Holdenhurst, a borough in the hund. and union of Christ-church, west division of the county of Hants or Southampton; 21 miles south-west of Southampton, and 100 of London; situated on the border of the New Forest, between the rivers Avon and Stour, whence its ancient name Twynambourne. These two streams unite a little below the town, and fall into an estuary at Christ-church bay, which forms a capacious harbour, an entrance to which can only be obtained at high water, and even then by small vessels, in consequence of the shifting position of a sand bank, which runs from Hengistbury head to St. Christopher's cliff, Isle of Wight. It has, however, the peculiar advantage of double tides, to which we shall again allude. It includes the tythings of Bure with Hinton, Hern with Palley, Iford with Tuckton, and Wington with Burton. Living, a vicarage, with Holdenhurst curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £16, returned at £113; gross income £166. Tithes commuted in 1802. Acres 24,640. Houses 1,108. A. P. £2,876. Pop., in 1801, 3,773; in 1831, 5,344. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,541 2s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Christ-church, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 350 persons. The Christ-church poor-law union comprehends 3 parishes, embracing an area of 56 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 7,089. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £3,446. Expenditure, in 1838, £2,970.

The church was formerly the collegiate church of a priory, so ancient that we have no records of the time of its original establishment. Camden only observes, that it was founded early in the Saxon times; and other writers are equally deficient as to the exact period of its origin. Its inmates were secular canons of the order of St. Augustine; and the establishment, as early as the reign of Edward the Confessor, consisted of a dean and twenty-four canons. William Rufus bestowed the church and convent on Ralph Flambard, bishop of Durham, who had been dean here in the early part of his life. This prelate determined to rebuild the church, and the other conventual edifices, on a more extensive and superb scale than they had been originally constructed on; and for this purpose seized the canons' revenues, allowing each of them merely a sufficiency for his sustenance. He levelled the ancient buildings with the ground; and having sufficiently completed his new works, the church was solemnly dedicated to Christ. Baldwin, son of Richard de Redvers, to whom Henry I. granted this church on the disgrace of the bishop, introduced a certain number of regular canons into the society, and placed them under the government of a prior. When the possessions of this priory were surrendered to Henry the Eighth, their annual nett value was estimated by the commissioners at £312 7s. 9d., Dugd.; gross income, according to Speed, £544 6s. 0d. The church is a very large and interesting building; and though it has been greatly altered since the time of Bishop Flambard, still displays some considerable portions of his work, particularly in the nave, the south-western aisle, and the northern transept. The nave is formed by a double row of massive square pillars, ornamented with demi-columns, and semicircular ornamented arches, springing between them, from grouped pilasters. The north transept has been much altered, but still displays evident marks of the Norman style. The chancel and all the eastern part of the edifice, from the transept, is of more modern date than the transept and nave. The windows are large and ornamented; the vaulting is handsome, and the sides are wainscotted with oak curiously carved. This church contains the most magnificent sculptured altar piece now remaining in England. It represents the root and branch of Jesse, and covers the entire surface of the altar screen. The figures, foliage, and architecture, are combined with peculiarly happy effect. The figures possess considerable merit; the foliage is beautifully formed and executed, and the shafts, canopies, and cornices, may be reckoned among the best productions of the 14th century. The Patrons are the dean and chapter of Winchester. At Bransgore a chapel to this church has been erected in the Grecian Doric style, with tower and steeple, by the parliamentary commissioners. Sittings 567. The Independents have a place of worship here, licensed under the new marriage act; the church was formed in 1680. The Pithay chapel here is also licensed. There are various endowed charities in the possession of this parish, the most important of which are, Clingan's gift for the apprenticing of poor youths of Christ-church; income, in 1825, £127 10s., where-with premiums of £10 10s. are paid with children apprenticed within the parish, and £15 with those apprenticed out of its bounds. The benefit of this charity is extended to girls as well as boys. In 1824 there were 15 children apprenticed with the aid afforded by this charity. The Magdalen charity; in connection with which, there was formerly here an hospital called the Hospital of St. Mary Magdalen, founder unknown, for lazars, or lepers, and poor alms-people; failing which, for other good or charitable uses, in the town of Christ-church. The income of this charity, in 1825, was £56 6s.; distributed to the poor. School money; income, in 1825, £15; applied in the education of 10 boys. Admiral Brown's gift; income, in 1825, £60; distributed to the poor of this and various other parishes. Minor charities; income, in 1825, £66 4s. 4d. This parish possesses 11 infant schools, 8 daily, 2 Lancasterian, and 6 day and boarding schools, with 2 Sunday and daily, and 2 Sunday National schools.

Christ-church is a borough by prescription. It is governed by a mayor, recorder, bailiffs, and common councilmen, amounting in all to 24. The corporation do not appear to have exercised any functions as magistrates. The old borough was co-extensive with one of the 8 tythings of the parish, which was called the tything of the borough. The gross receipts in the mayoralty of 1831-2 amounted to £69 14s. 6d.; pop., in 1831, 1,569. The franchise was vested in the corporation, which consisted, in all, of the mayor and an unlimited number of burgesses, of whom, in 1831, there were 35; but the greatest number of electors who had polled during the previous 30 years, was 20. These returned two members to parliament. The new borough includes within its boundaries, excepting a distant portion of the tything of Hurn and Parley, all the parish of Christ-church, together with the chapelry of Holden-hurst; pop., in 1831, 6,077; constituency about 402 votes. The number of electors, however, who registered at the general election, in 1837, was only 259; the number polled 221. The new borough returns one member to parliament. Though the town is a corporation, it has been wholly under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates; and whether the limits of the new parliamentary borough would afford a competent number of persons to form a body of resident corporate magistrates could not with certainty be determined by the commissioners.

Christ-church derives its name from the church. Its ancient name was Twyneham. It is not a place of much consideration or importance; nor do there appear to be any causes in operation which are likely to produce any great increase of prosperity or population. No trade or manufactures are carried on in the town. The houses are of a middling description. The appearance of the inhabitants, who are thinly scattered, gives no indications of prosperity. Some of them derive employment from two breweries established here; others are employed in the salmon fishery on the Avon and Stour, or in fishing round the neighbouring shores, which abound with various kinds of fish. The poorer class of females are mostly engaged in knitting stockings, and children are employed in making watch-spring chains. The town, recently, was not lighted with gas, nor regularly paved; but it is well supplied with water. The market day is Monday, and there are two annual fairs, Trinity Thursday and October the 17th, for horses and bullocks. There is a branch of the Wilts and Dorset Banking company here.

From the hotel at Christ-church, which is conveniently fitted up, there is a beautiful view of the sea; of the Needle rocks at the west end of the Isle of Wight, &c. A peculiarity in the tides here has been already alluded to, namely, two high waters being produced by every tide. This phenomenon, so inexplicable from the general laws of tides, also occurs at the neighbouring port of Poole in Dorsetshire. It is occasioned by the situation of this coast with respect to the Isle of Wight, and from the contraction of the channel by the jutting out of the point of land on which Hurst castle stands. The tide flows into this channel from the west; and though at Hurst castle it sets in with uncommon violence, it does not meet the tide that passes round the island, till it has reached Spithead. The passage being too narrow for all the water to pass through, the time of high water at Hengistbury head is of course much earlier than either at Portsmouth or Chichester; at the full and change of the moon, the difference is three hours and a half. When the water begins to ebb, by flowing off from the west, the contraction in the channel at Hurst castle operates in a contrary direction; and by confining the water that has spread itself over the whole surface of the Southampton water, and of the channel within the island, gives the water in Christ-church bay an opportunity of flowing off much quicker, by which means it becomes so low, that the water that now pours through with great velocity at Hurst castle, is sufficient to produce a second rise in Christ-church and Poole harbours, of nearly three feet.* On a ridge of hills, about a mile and a half northward from the town, is an encampment; and other remains of an intrenchment may be traced in the vicinity. Hengistbury head, generally called Christ-church head by seamen, from its apparent connection with the church as viewed from the sea, is a bold headland, or promontory, forming the western termination of Christ-church bay: about a mile from the extremity of the point, the cliff dips for a considerable distance, and the estuary of the Stour and Avon is there only separated from the sea by a narrow neck of land. The principal parts of the castle that now remain, are the ruins of the keep, or citadel, and of an ancient stone building, that was probably the state apartment. The former occupied the summit of a small artificial mount, and, from the remains of the east and west walls now standing, appears to have enclosed an area of about twenty-eight feet by twenty-four: these walls are ten feet thick; their original height is unknown, as the upper parts have been taken down. From what remains of the ornamental parts of this building, it appears to have been elegantly finished, and cased with square stones; most of which, however, have been taken away: by the ruins of several walls, there were some ancient buildings at right angles to this hall, stretching away towards the keep. The origin of Christ-church is unquestionably extremely remote, and if not British, it was probably of Roman formation. It seems probable, indeed, that the spot on which the priory of Christ-church was erected, had originally been occupied by some heathen temple; similar instances of which auspicious substitution have occurred, not only in England, but throughout the whole continent of Europe; so that it seems to have been "a common practice with those who undertook the conversion of the heathens, to fix on such spots for their new places of worship, as had been hallowed in the opinion of the converts, by ancient consecration."[†]

* For additional particulars concerning the harbour and tides of Christ-church, see Hampshire Repository, vol. ii. p. 164, 174.

CHRIST-CHURCH, a parish, partly in the east half-hund. of Brixton, and partly in the borough of Southwark, union of St. Saviour, county of Surrey; south of Blackfriars' bridge, and formerly part of the parish of St. Saviour, but disjoined in 1706 by act of parliament. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; gross income £870. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial £248 12s. 6d., of Eton college £130. Patrons, in 1835, Trustees. There are nineteen daily schools in this parish, besides the charity school in Blackfriars'-road, established in 1713 for boys, and in 1720 for girls, by means of donations and subscriptions by some of the principal inhabitants of the parish. Income of the estate, in 1819, £180 15s. 1d. The annual subscriptions, donations, and collections at sermons, amounted, on an average, to £320 more, and on the termination of the leases then existing, it was expected that the income of the charity would be very greatly increased. 130 boys and 80 girls were educated to a certain extent upon the new system. 35 boys and 24 girls were completely clothed; the rest being supplied with cheap Sunday dresses. Expense of clothing, in 1819, £257. Teachers' salaries £130. There are other important charities belonging to Christ-church, especially that on which its separate existence as a parish depended. Mr. John Marshall, in 1627, bequeathed to trustees a fund, out of which, in the first place, the sum of £12 per annum was to be given towards the yearly maintenance of a poor scholar at an university, for the space of 7 years, at the expiry of which term others were to be successively chosen, to whom the annuity was to be given. The residue of this fund the donor directed to be employed in building a church in the parish of St. Saviour, to be called Christ-church; in providing a stipend of £40 to the preacher; and for other purposes. An act of parliament was passed in the 22d and 23d years of the reign of Charles II., for making the manor of Paris garden a parish, by the name of Christ-church parish, and in which it was stated, that William Angel, Esq., owner of the manor or liberty of Paris garden, had given a part of it as the site of the church, and for a churchyard. This act directed Marshall's trustees to raise, out of the estate, a sum not exceeding £400, over and above a sum of £700 already expended, for completing the church. Another act was passed in the reign of King William III., whereby we find that the £400 had been expended, but that the church still wanted a steeple and bells, and wherein a rate or assessment of £60 per annum was directed to be levied on the inhabitants of the new parish,—which had become very populous,—for the purpose of being added to the original £40 a-year, to be given to the minister; and Marshall's trustees were also thereby authorized to expend other £400 in the completion of the church, which was accordingly done. The trust estate became afterwards much improved; and, in the 11th year of the reign of George II., another act was passed for rebuilding and beautifying the church, at an expense not exceeding the sum of £2,500. The charity funds still accumulating, a decree of Chancery was obtained, in the 9th year of the reign of George III., authorizing the surplus rents and profits to be applied, with the funds of the governors of Queen Anne's bounty, towards the augmentation of small livings. The income of this charity in 1822, including churchyard rents derived from Angel's gift, was £965 11s. Edward's and Hopton's alms-houses are also valuable charities. The former was bestowed in 1717, for the purposes of purchasing ground, and building and endowing alms-houses, whenever the surplus income would afford it. In 1822 no new ground had been purchased; but there were 44 alms-houses built on part of an area, or plot of ground, also bequeathed by the benefactor, besides 15 houses built by a lessee, as part of 30 similar houses to be built on the same ground, by agreement, on a lease of 99 years from 1786, and yielding, in 1822, a rental of about £3,000 per annum. The income of this charity, in 1822, was £297, expended chiefly in the endowment of the alms-houses for behoof of 44 alms-people. Hopton's alms-houses are 26 in number; annual income, in 1822, £504, expended chiefly in the endowment of the alms-houses for behoof of 26 alms-men. In 1822 there were other charities in this parish to the extent of £486 13s. 3d. per annum, including Hamerton's, of £230 per annum, distributed weekly to the poor of the parish; and Bayse's, of £161 9s. per annum; £15 of which are paid to the organist of the church, and the remainder, one-half to poor clergymen of the church of England, and the other half to poor housekeepers of the parish. There was also, in 1822, an expectancy of about £30 a-year to be added to the last charity at the death of an annuitant. In the old manor of Paris Garden was situated one of the ancient playhouses of the metropolis, and here also were exhibited the bear-baitings so much in request among our ancestors. Acreage with Southwark. Houses 1,869. A. P. £56,960. Pop., in 1801, 9,933; in 1831, 13,705. Poor rates, in 1838, £4,805 15s.

CHRISTIAN-MALFORD, a parish in the hund. of North Damerham, union of Chippenham, county

* Grove's Antiquities, vol. ii.

† Topographical Remarks, vol. ii. pp. 41—44.

of Wilts; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Chippenham, intersected by the Great Western railway, and near the Wilts and Berks canal. It includes the chapelry of Avon. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Avon, in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £27; gross income £804. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. The Independents have a place of worship here. There are a daily and 2 day and Sunday National schools in this parish. Charities; income in 1833, £2 10s. In 1838 there was a woollen mill here, employing 18 hands. Acres 2,810. Houses 138. A. P. £7,007. Pop., in 1801, 938; in 1831, 1,006. Poor rates, in 1838, £350 5s. See AVON.

CHRISTONYDD KENRICK, CORDE CHRISTONYDD, and DYMEYNILLE UCHA, a township in the parish of Ruabon, Denbigh; 2 miles north of Chirk. Houses 697. Pop., in 1821, 3,107; in 1831, 3,566.

CHRISTLETON, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Broxton, union of Great Boughton, county of Chester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by east of Chester, intersected by the Chester and Birmingham railway. This parish includes the townships of Christleton, Cotton-Abbots, Cotton-Edmunds, Littleton, Rowton, and Church-Lawton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £39 5s.; gross income £901. Patroness, in 1835, Lady Champneys. There is a day and Sunday school here. There is also a charity school here, founded in 1779. In 1837 there were 10 boys and 10 girls at this school, the expense of whose education was defrayed from the funds of this charity. The entire number of boys was between 60 and 70, and of girls between 50 and 60. Poor's money in 1837, £46, at 5 per cent. interest, which was distributed among the poor. Acres 3,070. Houses 171. A. P. £10,236. Pop., in 1801, 1,302; in 1831, 1,409. Poor rates, in 1838, £391 14s. Acres of the township 1,480. Houses 126. A. P. £4,280. Pop., in 1801, 651; in 1831, 633. Poor rates, in 1838, £229 12s.

CHRISTON, a parish in the hund. of Winterstoke, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; 4 miles north-west of Axbridge. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 1s. 8d.; returned at £110; gross income £99. Tithes commuted in 1829; aggregate amount £83 16s. 6d. Patrons, Sir J. Smyth and the Rev. C. Gare alternately. There is a day and Sunday school here. Charities; annuity in 1824, £10. Acres 350. Houses 15. A. P. £836. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 83. Poor rates, in 1838, £42 14s.

CHRISTOW, a parish in the hund. of Wonford, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Chudleigh, on the river Teign. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8 6s. 8d.; returned at £138 0s. 7d.; gross income £176. Patron, in 1835, Viscount Exmouth. There are two daily schools here. Besides an alms-house, the only charity possessed by this parish in 1822, was a gift of land then yielding £30 per annum, £5 of which was payable to Ashton alms-house, and £5 to the rector of Truham, the residue being chiefly distributed to 5 poor people, inhabitants of the alms-house. Acres 3,680. Houses 100. A. P. £2,915. Pop., in 1801, 422; in 1831, 601. Poor rates, in 1838, £304 18s.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE, an extra-parochial division, entirely surrounded by the borough of Brecon, Wales. Houses 18. Pop., in 1821, 107; in 1831, 88. Poor rates, in 1838, £37 2s.

CHUDLEIGH, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Exminster, union of Newton-Abbot, county of Devon; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Exeter, on the eastern bank of the Teign. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £21; gross income £571. Patrons, the feoffees of the parish. The Independents have a chapel here; licensed under the new marriage act. The church was formed in 1710. There are four infant, one daily National, and six daily schools in this parish: one of the latter, Pincout's free-school, is endowed with £30 per annum, arising from an estate at Croydon, in the county of Surrey. There are various other charities connected with this parish, the most important of which is the parish lands; income in 1822, £35 16s. 2d. Other gifts then yielded £14 15s. 6d.

Woollen manufacture was formerly carried on to some extent in this place. The cider made here has a high character. An orchard of three acres, very near the town, is recorded to have yielded a sufficient quantity of apples for 60 hogsheads. The market-day is Saturday, and fairs are held on June 11th for sheep, and September 21st for horned cattle. The privilege of holding all these was purchased by the bishops of Exeter, who had, at one time, a magnificent palace about a quarter of a mile to the south; but there are now scarcely any remains of this edifice. In 1807 the greatest part of the town was destroyed by fire. The only fire-engine in the place was burnt; 180 houses, besides out-houses of great value, were destroyed, and the total loss amounted to about £70,000. The town is now in a renovated state, however, the inhabitants having been relieved by liberal subscriptions.

Chudleigh rock, about half a mile from the town, is, in the opinion of Polwhele, "one of the most striking inland rocks in the island." Its eastern aspect is bold, broad, and almost perpendicular, and appears one solid mass of marble. To the north-west it is more rugged, and an impetuous stream, dashing from a hollow of the rock over the rude fragments that impede its progress, forms a romantic water-fall. Warner, mentioning the immense masses of lime-stone of which the Chudleigh rock is formed, observes, that "Nature, who ornaments with incomparable taste, has relieved the flat broad face of these prodigious elevations with mountain plants, scattering them down the steep; or making amends for their absence, by throwing an elegant drapery of ivy over the parts where she has denied her trees." From the most elevated part of the rock the views are very rich; the scenery is composed of fine hanging woods; and in some places the branches of a picturesque oak form a sort of natural canopy for the contemplative spectator. Midway down the cliff is a large cavern, the gloomy recesses of which are said in the traditions of the peasantry to be inhabited by Pixies, or Piskies, a race of supernatural beings, "invisibly small." Various quarries have been opened in this rock, and a kiln erected for the burning of the lime-stone, which is of superior quality, and employs a great number of hands. This parish formerly abounded with woods; and the north-east side of the parish still retains the name of Cludleigh-woods. Cludleigh confers the title of baron on the Clifford family, whose seat at Ugbrook, about a mile to the south or south-west, is considered to be one of the most enchanting situations in the county. The views in the vicinity are eminently beautiful. Acres 6,230. Houses 413. A. P. £8,968. Pop., in 1801, 1,766; in 1831, 2,278. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,011 9s.

CHUMLEIGH, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Witheridge, union of South Molton, county of Devon; 21 miles north-west of Exeter, on the river Dart. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bar-stable and dio. of Exeter; rated at £20 18s. 1½d.; gross income £440. The church was formerly collegiate, and there are still five prebends annexed to, though not necessarily united with, the rectory. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Hole. The Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here; one of these, styled Sharpe's chapel, is licensed under the new marriage act. The Independent church was formed in 1700. There are 5 daily schools in this parish, including a school connected with the British and Foreign school society. There are several charities connected with this parish, the principal of which are; the parish lands; income in 1824, £60 10s.; and Osborne's gift; annual rents in 1824, £10; both of which sums, together with £5 11s. 6d., the annual proceeds of another small gift, were distributed amongst the poor. There is also a charity-school, supported by an endowment, in 1824, of £10, wherewith 12 boys and 12 girls were taught to read, and the girls to knit and sew. The inhabitants are engaged in agriculture, trade, and manufactures. In 1797 the church was struck and much damaged by lightning. In 1803, 95 houses and uninsured property to the value of £11,000 were destroyed by fire, and in 1813, much damage was done by a storm, during which the river Dart, in some places, rose 10 feet in the short space of 15 minutes, and bridges, fences, &c. were swept away. The market-day is Thursday; but, as a corn market, it is almost unused. There is an annual fair on the last Wednesday in July, for cattle. Chumleigh is often spelled Chimley, but this is merely the vulgar Devonshire pronunciation. Acres 8,650. Houses 304. A. P. £6,247. Pop., in 1801, 1,383; in 1831, 1,573. Poor rates, in 1838, £759 5s.

CHUNAT, a township in the parish of Glossop, Derby; 8 miles north-north-west of Chapel-en-le-Frith. Houses 19. Pop., in 1811, 145; in 1831, 119. Other returns with the parish.

CHURCH-ASTON, a chapelry in the parish of Edgmond, Salop; about a mile south of Newport. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Edgmond. There are 3 daily schools here. Acreage and A. P. with the parish. Houses 87. Pop., in 1801, 358; in 1831, 451. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 4s.

CHURCHAM, a parish partly in the hund. of Westbury, and partly in the hund. of Dudstone and King's Barton, union of Westbury on Severn, county of Gloucester; 4½ miles west by south of Gloucester, north of the river Severn. It includes the hamlets of Over Higham, and Linton. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Bulley, in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £20 5s.; gross income £389. Tithes commuted in 1802. There is a boarding-school here. Charities, income in 1826, £5. Acres 4,100. Houses 171. A. P. £5,252. Pop., in 1801, 529; in 1831, 906. Poor rates, in 1838, £152 14s.

CHURCH-BRAMPTON. See BRAMPTON-CHURCH.

CHURCH-BROUGHTON AND SAPPERTON. See BROUGHTON-CHURCH and SAPPERTON.

CHURCH-CONISTONE, a chapelry in the parish of Ulverstone, county of Lancaster. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; returned at £75 19s. 10d.; gross income £102. Patron, in 1835, T. R. G. Braddyll. There are two daily schools here. It is 4 miles west from Hawkshead. Acres 7,210. Houses 101. A. P. £1,314. Pop., in 1801, 338; in 1831, 587. Poor rates, in 1838, 196 19s.

CHURCH-DOWN, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Dudstone and King's Barton, and union and county of Gloucester; 3½ miles east of Gloucester, close on the Cheltenham and Gloucester railway. It includes the hamlet of Hucklecot. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, returned at £80; gross income £88. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Bristol. There are two daily schools in this parish besides a charity-school, founded in 1734 by Henry Window, Esq., and endowed with a rent charge of £20 for the instruction of children of this parish, together with that of Badgeworth. There are several other trifling charities possessed by this parish. Acres 4,070. Houses 199. A. P. £3,287. Pop., in 1801, 644; in 1831, 982. Poor rates, in 1838, £331 6s. See BADGEWORTH.

CHURCH-EATON, a parish in the west division of the hund. of Cuttleshone, union of Penkridge, county of Stafford; 7 miles east of Newport, near the Birmingham and Liverpool canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £14 19s. 9½d.; gross income £1,078; nett income £976. Patron, in 1835, Earl Talbot. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres, including Marston, High-oun, and Little-oun, Osalow, and Wood-Eaton, 4,980. Houses 162. A. P. £5,796. Pop., in 1801, 784; in 1831, 922. Poor rates, in 1838, £329 3s.

CHURCH-END, a township in the parish of Shenley, Buckingham. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,510. Houses 54. A. P. £2,463. Pop., in 1801, 232; in 1831, 240.

CHURCH-ENSTONE. See ENSTONE CHURCH.

CHURCHENFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Church-Staunton, Devon. It has fairs on 25th January and last Friday in March, for horses, and last Friday in April, for bullocks. It is 9 miles north-east from Honiton.

CHURCH-GRESLEY, a parish in the hund. of Repton and Gresley, union of Burton-upon-Trent, county of Derby; 4½ miles south-east of Burton-upon-Trent. It includes the townships of Drake-low, and Linton, and the hamlets of Castle-Gresley, Swadlincote, Oakthorpe, and Donisthorpe. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lichfield, of the certified value of £6; gross income £108. Patron, in 1835, E. Moulsey, Esq. This parish possesses 5 daily schools. Acres 6,700. Houses 484. A. P. £8,470. Pop., in 1801, 1,180; in 1831, 2,543. Poor rates, in 1838, £390 1s.

CHURCH-HONEYBOURN, with PODON, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Blacken-hurst, union of Evesham, county of Worcester; 5½ miles east of Evesham. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £6 4s. 4½d.; returned at £58 14s. 10d.; gross income £290. Patrons, in 1835, the heirs of the Rev. T. Williams. Acres 1,290. Houses 25. A. P. £1,287. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 106. Poor rates, in 1838, £49 19s.

CHURCH-HULME, a chapelry in the parish of Sandbach, Chester; 4 miles east of Middlewich, intersected by the Nantwich and Birmingham railway. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Sandbach, of the certified value of £23 3s.; gross income £54. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Armitstead. There are 4 daily and 2 Sunday and daily National schools here. Acres 760. Houses 78. A. P. £1,611. Pop., in 1801, 314; in 1831, 406. Poor rates, in 1838, £201 2s.

CHURCHFIELD. See OUNDLIE.

CHURCHILL, a parish in the hund. of Chadlington, union of Chipping-Norton, county of Oxford; 2½ miles south-west of Chipping-Norton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £7 16s. 0½d.; gross income £198. Patron, in 1835, J. H. Langton, Esq. There are 2 day and Sunday schools here. Charities; income, in 1824, £14 9s. 7d. This parish is principally remarkable as the birth-place of Warren Hastings. Acres 2,850. Houses 127. A. P. £4,869. Pop., in 1801, 491; in 1831, 633. Poor rates, in 1838, £261 13s.

CHURCHILL, a parish in the hund. of Winterstoke, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; 4 miles north of Axbridge. Living, a perpetual curacy, a peculiar of the court of Barnwell at Wells; gross income £98. The church is a handsome structure, and has a remarkably fine altar-piece, representing the Lord's Supper; and there are some crosses on the floor in a beautiful state of preservation. There are a daily, and a Sunday and daily National school here. Charities; income, in 1824, £31 10s., expended in providing clothing, bread, &c. for the poor, and in educating their children. Acres 2,430. Houses 184. A. P. £4,264. Pop., in 1801, 599; in 1831, 985. Poor rates, in 1838, £398 3s.

CHURCHILL, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Halfshire, union of Kidderminster, county of Worcester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Kidderminster. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £5 6s. 8d.; reported gross income £258; tithes commuted in 1811. Patron, in 1835, Lord Lyttleton. There are a daily and a boarding school here. The charities consist of 9 houses and 4 acres of land, with other property; total income, in 1829, £30 5s.—£15 15s. of which was applied in teaching 20 children reading and catechism; the residue being expended on repairs and ornaments of the church. Acres 950. Houses 28. A. P. £1,142. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 114. Poor rates, in 1838, £44 16s.

CHURCHILL, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 4 miles east-south-east of Worcester; close on the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; reported gross income £175; tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £165 16s. 6d. Patron, in 1835, R. Berkeley. Charities; income, in 1829, £7 5s. 4d. Acres 1,000. Houses 19. A. P. £1,083. Pop., in 1801, 98; in 1831, 161. Poor rates, in 1838, £70 6s.

CHURCH-KNOWLE, a parish in the hund. of Haslour, union of Wareham and Purbeck, Blandford division of the county of Dorset; about a mile south-west of Corfe Castle. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £17 17s. 6d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. John Clavell. There are 3 small daily schools here. Acres, including the tythings of Bradle and Creech, 2,500. Houses 86. A. P. £512. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 438. Poor rates, in 1838, £306 16s.

CHURCH-LANGTON, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Market Harborough, county of Leicester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Market Harborough; on the river Welland. Living, a rectory with the curacies of Langton-Thorp and Langton-Tur, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £48 13s. 4d.; gross income £1,032; nett income £969. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Hanbury. There are 5 daily schools in this parish. It includes the township of Langton (East), and the chapelries of Langton (West), Langton-Thorp, and Langton-Tur. Acres 4,280. Houses 210. A. P. £9,739. Pop., in 1801, 942; in 1831, 968. Poor rates, in 1838, £841 4s.

CHURCH-LAWTON, a parish in the hund. of Northwich, union of Congleton, county of Chester.

Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £9 2s. 7d. Patron, in 1835, C. B. Lawton, Esq. Tithes commuted in 1839. Rent charge £260. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,540. Houses 98. A. P. £2,754. Pop., in 1801, 445; in 1831, 516. Poor rates, in 1838, £259 13s.

CHURCH-LENCH, a parish, partly in the lower division of Blackenhurst hund., and partly in the upper division of Halfshire hund., union of Evesham, county of Worcester; 6 miles north-east of Pershore. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; valued at £9 11s. 10½d.; gross income £170. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £116 6s. 6½d. There is a daily school here. Acres, including the hamlets of Atch-Lench and Sheriffs-Lench, 2,600. Houses 78. A. P. £2,354. Pop., in 1801, 275; in 1831, 399. Poor rates, in 1838, £187.

CHURCH-OAKLEY, a parish in the hund. of Chuteley, union of Basingstoke, county of Southampton; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Basingstoke; intersected by the Southampton and London railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £11 13s. 11½d.; gross income £325. Patrons, the master and fellows of Queen's college, Oxford. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,640. Houses 52. A. P. £1,411. Pop., in 1801, 247; in 1831, 249. Poor rates, in 1838, £129 8s.

CHURCH-OVER, a parish in the Rugby division of the hund. of Knightlow, union of Rugby, county of Warwick; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Rugby; intersected by the Midland Counties railway to Leicester. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £15; gross income £280. Patron, in 1835, Abraham Grimes, Esq. There are an Independent church here, and 2 day and Sunday, and 1 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities; income in 1834, £24; applied for behoof of the poor. Acres 1,440. Houses 56. A. P. £3,273. Pop., in 1801, 245; in 1831, 295. Poor rates, in 1838, £146 19s.

CHURCH-SPEEN, a tything in the parish of Speen, Berkshire. Pop., in 1801, 408; in 1821, 600. Other returns with the parish.

CHURCH-STAUNTON, a parish in the hund. of Hemyock, union of Taunton, county of Devon; 10 miles north-north-east of Honiton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £28 5s. 5d.; gross income £430. Tithes commuted in 1799. Patron, in 1835, P. Clarke, Esq. This parish possesses 3 daily schools. In 1838 there was a silk-mill here, employing 63 hands. Acres 4,980. Houses 176. A. P. £3,677. Pop., in 1801, 730; in 1831, 977. Poor rates, in 1838, £443 9s.

CHURCH-STRETTON. See STRETTON-CHURCH.

CHURCH-STOKE, a parish, partly in the hund. of Chirbury, county of Salop, but mostly in the hund. of Cawree, county of Montgomery, North Wales; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Montgomery. It includes the townships of Weston-Madoc, and Brompton with Riston. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; certified at £10; gross income £151. The tythes and the patronage belong to the hospital at Clun. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Houses 74. A. P. £6,335. Pop., in 1811, 1,181; in 1831, 1,453. Poor rates, in 1838, £610 1s.

CHURCH-STOWE, a parish in the hund. of Stanborough, union of Kingsbridge, county of Devon; 2 miles north-west of Kingsbridge. Living, a discharged vicarage with Kingsbridge, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £16 16s. 11d., returned at £122; gross income £128. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £298 12s. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 2 small daily schools here. Acres 1,640. Houses 57. A. P. £3,331. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 326. Poor rates, in 1838, £203 16s.

CHURCH-TOWN, a chapelry in the parish of Whalley, Lancashire; 4 miles east of Blackburn; intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Living, a curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Chester; certified at £12 17s. 8d., returned at £130. Patron, in 1829, Earl Howe. There are 1 daily National and 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed. The calico-printing is carried on in this township to a great extent. Acres 620. Houses 176. A. P. £995. Pop., in 1801, 323; in 1831, 979. Poor rates, in 1838, £345.

CHURSTON-FERRERS, a parish in the hund. of Haytor, union of Totness, county of Devon; 1½ mile west of Brixham, near Tor Bay. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Brixham. There are 5 daily schools in this parish. Charities; income £5 10s. per annum, applied for behoof of the poor. Acres 2,380. Houses 140. A. P. £4,400. Pop., in 1801, 663; in 1831, 763. Poor rates, in 1838, £306 15s.

CHURTON-BY-ALDFORD, a township in the parish of Aldford, county of Chester. Acres 760. Houses 44. A. P. £232. Pop., in 1801, 140; in 1831, 238. Poor rates, in 1838, £36 13s.

CHURTON-BY-FARNDON, a township in the parish of Farnton, county of Chester; 7 miles south-south-east of Chester; bounded on the east by the river Dee. There is a daily school here. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of impropriate, £70; of curatorial, £1. Acres 450. Houses 25. A. P. £848. Pop., in 1801, 117; in 1831, 122. Poor rates, in 1838, £29 1s.

CHURTON, a parish in the hund. of Swanborough, union of Devizes, Wiltshire; 4 miles north-north-east of West Lavington. It includes the tything of Conock. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £11 0s. 5d.; gross income £172. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 2 small daily schools in this parish. Acres 2,040. Houses 77. A. P. £1,939. Pop., in 1801, 347; in 1831, 266. Poor rates, in 1838, £253 10s.

CHURWELL, a township in the parish of Batley, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-south-west of Leeds; west of the river Aire. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, and there are 2 daily schools. Acres 540. Houses 196. A. P. £1,378. Pop., in 1801, 502; in 1831, 1,023. Poor rates, in 1838, £217 6s.

CHUTE, a parish in the hund. of Kinwardstone, union of Andover, Wiltshire; 3½ miles north-east of Ludgershall. It includes the extra-parochial liberty of Cadley. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, and a peculiar of the dean and chapter there; rated at £11; gross income £244. Patron, in 1835, the prebendary in Salisbury cathedral. There are 2 daily schools here. Charities; income, in 1833, £6 16s., distributed to deserving poor in clothing and blankets. Acres 3,220. Houses 75. A. P. £2,903. Pop., in 1801, 389; in 1831, 501. Poor rates, in 1838, £298 9s.

CHUTE-FOREST, an extra-parochial district in the hund. of Kinwardstone, county of Wilts; 5 miles north-east by north of Ludgershall. Acres 1,930. Houses 17. A. P. £1,705. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 110. Poor rates, in 1838, £245 8s.

CHUTELY HUNDRED, in the Kingsclere division of the county of Southampton. Area 10,010 acres. Houses 370. Pop., in 1831, 2,025.

CILCEN, CILCEIN, or KIL-KEN, a parish in the hund. of Coleshill, union of Holywell, county of Flint, North Wales; 4 miles west-north-west of Mold, at the foot of Moel-Famma, in the vale of Clwyd, west of the river Allen. Living, a rectory and discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; rated at £23 0s. 7d.; reported gross income £401; aggregate amount of tithe-composition £775 14s. 2d. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Houses returned under the seven townships of which it is composed, viz., Cefn, Llan, Llysdan-hunedd, Llys-y-coed, Maes-y-gros, Michlas, and Tullymen, 215. A. P. £3,416. Pop., in 1801, 967; in 1831, 1,189. Poor rates, in 1838, £329 16s.

CILCENIN, or KILKENIN, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Ilar, union of Aberayron, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 9½ miles east-east by south of Cardigan, on the river Teifi. Living, a chapelry, not in charge, to the vicarage of Llanbadern-Tref-Eglwys; certified at £5, returned at £45; gross income £32. Patron, in 1835, the bishop of St. David's. There is a daily school here. This parish is famous in Welsh history as the scene of a bloody battle between Maelgwynne and his nephews, Rhys and Owen, who attacked his camp in the night. Houses 161. A. P. £417. Pop., in 1801, 530; in 1831, 695. Poor rates, in 1838, £179 7s.

CILIAERON. See KILLYARON.

CILMARGH and ISHGORD, a hamlet in the parish of Llandeveylog, Carmarthenshire. Houses 27. Pop., in 1821, 169; in 1831, 162. Other returns with the parish.

CIL-RHEDDYN. See KIL-RHEDDYN.

CIL-Y-BEBILL. See KIL-Y-BEBILL.

CIL-Y-MAENLLWYD. See KIL-Y-MAENLLWYD.

CINDERFORD, a district in Dean Forest, Gloucester; 2½ miles from Holy Trinity church; and 3½ from Viney hill. A chapel has recently been built here by the commissioners of Queen Anne's bounty. There are large iron-works here. Notice was given in March, 1840, of an intended application to parliament for a bill to make a branch from the Forest of Dean railway, commencing at Cinderford bridge, and terminating at Brimsill, near the river Severn.

CIPPENHAM. See CIPPENHAM.

CIRCOURT. See GOOSEY and CIRCOURT.

CIRENCESTER—colloquially, CICETER—a borough, market-town, and parish, in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, union of Cirencester, Gloucestershire, on the western bank of the Churn, 4½ miles north from its confluence with the Severn. A branch of the Thames and Severn canal comes close to the town, and the Cheltenham and Great Western railway has a station on the west side of the town. Acres 5,900. Houses 1,079. A. P. £7,421. Pop., in 1801, 4,130; in 1831, 5,420. Poor rates, in 1838, £938.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Cirencester, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Cirencester poor-law union comprehends 39 parishes, embracing an area of 134 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 18,720. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,777. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,658.

Ecclesiastical affairs, &c.—Living, a discharged perpetual curacy in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; gross income £450; in the patronage of the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The church is a magnificent Gothic structure, with an embattled tower 132 feet high, and ornamented with pinnacles and statues. The interior consists of a nave, side aisles, a choir or chancel, and 5 chapels. There are two rows of clustered columns, five in each; which, with two pilasters at each end, support the roof. The great east and west windows are filled with tasteful arrangements of painted glass. The antiquary will be gratified, in this church, by the sight of several very rich sepulchral brasses. The wool merchants, for whom Cirencester was celebrated, traded, in the 15th century, with the manufacturers in Flanders, where these brasses were made and given in exchange. They consist of male figures in armour, and female, in mitred head dresses of that age, with veils and long loose gowns. Many inscriptions and monuments are contained in the different parts of this edifice. On the outside of the church, under the parapet of the north side of the nave, is a range of curious sculpture, representing a series of figures, chiefly habited as minstrels, with various instruments of music practised in the 15th century. This is an extremely interesting specimen, if it be remembered that we have no accurate knowledge of the musical instruments of the Greeks and Romans, but that collected from their bas-reliefs and statues. Under the parapet, on the south side, is another range of sculptured figures, conjectured to represent some of the characters in the old mysteries or moralities, which, at the time of the erection of this fabric, were the favourite amusements of the people. The coincidence of parts in this church renders it evident that it was built from an original design, regularly pursued from its commencement to its completion; though the arms of the contributors, from their different dates, prove it to have been many years in hand. Besides this church, and another which has been desecrated, "there was," says Leland, "afore the Conquest, a fair and rich college of prebendaries in this town, but of what Saxon's foundation no man can tell." "King Henry I. built here, A. D. 1117, to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, a stately abbey for Black canons, which he endowed with the lands of the secular priests and other revenues and privileges, which were so much increased by some of the succeeding kings, that 26th Hen. VIII. it was valued at £1,051 7s. 1d. ob. per annum, Dugd., Speed; but the site was granted 1^o Edward VI. to Sir Thomas Seymour, and 6^o Elizabeth, to Richard Masters." Tanner's Not. Mon. All that remains of this rich abbey—whose mitred abbot was a lord of parliament—is a barn and two gateways. There are here several chapels-of-ease, besides places of worship for Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, the Society of Friends, Unitarians, &c. &c. The Baptist chapel is licensed under the new marriage act.

Charities and Schools.—There are numerous charities, some of them valuable. The most important are,—the charity founded in 1779 by John Day, Esq. of Lechdale, in this county, which consists of tithes and other property, yielding, in 1828, a yearly income of £263 10s. 10d., which, after paying the land taxes and other expenses, the donor appointed to be distributed by his trustees to the poor and unfortunate housekeepers of the church of England, in the parishes of Cirencester and Minchinhampton, not deriving alms from the parish, and renting houses at the rate of £3 per annum at least; each of them receiving not less than £3, nor more than £15 per annum. This property is under the management of the minister and churchwardens of Cirencester.—The Blue coat school, so named from the dress of the boys, was established by subscription in 1714. Four years afterwards, Thomas Powell, Esq., while living, endowed it with an annuity of £15 for 99 years, which annuity has long since expired with its term; but, by his will, he bequeathed about 10 acres of land in trust, a moiety of the annual rents and profits of which to be applied to the support of this school; the other moiety to the support of the Lewis lane almswomen. In virtue of a decree of the court of Chancery, made in 1737, £20 per annum were appropriated out of the estates of Rebecca Powell, under the general power given by her to her trustees, for endowing the Yellow school, to the support of this establishment; both being carried on under the same management. Other endowments followed; and, in 1828, the income of this charity amounted to £113 8s. 3d.; 20 boys and 20 girls then receiving instruction, who were all entirely clothed.—The Yellow coat school was founded under the will of Mrs. Rebecca Powell, who died in 1722, for teaching 20 boys of Cirencester, reading and arithmetic, and the art of framework-knitting; and for clothing and teaching 20 girls, and learning them to spin. After much delay, by different applications to the court of Chancery, the school was commenced 15 years after the death of the testatrix. It consists of a large stone edifice, in which are taught and clothed 40 boys and 20 girls of the Yellow coat charity, besides those of the Blue coat and quarterly schools,—both of which participate in the funds of Mrs. Powell's charity. The mode of instruction, in 1828, was in accordance with the National plan. The total number of children taught in the schools was 286;—131 boys, and 155 girls. The boys appointed to the benefit of the clothing establishment of the Yellow coat charity are selected from the quarterly schools by the parish minister. The total income of Mrs. Powell's charities in 1828, was £653 9s. 3d., including the Blue coat school endowment, the expenditure comprehending donations to almswomen, gratuities and apprentice fees for the scholars, &c. &c.—There is here also a free grammar-school, founded by Bishop Ruthall, who was a native of this town, and an eminent privy-councillor to Henry VII. The master is appointed by the Lord-chancellor. Several eminent persons have been educated at this school; and among them the far-famed Dr. Jenner, inventor of the vaccine inoculation. Income, in 1828, £18 18s. 2d.—Among other charitable institutions, there are three hospitals.—St. John's, founded by Henry I., the revenues of which amounted, in 1828, to £90; out of which 8 poor almswomen received each 3s. 6d. a-week;—St. Lawrence's hospital, said to have been founded by Edith, lady of the manor of Wiggold; income, in 1828, £18 15s. 3d., out of which three widows received each £3 15s. 10d. per annum. The hospital no longer exists; but three cottages have been built in lieu thereof,—one at the expense of Earl Bathurst, who has made other valuable improvements on the property belonging to this charity;—St. Thomas's hospital, founded by Sir William Nottingham in 1483; income, in 1828, £6 18s. 8d., given to four poor men, two of whom live in the hospital. There are various other charities in this parish of minor importance. There are 13 daily, 2 Lancasterian, and 6 day and boarding schools.

Manufactures, &c.—There is little trade. The manufacture of woollen cloth was formerly carried on here to a great extent, having been established as early as the period of Henry IV., who granted a charter to a body of weavers in this town. For wool it was the first market in the kingdom, but the trade, both in wool and woollen cloth, is now trifling. There is a small carpet manufactory, however, and a large cloth one, in the town. It has two market-days; Monday for provisions and corn, and Friday for provisions. The fairs are Easter Tuesday, July 18th, Monday before, and Monday after, Old Michaelmas; November 8th for cattle, sheep, horses, wool oil, and leather, and a new sheep fair held on the first Monday in August, September, and October. There are also annual races.

The town has a very respectable appearance as a country town. It is in good condition, rather increasing in buildings, and seems to be inhabited by persons in opulent circumstances. It consists of four principal and a number of less considerable streets. Several new streets have been recently built, and others are in progress. The streets generally are lighted with gas, well paved, and supplied with water. It is celebrated for the salubrity of its atmosphere, and its general healthfulness.

Franchise, &c.—The parish extends far beyond the limits of the old, but coincides with those of the new, parliamentary borough. The town itself had spread beyond the old borough boundaries. The right of election resided in all the inhabitant householders, being parishioners, and not receiving alms, and was thus enjoyed by nearly 700. But the greatest number polled, within the 30 years previous to 1832, was 573 in 1812. This is not a municipal or incorporated borough. It is governed by two high constables, assisted by 14 of the principal inhabitants called wardmen, chosen annually at the court leet of the manor. Representatives were sent from this borough to the great council of the nation so early as the reign of Edward III.; but it is only since the reign of Elizabeth that it acquired the privilege of sending regularly two burgesses to parliament,—a privilege which it still enjoys under the reform act. The number of electors, in respect of property occupied by virtue of the reform act, registered in this borough for the year 1836, was 102; for the year 1837, 119; and of electors, in respect of rights, other than those conferred by the same act, registered in 1836, 483; for 1837, 467; making, in all, for 1836, 585; and for 1837, 586. The two constables, or steward and bailiff of the manor, are the returning officers. Cirencester is one of the polling-places for the eastern division of the county of Gloucester. The jurisdiction of the county magistrates extends over this borough, in which the petty sessions for the seven hundreds of Cirencester are held. A court of requests is also held here for the same division.

History and Antiquities.—Cirencester is a town which has excited not a little antiquarian interest. It was anciently a city of the Britons, prior to the invasion of the Romans. Camden terms it "a famous city of great antiquity, called, by Ptolemy, Corinium; by Antonine, Durocornovium." It was a town of importance also during the Roman domination, when it was the metropolis of the Dobuni, and the seat of a Roman colony. The eligibility of this spot for a Roman station is evinced by the circumstance of the Foss-way, the Irmin-street, and the Icknield-way, all meeting here. The town was more extended than it now is. On the departure of the Romans, the government of this city reverted to the Britons, and was afterwards wrested from them by the West Saxons. From the year 656, when Penda, the first Christian king of Mercia, annexed it to the Mercian kingdom, down to the time of Henry IV., this city underwent various vicissitudes; and here the rebellion against Henry, and in favour of Richard II., terminated by the death of the principal leaders, the earls of Kent and Salisbury, who were shut up in their quarters in this town, and slain by the townsmen; in recompense for which, Henry sent the inhabitants a charter of incorporation, with an order for an annual allowance of venison from the forest of Bradon, and of wine from the royal cellars, to enrich and to enliven their election dinners. (Rymer, VIII. 250.) By this charter the town was erected into a hundred of itself, but it being cancelled by the court of chancery in the reign of Elizabeth, the town has merged into the adjoining hundred. It was here, as is generally stated, that matters came to the last extremity between Charles I. and his people, by the inhabitants insulting and resisting Lord Chandos, when attempting to carry into effect a commission of array. It made, however, ample amends for this patriotic ebullition, by declaring for that priest-ridden bigot, James II., in 1688, and attacking Colonel Lovelace on his march to join the prince of Orange.

Scarcely a year passes without the discovery here of some memorial of antiquity, or vestige of the Roman occupation. Tesselated pavements, Roman sculptures, statues, altars, urns, and coins; and subterranean vaults of Roman brick. There are also tumuli, and vestiges of Roman walls and fortifications, together with the remains of what is supposed to have been a Roman bull-ring, or amphitheatre. There was a castle here in the time of Henry III., when it was totally destroyed.

OAKLEY GROVE, the seat of Earl Bathurst, lies on the west of Cirencester. The mansion is only a small distance from the town, the view of which is intercepted by a lofty wall, lined with perennial trees. It was built early in the last century, and though very spacious, is more convenient than grand. The plan is French, with a large hall in the centre, and rooms en suite, like Petworth, in Sussex, erected about the same time, by Charles, duke of Somerset. Though the sameness of the surface at Cirencester, rendered a picturesque effect difficult, if not wholly impracticable; yet the park and grounds confer a superior credit on Henry, Lord Bathurst, who was one of the first to explode the formalities introduced by Le Nôtre, under the influence of King William: the praise of priority of design is certainly due to him; for till the art of modern gardening had been introduced by Kent and Brown, and applied in so universal a degree, this park was unrivalled, excepting by that at Stowe, and by Mr. Pelham's at Esher. In the park is an ancient stone cross which formerly stood in the lesser market-place in Cirencester, and was removed hither a few years ago. On the base is some rude ornamental carving; and round the capital of the shaft, which is octangular, and about thirteen feet high, were four shields of arms, now nearly obliterated. There is also a circular tumulus, called Grismond's tower, about twenty feet high; in which several urns were found, containing ashes and burnt bones.

CLACK, a hamlet in the parish of Lineham, Wiltshire; 5 miles south-west of Wootton-Basset, close on the Wilts and Berks canal. It has fairs April 5th and October 10th.

CLACKCLOSE HUNDRED, on the south-west extremity of the county of Norfolk, between Downham and Swaffham. Area 91,880 acres. Houses 3,288. Pop. in 1831, 17,663.

CLACKHEATON, or CLACKHEATON, a chapelry in the parish of Birstal, west riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles south-south-east of Bradford, in a fertile valley on a branch of the Aire; the adjacent view is very romantic. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Birstal; gross income £125. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Currer. A new church has been erected here by the parliamentary commissioners, in the Gothic style, with a tower, at an expense of £2,387 8s. Sittings 603. The Independents have also a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1724. There are 3 daily schools in this chapelry. Clackheaton is a weaving village. There are at present 250 hand looms here, 30 of which are worsted looms. See articles BIRSTAL and LEXDS. Here Dr. Richardson discovered the site and remains of a Roman town. The coins discovered were principally of the lower empire. Acres 1,630. Houses 619. A. P. £3,455. Pop., in 1801, 1,637; in 1831, 3,317. Poor rates, in 1838, £438 13s.

CLACTON (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Tendring, county of Essex; 14 miles east-south-east of Colchester. Living, a discharged vicarage, with Holland (Little) donative, in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £10; gross income £240. Patron, in 1835, F. Nassau, Esq. Charities; income in 1836, £5 10s. There are 5 daily schools in this parish. A fair for toys is held here on the 29th of June. Acres 4,170. Houses 223. A. P. £6,918. Pop., in 1801, 904; in 1831, 1,149. Poor rates, in 1838, £401.

CLACTON (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Tendring, county of Essex; 12 miles east-south-east of Colchester. Living, a discharged vicarage, in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £120. Patron, in 1835, F. Nassau, Esq. Charities; income in 1836, £35, expended in clothing, coals, &c., to the poor, and in alms to the sick, &c. There is a daily school here. A fair for toys is held here on the 25th of July. Acres 3,110. Houses 78. A. P. £4,772. Pop., in 1801, 475; in 1831, 546. Poor rates, in 1838, £195.

CLAIFE, a township in the parish of Hawkeshead, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles south-east of Hawkeshead, bounded on the east by Eastwaite water, and on the west by Winandermere, which is here a quarter of a mile broad, and over which there is a ferry. There is an endowed daily school in this township. Acres 5,310. Houses 76. A. P. £1,972. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 463. Poor rates, in 1838, £122 4s.

CLAINES, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Droitwich, Worcestershire; 2½ miles north of Worcester, east of the river Severn, and near the Worcester and Birmingham canal. It includes the tything of Whistons. Living, a curacy, with St. George's, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Worcester; returned at £100; gross income £261. Patron, in 1835, Sir O. Wakeman, Bart. A new church has been erected here by the parliamentary commissioners, in the Gothic style, at an expense of £3,345 10s. 8d. Sittings 1,005. The income of charities possessed by this parish in 1828 was £38 10s. 2d., chiefly expended in alms, food and clothing, &c., to the poor. There are a daily and 2 day and Sunday National schools in this parish. The latter, St. George's district school, is attended by 118 pupils daily, and by 170 on Sundays. Part of this parish extends into the city of Worcester, and is united with it by the new boundaries act. The nunnery of Whitestons, now the very handsome mansion of White Ladies, to which Charles II. retired after the battle of Worcester, is in this parish. Here also is the island of Bevery, formed by the Beverburn, or Barbon, a stream which runs through the parish. This island is remarkable for having twice proved an asylum to the citizens of Worcester; in the time of Hardicanute in 1041, and in 1637 during the time of a dreadful pestilence. The Hamlet of Claines is delightfully situated among fertile meadows, and in the vicinity of lofty groves, elegant policies, and picturesque scenery in general. Acres 4,600. Houses 1,066. A. P. £15,594. Pop., in 1801, 2,046; in 1831, 5,568. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,108 13s.

CLANABOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of North Tawton with Winkley, union of Crediton, county of Devon; 2 miles south-east of Bow. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £5 17s. 8½d., returned at £124 9s., gross income £171. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 1,790. Houses 9. A. P. £980. Pop., in 1801, 59; in 1831, 58. Poor rates, in 1838, £56 9s.

CLANDON (EAST), a parish in the second division of the hund. of Woking, union of Guildford, county of Surrey; 4½ miles east-north-east of Guildford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £10 6s. 10½d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, Lord King. There are 2 daily schools and a workhouse in this parish. Acres 1,430. Houses 40. A. P. £1,203. Pop., in 1801, 280; in 1831, 261. Poor rates, in 1838, £108 3s.

CLANDON (WEST), a parish in the second division of the hund. of Woking, union of Guildford, county of Surrey; 3½ miles east-north-east of Guildford. Living, a rectory; rated at £13 10s., returned at £124 13s.; gross income £148. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £141 9s. 5d. Patron, in 1835, Lord Onslow. Charities; income in 1823, £8 6s. There are 2 daily schools here, besides a day and Sunday National school. Acres 990. Houses 75. A. P. £1,729. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 389. Poor rates, in 1838, £173 14s.

CLANFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Bampton, union of Witney, county of Oxford; 5 miles east-north-east of Lechlade. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £7 6s. 5½d., returned at £100; gross income £90. Patron, in 1835, G. Elliott and H. Bennet, Esqs. Charities; unimprovable rents in 1823, £5. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,640. Houses 114. A. P. £2,357. Pop., in 1801, 455; in 1831, 529.

CLANFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Finch Dean, union of Catherington, Alton (South) division of the county of Southampton; 5½ miles south-west of Petersfield. Living, a rectory united with that of Chalton. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 2,280. Houses 38. A. P. £697. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 210. Poor rates, in 1838, £159 18s.

CLAPCOTA, a liberty in the parish of All-Hallows, Berks. Acres 1,000. Houses 6. Pop., in 1801, 55; in 1831, 34. Other returns with the parish.

CLAPHAM, a parish in the hund. of Stodden, union and county of Bedford; 2½ miles north-west of Bedford, on the northern bank of the river Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the diocese of Ely; rated at £5 13s. 4d., returned at £140; gross income £237. Patron, in 1835, Lord Carteret. Charities; income in 1821, £50, for the apprenticeship of poor children. "Clapham was formerly a chapelry of Oakly, and it is singular that, although it has long been a distinct parish, the inhabitants still bury their dead there." Lyson's Mag. Brit., Vol. 1. 69. Acres 1,490. Houses 65. A. P. £2,009. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 296. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 1s.

CLAPHAM, a parish and village in the hund. of Brixton, union of Wansworth and Clapham, county of Surrey; 4 miles south-south-west of St. Paul's, London. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; gross income £1,299. Patron, in 1835, W. Bowyer Atkins, Esq. The church was erected in 1776 under the authority of an act of parliament, at an expense of £11,000. There are two chapels belonging to the establishment here. The Independents have also two places of worship here, and the Baptists one. An Independent church was formed in 1819, and a Baptist church in 1777. There are various small charities connected with this parish; income in 1828, £60 10s., distributed principally in alms and clothing among the poor. This parish possesses 5 daily, 5 infant, 26 boarding schools, and 2 Sunday and daily National schools. This has long been distinguished as one of the richest and most respectable of the numerous villages that surround the metropolis. It is built around a common, extending to about 200 acres, originally a mere morass, now skilfully drained, intersected with carriage-drives, and tastefully adorned with trees and shrubs, planted so as to give the place the appearance of a park. The houses are, for the most part, occupied by the merchant-princes of the city. The neighbourhood is in such esteem that the value of land here is very great. It is within the limits of police. The road to London is brilliantly lighted with gas, and there is a reservoir of fine water near the road to Wandsworth from which the village is supplied. The county-magistrates hold a petty-session here once a-week, and it is within the jurisdiction of the court of requests for the borough of Southwark. The influential families here generally embrace the Calvinistic sense of the articles of the church of England; hence Clapham is often alluded to in the controversies between the partizans of the two opinions. Acres 1,070. Houses 1,589. A. P. £22,223. Pop., in 1801, 3,864; in 1831, 9,958. Poor rates, in 1838, £5,247 13s.

CLAPHAM, a parish in the hund. of Brightford, rape of Bramber, county of Sussex; 6 miles south-west of Steyning. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £14; gross income £113. Patron, in 1835, the duke of Norfolk. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,920. Houses 40. A. P. £1,381. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 229. Poor rates, in 1838, £171 7s.

CLAPHAM, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewcross, union of Settle, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-west of Settle. It includes the townships of Austwick, Clapham with Newby, and Lawkland. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £5 17s. 1d., returned at £100; gross income £135. Patron, the bishop of Ripon. Besides the charities for education possessed by the township of Clapham-with-Newby, which see, the most important of those connected with this parish, are Ellis's gift of Newby Hall and Newby Corn-mill, yielding, in 1824, annual rents amounting to £89, which, after deduction of £6 13s. 4d. to the schoolmaster of Clapham-with-Newby, he directed to be paid to the minister of the parish for preaching two sermons every Lord's day;—Inglesby's gift of £20 per annum to the minister of the chapel at Lawkland, and £10 per annum to the poor of the township of Austwick not receiving parochial relief;—Minor charities, in 1824, about £30. There are 7 daily schools in this parish. A fair for sheep is held here on October 2d. Acres 24,340. Houses 399. A. P. £1,551. Pop., in 1801, 1,693; in 1831, 1,909. Poor rates, in 1838, £788 9s.

CLAPHAM-WITH-NEWBY, a township in the above parish; 6½ miles west-north-west of Settle. There is a sheep fair held here on the 21st of September. There are 4 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £9 12s., and another with £3 6s. 8d. per annum. One of these schools is kept in a room built, in 1824, by subscription, on the site of an old township schoolroom. Acres 14,720. Houses 188. A. P. £6,266. Pop., in 1801, 847; in 1831, 944. Poor rates, in 1838, £328 15s.

CLAPTON. See CROYDON-WITH-CLAPTON.

CLAPTON, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Slaughter, union of Stow-on-the-Wold, county of Gloucester; 4½ miles north-east of North Leach. Living, a curacy, annexed to Bourton-on-the-Water. There is a daily school here. Acres 700. Houses 26. A. P. £1,172. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 109. Poor rates, in 1838, £91 4s.

CLAPTON, a parish in the hund. of Navisford, union of Thrapston, county of Northampton; 4½ miles east-east by north of Thrapston. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £17 8s. 9d.; gross income £158. Tithes commuted in 1839. Rent charge £295 16s. Patron, in 1835, W. P. Freeman. Charities; income in 1830, £11. Acres 1,900. Houses 17. A. P. £2,501. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 99. Poor rates, in 1838, £46 12s.

CLAPTON. See MAPERTON.

CLAPTON, a parish in the hund. of Portbury, union of Bedminster, county of Somerset; 6½ miles west of Bristol. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £10 9s. 2d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, J. A. Gordon. Acres 980. Houses 27. A. P. £1,213. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 167. Poor rates, in 1838, £65 8s.

CLAPTON, a tything in the parish of Midsummer-Norton, Somersetshire; 10 miles south-west of Bath. Pop., in 1811, 117; in 1821, 106.

CLARBESTON, a parish in the hund. of Dungleddy, union of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 5½ miles north-north-west of Narberth. Living, a curacy, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; certified at £5 10s.; returned at £29 10s.; gross income £60. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £42 15s. Patron, the executors of T. Phillips. There is a daily school in this parish. It is situated exactly in the centre of the hundred, and on very elevated ground. Houses 33. A. P. £583. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 218. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 6s.

CLARE, a parish and market-town in the hund. and union of Riasbridge, county of Suffolk; 15 miles south-south-west of Bury-St.-Edmunds, on the northern bank of the river Stour. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £4 18s. 9d.; gross income £195. Patron, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. There are places of worship here for the Quakers, Baptists, and Independents. The Baptist church was formed in 1803, and the Independent in 1700. The principal charities in this parish are those under the management of the churchwardens, namely, the church estate; annual rents in 1829, £114 18s., applied to the reparation of the church, &c.; the alms-houses and poor's lands, income in 1829, £50, appropriated to the relief and maintenance of the alms-folk and poor of Clare and the hamlet of Chilton. There is also a charity here, which originally consisted of an unimproveable annuity of £25, bestowed for educational and other purposes; but, from the annuity having fallen into arrear, the churchwardens, about the year 1735, entered into possession of the property subject to it, which, in 1829, yielded an annual rent of £55 16s., £15 of which was paid to a schoolmaster for instructing 10 children; and £15 expended in bread and clothing for 8 poor widows, the remainder being carried to the general account of the churchwardens. The common pasturage lands, appropriated by Queen Mary, constitute another charity, which yielded, in 1829, an income of about £50, arising from gates or depasturages for 40 cows, let out to such persons as did not occupy above 15 acres of land, who applied for the benefit, or others, including the vicar, who had the depasturage of two cows. The income, after various deductions, was distributed among the poor inhabitants of Clare who had been married 5 years, and who had no cows to depasture on the lands. There are 6 infant, and 5 daily, schools here. This is the seat of the petty-sessions for the division. There is a market here on Friday, and two annual fairs, Easter Tuesday and 26th July. The manufacture of baise was carried on here lately, but to no great extent. This is a place of great antiquity, having been during the heptarchy a frontier town of the kingdom of East Anglia. After the Conquest it gave the title of earl to the family of De Clare, and that of duke to Lionel, third son of Edward III., who was created the first duke of Clarence, a title which has ever since become appropriated to the royal family. Its last revival was in 1789, when his late Majesty was created duke of Clarence, &c. by his father King George III. There are here the remains of an ancient castle, in which Earl Alfreic founded the church of St. John the Baptist, which Gilbert de Clare gave, A. D. 1090, to the monastery at Bec in Normandy, and thereby it became a cell of Benedictine monks to that abbey until the year 1124, when his son Richard removed them to Stoke. Friars Heremites of the order of St. Austine are said to have been seated here in A. D. 1243. Acres 3,410. Houses 326. A. P. £3,417. Pop., in 1801, 1,170; in 1831, 1,619. Poor rates, in 1838, £687 15s.

CLAREBOROUGH, or CLAYBOROUGH, a parish in the Northcay division of the wapentake of Bas-setlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 2½ miles north-east of East Retford, intersected by the Chesterfield canal. Living, a discharged vicarage with St. Saviour, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the province of Canterbury and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 15s. 4d.; gross income £390. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Simeon. Charities, in 1826, £8 19s. 8d. There are 7 daily schools here. Acres 3,870. Houses 477. A. P. £6,505. Pop., in 1801, 1,202; in 1831, 2,106. Poor rates, in 1838, £468 12s.

CLARENDON-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Alderbury, county of Wilts; 3 miles east-east by south of Salisbury. This was anciently a royal forest, and a chase for many of the early English monarchs. Near the north-western extremity of it there was formerly a palace, the ruins of which still exist. In 1164 King Henry II. held a council here, in which those laws were passed, respecting the limits of the ecclesiastical authority, still called 'the Constitutions of Clarendon,' the intention of which was to check the growing despotism of the clergy, and to assert the supremacy of the civil power. These enactments form a remarkable epoch in the history of the British constitution. During the reign of Edward II. Clarendon park seems to have been disforested: at least it was then for the first time called the park instead of the forest of Clarendon. In the reign of Charles II., it was bestowed upon Monk, previously created duke of Albemarle. It afterwards gave the title of earl to Chancellor Hyde, author of various works, especially of a very laboured but very partial history of the troubles in the reign of Charles I., which he calls 'the Great Rebellion.' Much has been said about the great magnitude and importance of the Clarendon palace; but, from a survey, made in 1272, it appears that this, in common with other country palaces, was merely a hunting seat. It was only one story high, containing two kitchens, one for the king, the other for his household; and the king and queen had separate chapels. The roof was covered with thin boards, like tiles, called shingles. The superficial contents of the park are estimated at 4,300 acres, nearly one-third of which is now appropriated as woodland. Acres 4,160. Houses 24. A. P. £3,522. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 177. Poor rates, in 1838, £223 11s.

CLARETON. See ALLERTON-MAULEVERRE.

CLAREWOOD, a township in the parish of Corbridge, Northumberland; 7 miles east-north-east of Hexham. Houses 11. Pop., in 1801, 38; in 1831, 71. Poor rates, in 1838, £7 12s.

CLARO WAPENTAKE, in the west riding of the county of York, consists of two divisions, the upper containing 16, and the lower, 13 parishes. Area 212,650 acres. Houses 8,230. Pop., in 1831, 42,066.

CLASE (HIGHER), a hamlet in the parish of Llangevellauch, Glamorganshire; 5 miles north-west of Swansea. Houses 101. A. P. £2,065. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 531.

CLASE (LOWER), a township in the same parish. There are 4 daily schools here. Houses 849. A. P. £13,447. Pop., in 1801, 2,217; in 1831, 4,251. Poor rates, in 1838, including Higher Clase, £1,002 10s.

CLASEMONT, a district in the above township and parish, including the village of MORRISTON—which see. Returns with the village, township, and parish. Here are numerous copper-works, and collieries, which belonged to Sir John Morris, Bart., whose residence, Clasmont hall, is one of the finest in the county.

CLATFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Pershute, Selkley, Wiltshire; 2 miles south-west of Marlborough. Here was an alien priory to the abbey of St. Victor, in Caletto, or en Caux, Normandy, founded by Sir Roger Mortimer. In the valley of Clatford-bottom is an ancient cromlech.

CLATFORD-GOODWORTH, or GOODWORTH-CLATFORD, a parish in the hund. of Wherwell, union of Andover, Andover division of the county of Southampton; 2 miles south of Andover, intersected by the Andover canal. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £10; gross income £205. Patron, in 1835, W. Iremonger, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 3,390. Houses 90. A. P. £1,793. Pop., in 1801, 298; in 1831, 414. Poor rates, in 1838, £340 7s.

CLATFORD (UPPER), a parish in the hund. and union of Andover, county of Southampton; 1 mile south of Andover. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £22; gross income £460. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Frowd. There are 3 daily, and 1 Sunday and ~~daily~~ National, schools here. Acres 970. Houses 103. A. P. £2,566. Pop., in 1801, 274; in 1831, 487. Poor rates, in 1838, £278 16s.

CLATTECOTT, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Banbury, county of Oxford; 6 miles north of Banbury; intersected by the Oxford canal. Acres 670. House 1. A. P. £550. Pop., in 1801, 7; in 1831, 9. Poor rates, in 1838, £16 7s.

CLATWORTHY, a parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemanners, union of Williton, county of Somerset; 3 miles north-east of Wiveliscombe. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £13 10s. 5d.; gross income £337. Patron, in 1835, J. H. Carew, Esq. Acres 4,000. Houses 49. A. P. £2,664. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 246. Poor rates, in 1838, £207 2s.

CLAUDD-MADOG, a hamlet in the parish of Llan-wrtydd, Brecon; 12 miles west of Builth. Houses 55. A. P. £706. Pop., in 1811, 265; in 1831, 297.

CLAUGHTON-WITH-GRANGE, a township in the parish of Bidston, co.-palatine of Chester; 8 miles north of Great Norton. Acres 700. Houses 37. A. P. £666. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 224. Poor rates, in 1838, £27.

CLAUGHTON, a township in the parish of Garstang, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles south-east of Garstang; intersected by the Lancaster and Preston railway. There is a dissenting chapel here, licensed under the new marriage act. There is also a daily school. Acres 3,300. Houses 139. A. P. £2,209. Pop., in 1801, 731; in 1831, 929. Poor rates, in 1838, £231 18s.

CLAUGHTON, a parish in the hund. of Lonsdale, south of the Sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7 miles north-east of Lancaster; east of the river Lune. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £9 13s. 10d., returned at £150; gross income £145. Patron, in 1835, T. Fenwick, Esq. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here. Charities in 1836; income £3 4s. 6d. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,530. Houses 18. A. P. £1,551. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 116. Poor rates, in 1838, £57 10s.

CLAVERDON, a parish in Henley division of the hund. of Barlichway, union of Stratford-on-Avon, county of Warwick; 3½ miles east of Henley-in-Arden. It includes the hamlets of Langley and Pindley. Living, a discharged vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Norton Lindsey, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £5 12s. 1d.; gross income £300. Patron, the archdeacon of Worcester. There is here Matthew's charity; income, in 1826, £78 4s., applied to parochial purposes, except £12 12s. applied in teaching 30 to 40 children at a daily school here. Other charities £4 10s. Acres 4,380. Houses 134. A. P. £4,468. Pop., in 1801, 402; in 1831, 666. Poor rates, in 1838, £299 6s.

CLAVERDON, or CLAVERTON, a parish in the liberty of Hampton and Claverton, union of Bath, Somersetshire; 2½ miles east-south-east of Bath. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Bath; rated at £10 6s. 10½d.; gross income £215; tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £162 11s. Patron, in 1835, John Vivian, Esq. Charities in 1824; income, £8 6s. There are two schools here, a daily and a Sunday, and daily National school. Acres 1,180. Houses 28. A. P. £1,626. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 156. Poor rates, in 1838, £73 10s.

CLAVERING HUNDRED, in the north-west extremity of the county of Essex. Area 18,140 acres. Houses 809. Pop., in 1831, 4,062.

CLAVERING HUNDRED, in the south-east corner of the county of Norfolk. Area 28,880 acres. Houses 1,057. Pop., in 1831, 6,611.

CLAVERING, a parish in the hund. of Clavering, union of Saffron Walden, county of Essex; 6½ miles north-north-west of Stansted-Mountfitchet, on the river Stort. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Langley, in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £22 13s. 11½d.; gross income £512; tithes commuted; aggregate amount of vicarial, £474 3s. 10d.; of those due to Bridewell, St. Thomas's and Christ's hospitals, £575 2s. 5d. Patrons, the governors of Christ's hospital, London. There is an Independent church here, formed in 1692, and licensed under the new marriage act. There are several small charities; income, in 1837, £17 16s., £10 of which are applied in the apprenticeship of poor children, the remainder given to the poor; together with a barrel of red herrings distributed annually in the church; four to each married couple, two to each widow and widower, and one to each child. There are 1 Sunday and daily, and 1

Sunday, National, besides 3 other daily schools. Acres 1,680. Houses 215. A. P. £6,204. Pop., in 1801, 900; in 1831, 1,134. Poor rates, in 1838, £620 7s.

CLAVERLEY, a parish in Hales-Owen division of the hund. of Brimstree, union of Bridgenorth, county of Salop; 5 miles east of Bridgenorth. Living, a curacy, a peculiar not in charge, in the diocese of Lichfield; rated at £120; gross income £100; tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of curatorial, £12; of impropriated, £2,056 14s. Patron, in 1835, Sir Thomas Whitmore. The charities in this parish, exclusive of a free school after mentioned, yielded, in 1820, an annual income of £51 17s. 9d.; £10 of which was paid to the parson, and £34 7s. 9d. distributed in doles to the poor. The remainder consisted of rents of church land, &c. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which, endowed with £25 per annum, was united, in 1831, to the National society. Acres 7,530. Houses 329. A. P. £11,603. Pop., in 1801, 1,328; in 1831, 1,521. Poor rates, in 1838, £529 2s.

CLAWRPLWYF, a hamlet in the parish of Mynyddyalwyn, Monmouth. Acres 5,870. Houses 336. Pop., in 1801, 476; in 1831, 1,918.

CLAWTON, a parish in the hund. of Black Torrington, union of Holsworthy, county of Devon; 3½ miles south of Holsworthy, on the river Claw. Living, a discharged curacy in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, certified at £20; gross income £75. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Melhuish. Charities, in 1823, income £1 8s. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 5,950. Houses 86. A. P. £2,005. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 570. Poor rates, in 1838, £159 12s.

CLAXBY, a parish in the Wold division of the hund. of Calceworth, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 3 miles south of Alford. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Wells. Acres 590. Houses 12. A. P. £859. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 101. Poor rates, in 1838, £54 12s.

CLAXBY, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Walshcroft, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 3½ miles north of Market Raisen. Living, a discharged rectory, annexed, in 1740, to that of Normanby-upon-the-Wolds; rated at £8 10s. 10d.; gross income £868. Patron, in 1835, R. Atkinson, Esq. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,980. Houses 59. A. P. £2,839. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 205. Poor rates, in 1838, £488 3s.

CLAXBY-PLUCKACRE, a parish in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; 4½ miles south-east of Horncastle. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 10s. 10d.; gross income £70; tithes commuted; aggregate amount £78 17s. 7d. Patron, in 1835, Champion Dymoke, Esq. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 690. Houses 4. A. P. £1,250. Pop., in 1801, 16; in 1831, 25.

CLAXTON, a township in the parish of Great-ham, co.-palatine of Durham; 6 miles north-east of Stockton-upon-Tees. Acres 610. Houses 6. A. P. £822. Pop., in 1801, 42; in 1831, 32. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 8s.

CLAXTON, a parish in the hund. of Loddon, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 7 miles east-south-east of Norwich. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, returned at £100; gross income £61. Patron, in 1835, Sir Charles Rich, Bart. Charities in 1828; income £9 6s. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,040. Houses 36. A. P. £908. Pop., in 1801, 102; in 1831, 192. Poor rates, in 1838, £91 14s.

CLAXTON, or LONG CLAWSON, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton Mowbray, county of Leicester; 6 miles north-north-west of Melton Mowbray. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £9 10s. 2d., returned at £150; gross income £120. Tithes commuted in 1779. Patron, in 1835, Lord Godolphin. There are 3 daily schools here, two of which are supported out of an estate lying at Frisby-on-the-Wreak, yielding an annual rent of £62 8s. Other charities; income, in 1837, £8. Acres 3,450. Houses 157. A. P. £5,190. Pop., in 1801, 604; in 1831, 776. Poor rates, in 1838, £471 11s.

CLAXTON-ON-THE-MOOR, a township in the parish of Bossall, north riding of Yorkshire; 9 miles north-north-east of York. There are two schools here, a daily and a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 880. Houses 31. A. P. £1,068. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 163. Poor rates, in 1838, £57 12s.

CLAYBOROUGH. See CLAREBOROUGH.

CLAYBROOKE, a parish in the hund. of Guthlaxton, union of Lutterworth, county of Leicester. It includes the townships of Great Claybrooke, Little Claybrooke, and Little Wigston, the liberty of Bittesby, and the hamlet of Ullesthorpe. Living, with Wibtoft and Wigton curacies, a vicarage formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £30 10s. 5d.; gross income £529. Patron, the Crown. There are 2 daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed with £26 per annum. The other charities, exclusive of those belonging to the hamlets of Great and Little Claybrooke, and Ullesthorpe (which see), are the church-lands; annual rent, in 1837, £41 12s.; minor charities, £1 3s. 7d. Acres 4,370. Houses 246. A. P. £7,732. Pop., in 1801, 331; in 1831, 491. Poor rates, in 1838, £480 2s.

CLAYBROOKE (GREAT), a chapelry in the above parish; 5 miles north-west of Lutterworth; close on the Midland Counties railway. Charities in 1837; income of poor's-lands, £30, distributed half-yearly among the poor; other charities £6 13s. 4d., besides £5 expended jointly on Great and Little Claybrooke hamlets. Houses 93. A. P., including Claybrooke-Little, £3,082. Pop., in 1801, 331; in 1831, 481. Poor rates, in 1838, £197 2s.

CLAYBROOKE (LITTLE), a township in the above parish; 4 miles west-north-west of Lutterworth. It is situated in the centre of the parish, and contains the church, with 2 daily and 2 Sunday schools. Charities in 1837; income of poor's-lands, £14. Houses 15. Pop., in 1801, 58; in 1831, 82. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 11s.

CLAYDON, a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; 4½ miles north-north-west of Ipswich, in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory annexed to that of Akenham, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £10; gross income £570. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. Drury. There are 1 Sunday National, and 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 600. Houses 89. A. P. £1,653. Pop., in 1801, 305; in 1831, 402. Poor rates, in 1838, £139 4s.

CLAYDON, a chapelry in the parish of Cropredy, county of Oxford; 6½ miles north of Banbury, close on the Oxford canal. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Cropredy. Charities in 1824; annual rent of poor's-land, £20 10s. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,160. Houses 61. A. P. £2,016. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 291. Poor rates, in 1838, £111 19s.

CLAYDON (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Ashendon, union of Winslow, county of Buckingham; 2½ miles south-west of Winslow. It includes Bottle Claydon. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Claydon-Steeple. Charities in 1832; income, £12 8s. 8d., for behoof of poor, and apprenticeship of their children. See CLAYDON (MIDDLE). There are an infant and a Sunday school here. Acres 2,160. Houses 71. A. P. £3,705. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 336. Poor rates, in 1838, £352 17s.

CLAYDON (MIDDLE), a parish in the hund. of Ashendon, union and county of Buckingham; 4 miles south-west of Winslow. Living, a vicarage in the same archd. and dio.; rated at £13; gross income £560. Patron, in 1835, Sir H. Verney. There are 6 almshouses here, endowed, in 1832, with an unimprovable annual rent of £15 12s. There are also funds for behoof of the poor of the three Claydons, and for apprenticing their children; income, in 1832, £17 12s. Other charities in this parish, £47 9s., for behoof of the poor. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,850. Houses 22. A. P. £4,127. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 136. Poor rates, in 1838, £114 11s.

CLAYDON (STEEPLE), or STEEPLE CLAYDON, a parish in the hund., union, and county of Buckingham; 4½ miles west of Winslow. Living, a vicarage with that of East Claydon, in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 3s. 9d.; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, Sir H. Verney. For charities, see CLAYDON (MIDDLE). There are a daily and an infant school here. Acres 3,270. Houses 176. A. P. £4,976. Pop., in 1801, 646; in 1831, 881. Poor rates, in 1838, £521 4s.

CLAYHANGER, a parish in the hund. of Bampton, union of Tiverton, county of Devon; 4½ miles east-east by north of Bampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £15 17s. 3½d.; gross income £302. Patron, in 1835, R. Harrison, Esq. There is a daily school here, with an endowment of £7 10s. Acres 2,320. Houses 50. A. P. £1,750. Pop., in 1801, 213; in 1831, 272. Poor rates, in 1838, £151 16s.

CLAYHEDON, or CLEHEDON, a parish in the hund. of Hemyock, union of Wellington, county of Devon; 13½ miles east-east by north of Tiverton; south of the Black Down hills. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £38 5s.; gross income £621. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. John Clarke. Charities in 1820; income, £7 15s. There are 3 small daily schools, and a day and National school here. Acres 4,530. Houses 141. A. P. £3,445. Pop., in 1801, 690; in 1831, 767. Poor rates, in 1838, £560 14s.

CLAYLANE, a township in the parish of North Wingfield, county of Derby; 5½ miles south of Chesterfield. There is a daily school here, endowed with £15 15s. per annum. Houses 109. A. P. £1,415. Pop., in 1801, 353; in 1831, 564. Poor rates, in 1838, £138 5s.

CLAYPOLE, a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, union of Newark, county of Lincoln; 4½ miles south-east of Newark, on the Watham river. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, in two mediocreties; rated, the north at £16 8s. 4d.; gross income £410; the south at £15 15s.; gross income £360. Tithes commuted in 1769. Patron, in 1835, J. P. Plumptre, Esq. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 3,370. Houses 115. A. P. £4,323. Pop., in 1801, 486; in 1831, 566. Poor rates, in 1838, £121 3s.

CLAYTHORPE, a chapelry in the parish of Belleau, county of Lincoln; 3 miles north-west of Alford. Tithes commuted; aggregate amount £170 11s. 8d. Acres 220. Houses 8. A. P. £1,253.

Pop., in 1821, 57; in 1831, 61. Poor rates, in 1838, £29 16s.

CLAYTON, a liberty in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire; 2 miles south-south-east of Newcastle-under-Lyne; in the vicinity of the Manchester and Birmingham railway. Houses 33. Pop., in 1811, 171; in 1831, 171. Other returns with the parish.

CLAYTON, a parish in the hund. of Buttinghill, rape of Lewes, union of Cuckfield, county of Sussex; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile east of Hurst-Pierpont, close on the London and Brighton railway. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Keymer, in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £21 0s. 10d.; no return. Patrons, the principal and fellows of Brazen-nose college, Oxford. There are a small daily and a Sunday and daily National school here. Fairs are held on July 5th and September 26th for cattle and sheep. Acres 1,870. Houses 60. A. P. £1,974. Pop., in 1801, 337; in 1831, 489. Poor rates, in 1838, £307 12s.

CLAYTON. See SOUTH STAINLEY with CLAYTON.

CLAYTON, a township in the parish of Bradford, west riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles west by south of Bradford. The commissioners for building new churches reported, in 1837, that they intended to make a grant in aid of building one here. The Baptists have a place of worship here; and there are 6 daily schools. Acres 1,610. Houses 846. A. P. £2,965. Pop., in 1801, 2,040; in 1831, 4,469. Poor rates, in 1838, £603 8s.

CLAYTON-WITH-FRICKLEY, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Strathforth and Tickhill, union of Doncaster, west riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles north-west of Doncaster. Living, a curacy with Frickley, subordinated to the vicarage of Hooton-Pagnel, in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £17 3s. 10d.; gross income £73. Patron, in 1835, S. A. Warde, Esq. Charities in 1827; income, £3 5s. 4d. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,640. Houses 65. A. P. £2,390. Pop., in 1801, 302; in 1831, 321. Poor rates, in 1838, £108 6s.

CLAYTON-LE-DALE, a township in the parish of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4 miles north-north-west of Blackburn; east of the river Ribble. Acres 950. Houses 84. A. P. £2,436. Pop., in 1801, 419; in 1831, 551. Poor rates, in 1838, £261 6s.

CLAYTON-LE-MOORS, a township in the parish of Whalley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles south of Clitheroe; intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. There are 4 schools here, 3 daily and 1 Sunday National. Acres 950. Houses 377. A. P. £1,999. Pop., in 1801, 1,130; in 1831, 2,171. Poor rates, in 1838, £350.

CLAYTON (Wssr), a township in the parish of High Hoyland, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles west-north-west of Barneley. Tithes commuted in 1799-1800. The Independents and Baptists have places of worship here; the Independent church was formed in 1794, the Baptist in 1821. There are 5 daily schools in this township. Acres 1,060. Houses 183. A. P. £1,972. Pop., in 1801, 668; in 1831, 867. Poor rates, in 1838, £128 3s.

CLAYTON-LE-WOODS, a township in the parish of Leyland, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-west of Chorley; close on the Wigan and Preston railway. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £9 6s. 2d. per annum. Acres 1,370. Houses 158. A. P. £2,943. Pop., in 1801, 706; in 1831, 926. Poor rates, in 1838, £234 10s.

CLAYWORTH, a parish in the North-clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 5 miles north-north-east of East Retford, intersected by the Chesterfield canal. It includes the township of Wyeaton. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £26 10s. 10d.; gross income £630. Tithes of the township commuted in 1790. Patron, the dean of Lincoln. There is a charity school here; endowment in 1627, £64; other charities £10 18s. Besides the charity school, there are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 3,190. Houses 126. A. P. £4,821. Pop., in 1801, 543; in 1831, 577. Poor rates, in 1838, £252.

CLEADON, or CLEVEDON. See WHITBURN, Durham.

CLEARWELL, a tything in the parish of Newland, Gloucestershire; 7 miles west of Blakney. Houses 135. Pop., in 1801, 544; in 1831, 678. Other returns with the parish.

CLEASBY, a parish in the wapentake of Gilling-East, union of Darlington, north riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles west by south of Darlington, on the river Tees, and close on the North of England railway. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; gross income £188. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Ripon. Charities in 1821; income £10 15s. 2d. There are two daily schools here. Acres 970. Houses 33. A. P. £1,246. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 162. Poor rates, in 1838, £59 2s.

CLEATHAM, a township in the parish of Manton, county of Lincoln; 6 miles south-west of Glandford-Bridge. Acres 1,210. Houses 11. A. P. £1,560. Pop., in 1801, 43; in 1831, 76. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 19s.

CLEATHAM, a township partly in the parish of Gainsford, and partly in the parish of Staindrop, co.-palatine of Durham; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-south-east of Barnard-Castle. Acres 1,010. Houses 24. A. P. £876. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 94. Poor rates, in 1838, £85 16s.

CLEATOR, or KEKELL-TERR, a parish in Allerdale ward above Derwent, union of Whitehaven, Cumberland; 2 miles north of Egremont, on the river Ehen. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £6 12s., returned at £80; gross income £77. Patron, in 1835, T. R. G. Braddyll, Esq. In 1838 there was a flax-mill here, employing 188 hands. There are two daily schools here. Acres 3,000. Houses 85. A. P. £2,246. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 487. Poor rates, in 1838, £173 16s.

CLEE, a parish in the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile south-east of Great Grimsby. It includes the township of Cleethorpe. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; returned at £100; gross income £104. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. There is a daily school here. There are here a number of singular fountains called 'draw or blow wells,' being deep circular pits whence issue continual streams of pure water. By the vulgar they are supposed to be unfathomable. The superstitious custom or rite of strewing the floor of the church on Trinity Sunday with new mown grass, is here still in observance in consequence of a bequest of land for that purpose. The parish is within the liberty and new boundaries of Great Grimsby. Acres 3,530. Houses 144. A. P. £1,514. Pop., in 1801, 387; in 1831, 674. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 1s.

CLEE-ST.-MARGARET'S, a parish in the hund. of Munslow, union of Ludlow, county of Salop; 17½ miles north-north-east of Ludlow. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £2 8s. 4d.; gross income £179. Patron, in 1835, J. C. Pelham, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,530. Houses 59. A. P. £685. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 294. Poor rates, in 1838, £85 5s.

CLEER (Str.), a parish in the hund. of West, union of Liskeard, county of Cornwall; 2½ miles north of Liskeard. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £19 6s. 8d.; gross income £281. In the patronage of the Crown. Charities in 1837; income £1 5s. There are 7 daily schools in this parish. There is here a consecrated fountain, with a stone cross very near it. There are also three contiguous Druidical circles distinguished by the name of the Hurlers, and an extraordinary mass or pile of rude rocks resting on a slender base, and called the Cheese Wring. There is a cromlech in the vicinity, of greater magnitude than that of Mona. Acres 9,700. Houses 167. A. P. £5,448. Pop., in 1801, 774; in 1831, 986. Poor rates, in 1838, £489 11s.

CLEETHORPE, a township in the parish of Clee, county of Lincoln; 2½ miles east-south-east of Great Grimsby. There are 1 Sunday and daily National, and 2 daily schools here. This village is much frequented during the summer months for sea-bathing. Many new lodging-houses have been recently built, and the general accommodation much improved. Acreage with the parish. Houses 113. A. P. £747. Pop., in 1801, 284; in 1831, 497. Poor rates, in 1838, £139 13s.

CLEEVE-BISHOP'S, or BISHOP'S-CLEEVE, a parish which forms the hund. of Cleeve, union of Winchcombe, county of Gloucester; 3 miles north-north-east of Cheltenham. It includes the township of Bishop's-Cleeve, and the hamlets of Gotherington, Stoke-Orchard, Southam and Brockhampton, and Woodmancot. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Stoke-Orchard, in the dio. of Bristol and Gloucester, exempt from visitation; rated at £84 6s. 8d.; gross income £1,624. Patron, the Rev. W. L. Townsend. Charities in 1836, £2. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. The rectory house here was at one period the residence of the bishops of Worcester. On the ridge of hills, called Cleeve-Clouds, are many vestiges of ancient military transactions, and the extremity of the ridge is fortified by a deep vallation. The views in this vicinity are very picturesque. The valley is backed by the Malvern hills, with Cleeve-Cliff rising perpendicularly 630 feet, its base being nearly lost in fine woodland scenery. Acres 8,150. Houses 340. A. P. £9,416. Pop., in 1801, 1,355; in 1831, 1,642. Poor rates, in 1838, £468 8s. Houses of the township, 122. A. P. £2,063. Pop., in 1801, 431; in 1831, 550. Poor rates, in 1838, £185 11s.

CLEEVE-CHAPEL, or CHAPEL-CLEEVE, a hamlet in the parish of Old Cleeve; 2 miles east of Dunsar. Here was a chapel erected on a rock, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, in early times much frequented by pilgrims, and enriched by their offerings.

CLEEVE (Ord), a parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemanners, union of Williton, western division, county of Somerset. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £7; gross income £472. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Newton. Charities in 1825; income £18 7s. 6d. There are 3 daily schools here. William de Romare, nephew of William de Romare earl of Lincoln, before A. D. 1188, built a Cistercian abbey here, and bestowed upon it the property of the whole parish.* At the dissolution it was endowed with £155 9s. 5d. The ruins are still extensive. This parish is full of high craggy cliffs, which abound in alabaster, and afford extensive views of the Welsh coast. Acres 4,340. Houses 264. A. P. £6,385. Pop., in 1801, 1,040; in 1831, 1,347. Poor rates, in 1838, £584 6s.

CLEEVE-PRIOR, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Evesham, county of Worcester; 5 miles north-east of Evesham, east of the river Avon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £8; returned at £138; gross income £160. Tithes commuted in 1775. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Worcester. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,590. Houses 77. A. P. £1,909. Pop., in 1801, 287; in 1831, 368. Poor rates, in 1838, £253 3s.

CLEGYROG, or CLYGYROG, a township in the parish of Llanbadrig, Anglesey. Houses 88. A. P. £1,336. Pop., in 1801, 399; in 1831, 427.

CLELEY HUNDRED, in the county of Northampton. Area 26,620 acres. Houses 1,462. Pop., in 1831, 7,413.

CLEMENTS (Str.), a parish in the west division of the hund. of Powder, union of Truro, county of Cornwall; 1½ mile south-east of Truro, in which borough part of it is included. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £9; gross income £260. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities in 1837; income £8 5s. 4d. Acres 3,520. Houses 566. A. P. £7,029. Pop., in 1801, 1,342; in 1831, 2,885. Poor rates, in 1838, £611 15s.

CLEMENTS (Str.), a parish in the hund. of Bullington, union of Headington, county of Oxford; ¾ mile east of Oxford, and separated from it only by the river Cherwell. It includes part of Magdalen bridge within its boundaries. Living, a rectory not in charge. A new church has been built in this parish, by subscription, and, at the same time, an elegant set of baths. This parish possesses 6 daily schools. There is an hospital here, founded by William Stone in 1685. There are also almshouses and a bequest of the value of about £400 per annum, for the general relief of the poor. A branch of one of the principal Roman ways runs through this parish, over Headington hill, and across the Cherwell near Holywell church. Acres 580. Houses 366. A. P. £1,352. Pop., in 1801, 413; in 1831, 1,836. Poor rates, in 1838, £402 9s.

CLENCH-WARTON, a parish in the hund. of Freebridge-Marsh-Land, union of Wisbeach, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles west of King's Lynn. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £14 6s. 8d.; gross income £348. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. F. W. Goldfrap. Here is a Sunday National school. Charities in 1835; income £4 10s. Acres 3,010. Houses 53. A. P. £4,827. Pop., in 1801, 232; in 1831, 478. Poor rates, in 1838, £425.

CLENNELL, or CLENHILL, a township in the parish of Allenton, Northumberland; 10½ miles west-north-west of Rothbury. Houses 4. Pop., in 1801, 18; in 1831, 15. Poor rates, in 1838, £2 4s.

CLENT, a parish formerly in the south division of the hund. of Seidon, union of Bromsgrove, county of Stafford, but included in Worcestershire, to which county it is now annexed; 3½ miles south-south-east of Stourbridge. Living, a vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Rowley Regis, in the archd. and

dio. of Worcester; rated at £8 16s. 5½d.; gross income £446. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are places of worship here for the Baptists and the Wesleyan Methodists. The Baptist church was formed in 1802. This parish possesses 2 daily and 3 infant schools, besides 2 charity-schools, one of which is a Sunday school with an endowment, in 1820, of £21 19s. 6d. per annum; and the other a day school with an endowment of £8. The church lands in this parish yielded, in 1820, an annual rent of £67 3s.; Maris and Cole's charity to the poor, an income of £35; and minor charities £8 7s. Acres 2,520. Houses 188. A. P. £4,337. Pop., in 1801, 738; in 1831, 922. Poor rates, in 1838, £336 10s.

CLEOBURY-MORTIMER, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Stottesden, union of Cleobury-Mortimer, county of Salop; 11 miles east of Ludlow, on the river Rea. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £13; gross income £500. Patron, in 1835, W. L. Childe, Esq. There are here places of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists, and there is a Roman Catholic chapel within a short distance of the town. There are also an infant, and 2 daily free-schools in this parish. The principal free-school was founded, in 1714, by Sir L. W. Childe, master in chancery, who bequeathed, by will, £3,500 for its endowment. Other benefactions followed, and the annual revenues, some years ago, were £472; the number of scholars 110: 15 boys and 9 girls were clothed, and 2 boys apprenticed. The head master's salary was £60; under master's £40; mistress's £20. The head master had other perquisites—especially an annual allowance of 30s. a-head for copy books, &c. to the children—amounting in all to £111 3s. The heir of the founder is visitor to the school, makes rules, and orders and appoints the master. There are other trifling charities in this parish. The Clec hills in the vicinity abound in limestone, coal, and iron-ore, but the trade carried on is comparatively small. The market-day is Thursday, and there are three annual fairs, April 21st, June 11th, and October 27th, for horned cattle, sheep, and pigs. Pierce Plowman, author of 'Visions,' published under his name, was a native of this town. Acres 7,670. Houses 336. A. P. £8,210. Pop., in 1801, 1,368; in 1831, 1,716. Poor rates, in 1838, £690 16s.—A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Cleobury-Mortimer, by the poor-law commissioners. The Cleobury-Mortimer poor-law union comprehends 17 parishes, embracing an area of 88 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 8,703. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £2,990. Expenditure in 1838, £2,332.

CLEOBURY (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Stottesden, union of Bridgenorth, county of Salop; 8 miles south-west of Bridgenorth. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £5 12s. 3d.; gross income £300. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Brazier. Acres 1,710. Houses 34. A. P. £727. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 187. Poor rates, in 1838, £63 8s.

CLERKENWELL, a large district or out-parish of the city of London, Finsbury division of the hund. of Ossulston, county of Middlesex; 1 mile north-north-west of St. Paul's cathedral, London. Acres 320. Houses 6,015. A. P. £149,361. Pop., in 1801, 23,396; in 1831, 47,634. Poor rates, in 1838, £15,766 8s. The livings are: 1st, St. James's, a perpetual curacy, with the curacy of Pentonville, in the archd. and dio. of London; gross income £793. The patronage belongs to the parishioners. 2d, St. John's, a rectory not in charge; gross income £260

Patron, the Lord-chancellor. St. John's parish is distinct from the parish of St. James, although, as regards their poor, they are under one management. 3d, St. Mark's, a perpetual curacy; gross income £565. Patron, the bishop of London. The church was built at an expense of upwards of £14,000. 4th, St. Philip's, a curacy; gross income £280; in the patronage of the perpetual curate of St. Mark's. There are here places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independents, Methodists, and Free Thinkers. There are here also a Scottish church, and a Welsh chapel. Three of the dissenting chapels are licensed under the new marriage act. This parish possesses 3 day and boarding schools, with 27 daily schools, some of which, particularly the parochial, are endowed. There is a workhouse here, and a female penitentiary at Pentonville, in the parish of St. James's, capable of admitting 100 penitents. This institution was founded in 1807, on a plan somewhat similar to that of the Magdalen hospital, Blackfriar's-road, in consequence of the means of the latter being inadequate to the applications made for admission. It is considered by those who have visited it to be remarkably well conducted. There is also a medical dispensary upon rather a respectable foundation. There are various other charities possessed by this parish, the most important of which are, Sir G. Strode's charity, rent charge £125; Sir R. Wood's, £62; Wiglesworth's, for apprenticing poor children; income in 1826, £52 10s. Minor charities, exclusive of the endowments for schools, £153 4s. 3d.

The artificial river brought from Amwell near Ware in Hertfordshire, after a course of 38 miles, falls into the great cistern, known by the name of 'the New River Head,' in this parish, whence it supplies the metropolis. This splendid and useful achievement was accomplished by Hugh Middleton, citizen and goldsmith of London, at the expenditure of his whole fortune, and without further assistance than the sum of £6,347 4s. 11½d. from James II. It was completed on the 29th of September, 1613. The property was divided into 72 shares, one moiety of which was vested in Mr. Middleton, and 28 other persons incorporated by charter of James I., 1619. The other moiety was vested in the crown. Hugh Middleton was created a baronet by James in 1622, probably to console him in some degree for his losses; and Charles I., after his accession to the throne, restored to him that moiety of the river concern which had been vested in the crown. This is perhaps one of the most extensive works of the kind which the history of the civilized world can anywhere furnish.

There is, in Clerkenwell Green, a splendid sessions house for the county, built in 1779-82. Besides the quarter-sessions, general and adjourned sessions are also held here. The new prison is situated on the eastern side of Gray's-Inn-lane-road, nearly opposite Guildford-street. It is the house of correction and general receiving-prison of the county of Middlesex. It is under the management and control of the sheriffs and a committee of magistrates. It was established by patent, granted to the liberty of Clerkenwell in the reign of James I., but the greater part of the present buildings is of the date of 1816, when the prison was altered and enlarged at an expense of upwards of £40,000. Its central position in the metropolis, and its contiguity to the sessions-house, render the site a convenient one. The prison is divided into 12 airing-yards, and contains 9 day-rooms, 15 sleeping-rooms, and 12 single cells, with two infirmaries, and a chapel and governor's house. Committals in 1836, 5,922; in 1837, 6,337. Expenses in 1837, £3,763 10s. 2d. In Cold Bath Fields—formerly a scene of amusement—there is a county house of correction, which is one of the largest criminal prisons in the kingdom. It consists of three distinct divisions, viz., the old building, erected in 1794; the new vagrants' ward, completed in 1830; and the female wards, completed in 1832. The whole prison, in its three several buildings, will contain together, without being crowded, about 900 prisoners. It is in substantial repair, and tolerably secure against escapes. There is a fire-engine on the establishment, and the greater part of the buildings are fire-proof. The number of prisoners, in 1835, was 7,931; in 1837, 9,850. Expenses in 1837, £13,455 14s. 9d.

The name of this parish is derived from 'The Clerks,' or, to use the ancient plural, 'Clerken, Well,' which still exists, and beside which the parish-clerks, an incorporate society of the city of London, were accustomed to assemble at different periods for the representation of sacred dramas. Besides this well, there were others, some of them celebrated for the comfortable accommodations afforded by the houses that had been erected over them or beside them. Of these no inconsiderable number are still among the places of amusement whose names are familiar to the ears of the present generation: such are Islington Spa, the White Conduit House, Bagnigge Wells, New Tunbridge Wells, and Sadler's Wells. A little knowledge of the writings of Fielding and Foote will introduce any one to the Mulberry and Vineyard gardens, now we believe not to be seen; and the Pear garden at Hockley-in-the-hole, though long ago shut up, will stand for ever open in the delightful pages of the Spectator. The water of the Clerkenwell was for many years suffered to run to waste; but at length the parishioners caused it to be walled in, and a pump to be erected in it for the use of the neighbouring inhabitants, on the front of which there is an inscription relating to its history. It stands in Ray-street, nearly opposite Mutton-hill. It is said that the celebrated and noble but eccentric Swede, Baron Swedenborg, the "highly illuminated" founder of "the New Jerusalem church," died in Bath-street, in this parish. His writings contain a singular mixture of strange visions, and profound theories and disquisitions on theology and metaphysics, and have been more ridiculed than understood; they manifest, however, eccentricities transcending all the ordinary inspirations of erratic genius.

Of the ancient religious houses which existed in this parish, we find the following account in Tanner:—"Sir Jordan Briset gave fourteen acres of land hereabout to one Robert, a priest, his chaplain, in order for him to build a religious house, either for nuns or grey monks, upon which here was a priory founded for nuns, of the order of St. Benedict, about the year 1100, to the honour of God and the assumption of our Lady. This nunnery was valued 26th Henry VIII., at £262 19s. Dugd., £282 16s. 5d., Speed., and was granted by act of parliament, 31st Henry VIII., to Thomas, duke of Norfolk, who 35th Henry VIII., gave the same back to the king, and he, anno regni 37, granted the same to Walter Henley and John Williams, Knts.—In the north suburbs of the city of London, near West Smithfield, the before-mentioned Jordan Briset, by some called a knight, by others a baron, erected, A.D. 1100, or some few years after, an house or hospital for a new religious order, then famous in Christendom, viz., the knights hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, who, by the liberality of the kings and nobility of England, and the accession which was made to them upon the suppression of the templars, temp. Edw. II., were endowed, at the suppression, with lands to the yearly value of 3,040 marks, according to Mr. Leland; £2,385 12s. 8d., Dugd. and Speed.; £3,385 19s. 8d., Stow. The lord-prior here had precedence of all the lay-barons in parliament, and chief power over all the preceptories and lesser houses of this order throughout England. The site of this priory was granted, 38th Henry VIII., to John Viscount Lisle, and great part of the church, with the fine bell tower, was blown up 8th Edward VI. But King Philip and Queen Mary, 4 et 5 regni, re-established a lord-prior; and some brethren of the order repaired the house, and restored many of the old estates in divers counties to the same, who were again suppressed in the first year of Queen Elizabeth." Tanner's Not. Mon. Little or nothing now remains of this once celebrated priory besides the grand entrance to St. John's-square, called St. John's gate. It was over this gate where that faithful servant and useful patron of literature, Edmund Cave, had his printing-office, and whence he issued with so much eclat, for many a year, 'The Gentleman's Magazine,' still bearing the gateway on its title-page.

CLEATHER (St.), a parish in the hund. of Leaweth, union of Camelford, county of Cornwall; 7 miles east of Camelford, on the river Inny. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £6 11s. 10thd., returned at £100; gross income £168. Patrons, in 1835, J. Carpenter and T. J. Phillips, Esqs. Charities, in 1837, £2 10s. Acres 3,540. Houses 29. A. P. £1,998. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 171. Poor rates, in 1838, £138 14s.

CLETTERWOOD, a township in the parish of Buttington, county of Montgomery, South Wales. Houses 42. A. P., including that of the neighbouring township of Hope, £2,471. Pop., in 1801, 201; in 1831, 260. Poor rates, in 1838, £177 14s.

CLEVEDON, a parish in the hund. of Portbury, union of Bedminster, county of Somerset; 12 miles west-west by south of Bristol, on the coast of the Severn, a few miles south-west of the mouth of the Avon. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £15 14s. 4d.; gross income £450. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. A new church, called Christ-church, was consecrated here in August, 1839. Charities, in 1824, income £21 10s. There are 3 daily, 3 boarding, and 2 Sunday and daily National schools here. The village stands on a cliff on the shore of the Bristol channel. The church, on a rock overhanging the shore, occupies a high and particularly prominent situation. The rocks in the vicinity rise with great boldness and grandeur to a majestic height. Pathways have been formed along the edge of the cliffs, which are continued terraces, commanding beautiful prospects of the Bristol channel. Clevedon has acquired comparative importance as a bathing-place. It may now in some measure be considered as the rival of Weston, over which it has the advantage of more varied and picturesque scenery, though not of a convenient sandy beach. The air is mild, and, on the whole, Clevedon is well-calculated for the residence of invalids. A branch railway from Clevedon to Yatton, on the Bristol and Exeter railway, is contemplated. Acres 2,970. Houses 197. A. P. £6,145. Pop., in 1801, 334; in 1831, 1,147. Poor rates, in 1838, £224 12s.

CLEVEDON-MILTON, or MILTON-CLEVEDON, a parish in the hund. of Bruton, union of Shepton-Mallet, county of Somerset; 2¹/₂ miles north-north-east of Bruton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £278. Patron, the Earl of Ilchester. Charities,—in 1823, income £16 19s. Acres 1,320. Houses 45. A. P. £1,702. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 242. Poor rates, in 1838, £45.

CLEVELAND-PORT, a hamlet in the parish of Ormesby, N. R. of Yorkshire. There is an Independent chapel here; the church was formed in 1737. This district, called Cleveland, or Cliffand, is partly encompassed by the Tees and the German ocean. It was formerly called Cargo Fleet, and through it about two-thirds of the produce of Cleveland is shipped and sent coastwise to London, Newcastle, and other markets. The trade carried on is said to average nearly £1,000 per day throughout the year. The name Cleveland is either derived from the high cliffs which it exhibits, or from its strong stiff clay soil, whence the doggerel generally applied to the place, 'Cleveland in the clay, bring in two soles but carry one away.' Thomas Wentworth, 4th Baron Wentworth, was created Earl Cleveland in 1628. He died without issue male; but Charles II. revived the title in favour of his mistress Villiers, whom he created Duchess of Cleveland. The dukedom became extinct in 1774; but was again revived, in 1833, in the person of William, Marquis of Cleveland.

CLEVELEY, a hamlet in the parish of Enstone-Church, county of Oxford; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-south-east of Neat-Enstone. Houses 46. Pop., in 1821, 214. Other returns with the parish.

CLEVELEY, a township, part of it in the parish of Cockerham, and part of it in the parish of Garstang, co-palatine of Lancaster; $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Garstang, intersected by the Lancaster and Preston railway. Acres 530. Houses 26. A. P. £691. Pop., in 1801, 145; in 1831, 140. Poor rates, in 1833, £93 17s.

CLEVERTON. See LEA AND CLEVERTON.

CLEWER, a parish in the hund. of Ripplesmere, union of Windsor, county of Berks; 1 mile west of Windsor, on the southern bank of the Thames. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £14 1s. 0d.; gross income £486. Tithes commuted; rent charge £468 19s. 9d. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Eton college. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here, licensed under the new marriage act. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £45 per annum. The 29th of May is held here as a fair. Acres 1,490. Houses 541. A. P. £4,872. Pop., in 1801, 1,685; in 1831, 3,011. Poor rates, in 1833, £1,268 3s.

CLEY. See COCKLEY-CLEY.

CLEY, NEAR THE SEA, a parish, market-town, and seaport, in the hund. of Holt, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; 25 miles north-north-west of Norwich, 8 west of Wells, and $\frac{1}{2}$ north-north-west of Holt; on the river Glaven, about 1 mile from the beach. A great part of this parish is salt-marsh. Acres 1,980. Houses 169. A. P. £1,846. Pop., in 1801, 547; in 1831, 827. Poor rates, in 1833, £420 3s. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £22 13s. 4d.; gross income £338. Patron, in 1835, John W. Tomlinson, Esq., who is lord of the manor, owner of great part of the soil, and has a neat residence on an acclivity above the town. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel here; and in the town is a Lancasterian school, established in 1834. There are 5 small daily schools in the parish. The workhouse is now divided into tenements for poor families. At the enclosure in 1812, 52 acres of land were allotted to the poor. The jurisdiction of the port extends about 30 miles along the coast. The harbour is very narrow and shallow; but in its course to the sea it forms a junction with the Blakeney channel; and it is in contemplation to make a pier harbour on the beach, as a refuge for vessels passing this part of the coast, where there are many shifting shoals of sand. The custom-house for the port of Blakeney and Cley, including Cromer and several fishing towns, is situated here; and according to its returns for 1834, there were exported in that year 27,000 quarters of corn, and 10,000 sacks of flour; and imported 16,000 chaldrons of coals. In the same year there belonged to the various places within the limits of the port, 72 registered vessels, besides upwards of 300 fishing vessels; but the latter are chiefly at Cromer, Sheringham, Runton, &c. There was formerly a market-day on Saturday, and the last Friday and Saturday in July are still annually held as a pleasure fair. It was into this small port that the vessel with Prince James of Scotland, afterwards James I., on board, was forced by stress of weather on his passage to France, and detained a prisoner by the mariners of Cley. "The seamen of the place," says Camden, "made a present of him to King Henry IV." who confined him in the Tower of London, where he continued 17 years, when he was released, and immediately ascended the Scottish throne.

CLEYGATE, a manor in the parish of Thames-Ditton, county of Surrey; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile east-south-east of Eshar. Houses 120. Pop., in 1821, 559; in 1831, 708. Other returns with the parish.

CLIBURN, a parish in West ward, union of West ward, county of Westmoreland; 7 miles north-west of Appleby, on the Lyvennet river. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £9 1s. 5d.; gross income £200. Tithes commuted in 1806. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which has an endowment of £21 per annum. Acres 1,360. Houses 45. A. P. £2,117. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 229. Poor rates, in 1833, £69 9s.

CLIDDESSEN, a parish in the upper half-hundred of Basingstoke, union of Basingstoke, county of Southampton; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Basingstoke. Living, a rectory consolidated with the rectory of Farleigh Wallop; rated at £10 16s. 3d.; gross income £685. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Portsmouth. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,150. Houses 47. A. P. £2,106. Pop., in 1801, 239; in 1831, 329. Poor rates, in 1833, £248 6s.

CLIEVELOAD, a hamlet in the parish of Powick, Worcestershire; 3 miles south-south-west of Worcester. Its chapel, rated at £1 17s. 1d., has long been in ruins. Houses 6. Pop., in 1821, 36; in 1831, 29. Other returns with the parish.

CLIFFE WITH LUND, a township in the parish of Hemingborough, east riding of Yorkshire; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles east of Selby, and 28 from Hull; intersected by the Leeds and Hull railway. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,280. Houses 94. A. P. £2,760. Pop., in 1801, 424; in 1831, 490. Poor rates, in 1833, £106 12s.

CLIFFE, a parish in the hund. of Shamwell, lathe of Aylesford, union of North Aylesford, county of Kent; 6 miles north of Rochester, south of the river Thames. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Canterbury, a peculiar; rated at £50; gross income £1,300. Tithes commuted. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. There are 2 daily schools in this parish, one of which is a free school, with an endowment of £10 per annum, besides a cottage occupied by the school-mistress. The church was formerly collegiate. The rector has been in the habit of exercising over this parish several branches of the ordinary jurisdiction without any special commission, such as granting probates of wills, letters of administration, and licenses. The village, designated from the cliff on which it is situated, was anciently larger than it is at present. This is supposed to have been at one time a residence of the bishops of Canterbury. According to an old custom, the rector here has been in the habit of distri.

buting at his parsonage-house, annually, on St. James' day, a mutton pie and a loaf to as many as may choose to demand it. Acres 5,400. Houses 163. A. P. £5,894. Pop., in 1801, 525; in 1831, 832. Poor rates, in 1838, £782 19s.

CLIFFE (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Bewsborough, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Dover, county of Kent; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Dover. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; gross income £34; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Canterbury. Acres 1,090. Houses 10. A. P. £1,024. Pop., in 1801, 61; in 1831, 82. Poor rates, in 1838, £83.

CLIFFE, a township in the parish of Manfield, north riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Darlington. Acres 970. Houses 12. A. P. £460. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 68. Poor rates, in 1838, £7 12s.

CLIFFE, or ST. THOMAS-AT-CLIFFE, a parish in the hund. of Ringmer, union of Lewes, county of Sussex; about 1 mile east of Lewes. Living, a discharged rectory in the dio. of Canterbury, a peculiar; rated at £5 12s. 6d., returned at £100; gross income £130. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. There are 3 daily and 2 day and boarding schools in this parish. There is a charity here for repairs of the church and for behoof of the poor; income in 1836, £60 17s. 6d.; minor charities about £5 10s. Acreage with the borough of Lewes. Houses 229. A. P. £2,241. Pop., in 1801, 1,113; in 1831, 1,408. Poor rates, in 1838, £666 3s.

CLIFFE-REGIS, or KING'S CLIFFE, a parish in the hund. of Willybrook, union of Oundle, county of Northampton; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Oundle, on a branch of the river Nen. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 16s. 3d.; gross income £584. Patron, the earl of Westmoreland. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here. This parish possesses 5 daily schools, 2 of which are supported by endowment. It was at one time a market-town. An annual fair is held here on the 29th October, for cheese, home-spun linen, and turners' ware. There is an endowed alms-house here. The Rev. William Law was a native of this parish, where he was born in 1686, and died in 1761. He is well-known as author of 'The Serious Call'; but more remarkable as translator of the works of that superlative and extraordinary German mystic, theosopher, and rosicrucian, Jacob Böhme, or Behmen. Law became deeply tinged with the ascetic doctrines of Böhme; after which he wrote, amongst others, those singular treatises, 'The Spirit of Prayer,' 'The Spirit of Love,' and 'The Way to Divine Knowledge';—works, which, with those of Böhme himself, are much admired by some of the Society of Friends. Law's enthusiastic regard for him was such, that he boasted of reading no books but Böhme's and the Bible. He was celebrated as a polemical and non-injuring divine. His successful vindication of the received doctrine of the eucharist against the heterodox notions of Bishop Hoadley, is well-known; and his name will go down with eclat to the latest posterity, connected, as it is, with the famous Bangorian controversy. Acres 4,460. Houses 229. A. P. £3,486. Pop., in 1801, 876; in 1831, 1,173. Poor rates, in 1838, £368 13s.

CLIFF (NORTH), a township in the parish of Sancton, east riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south of Market-Weighton. The Hull and Selby railway passes near to this place. Acres 1,480. Houses 11. A. P. £728. Pop., in 1801, 89; in 1831, 85. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 8s.

CLIFF (SOUTH), a township in the parish of North Cave, east riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Market-Weighton. Acres 1,700. Houses 22. A. P. £965. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 104. Poor rates, in 1838, £14 10s.

CLIFFE-PYPARD, or CLEEVE-PEPPER, a parish in the hund. of Kingsbridge, union of Cricklade and Wootton Bassett, county of Wilts; 4 miles south of Wootton Bassett. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £9, returned at £129; gross income £294. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Goddard. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £30. Other charities, income in 1834, £10 1s. Acres 5,050. Houses 155. A. P. £6,356. Pop., in 1801, 624; in 1831, 885. Poor rates, in 1838, £719 6s.

CLIFFORD, a township in the parish of Bramham, west riding of York; 3 miles south-south-east of Wetherby; south of the river Warfe. There are a daily school here, and 2 boarding schools. Acres 1,500. Houses 219. A. P. £2,616. Pop., in 1801, 660; in 1831, 1,166. Poor rates, in 1838, £198 13s.

CLIFFORD, a parish in the hund. of Huntington, union of Hay, county of Hereford; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Kington, south-east of the river Wye. It includes part of the township of Vowmine. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4 10s., returned at £128 9s. 6d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Trumper. There are one daily National, and two Sunday schools in this parish, the children of which have a right to attend the free school at Dorstone. There is also a charity school here, erected by voluntary subscription, and endowed with a conditional stipend to the schoolmaster of £50 per annum, besides £16 for books, fuel, &c. These endowments are paid out of the annual proceeds of a charity instituted in 1722 by John Smith, Esq., for the purposes of building and repairing 6 alms-houses in the parish of Peterchurch, and endowing them with a weekly stipend of 2s. 6d. to each of 6 alms-women of that parish, besides £10 per annum amongst them for fuel, &c.; the overplus rents of the charity property to be paid to the poor of the parish of Clifford. The estimated income of this charity in 1837, was £358 10s. 3d.; the residue of which, after payment of the alms-people's annuities and other expenses, was appointed, by the court of chancery, in July, 1837, to be expended, for the future, as follows: viz. £60 per annum to increase the income of the 6 alms-people at Peterchurch; £35 per annum to apprentice 2 boys and 1 girl from the charity school; £60 per annum for fuel to the poor of this parish; and £66 per annum, as already mentioned, to the charity school of Clifford. There are other minor charities in this parish; income, in 1837, £12 12s. Some remains of Clifford castle, the baronial residence of the lords de Clifford, are still to be seen here upon a bold eminence rising from the banks of the Wye. Here was also a cell of Cluniac monks, subordinate to the priory at Lewes, in Sussex. Acres 6,920. Houses 164. A. P. £9,720. Pop., in 1801, 627; in 1831, 807. Poor rates, in 1838, £361 9s.

CLIFFORD-CHAMBERS, a parish locally situated in the upper division of the hund. of Kiftgate, but included in the hund. of Tewksbury, union of Stratford-on-Avon, county of Gloucester; 2 miles south of Stratford-on-Avon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £18 15s. 7½d.; gross income £174. Tithes commuted in 1779. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. A. Annesly. There are 2 daily schools here. Charities in 1829; income, £39 17s. 7d., expended chiefly on the poor of the parish. Acres 1,530. Houses 69. A. P. £2,100. Pop., in 1801, 223; in 1831, 336. Poor rates, in 1838, £163 2s.

CLIFTON HUNDRED, in the south-east corner of Bedfordshire. Area 18,005 acres. Houses 990. Pop., in 1831, 5,558.

CLIFTON, a parish in the hund. of Clifton, union of Biggleswade, county of Bedford; $\frac{1}{4}$ mile east of Bedford, west of the river Ivel. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £20 2s. 11d.; gross income £446. Tithes commuted 2^o Will. IV. c. 4. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. D. J. Olivier. There are a day, and a day and Sunday school here. Charities in 1820, £1 10s. Acres 1,420. Houses 135. A. P. £2,417. Pop., in 1801, 329; in 1831, 664. Poor rates, in 1838, £324 16s.

CLIFTON, or ROCK SAVAGE, a township in the parish of Runcorn, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles north-north-east of Frodsham, north of the river Weaver. Acres 640. Houses 2. A. P. £1,243. Pop., in 1801, 28; in 1831, 36. Poor rates, in 1838, £72 16s.

CLIFTON-WITH-CAMPTON, a township in the parish of Ashbourne, county of Derby; $\frac{1}{4}$ mile south-west of Ashbourne; bounded on the west by the river Dove. There are 3 daily schools here. Acres 1,120. Houses 179. A. P. £2,932. Pop., in 1801, 627; in 1831, 839. Poor rates, in 1838, £257 10s.

CLIFTON, a parish in the hund. of Barton-Regis, union of Clifton, county of Gloucester; about a mile west of Bristol, north of the river Avon. Acres 910. Houses 1,605. A. P. £4,535. Pop., in 1801, 4,457; in 1831, 12,032. Poor rates, in 1838, £6,426. The Clifton poor-law union comprehends 12 parishes, embracing an area of 48 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 51,345. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £17,863. Expenditure in 1838, £15,352. Living, a perpetual curacy, with the curacy of Dowry annexed, in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £6; gross income £865. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Simeon. There are a private episcopal chapel, one in Lady Huntingdon's connexion, and a floating chapel for seamen here; besides an Independent chapel, originally erected by Lady Hope in 1750, and recently rebuilt, with sittings for 1,250. In 1836 a Roman Catholic church was about to be built, of Greek architecture, and exhibiting greater novelty of composition than is usual in designs of that class. The income of charities possessed by this parish, in 1824, was £43 9s. 10d. There are 2 day and Sunday, 20 boarding, and 17 daily schools here, 2 of the latter of which are National schools, and 1 connected with the British and Foreign School society, attended by 300 scholars. There is also a dispensary. The romantic scenery of Clifton has often afforded employment to the pen and the pencil. The village is sublimely situated on the summit of a precipitous cliff, commanding charming views of all the surrounding country, including the highly cultivated lands of Somersetshire and the western portion of Bristol. The navigable Avon beneath winds through a chasm between the base of this and that of the opposite cliff, which shoots precipitously up to a height so nearly equal, that, with the exact correspondence of the strata, both in substance and inclination, hardly a doubt can be entertained that the chasm was formed by some violent natural convulsion. The rocks are limestone, or marble of various shades, from lighted to brown, and from grey to blue. In the fissures numerous quartz crystals, or Bristol diamonds, rhomboidal stalactites, and spars, are found. Great quantities of the rocks are annually burnt into lime. A part of the village is situated at the base of the rock.

It possesses a remarkably mild and balmy atmosphere, from which it has been styled the Montpelier of England, and which is peculiarly suited to persons of weak and debilitated constitutions, for whom also the celebrated Bristol hot wells, which are situated in this part of the village, near the stupendous rock of St. Vincent, seem to be special preparations; nevertheless, it is in the upper parts, principally, where the wealthier classes at present reside; while the poor population are spread along the road from Bristol to the hot wells and the parts adjacent. In this lower part of the village the scenery is of a sublime character, but the valley is too narrow, and the houses and other objects on the heights too crowded, and devoid of fore-ground to give effect to their natural characteristics. Many of the acclivities have been laid out and fitted up as parades, terraces, crescents, &c.; a design has been formed of uniting the precipitous banks of the Avon by a bridge; and the summit of the cliff is beautifully crowned with elegant villas, commanding views of the most enchanting and sublime description.

Clifton owes its importance solely to its hot medicinal wells, which have been in general repute in cases of debility, consumption, scorbutic diseases, dysentery, &c. for more than two hundred years. It is determined, by scientific analysis, that the mineral contents of these celebrated waters are like those of Matlock; and, according to a modern author, the principal components are, an uncommon quantity of carbonic acid gas and fixed air, and a portion of magnesia in various combinations with the muriatic, vitriolic, and carbonic acids. Its temperature at the pump is between 72° and 73° of Fahrenheit. It is lighter than common water, clear, pure, soft, and pleasant. It is extensively used for baths. The spring rises near the bottom of the cliff, ten feet below water-mark, and gushes so plentifully from an aperture in the solid rock, as to discharge sixty gallons in a minute. In the village there are a coffee-house, hotel, lodging-houses, and assembly-rooms. Assemblies and concerts are kept up by subscription, with all the other amusements necessary for a gay watering-place. Races are held here in the month of April. Many of the elegant houses here are occupied only for a part of the year by opulent and fashionable invalids who reside at Clifton for the sake of its salubrious waters. Building speculations still continue to be carried on. Many of the principal citizens of Bristol reside here. For the purposes of parliamentary representation and municipal jurisdiction, the whole of this parish has been included within the bounds of the city of Bristol. The municipal commissioners in their elaborate report on that city, recommended that Clifton should be made, in every respect, part of the city and county of Bristol. They stated that the jurisdiction of all the city courts extended over a part, while that of the court of requests extended over the whole, of this parish; and that those parts only, which were not under the jurisdiction of Bristol, came under that of the county of Gloucester. There is a peculiarity connected with this subject, of which it may be interesting to give a brief account: Some time before 1776, 'the Merchant Venturers,' a corporate body still existing in Bristol, though it has long ceased to be a trading company, and still possessing considerable landed estates in the parish of Clifton, besides the Bristol hot wells, which also belong to them, formed a floating dock at Clifton, capable of containing the largest vessels then using the port; and, in that year, obtained an act for making a new quay at Clifton, and for enlarging the floating harbour still further; a measure which, though beneficial at the time, proved inadequate to the wants of the harbour; and the bold undertaking of a floating harbour extending from Bristol to Clifton, was devised; for an account of which see article BRISTOL. By the act above alluded to, a slip of land occupied by, and adjacent to, the works of this corporation at Clifton, between Rownham Ferry and the road leading from Bristol to the hot wells, was taken from the county of Gloucester, and made part of the county of Bristol, with this exception, that it was not thereby to be exempted from any rate levied in the parish of Clifton, or to become chargeable to any rate within the city and county of Bristol. The freeholders were to retain their rights of voting for the county members, coroners, and other officers of Gloucestershire. The Gloucestershire coroner, for whose election the freeholders of this part of Clifton were thus entitled to vote, is, nevertheless, by this same act, deprived of authority to hold an inquest in the parish of Clifton, while the jurisdiction of the two coroners of Bristol extended over all the parts of this parish which had been added to the city. The inhabitants of that part of the parish of Bedminster within the jurisdiction of the dock act thereby evaded serving on juries altogether. The same anomaly probably occurred with regard to this part of Clifton parish. The quay warden of Bristol has superintendence over the Clifton new quay.

CLIFTON-WITH-SALWICK, a township in the parish of Kirkham, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Kirkham; at the mouth of the river Ribble. There is a Sunday and daily National school here, and a daily one endowed with £2 per annum. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of those belonging to the dean and chapter of Christ-church, Oxford, £535 17s. 6d.; of vicarial £70 14s.; and of the parish clerks £1 13s. 4d. Acres 3,010. Houses 78. A. P. £5,874. Pop., in 1801, 552; in 1831, 508. Poor rates, in 1838, £324 3s.

CLIFTON, a township in the parish of Eccles, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5 miles north-west of Manchester; close on the Bury and Bolton canal. There is a daily school here. Acres 820. Houses 193. A. P. £2,952. Pop., in 1801, 812; in 1831, 1,277. Poor rates, in 1838, £269 7s.

CLIFTON-WITH-GLAPTON, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Rushcliffe, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 4 miles south-south-west of Nottingham, on the eastern bank of the river Trent. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £21 6s. 10½d.; gross income £415. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. Clifton, Bart. Charities in 1828, £9 3s. 7d. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,980. Houses 82. A. P. £2,723. Pop., in 1801, 381; in 1831, 405. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 19s.

CLIFTON, a township in the parish of Deddington, county of Oxford. Acres 670. Houses 54. Pop., in 1801, 226; in 1831, 268. Other returns with the parish.

CLIFTON, a parish in West ward, union of West ward, county of Westmoreland; 3 miles south-south-east of Penrith, on the post road. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £8 3s. 4d.; gross income £152. Tithes commuted in 1811. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,520. Houses 54. A. P. £2,672. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 288. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 6s.

CLIFTON, a township partly in the parish of St. Michael-le-Belfrey, and partly in the parish of St. Olave Mary-Gate, north riding of Yorkshire; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-west of York; on the river Ouse. Houses 148. A. P. £5,238. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 715. Poor rates, in 1838, £234 7s.

CLIFTON-WITH-NORWOOD, a township in the parish of Fewston, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north of Otley. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £7 per annum. Acres 3,510. Houses 83. A. P. £1,956. Pop., in 1801, 403; in 1831, 415. Poor rates, in 1838, £235 13s.

CLIFTON. See NEWHALL-WITH-CLIFTON.
CLIFTON-CUM-HARTSHEAD, a township in the parish of Dewsbury, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north by east of Huddersfield. There are three infant, and two day and boarding, schools here. Acres 2,820. Houses 455. A. P. £3,987. Pop., in 1801, 1,628; in 1831, 2,408. Poor rates, in 1838, £412 1s.

CLIFTON-UPON-DUNSMOOR, a parish in the Rugby division of the hund. of Knightlow, union of Rugby, county of Warwick; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-east by north of Rugby, south of the river Avon, and close on the Oxford canal. It includes the hamlet of Newton-Biggin. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Brownsover, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £8 1s. 8d.; gross income £119. Patron, in 1835, the earl of Bradford. Charities in 1834; annual rents of poor lands, £50, distributed amongst the poor. There are 2 daily schools here. This parish was the birth-place of the historian Carte, who died here in 1754. Acres 4,030. Houses 130. A. P. £4,677. Pop., in 1801, 441; in 1831, 597. Poor rates, in 1838, £287 10s.

CLIFTON (GREAT), a township in the parish of Workington, county of Cumberland; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Workington; on the southern bank of the Derwent. There are 2 daily schools here. With Little Clifton, tithes commuted in 1814. Acreage with the parish. Houses 67. A. P. £657. Pop., in 1801, 268; in 1831, 286. Poor rates, in 1838, £42 8s.

CLIFTON (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Workington, county of Cumberland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Workington, on a branch of the Derwent. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; returned at £50; gross income £89. Patron, the rector of Workington. There are two daily schools here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 45. A. P. £803. Pop., in 1801, 166; in 1831, 221. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 8s.

CLIFTON (NORTH), a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Newark, union of Newark, county of Nottingham; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-east by north of Tuxford. It includes the township of South Clifton, and the hamlets of Harby, and Spalford. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Harby, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 6s.; gross income £176. Patron, the prebendary of Clifton in the cathedral church of Lincoln. Charities in 1827; annual rents of church lands, £13 12s. Other charities besides those of South Clifton and Harby, £17, £10 10s. of which was applied in educating 15 children. There are 1 Sunday and daily National, and 6 other daily schools in this parish. The Trent bounds this parish on the west, over which there is a ferry free to the parishioners, except that the ferryman and his dog are entitled to dine on Christmas at the vicarage, upon the two staples of old English luxury, roast beef and plum-pudding. Acres 5,050. Houses 168. A. P. £3,900. Pop., in 1801, 640; in 1831, 949. Poor rates, in 1838, £174 5s.

CLIFTON (SOUTH), a township in the parish of North Clifton, county of Nottingham; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Tuxford. Charities in 1827, £1 15s. There are 2 daily schools here. Houses 70. A. P. £1,373. Pop., in 1801, 214; in 1831, 340. Poor rates, in 1838, £84 4s.

CLIFTON-UPON-TEAME, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Doddingtree, union of Martley, county of Worcester; 10 miles north-west by west of Worcester. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £6 19s. 2d.; gross income £185. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. E. Winnington. Charities in 1830; annual rents of church lands, £17 10s.; other charities, £2 10s. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 3,310. Houses 87. A. P. £3,605. Pop., in 1801, 499; in 1831, 488. Poor rates, in 1838, £240 6s.

CLIFTON-UPON-URE, a township in the parish of Thornton-Watlas, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-west of Bedale. Acres 720. Houses 6. Pop., in 1811, 38; in 1831, 43. Poor rates, in 1838, £33 2s.

CLIFTON-CAMPVILLE, a parish in the north division of the hund. of Offlow, union of Tamworth, county of Stafford; 5 miles north-east of Tamworth, south of the river Meese. The Birmingham and Derby railway intersects the parish. It includes the township of Haunton, and the chapelry of Harleston. Living, a rectory, with the curacies of Chilcote and Harleston, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £30; gross income £1,345. Patron, in 1835, Lord Calthorpe. Charities in 1821, £1 15s. The church is adorned with one of the finest spires of any parish church in the kingdom. There is a day and Sunday National school here, with a lending library attached. Acres 4,170. Houses 155. A. P. £8,136. Pop., in 1811, 741; in 1831, 801. Poor rates, in 1838, £305 19s.

CLIFTON DARTMOUTH HARDNESS. See DARTMOUTH.

CLIFTON-HAMDEN, a parish in the hund. of Dorchester, union of Abingdon, county of Oxford; 3½ miles east-south-east of Abingdon, bounded on the south by the river Thames. Living, a curacy, a peculiar in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; gross income £187. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Noyes. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,030. Houses 60. A. P. £1,348. Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 288. Poor rates, in 1838, £174 16s.

CLIFTON-MAYBANK, a parish in the hund. of Yetminster, union of Sherborne, Sherborne division of Dorsetshire; 4½ miles west-south-west of Sherborne. Living, a rectory united to the vicarage of Bradford-Abbas. Acres 770. Houses 10. A. P. £2,030. Pop., in 1801, 40; in 1831, 60. Poor rates, in 1838, £111 6s.

CLIFTON-REYNES, a parish in the hund. of Newport, union of Newport Pagnel, county of Buckingham; about a mile east of Olney, bounded on the north and west by the river Ouse. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 6s. 10½d.; gross income £270. Tithes commuted in 1822. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. A. Small. Income of charities in 1832, £12. There is a Sunday school here, and a National school is adjacent, available to the children of this parish. Acres 1,120. Houses 48. A. P. £1,872. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 246. Poor rates, in 1838, £133 12s.

CLIMPING, a parish in the hund. of Avisford, county of Sussex; 4 miles south of Arundel, west of the river Arun, and close upon the Arundel and Portsmouth canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £9 11s. 0½d.; gross income £221. In the patronage of the bishop of Chichester. There is a daily school here. Acres

2,060. Houses 47. A. P. £2,890. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 269. Poor rates, in 1838, £104 8s.

CLINCH. See FAWDON, CLINCH, AND HARTSIDE.

CLINT, a township in the parish of Ripley, west riding of York; 1½ mile west-south-west of Ripley, north of the river Nidd. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here, and a daily school supported by an endowment of £100 per annum. Acres 1,750. Houses 87. A. P. £2,121. Pop., in 1801, 430; in 1831, 404. Poor rates, in 1838, £157 17s.

CLIPPESBY, a parish in the west division of Flegg, union of East and West Flegg, county of Norfolk; 3½ miles north-east of Acle, bounded on the west by the river Bure. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £147 14s. 8d.; gross income £250. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £244 19s. 4d. Patron, in 1835, H. Muskett, Esq. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,300. Houses 11. A. P. £1,196. Pop., in 1801, 46; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1838, £57 3s.

CLIPSHAM, or KELPISHAM, a parish in the soke of Oakham, union of Stamford, county of Rutland; 9 miles north-north-west of Stamford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10 0s. 5d.; gross income £220; in the patronage, in 1835, of the co-heiresses of Mrs. Snow. There is a day and Sunday school here, with a lending library attached. Acres 1,570. Houses 41. A. P. £1,818. Pop., in 1801, 175; in 1831, 216. Poor rates, in 1838, £97 5s.

CLIPSTON, a parish in the hund. of Rothwell, union of Market-Harborough, county of Northampton; 4½ miles south-south-west of Market-Harborough. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough, in three portions, two of which are rated at £11 12s. 8½d., and the third at £6; gross income £381. Patrons, the master and fellows of Christ's college, Cambridge. This parish possesses 6 daily schools, one of which—a free grammar-school—was founded and endowed by Sir George Buswell in 1667, and is open to the male children of six parishes. A lending library is attached to this school for the benefit of the parishioners generally. Other charities; income in 1830, £15 16s. There were also almshouses for 10 men and 1 woman, endowed by Sir George Buswell with a yearly stipend, amounting, in 1830, to £15 12s. each, besides clothes, coals, &c. Acres 2,800. Houses 165. A. P. £4,867. Pop., in 1801, 737; in 1831, 807. Poor rates, in 1838, £541.

CLIPSTONE, a township in the parish of Plump-tree, county of Nottingham; 6 miles south-east of Nottingham. Tithes commuted in 1805. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,850. Houses 14. A. P. £945. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 82. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 17s.

CLIPSTONE, a township in the parish of Edwinstow, county of Nottingham; 3½ miles west-south-west of Ollerton, on the river Maun. There is a daily school here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 47. A. P. £764. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 223. Poor rates, in 1838, £51 1s.

CLIST-BROAD. See BROAD-CLIST.

CLIST (St. GEORGE), a parish in the eastern division of the hund. of Budleigh, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 1½ miles north-east by east of Topsham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £17 16s. 8d.; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. R. Ellicombe. There is a day and Sunday school here, endowed in 1704 by Dame Hannah Seward with lands at Woodbury and Otter-St.-Mary, producing an annual rental of £38 14s. Other charities about £10 10s. Acres 860. Houses 66. A. P. £3,507. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 359. Poor rates, in 1838, £299 11s.

CLIST-HONITON, a parish in the eastern division of the hund. of Budleigh, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Exeter. Living, a curacy, a peculiar in the archd. and dio. of Exeter, not in charge; rated at £120 per annum; gross income £146. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £265. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Exeter. There are 4 daily schools in this parish, one of which has a small endowment. Acres 1,410. Houses 68. A. P. £3,666. Pop., in 1801, 340; in 1831, 426. Poor rates, in 1838, £263 18s.

CLIST-HYDON, a parish in the hund. of Clifton, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Columpton, in the vicinity of the Exeter and Bristol railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £20 0s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £494. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Huyshe. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £17 per annum. Other charities in 1820, £16 12s. Acres 3,000. Houses 53. A. P. £2,952. Pop., in 1801, 257; in 1831, 331. Poor rates, in 1838, £170 14s.

CLIST-ST.-LAWRENCE, a parish in the hund. of Clifton, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 5 miles south of Columpton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £9 4s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £265. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Exeter. Charities in 1823, £4 11s. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,380. Houses 37. A. P. £1,730. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 185. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 18s.

CLIST-ST.-MARY, a parish in the hund. of East Budleigh, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Topsham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £5 1s. 3d.; gross income £210. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Strong, Esq. Charities in 1823, £8 15s. There are a daily and a day and Sunday school here. Acres 580. Houses 29. A. P. £1,556. Pop., in 1801, 97; in 1831, 137. Poor rates, in 1838, £96.

CLIST-SACKVILLE, or BISHOP'S-CLIST, a tything in the parishes of Farringdon and Sowton, county of Devon; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Topsham.

CLISTON HUNDRED, in the county of Devon, lying to the north-east of Exeter, between the hundreds of Hayridge and Wowford. Area 19,260 acres. Houses 627. Pop., in 1831, 3,432.

CLITHEROE, a borough, market-town, and parochial chapelry in the parish of Whalley, union of Clitheroe, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 30 miles north of Manchester, and 24 south-east of Lancaster, on the eastern bank of the river Ribble, at the foot of Pendle hill. Acres 2,410. Houses 885. A. P. £5,359. Pop., in 1801, 1,368; in 1831, 5,213. Poor rates, in 1838, £947 15s. Living, a curacy under that of Whalley, in the archd. and dio. of Chester; certified at £22 12s.; gross income £130. Patron, in 1835, Earl Howe. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. The Independent church was formed in 1815. The Catholic, and a dissenting, chapel are licensed under the new marriage act. There is a grammar-school here, founded by the sovereigns Philip and Mary, in 1554, and endowed with an income now amounting to £452 8s. 8d. 20 scholars are taught arithmetic, writing, and classics. There are also an infant, and 2 principal daily schools, and a National one about to open; besides a congregational, a circulating, and an improving mechanics' library, with a mechanics' institute. This place belonged originally to the family of Lacy, who erected here, sometime in the 12th century, a castle, which was dismantled, by orders of the parliament, in 1649. It has now nearly disappeared, and a modern building has been erected within its precincts. Clitheroe claims to be a borough by prescription. The first charter granted during the life-time of Henry de Lacy, who died about the middle of the 12th century, has been confirmed by many successive monarchs. By this charter the government is vested in two bailiffs, chosen annually, by the burgesses out of their own body. There are also two constables appointed; a town-sergeant, who is also jailer, and 12 javelin-men, armed with halberds, who assist in keeping the peace. There is a borough jail with 2 cells, inconvenient and incurably damp. Debtors are confined in the town hall. The boundaries of the municipal borough coincide with those of the township, except that they are carried further across the river Ribble. The income of the municipal borough, in 1837, was £74 4s. 2d.; expenditure £49 2s. 8d. The town is well paved, and supplied with water from 4 wells in different parts of the town, and new houses are springing up in every direction. The limits of the ancient borough, municipal and parliamentary, and of the township of Clitheroe, were also co-extensive. The ancient parliamentary borough sent, since the time of Elizabeth, two members to parliament; but Clitheroe has been deprived of one member by 2^o Will. IV., c. 45., and schedule B.; although the chapelries of Downham and Clitheroe, and the four townships of Whalley, Wiswall, Pendleton, and Henshorn, with Little Mitton and Colcoats, have been included within the boundaries of the new parliamentary borough. The elective franchise was formerly confined to about 36 voters. The number of electors registered in 1832 was 306, 18 of whom were freemen. In 1836, 375; in 1837, 374. The number who voted at last general election in 1837 was 319. The bailiffs are the returning officers. The corporation does not exercise any criminal jurisdiction. The only courts are the borough court of pleas, and the court of piepoudre. The borough court is a court of record for personal actions to any amount. The bailiffs are judges. The county magistrates hold petty sessions in the borough once a month. The appearance of the town does not bespeak any great prosperity. There are, however, some extensive cotton manufactories and print-works recently erected, and it is stated that the wealth and prosperity of the borough are rapidly increasing. The inhabitants of the out-townships, &c., are principally employed in agriculture, while those within the central township of Clitheroe itself are chiefly engaged in manufacture. The market day is Saturday; and there are fairs, March 24th, July 21st, 4th Saturday after St. Michael, September 29th, and December 7th, for cattle, horses, and cloths.

CLIVE, or CLEAVE, a township in the parish of Middlewich, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles south-west of Middlewich, intersected by the Birmingham railway. Acres 1,130. Houses 20. A. P. £533. Pop., in 1801, 102; in 1831, 123. Poor rates, in 1838, £75 4s.

CLIVE, a chapelry in the parish of St. Mary, county of Salop; 3 miles south-south-east of Wem. Living, a curacy with that of St. Mary, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; certified at £14 14s. 8d., returned at £43; gross income £66. Patrons, the corporation of Shrewsbury. There are 2 daily schools here. Wycherly the poet was born in this parish in the year 1640. Acres 1,370. Houses 62. A. P. £1,980. Pop., in 1801, 289; in 1831, 353. Poor rates, in 1838, £121 6s.

CLIVIGER, or CLYNGER, a chapelry in the parish of Whalley, county of Lancaster; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by south of Burnley. There are 2 daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school, in this chapelry. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £256. Acres 6,160. Houses 289. A. P. £5,110. Pop., in 1801, 1,058; in 1831, 1,598. Poor rates, in 1838, £638 4s.

CLIXBY, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Yarborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-east by south of Glamford Briggs. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Caistor. Tithes commuted in 1811. Acres 2,020. Houses 6. A. P. £1,256. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 46.

CLOATLY, a tything in the parish of Hankerton, county of Wilts; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Malmesbury. Houses 20. Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 88. Other returns with the parish.

CLOCAENOG, ISSA, and UCHA, a parish in the hund. and union of Ruthin, county of Denbigh; 3 miles south-west of Ruthin, on a branch of the river Clydd. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Bangor and province of Canterbury; rated at £12; reported gross income £348; aggregate amount of tithes composition £326 7s. 4d. Patron, the bishop of Bangor. Charities in 1837; income £51, distributed principally amongst the poor of this and other parishes. There is a day and Sunday National school here. Houses, of both parts of the parish, Upper and Lower, 84. A. P. £2,261. Pop., in 1801, 457; in 1831, 461. Poor rates, in 1838, £372 2s.

CLODOCK, a parish in the hund. of Ewyas-Lacy, union of Dore, county of Hereford; 15 miles south-west of Hereford. Living, a vicarage, not in charge, in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; gross income £170. Patron, Walter Wilkins, Esq. There are 7 daily schools in this parish. This parish includes the townships of Craswell, Lower and Upper, and Newton, and the chapelries of Llanveyneoe and Longtown. Charities in 1837; income of those possessed by the township of Craswell £2 6s.; of Longtown, £26 10s. 9d.; of Llanveyneoe, £6 4s.; and of Newton, £4 9s.; all distributed principally amongst the poor of the respective townships. Acres 18,250. Houses 364. A. P. £8,570. Pop., in 1801, 1,591; in 1831, 1,863. Poor rates, in 1838, £560 3s.

CLOFOCK, an extra-parochial liberty, adjacent to Workington, in Allerdale ward, Cumberland.

CLOFORD, a parish in the hund. and union of Frome, county of Somerset; 4 miles south-west of Frome. Living, a discharged vicarage, in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £7 17s. 6d.; returned at £130; gross income £116. Patron, in 1835, T. S. Horner, Esq. Charities in 1819; income £46 2s., distributed to newly married women of the parishes of Cloford and Nunney. Acres 2,060. Houses 58. A. P. £2,012. Pop., in 1801, 257; in 1831, 302. Poor rates, in 1838, £193 16s.

CLOPHILL, a parish in the hund. of Flitt, union of Ampthill, county of Bedford; 2 miles north of Silsoe, north of the river Ivel. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £12; gross income £538. Tithes commuted in 1808. Patron, in 1835, Earl de Grey. Charities in 1822; income of church estate £10 8s., applied to parochial purposes; of poor's estate £10 10s.; other charities £18, besides an annual gift of cloth, bread, &c., to the poor. There are 3 daily schools here. In an early charter mention is made of a monastery at this place, of which nothing further is known. Acres 2,140. Houses 193. A. P. £1,453. Pop., in 1801, 706; in 1831, 972. Poor rates, in 1838, £209 5s.

CLOPTON, a parish in the hund. of Carleford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 4 miles north-west of Woodbridge, in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £16 13s. 4d.; gross income £550. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. George Taylor. Charities in 1829; income of town estate £34 5s. partly applied to parochial purposes. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,480. Houses 52. A. P. £3,310. Pop., in 1801, 389; in 1831, 468. Poor rates, in 1838, £540 13s.

CLOSORTH, a parish in the hund. of Houndsborough, Barwick, and Coker, union of Yeovil, county of Somerset; 4 miles south of Yeovil. Living, a discharged rectory, in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 8s. 11½d., returned at £100; gross income £226. Patron, in 1835, E. B. Portman, Esq. Acres 1,030. Houses 34. A. P. £1,327. Pop., in 1801, 195; in 1831, 195. Poor rates, in 1838, £25 3s.

CLOTHALL, formerly CLEYHULL, a parish in the hund. of Odsey, union of Hitchin, county of Hertford; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Baldock. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £16 0s. 7½d.; gross income £712. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Salisbury. Here in ancient times was a free chapel dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, valued at £4 2s. 8d. Charities in 1833; income £6 6s. 10d.; given to the poor. Occasionally small daily schools are kept here. Acres 3,520. Houses 79. A. P. £2,609. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 144. Poor rates, in 1838, £204.

CLOTHERHOLME, a township in the parish of Rippon, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north-north-west of Rippon. Acres 830. Houses 2. A. P. £525. Pop., in 1801, 11; in 1831, 14.

CLOTTON-HOOFIELD, a township in the parish of Tarvin, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles west-north-west of Tarporley. There are two daily schools here. Acres 1,550. Houses 76. A. P. £1,550. Pop., in 1801, 278; in 1831, 401. Poor rates, in 1838, £113 5s.

CLOUGHTON, a township in the parish of Scalby, north riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Scarborough. The roof of the church or chapel lately fell in. The remainder is so ruinous that it is thought a new place of worship will be required. A druidical circle has recently been discovered in this vicinity by Mr. Cole of Scarborough. It is about 12 yards in diameter, having the altar-stone remaining. Acres 3,510. Houses 78. A. P. £2,324. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1831, 415. Poor rates, in 1838, £130 17s.

CLOVELLY, or CLAVELLY, a parish in the hund. of Hartland, union of Bideford, county of Devon; 11 miles south-west of Bideford, north of Torridge river. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £19 11s. 5½d.; gross income £276. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £139 0s. 5d. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. H. Williams, Bart. Charities in 1822, £3 1s. There are 2 daily and 2 infant schools here. "The harbours of Clovelly and Hartland," observes Watkins, "are appended to the port of Bideford. The former place is very curious and deserves observation. It is built on the side of a steep rock, to which the houses seem joined like pigeon huts against a wall. At the bottom there is a small pier. The place is famous for the best herrings taken in the channel." An ancient British encampment, called Clovelly dykes, is situated on a commanding height here.

* Hist. of Bideford, p. 275.

Acres 4,200. Houses 190. A. P. £2,245. Pop., in 1801, 714; in 1831, 907. Poor rates, in 1838, £290 6s.

CLOWHOUSE, or CLOSEHOUSE. See HOUGH-TON AND CLOSEHOUSE.

CLOWN, a parish in the hund. of Scarsdale, union of Worksop, county of Derby; 8 miles east by north of Chesterfield. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £7 0s. 10d.; gross income £371. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £295. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities in 1827; income £13 1s. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,860. Houses 134. A. P. £1,659. Pop., in 1801, 484; in 1831, 637. Poor rates, in 1838, £107.

CLUN, a parish, borough, and market-town in the hund. of Purslow, union of Clun, southern division of the county of Salop; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Bishop's Castle, on the river Colun or Clun, whence its name, and which, rising in the neighbouring forest of Clun, runs directly through the town and borough. The parish is very extensive. It includes the townships of Clun, Edeclift, Hobendrid, and Newcastle, besides 10 other townships. Clun is the most populous township in the parish. Acres of the parish 22,600. Houses 404. A. P. £11,723. Pop., in 1801, 1,390; in 1831, 1,996. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,180 16s. Houses of the township 204. Pop., in 1811, 734; in 1831, 930. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Clun, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 150 persons. The Clun poor-law union comprehends 19 parishes, embracing an area of 109 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 9,870. Average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding formation of union, £4,155; in 1838, £2,924. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £13 10s. 5d.; gross income £789. Patron, in 1835, Earl Powis. The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have places of worship here. There are 2 daily and Sunday schools, one of which is supported by endowment from Mr. Richard Gough. There is here also an hospital named "the Hospital of the Holy and undivided Trinity in Clun," founded in 1614, by Henry Howard, earl of Northampton, for the support of 13 poor brethren, including a master or warden. It is endowed with the tithes of the parish of Knighton, county of Radnor; a portion of those of Stowe, county of Salop; and those of Church Stoke, county of Montgomery; besides other sources of revenue, the entire annual amount of which, at present, is from £1,000 to £1,200. The brethren are elected by the bailiff, vicar, and two church-wardens of Bishop's Castle; the two bailiffs, vicar, and two church-wardens of Clun; the steward of the lordship of Clun; the rector of Hopesay; and the warden of the hospital. These fix on two candidates for any vacancy, and the lord of the honour thereupon warrants the admission of one of them to the hospital: 9 are elected from the lordship of Clun, and 3 from that of Bishop's Castle. The number has been augmented by an additional one from each of these parishes. The warden has a salary of £80 a-year, a house, garden, coals, food and clothing, besides two closes of land contiguous to the hospital. The brethren have each 10s. a-week, 2 rooms in the hospital, a small garden, firing and clothing, besides other perquisites. The funds are not thus nearly absorbed, and in point of fact a very large accumulation has taken place. The chapelries, however, of Church Stoke and Knighton have been, from time to time, augmented out of the funds of the hospital. Bishop of Hereford, special visitor. Other charities, in 1830, produced an income of £24 per annum. The borough of Clun now greatly declined from its ancient station, appears, from Dugdale (Bar. i., 314.), to have been of sufficient importance, in the age immediately succeeding the Norman Conquest, to have conferred a title upon the celebrated family of "Fitz-Alan or Clun." In the time of Henry III. the earldom of Arundel was vested in John Fitz-Alan, a member of this family; and even then and afterwards, among the vast possessions of the Arundel family, in the marches of Wales, and throughout England, a conspicuous place is uniformly given to the manor and castle of Clun. It remained in possession of this family till the reign of Elizabeth, when, by the marriage of Mary Fitz-Alan with Philip Howard, son of Thomas, duke of Norfolk, the estate became vested in that noble family. From them it passed to the Walcotts, and afterwards, by purchase, to the family of its present possessor, the earl of Powis, who is lord of the manor, though the duke of Norfolk still retains the title of Baron Clun. The lordship extends over several other manors. The borough of Clun is precisely co-extensive with the township. It extends about 2 miles on all sides of the town, which lies nearly in its centre. The incorporation of the borough has been pleaded as by prescription; but there appears to be some traditionary and other evidence of the existence of a charter granted by some of the earls of Arundel, Lords Marchers of Wales. The borough is governed by 2 bailiffs, a recorder, and the burgesses at large, 24 in number, by and from whom the bailiffs are annually elected. The recorder is appointed by the lord of the manor, although he assists in the borough court: 2 sergeants at mace are annually appointed by the bailiffs. The bailiffs do not act as justices of the peace, but they preside in the civil court of record, which is the only court held exclusively in and for the borough, and is of great antiquity. There are 2 constables appointed by the stewards. There is a lock-up-house under the town hall. The ancient court-house of the borough was pulled down by the lord of the manor in 1780. There are common lands in the manor and forest of Clun, consisting of more than 1,700 acres, of which 200 acres are woodland, used by the freeholders at large for their cattle; to which, however, the burgesses claim to have formerly had the exclusive ownership. Small enclosures of the lands have been made, from time to time, by the burgesses, to whom rent was paid. In order to assert their right of property over these enclosures, about 20 years ago they raised the rents. Their right was disputed. Trials ensued, in which they were successful; but their success was worse than unavailing; for the cottagers had no means of paying costs; and, although the burgesses were enabled to raise their cottage rents, they were under the necessity of forthwith selling both cottages and enclosures in order to pay the lawyers' bills, amounting to £700. There is no manufacture carried on here: coals are procured from a considerable distance, and are delivered at an expense of about 30s. a ton. Able-bodied labourers in agriculture earn 9s. a-week, employment being easily procured. Women are occupied in gathering and conveying heath for fuel. A market is held every Wednesday, and fairs for sheep, horned cattle, and horses are held on Whitmonday and 22d November. There are several encampments, probably Roman, in this vicinity. The castle has been for ages in ruins.

CLUNBURY, a parish in the hund. of Purslow, union of Clun, county of Salop; 6 miles south-south-east of Bishop's Castle, on the river Clun. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford, returned at £70; gross income £120. Patron, in 1835, Earl Powis. There are a daily school, with a small endowment, and a day and Sunday, and 2 Sunday and daily National, schools in this parish. Acres of the four townships of which the parish is composed, viz. Clunbury, Obley, Clunton, and Rempton, 7,870. Houses 198. A. P. £4,926. Pop., in 1801, 794; in 1831, 959. Poor rates, in 1838, £542 16s.

CLUNGUNFORD, a parish in the hund. of Purslow, union of Clun, county of Salop; 9 miles north-east of Kington. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £16; gross income £608. Patron, in 1835, John Rocke, Esq. There is a daily school here, supported by endowment, and free to the children of the poorest inhabitants of Clungunford, and also of the township of Broom, in the parish of Hopesay. Other charities; income in 1830, £8 3s. 8d., chiefly applied to parochial purposes. Acres, including the extra-parochial district of Dinmore, 3,710. Houses 91. A. P. £4,002. Pop., in 1801, 436; in 1831, 438. Poor rates, in 1838, £283 7s.

CLUNN. See CLUN.

CLUNTON. See CLUNBURY.

CLUTTON, a township in the parish of Farn-don, co. palatine of Chester; 10 miles south-south-east of Chester. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £9 per annum. There is also here a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 590. Houses 18. A. P. £780. Pop., in 1801, 72; in 1831, 100. Poor rates, in 1838, £53 4s.

CLUTTON, a parish in the hund. of Chew, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; 3 miles south of Pensford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 4s. 2d.; gross income £395. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Warwick. There is an Independent chapel here, licensed under the new marriage act. Income of church lands in this parish in 1824, £37 4s.; other charities £21 14s.; £10 8s. of which constitute the endowment of a school. There are 4 daily, and one Sunday and daily National, schools in this parish. The extensive collieries of this parish furnish employment for a great proportion of the inhabitants. Acres 2,120. Houses 260. A. P. £3,888. Pop., in 1801, 935; in 1831, 1,287. Poor rates, in 1838, £691 8s. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Clutton, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Clutton poor-law union comprehends 29 parishes, embracing an area of 71 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 22,377. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £9,152. Expenditure in 1838, £8,210.

CLWYD, or DYFFRYN CLWYDD, a celebrated vale in Denbighshire, about 20 miles in length, and from 3 to 8 in breadth, having the small rivers Clwyd and Elwy running through it. It is singularly beautiful and romantic; naturally rich in soil, much improved by art, and highly productive in corn and pasturage. High mountains wall it in at one end and on both sides, while the other end is open to the sea. It is sprinkled with cottages, villages, towns, and gentlemen's seats. Near its southern extremity stands the borough of Ruthin, not far from its centre the county-town of Denbigh, and at its termination on the north, the city and cathedral of St. Asaph.

CLYDEY, a parish in the hund. of Kilgerran, union of Newcastle-in-Emlyn, county of Pembroke. Living, a prebend and vicarage in the dio. of St.

David's; rated, the former at £12, and the latter at £6; both returned at £70 10s.; gross income reported at £160; aggregate amount of tithe composition £250. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. There are 2 daily schools here. Houses 284. A. P. £2,462. Pop., in 1801, 885; in 1831, 1,385. Poor rates, in 1838, £301 19s.

CLYNAMMON, a hamlet in the parish of Llan-dilo-fawr, county of Carmarthen. There is a daily school here. Houses 50. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 227. Other returns with the parish.

CLYNE, a hamlet in the parish of Lantwit-Lower, county of Glamorgan. Houses 21. A. P. £672. Pop. in 1801, 121; in 1831, 129. Poor rates, in 1838, £61 5s.

CLYNOG, a parish in the hund. of Uwch-Gorfai, union and county of Carnarvon; 9½ miles south-west of Carnarvon. Living, a rectory conjoined with a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Bangor; rated, the former at £12, the latter at £6; gross income £179. Patron, the bishop of Bangor. The church is said to have been originally founded in 616 by St. Beuno, along with a monastery which has fallen beneath the hand of time. Adjoining the church are the ruins of a chapel and a consecrated well, both of them dedicated to Beuno the patron saint. The Independents and Calvinistic Methodists have places of worship here; the Independent church was formed in 1823, the Calvinistic Methodist in 1809. There is a daily school in this parish, which possesses also 9 Sunday, and 1 Sunday and daily National, schools. The romantic wildness of this vicinity brings numerous visitors to Clynog, which contains two inns. Houses 345. A. P. £4,503. Pop., in 1801, 1,249; in 1831, 1,731. Poor rates, in 1838, £848 15s.

CLYRO, a parish in the hund. of Pain's-Castle, union of Hay, county of Radnor, South Wales; about a mile south-west of Hay, bounded on the south and east by the river Wye. Living, a prebend and vicarage in the dio. of St. David's; rated, the former, which belongs to the collegiate church of Brecknock, at £7 6s. 8d., the latter at £6; gross income £330. Tithes commuted in 1839. Value of vicarial £6; aggregate amount of prebendal £690 19s. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. There are two schools here, a Sunday and daily, and a Sunday National, school. The village of Clyro is the seat of the sessions for the hundred. It has a spring of mineral water said to be an efficacious lotion in ophthalmia. A monastery was founded here at an early period, and the ruins of a castle still remain. Houses 139. A. P. £3,757. Pop., in 1801, 602; in 1831, 683. Poor rates, in 1838, £358 7s.

CLYRO-BETTWS. See BETTWS-CLYRO.

CLYST. See BROADCLIST.

CLYTHA, a hamlet in the parish of Lanarth, county of Monmouth; 5 miles north-north-west of Usk, east of the river Usk. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Lanarth. Acres 1,660. Houses 62. Pop., in 1821, 376; in 1831, 331. Poor rates, in 1838, £221 18s.

COAL-ASTON, or COLD-ASTON, a township in the parish of Dronfield, county of Derby, ¼ mile north-east of Dronfield. There is a daily school here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 64. A. P. £1,455. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 300. Poor rates, in 1838, £84 14s.

COALBROOK. See COLEBROOKE.

COALEY, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Berkeley, union of Dursley, county of Gloucester; 3 miles north-north-east of Dursley. The Gloucestershire and Berkeley canal passes through this parish. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, rated at £8 2s. 2d.; gross income £197. Tithes commuted; rent charge of impropriated, £56 14s.; of rectorial, 12s. 6d.; and of vicarial, £300. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are charity lands in this parish; annual rents in 1828, £11 12s., besides the interest of £154 8s. 9d. chiefly compensation for certain parts of the mead in this parish called Witney, for the purposes of the Gloucester and Berkeley canal. Other charities 10s. Extreme ignorance appears to have long characterized this parish. At a coroner's inquest held some time ago, there was only one out of the twelve jurymen who could write his name. There were two daily National schools in the parish, attended by 169 children, in 1839. Acres 2,460. Houses 226. A. P., £4,735. Pop., in 1801, 800; in 1831, 1,124. Poor rates, in 1838, £435 11s.

COANWOOD (EAST), a township in the parish of Haltwhistle, Northumberland; 4 miles south of Haltwhistle. There is a daily school here. Houses 29. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 156. Poor rates, in 1838, £15 11s.

COASTAMOOR, a township in the parish of Heighington, co.-palatine of Durham; 5½ miles north-west of Darlington. Acres 510. Houses 2. A. P. £255. Pop., in 1801, 9; in 1831, 13. Poor rates, in 1838, £1 14s.

COATS. See CAREY.

COAT-YARDS, or COAL-YARDS, a township, chapelry of Nether-Witton, Northumberland; 6 miles south-east of Rothbury. Houses 3. Pop., in 1801, 20; in 1831, 20. Other returns with parish.

COATES, a parish in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 3½ miles west-south-west of Cirencester, and close on the Thames and Severn canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bristol, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £9 6s. 8d.; gross income £370. Tithes commuted in 1792. Patron, in 1835, W. Dewe, Esq. The accommodation in the church has been recently increased. Charities in 1828; income £1. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,330. Houses 60. A. P. £2,256. Pop., in 1801, 226; in 1831, 343. Poor rates, in 1838, £138.

COATES, a township in the parish of Prestwold, county of Leicester; 1½ mile north-east-east of Loughborough, on the river Soar. Acres 530. Houses 16. A. P., £1,743. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 68. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 16s.

COATES, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Aslaoce, parts of Lindsey, union of Gainsborough, county of Lincoln; 9 miles north-west of Lincoln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £3 16s. 9d.; gross income £50. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Ramsden. It is held by sequestration. Acres 950. Houses 6. A. P. £1,033. Pop., in 1801, 33; in 1831, 55. Poor rates, in 1838, £11 1s.

COATES, a parish in the hund. of Bury, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; 3 miles south-south-east of Petworth, on the river Rother. Living, a discharged rectory with Burton, annexed to that of Bodecton. Acres 510. Houses 11. A. P., £319. Pop., in 1801, 30; in 1831, 75. Poor rates, in 1838, £35 17s.

COATES, a township in the parish of Barnold-wich, west riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles west-south-west of Skipton, near the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Acres 700. Houses 20. Pop., in 1801, 45; in 1831, 88. Poor rates, in 1838, £75 12s.

COATES (GREAT), a parish in the wapentake of Bradley Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caister, county of Lincoln; 2½ miles west of Great Grimsby. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd.

and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £11 10s. 10d.; gross income £650. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount, £653 4s. 10d. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. Sutton, Bart. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,200. Houses 44. A. P. £4,130. Pop., in 1801, 208; in 1831, 235.

COATES (LITTLE), a parish in the wapentake of Bradley Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caister, county of Lincoln; 2 miles west of Great Grimsby. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, rated at £4 18s. 4d.; returned at £80; gross income £120. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. Acres 1,060. Houses 12. A. P. £1,386. Pop., in 1801, 52; in 1831, 49. Poor rates, in 1838, £43 15s.

COATES-(NORTH), a parish in the wapentake of Bradley Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caister, county of Lincoln; 9 miles north-north-east of Louth. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £10 10s. 10d.; gross income £407. Patron, the Crown. Acres 2,420. Houses 40. A. P. £2,233. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 215.

COATHAM (EAST), a hamlet in the parish of Kirkleatham, north riding of Yorkshire; 6½ miles north-west of Guilsborough, near the mouth of the Tees. It is much frequented for bathing.

COATHAM-MUNDEVILLE, a township in the parish of Houghton-le-Skerne ward, co.-palatine of Durham; 4½ miles north of Darlington, on the river Skerne, and close upon the Great North of England railway. Acres 1,500. Houses 31. A. P. £1,275. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 175. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 13s.

COATON, a hamlet in the parish of Ravensthorpe, county of Northampton; 8½ miles north-north-west of Northampton. There is a daily school here. Acres 860. Houses 24. A. P. £914. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 116. Poor rates, in 1838, £45.

COATON-CLAY, or CLAY-COATON, a parish in the hund. of Guilsborough, union of Rugby, county of Northampton; 7 miles north-east of Rugby, on a branch of the river Avon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10; gross income £376. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Thomas Smith. There is here a right of common on 25 acres of land at low rents. Other charities in 1825; income £5 9s. Acres 1,380. Houses 23. A. P. £1,696. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 83. Poor rates, in 1838, £44 4s.

COBHAM, a parish in the upper half-hund. of Shamwell, lathe of Aylesford, union of North Aylesford, county of Kent; 5 miles west of Rochester. Living, a vicarage not in charge in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; returned at £65; gross income £94. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Darnley. The church is singularly rich in monumental brasses commemorative of the barons and alliances of Cobham. "Cobham college," as it is called, was founded here in 1598 by the executors of Sir William Brooke Lord Cobham, and incorporated by act of parliament passed in the 39th year of Queen Elizabeth, for the maintenance of 20 poor people of this and a number of other parishes, 2 of them specially appointed being eligible from any parish. Income, in 1837, £220 per annum. The wardens of the lands contributory to Rochester bridge are the perpetual corporate presidents of this institution, and the bishop of Rochester is the special visitor. Other charities in 1837; income £4 7s. There are 4 daily schools in this parish. An annual fair is still held here on the 2d of August. Cobham Hall, built by Inigo Jones, for many ages the seat of the barons of Cobham, and now belonging to the Darnley family, lies to the east of the village.

The park and woods are very extensive, and an eminence, east of the Hall, commands a most striking and interesting view of Rochester castle, cathedral, dockyards, and the course of the Medway to Sheerness and the Nore. Acres 2,800. Houses 127. A. P. £2,531. Pop., in 1801, 571; in 1831, 732. Poor rates, in 1838, £315 15s.

COBHAM, a parish in the hund. of Elmbridge, union of Epsom, county of Surrey; 5 miles west-north-west of Leatherhead, on the river Mole, 4 miles from Waybridge common, and 21½ miles from London by the Southampton railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £917s. 11d., returned at £130; gross income £162. Patron, in 1835, F. Weston, Esq. Charities, in 1823; annual rents £41, chiefly expended in bread and other benefactions to the poor of this parish. This parish possesses 4 daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school. In 1838 there was a woollen mill here employing 21 hands. There are two annual fairs held here on 17th March, and 11th December for horses and sheep. The medicinal springs here were once celebrated, but have lost their reputation. Cobham Park, about half a mile from the Portsmouth road, was built by the Earl of Ligonier, on the plan of an Italian villa. Acres 5,240. Houses 266. A. P. £7,094. Pop., in 1801, 1,200; in 1831, 1,422. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,067 12s.

COBLEY. See TUNAL AND COBLEY.

COBRIDGE, a rather extensive hamlet, partly in the parish of Burslem, and partly in the parish of Stoke-upon-Trent, county of Stafford; 3 miles north-east of Newcastle-under-Line, and close upon the Macclesfield canal. There are here a chapel belonging to the Roman Catholics, and one to the Methodists; one of these is licensed under the new marriage act. There are branches of the Cumberland Union banking company, and of the bank of Whitehaven, here. This hamlet has been raised from comparative insignificance by its extensive manufactures of china and earthenware. The returns have not been separately made.

COCKAYNE-HATLEY, or HATLEY-PORT, a parish in the hund. and union of Biggleswade, county of Bedford; 5½ miles north-east of Biggleswade. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £8; gross income £169. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £191 13s. 4d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. C. Cust. Charities in 1820; income £2. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,460. Houses 20. A. P. £1,330. Pop., in 1801, 102; in 1831, 125. Poor rates, in 1838, £63 18s.

COCKEN, a township in the parish of Houghton-le-Spring, co.-palatine of Durham; 4 miles north-north-east of Durham; bounded on the south and west by the river Wear. There is a Sunday and daily school here. Coals are very plentiful in this neighbourhood. At Cocken Hall, the property of Lord Durham, which is almost surrounded by the river, there is established a convent of ladies, nuns of the order of St. Teresa, consisting of 16 choir nuns who emigrated hither about the beginning of the present century from Aire near Antwerp. The nunnery is an ancient building, very romantically situated. The walks and plantations belonging to it extend along the sides and hollows of deep dells, bounded by lofty precipices rising abruptly from the river, on the opposite side of which, in this vicinity, stand the ruins of Finchall abbey. Acres 380. Houses 11. A. P. £684. Pop., in 1801, 17; in 1831, 71. Poor rates, in 1838, £17.

COCKER (THE), a river in Cumberland, which, issuing from the lakes of Buttermere, Crummock, and Loweswater, intersects the delightful vale of Lerton, and, at Cockermouth, enters the Derwent.

COCKERHAM, a parish in the hund. of Lonsdale, south of the sands, union and co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4½ miles north-north-west of Garstang, close on the Lancaster canal. It includes the township of Cockerham and the chapelry of Ellel. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £10 16s. 8d.; gross income £655. Tithes commuted in 1825. Patron, in 1835, John Dodson, Esq. There is an Independent chapel in this parish, which also possesses a charity school in the town of Cockerham, endowed, in 1825, with £15 per annum, besides the interest of £85 5s. 8d., and an expected dividend on an insolvent's estate. There is a charity school-house in the township of Ellel. In all, this parish possesses 6 daily, and 2 day and Sunday National schools. In 1838 there were 2 silk mills, employing 127 hands, within this parish. A fair is held here on Easter Monday for pedlery. Acres 10,420. Houses 480. A. P. £16,649. Pop., in 1801, 1,881; in 1831, 2,794. Poor rates, in 1838, £939. Acres of the township, 4,860. Houses 131. A. P. £8,501. Pop., in 1801, 714; in 1831, 577.

COCKERINGTON (NORTH), or ST. MARY'S, a parish in the Wold division of the hund. of Louth Eske, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 4½ miles north-east of Louth. Living, a curacy with Alvingham. Acres 2,030. Houses 48. A. P. £2,310. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 202. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 2s.

COCKERINGTON (SOUTH), or ST. LEONARD'S, a parish in the Wold division of the hund. of Louth Eske, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 4 miles east-east by north of Louth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 1s. 5½d.; gross income £163, with North Cockerington. Tithes commuted in 1765. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,430. Houses 42. A. P. £2,896. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 214. Poor rates, in 1838, £115.

COCKERTON, a township in the parish of Darlington, co.-palatine of Durham; 1½ mile west-north-west of Darlington; on a branch of the river Skerne. There are a daily and a day and Sunday school here. Acres 1,580. Houses 96. A. P. £2,986. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 522. Poor rates, in 1838, £243 17s.

COCKERMOUTH, a parliamentary borough, market-town, and parochial chapelry, in the parish of Brigham, union of Cockermouth, county of Cumberland; 8 miles east-east by north of Workington, 25 south-west of Carlisle, and 229 north-north-west of London, at the confluence of the small rivers Cocker and Derwent. Acres 2,680. Houses 967. A. P. £5,454. Pop., in 1801, 2,865; in 1831, 4,536. Poor rates, in 1838, £353 15s. Living, a chapelry in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; or the certified value of £34 13s. 4d., returned at £97; gross income £132. Tithes commuted in 1813. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Lonsdale. Besides the established church, there are places of worship here for the Independents, Society of Friends, and Methodists. The Independent church was formed in 1719, and is licensed under the new marriage act. Charities, connected with this township, produce £43 17s. 7d. per annum. There are 24 daily schools here, several of which have been established by subscription and bequest. A dispensary was instituted in 1793, and has done great good to the poor. This town derives its name from the river Cocker, which separates it into two parts before it falls into the Derwent, near the western extremity of the town

The township occupies the site of the ancient barony of Allerdale. It was co-extensive with the borough before the reform act was passed, and first returned members in the 23d parliament of Edward I.; but discontinued the exercise of this privilege for nearly a century and a half, not sending deputies again till 1640, since which time it has regularly returned two members. The right of election was limited to the inhabitants having burgage tenor. The number of nominal votes was upwards of 230. By the reform act this borough still returns two members to parliament; but it consists of, and is co-extensive with, the townships of Cockermouth, Brigham, Papcastle, Bridekirk, and Eaglesfield, together with a detached portion of the township of Dovenby, which lies included between the townships of Papcastle, Bridekirk, and Cockermouth. The number of electors on the list in 1836 and 1837, was, for Cockermouth township, 205; for the other townships in the borough 92. Total number polled at the election in May 1840, 208. The population of the whole enlarged borough in 1821, was 5,113; in 1831, 6,022. Cockermouth is not an incorporated borough. The bailiff of Cockermouth is the returning officer. Here the election court for the western division of the county is held. The government of the town is vested in a bailiff, annually chosen, at the court of the manor, by the 16 burghers, who form the jury of the leet which assists in the execution of the duties of this office. The town has no separate jurisdiction. The county magistrates hold the quarter sessions alternately here and at Carlisle. There is a county house of correction and lock-up in the town. This prison consists of a modern house, with the apartments for the keeper on the second floor, and those for prisoners below. It possesses 3 cells and 2 airing yards. Prisoners are occasionally detained here for considerable periods. A court-house, where the quarter-sessions and various public meetings are held, has been erected on the western side of the bridge which crosses the Cocker. Cockermouth and the neighbouring townships exhibit all the signs of present and future prosperity. The trade is considerable, particularly in cottons, linens, and woollen goods. The lower orders seem to be better off here than in many other towns of the same class, or in the same district. The weavers are mostly engaged in weaving-shops or factories; hence their earnings rank at a comparatively high average with those of other weaving towns in this district. Of 353 employed looms, in 1839, 216 were worked by men, 34 by women and girls, and 59 by boys. There are excellent tanworks here, and hats and hosiery are manufactured. The paper-work is now converted into a thread manufactory. The market-day is Monday; and each Wednesday, during the month of May, is a market for cattle. Fairs are held annually for horses and cattle on the 18th February and the 10th October. A new and spacious market-house has been recently built near the church. The town has not many houses of the better sort. The streets are in some places narrow, in others spacious enough, but irregularly built; yet many of the houses are neat, particularly those on the acclivity leading to the castle. There is a handsome stone-bridge of two arches across the Derwent, besides the neat one of one arch across the Cocker. The town-house, or Moothall, the old market-house, and most of the shambles, have been removed; the principal streets, in the midst of which they were situated, are now divested of their former gloomy aspect, and the recent improvements have imparted to this quarter of the town a modern and elegant appearance. The town is fully supplied with water; but until lately it was not well lighted; and there is every where a want of foot-pavements. The ruinous castle of Cockermouth, which formerly was the baronial seat of the lords of Allerdale, stands upon a commanding eminence to the north of the town, near the confluence of the Cocker and the Derwent. It is supposed to have been built soon after the Conquest by William de Meschines, brother to Ranulph, earl of Chester. The walls are of immense thickness. It was garrisoned during the civil wars for Charles I., but after a month's siege in 1648, it was reduced and dismantled by the parliamentarians. It now belongs to General Wyndham, a descendant of the late earl of Egremont, baron of Cockermouth. Among the antiquities dug up in this vicinity was a stone font of a greenish colour, with an inscription of mingled Runic and Saxon, implying that "here Ekard was converted, and to this man's example were the Danes brought." The hills near Cockermouth on the opposite side of the Derwent are calcareous, and almost wholly composed of shells of the Anomia genus.

COCKERSAND-ABBAY, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Lonsdale, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 6½ miles south-south-west of Lancaster. Here was first an hermitage and then an hospital for several infirm brethren, under the government of a prior, and subordinate to the abbey of Leycester, and founded or chiefly endowed by William of Lancaster, (Ranulph de Meschines according to Camden,) temp. Hen. II.; but, about the year 1190, it was changed into an abbey of Premonstratensian canons, valued at the dissolution at £282 7s. 7d. This monastery, by special favour of the king, outlived, for a short time, the general dissolution.

COCKET (THE), or COQUET, a river in the county of Northumberland, which, rising in the Cheviot hills in the north-western part of the county near the borders of Roxburghshire, flows gently over a pebbly bed to the eastward, through a fine pastoral and picturesque district. After many beautiful windings it flows past the town of Rothbury, and, crossing the great road between Morpeth and Alnwick, falls into the sea opposite Cocket isle, at a short distance from the castle of Warkworth. This river is navigable for vessels of 50 to 100 tons burthen, to within one-fourth of a mile from Warkworth. Its channel is in general either paved with rocks, or covered with smooth pebbles. In 1764 it left its old course near Warkworth, and forced its way between two sandy hills that had obstructed its passage for ages, so that its channel is now very deep, and, by the assistance of art, might, at a small expense, be made navigable for large ships for about a mile from its mouth. The salmon fishery of the Cocket was very profitable till about the latter part of the 18th century, but since that period it has greatly decreased in value, owing to a wear being thrown across the river at the Acklington woollen manufactory. The duke of Northumberland is the sole proprietor of the Cocket salmon fishery, and also of the stet fishery, which extends 3 miles along the coast from the river's mouth.

COCKET ISLAND lies in the ocean, about a mile east by south of the mouth of the river Cocket. It formerly contained a cell of Benedictine monks, subordinate to Tynemouth priory, and was the favourite resort of the religious in St. Cuthbert's time. The ruins of the monastery are partly converted into a dwelling-house for the family who reside on the island for the purpose of superintending the extensive and fruitful warren of Angora rabbits, which the earl of Warwick, who is the proprietor, has established here. Numerous flocks of sea-fowl also breed upon this island, which is about a mile in circumference, and contains about 7 acres of rich pasture land, upon which a few horses graze in summer.

Kelp is sometimes manufactured here. In the reign of Charles I. this island was taken by the Scots, together with about 200 men and 7 pieces of cannon. Shipwrecks have been very frequent on this part of the coast. A dangerous ridge of rocks, called Pan-Bush-Shoals, stretches from the north-west corner of the island. The want of a lighthouse and a life-boat has been fatally experienced in this neighbourhood.

COCKFIELD, a parish in the south-west division of Darlington ward, union of Teesdale, co.-palatine of Durham; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Barnard Castle, south of the river Gaunless. Living, a discharged rectory with the vicarage of Staindrop, in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £9 18s.; gross income £390. Patron, in 1835, the duke of Cleveland. Charities in 1829, £5 9s. per annum. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,720. Houses 155. A. P. £1,770. Pop., in 1801, 461; in 1831, 790. Poor rates, in 1838, £111 10s.

COCKFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Cosford, county of Suffolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Lavenham. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £30; gross income £679. Patrons, the master and fellows of St. John's college, Cambridge. Charities in 1829, £8 18s. per annum. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 3,470. Houses 207. A. P. £4,086. Pop., in 1801, 739; in 1831, 1,023. Poor rates, in 1838, £401 15s.

COCKING, a parish in the hund. of Easebourne, rape of Chichester, union of Midhurst, county of Sussex; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Midhurst. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; no return. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which has a small endowment. Acres 2,370. Houses 59. A. P. £1,749. Pop., in 1801, 300; in 1831, 453. Poor rates, in 1838, £256 4s.

COCKINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Haytor, union of Newton Abbot, county of Devon; 2 miles west of Torbury. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter, annexed to that of Tormoham. Charities in 1821, £41 6s. per annum, chiefly consisting of an endowment for almshouses, inhabited by 6 poor people. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,560. Houses 46. A. P. £2,109. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 223. Poor rates, in 1838, £127.

COCKLAW, a township in the parish of St. John-Lee, county of Northumberland; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Hexham. Tithes commuted in 1839. Rent charge £221. The remains of Cocklaw tower, an ancient castle belonging to the Erringtons, are still to be seen here. Houses 33. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 188. Poor rates, in 1838, £127 5s.

COCKLE-PARK, a township in the parish of Hebburn, county of Northumberland; 3 miles north of Morpeth. Cockle-Park tower, anciently a stronghold belonging to the Bertrams in this township, is now a handsome farm-residence. Houses 15. Pop., in 1801, 52; in 1831, 78. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 5s.

COCKLEY-CLEY, a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Greenhoe, union of Swaffham, county of Norfolk; 4 miles south-south-west of Swaffham. Living, a discharged rectory, consolidated with the vicarage of St. Peter, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8 17s. 1d.; gross income £170. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Dashwood. There were formerly here a church, dedicated to St. Peter, which is said to have been burnt down in the reign of Elizabeth, and a chapel dedicated to St. Mary, which was fitted up as the rectory house, but is now let as a cottage. Charities in 1834, £16 per annum, besides a rood of land occupied by poor. There is a daily school in this parish. Sir Cloudeley Shovel, the celebrated admiral and commander-in-chief of Queen Anne's fleet, is said to have run away from his apprenticeship as a shoemaker in this parish. Acres 4,370. Houses 43. A. P. £1,253. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 218. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 9s.

COCKSHUT, a chapelry in the parish of Ellesmere, county of Salop; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Ellesmere. Living, a curacy in the vicarage of Ellesmere, not in charge, returned at £90; gross income £88. Patron, the vicar of Ellesmere. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here.

COCKTHORPE, a parish in the hund. of North Greenhoe, union of Walsingham, county of Norfolk; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Clay. Living, a rectory united with the rectories of Blakeney and Little Langham, with the perpetual curacy of Glandford, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5; gross income £530. Patron, in 1835, Lord Calthorpe. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £142 11s. 6d. This was the birth-place of Admirals Sir Cloudeley Shovel, Sir John Narborough, and Sir Christopher Mylne. Acres 530. Houses 7. A. P. £582. Pop., in 1801, 32; in 1831, 41. Poor rates, in 1838, £72 10s.

COCKTHORPE, a chapelry in the parish of Ducklington, county of Oxford; 3 miles south-south-east of Witney, and west of the river Windrush. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Ducklington, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, not in charge.

CODDENHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-east by south of Needham Market. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Crowfield, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12 0s. 5d.; gross income £1,016. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £630 4s. 1d. Patron, in 1835, R. M. Leake, Esq. There is a daily school here, supported by an endowment of £75 from Lady C. Gardeman. Other charities £5 per annum. There is a fair held here annually on the 2d of October. Acres 1,540. Houses 181. A. P. £2,747. Pop., in 1801, 653; in 1831, 913. Poor rates, in 1838, £395 4s.

CODDINGTON, a parish in the higher division of the hund. of Broxton, union of Great Boughton, co.-palatine of Chester; 6 miles north-north-west of Malpas. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £5 4s. 2d.; gross income £295. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Chester. Consolidated charities; interest in 1837, £1 13s. Acres, returned under the three townships of Aldersey, Chowley, and Coddington, of which the parish is composed, 2,640. Houses 49. A. P. £4,528. Pop., in 1801, 320; in 1831, 345. Poor rates, in 1838, £242 16s. Acres of the township, 1,220. Houses 14. A. P. £2,542. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831, 122. Poor rates, in 1838, £117 15s.

CODDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Ledbury, county of Hereford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Ledbury. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4 18s. 4d.; gross income £195. Patron, the bishop of Hereford. Annual rents of charity lands in 1837, £32 18s., applied to parochial purposes. Other charities £4, besides a small interest which 5 poor people of this parish have in a charity connected with the parish of Colwall. Acres 1,510. Houses 34. A. P. £1,143. Pop., in 1801, 194; in 1831, 164. Poor rates, in 1838, £65.

CODDINGTON, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Newark, union of Newark, county of Nottingham; 2½ miles east-east by north of Newark. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of East Stoke. Tithes commuted in 1700. There is a daily school here, possessing a small endowment out of Birche's charity for behoof of the poor of this parish, the income of which, some years ago, was upwards of £140; other charities £3 per annum. Acres 1,850. Houses 95. A. P. £2,595. Pop., in 1801, 326; in 1831, 435. Poor rates, in 1838, £181 9s.

CODFORD-ST.-MARY, a parish in the hund. of Heytesbury, union of Warminster, county of Wilts; 4 miles east-south-east of Heytesbury, on the southern bank of the river Willey. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £18; gross income £320. Patrons, the president and fellows of St. John's college, Oxford. There is an Independent church here, formed in 1812. Charities in 1833, 12s. per annum. There are a daily and a Sunday National school here. On an eminence in this parish, there are the remains of a curious earthen work, supposed to be a druidical circle. Acres 1,540. Houses 40. A. P. £2,705. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 287. Poor rates, in 1838, £201.

CODFORD-ST.-PETER, a parish in the hund. of Heytesbury, union of Warminster, county of Wilts; 3 miles south-east of Heytesbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £17 15s.; gross income £394. Patrons, the master and fellows of Pembroke college, Oxford. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres, including the township of Ashton-Gifford, 1,770. Houses 60. A. P. £890. Pop., in 1801, 393; in 1831, 391. Poor rates, in 1838, £339 7s.

CODICOTE, a parish in the hund. of Casbio, or liberty of St. Albans—though locally situated in the hund. of Broadwater—union of Hitchin, county of Hertford; 2 miles north-north-west of Welwyn. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of St. Alban's and dio. of London; rated at £7 5s. 10d.; gross income £149. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Charities, £13 9s., besides a joint interest in a charity connected with the parish of Clavering, county of Essex, and others for occasional apprenticeship of a poor child. There are 4 daily and 1 daily National schools here. Acres 2,580. Houses 156. A. P. £3,048. Pop., in 1801, 584; in 1831, 805. Poor rates, in 1838, £281.

CODNOR-WITH-LOSCOW, a township in the parish of Heanor, county of Derby; 4½ miles south-south-east of Alfreton, near the Erwash canal. There are 4 daily schools here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 267. A. P. £2,682. Pop., in 1801, 828; in 1831, 1,439.

CODNOR-CASTLE, AND PARK-LIBERTY, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, county of Derby; 5½ miles east-north-east of Belper. Codnor-castle was long the baronial residence of the Greys. Acres 1,320. Houses 108. A. P. £1,764. Pop., in 1801, 309; in 1831, 637. Poor rates, in 1838, £206 12s.

CODRINGTON. See WAPLEY-WITH-CODRINGTON.

CODSALL, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Seisdon, union of Seisdon, county of Stafford; 5 miles north-west of Wolverhampton, in the vicinity of the Birmingham and Liverpool canal. It includes the township of Oaken. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; returned at £47; gross income £146. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Wrottesley, Bart. The church is a beautiful structure. Charities in 1820, £58 3s. 2d. per annum. There are a daily and a day and Sunday National school here. The latter has a small endowment. Acres 2,580. Houses 215. A. P. £2,717.

Pop., in 1801, 589; in 1831, 1,115. Poor rates, in 1838, £271 13s.

CODSHEATH HUNDRED, in the lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, county of Kent. Area 37,720 acres. Houses 2,211. Pop., in 1831, 12,709.

COEDANA, a parish in the hund. of Twrcelyn, union and county of Anglesey, North Wales; 2 miles south-east of Llanerchymed. Living, a chapelry to the rectory of Llanellian. The chapel is said to have been founded in the year 630. Charities in 1832, £1 per annum. There are 3 Sunday schools here. Houses 59. A. P. £864. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 262. Poor rates, in 1838, £155 3s.

COEDCANLASS, a parish in the hund. and union of Narbeth, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 6½ miles south-east of Haverford-West, on an estuary of the Bristol channel. Living, a donative curacy, a sinecure, in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; gross income £20. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Owen, Bart. There is a daily school here. Houses 23. A. P. £626. Pop., in 1801, 152; in 1831, 181. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 17s.

COED-CHRISTIONYDD. See CHRISTIONYDD.

COED-DHU-CHURCH, or COYCHURCH, a parish in the hund. of Newcastle, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 2½ miles east of Bridgend. It includes the hamlets of Coychurch, Higher and Lower, and Pencoyd, and the chapelry of Peterstone-on-the-Hill. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Peterstone, in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £28 ls. 8d.; gross income £450. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Dunraven. There are 1 Sunday and daily National and 2 daily schools in this parish. One of the latter is endowed. Other charities in 1837, consisted of £1,000 in the public funds, the interest being chiefly applied for behoof of the three hamlets of Coychurch in equal divisions. Coer-Cardoc is one of the mountains of this parish. Houses 221. A. P. £5,262. Pop., in 1811, 999; in 1831, 1,079. Poor rates, in 1838, £429 3s.

COED-FRANK, a hamlet in the parish of Cadoxton, county of Glamorgan. There are extensive copper-works in the vicinity. Houses 154. A. P. £454. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 825. Poor rates, in 1838, £385 2s.

COEDGLASSION, or COIDGLASSION, a hamlet in the parish of Nantmel, county of Radnor; 5 miles south-east of Rhayadr. Houses 37. Pop., in 1811, 176; in 1831, 825. Other returns with the parish.

COEDKERNEW, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Wentloog, union of Newport, county of Monmouth; 4 miles south-south-west of Newport. Living, a curacy joined with the vicarage of St. Brides-Wentloog. Acres 710. Houses 27. A. P. 903. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 149. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 5s.

COED-Y-CUMAR, a hamlet in the parish of Vainor, county of Brecon; 2 miles north-east of Merthyr-Tydvyl. Houses 328. A. P. £1,700. Pop., in 1801, 889; in 1831, 1,540.

COETON-ARTHUR. See ARTHUR'S STONE.

COFFINSWELL, a parish in the hund. of Haytor, union of Newton Abbot, county of Devon; 4 miles east by south of Newton. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of St. Mary's-church. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,010. Houses 54. A. P. £1,825. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 265. Poor rates, in 1838, £113 17s.

COGAN, or COGGAN, a parish in the hund. of Dinas Powis, union of Cardiff, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 4½ miles south-south-west of Cardiff. Living, a rectory annexed to that of Leckwith. Houses 2. A. P. £368. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 22. Poor rates, in 1838, £21 7s.

COGDEAN HUNDRED, in the Shaston east division of the county of Dorset. Area 32,960 acres. Houses 1,245. Pop., in 1831, 6,323.

COGENHOE, or COCKNOZ, a parish in the hund. of Wymersley, union of Hardington, county of Northampton; $\frac{5}{4}$ miles east of Northampton, south of the river Nen. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £17; gross income £263. Tithes commuted under acts 7 and 8 Geo. IV., c. 34. Patron, in 1835, Rev. R. E. Watkin. Acres 960. Houses 46. A. P. £1,462. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 276. Poor rates, in 1838, £178 16s.

COGGES, a parish in the hund. of Wooton, union of Witney, county of Oxford; about a mile east of Witney. It includes the township of Wilcote. Living, a vicarage, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; returned at £53; gross income £64. Tithes commuted in 1787. Charities connected with this parish, in 1823, £96 18s. 8d. per annum. The charities of this parish and those of the parish of Witney are partially intercommunicative. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Eton college. This parish possesses 4 daily schools, 2 of which are endowed with £6 per annum by the late William Blake, Esq. There was here, in former times, an alien priory of Black monks to the abbey of the Holy Trinity at Fescamp in Normandy. Acres 2,090. Houses 138. A. P. £3,657. Pop., in 1801, 343; in 1831, 683. Poor rates, in 1838, £246 1s.

COGGESHALL (GREAT), a market-town and parish in the Witham division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Witham, county of Essex; 6 miles east-east by south of Braintree. The town is situated partly on low ground, near the north side of the river Blackwater, and partly on the acclivity of a hill on the same side. Acres 2,770. Houses 624. A. P. £5,430. Pop., in 1801, 2,469; in 1831, 3,226. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,228 17s. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £11 3s. 4d.; gross income £230. Patron, in 1835, P. Du Cane, Esq. The church is a spacious edifice with a large square tower at the west end. Besides the established church, there are here places of worship for Independents, Baptists, the Society of Friends, and the Wesleyan Methodists. The Baptist chapel is licensed under the new marriage act. There are 21 daily schools here, one of which is a free school, founded and endowed by Sir Robert Hitcham in 1636, the property being vested in the master, scholars, and fellows of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, as trustees for the administration of the charity. The income of other charities connected with the parish, in 1837, was £115 4s. per annum, distributed principally in payments, bread and clothing, to the poor. There are also six almshouses, adjoining the churchyard, inhabited by poor persons placed there by the parish officers. The woollens usually termed baize and serge used to be manufactured here to a large extent. Of late years the silk trade has been the principal object of attention. It was introduced about 22 years ago. The manufacture is still all dependent on Spitalfields. In 1838 there were several silk mills here, and a very large one was in course of erection close to the town. The weavers were chiefly employed at these mills. There was only one manufacturer at Spitalfields, and one at Cheapside, who gave out work to the Coggeshall weavers; 80 to 90 looms were thus employed. The average earnings of the males was about 8s. to 8s. 6d.; of the females, 4s. 6d. to 5s., including the usual expenses. About 54 men and 15 women were employed in weaving velvets. There were still a few looms, not 10 altogether, employed in weaving horse-cloths; the men were worse paid than the silk weavers. It is the last expiring embers of a trade once extensive in this country. The patent has expired for Courtauld's patent silk spindle, which is used here, and the silk thrown by which is well known to manufacturers. The market-day here is Saturday. The fair commences on Whit-Tuesday. This town—by some supposed to have been the Roman station, Ad Ansam, by others the Canonium of Antoninus—most evidently had its origin in the abbey for Cistercian, or white monks, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, which King Stephen and Maud, his queen, founded in the hamlet of little Coggeshall in this parish, A. D. 1142. It stands on an acclivity on the north bank of the river. Only a small part of it now remains: near it there is a bridge of three arches, said to have been built by King Stephen, over a channel that was cut to convey the water of the river nearer to the abbey.

COGGESHALL (LITTLE), a hamlet in the above parish, $\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of it, on the opposite side of the river, and in the hund. and union of Witham. This was formerly a distinct parish, and had two churches, one of them erected by the monks of the abbey above alluded to, which is demolished, the other is converted into a barn. Charities in 1837, £9 15s. per annum. There are an infant and a boarding school here. In 1838 there were a woollen and a silk mill, employing 196 hands, within this parish. Acres 830. Houses 84. A. P. £1,878. Pop., in 1801, 333; in 1831, 455. Poor rates, in 1838, £186 1s.

COGSHALL, a township in the parish of Great Budworth, co.-palatine of Chester; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-west of Northwich, north of the river Weaver. This township, with Seven Oaks, possesses 2 daily schools. Acres 520. Houses 18. A. P. £1,951. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 77. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 15s.

COKER (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Houndsborough, Barwick and Coker, union of Yeovil, county of Somerset; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Yeovil. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £12 6s. 3d.; returned at £119 11s.; gross income £242. Patron, the dean and chapter of Exeter. There is an almshouse for 12 paupers in this parish, endowed with an income of £46 4s. 2d. per annum. There are 6 daily schools here. This was the birth-place of Dampier, the circumnavigator. Acres, including the hamlet of North Coker, 2,140. Houses 235. A. P. £4,353. Pop., in 1801, 859; in 1831, 830. Poor rates, in 1838, £431 11s.

COKER (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Houndsborough, Barwick and Coker, union of Yeovil, county of Somerset; 3 miles west by south of Yeovil. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £12 19s. 7d.; gross income £494. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. George Jeckyll. There is an alms-house in this parish for 3 paupers, endowed with £13 5s. per annum. Other charities produce an annuity of £4 2s. 6d. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with the interest of a bequest of £100. Acres 1,100. Houses 195. A. P. £4,046. Pop., in 1801, 758; in 1831, 1,013. Poor rates, in 1838, £500.

COKER (NORTH). See EAST COKER.

COLAN, a parish in the hund. of Pyder, union of St. Columb-Major, county of Cornwall; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of St. Columb-Major. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £120 5s. 6d.; gross income £163. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. There are a daily and an infant school here. Acres 1,790. Houses 40. A. P. £1,685. Pop., in 1801, 191; in 1831, 261. Poor rates, in 1838, £668 8s.

COLBOURNE, a township in the parish of Catterick, north riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles south-east by east of Richmond. Acres 1,240. Houses 32. A. P. £5,468. Pop., in 1801, 641; in 1831, 683. Poor rates, in 1838, £9 8s.

COLBY, a parish in the hund. of South Erpingham, union of Aylsham, county of Norfolk; 3¼ miles north-north-east of Aylsham, west of the river Bure. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8 15s. 10d.; gross income £271. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £343 16s. 1d. Patron, in 1835, Lord Suffield. There is a townhouse here occupied by paupers. The church lands yield an annual rent of £17; and the only other charity connected with this parish, in 1832, was an unimproveable rent charge of £2 10s. for the benefit of aged poor, and for clothing four children. Acres 1,000. Houses 64. A. P. £923. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 304. Poor rates, in 1838, £100 8s.

COLBY, a township in the parish of St. Lawrence, borough of Appleby, Westmoreland; 1½ mile west-north-west of Appleby; south of the river Eden. Houses 32. Pop., in 1821, 141; in 1831, 148.

COLCHESTER,

A borough and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, locally in the Colchester division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Colchester, county of Essex; 51 miles north-east by east of London, and 22 of Chelmsford, on the road from Harwich by Chelmsford, to London. The Eastern Counties railway, from London to Norwich and Great Yarmouth, now in progress. It is intended to run a branch from Colchester to Harwich. Acres 11,770. Houses 3,216. A. P. £42,137. Pop., in 1801, 11,620; in 1831, 16,167. Poor rates, in 1838, £9,738 5s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Colchester, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Colchester poor-law union comprehends 16 parishes, embracing an area of 18 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 16,167. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,155. Expenditure in 1838, £7,766.

The ecclesiastical government of Colchester is comprised within the diocese of London, and gives title to one of the five archdeacons attached to that see. The archdeaconry comprehends the deaneries of Colchester, Lexden, Tendring, Witham, Samford, and Newport.* Besides the parishes of Lexden, Milend, Greenstead, and Berechurch, in the liberties of the borough, but without the town (which see), there are 12 parishes within the limits of Colchester, one of which, namely, St. Botolph's, the most populous parish in the town, is consolidated with the parish of All Saints for every ecclesiastical purpose, as it contains no church of its own fit for the performance of divine service. The following are the parishes, with their livings, which, with the exception of St. Mary's, a peculiar of the bishop of London, are all in the archd. of Colchester, and dio. of London. 1st, All Saints, a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of St. Botolph, not in charge; gross income £327; in the gift of Baliol college, Oxford. The church of St. Botolph, which was conventual as well as parochial, has been a ruin for nearly two centuries, but shows still some of the most exquisite fragments of Norman architecture to be found in the kingdom. 2d, St. James, a discharged rectory; rated at £11 10s., and in the gift of the Crown; gross income £122. The chapel of St. Ann, formerly a hermitage in this parish, has been totally desecrated by being converted into a barn.—3d, St. Martins, a discharged rectory; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £72. Patronage in dispute. The church accommodation has been recently increased.—4th, St. Mary-at-the-Walls, a rectory; rated at £10; gross income £230. In the gift of the bishop of London.—5th, St. Nicholas, a discharged rectory; rated at £10; gross income £94; in the patronage of Baliol college, Oxford. In this parish there was a chapel dedicated to St. Helena, which has been appropriated as a place of worship by the Society of Friends.—6th, St. Peter, a discharged vicarage; rated at £10; gross income £300. Patrons, in 1835, trustees of the late J. Thornton.—7th, St. Runwald, a discharged rectory; rated at £7 13s. 4d.; gross income £160. Patron, in 1835, C. Round, Esq.—8th, The Holy Trinity, a discharged rectory; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £158. In the gift of Baliol college, Oxford.—9th, St. Giles, a discharged rectory; rated at £30; gross income £190. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. W. Morgan.—10th, St. Leonard's, or the Hythe, a discharged rectory; rated at £10; gross income £100. In the patronage of Baliol college, Oxford.—11th, St. Mary Magdalen, a vicarage; rated at £11; in the gift of the Crown. Besides the established churches, there are here two Baptist and two Independent chapels licensed under the new marriage act. The Society of Friends, the Wesleyan Methodists, the Unitarians, and the Roman Catholics have also places of worship here.

Schools and Charities.—There is a free grammar-school here, founded and endowed by Henry VIII., the charter and grant to which having been considered invalid, were renewed by Queen Elizabeth. It was intended for the instruction of 16 children, the sons of burgesses born in the town. The revenues of this school, in 1837, amounted to £181 10s. There were 3 boys on the foundation. The charity commissioners observe, that "this institution seems at no period to have conferred any substantial advantages on those inhabitants of the town and neighbourhood to whom a gratuitous education for their sons was an object of real importance." The celebrated Dr. Samuel Parr was master here in 1779. A scholarship in St. John's college, Cambridge, is appropriated to this school. There are also 45 daily schools in the borough, two of which are National schools, and constitute an extension of the original plan of a charity-school instituted about the year 1709. These consist of a boy's school containing, in 1824, 250, and of a girl's school containing 148;—in all 398. Of these, 66 boys and 42 girls were clothed by the trustees of the original charity, and a considerable number by the committee of the National school society. From the colour of the children's clothing the institution has acquired the name of the Blue school. There is also a Lancasterian school, supported by subscription, and containing 200 boys and 100 girls, 100 of each of whom receive clothes. There are besides, several infant, and day and Sunday, schools. A charitable institution, named the Essex and Colchester general hospital for invalids, was founded here, in 1819, by donations and annual subscriptions. It is "open to the admission of patients without limitation of county, district, or distance." There are a number of alms-houses or hospitals for paupers, the best endowed of which is Arthur Winslay's hospital. It consists of 18 different tenements under one roof, having each a small piece of garden ground attached to it. There is also a chapel. These tenements are occupied by 18 very old men, nominated by trustees. They are allowed 6s. a-week each, besides coals, &c. The income of the charity amounts to £473 6s. The other hospitals are, St. Mary Magdalen's, lately rebuilt, consisting of 6 tenements under one roof, inhabited by 5 poor widows, who receive each £13 per annum, besides fuel, out of an income of £239 5s. Kendall's, consisting of two ranges of brick buildings, with an enclosure in front, inhabited by 16 old women, widows of inmates of Winslay's hospital, and who are allowed 3s. a-week each, besides coals, out of an income of £166;—Winnock's consisting of 6 dwellings, and endowed with a yearly rent charge of £41;—and Fynch's, the benefits of which, however, are confined to paupers of the parish of St. Nicholas. This hospital or alms-house has been recently rebuilt, and consists of two ranges of building, enclosed within four walls, and containing, each, 4 tenements. They are inhabited by 8 poor aged women, who have stipends of 1s. 6d. to 2s. a-week each, besides coals, out of an income of £51 3s. 8d. There are several other alms-houses in the town, the endowments of which are not now discoverable. In 1631, Samuel Harnett, archbishop of York, bequeathed all his library of books to the bailiffs and corporation of this town, for behoof of its clergy, and of other divines. Various additions were subsequently made, by benefaction, to this library; and at present, it consists of about 792 volumes. It is now set up in a room in the castle. Free access is permitted to all entitled to claim it. Sir Thomas White, knight, Lord Mayor of London, in 1566, bequeathed the sum of £2,000 to 24 corporations, of which that of Colchester is one, to the intent that each of them should, in turns, at equal intervals of 24 years' payment, receive the annual rents arising out of lands to be purchased therewith, and lend them out, without interest, in sums of £25 each, and for terms of 10 years to young freemen of honest name, inhabitants of the boroughs over which they respectively presided. It appears that the late corporation of Colchester have received, in respect of this benefaction, the sum of £1,040, in 10 periodical payments of £104 each, of which sum £1,000 should have been lent as the donor directed. The last sum of £104 was received in 1817. The officers of the late corporation were examined by the charity commissioners in reference to this charity; but they "could not learn that any money received at any time in respect thereof was now out at loan, or forthcoming in any way." There is here a society for the relief of poor clergymen and their widows and children, in Essex, and that part of Hertfordshire which is in the diocese of London. It was incorporated in 1747, and possesses a funded capital of more than £8,000; its yearly receipts and expenditure amounting to more than £1,000. There are also a benevolent medical society for Essex and Herts which has been extensively useful; a general benevolent society; a lying-in-charity; a female friendly society; a blanket society, &c. These, with various religious societies, are the principal charities connected with this borough. There are minor charities, chiefly confined to the separate parishes included within its bounds; but they are too numerous and unimportant to be noticed here.

* By statute 26 Henry VIII., Colchester was one of those towns which were to be taken and accepted for sees of bishops suffragan, to be made in England. There were never more than two consecrated for this place.

Trade and Manufactures.] The trade of Colchester, except its shipping concerns, chiefly consists, like that of most inland towns, in the supply of the agricultural classes with manufactures, &c., in return for agricultural produce. Formerly, however, this town was remarkable for its successful cultivation of a particular branch of woollen manufacture, denominated the bay and say, or baize and serge trade, which was introduced by the expatriated Flemings, who settled here in the reign of Elizabeth. But prior even to the statute of Edward the third,—which prohibits the exportation of wool, and which has been followed by similar acts, down to the 7th of George the Second,—it appears that this staple of the nation was made into cloth here. For some generations after the reign of Elizabeth, this town had nearly a monopoly of the baize and serge manufacture. The war with Spain, in the reign of Anne, was the great occasion of its downfall. Individuals, however, continued it with some spirit for about half a century afterwards; but for the last 20 years it may be said to have been extinct. Not a loom remains. The first invention in the process of manufacturing cotton was the "fly-shuttle," invented in 1738, by Mr. John Kay, then residing here. It was brought into general use about 1760, and was found greatly to abridge the time and exertion required in weaving. Robert Kay, the son of John, added to this the "drop-box." But so far were the inventors from profiting by these discoveries, that Mr. Kay could only escape the persecution and danger to which he became exposed, by flying to Paris. The cotton manufacture was never established here, however; and the woollen was superseded by the silk manufacture, which was introduced about 40 or 50 years ago. There were about 160 silk looms here 10 years since; but this branch of manufacture also gradually declined. There are now not above from 40 to 60 looms in the town; but a large silk factory was erected a few years ago in the parish of St. Martin, which, in 1838, employed 316 hands, principally females. The trade, however, had suffered exceedingly by the very high price of silk in 1836, and its sudden and extreme depression. The average earnings were not above 8s. a-week. Umbrella and parasol silk, and handkerchiefs, were the chief manufacture. Of the weavers formerly employed, some had become gardeners, bricklayers, common-labourers; about a score had enlisted into the army, and others were in the workhouse. Trade here, generally, has become less extensive than it formerly was. The removal of the great military establishments which existed here during the last war has injuriously affected it. There are some hundreds of unemployed operatives, other than weavers, at present, in Colchester. The average wages of labourers are from 9s. to 10s. a-week. There is no other manufactory besides the silk mill here at present; but there is a very extensive malt distillery in the parish of St. Botolph, said to be the fourth in importance in the kingdom. The celebrated oyster fisheries likewise give profitable employment to many, and have always formed a comparatively valuable part of the trade of this town. Richard the First granted the burgesses the fishery of the river Colne, from the North Bridge as far as Westnesse, which grant was very amply confirmed by subsequent charters. For the better preservation of this privilege, courts of admiralty, or conservancy, have been customarily held on Colne water. The river is yearly shut against fishing till 22d July, by proclamation made in March or April. Colchester is a bonding port. There are bonded warehouses for wine, spirits, corn, and wood goods; but its foreign trade is trifling; it consists principally in wines from Spain, oil cakes from Holland, and timber from the Baltic. The port, however, carries on a general coasting trade with London, principally in colonial and manufactured goods; and with the northern counties of England in coals, tiles, &c. The exports are corn and malt. This trade on the whole is not of much importance; and the principal source of profit to Colchester is the retail business which it carries on for the supply of a very extensive neighbouring district. Upwards of fifty vessels of different sizes and denominations belong to Colchester; but a great many small craft, belonging to Wivenhoe, Rowhedge, Brightlingsea, and other small places, lower down on the Colne, all "hail" from this port, which makes the shipping of Colchester appear more numerous than it really is. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday, the latter being the principal day for cattle and corn. The fairs are Easter-Tuesday, July 5th and 23d, and October 20th. Those in July are principally for horses and cattle; the other for horses, cattle, and miscellaneous merchandise.

General description.] The principal part of this town occupies the summit, and north, and eastern sides of a fine eminence nearly in the centre of the borough, rising gradually from the river Colne, which is navigable for vessels of about 150 tons burthen, to the Hythe, a long suburban street, running along the river side, and forming the port or harbour of Colchester. Vessels of greater tonnage, principally colliers, must discharge their cargoes at Wivenhoe, about 3 miles lower down the river. The merchandise, however, is brought in smaller craft to the Hythe, where are situated most of the warehouses, the coal, timber, and bonded yards, and the custom-house. There are some valuable premises for commercial purposes along the quay at the Hythe. The Colne encircles and intersects part of the town, on the north and north-east sides, and is crossed by several bridges. The town was formerly surrounded by walls, which are still in many places entire. Their original outline is believed to have been a parallelogram; but at present it has the appearance of a trapezium. When the walls were perfect, the town was entered by four principal gates and three posterns, now almost all destroyed. The town is not now contained within the limits of the walls. The buildings without are very irregularly disposed, chiefly on the south and east. The principal street, which runs nearly east and west, within the parallelogram, contains many large shops and respectable houses. Great improvements in the interior of the town have lately been effected; but the only important extension which has taken place within the last 20 years is westwards, along the London road, where many valuable detached residences have been built. A spacious and handsome market was opened here in the year 1814. To the north of the High-street, on an elevated spot, and commanding a fine view of the winding valley to the north and east, stands the castle. The outer walls are nearly perfect, and their vast thickness and solidity evince the importance which, in the early ages, was attached to this situation. The churches, with the ruins of St. John's abbey, St. Botolph's priory, and the Moot hall, constitute the chief of the other ancient or public buildings. A new theatre was opened here about the year 1814. Many of the houses have a pervading air of venerable antiquity about them, which never fails to create an interest. The streets were partly paved as early as the year 1473. They have long been wholly paved and lighted with gas. The town is well supplied with water from springs and wells, as well as from water-works, established in 1808, and kept in operation by a steam engine.

Government, &c.]—The parliamentary and municipal boundaries of this borough have always been and still are co-extensive; although it has been proposed considerably to restrict the ancient municipal limits. The borough comprehends the 12 town, and the 4 outlying, parishes above enumerated. The liberties form a compact district all in the county of Essex. The borough is believed to have been governed, under the Conqueror and his early successors, by a portreeve, or, as it is also written, portgrave; and this form of government continued as long as it remained a demesne of the crown. But Richard I. granted it a charter in 1089, permitting it, among other valuable privileges, to choose bailiffs from among the burgesses, and a justicier to administer justice within the borough. Other charters subsequently modified and extended the first. Charles II., by his first charter, ordered, that there should be 12 aldermen,—including the mayor, high-steward, recorder, and chamberlain,—18 assistants, and 12 common councilmen, with the necessary addenda of clerk, coroner, water-bailiffs, sergeants of mace, &c. The charter of William and Mary, and the latter patent of George III., so late as 1818, confirmed this charter in respect to members. Under the municipal reform act, the borough is divided into 3 wards, and is governed by 6 aldermen and 18 councillors. With some intermission, 2 members have been sent, by this borough, to parliament, since the year 1220. The right was vested in the corporation and free burgesses not receiving alms. In default of bailiffs, or a mayor, the sheriff of Essex was the presiding officer. The members returned, took wages from their constituents, as late as Queen Elizabeth's time. The greatest number of electors polled, within the 30 years previous to 1831, was 1,406. Under the reform act, the privilege of returning 2 members has been continued. The number of qualified houses, &c., in the borough, in 1831, was about 1,200. The number of electors registered, in 1837, was 1,176. The number polled at the general election, in 1837, was 739. The mayor is the returning officer. Colchester is one of the polling places for the northern division of the county of Essex. The income of the borough, in 1837, was £2,388 13s. 2d.; expenditure £2,544 16s. 6d. Assessed taxes, in 1830, £5,173 9s. 1d. The mayor and recorder are the judges of the borough court of records, before which debts above £3 may be sued for, and any attorney of the superior courts at Westminster may practise. Colchester has had a commission of the peace granted, and a court of quarter sessions appointed. The petty sessions for Colchester division are held in the Moot or town hall, where the corporation have always conducted the public affairs of the borough. The castle, with its precincts, called the Bailey (Ballium), is extra-parochial, and exempt from the jurisdiction of the borough officers. The prison is situated at the back of the town-hall, and is very incommodious. It is appropriated to debtors; to prisoners before trial, and after conviction, if not very bad characters; and to vagrants. It consists of 7 apartments. All prisoners sentenced to hard labour are sent to the county house of correction, which is appropriated almost exclusively to summary convictions. It stands on rising ground about half a mile from the town. It was completed in February, 1835,—when it was first occupied,—at an expense of about £7,000. It is constructed on the radiating plan, with 10 wards, 44 cells, airing yards, &c. The borough contracts for the maintenance of its convicted prisoners in this house of correction;—paying for the whole cost of maintenance a sum equal to double the amount of the ordinary rations of food. The number of prisoners, in 1836, was 127.

History.]—The borough of Colchester, still the principal town in Essex, was designated, in the time of Edward IV., as "one of the ancientest burghs in the kingdom of England." It was long the capital of the Trinobantes. "That it flourished even more than ever," says Camden, "in the time of the Romans, abundance of their coins found every day fully evince." Indeed it was one of the first settlements of the Romans in our island. As a military post it appears to have been the principal of the line of stations still traceable along the northern part of the county. After the departure of the Romans, and partly owing to the increasing prosperity of London, it lost much of its ancient importance under the Saxons, who gave it the name of Colne Cæster. On the irruption of the Danes, it is said to have been occupied by that people, who were expelled, in 921, by Edward the Elder. At the time of the Norman survey it appears to have been a flourishing town. In 1215, Laher de Quincey, Earl of Winchester, with an army of foreigners, entered the kingdom, laid siege to the castle, and gained possession of the town. It was retaken by King John. In 1648, notwithstanding previous dissatisfaction under his government, the town adhering to Charles I., was besieged by the forces of the parliament under Fairfax, and after a brave defence of 11 weeks, surrendered. Sir Charles Lucas and Sir George Lisle, the principal defenders, were, after the surrender, shot under the city walls. In 1665, the great plague which ravaged London extended its baneful influence to Colchester, and swept away nearly 5,000 of its inhabitants. During the late war, Colchester was the site of an extensive military establishment. The barracks, except a few officers' houses, were pulled down at the close of the war; but a small military force has ever since been continued at a place called the new barracks, not far distant. The Right Hon. Charles Abbot, late speaker of the house of commons, who was a native of this neighbourhood, was, in 1817, elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Colchester.

As we gather from Marianus Scotus, Camden, &c., Colchester was celebrated, centuries ago, for the vast quantities of antiquities discovered in it. Even in recent times, however, coins in immense quantities have been found; with abundance of porcelain, much of which is the fine glazed and red ware so much admired by antiquarians; household utensils, vases, urns, rings, intaglios, writing styles, &c. Morant mentions no less than 8 tessellated pavements which had been discovered in this town, and more recently there was one discovered on the site of the present market-place. All the public buildings display Roman materials worked up in their walls. Vestiges of Roman baths and temples also have been traced.

COLD-ASHTON. See ASHTON-COLD.

COLD-ASHBY. See ASHBY-COLD.

COLD-DUNGHILL, an extra-parochial district adjoining the parishes of St. Clement and St. Margaret, borough of Ipswich, county of Suffolk.

COLD-HIGHAM, or LITTLE HIGHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Towcester, county of Northampton; 4 miles north-west of Towcester. Living, a rectory, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10, returned at £124; gross income £407. Tithes commuted in 1812. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Pomfret. Acres 1,660. Houses 66. A. P. £2,495. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 391. Poor rates, in 1838, £229 18s.

COLDMEERE, a township in the parish of Eccleshall, county of Suffolk; 3½ miles north-east of Eccleshall. Acres 1,470. Houses 7. Pop., in 1811, 42; in 1831, 60. Other returns with the parish.

COLD-NORTON, a parish in the hund. of Dengie, union of Maldon, county of Essex; 5 miles south of Maldon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £16 13s. 4d.; gross income £341. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £319 0s. 4d. Patrons, the governors of the Charter house. Charities in 1837, £5 1s. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,570. Houses 42. A. P. £2,101. Pop., in 1801, 223; in 1831, 216. Poor rates, in 1838, £77 15s.

COLD-OVERTON, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Oakham, county of Leicester; 7 miles south-south-east of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £19 12s. 3½d.; gross income £321. Patron, in 1835, E. B. Hartopp. There is a daily school here for orphans. Acres 2,320. Houses 22. A. P. £2,225. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 123. Poor rates, in 1838, £80 18s.

COLDRED, a parish in the hund. of Bewsborough, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Dover, county of Kent; 5 miles north-north-west of Dover. Living, a vicarage united with that of Sibertswold. Acres 1,630. Houses 17. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 139. Poor rates, in 1838, £161 13s.

COLDRIDGE. See COLERIDGE.

COLDSBORNE, or COLESBORNE, a parish in the hund. of Rapsegate, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 8 miles north-north-west of Cirencester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £5 6s. 10½d.; gross income £130. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge of impropriated £242 14s.; of rectorial £122 10s. Patron, in 1835, H. Elwes, Esq. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 2,120. Houses 51. A. P. £2,037. Pop., in 1801, 231; in 1831, 252. Poor rates, in 1838, £56 17s.

COLD-WALTHAM, a parish in the hund. of Bury, rape of Arundel, union of Thakeham, county of Sussex; 2½ miles north of Bury, bounded on the west by the river Arun. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Sussex and dio. of Chichester; returned at £36; gross income £65. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,230. Houses 55. A. P. £744. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 449. Poor rates, in 1838, £154 5s.

COLDWELL, a township in the parish of Kirkwhelpington, Northumberland; 2½ miles north of Kirkwhelpington. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £1 8s. 3½d. House 1. Pop., in 1811, 9; in 1831, 6. Other returns with the parish.

COLE. See PRITCOMBE.

COLE AND WEST PARK, a tything in the parish of Malmesbury, county of Wilts; 1½ mile south-south-east of Malmesbury. Houses 5. Pop., in 1811, 43; in 1831, 43. Other returns with the parish.

COLEBROOKE, or COLEBROOK, a parish in the hund. and union of Crediton, county of Devon; 4 miles west of Crediton, north of the river Yew. Living, a vicarage in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the dean and chapter of Exeter; rated at £20; gross income £200. Charities in 1823, £5 12s. per annum. There are in this parish the ruinous remains of no less than five chapels, viz. at Coplestone, Land's-end, Horwell, Hooke, and Wolmstone. This parish possesses a day, Sunday, and 2 daily National schools. Acres 4,200. Houses 168. A. P. £4,477. Pop., in 1801, 762; in 1831, 880. Poor rates, in 1838, £414 11s.

COLEBROOKE-DALE, a hamlet in the parish of Broseley, county of Salop; 2 miles north of Broseley, on the northern bank of the Severn. It is celebrated for its iron-bridge, erected in 1779, over the Severn, about a mile from Madeley Market. This is a very elegant structure, consisting of an arch 40 feet high, and more than 100 feet span. It was cast at Colebrooke-dale iron works, which are amongst the largest in England. The first idea of constructing railroads was supposed to have been entertained between the years 1620 and 1650, when they were roughly constructed of wood, and nearly 100 years elapsed before a decided improvement was introduced, originating at the Colebrooke-dale iron works, where iron plates were first put on wooden rails. Colebrooke-dale gives name to a winding glen through which the Severn flows, between two hills, and under the magnificent iron-bridge; the tout ensemble, constituting, with the forges, engines, furnaces, and vast machinery of the iron works, a spectacle of the most interesting and sublime description. Geologists have also given the name of Colebrooke-dale to a rich coal and iron district, which has long been known to them as a point of great interest. It includes this celebrated defile, and extends east to Lilleshall and Bridgenorth; north-west to Wellington, and thence by the Wrek-in; south-east to the road from Much Wenlock to Bridgenorth; while on the west the boundary is broken by the gorge of the Severn, but is formed in part by the elevated ridges of Benthall and Wenlock. The area thus circumscribed consists of a platform raised about 400 feet above the Severn at Madeley, about a mile from Colebrooke, or 500 feet above the level of the sea. Mr. Prestwich, F. G. S., has lately given the following account of the number of beds of coal at each of the principal works, and the aggregate thickness:—

	Yards.	Feet.	Inches.	No. of Beds
Hadley	15	0	0	16
Sned's Hill . . .	14	2	2	12
Malinslee	11	0	10	13
Langley	11	2	6	11
Dawley	14	0	0	16
Lightmoor . . .	13	2	0	17
Madeley	10	2	10	24
Broseley	7	0	9	13

At these points the coal measures are fully developed, and consequently the difference in the number and thickness of the strata does not arise from a diminution of the system, but in some cases may be accounted for by the minor beds not having been deemed worthy of notice. Next in importance to the beds of coal are the layers of argillaceous carbonate of iron. This valuable ore generally occurs in flattened nodules, constituting regular seams, which are distinguished by the names of pennystone, the chance stone, the ball stone, the ragged robins, &c. Some of these layers extend throughout the field, but others are of local occurrence, and the aggregate number in a pit varies from two to seven. They are generally imbedded in shale, but occasionally in sandstone. In some parts of the district, and situated near to the top of the series, is a bed of fresh water limestone. The petroleum or tar spring, for which Colebrooke-dale has been so long celebrated, issues from a thick bed of sandstone in the upper part of the coal measures: it yielded formerly more than a hogshead a-day, but produces now only a few gallons a-week. Another spring has been discovered, and petroleum is frequently found to some extent in working the coal. Titanium has been produced in considerable abundance in the iron furnaces. It often occurs in crystals of great beauty, but principally in amorphous masses as large as a marble, at times cemented by a small quantity of iron. The fossils contained in the coal measures are of great interest, as they occur in considerable abundance, and consist of a curious association of remains, including not only those of terrestrial plants and fresh water shells, but also of marine testacea and other animals. Mr. Prestwich conceives that the phenomena may be explained by supposing that the coal measures were accumulated in an estuary occasionally subjected to considerable freshes from a large river.

COLEBY, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Boothby-Graffo, parts of Kesteven, union and county of Lincoln; 8 miles south of Lincoln, east of the river Brant. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 12s. 1d., returned at £120; gross income £126. Tithes commuted in 1759. Patron, the provost and fellows of Oriel college, Oxford. There is a daily school here. A few children from this parish attend school at Harmston. Acres 2,600. Houses 79. A. P. £3,921. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 415. Poor rates, in 1838, £120 4s.

COLEDALE, or PORTINGSKALE, a township in the parish of Crosthwaite, county of Cumberland; 3 miles west of Keswick; west of the Derwent water. See BRAITHWAITE. Houses 50. Pop., in 1811, 225; in 1831, 253. Poor rates, in 1838, £159 3s.

COLEFORD, a chapelry and market-town in the parish of Newland, county of Gloucester; 7½ miles west-west by north of Blakeney; bounded on the west by the river Wye. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £15; gross income £105. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. There are a Baptist chapel here, and 2 Sunday National schools. A weekly market is held here on Friday, and the annual fairs are June 20th and December 5th; the former chiefly for wool. Coleford is a polling-place for the member for the western division of the county. Houses 422. Pop., in 1811, 1,551; in 1831, 2,193. Other returns with the parish.

COLEFORD. See KILMERSON.

COLEMORE, or COLEMER, a parish in the hund. of Barton Stacey, union of Petersfield, Andover division of the county of Southampton; 5½ miles south-south-west of Alton. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Prior's Dean, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £22 9s. 4½d.; gross income £443. Patron, in 1835, J. Fowler, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,270. Houses 13. A. P. £934. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 164. Poor rates, in 1838, £122 13s.

COLE-ORTON, a parish in the west division of the hund. of Goscote, union of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, county of Leicester; 2 miles east of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and near the Leicester railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10 6s. 0½d.; gross income £269. Patron in 1835, Sir George H. Beaumont, Bart. There are 2 Sunday and daily National schools here, one of which is endowed with a portion of the great tithes of Swannington. The endowment also supports six poor widows under the same roof as the school, and finds them coals and a portion of clothing. Poor women of this parish have also an interest in the Ravenston hospital. The other charities consist of an annual rent of £7 1s. 4d. for apprenticing poor children of this and other parishes, and £4 distributed annually amongst the poor. Acres 1,750. Houses 152. A. P. £4,856. Pop., in 1801, 1,069; in 1831, 848. Poor rates, in 1838, £479 3s.

COLERIDGE HUNDRED, in the south corner of the county of Devon, having the Dart on the east, and Kingsbridge water on the west. Area 50,090 acres. Houses 3,119. Pop., in 1831, 20,339.

COLERIDGE, a parish in the hund. of North Tawton with Winkley, union of Crediton, county of Devon; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Chumleigh, west of the river Taw. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £7 8s. 9d.; gross income £142. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Charities in 1823, 7s. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,190. Houses 109. A. P. £2,022. Pop., in 1801, 697; in 1831, 644. Poor rates, in 1838, £290 18s.

COLERNE, a parish in the hund. and union of Chippenham, county of Wilts; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-west by south of Chippenham, in the vicinity of the Great Western railway. Living, a rectory, rated at £16 11s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and a discharged vicarage, rated at £9 16s., returned at £114; gross income £130. Tithes commuted in 1785. The rectory, with the patronage, is annexed to the wardenship of New college, Oxford. There is an Independent chapel here; the church was formed in 1799. There are also 3 daily schools. Charities in 1833, £12 per annum, besides 24 acres of land occupied by the poor in lots at small rents. Acres 3,620. Houses 175. A. P. £5,898. Pop., in 1801, 698; in 1831, 931. Poor rates, in 1838, £222 8s.

COLESHILL, a hamlet partly in the parish of Amersham, county of Hertford, and partly in the parish of Beaconsfield, county of Buckingham; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-south-west of Amersham. This was the birth-place of Edmund Waller the poet, who died in 1687. Here, under the wide branches of an immense oak tree, he is said to have written the most of his poems. Acres 2,810. Houses 101. A. P. £1,983. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 497. Poor rates, in 1838, £266 10s.

COLESHILL, a parish in the hund. of Shrivenham, union of Farringdon, county of Berks; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-west by south of Great Farringdon; bounded on the west by the river Cole. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £17 11s. 8d.; gross income £311. Patron, the Earl of Radnor. Coleshill house, a princely seat of the earl of Radnor in this parish, whence he takes the title of baron, is supposed to be one of the most perfect and unaltered specimens of the talent and taste of Inigo Jones. The grounds have undergone a complete alteration, and have been laid out under the direction of the earl of Radnor, according to the present improved taste of landscape gardening. They are remarkably beautiful, possessing every requisite to render the scenery interesting and perfect. At Binbury there are vestiges of a Roman camp. Acres 2,520. Houses 62. A. P. £2,690. Pop., in 1801, 26; in 1831, 351. Poor rates, in 1838, £228 10s.

COLESHILL, a township in the parish of Holywell, co. of Flint. This was the scene of a sanguinary battle, in which Henry II. suffered a signal defeat from the sons of Owen Gwynedd, in 1157.

COLESHILL, a parish and market-town in Birmingham division of the hund. of Hemlingford, union of Meriden, county of Warwick; 17 miles north-north-west of Warwick; on the southern bank of the Cole. Acres 6,200. Houses 380. A. P. £8,533. Pop., in 1801, 1,437; in 1831, 1,858. Poor rates, in 1838, £512 2s. The Birmingham and Derby Junction railway bisects this parish. The Coleshill station is $14\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Birmingham, and $33\frac{1}{2}$ from Derby.—Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £10 18s. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £821. Tithes commuted in 1779. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Digby. The church, which occupies a gentle eminence, is in the decorated style of Gothic architecture. The interior is adorned with many monuments of the Digby family, and a font of curious workmanship. Here is a Wesleyan chapel and an Independent church, formed in 1834. There are 12 daily, including 3 National, schools in this parish; two of them are endowed;—the one, a grammar-school, with £215 7s. 5d. per annum; about £175 of which is applied to the school, the remainder being subject to payment of interest on debt for building; the other, a girl's charity school, with £14 per annum. Other charities, in 1834, £68 8s. 11d., principally distributed in alms, bread, clothing, and religious books to the poor. The town occupies an eminence on the south bank of the Cole, over which there is a neat bridge leading into the north end of the town, which consists principally of two large streets, one due north and south, and the other branching to the east, and both adorned with many elegant modern buildings. Here are no particular manufactures; but this was once a very considerable thoroughfare: the markets and fairs have been much frequented. The market-day is Wednesday. The fairs are the first Monday of the New year, Shrove-Monday, May 6th, and Wednesday after New Michaelmas. The Coventry Union banking company have a branch here. The town is governed by two constables who are chosen annually. The petty-sessions for the hundred are held here and at Birmingham. This is the principal place of election for the northern division of the county. Coleshill is one of the ancient demesnes. After the Conquest it belonged to the De Clintons, then to the Mountforts; one of whom, Sir Simon, was hung at Tyburn for believing in the personal identity of Perkin Warbeck with the duke of York, and affording him pecuniary assistance. This place gives the title of Viscount to the earl of Digby, whose mansion, Coleshill-hall, was pulled down about 30 years ago: the park has been almost all divided into allotments; but its fine old oaks are still alive, though much decayed. In Cudworth field, 2 miles north of Coleshill, Sir Richard Willys defeated a party of the parliamentarians. The great antiquary, Sir William Dugdale, was born at Shus-toke near this place, September 12th, 1605.

COLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Halifax, west riding of Yorkshire. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Halifax, of the certified value of £13 12s. 2d.; gross income £141. Patron, the vicar of Halifax.

COLFRYN, a township in the parish of Llansantffraid, county of Montgomery. Houses 27. Pop., in 1821, 218; in 1831, 164. Other returns with the parish.

COLKIRK, a parish in the hund. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 2 miles south of Fakenham. Living, a discharged rectory united with that of Stibbard, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £10; gross income £805. Patron, in 1835, the Marquis of Townshend. Charities in 1834, £49 12s. per annum, chiefly for behoof of poor. Acres 1,310. Houses 45. A. P. £1,208. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 316. Poor rates, in 1838, £82 2s.

COLLIERLY, including DIPTON and PONTOP, a township in the parish of Lanchester, co.-palatine of Durham; 11 miles north-west of Durham; a branch of the river Derwent flows near it. It possesses a daily school. Acres 1,710. Houses 117. A. P. £8,917. Pop., in 1801, 539; in 1831, 526. Poor rates, in 1838, £117 3s.

COLLINGBOURN-DUCIS, a parish in the hund. of Elstub and Everly, union of Pewsey, county of Wilts; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Ludgershall. Living, a rectory and royal peculiar in the archd. of Great Bedwin, Little Bedwin, and Collingbourn-Ducis and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £16 6s. 8d.; gross income £629. Patron, in 1835, the marquis of Ailesbury. Charities in 1833, £3 16s. 4d. per annum. A fair is held here on December 11th for horses, cows, and sheep. Acres 3,570. Houses 96. A. P. £2,843. Pop., in 1801, 457; in 1831, 458. Poor rates, in 1838, £261 1s.

COLLINGBOURNE-KINGSTON, a parish comprising Collingbourne-Sunton, and Collingbourne-Vallance, in the hund. of Kinwardstone, union of Pewsey, county of Wilts; 4 miles north-west of Ludgershall. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £15 7s. 3½d.; returned at £120; gross income £270. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Winchester. There are 2 daily schools here. This was the birth-place, in 1567, of the Rev. John Norris, celebrated both as a philosopher and a divine. This place is said to have derived its name from William Collingbourne, who was executed, in the reign of Richard III., for sedition. Acres 7,160. Houses 157. A. P. £6,065. Pop., in 1801, 731; in 1831, 913. Poor rates, in 1838, £397 16s.

COLLINGHAM, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Skyrack, west riding of York; 2 miles south-west of Wetherby, on the southern bank of the river Warfe. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £3 11s. 5½d.; gross income £414. Tithes of the manor and township commuted in 1814. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Wheeler. There are an infant and a Sunday school here, besides a charity-school, endowed by Lady E. Hastings with £24 per annum. There are one or two other unimportant charities. Acres 2,200. Houses 71. A. P. £1,373. Pop., in 1801, 287; in 1831, 414. Poor rates, in 1838, £140 3s.

COLLINGHAM (NORTH), a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Newark, union of Newark, county of Nottingham; 5½ miles north-north-east of Newark, on a branch of the river Trent. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 14s.; returned at £37 17s.; gross income £92. Tithes commuted in 1790. Other charities in 1829, £28 6s., principally for behoof of poor. There are 5 daily schools here, one of which is supported by an endowment of £39 per annum. Acres 1,820. Houses 180. A. P. £4,015. Pop., in 1801, 508; in 1831, 881. Poor rates, in 1838, £203 1s.

COLLINGHAM (SOUTH), a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Newark, union of Newark, county of Nottingham; 4½ miles north-north-east of Newark. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £14 1s. 10½d.; gross income £426. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Charities in 1829, £17 7s. 4d. per annum. There are a Baptist chapel here, and 5 daily schools. Acres 3,220. Houses 151. A. P. £3,440. Pop., in 1801, 539; in 1831, 727. Poor rates, in 1838, £261 15s.

COLLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Broxash, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 3½ miles north of Bromyard. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £2 18s. 10d.; gross income £198. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Pytts. Charities in 1837, £6 per annum. Acres 1,120. Houses 33. A. P. £1,314. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 160. Poor rates, in 1838, £85 10s.

COLLINGTONTREE, a parish in the hund. of Wymerley, union of Hardington, county of Northampton; 3½ miles south of Northampton, in the vicinity of the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £16 10s. 5d.; gross income £350. Tithes commuted in 1779. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Ben. Hill. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,190. Houses 44. A. P. £1,248. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 194. Poor rates, in 1838, £108 1s.

COLLUMPTON, or CULOMBTON, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Hayridge, union of Tiverton, county of Devon; 12 miles north-east of Exeter, and 160 south-west by west of London, on the river Culm, in a large valley surrounded by an extensive plain. The Exeter and Bristol railway passes near it. Acres 5,790. Houses 787. A. P. £11,972. Pop., in 1801, 3,138; in 1831, 3,813, of whom 2,873 were in the town. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,888 2s. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £47 4s. 2d.; gross income £436. Patron, in 1835, R. B. de Beauvoir. The church is the only ornament of which the town can boast. It is a fine structure, having a nave, chancel, 3 aisles, and a lofty tower at the western end. The interior is richly carved and decorated. There are places of worship here for the Independents, Baptists, Brianites, Society of Friends, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians. The Independent church was formed in 1831, the Baptist in 1745. There is also a Presbyterian church licensed under the new marriage act. Charities in 1823, £198 17s. 2d. per annum; £80 of which was expended in the apprenticement of 18 poor boys; the remainder in clothing, bread, and alms, to the poor of this parish. There are 8 daily, and 2 Sunday and daily National, schools in this parish. The town consists chiefly of one long ill-paved street running along the great road between Exeter and Bath. The woollen trade here has undergone a great change within the last 30 years. There were, at that time, 40 different manufacturers, small capitalists, chiefly in the serge, flannel, or long ell trade; now there is only one; but the quantity made by him equals that which was made by all the others. The cause of this change is the substitution of improved and costly machinery which small capitalists cannot purchase. It rarely happens in such circumstances that the whole trade, as in this instance, still remains. The number of looms employed by this one extensive house is nearly 500, some of which are in the town, and the remainder in the adjacent villages. With the sole exception of this town and its vicinity, where a better price than usual for weaving the article is obtained, the serge, or long ell, trade, as it was called by the East India company, gives employment only to women; but at one time a curious combination existed here among the men, by whom it was forbidden to any female of their families to learn the art of weaving. This combination lasted for nearly a century till about the year 1825, when the necessity of having the assistance of the wife and daughters on the loom became imperative, and the infringement of this by-law was silently acquiesced in: the women, therefore, share the work now with the men, the proportion of numbers being 250 men to 62 women; about 60 children are also employed. Ever since the expiration of the charter of the East India company, who purchased serge for their China trade, this branch of manufacture has been very fluctuating. It is supposed that the Portuguese market is now supplied with Collumpton serge instead of Salisbury flannel, which is almost extinct. There was here a manufactory for fine woollen cloths; but that has entirely left. This town was devastated by fire in the month of July 1839, when upwards of 170 buildings were totally destroyed, with a great deal of their furniture and stock-in-trade; a total loss, it is said, of £15,000, if not much more. Business was quite at a stand still in the town, and the scene of desolation was distressing, no object presenting itself to the eye in every direction but blackened rafters, smoking ruins, and dismantled buildings. The market-day is Saturday, and it has fairs or cattle marts the first Wednesdays in May and November. There is a branch of the Devon and Cornwall banking company here. Collumpton is one of the polling-places for the northern division of the county. The sessions are held here. The town is governed by one high constable and four petty constables.

COLLY-WESTON, a parish in the hund. of Willybrook, union of Stamford, county of Northampton; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-south-west from Stamford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12 9s. 7d.; gross income £268. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £291 18s. 6d. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 2 daily schools here. Slate quarries are numerous and extensive in this parish. Acres 1,690. Houses 82. A. P. £1,015. Pop., in 1801, 294; in 1831, 394. Poor rates, in 1838, £108 10s.

COLMWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Bedford, union and county of Bedford; $\frac{5}{4}$ miles west by south of St. Neot's, on a branch of the river Ouse. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £19; gross income £363. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. W. Gery. Tithes commuted under 4 and 5 William IV. c. 13. Acres 2,310. Houses 91. A. P. £1,548. Pop., in 1801, 347; in 1831, 468. Poor rates, in 1838, £115 10s.

COLN, or COLD-ST.-ALDWYN'S, a parish in the hund. of Brightwells-barrow, union of Northleach, county of Gloucester; 3 miles north of Fairford, on the river Coln. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £8 19s. 4½d.; gross income £104. Tithes of manor and lordship commuted in 1769. Charities in 1828, £13 10s. per annum. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres 3,420. Houses 95. A. P. £2,915. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 441. Poor rates, in 1838, £261 13s.

COLN-ST.-DENNIS, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Deerhurst, union of Northwich, county of Gloucester; 3 miles south-south-west of North Leach, on the river Coln. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £9 19s. 4½d.; gross income £450. Tithes commuted in 1797. Patrons, the master and fellows of Pembroke college, Oxford. There is a daily, and a Sunday and daily National school here. Acres 2,430. Houses 37. A. P. £1,457. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 176. Poor rates, in 1838, £113 7s.

COLNBROOK, a chapelry, and formerly a market-town, partly in the parish of Stanwell, county of Middlesex, and partly in the parishes of Horton-liver and Langley-Marsh, county of Buckingham; 17 miles south-west of London. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; gross income £103. Patron, in 1835, trustees of G. Townshend, for fellows of Pembroke college, Oxford. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1708. The returns are included in the several parishes to which the respective portions of the chapelry belong. The chapel, being rebuilt, is in the parish of Horton. This town, which is a place of great antiquity, stands upon the small river Coln, by four branches or streams of which it is intersected, and over each of which it has a small bridge; a circumstance which Camden thinks decisive proof that it is the Pontes of Antoninus. It was incorporated in the year 1543 by the style of bailiff and burgesses; and its charter of incorporation was renewed in 1632. It has no trade, and is chiefly supported by the expenditure of travellers; being a great thoroughfare. Its fairs are April 5th and May 3d, for horses and cattle.

COLN-ROGERS, a parish in the bund. of Bradley, union of North Leach, county of Gloucester; 4 miles south by west of North Leach. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £7 0s. 5d.; gross income £232. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £241 19s. Charities in 1829, £6 per annum. Acres 1,480. Houses 27. A. P. £1,321. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831, 135. Poor rates, in 1838, £48 4s.

COLNE (THE), a river which arises from the union of several small streams in the county of Hertford, and running through this and the county of Middlesex, falls, by several channels, into the Thames, principally at Staines, where the Thames enters the county of Middlesex. The Grand Junction canal follows the course of this river from Rickmansworth in Hertfordshire till it leaves that county.—see also HERTFORDSHIRE.

COLNE (THE), a river in Essex. It rises near Ridgewell, on the northern side of the county, and after passing Colchester, expands into a wide estuary, where it is navigable to the German ocean.

COLNE (THE), a river in Gloucestershire. It rises in the interior of the county, and falls into the Isis near Lechlade, on the borders of Oxfordshire.

COLNE, a parish in the hund. of Hurstingstone, union of St. Ives, county of Huntingdon; $\frac{1}{4}$ mile south by east of Somersham. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Somersham. Town's lands, in 1830, annual rents £12. Church lands £13 10s. There are 2 infant and 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,960. Houses 102. A. P. £4,628. Pop., in 1801, 335; in 1831, 476. Poor rates, in 1838, £325 18s.

COLNE, a chapelry and market-town in the parish of Whalley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 35 miles south-east of Lancaster, on the northern bank of the river Henburn, and near the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Acres 8,050. Houses 1,501. A. P. £8,552. Pop., in 1801, 3,626; in 1831, 8,080. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,601. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Whalley, of the certified value of £30 16s. 2d.; gross income £186. Patron, the vicar of Whalley. There are 2 churches;—one recently erected;—besides Baptist, Independent, Wesleyan and Association Methodist, and Inghamite chapels; and 12 daily schools, 2 of them endowed. The celebrated Archbishop Tillotson received the rudiments of his education at the grammar-school here. The town—which is of great antiquity—stands upon a point of rising ground between the Leeds and Liverpool canal, and the Calder. It is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. A rural police force was lately appointed, consisting of 16 policemen and a superintendent. The manufactures of Colne formerly consisted in woollen and worsted goods. In the time of Edward II., there was a fulling-mill here, charged at 6s. 8d.; a circumstance which implies that cloth was manufactured here at an early period; and contradicts the generally received opinion that English wool was universally manufactured in Flanders till act 10th of Edward III. was passed. The cotton trade now prevails here: calicoes, dimities, and—in 1840—mousslin-de-laine, are manufactured. A light calico fabric, called little supers, is woven here by the hand-loom weavers, which is made by power looms at Blackburn and elsewhere; hence great distress exists in consequence of this desperate competition; and hence also, the commissioners who lately investigated into the present state of hand-loom weaving in the north of England, found in this district the most debased moral condition amongst the weavers, and the most frequent accusations of embezzlement. There were no power-loom factories at that time in Colne; but many had been, and still were in course of erection in this district, and the distress here in consequence is represented to have been so great, in 1837, as to have led the weavers, who constitute the great bulk of the population, into open violence; and, although a public distribution of oatmeal to upwards of 1,400 families, comprising from 8,000 to 10,000 inhabitants, was made during the course of the week throughout which the riots continued, it was found necessary to call in the military, after the riot act had been twice read without avail; and, after much resistance, the streets were cleared, and tranquillity restored. The maintenance of numbers in an employment so scantily remunerated, and in which so much distress at times exists, may be accounted for, not only from the fascination with which the hand-loom weavers persist in a mode of occupation which leaves them independent masters of their own time; but from the peculiar facilities afforded, particularly in this neighbourhood, to the utterly destitute in other occupations, of engaging in this: any one for 1s. may use a loom in Colne for a week, and even, when trade is brisk, be supplied, by its possessor, with materials for weaving; while, in return, the earnings are shared between them, till the tyro become an adept, and procure a loom for himself. In June 1840, 3 power-loom had been erected here, and another was in course of erection. There were also 2 spinning mills. There is a cloth or piece hall in this town, built on the plan of that in Leeds, but it is little used. Being near the rich pastures of Craven, considerable business is done here in the sale of cattle. The market-day is Wednesday, the last Wednesday of every month being a kind of extra market or fair-day. It has three annual fairs, March 7th, May 12th, and October 10th, for horned cattle, sheep, and woollen cloth. There is a branch of the Northern and Central bank of England here; and also of the Herefordshire banking company. The country in this vicinity is hilly, and abounds with coal, stone, limestone, slate, &c. for which a ready transit is afforded by the Leeds and Liverpool canal, which passes through a tunnel about a mile from the town. Colne is supposed to have been the Colunio of the anonymous Ravennas. It has no marks of a Roman station, other than the discovery of some Roman coins.

COLNE-EARLS, or GREAT, a parish in the Witham division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Halstead, county of Essex; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-east of Halstead. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £8 10s. 10d.; gross income £495. Patron, in 1835, H. H. Carwaidine. There are a Baptist church here, formed in 1786, and 8 daily schools, one of which is an English school, supported by an endowment of £188, which is paid to the master for teaching 35 poor children of this parish. Other charities; income in 1837, £38; principally distributed, by the churchwardens, to the poor. Albericus, or Aubray de Vere erected a priory here for black monks in the reign of Henry I. This house had at the dissolution a yearly revenue of £156 12s. 4d., Dugd.; and was granted, in 1536, to John, earl of Oxford. A fair is held here on March 25th for cattle and toys. Acres

2,910. Houses 270. A. P. £4,272. Pop., in 1801, 972; in 1831, 1,319. Poor rates, in 1838, £639 3s.

COLNE-ENGAIN, or LITTLE, a parish in the Witham division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Halstead, county of Essex; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles east of Halstead. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £13 17s. 6d.; gross income £700. Patrons, the governors of Christ's hospital, London. Charities in 1837; income £4 per annum, besides about an acre of ground occupied by the sexton of the parish, for the time being, as his property. Here is a Sunday National school. Acres 2,020. Houses 87. A. P. £2,711. Pop., in 1801, 523; in 1831, 618. Poor rates, in 1838, £550 8s.

COLNE-WAKE, a parish in the Witham division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Lexden and Winstree, county of Essex; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles east-south-east of Halstead, on the river Colne. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £12 0s. 5d.; gross income £476. Patron, in 1835, Lord Verulam. Charities in 1837; income £17, expended in calico to the poor. There are 3 daily schools in this parish, one of which is National. Acres 1,430. Houses 85. A. P. £2,651. Pop., in 1801, 372; in 1831, 442. Poor rates, in 1838, £450.

COLNE-WHITE, a parish in the Witham division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Halstead, county of Essex; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles east of Halstead. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; valued at £30; gross income £83. Patron, in 1835, W. E. Hume, Esq. Charities in 1837; £3 per annum, carried to poor rates. There are 5 daily schools in this parish, one of which is a National school. Acres 1,730. Houses 72. A. P. £1,983. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 384. Poor rates, in 1838, £244 18s.

COLNEIS HUNDRED, in the south-east corner of the county of Suffolk. Area 17,460 acres. Houses 647. Pop., in 1831, 4,369.

COLNEY, a parish in the hund. of Humbleyard, union of Henstead, county of Norfolk; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles east of Norwich, on the southern bank of the river Yare. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £200. Tithes commuted in 1839-40; aggregate amount of rectorial, £219; of vicarial, 8s.; and of those of Emanuel college, Cambridge, 6s. Patron, in 1835, J. Postle, Esq. Acres 750. Houses 17. A. P. £1,020. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 90. Poor rates, in 1838, £46 8s.

COLSTERWORTH, a parish in the soke of Grantham, union of Grantham, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south of Lincoln, on the Great North road. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £14 10s.; gross income £615. Patron, the prebendary in Lincoln cathedral. There are 2 daily schools in this parish, and a day and Sunday National school, founded and endowed, in 1824, by E. Turnor, Esq. In 1838 there was a worsted mill here, employing 9 hands. This parish was the birth-place of Sir Isaac Newton, whose father was lord of the manor. He was born on Christmas-day, 1642. Acres 3,000. Houses 192. A. P. 2,309. Pop., in 1801, 649; in 1831, 889. Poor rates, in 1838, £267 15s.

COLSTON-BASSET, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Bingham, union of Bingham, county of Nottingham; 10 miles east-south-east of Nottingham, on the river Sme. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 7s. 6d.; gross income £279. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,530. Houses 59. A. P. £2,333. Pop., in 1801, 220; in 1831, 387. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 10s.

COLTISHALL, a parish in the hund. of South Erpingham, union of Aylesham, county of Norfolk; 8 miles north-north-east of Norwich, on the river Bure. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £7 2s. 6d.; gross income £301. Patrons, the provost and fellows of King's college, Cambridge. This parish possesses 4 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £20 16s. per annum. Other charities in 1832, £10 per annum. A fair is held here on Whitmonday. Acres 1,060. Houses 177. A. P. £2,518. Pop., in 1801, 601; in 1831, 868. Poor rates, in 1838, £457 10s.

COLTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Forehoe, county of Norfolk; 5½ miles north of Wymondham, on the river Bure. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 9s. 9½d.; gross income £365. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school with a small endowment here. Other charities in 1834, £16 17s. per annum. Acres 1,020. Houses 56. A. P. £1,383. Pop., in 1801, 188; in 1831, 280. Poor rates, in 1838, £130 4s.

COLTON, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Pirehill, union of Lichfield, county of Stafford; 1½ mile north-north-east of Rugeley, north of the river Trent. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £5; gross income £461. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. S. Landon. There are 2 day and Sunday schools here, one of which is supported by an endowment of about £50 per annum. Other charities £15 7s., besides a piece of land occupied by the parish-clerk. Acres 3,870. Houses 121. A. P. £5,564. Pop., in 1801, 545; in 1831, 675. Poor rates, in 1838, £203 16s.

COLTON, a township in the parish of Bolton-Percy, in the ainsty of the city of York; 6½ miles south-west of York, intersected by the York and Derby railway. There is a daily school here, endowed by B. S. Morritt, Esq. Acres 1,150. Houses 32. A. P. £1,630. Pop., in 1801, 155; in 1831, 150.

COLUMB (ST. MAJOR), a market-town and parish in the hund. of Pyder, union of Columb St. Major, county of Cornwall; 32 miles south-west of Launceston. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; gross income £1,507. Patron, in 1835, E. Walker, Esq. Charities in 1837, £49 10s. per annum, distributed by churchwardens to the poor. There are 5 daily schools here. The market-day is Thursday, for corn and provisions. The fairs are the first Thursday after the 13th of November, and the Thursday in Mid-Lent; the last for cattle and sheep, the former for sheep only. There is a branch of the Western District banking company here. The petty-sessions are held here for the hundred by the county magistrates, and all pleas of debt where the sum does not exceed 40s. are decided in court. There was formerly a college of black monks here. The buildings were destroyed by fire in 1701. Acres 11,680. Houses 531. A. P. £10,581. Pop., in 1801, 1,816; in 1831, 2,790. Poor rates, in 1838, £902. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Columb St. Major, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 150 persons. The Columb St. Major poor-law union comprehends 16 parishes, embracing an area of 116 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 14,737.

COLUMB (ST. MINOR), a parish in the hund. of Pyder, union of Columb St. Major, county of Cornwall; 5½ miles west-south-west of Columb St. Major. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; returned at £47; gross income £120. Patron, in 1835, J. W. Buller, Esq.

There are 8 daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed with £8 per annum, and open to the parish of Crantock. Other charities in 1837, £2 per annum. A fair is held here on July 9th. Acres 5,520. Houses 284. A. P. £6,238. Pop., in 1801, 999; in 1831, 1,406. Poor rates, in 1838, £426 7s.

COLUMPTON. See COLLUMPTON.

COLVESTON, a parish in the hund. of Grimshoe, union of Swaffham, county of Norfolk; 6½ miles north-north-east of Brandon, north of the river Wissey or Stoke. Living, a discharged rectory united with the vicarage of Didlington. The church is in ruins. Acres 1,100. Houses 5. A. P. £609. Pop., in 1801, 22; in 1831, 34. Poor rates, in 1838, £24 15s.

COLWALL, a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Ledbury, county of Hereford; 3½ miles north-north-east of Ledbury, near the Malvern hills. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £20 6s. 8d.; gross income £120. The church has been recently repaired. Patron, the bishop of Hereford. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is supported by endowments. Other charities in 1837, £31 19s. 7d., chiefly given to the poor. Acres 3,800. Houses 161. A. P. £4,591. Pop., in 1801, 635; in 1831, 909. Poor rates, in 1838, £217 10s.

COLWELL AND SWINBURN, a township in the parish of Chollerton, county of Northumberland. 8 miles north-east of Hexham, east of the river Tyne. Houses 73. Pop., in 1801, 407; in 1831, 411. Other returns with the parish.

COLWICH, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Pirehill, union and county of Stafford; 3 miles north-west by north of Rugeley, on the river Trent, and intersected by the Grand Trunk canal. Pennant, speaking of the village of Colwich, says, "It is perfectly prodigal in its beauties, and spreads at once every charm that can captivate the eye." Living, a discharged vicarage, with Fradswell curacy, in the dio. of Lichfield; a peculiar, rated at £6 0s. 5d.; gross income £523. Patron, the bishop of Lichfield. Charities in 1821, £78 15s., chiefly distributed in bread, alms, &c., amongst the poor. Lord Anson, the celebrated naval commander, was born here. This parish possesses 5 daily and 2 day and Sunday schools. Acres, including Great Heywood and Wolseley, and the chapelry of Fradswell, 8,800. Houses 374. A. P. £13,147. Pop., in 1801, 886; in 1831, 1,918. Poor rates, in 1838, £815 9s.

COLWICK, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 2½ miles east of Nottingham, on the northern bank of the Trent. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; returned at £98 8s. 2d.; gross income £220. Patron, in 1835, J. Musters, Esq. Acres 1,010. Houses 22. A. P. £4,360. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 145. Poor rates, in 1838, £35 18s.

COLWINSTON, a parish in the hund. of Ogmores, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 4 miles west of Cowbridge. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of Llandaff; returned at £111 18s.; gross income £122. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, £73 8s. 1½d.; of impropriated, £124 3s. 6d. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Thomas. Charities in 1837, £1 per annum. There are 2 Sunday schools here. The area of the parish has been calculated at about 1,500 acres; and there is an area of about 60 acres, called 'the Golden Mile,' covered with a coarse heathy herbage, which is common to all the parishioners. Houses 63. A. P. £2,238. Pop., in 1801, 235; in 1831, 338. Poor rates, in 1838, £157 13s.

COLWORTH-FORCE, a fine waterfall in Little Longdale, Westmoreland, about 5 miles from Ambleside. It is formed by the Brathay, which here rushes against a stupendous crag, below which the glen sinks at once to the depth of more than a hundred feet. The river, diverted from its course, rushes round the side of the rock, and plunges, at four several leaps, into the gulf below. The four falls are several yards apart, but all in view at once. The lowest is the largest.

COLYFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Colyton, county of Devon; $\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Colyton. A fair is held here on March 1st for cattle.

COLYTON HUNDRED, in the south-east corner of the county of Devon. Area 27,410 acres. Houses 1,431. Pop., in 1831, 7,374.

COLYTON, or CULLETON, a market-town and parish in the above hund., union of Axminster; 22 miles east of Exeter, on the banks of the Coly, near its confluence with the river Axe. Living, a vicarage, with the curacies of Monckton and Shute, in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £40 10s. 10d.; gross income £510; nett income £403. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Exeter. The Presbyterians have a chapel here. The parish lands of Colyton, a gift of Henry VIII., produced, in 1820, annual rents to the amount of £231 10s. 10d., of which £30 were devoted to the endowment of a free-school; the residue principally distributed to the poor not receiving relief from the parish, who were very numerous. Other charities £16 per annum. There are 8 daily schools here. This small but ancient town was called by Risdon "a borough of reputation." It is governed by a portreeve, annually chosen at the lord's court by the inhabitants of a small district called the borough. The petty-sessions are held here. The town is built of flint. The market-day is Thursday. It has two annual fairs, held on the first Wednesday in May, and the 30th of November. The profits of one of these belongs to the portreeve. Acres 5,430. Houses 436. A. P. £12,909. Pop., in 1801, 1,641; in 1831, 2,182. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,157 1s.

COLYTON, or COLATON-RAWLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of East Budleigh, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 3 miles west of Sidmouth, on the river Otter. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £16 4s. 9½d.; nett income £401. Patron, the dean of Exeter. There is an independent chapel here; the church was formed in 1814. Parish charities in 1822, £6 18s. There is also a daily school. Acres 1,190. Houses 160. A. P. £4,321. Pop., in 1801, 627; in 1831, 857. Poor rates, in 1838, £383 11s.

COMBE. See WESSINGTON and COMBE.

COMBE, a parish in the hund. of Pastrow, union of Hungerford, Kingsclere division of the county of Southampton; $\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Great Bedwin. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £6 13s. 4d., returned at £120; gross income £117. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. Acres 2,190. Houses 26. A. P. £1,283. Pop., in 1801, 161; in 1831, 193. Poor rates, in 1838, £26 13s.

COMBE-ENGLISH. See ENGLISH-COMBE.

COMBE-ABBAS, or ABBAS AND TEMPLE-COMBE, a parish in the hund. of Horethorne, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles south of Wincanton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 9s. 4½d.; gross income £432. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Thomas Fox. There are 2 daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed with a small piece of land. Other charities £8 8s. per annum. Acres 2,020. Houses 100. A. P. £3,242. Pop., in 1801, 425; in 1831, 448. Poor rates, in 1838, £380 7s.

COMBE-BISSETT. See COOMBE-BISSETT.

COMBE-FIELDS, or COMBE-ABBEY, an extra-parochial liberty in the Kirby division of the hund. of Knightlow, union of Rugby, county of Warwick; $\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Coventry, in the vicinity of the Oxford canal. The modern abbey, the seat of the earl of Craven, is an elegant mansion, built on the site of one founded by Richard de Camvilla, for Cistercian monks, in the reign of King Stephen, in 1150. There are still some remains of the cloisters, consisting of Norman pillars and arches. The park and grounds are tastefully laid out. Acres 4,210. Houses 33. A. P. £7,210. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 170. Poor rates, in 1838, £131 1s.

COMBE-FLOREY, a parish in the hund. and union of Taunton, county of Somerset; 5 miles north-east of Wiveliscombe. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £11 13s. 9d.; gross income £288. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of impropriated, £44 1s. 3d.; of rectorial, £201. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities £5 4s. per annum. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,500. Houses 59. A. P. £2,658. Pop., in 1801, 249; in 1831, 316. Poor rates, in 1838, £116 5s.

COMBE-HAY, a parish in the hund. of Wellow, union of Bath, county of Somerset; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-west of Bath; intersected by the Bath canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 12s. 3½d.; gross income £327. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount, £240. Patron, in 1835, H. H. Tracey, Esq. Charities, £6 13s. 11d. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,180. Houses 46. A. P. £1,438. Pop., in 1801, 231; in 1831, 260. Poor rates, in 1838, £128 14s.

COMBE-HILL. See HEALY AND COMB-HILL.

COMBE-KEYNES. See COOMBE-KEYNES.

COMBE-LONG, a parish in the hund. of Wootton, union of Woodstock, county of Oxford; $\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-west of Woodstock, on the river Evenlode. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; not in charge; gross income £90. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge of vicarial, £440; of those due to dean of cathedral church of St. Andrew, Wells, £315. Patrons, the rector and fellows of Lincoln college, Oxford. Charities £4 3s. per annum. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,450. Houses 120. A. P. £1,768. Pop., in 1801, 424; in 1831, 619. Poor rates, in 1838, £142 19s.

COMBE-ST. NICHOLAS, a parish in the east division of the hund. of Kingsbury, union of Charl, county of Somerset; $\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-west of Charl. Living, a vicarage, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of Wells; rated at £15 4s. 4½d.; gross income £445. Patron, the dean of Wells. The church is large and handsome, with a square embattled tower and a peal of bells. There is a revenue of £159 10s. for behoof of the poor of this parish, arising out of one-third of the lands of Roch forest, which were disforested by Charles II., partly for his own benefit, and partly for that of the public. Out of this revenue relief is afforded to 60 or 70 of the more meritorious poor of the parish. Other charities £1 per annum. There are 4 daily, and 2 Sunday and daily, National schools here. This parish is divided into the tythings of Betham, Clayhanger, Ham, and Wadford, and it has two hamlets, Sticklepath and Waston, the last of which was in old times a celebrated nunnery. In 1838 there was a woollen mill here, employing 46 hands. Fairs are held here on June 18th and Wednesday after December 11th, for bullocks, horses, and sheep. Acres 4,100. Houses 226. A. P. £5,860. Pop., in 1801, 870; in 1831, 1,202. Poor rates, in 1838, £382 19s.

COMBERBACH, a township in the parish of Great Budworth, co.-palatine of Chester; 3 miles north-west of Northwich. There is a daily school here. Acres 320. Houses 53. A. P. £740. Pop., in 1801, 142; in 1831, 295. Poor rates, in 1838, £33 1s.

COMBERTON, a parish in the hund. of Wetherley, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 5½ miles west-south-west of Cambridge, north of Bourn Brook. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £6 18s. 11½d., returned at £90; gross income £153. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, £104 5s. 3d.; of those due to the bishop of Ely, £325. Patrons, the master and fellows of Jesus' college, Cambridge. Charities in 1837, £25 per annum. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,804. Houses 53. A. P. £1,001. Pop., in 1801, 295; in 1831, 383. Poor rates, in 1838, £257 11s.

COMBERTON (GREAT), a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Pershore, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 2½ miles south-south-east of Pershore, east of the river Avon. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £10; gross income £254. Tithes commuted in 1818. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. H. Parker. Charities in 1830, £22 10s. per annum. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres 960. Houses 50. A. P. £1,277. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 229. Poor rates, in 1838, £92 18s.

COMBERTON (LITTLE), a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Pershore, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 2½ miles south-east of Pershore. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £9 0s. 2d.; gross income £266. Tithes commuted in 1803. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. William Parker. Charities in 1830, £1 11s. 6d. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 770. Houses 46. A. P. £1,344. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 219.

COMBERMERE, a township in the parish of Acton, county of Chester; 1½ mile north-west of Nantwich, close on the Birmingham and Liverpool canal. Hugh de Malbane, lord of Nantwich, founded here, A. D. 1133, an abbey for Cistercian monks, which was endowed, 26th Henry VIII., with £225 9s. 7d. per annum, Dugd. The site of this house was granted, 32nd Henry VIII., to William Cotton, Esq., and belongs now to Sir Robert Salisbury Cotton, Bart. Though now the seat of a nobleman, it still retains the name of Combermere abbey. It gives the title of Baron to Lord Combermere.

COMBINTINHEAD, or COMBE-IN-TEIGN-HEAD, a parish which, with Haccombe, Stokintinhead and Shaldon Green, forms a detached portion of the hund. of Wonford, union of Newton-Abbott, county of Devon; 3 miles east of Newton-Bushell, at the mouth of the Teign. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £32 2s. 8½d.; gross income £377. Patron, in 1835, Sir B. P. Wrey, Bart. Charities; an alms-house, and £3 7s. per annum. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,000. Houses 98. A. P. £2,690. Pop., in 1801, 505; in 1831, 460. Poor rates, in 1838, £272 13s.

COMB-MARTEN, a parish, and, nominally, a market-town, in the hund. of Braunton, union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; 4 miles east of Ilfordcombe. Its situation is very picturesque, in a deep valley encompassed with hills, except on the north-west at Comb-Marten Cove, which opens into the Bristol channel, and where fishing smacks and light vessels can lie, and pilots for the Bristol channel can always be found. Acres 4,730. Houses 228. A. P.

£2,446. Pop., in 1801, 819; in 1831, 1,031. Poor rates, in 1838, £258 18s. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £39 8s. 9d.; gross income £435. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. William Toms. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. There are 5 daily schools, one of which is supported by an endowment of £24 per annum, and has a lending library attached. Other charities £1 per annum. The houses extend along the dale, for nearly a mile from the sea-shore, amid woods and ridges of rocks tufted with foliage down to the level of the sea. The scenery is striking and singular. It is even magnificent. In Devonshire the Comb-Marten and Beer-Alston mines have long been celebrated for their argentiferous lead ores. It is stated that the produce of these mines was unusually great in the reigns of Edward I. and Edward II. In 1293 William de Wymundham accounted at the treasury for 270 lbs. of silver raised in Devon. In 1294 it amounted to £521 10s. weight; and in 1205, to £704 3s. 1d. weight. In 1296 great profit is stated to have been derived from the Devon mines; and 360 miners were impressed out of Derbyshire and Wales to work in them. In 1360 a writ was issued, authorising certain persons to take up as many miners and workmen as should be necessary to work in the king's mines in Devon, allowing them reasonable wages. In the reign of Elizabeth they were worked to considerable advantage: 300 men were pressed out of Derbyshire to work them, and a large bowl made of the silver taken from the mines, and weighing 132 ounces, was presented by Sir Beavis Bulmer to the lord-mayor of London. The working of these mines was strongly recommended to the long parliament in 1659; but Lysons observes that they do not appear to have been again worked until the close of that century, and then without success. In 1813 they were again opened and worked for four years, producing only 208 tons of ore in that time. In 1837 they were again worked, and it was observed by the celebrated geologist, De la Beche, who examined them, that the previous mining operations presented every appearance of having formerly been very unskilfully managed. It is supposed that our ancestors were obliged to give up the working of these mines on account of the influx of water being very great; but the present adventurers have erected a powerful steam-engine, which has been the means of keeping the mines perfectly dry, and altogether they were very prosperous. A very rich lode had been discovered, and it was likely, from appearances, to be much richer as it went downwards. A cargo was shipped of the value of £1,200; there was then also from £700 to £800 on gross, and from £1,000 to £2,000 in sight. Shares of 10s. were worth £10 each; and it was expected would shortly realize £20 each. The adjacent country produces abundance of hemp. The market, originally granted by charter to Henry Fitz-Martin, in the year 1264, has been long discontinued. A fair is held annually on Whit-Monday.

COMB-MONCTON, or MONCTON-COMB, a parish in the hund. of Bath-Forum, union of Bath, county of Somerset; 2½ miles south-south-east of Bath, intersected by the Bath canal. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of South Stoke. There are 2 boarding schools here, and a day and Sunday National school. There are extensive quarries of excellent free stone in this parish, whence the city of Bath has been chiefly constructed. Acres 720. Houses 189. A. P. £2,363. Pop., in 1801, 369; in 1831, 1,031. Poor rates, in 1838, £221 12s.

COMB-PYNE, a parish in the hund. and union of Axminster, county of Devon; 4 miles east-east by south of Colyton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8 11s. 8d.; returned at £130; gross income £127. Patrons, in 1835, Messrs. Knight, Edwards, and Cuff. Acres 1,070. Houses 25. A. P. £865. Pop., in 1801, 141; in 1831, 142. Poor rates, in 1838, £75 11s.

COMB RAWLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Axminster, union of Honiton, county of Devon; 1½ mile north-north-west of Honiton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £20 0s. 10d.; gross income £295. Patron, in 1835, E. S. Drewe, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,100. Houses 53. A. P. £2,575. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 296. Poor rates, in 1838, £151 15s.

COMBROOK, a chapelry in the parish of King-ton, county of Warwick; 2 miles west of King-ton, near the Roman Fosse way. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of King-ton. Tithes commuted in 1772. There is a day and Sunday school in this chapelry. Acres 1,270. Houses 55. A. P. £1,295. Pop., in 1801, 239; in 1831, 282. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 8s.

COMBS, a parish in the hund. and union of Stow, county of Suffolk; 1½ mile south of Market-Stow. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £25 17s. 8d.; gross income £534. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Ashburnham. Charities in 1828, £3 0s. 8d. per annum. There are a daily and a Sunday National school here. Acres 3,060. Houses 177. A. P. £3,653. Pop., in 1801, 662; in 1831, 950. Poor rates, in 1838, £516 18s.

COMBWELL, a manor in the parish of Goudhurst, county of Kent; 2½ miles south of Goudhurst. Robert de Turnham or Thornham, temp. Hen. II., founded here, at a place then called Henlie, a priory of the order of St. Augustin, which was endowed with £80 17s. 5d., q. per ann., Dugd. There is an annual fair here on St. Magdalene's day and the day following.

COMMITMAEN HUNDRED, in Carnarvonshire. Houses 991. Pop., in 1831, 5,048.

COMMONDALE, a township in the parish of Guildsborough, north riding of Yorkshire; 6½ miles of Guildsborough. Acres 2,630. Houses 14. A. P. £551. Pop., in 1801, 68; in 1831, 78. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 18s.

COMPSTALL, a manufacturing village in the parish of Stockport, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles east of Stockport; which see. Returns with the parish. There are 2 Sunday and daily National schools here.

COMPTON HUNDRED, in Berkshire, lying round West Hales-Downs, between the hundred of Flintbury-Eagle and Moreton. Area 18,190 acres. Houses 486. Pop., in 1831, 2,596.

COMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Compton, union of Wantage, county of Berks; 2 miles east-east by south of East Hales. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £11 14s. 4d.; gross income £340. Patron, in 1835, J. T. Wassey, Esq. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 4,050. Houses 103. A. P. £4,120. Pop., in 1801, 488; in 1831, 554. Poor rates, in 1838, £269 3s.

COMPTON, a tything in the parish of Newent, county of Gloucester; 9½ miles north-west of Gloucester. Houses 95. Pop., in 1821, 403; in 1831, 448. Other returns with the parish.

COMPTON, a tything in the parish of Henbury, county of Gloucester; 6 miles north-north-west of Bristol. Acres 1,610. Houses 28. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 159. Other returns with the parish.

COMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Buddlegate, union of Winchester, county of Southampton;

2½ miles south-south-west of Winchester, intersected by the Southampton and London railway. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Winchester, exempt from visitation; rated at £23 6s. 8d.; gross income £350. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,800. Houses 46. A. P. £1,418. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 255. Poor rates, in 1838, £164 13s.

COMPTON, a parish in the first division of the hund. of Godalming, union of Guildford, county of Surrey; 3½ miles north-north-west of Guildford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £15 4s. 9d.; gross income £422. Patron, in 1835, J. M. Molyneux. Charities in 1823, £12 10s. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,790. Houses 88. A. P. £2,067. Pop., in 1801, 270; in 1831, 455. Poor rates, in 1838, £218 7s.

COMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Westbourn and Singleton, rape of Chichester, union of Westbourn, county of Sussex; 8 miles south-west of Midhurst. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Up-Marden, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester, rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £425. Patron, in 1835, — Woods, Esq. Charities in 1837, £13 4s. 10d. per annum. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,750. Houses 51. A. P. £1,047. Pop., in 1801, 199; in 1831, 241. Poor rates, in 1838, £134 3s.

COMPTON (FENNY), a parish in the Burton-Dasset division of the hund. of Kingston, union of Southam, county of Warwick; 5½ miles east of Kingston. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £15 8s. 4d.; gross income £600. Patrons, the president and fellows of Corpus Christi college, Oxford. Charities in 1826, £9 1s. 6d. per annum. There are two daily schools here, one of which is a National school. Acres 2,530. Houses 120. A. P. £4,362. Pop., in 1801, 383; in 1831, 565. Poor rates, in 1838, £230 15s.

COMPTON (LITTLE), a parish formerly in the upper division of the hund. of Deerhurst, union of Chipping-Norton, county of Gloucester, now annexed to the northern division of Worcestershire; 4½ miles north-west by west of Chipping-Norton. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; gross income £66. Tithes commuted in 1794. Patrons, the dean and fellows of Christ Church college, Oxford. Charities in 1829, £40 3s. 2d. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,670. Houses 65. A. P. £2,522. Pop., in 1801, 296; in 1831, 314. Poor rates, in 1838, £199 16s.

COMPTON (LONG), a parish in the Brailles division of the hund. of Kingston, union of Chipping-Norton, county of Warwick; 4 miles north-north-west of Chipping-Norton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £12 15s. 7d.; gross income £205. Tithes commuted in 1811. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Eton college. The Independents have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1820. Charities in 1826, £18 1s. per annum. There are four daily schools here, one of which, a National school, contains 90 pupils. Acres 3,530. Houses 174. A. P. £7,073. Pop., in 1801, 757; in 1831, 891. Poor rates, in 1838, £539 19s.

COMPTON (NETHER), a parish in the hund. and union of Sherborne, county of Dorset; 2½ miles west by north of Sherborne. Living, a discharged rectory, a peculiar of the dean of Salisbury, united to the rectory of Over-Compton; rated at £7 18s. 0d.; gross income £340. Patron, in 1835, W. Goodden, Esq. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which has a small endowment. Other charities in 1837, £5 per annum. Acres 1,390. Houses 76. A. P. £2,960. Pop., in 1801, 371; in 1831, 415. Poor rates, in 1838, £216 7s.

COMPTON (OVER), a parish in the hund. and union of Sherborne, county of Dorset; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Sherborne. Living, united as above, and rated at £11 9s. 4d. There is a Sunday National school here. Acres 1,520. Houses 15. A. P. £1,762. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 139. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 5s.

COMPTON-ABBAS, or WEST, a parish, including the tithing of Bedhurst, in the hund. of Cerne, Totcombe, and Modbury, union of Dorchester, county of Dorset; 8 miles north-north-west of Dorchester. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £8 0s. 5d.; gross income £191. Patron, in 1835, R. Williams, Esq. Acres 2,170. Houses 11. A. P. £951. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 69. Poor rates, in 1838, £36 4s.

COMPTON-ABBAS, a parish in the hund. of Sixpenny-Handley-Shaston division, union of Shaftesbury, county of Dorset; 3 miles south of Shaftesbury. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £9 10s. 2d.; gross income £277. Patron, in 1835, Sir R. C. Glyn, Bart. There are here 4 infant schools and 2 Sunday National schools, with a lending library attached. Acres 1,330. Houses 85. A. P. £1,814. Pop., in 1801, 371; in 1831, 401. Poor rates, in 1838, £188 6s.

COMPTON-ABDALE, a parish in the hund. of Bradley, union of North Leach, county of Gloucester; 3 miles north-west by west of North Leach. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; returned at £91; gross income £78. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Gloucester and Bristol. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,040. Houses 39. A. P. £2,695. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 188. Poor rates, in 1838, £175 2s.

COMPTON-BASSET, a parish in the hund. and union of Calne, county of Wilts; 2 miles east-north-east of Calne. Living, a rectory, a peculiar of the prebendary of Combe and Harnham, in the archd. of Wilts and diocese of Salisbury; rated at £13 6s. 10d.; gross income £500. Patron, the bishop of Salisbury. Charities in 1832, £7 5s. per annum. There are four daily schools here. Acres 1,980. Houses 98. A. P. £4,364. Pop., in 1801, 366; in 1831, 538. Poor rates, in 1838, £295 18s.

COMPTON-BEAUCHAMP, a parish in the hund. of Shrivenham, union of Faringdon, county of Berks; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Great Faringdon, in the vicinity of the Great Western railway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £9 18s. 9d.; gross income £333. Patron, in 1835, Mrs. A. Wright. Charities in 1837, £3 10s. 6d. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,890. Houses 28. A. P. £2,000. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 156. Poor rates, in 1838, £117 9s.

COMPTON-BISHOP, a parish in the hund. of Winterstoke, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west of Axbridge, north of the river Ase. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of Bath and Wells, a peculiar of the prebendary of Compton-Bishop; rated at £11; gross income £191. Great tithes commuted in 1777. Charities in 1824, £18 per annum. There is a day and Sunday National school here, with an endowment. Acres 2,510. Houses 94. A. P. £4,245. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 554. Poor rates, in 1838, £252 19s.

COMPTON-CHAMBERLAIN, a parish in the hund. of South Damerham, locally situated in the hund. of Cawdon and Cadworth, union of Wilton, county of Wilts; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-west by south of Wilton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13; returned at £94 16s. 10d.; gross income £109. Patron, in 1835, J. H. Penruddock, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,130. Houses 60. A. P. £1,687. Pop., in 1801, 283; in 1831, 309. Poor rates, in 1838, £235 15s.

COMPTON-DANDO, a parish in the hund. and union of Keynsham, county of Somerset; 2 miles east by north of Pensford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £5 10s. 5d.; returned at £140; gross income £181. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. Church lands; annual rents £66 15s. 8d., applied to parochial purposes. Other charities £8 per annum. There are two daily schools here. Acres 1,210. Houses 64. A. P. £2,610. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 382. Poor rates, in 1838, £192 1s.

COMPTON-DUNDON, a parish in the hund. of Whitley, union of Langport, county of Somerset; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Somerton, north of the river Carey. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of Bath and Wells, a peculiar; rated at £9 6s. 10d.; gross income £201. Patron, the prebendary of Compton-Dundon in the cathedral of Wells. Charities, £4 10s. per annum. There are 4 daily schools in this parish. Acres, including the hamlet of Littleton, 2,790. Houses 134. A. P. £3,305. Pop., in 1801, 446; in 1831, 623. Poor rates, in 1838, £186 12s.

COMPTON-DURVILLE, a tithing in the parish of South Petherton, county of Somerset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-west of South Petherton.

COMPTON-GIFFORD, a tithing in the parish of Charles-the-Martyr, county of Devon; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-east of Plymouth. Acres 1,510. Houses 44. A. P. £3,505. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 229. Poor rates, in 1838, £95 11s.

COMPTON-GREENFIELD, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Henbury, union of Clifton, county of Gloucester; 6 miles north-north-west of Bristol, at the mouth of the Severn. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, a peculiar; rated at £7; returned at £105; gross income £160. Patrons, in 1835, the trustees of Sir H. Lippincott. Acres 640. Houses 8. A. P. £2,497. Pop., in 1801, 24; in 1831, 40. Poor rates, in 1838, £57 7s.

COMPTON-MARTIN, a parish in the hund. of Chewton, union of Clutton, county of Somerset; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Wells. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Nempnet in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £10 6s. 8d.; gross income £500. Patron, in 1835, the duke of Buckingham. Charities in 1824, £10 per annum. There is an infant school here. Acres 2,260. Houses 98. A. P. £1,743. Pop., in 1801, 404; in 1831, 572. Poor rates, in 1838, £237 10s.

COMPTON-PAUNCEFOOT, a parish in the hund. of Catsash, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 5 miles west by south of Wincanton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £8 10s. 10d.; returned at £141 17s. 3d.; gross income £210. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £121. Patron, in 1835, the heirs of H. Hunt, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 870. Houses 40. A. P. £1,333. Pop., in 1801, 207; in 1831, 225. Poor rates, in 1838, £156 14s.

COMPTON-SCORPION, a hamlet in the parish of Honington, county of Warwick; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Shipston-upon-Stour. The unfortunate Sir Thomas Overbury, who fell a sacrifice to the tyranny of James I. and the arts of his infamous minion, Somerset, was a native of this place.

COMPTON-VALLANCE, a parish in the liberty of Frampton, union of Dorchester, county of Dorset; 7 miles west-north-west of Dorchester. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £12 5s. 2½d.; returned at £125; gross income £300. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £240 18s. 3d. Patron, in 1835, R. Williams, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,310. Houses 17. A. P. £1,200. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 104. Poor rates, in 1838, £53 3s.

COMPTON-VERNEY, an extra-parochial liberty in the Kington division of the hund. of Kington, county of Warwick; 2 miles north-west of Kington. Acres 1,740. Houses 10. A. P. £1,072. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 56. Poor rates, in 1838, £31 6s.

COMPTON-WYNIATES, an extra-parochial liberty in the Brailes division of the above hund.; 4½ miles east-north-east of Shipston-upon-Stour. Living, a rectory united with the vicarage of Tysoe. Compton-Wyniates house, erected by Sir William Compton in the reign of Henry VIII., contains the ancient chapel within it. This immense pile was built out of the ruins of Fulbroke castle which lies in the immediate neighbourhood. The adjunct Wyniates appears to be derived from a vineyard formerly cultivated here. Acres 930. Houses 5. Pop., in 1801, 41; in 1831, 23. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 5s.

COMPYNE, a hamlet in the parish of Llandegley, county of Radnor; 3 miles distant of Llandegley. In 1143 there was founded here an abbey intended for Cistercian monks, but, from some intervening causes, it was never finished.

CONDER (THE), a small river in Lancashire, which falls into the Irish sea near Ashton Park.

CONDERTON, a hamlet in the parish of Overbury, county of Worcester; 6 miles north-east of Tewkesbury. Acreage with the parish. Houses 27. A. P. £1,058. Pop., in 1811, 109; in 1831, 112. Poor rates, in 1838, £36 4s.

CONDICOTE, a parish partly in the upper division of the hund. of Kiftsgate, and partly in the upper division of the hund. of Slaughter, union of Stow-on-the-Wold, county of Gloucester; 3 miles north-west of Stow-on-the-Wold. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, rated at £7 1s. 0½d.; gross income £176. Tithes commuted in 1777. Patrons, in 1835, the representatives of the late S. W. Bishop. Five acres of land here are allotted for fuel to the poor. There is a daily school here. Acres 890. Houses 30. A. P. £831. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 142. Poor rates, in 1838, £57 17s.

CONDOVER HUNDRED, in Shiffnal division, county of Salop. Area 42,110 acres. Houses 1,061. Pop., in 1831, 5,910.

CONDOVER, a parish in the hund. of Condovery, union of Atham, county of Salop; 5 miles south of Shrewsbury, on a branch of the Severn. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield, rated at £4 14s.; gross income £277. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, £201 13s. 2d., of impropriated, £1,092 13s. 2d. Patron, in 1835, E. W. S. Owen, Esq. There are 5 daily schools here, one of which is endowed under the will of Mr. Price. Charities, in 1830, including school endowment, £23 0s. 9d. per annum, besides £31 arising from church estate and applied to parochial purposes. Acres 10,540. Houses 282. A. P.

£10,314. Pop., in 1801, 1,451; in 1831, 1,455. Poor rates, in 1838, £641 8s.

CONEYSTHORPE, a township in the parish of Barton-in-the-Street, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles west of New Malton. Acres 1,150. Houses 34. A. P. £962. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 190.

CONEYTHORPE, a township in the parish of Goldsborough, west riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles east by north of Knaresborough. Acres 800. Houses 21. A. P. £889. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 95. Poor rates, in 1838, £49.

CONGERSTON, a parish in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, union of Market-Bosworth, county of Leicester; 3 miles west by north of Market-Bosworth, on a branch of the river Anker, and close upon the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £5 3s. 6½d.; gross income £260. Tithes commuted in 1823. Patron, in 1835, Earl Howe. There are 2 Sunday and daily National schools here, and a daily school endowed with £16 per annum by C. Jennings, Esq. Other charities, in 1837, £13 4s. 6d. per annum, £10 14s. 6d. of which is applied to parochial purposes. Acres 1,020. Houses 42. A. P. £991. Pop., in 1801, 230; in 1831, 170. Poor rates, in 1838, £105 10s.

CONGHAM, a parish in the Lynn division of the hund. of Freebridge, union of Freebridge Lynn, county of Norfolk; 3 miles east-south-east of Castle-Rising. Living, a rectory consolidated, in 1684, with that of Congham-St.-Mary, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich, rated at £12 10s.; gross income £472. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. R. E. Nelson. 19 acres of this parish are allotted for fuel to the poor. Other charities 10s. per annum. There is a daily school here. Sir Henry Spelman, the celebrated antiquary and historian, was born in this parish, 1564. Acres 3,260. Houses 54. A. P. £2,604. Pop., in 1801, 245; in 1831, 290. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 2s.

CONGLETON, a market-town and small municipal borough, in the parish of Astbury, union of Congleton, co.-palatine of Chester; 7½ miles south-south-west of Macclesfield, pleasantly situated in a picturesque valley on the southern bank of the Dane, on the London and Manchester road, and in the vicinity of the Macclesfield canal. It was intended that the Manchester and Birmingham railway should pass through Congleton, but a viaduct in course of erection here, was abandoned in consequence of the intended junction of this line at Crewe with the Grand Junction railway. Acres 2,500. Houses 1,719. A. P. £11,189. Pop., in 1801, 3,861; in 1831, 9,352. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,259 9s. The Congleton poor-law union comprehends 31 parishes, embracing an area of 80 square miles; with a population, returned in 1831, at 26,377. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £8,075. Expenditure in 1838, £7,727. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, of the certified value of £41 15s., returned at £140; gross income £143. Patrons, the corporation of Congleton. There are places of worship here for Independents, Primitive, Wesleyan, and Kilhamite Methodists, Lady Huntingdon's connexion, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, the latter licensed under the new marriage act. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which is a free school with a small endowment, in the patronage of the corporation. The school-house was rebuilt in 1834, at an expense of £400. Other charities connected with this borough, exclusive of the general parochial charities, yielded, in 1837, an annual income of more than £240; about £80 of which were employed in apprenticing poor children, and the remainder principally distributed to the poor. The corporation of the borough had the management of some of these charities till March 1837, when members of the new corporation were appointed as trustees to superintend the charity property under the control of the corporation.

Congleton has had various charters granted to it; from 10th Edward I. down to 6th George IV. Till the change produced by the municipal corporations act, it was governed by a mayor, a high steward, 8 aldermen, and 16 burgesses, with the aid of a town clerk and other officers. The borough and township are co-extensive. Under the municipal act, it is divided into 3 wards, and is governed by 6 aldermen and 18 councillors. The freedom is inherited only by the eldest sons of freemen; but it can be acquired by servitude, purchase, and gift. Income of the borough in 1837, £674 19s. 8½d.; expenditure £619 4s. 3½d. There is here a court of record for debts to any amount, and a commission of the peace has been granted. The borough gaol is under the same roof with the town-hall. It consists of 3 cells in the basement without light or ventilation. A cell has been built above for debtors. Prisoners under criminal charges only remain here while under examination; and, upon committal, are immediately sent to the county house of correction at Knutsford.

There are two cotton-spinning factories here; but the weaving, and the principal manufacture, is confined to the silk trade. Power-loom weaving is the staple weaving trade, and hand-loom weaving is now of comparatively limited amount. A silk mill was first established here about 1752. There were, in 1839, 100 engine-weaving hand-loom, possessed by about the same number of weavers, and 254 power-loom, possessed by 7 manufacturers. Looms for weaving broad-silks were, at one time, very numerous here; but they are mostly moved to Macclesfield; and ribbon-loom are chiefly worked here. In 1831 there were 1,644 families employed here in trade and manufactures, and 27 in agriculture. It has been observed, that the regular habits induced amongst the weavers by the substitution of power-loom and factories has made them more industrious, tractable, and sober than they were. There were, however, in 1835, no less than 50 licensed public-houses, and 52 beer-shops, within the space of 300 yards, in one part of this town. In the vicinity there is abundance of excellent limestone. The market-day is Saturday, and fairs are held the Thursday before Shrovetide, 12th May, 5th July, and 22d November for cattle and pedlars' ware. There are here branches of the Northern, and Central, and of the Imperial, banks of England.

CONGRESBURY, a large parish in the hund. of Winterstoke, union of Axbridge, county of Somerset; 6½ miles north-north-east of Axbridge, on the river Ye, and near the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Wick-St.-Lawrence annexed, in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells, rated at £42 1s. 8d.; gross income £684. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge of vicarial, £530; of those due to dean and chapter of Wells, £190. Patrons, the corporation of Bristol as governors of St. Elizabeth's hospital at Bristol. Charities, in 1824, £3 10s. 5d. per annum, besides a charge of £5 per annum on the manor of Congresbury, belonging to Queen Elizabeth's hospital, Bristol, with right of admission for one poor boy from the manor to the hospital. There are 5 small daily schools and 2 Sunday and daily National schools here. A fair is held here on September 14th for cattle and horses. Acres 4,280. Houses 247. A. P. £10,068. Pop., in 1801, 827; in 1831, 1,327. Poor rates, in 1838, £535 11s.

CONHOPE, a township in the parish of Aymes-trey, county of Hereford; 6½ miles east of Presteigne, bounded on the east by the river Lug. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, including the township of Upper Lye, 193. Other returns with the parish.

CONINGSBY, corruptly written and pronounced CUNESBY, a parish in the soke and union of Horncastle, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln; 8 miles south-south-west of Horncastle, bounded on the west by the river Witham, and intersected by the Horncastle canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £39 10s. 2½d.; gross income £661. Tithes commuted in 1802. Patron, in 1835, Sir George Heathcote, Bart. Here are places of worship for general Baptists, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists; the Baptist church was formed in 1657. There are 1 Sunday and daily National and 4 daily schools in this parish. Acres 5,560. Houses 335. A. P. £6,541. Pop., in 1801, 1,301; in 1831, 1,773. Poor rates, in 1838, £996 4s.

CONINGSHEAD, in the parish of Ulverstone, hund. of Lonsdale, north of the Sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles south-south-east of Ulverstone. Here "Gabriel Pennington built, temp. Hen. II., upon the soil, and by the encouragement of William of Lancaster, baron of Kendale—who was a very great benefactor—an hospital and priory of Black canons to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, which priory consisted of a prior, and seven religious, and forty-eight servants, and was valued at £124 2s. 1d. per annum, Speed.; £97 0s. 2d., Dugd., which was the first valuation; but upon a second valuation, £161 5s. 9d." Tanner's Not. Mon.

CONINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Papworth, union of St. Ives, county of Cambridge; 3¼ miles south of St. Ives. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £9 15s. 10d.; gross income £254. Tithes commuted in 1799–1800. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Charities in 1837, £18 18s. per annum. There is a small daily school here. Acres 1,477. Houses 28. A. P. £1,743. Pop., in 1801, 182; in 1831, 203. Poor rates, in 1838, £124 10s.

CONINGTON WITH HUNTS, a parish in the hund. of Normancross, union and county of Huntingdon; 3 miles south-south-east of Stilton. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £19 6s. 8d.; gross income £510. Patron, in 1835, J. Heathcote, Esq. There are 2 daily and 2 infant schools in this parish. Endowments for education £15 per annum. Here was the residence of Sir Robert Cotton, who left to the world that valuable collection of books and MSS. known by the name of the Cottonian library. Acres 3,000. Houses 37. A. P. £3,461. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 204. Poor rates, in 1838, £59 1s.

CONISBROUGH, or CONINGSBURGH, a parish and town in the south division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Doncaster, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles north-east of Rotherham, and 5 south-east of Doncaster, on the southern bank of the river Don, on the road between Rotherham and Doncaster, and within a short distance of the Dearne and Dove canal, and the North Midland railway, which was first partially opened in May, 1840. The proposed branch from this railway to Doncaster passes the lower part of the town. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £8 12s. 8½d.; gross income £216; aggregate amount of tithe composition £275 1s. 2d. Patron, the archbishop of York. Charities connected with this parish produced some years ago an annual income of £41 13s. 4d. There are 6 daily schools here. The castle, very ancient and curious ruin, is situated on an eminence, above the river Don; overlooked, beyond a deep ravine, by one still higher, whereon the town is beautifully situated. This castle was probably erected by Earl Warrenne, who had the manor from the Conqueror. The keep is nearly entire; all else is a vast mass of beautiful and interesting desolation. Acres 4,000. Houses 275. A. P., £6,113. Pop., in 1801, 843; in 1831, 1,347. Poor rates, in 1838, £327 10s.

CONISCLIFFE, a parish in the south-east division of Darlington ward, union of Darlington, co. palatine of Durham; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Darlington, on the northern bank of the Tees. Northward from the village are the romantic hills named Coniscliffe fells, containing many slate quarries, and abundance of copper ore. At the foot of these is a beautiful lake, 7 miles in length. A mile eastward is Pierce bridge over the Tees. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £7 18s. 14d.; gross income £219. Patron, the bishop of Durham. This parish is divided into two townships, viz.: High, or Church Coniscliffe, in which stands the church, and Low Coniscliffe, both of them seated on the north bank of the Tees, the latter about a mile to the east of the former. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres, of the township of High Coniscliffe, 1,700. Houses 57. A. P. £2,654. Pop., in 1801, 220; in 1831, 234. Poor rates, in 1838, £105 19s. Acres, of the township of Low Coniscliffe, 1,250. Houses 53. A. P. £1,425. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 140. Poor rates, in 1838, £63.

CONISHOLM, a parish in the marsh division of the hundred of Louth-Eake, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Louth. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 13s. 64d., returned at £125; gross income £251. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £180 2s. 6d. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Ripon. There is a daily school here. Acres 1680. Houses 30. A. P. £1,542. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 170. Poor rates, in 1838, £28 13s.

CONISTON, a township in the parish of Swine, east riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-east of Kingston-upon-Hull. Tithes commuted in 1789. There is a daily school here. Acres 600. Houses 24. A. P. £913. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 116. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 6s.

CONISTON with KILNSAY, a chapelry in the parish of Burnall, west riding of Yorkshire; $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Settle, on the river Warfe. There is a day and Sunday school in this chapelry. Acres 5,380. Houses 33. A. P. £2,824. Pop., in 1801, 182; in 1831, 182. Poor rates, in 1838, £152 6s.

CONISTONE (COLD), a township in the parish of Gargrave, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles west by north of Shipton, on the river Aire, and near the Leeds and Liverpool canal. There are 3 daily schools here. Acres 1,710. Houses 55. A. P., £1,832. Pop., in 1801, 342; in 1831, 336. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 10s.

CONISTON (MONK), and SKELLWITH, a township in the parish of Hawkshead, co. palatine of Lancaster; 4 miles west-north-west of Hawkshead. There is a daily school here. Acres 5,420. Houses 78. A. P. £2,010. Pop., in 1801, 286; in 1831, 397.

CONISTON (CHURCH). See CHURCH CONISTONE.

CONOCK, a tything in the parish of Churton, county of Wilts; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of East Lavington. Houses 29. Pop., in 1811, 127; in 1831, 143. Other returns with the parish.

CONONLEY. See FARNHILL WITH CONONLEY.

CONSIDER, or CONSET-WITH-KNITSLEY, a township in the parish of Lanchester, co. palatine of Durham; $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Durham, near the Stanhope and Tyne railway. Acres 3,440. Houses 29. A. P. £1,784. Pop., in 1811, 139; in 1831, 146. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 15s.

CONSTANTINE, a parish in the east division of the hund. of Kerrier, union of Falmouth, county of Cornwall; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Falmouth. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £19 3s. 104d.; gross income £521. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Exeter. There are 9 daily schools in this parish, one of which is supported by the Society of Friends. This village is the seat of the petty-sessions for the division. Acres 8,470. Houses 344. A. P. £6,503. Pop., in 1801, 1,229; in 1831, 2,004. Poor rates, in 1838, £718 2s.

CONSTARD, a manor in the parish of Brede, county of Sussex; 5 miles north-east of Battle; possessing some peculiar privileges with regard to attendance on courts. See BREDE.

CONVIL-CAYO, a parish in the hund. of Cayo, union of Llandovery, county of Carmarthen, South Wales; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Llandovery. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Carmarthen and dio. of St. David's, to which is annexed the chapelry of Llan-Sawel; rated at £5, returned at £63 15s. 4d.; gross income £261. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £400. Patron, the Crown. The Calvinistic Methodists have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1748. There are also 2 daily schools in this parish. Fairs are held here on August 21st, and October 6th, for cattle, horses, and pedlery. The vicinity is highly celebrated for its mineral springs. Houses 409. A. P. £6,365. Pop., in 1801, 1,668; in 1831, 1,971. Poor rates, in 1838, £838 15s.

CONVIL-IN-ELVET, a chapelry in the parish of Abernaut, county of Carmarthen. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of Abernaut. The Calvinistic Methodists have a church here, formed in 1792. There are also 4 daily schools in this chapelry, one of which is supported by endowment. Houses 300. A. P. £2,755. Pop., in 1801, 854; in 1831, 1,500. Poor rates, in 1838, £498 7s.

CONWY, or CONWAY (THE), a celebrated river of North Wales. It has its source in the small lake of Llyn-Conwy, among the mountains of that rugged district where the counties of Merioneth, Denbigh, and Carnarvon meet. Speedily augmented by the Mashno, the Ceirw, the Llugwy, and other streams of the same mountain origin with itself, it flows with great rapidity through a beautiful and romantic valley, forming the boundary between the counties of Denbigh and Carnarvon for about 17 miles. Below Lima hall, it descends from its mountain altitude, by a fall of about 50 feet, into the beautiful and fertile vale of Llanwrst, whence, to the sea, its course is winding and placid. From Trefriw, a mile below Llanwrst, to its junction with the sea, a mile below the town of Conwy, it is a large navigable river. At Llanwrst it passes under an elegant bridge constructed by Inigo Jones; and at Conwy it is crossed by a chain suspension-bridge. Its extreme length may be about 30 miles. In the early part of its course it is famous for trout, and at Conwy, near its confluence with the sea, there are pearl fisheries. The pearls are mostly found in muscles. They are not used by jewellers; and it is supposed are chiefly ground into paste. £400 or £500 a-year has been paid for them.

CONWY, CONWAY, or ABERCONWAY, a parish, borough, and town in the hund. of Isaf, union of Conwy, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; conveniently and beautifully situated 13 miles east by north of Bangor, on the west side, or rather on the estuary, of the navigable river Conwy, where it joins the sea. Houses, of the town and parish, 223. A. P. £1,123. Pop., in 1801, 889; in 1831, 1,245. Poor rates, in 1838, £401. The Conwy poor-law union comprehends 15 parishes, with a population returned in 1831 at 9,703. Living, a vicarage in the dio. of Bangor; rated at £7 7s. 6d.; gross income £181. Patron, in 1835, Sir D. Erskine. There are 2 daily and 2 day and Sunday National schools in this parish, some of them supported by subscription. The town, though somewhat improved in consequence of the new parliamentary line of road carried round the base of Penmaenmawr, and continued through its centre, with an elegant suspension-bridge across the Conwy, is still poor and inconsiderable. It is surrounded with a wall 12 feet thick, fortified with towers and battlements, all in a state of considerable preservation. The castle, erected by Edward I., presents a striking and picturesque scene of ruins, many parts of it being still well-preserved, and calculated to give the spectator a high idea of its ancient grandeur. A few small vessels belong to the port, and ships are occasionally repaired here; a new quay has now been built; and the navigation has been recently benefited by the deepening of the channel; but the trade is not by any means extensive. There are no manufactures: the district is purely agricultural. Timber, slates, and lead are exported. The imports consist of coals from Flint and Liverpool, cotton, tea, sugar, &c. The town mountain, Mynydd-y-Dra, contains chert and compact feld-spar, which used to be let by the corporation for £50 to the potteries; but that has been given up. The town was incorporated by charter, 5^o Edward III. The borough is about 18 miles in circuit. The boundary act has not disturbed the ancient limits. The municipal and parliamentary borough are co-extensive. The former is governed by a mayor, 2 bailiffs, a recorder, coroner, waterbailiff, and other officers. The latter is a contributory borough to Carnarvon. The number of electors registered for 1836-7 was 41, being all £10 occupants. The number polled at the election in 1837 was 35. Income of the borough in 1832, £229 1s. 6d. The county magistrates hold petty-sessions here once a month. There are a court leet and a baron court in the borough, the jurisdiction co-extensive with the limits. There is a town hall, but no jail except a lock-up-house. The assizes were formerly held alternately here and at Carnarvon. It has a weekly-market on Friday; and fairs are held on April 6th, September 4th, October 10th, and November 8th, for cattle. There is a branch of the North and South Wales bank here. A Cistercian abbey, founded here in 1185, by Llewellyn-ap-Jorwith, was by Edward I. transferred to Meiner, some miles to the northward.

COOKBURY, a parish in the hund. of Black Torrington, union of Holsworthy, county of Devon; 4 miles north-east of Holsworthy; south of the Torridge river. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Milton-Damerell, in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; not in charge. Charities in 1823, £2 0s. 6d. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,340. Houses 55. A. P. £924. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 290. Poor rates, in 1838, £90 11s.

COOKHAM HUNDRED, in the county of Berks. It lies in the south-east portion of the county, bordering on Surrey, and includes the greater part of Windsor Forest. Area 14,330 acres. Houses 1,098. Pop., in 1831, 6,002.

COOKHAM, a parish in the above hund., union of Cookham; 2½ miles north-north-east of Maidenhead; bounded on the north and east by the river Thames. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £14 14s. 2d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, J. Rogers, Esq. Charities in 1837, upwards of £80, principally distributed to the poor in alms, bread, &c. The poor of this parish have also a considerable interest in the endowed alms-houses at Maidenhead, belonging to the Salters company of the city of London. There are 13 daily schools in this parish, one of which is a National school. Cookham has two annual fairs,—on May 16th and October 11th. Acres 6,710. Houses 635. A. P. £15,243. Pop., in 1801, 2,239; in 1831, 3,337. Poor rates, in 1838, £750 7s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Cookham, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 200 persons. The Cookham poor-law union comprehends 7 parishes, embracing an area of 48 square miles, with a population returned, in 1831, at 10,517. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £3,946. Expenditure, in 1838, £2,923.

COOKLEY, a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; 3 miles west-south-west of Halesworth. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Huntingfield. Charities in 1829, £22 10s. per annum, £19 of which were applied to parochial purposes. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,210. Houses 53. A. P. £1,719. Pop., in 1801, 264; in 1831, 287. Poor rates, in 1838, £213 19s.

COOLING, a parish in the hund. of Shamwell, union of Hoo, county of Kent; 4½ miles north-north-east of Rochester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £14; gross income £527. Tithes commuted; aggregate amount £576 7s. Patron, in 1835, J. Alliston, two turns in three. The poor of this parish have a right to one place in Cobham college. See article COBHAM. Acres 2,000. Houses 20. A. P. £2,173. Pop., in 1801, 97; in 1831, 131. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 18s.

COOL-PILATE, a township in the parish of Acton, co.-palatine of Chester; 3½ miles south of Nantwich. Acres 620. Houses 6. A. P. £811. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 48. Poor rates, in 1838, £28 8s.

COOMBE, a township in the parish of Presteigne, county of Hereford; 2½ miles east-south-east of Presteigne, on the river Lug. Acreage with the parish. Houses 20. A. P. £697. Pop., in 1801, 96; in 1831, 101. Poor rates, in 1838, £67 19s.

COOMBE. See EAST MEON.

COOMBE-BISSET, a parish in the hund. of Cawden and Cudworth, union of Alderbury, county of Wilts; 3½ miles south-west of Salisbury, on a branch of the Avon. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of West Harnham, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7, returned at £120; gross income £220. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £160; in the patronage of the prebendary of the cathedral of Salisbury. Charities in 1832, £7 5s. per annum. There are 3 small daily schools here. Acres 3,110. Houses 73. A. P. £2,042. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 358. Poor rates, in 1838, £120 9s.

COOMBE-KEYNES, a parish in the hund. of Winfrith, union of Wareham and Purbeck, county of Dorset; 6 miles west-south-west of Wareham. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Wool and the vicarage of East Lulworth, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 18s. 11½d., returned at £130; gross income £100. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge of impropriate, £201 15s.; of vicarial, £110. Patron, in 1835, J. Weld, Esq. There are 2 infant schools here. Acres 1,470. Houses 22. A. P. £739. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 113. Poor rates, in 1838, £58 11s.

COOMBS, a parish in the hund. and union of Steyning, rape of Bramber, county of Sussex; 2 miles south-south-east of Steyning; bounded on the east by the river Adur. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £10 0s. 2½d.; gross income £201. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Egremont. The children of this parish attend a school at the adjoining village of Lancing. Acres 1,270. Houses 6. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 71.

COOMBS DITCH HUNDRED, in Blandford, north division, county of Dorset. Area 11,520 acres. Houses 237. Pop., in 1831, 1,306.

COOMBS-EDGE, a township in the parish of Chapel-en-le-Frith, county of Derby; 2½ miles north of Buxton. Houses 69. Pop., in 1801, 276; in 1831, 367. Other returns with the parish.

COPDOCK, a parish in the hund. and union of Sampford, co. of Suffolk; 3½ miles south-west of Ipswich, close on the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged rectory, united with the vicarage of Washbrook, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £9 12s. 8½d.; gross income £497. Patron, in 1835, Lord Walsingham. There are 2 daily and 2 infant schools here. Acres 610. Houses 61. A. P. £1,759. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 310. Poor rates, in 1838, £173 7s.

COPENHALL, a parish in the hund. and union of Nantwich, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles north-east of Nantwich, intersected by the Birmingham Grand Junction railway.—The COPENHALL STATION on the line of this railway is 42 miles from Liverpool and Manchester, and 55 from Birmingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £6 10s.; gross income £277. Patron, the bishop of Lichfield. Charities in 1837, £9 5s. per annum. There are 2 daily schools here. This parish is composed of two adjoining townships. Copenhall-Church and Copenhall-Monks. Acres of the township of Copenhall-Church, 1,750. Houses 71. A. P. 2,013. Pop., in 1801, 241; in 1831, 350. Poor rates, in 1838, £111 13s. Acres of the township of Copenhall-Monks, 1,300. Houses 26. A. P. £1,682. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 148. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 15s.

COPFORD, a parish in the Witham division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Lexden and Winstree, county of Essex; 4 miles west-south-west of Colchester, on the Roman river. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £15 3s. 4d.; gross income £550. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £656 18s. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities in 1837, 3 tenements and a garden occupied by 3 poor families. There are a daily and a Sunday National school in this parish. Acres 2,350. Houses 83. A. P. £3,539. Pop., in 1801, 495; in 1831, 611. Poor rates, in 1838, £470.

COPGROVE, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Claro, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles west-south-west of Borough bridge. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £5 9s. 7d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, T. Duncombe, Esq. Charities in 1819, £2 16s. per annum. Acres 1,050. Houses 19. A. P. £955. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 120. Poor rates, in 1838, £54 15s.

COPE, a parish in the hund. of Wixamtree, union and county of Bedford; 3½ miles east-south-east of Bedford, on a branch of the river Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £7 17s., returned at £145; gross income £215. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ church, Oxford. Charities in 1821; annual rent of almshouse, £2 13s. 4d. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,170. Houses 107. A. P. £2,583. Pop., in 1801, 403; in 1831, 643. Poor rates, in 1838, £342 9s.

COPLESTONE, a hamlet in the parish of Colebrook, county of Devon. There is a tradition that the Coplestones flourished in Devon before the Conquest. Here were a chapel, a mint, a prison, and lodge, now all destroyed. Polwhele's Devon, vol. ii. p. 35.

COPMANFORD. See COPPINGFORD.

COPMANTHORPE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of St. Mary, Bishopshill-Junior, which is in the ainsty of the city of York; 4 miles south-south-west, and, by railway, 3 miles, 54 chains, distance from York. Copmanthorpe-moor, in this chapelry, is intersected by the York and Derby railway. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £4 per annum. Acres 1,610. Houses 61. A. P. £2,415. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 393. Poor rates, in 1838, £92 12s.

COPPENHALL, a chapelry in the parish of Penkridge, county of Stafford; 4 miles north-north-west of Penkridge, near the Birmingham and Liverpool railway. Living, a curacy with that of Penkridge, in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; valued at £4, rated at £62; gross income £85. Patron, in 1835, Lord Hatherton. At this place numerous remains of one of the largest pachadermatous animals were lately discovered, the most remarkable of which is a fine molar tooth, weighing more than seven pounds. They were accidentally turned up by some labourers at work in a gravel pit, near the Grand Junction railway station here. Acres 2,040. Houses 16. A. P. £1,200. Pop., in 1801, 83; in 1831, 160. Poor rates, in 1838, £24 14s.

COPPINGFORD, or COPMANFORD, a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union and county of Huntingdon; 6 miles south of Stilton. Living, a rectory united with that of Upton. Acres 1,030. Houses 11. A. P. £805. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 44. Poor rates, in 1838, £37 15s.

COPPULL, a chapelry in the parish of Standish, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4½ miles south-south-west of Chorley, near the Wigan and Preston railway. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; returned at £111; gross income £82. Patron, the rector of Standish. Acres 2,180. Houses 154. A. P. £1,815. Pop., in 1801, 832; in 1831, 908. Poor rates, in 1838, £194 17s.

COPSTON (MAGNA), a hamlet in the parish of Monks-Kirby, county of Warwick; 6½ miles east-south-east of Nuneaton. Houses 18. Pop., in 1811, 106; in 1831, 108. Poor rates, in 1838, £28 13s.

COPTHORNE HUNDRED, situated near the centre of the county of Surrey. Area 34,730 acres. Houses 1,850. Pop., in 1831, 10,727.

COQUETDALE, a civil division of the county of Northumberland. It embraces the whole breadth of the county from the border of Scotland on the west to the German ocean on the east, and consists of four divisions, east, north, south, and west. Area 269,590 acres. Houses 3,592. Pop., in 1831, 21,121.

CORBRIDGE, a parish and township, formerly also a borough and market-town, in the east division of Tyndale ward, union of Hexham, county of Northumberland; 4½ miles east of Hexham, on the northern bank of the Tyne, over which is a bridge of 7 wide arches; near the Newcastle and Carlisle railway, on which there is here a station. It is about 8 miles in length by $2\frac{1}{2}$ in breadth. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Halton, in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £11 11s. 8d.; gross income £525. Tithes of Corbridge and Thornborough commuted in 1839; rent charge £305 11s. 1d. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Carlisle. There is a day and Sunday National school here, besides a school in the chapelry of Halton with a small endowment. Other charities in 1830, £35 per annum, principally distributed to poor, and applied to apprenticeship of their children. This parish, besides the township of Corbridge, comprises those of Aydon, Aydoncastle, Clarewood, Dilston, Halton, Halton-Shields, Thornborough, Whittington Great, and Whittington Little. Corbridge anciently sent members to parliament, but, from the expense of representation, the privilege was disused. Large fairs for the sale of live stock, are now annually held, on Whitsun-Eve and July 4th, at Stagshaw-bank, about 2 miles north-west of Corbridge, at the junction of this parish with that of St. John Lee. A tryst is also annually held at the same place on the 24th of November. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics have places of worship here. Acres 13,190. Houses 391. A. P. £19,154. Pop., in 1801, 1,744; in 1831, 2,101. Poor rates, in 1838, £731 5s. Houses of the township 248. Pop., in 1801, 1,032; in 1831, 1,292. Poor rates, in 1838, £474 16s.

CORBY HUNDRED, in the county of Northampton. Area 59,400 acres. Houses 2,171. Pop., in 1831, 10,434.

CORBY, a parish and market-town in the wapentake of Beltialoe, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; 33 miles south of Lincoln, on the river Glen. Living, a vicarage annexed to the rectory of Irnham. Tithes commuted in 1797. There are three daily schools in this parish. The market, which has nearly gone into disuse, is held on Thursday, and it has two annual fairs for horses and cattle, August 26th, and the Monday immediately preceding October 11th. Acres 3,790. Houses 125. A. P. £2,216. Pop., in 1801, 436; in 1831, 654. Poor rates, in 1838, £225 19s.

CORBY, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 3 miles south-east of Rockingham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £13 16s. 3d. No return. Tithes commuted under act 10 Geo. IV. c. 21. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Cardigan. Charities in 1830, £4 17s. per annum. This parish possesses a day and Sunday National school, and an endowed school. Acres 2,800. Houses 131. A. P. £1,115. Pop., in 1801, 611; in 1831, 684. Poor rates, in 1838, £509 8s.

CORBY (GREAT), a township in the parish of Wetheral, Cumberland; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Carlisle, close on the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. There is a free-school here. Immediately adjoining, on the summit of a rocky cliff, overhanging the river Eden, stands Corby castle, the seat of the Howard family, which, on the authority of ancient records, is supposed to have been a gentleman's seat from the Conquest. There is a fine collection of portraits here. Acres 2,960. Houses 236. Pop. with Warwick-Bridge, in 1831, 1,285. Other returns with the parish.

CORBY (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Warwick, Cumberland, at the confluence of the Eden and the Irthing; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Carlisle. There is a daily school here. Acres 380. Houses 56. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 313. Other returns with the parish.

CORELEY, a parish in the hund. of Stottesden, union of Cleobury Mortimer, county of Salop; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Tenbury. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £5 5s. 10d.; gross income £227. Patron, in 1835, R. B. More, Esq. There are two daily National schools here. Acres 1,340. Houses 121. A. P. £4,222. Pop., in 1801, 458; in 1831, 553. Poor rates, in 1838, £158 13s.

CORFE, a parish in the hund. of Taunton and Taunton-Dean, union of Taunton, county of Somerset; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Taunton. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, not in charge; rated at £11 18s. 8d.; gross income £66. Patron, in 1835, F. G. Cooper, Esq. Charities in 1820, £4 12s. per annum. There are two daily schools here. Acres 1,050. Houses 51. A. P. £1,300. Pop., in 1801, 194; in 1831, 271. Poor rates, in 1838, £126.

CORFE-CASTLE, a parish and borough, formerly also a market-town, in the hund. of Corfe-castle, union of Wareham and Purbeck, Blandford division, county of Dorset; 21 miles east-south-east of Dorchester, and 116 south-west of London, on the west side of the small river Corfe, at the foot of a range of hills, but on an eminence, nearly in the centre of what is termed the isle of Purbeck. It includes the tithings of North and South divisions. Acres 9,860. Houses 292. A. P. £6,596. Pop., in 1801, 1,344; in 1831, 1,712. Poor rates, in 1838, £768 8s. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Salisbury, exempt from visitation, and rated at £40 14s. 7d.; gross income £766. Patron, in 1835, Henry Bankes, Esq. The Independents have a place of worship here, and there are 3 infant and 5 daily schools, two of which are National, and one connected with the British and Foreign school society, and attended by 110 scholars. Charities in 1837, £58 6s. 2d., £33 19s. of which was expended for behoof of poor, and the remainder applied to the general purposes of the church.

Corfe-castle seems to have derived its name, if not its origin and all its importance, from its castle, built previously to the year 980, on a steep rocky hill, to the north of the town, from which it is separated by a strong bridge of 4 very high narrow arches, crossing a moat of great depth now dry. On this bridge, Edward the Martyr was murdered, by the orders of his mother-in-law, Elfrida. The castle precincts are very extensive, some of the towers, arches, wards, &c. are still in good preservation, and the whole mass appears to have been so strongly built, that, before the era of artillery, it must have been almost impregnable. The parliamentary forces, in 1645, obtained possession of it by treachery, and reduced it to ruins. The isle of Purbeck was anciently governed by a Lord-lieutenant, generally the governor of the castle, and admiral of the isle. The castle and manor, in 1835, were the property of the patron, who very recently tried in the court of admiralty, a question of considerable novelty, and some importance, regarding the law of flotsam, jetsam, and rights over water, involving his claim, as possessor of the castle and lordship of Corfe, and the isle of Purbeck, to maritime jurisdiction over 49 casks of brandy, found partly cast ashore, and partly afloat, in the vicinity of Corfe-castle. It was found that he had no maritime jurisdiction, and that he was only entitled to those casks which were upon the ground, within the limits of such jurisdiction as he had, extending along the large inland sea, comprehending the harbours of Poole and Wareham, 60 miles in compass, 12 miles long, and 7 wide, having many islands, creeks, and streams, and where the very peculiar tidal phenomena non occurs, to which we have alluded under article CHRIST-CHURCH, Twyneham.

Though for ages a borough by prescription, Corfe-castle was not incorporated till the reign of Elizabeth, when the first return to parliament was made, and when the inhabitants were invested with the same liberties as those enjoyed by the Cinque-Ports. Peculiar privileges were added to them by James I., and especially by Charles II. But schedule A of the reform bill has deprived this place of its most important privilege, that of sending two members to parliament. The parish is now included in the parliamentary borough of Wareham. The corporation, holding it to be illegal, refused to submit to the authority of the commissioners of William IV. for obtaining information with respect to the municipal borough; but it is governed by a mayor, and 8 burgesses who have borne the office of mayor, styled barons. The town is composed principally of two streets of mean aspect, and presenting no appearance of present prosperity or progressive improvement. The inhabitants are principally employed in clay-works and stone quarries in the vicinity. Thursday is the market-day, and two annual fairs are held, 12th May and 29th October.

CORFE-MULLEN, a parish in the hund. of Cogdean, union of Wimborne and Cranborne, county of Dorset; 3 miles south-west of Wimborne-Minster. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Sturminster-Marshall. The church has been recently enlarged. There are two daily schools here, supported by endowment. The only other charity connected with this parish, in 1837, was an annual rent of about £60, out of which £10 was payable to the curate, provided the vicar made him also a sufficient allowance independent of this charity: the residue to be expended in the purchase of bread and cheese for 10 poor children every Sunday, with beef at Christmas, and apprentice-fees when occasion permitted. Acres 2,690. Houses 136. A. P. £2,056. Pop., in 1801, 401; in 1831, 603. Poor rates, in 1838, £134 19s.

CORFTON. See CHORTON.

CORHAMPTON, a parish in the hund. of Meon-Stoke, union of Droxford, Portsdown division of the county of Southampton; 4 miles north-east of Bishop's-Waltham. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, rated, in the parliamentary returns, at £63; gross income £39. Patron, in 1835, H. W. Wyndham, Esq. There is a daily school here endowed with £12 per annum, for the education of 8 boys of this and other parishes. Other charities £22 per annum. Acres 2,410. Houses 16. A. P. £1,293. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 125. Poor rates, in 1838, £122 17s.

CORLEY, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hund. of Hemlingford, union of Meriden, county of Warwick; 4½ miles north-north-west of Coventry. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, F. Gregory, Esq. Charities, in 1837, £12 14s. 4d. per annum. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,280. Houses 53. A. P. £1,792. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1831, 307. Poor rates, in 1838, £68 3s.

CORNARD (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Sudbury, county of Suffolk; 1½ mile east by south of Sudbury, bounded on the west by the river Stour. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £9; gross income £155. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, £170 18s. 4d.; of impropriated, £420. Patron, in 1835, J. G. Sparrow, Esq. Charities, in 1828, £2 10s. per annum. This parish possesses 2 daily schools. A fair is held here on the first Monday in October. Acres 1,610. Houses 187. A. P. £2,191. Pop., in 1801, 535; in 1831, 819. Poor rates, in 1838, £365 8s.

CORNARD (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Babergh, union of Sudbury, county of Suffolk; 2½ miles south-east of Sudbury. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £8 2s. 8½d. No return. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Pochan. Charities in 1828, £4 6s. 8d. per annum. There are two daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,480. Houses 67. A. P. £1,811. Pop., in 1801, 279; in 1831, 345. Poor rates, in 1838, £312 5s.

CORNBROUGH, a township in the parish of Sheriff-Hutton, north riding of Yorkshire; 11 miles north of York. Acres 920. Houses 9. Pop., in 1801, 61; in 1831, 59. Other returns with the parish.

CORNELLY, a parish in the west division of the hund. of Powder, union of Truro, county of Cornwall; 1½ mile west of Tregony. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; returned at £47; gross income £47. Patrons, the parishioners. There is a small daily school here. Acres 1,480. Houses 22. A. P. £1,704. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 170. Poor rates, in 1838, £111 2s.

CORNEY, a parish in Allerdale ward above Darwent, union of Bootle, county of Cumberland; 4 miles south-east of Ravenglass. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £9 17s. 1d.; gross income £140. Patron, the Earl of Lonsdale. Charities in 1819, £1 4s. per annum. Edward Troughton, the celebrated optician, was born here. Acres 3,890. Houses 47. A. P. £3,196. Pop., in 1801, 222; in 1831, 292. Poor rates, in 1838, £91 16s.

CORNFORTH, a township in the parish of Bishops-Middleham, co.-palatine of Durham; 6½ miles south-south-east of Durham, intersected by the Hartlepool Junction railway. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, £27 2s. 1d.; of impropriated, £108 6s. 6d. There are two daily schools here. Acres 1,570. Houses 79. A. P. £1,296. Pop., in 1801, 324; in 1831, 353. Poor rates, in 1838, £67 5s.

CORNHILL, a chapelry in the parish of Norham, co.-palatine of Durham; 2 miles east of Coldstream, bounded on the west by the river Tweed. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Branxton. There are 3 daily, and 1 daily National, schools in this chapelry. There is a fair held here annually, December 6th. Acres 4,430. Houses 148. A. P. £8,210. Pop., in 1801, 668; in 1831, 765. Poor rates, in 1838, £251 11s.

CORNILLO HUNDRED, in the lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent. Area, 13,140 acres. Houses 791. Pop., in 1831, 4,678.

CORNSAY, a township in the parish of Lanchester, co.-palatine of Durham; 8 miles west-north-west of Durham. The Cornsay almshouse school here was endowed by the late William Russell, Esq. with £20 per annum. Tithes commuted in 1838. aggregate amount £119 12s. 4½d. Acres 2,370. Houses 60. Pop., in 1801, 234; in 1831, 230. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 16s.

CORNWALL,

The maritime county which forms the south-west extremity of Great Britain. It is surrounded on all

THE HUNDREDS
Pyden
Powder East Division
West D?
Kerrier East D?
West D?
Fowith East D?
West D?

the Towns denote London

CORNWALL

English Miles

Longitude West from Greenwich

Carton & Co Glasgow

sides by the sea, except on the east, or east-north-east, where it borders on the county of Devon, from which it is separated by the river Tamar. From this boundary to the westward, the land continually decreases in breadth, and assumes a cornuted form, whence its name is supposed to have been derived. It is bounded by the Bristol channel on the north; by the British channel on the south; and by the Irish or Atlantic sea on the west. Four-fifths of its outline are exposed to the sea. Its length from north-east to south-west at "the Landsend," has been calculated at 78 miles; its breadth from north to south, at 43 miles; its circumference at 250 miles; and its square contents at 866,474 acres, of which about 650,000 are arable, pasture, and meadow-land. The remainder may almost be denominated waste lands. William of Worcester states, that between Mount's Bay and the Scilly islands there had been woods, and meadows, and arable lands, and 140 parish churches, which before his time were submerged by the ocean. Uninterrupted tradition leaves no doubt that a vast tract of land which stretched anciently from the eastern shore of Mount's Bay to the north-western rock of Scilly has, since the age of Strabo and Solinus, been overwhelmed by the sea. Borlase remarks, that the sub-marine forests in this vicinity show a subsidence of 12 feet on these shores; and that the ground which has sunk must have been a marshy plain, like the lower lands of Gulval and Ludgvan, and adjoining parishes. By the Reform and Division of counties acts this county is divided into 2 parliamentary sections for the election of its 4 county representatives, 2 of whom are voted for at Bodmin, Launceston, Liskeard, Stratton, and St. Austell, the place of election being Bodmin, for the eastern; and 2 voted for at Truro, Penzance, Nelon, and Redruth, the place of election being Truro, for the western division, and the Scilly isles. By this arrangement, the agricultural and mining population are, in a great degree, separately represented. There are 9 hundreds: namely, East, Lesnewth, Stratton, Trigg, and West, which, with parts of Powder and Pyder, are in the eastern; the remainder of Powder and Pyder, including the Scilly isles, which constitute a parochial subdivision of Pyder, being in the western division, together with the two hundreds of Kerrier and Penwith. There are 208 parishes, 85 of which are rectories, and 96 vicarages; all within the diocese of Exeter, province of Canterbury, forming, with 3 parishes in Devonshire, an archdeaconry. 20 boroughs, most of them only paltry villages, which formerly sent each 2—in all 40—members to parliament; but have been partially disfranchised; and now only 7 in all, return 10 members.—Market-towns 30. Houses 53,521. A. P. £916,060. Pop., in 1801, 188,269; in 1831, 300,988; 18,546 families of whom were employed chiefly in agriculture, though in the mining districts there are few agricultural labourers who have not also been miners, and 13,532 employed chiefly in trade, manufactures, &c., including the miners. Sir Charles Lemon estimates the mining pop. in 1836-7 at 28,000. The population is much more thinly scattered in the north-eastern than in the south-western parts of the county. Poor rates yearly average, in 1748-50, £10,329; expenditure on poor, £9,669; in 1821, £132,520; expenditure on poor, £111,779; in 1839, £90,500; expenditure on poor, £73,800. County rates, in 1792, £2,248; in 1822, £8,264; and in 1838, £9,474. Excise revenues, in 1837; gross amount, £67,738 15s. 9d.; in 1839, £41,675 12s. 11½d. Church rates, in 1832, £8,346; in 1839, £5,433. Charities, according to Abstract by James Whishaw, Esq., in Stat. Jour., vol. 1, p. 149,—which see,—£2,678 10s. 7d. per annum; besides £982 12s. 2d. for education. The number of daily schools in the county, in 1835, was 973, attended by 28,988 children; of infant schools 116, attended by 2,641 children; and of Sunday schools 367, attended by 34,301 children.

Rivers.—Owing to the constant moisture of the atmosphere in this county, to the considerable height of the mountains and to the numerous springs to which they give birth, the rivers and streams are more numerous, and, in proportion to the shortness of their course, larger, perhaps, than in other quarters of the island. Of these, the principal are the Tamar, Lynher, Fowey, Camel or Alan, and Fal. The Tamar is one of the largest in the West of England. It rises in a moor near Moorwinstow, in the north-west corner of the county, and, receiving numerous accessions in its way, flows south-eastwardly by Launceston, to which it is navigable; by Calstock, Saltash, and Davenport; till it falls into Plymouth sound.—The Lynher rises from the Alternon hills, west of Launceston, and, flowing south-south-east by Callington, becomes navigable in the Lynher creek; a kind of lake which it forms between Trematon castle and Anthony. It then empties itself into the Tamar, about a mile below Saltash.—The Fowey rises in an elevated tract between Bodmin and Launceston. It becomes navigable a little below Lostwithiel, and afterwards expands into a wide and deep haven, which opens into the sea about a mile below the town of Fowey.—The Camel or Alan, has its source about two miles to the north of Camelford, in the north-western part of the county. After being reinforced by various tributaries, it becomes navigable for barges near Eglosheal; and at Padstow, forms a harbour, which opens into the Bristol channel. A bar of sand, thrown up by the winds and tides across the mouth of this haven, renders the entrance impracticable for vessels of any considerable burden, and dangerous even for small vessels, except in fair weather and at full tide.—The Fal is the most considerable river in the central part of Cornwall. It rises to the west of Roche rocks, and flowing by Gramound, it is reinforced by tributaries which swell into a large bason, near Truro, and afterwards, with other tributaries, and with a reunion of its own erratic branches, forms Carrig roads, and then flows onwards to the sea at Falmouth, where it forms a spacious harbour, for deepening which, so as to facilitate the access of the largest steamers at all times of the tide to the inner harbour, operations were in progress in 1840. The Tidi, a tributary of the Lynher, which flows past St. Germaines; the Looe or Trelawney, which flows past the towns of East and West Looe into the British channel; the Hel, which falls into the gulf in which the Fal opens; and the Heyl which forms the broad estuary opening into the bay of St. Ives; are also all considerable rivers. The chief harbours or trading ports in this county are Padstow, Bosccastle, Porbreath, St. Ives, Penzance, Truro, Looe, Fowey, Hayle, and Falmouth; and the exports chiefly consist in fish, tin, and copper; the imports in timber, coal, iron, hemp, and such other necessities as fishing and mining require.

Fisheries.—Having such a number of rivers entering the sea by deep creeks and broad estuaries, the fisheries of Cornwall might naturally be expected to be extensive and profitable. "The sea," says Dr. Borlase, "is the great storehouse of Cornwall." The coasts abound with oysters, turbot, sole, mackerel, whiting, and a great variety of other fish; one species of which, the pilchard, is taken in sufficient numbers to constitute a considerable and productive branch of commerce. The pilchard fishery is exclusively carried on along the coasts of Cornwall and Devon, particularly Cornwall. Its chief stations are at St. Ives, St. Austells, Mounts Bay, and Mevagissey. Dr. Borlase states the average of 10 years, ending with 1756, at 29,795 hhds. The Lysons state, that from 1807 to 1811, this trade almost wholly declined, but revived in 1811, and that afterwards great quantities were sold for manure. The average export of 3 years ending with 1832, was 26,641 hhds; but in 1832, it amounted to 31,618 hhds. The total capital employed is estimated at £200,000 to £250,000†.

Roads, Canals, and Railways.—From the peculiarity of its position, this county is traversed or crossed by few or none of the great roads which generally unite counties and distant cities in England. The peninsula, however, if we may so term it, is intersected by two principal lines of road, running chiefly through the high grounds of the county; the one entering it by Launceston, and proceeding, by two separate branches, the one through Camelford, Wadebridge, and St. Columb-major; and the other through Bodmin to Indian Queen, where they reunite and pass to Truro, whence branches again lead off to Redruth, Penryn, Falmouth, Helston, Penzance, St. Ives, Lizard point, and the Landsend.—The other line enters from Exeter, through Tavistock, at Callington, and passing through Liskeard, Lostwithiel, and Grampound to Tregony, unites with the main branches of the other road at Truro. The minor branches of these roads radiating to the coast and the interior, constitute all the other roads within the county. The total income of Turnpike trusts, in 1838, was £27,319 6s. 6d.; total expenditure £27,410 2s. 9d. The inland traffic by rivers and roads is assisted by the canal between Liskeard and Looe estuary; and by the Bude and Holsorthy, and the Launceston, canals, between Bude haven and Launceston; partly along the course of the river Tamar. There is a railway between Redruth and Chasewater, round the mountain of Carnararth, to Twelve Heads; and thence to Point Quay, a small shipping port at the head of Carrig road. There are also 4 branch railways in connection with this undertaking, the object of which was the conveyance of the rich mineral products of the district to a place of shipment. A railway is now proposed to connect the counties of Cornwall and Devon; and to facilitate the government packet intercourse with foreign countries through Falmouth and Exeter, in connection also with the projected railroad between that city and Plymouth.

Physical Features, Climate, &c.—This county is intersected from east to west by a ridge of rugged and bleak hills, some of which are of considerable height. Brown-willy, the highest, is 1,368 feet above the level of the sea. Carraton hill, Kill hill, Henborough down, and Codenborough, are all nearly as high. On the north coast a considerable extent of surface has been inundated by sands, constituting hills several hundred feet in height. So completely have these vast mounds shifted their whole bulk from spot to spot, that the ruins of ancient buildings originally overwhelmed by them, have again been laid bare in the rear of their line of progress. Old coins were found in one instance, by which it appears that the changes had certainly occupied many centuries. Though some of the Cornish valleys are very fertile, and the landscape in some quarters exceedingly romantic, still the general aspect of the surface is dreary and barren. From its vicinity to the Atlantic, the climate is extremely damp; but except to persons of consumptive habits, it is highly salubrious; and the inhabitants are in general healthy, and remarkable for longevity. According to the abstract of the causes of death registered for the half year from July 1st to December 31st, 1837, we find that by far the greater proportion of deaths appear to have been caused by diseases of the respiratory organs, especially consumption and decline. The following summary of this curious and interesting abstract will show the relative proportions of deaths attributable to the most general and fatal causes of mortality in this county:

	Males.	Fem.	Total.
Diseases of Circulating organs	10	8	18
— Digestive organs	65	54	119
Violence	77	24	101
Old age	115	155	270
Diseases of nervous system	145	156	301
Epidemic, Endemic, and Contagious dis.	305	291	496
Diseases of Respiratory organs	320	313	771

It thus also appears that the relative proportion of those who escape other causes of death, and live to die of old age, is high. But, although—while the average of deaths, at the age of 70 and upwards, out of all England and Wales, in 1816, was only 415 out of every 1000 who had, with this exception, died sooner—the average out of Cornwall was 188; it is still higher in some of the other counties of England, as in Northumberland, excluding the mining districts; and in Cumberland, Westmoreland, and the north of Lancashire, where it has been 198; and in the north and west riding of Yorkshire, where it has been as high as 210. The winters are more mild here than in any other part of the island. Myrtles, if only sheltered from the salt winds, or sea breezes, which are injurious to vegetation, will flourish in the open air all the year round; but trees unsheltered, especially on the coast, can seldom withstand the violence of the winds; and hence the coast is rather scant of trees. The spring shows itself very early in buds and blossoms, but its progress is less rapid than in counties where it is later in appearance. The air is tempered by the sea breezes both in summer and winter. Grapes rarely ripen in the open air, and even hazel nuts and walnuts seldom arrive at maturity.

Minerals.—Cornwall is distinguished beyond all other counties of England, and indeed beyond most places of the same extent in any quarter of the globe, by the mineral riches of its bleak and otherwise barren mountains. The tin mines of Cornwall have for centuries furnished employment to thousands of its inhabitants. The Phœnicians, if we may credit Herodotus, Strabo, and other ancient historians and geographers, considered their commerce with Cornwall for tin to be of such importance, that they concealed the situation whence it was obtained. Diodorus Siculus, lib. v., as Dr. Barham has observed, describes the locality where the trade was conducted, and which, in the Augustine era, was named Iktas, generally admitted to be St. Michael's mount. Copper, also, was known at an early age to be a produce of this county; but it was then obtained from mines more especially worked for tin; though now, it constitutes a source of wealth, far more valuable and important than that of tin. Copper pyrites, or the bisulphuret of copper, and the peroxide of tin, crystalline or otherwise, and more or less pure, are the chief ores. The cupreous sulphuret of tin, or tin pyrites, however, have been found, though all the tin is procured from the peroxide; but the sulphuret of copper, and the black ore, are found in sufficient quantity to be of practical importance.

The great metalliferous country extends from Dartmoor, in Devonshire, on the east, to the Landsend, on the west; but the various veins containing these • M'Culloch's Stat. Account, vol. i. p. 603.

† Commercial Dictionary.

ores are not distributed equally over this district; but are, in a great measure, arranged in groups, in still minor districts.* Manganese has been obtained near Calstock on the south, and near Linkinghorn on the east. The neighbourhood of Callington is both stanniferous and cupriferos, and as true silver-lodes are found in it, it may also be termed argenti-ferous. The St. Austell district is principally stanniferous, the copper-lodes being chiefly confined to its south-eastern side, including the present very productive mine of Fowey Consols, and the Crinnis lodes, from which much valuable copper ore has been extracted. The St. Agnes district is for the most part stanniferous, particularly near the town and Beacon, the principal exception being the Great St. George and Wheal Leisure mines near Piran Porth to the eastward, and Wheal Towan and some other mines on the south-west. The great mining district of Gwennap, Redruth, and Camborne, is chiefly cupriferos, tin ore being comparatively rare, except near the latter place. Silver ores were once raised in sufficient quantities in Dolcoath mine to be profitable, and cobalt at Wheal Sparrow, near Redruth. The Breague, Marazion, and Gwinnear district, is of a mixed stanniferous and cupriferos character,† the Gwinnear subdivision being argenti-ferous as far as regards Wheal Herland, from which mine murate of silver and other silver ores were obtained in profitable quantities. The St. Just and St. Ives district is principally stanniferous. Independently of the principal groups, lead occurs on the north of Truro, at Garras; and at Wheal Rose, near Newlyn, considerable quantities of the same ore have been obtained. In the latter vicinity there are also other lead-mines, as well as in the country extending thence towards Penhale Point and New Quay. Lead-mines have also been worked at St. Merryn, St. Issey, Pentire (north of St. Minver), and near St. Teath. Antimony is found at St. Merryn, Endellion, and between the latter place and St. Teath, on the north, and near Mevagissey, and between St. Germans and Landrake, on the south. There are mines where copper and tin, cobalt and tin, &c., are simultaneously worked, and nickel, bismuth, arsenic, zinc, and antimony, are procured in more or less abundance. There are also several fine lodes of rich hematite iron ore, and mines or quarries of soapstone and Chinastone; 7,000 tons of the latter, and 5,000 of the former of which are annually shipped from Charlestown and Pantewan, principally for the potteries. Argillaceous schistus forms the principal substratum of the soil; but at Lausend, and some other parts, it consists of granite, and elsewhere of serpentine, and there is some greenstone or trap. Slates of excellent quality are abundant. In the rock of St. Michael's mount the white topaz is found. In a copper mine near Redruth a singular mineral has been met with, called the swimming-stone, from its property of floating on water, and some mines afford the asbestos, from which may be made incombustible cloth. Manganese is the metal next to copper in importance at present in this district, but it is chiefly obtained beyond the limits of the county into Devonshire, where there are numerous manganese mines. Gold is found particularly in the tin stream works in the valleys where the soil is washed from the ore; but it is not abundant.

We return to tin and copper, the staple commodities in the wealth of Cornwall. Tin is almost exclusively found here only and in Devon; but principally here. In 1750, 18,698 blocks of tin, each weighing from 3.34 to 3.35 cwts., were produced from Cornish ore. In 1800, 16,397 blocks; average price £5 1s. per cwt.; and in 1838, 29,321, £4 2s. per cwt. Besides its other uses, tin is extensively used in the formation of bronze cannons, and bells in churches, &c. After being smelted, the tin is cast into the blocks alluded to; and, for more than 6 centuries, it was carried, after being marked with the smelter's stamp, to certain towns, for the purpose of being coined; that is, examined, and stamped with the duchy seal; the taxes paid, and the blocks permitted to be sold. The dues were 4s. per cwt. But, by an act passed in 1838, these duties were abolished, and a compensation in lieu of them given to the duchy, founded on the amount of the clear annual revenue derived from them for the last 10 years, and, at the same time, the duties on the import of foreign tin were reduced, and fixed at 15s. per cwt. for tin, and 10s. per cwt. for tin ore.

There is much obscurity respecting the date at which copper was first raised in Cornwall; mines may have been worked in 1700; but in 1750 they were in full operation. The decennial tonnage of ore for 1726-35 was estimated by Pryce at 641,800, at the average price of £7 15s. 10d. a ton, amounting to £473,500, being an annual average of 6,480 tons, producing £177,833. Mr. Lemon computed, that for 14 years previous to 1758, the yearly average of cash produced from Cornish copper was £160,000. In 1800, 55,981 tons of ore were raised, producing 5,187 tons of copper; value, £550,925. In 1820, 92,672, producing 7,364 tons of copper; value, £620,347. In 1838, 145,688, producing 11,527; value, £857,779. Thus, observes De la Beche, in his elaborate Report, the value of copper produce has increased more than 13½ times during a century. The value of the standard of copper for 1778 appears to have been £73; while that for 1838 was £109 3s. The sales of the ore take place weekly at Truro, Redruth, or Pool. Samples are taken and assayed by the buyers' agents; and on the day of sale, the samplers attend, and produce tickets, or written papers, sealed up, containing offers of prices for the ore; and the highest bidder obtains it. This mode of selling copper ores in Cornwall has continued, on the same principle, for about 110 years. Dinners are given, says Pryce, like city feasts, on ticketing days, at the expense of the mines. These are generally undertaken by companies of adventurers; the shares consisting of 64th or 128th parts. If the mine be on a waste it is duchy property, and the duchy agent grants the lease. If private property, it is let from time to time for special considerations, varying in amount from a 24th to a 10th part of the produce.

Sir Charles Lemon has enumerated 160 mines at work in this county in 1836-7, besides some omitted. The extent of some of these mines is considerable, numerous lodes running through a sett for nearly 2 miles; throughout which tram roads and carts now transport the ores. These, after being brought to the surface, are picked by children, who acquire great practical judgment in selection; and cobbled, or broken into fragments of the size of a chestnut, preparatory to the operations of the crushing machine, by women or stout girls; for the work is anything but light. By the union of picking, cobbing, washing, crushing, and jigging or sieving, by hand, or machinery, and by other processes, the ore is rendered saleable; and after being sold at the ticketings, as above noticed, it is wholly exported to South Wales to be smelted; as, from the want of coals here hitherto, it has not as yet been smelted on the spot. The number of persons employed in the mines has been already stated to be about 28,000. In two mines only, in 1836, 2,369 men, and 1,705 women and boys, were employed to raise 32,500 tons of ore. In 59 mines there was a return, in 1837, of 11,282 men, and 7,743 women and boys. It is stated by Mr. McCulloch, in his comprehensive "Statistical Account," that, in GWENNAF alone,—which see—no fewer than 21 steam engines were employed in drawing water out of the mines in 1838, some of them of the largest size; a single engine, with its apparatus, and the sinking of the shaft, costing upwards of £12,000; and that the power of the steam engines then employed in the Cornish mines was supposed to be equivalent to about 46,000 horses. In 1836, says Sir Charles Lemon, the consumption of timber in 152 of these mines was 36,407 loads, equal to 144,000 trees. If these grew 10 feet apart, they would cover 330 acres, and if 120 years old, it would require the produce of 39,600 acres, or 140 square miles of Norwegian forest to supply the mines of Cornwall. The annual consumption of gunpowder is about 300 tons, and, at £44 per ton, the price of 1836, the value consumed, per annum, is about £13,200. The deaths from causes which might be easily obviated are very numerous, proceeding from accidents by gunpowder, and the diseases of the chest, arising almost entirely from the effect of ascending from the greatest depths with exhausted strength: taken between the ages of 10 and 60, these were, in 1836, as 294 to 158.* The average value of the annual mineral product of Cornwall with Devon is about £1,500,000. Of the two great metallic products of this district, copper and tin, it yields of the former one-third, and of the latter nine-tenths, of the supply furnished by all Europe.

* De la Beche's Geolog. Rep. p. 284.

† The Breague subdivision is also to a certain extent plumbiferous, as lead is obtained near Porthleven and Penrose.

Soil, Produce, &c.—The soil is generally light, and largely intermixed with gravel. It is various, however, but may be comprehended under three heads: the gritty and black,—the shelly and slaty,—and the reddish stiff soil, approximating to clay. The hills and higher grounds are entirely covered with the first. Considering the nature of the soil and its remote situation; with the otherwise diverted pursuits of its population, agriculture is considerably advanced. Besides the usual grain produce, and potatoes, a few acres of hops are grown in the parishes of Gorran, Ruan, St. Keverne, Manaccan, &c., the average produce of which, however, for 7 years previous to 1835, was only 1,345 lbs., duty £11 4s. 2d. Lime is largely employed as manure, as are weeds, pilchards, and sea-sand, of the last of which there are many distinct sorts,—the sand of almost every different cove being different. There are cattle of various breeds. The indigenous variety is small, coarse, and hardy; generally black, short-horned, and thick boned; but the prevailing breed is a cross between this and that of Devonshire. Cornish butter is celebrated. "The stock of sheep," says McCulloch, "is estimated at about 200,000, producing 5,900 wool-packs a-year." There are multitudes of goats here, and red deer were plentiful between Launceston and Stratton, when Borlase wrote, in 1758. Leland also mentions that they were found in his time near St. Neot's. "Two or three are still occasionally seen," says De la Beche; but they are now very rare. There is nothing peculiar to this county, either plants or animals, unless it be the pyrrhocorax, a red-billed red-legged crow, termed the Cornish chough. But though more common here than elsewhere, it is said to be getting rare even here.

Jurisdiction.—Cornwall is in the south-western circuit. The assizes were anciently held at Launceston alone; but since 1738, the summer assizes have been held at Bodmin. The quarter-sessions were formerly held each of them at Bodmin and Truro by adjournment; but for many years the Michaelmas sessions have been held wholly at Bodmin, the Easter sessions at Truro, and the Epiphany and Midsummer sessions at Lostwithiel.* The duchy of Cornwall, however, is under peculiar jurisdiction. In 1337, Edward the Black prince was created duke of Cornwall, and the duchy was settled by act of parliament on the eldest son of the king of England. The dukes have had large revenues granted to them at various times, arising from the lordship of manors, boroughs, islands, castles, forests, lands, &c., in Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, Somerset, and other counties; from the coinage of tin, and from fines, and various other sources. The immediate government of the county was vested in the duke, his chancellor, attorney, and solicitor-general, and other officers, with a court of exchequer, and the appointment of sheriffs, &c., all which offices and appointments still exist. The miners, by ancient prescription, confirmed by an act of the reign of Edward III., the privileges and enactments of which have been amended and enlarged by an act of William IV. in 1836, are exempted from all civil jurisdiction, other than that of the Stannary Courts, except in cases "affecting land, life, or limb." The mining system, therefore, is under a separate jurisdiction, at the head of which is the lord-warden of the Stannaries, and, under him, the vice-warden, who, from time to time, holds Stannary courts for all matters belonging to the mines. These local courts, especially since they have been so much improved by the act of William IV., are found to be of great benefit, and to be expeditious and comparatively inexpensive. By this act, the courts of equity and common law are united, the vice-warden being judge, and authorized to make rules and orders for the regulation of the practice and proceedings of his courts. From his orders and judgments, an appeal lies to the lord-warden, assisted by 3 or more of the judicial committee of the privy council, and from thence to the house of lords; but new laws affecting the mines cannot be enacted without the consent of 24 persons, gentlemen of property, intelligence, and practical knowledge, in the mining districts, elected out of the four Stannaries of Foymore, Blackmore, Tywarnhaile, and Penwithcum-Kerrier, six for each district. They are called Stannators, and their meetings, called Stannary Parliaments, are regulated by a speaker, formally chosen, and adjourned, from time to time, according to circumstances. These parliaments, however, have been seldom held. The last took place, in 1752, at Truro, and was continued by adjournments, till 11th September, 1753. See also art. HENGESTON-DOWNS.

Revenues.—The annual revenues of the duchy, as computed on an average of three years after the death of the Black prince, amounted to £2,493 7s. 3½d. In the 15th year of Henry VIII. they amounted to £10,095 11s. 9½d., of which £2,771 3s. 9½d. were profits of the coinage of tin in Cornwall and Devon. In 1602,—the 44th of Elizabeth,—they were reduced to £4,569 12s. 2½d., of which £2,623 9s. 8d. were the profits of the tin. In 1814, we find, from Lyson's Mag. Brit., that they amounted to £22,000, of which £8,500 arose from the tin duty in Cornwall, which, before the war, had been nearly £14,000 per annum. In 1838 they amounted, besides arrears, to £24,908 17s. 2d., of which £14,762 4s. 10½d. arose from the tin duties on coinages, post goats, and white rents, in Cornwall, and £2,677 19s. 4d. from the produce, rents,

* Journal of Statistical Society.

* Lyson's Mag. Brit.

commutations, &c. of mines. The expenditure, in 1838, inclusive of salaries, and allowances to all the officers of the duchy, annuities, law charges, &c., but exclusive of £2,000 paid into her majesty's privy purse, amounted to £13,353 9s. In 1839 the revenues amounted to £30,827 19s. 7d., of which £15,586 0s. 10d. arose from the compensation in lieu of the abolished tin coinage duty, and £2,907 7s. 2d. from the mines. The expenditure, in 1839, exclusive of £22,000 paid into the privy purse, amounted to £15,094 6s. 2½d.

History and Antiquities.—Previous to the descent of the Romans, this county was inhabited by three British tribes, the Carnubii, the Cimbri, and the Damnonii. Under the Romans it formed a part of the province called Britannia Prima. On the retreat of the Romans, the British chiefs associated in defence of their independence and chose Vortigern, then earl of Cornwall, as their supreme governor, who called in the Saxons as defensive auxiliaries. Seeing the desirableness of the land, and the weakness of its inhabitants, they took possession of it, but were vigorously and often successfully resisted by Vortimer, Arthur, and other British chiefs in succession, for the full space of 500 years. They were, however, finally subdued under Athelstane; since which, Cornwall has remained, more quietly, perhaps, than any other division of the country, an integral part of the kingdom.

Rude monuments of its early inhabitants, such as large unwrought stones sometimes placed singly and sometimes in circles, tumuli, cairns, cromlechs, and rocking stones, supposed—a number of them at least—to be the remains of Druidical superstition, are abundant. The ruins of baronial castles belonging to the middle ages are also numerous.—Including two alien, there were 20 religious houses, a preceptory of the knights hospitaliers, 11 colleges and 7 hospitals in this county before the Reformation. Excepting the priory of St. Germans, there are no monastic remains worthy of notice.

CORNWELL, a parish in the hund. of Chadlington, union of Chipping Norton, county of Oxford; 3 miles west of Chipping Norton. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £7 4s. 2d., returned at £90; gross income £150. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school here. Acres 820. Houses 23. A. P. £1,223. Pop., in 1801, 87; in 1831, 110. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 16s.

CORNWOOD, a parish in the hund. of Ermington, union of Plympton St. Mary, county of Devon; 4½ miles north-east of Earls-Plympton. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £33 4s. 7d.; gross income £450. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. There are 5 daily schools here, one of which has an endowment of £24 per annum, besides voluntary subscriptions. The river Yealm intersects this parish, and it is separated from the parish of Harford by the Erme. Acres 10,680. Houses 188. A. P. £5,544. Pop., in 1801, 745; in 1831, 1,056. Poor rates, in 1838, £509 19s.

CORNWORTHY, a parish in the hund. of Colebridge, union of Totness, county of Devon; 4 miles south-south-east of Totness, at the mouth of the river Dart. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £10; gross income £220. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Charles Barter. There are 2 daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed with £20 per annum. Other charities in 1821, £7 15s. per annum, besides a church house inhabited by paupers. Here was a priory of seven nuns of the order of St. Austin, said to be founded by the ancestors of the Edgecombs, valued 26° Hen. VIII., at £63 2s. 10d.

1.

Acres 2,600. Houses 105. A. P. £3,602. Pop., in 1801, 468; in 1831, 567. Poor rates, in 1838, £239 1s.

CORPUSTY, a parish in the hund. of South Erpingham, union of Aylsham, county of Norfolk; 6 miles north-west of Aylsham, on the southern bank of the Bure. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £4 12s. 8½d., returned at £52; gross income £62. Patron, the bishop of Norwich. Acres 1,350. Houses 98. A. P. £1,079. Pop., in 1801, 278; in 1831, 468. Poor rates, in 1838, £157 2s.

CORPHAM-CASTLE, in the parish of Diddlebury, county of Salop; 8 miles north of Ludlow, east of the river Corve.

CORRIDGE, a township in the parish of Hartburn, Northumberland; 10½ miles west of Morpeth. Houses 4. Pop., in 1801, 23; in 1831, 23. Poor rates, in 1838, £1 13s.

CORRINGHAM WAPENTAKE, in the parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln. It forms the north-west extremity of the county, and is separated from Nottinghamshire by the Trent. Area 46,250 acres. Houses 2,846. Pop., in 1831, 13,183.

CORRINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Barstaple, union of Orsett, county of Essex; 3 miles east of Houdon-on-the-Hill, near the Thames Haven railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £22 13s. 4d.; gross income £733. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £805 14s. 8d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. R. Stephenson. Charities, in 1837, £6 per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,590. Houses 32. A. P. £3,123. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 234. Poor rates, in 1838, £160 6s.

CORRINGHAM (GREAT AND LITTLE), a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Corringham, parts of Lindsey, union of Gainsborough, county of Lincoln; 4 miles east by north of Gainsborough. Living, a vicarage, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12; returned at £120; gross income £201. Patron, the prebendary of the cathedral of Lincoln. There are two daily schools here. Acres 6,270. Houses 110. A. P. £6,368. Pop., in 1801, 427; in 1831, 559. Poor rates, in 1838, £172 2s.

CORSE, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Westminster, union of Newent, county of Gloucester; 4½ miles east by north of Newent. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £6 2s. 9d.; gross income £443. Great and small tithes commuted in 1794, and vicarial in 1797. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1827, £24 12s. per annum. Acres 2,190. Houses 105. A. P. £3,164. Pop., in 1801, 335; in 1831, 476. Poor rates, in 1838, £357 16s.

CORSCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Beaminster-Forum and Redhorne, union of Beaminster, Bridport division of the county of Dorset; 4 miles north-east of Beaminster. Living, a rectory formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £21 3s. 4d.; gross income £567. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Munden. There are 4 daily, and 2 Sunday National, schools in this parish. Acres 4,170. Houses 140. A. P. £4,613. Pop., in 1801, 415; in 1831, 714. Poor rates, in 1838, £252 18s.

CORSENSIDE, a parish in the north-east division of Tindale ward, union of Bellingham, county of Northumberland; 16 miles north-north-west of Hexham, west of the river Rud. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; rated at £3 1s. 3d., returned at £80; gross income £224. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £171. Patrons, in 1835, Messrs. Tweedle. There are two daily schools here. Acres, including East Woodburn and Linhead, 9,710. Houses 102. A. P. £4,357. Pop., in 1801, 374; in 1831, 524. Poor rates, in 1838, £153 17s.

3 s

CORSHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Chippenham, county of Wilts; 4 miles south-west of Chippenham, near the Great Western railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, a peculiar; rated at £10 16s., returned at £149 17s.; gross income £128. Patron, in 1835, P. Methven, Esq. This parish possesses 10 daily schools, besides a free-school with an endowment of £20 per annum. There are also alms-houses for 6 paupers with an endowment of £40 per annum. Other charities, in 1834, £237 9s. 6d. per annum, £142 of which were applied to parochial purposes, and the residue expended chiefly for behoof of the poor. There are here chapels belonging to the Independents and Baptists, the former licensed under the marriage act. The church here, according to Tanner, was given by William the Conqueror to the abbey of St. Stephen at Caen in Normandy, and, by Henry VI., to King's college, Cambridge. There seems to have been here also a nunnery. The priory has been converted into the parsonage-house. Corsham has been often celebrated for its healthy situation. Sir Richard Blackmore, an eminent physician and voluminous poet, still known to poetical readers by a very fine poem, entitled, 'Creation,' was a native of this place. It was formerly noted for its woollen manufactories. Agriculture is the principal employment. Near the centre of the town, which consists of one long street, stands the market-house, little used. The market-day was Wednesday. It has two annual fairs, March 7th and September 4th, for horned cattle, sheep, and horses. There is a branch of the North Wilts banking company here. Acres 6,710. Houses 586. A. P. £14,652. Pop., in 1801, 2,402; in 1831, 2,952. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,315 9s.

CORSLEY (GREAT and LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Warminster, county of Wilts; 3 miles west by north of Warminster. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £11 0s. 10d.; gross income £215. Tithes commuted in 1780 under act 20 Geo. III. c. 35. Patrons, in 1835, the Marquess of Bath. Charities, in 1833, £9 9s. per annum. There are 3 daily and 2 infant schools in this parish. In 1838 it possessed a woollen mill employing 13 hands. Acres 2,580. Houses 369. A. P. £4,345. Pop., in 1801, 1,412; in 1831, 1,729. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,049 4s.

CORSTON, a parish in the hund. of Wellow, union of Keynham, county of Somerset; 3½ miles west of Bath. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Bath and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £6 3s. 9d.; returned at £89; gross income £150. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. Charities, in 1824, £15 per annum. There is a boarding school here. Acres 1,210. Houses 85. A. P. £2,259. Pop., in 1801, 268; in 1831, 433. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 17s.

CORSTON, a tything and chapelry in the borough of Malmesbury, Wilts; 2¼ miles south-west of Malmesbury. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of St. Paul, Malmesbury. Houses 46. Pop., in 1801, 127; in 1831, 219. Other returns with the parish.

CORSTONE-HACKET, or CORTON, a parish in the hund. of Halfshire, union of Bromsgrove, county of Worcester; 5 miles north-east of Bromsgrove, intersected by the Gloucester and Birmingham railway. Living, a curacy united with the rectory of Northfield. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,400. Houses 35. A. P. £2,517. Pop., in 1801, 155; in 1831, 178. Poor rates, in 1838, £141 19s.

CORTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Mutford and Lothingland, county of Suffolk; 3 miles north of Lowestoft. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £10; returned at £138 16s. 9d.; gross income £121. Tithes commuted in 1834. Rent charge of rectorial, £405; of vicarial, £120. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1829, £17 1s. 6d., including about £14 10s. rent of poor's allotment. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,430. Houses 69. A. P. £1,594. Pop., in 1801, 241; in 1831, 410. Poor rates, in 1838, £88 4s.

CORTON, or CORINGTON, a tything in the parish of Boyton, county of Wilts; ½ miles south-east by east of Warminster. Returns with the parish.

CORTON-DENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Horethorne, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 4 miles north of Sherborne. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £13 9s. 4½d.; gross income £392. Patron, in 1835, E. B. Portman, Esq. Charities, in 1823, £2 12s. per annum, besides a small fund then yielding no income. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,140. Houses 64. A. P. 2,534. Pop., in 1801, 377; in 1831, 494. Poor rates, in 1838, £289 7s.

CORVE. See SALOP.

CORWEN, a parish, partly in the hund. of Eder-nion, union of Corwen, county of Merioneth, and partly in the hund. of Isaled, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 1½ miles east-north-east of Bala, on the southern bank of the Dee, on the parliamentary road from Shrewsbury to Holyhead. It includes the sea-port of Barmouth, and the extra parochial liberty of Gwern-Howel. Living, a rectory and vicarage in the dio. of St. Asaph's; rated, the rectory, at £15 13s.; the vicarage, at £7 1s. 3d.; gross income £376. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of rectorial, £389 18s. 3d.; of vicarial, £389 18s. 3d. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. The Calvinistic Methodists have a place of worship here, and there is a daily school, with a small endowment, and 7 alms-houses, one of which, named the College, was endowed with property producing, in 1837, annual rents amounting to £107 12s. for behoof of 6 widows of beneficed clergymen of the church of England; but there were then no widows in the college, the last having died in 1833. The income, however, was distributed to the proper objects of the charity as out-pensioners. The other 6 alms-houses were occupied by paupers receiving parochial relief. Other charities connected with this parish, in 1837, produced £56 15s., distributed to poor in alms and clothing. Corwen is a neat small town, with an excellent inn, and a house of correction or bridge-well, inhabited by a shoemaker, who is keeper, and the few prisoners usually here, who are employed in a back court breaking stones for the public road. There are 4 cells in this small house. This place is remarkable as the spot where Owen Glendower, the prince of North Wales, who had a palace here, repelled the invasion of Henry II. in 1165. There is an ancient British fort in this vicinity. The market-days are Tuesday and Friday, and there are five annual fairs, March 12th, May 24th, July 14th, October 7th, and December 20th. Houses 409. A. P. £6,884. Pop., in 1801, 1,369; in 1831, 2,053. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,111 7s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Corwen, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 150 persons. The Corwen poor-law union comprehends 15 parishes, with a population returned in 1831 at 14,034. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union was £4,901. Expenditure in 1838, £3,814.

CORYTON, a parish in the hund. of Lifton, union of Tavistock, county of Devon; 6½ miles north-west of Tavistock, on the northern bank of the river Lyd. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8 13s. 9d.; gross income £218. Patrons, in 1835, R. W. & T. Newman. Charities, in 1820, £2 10s. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,710. Houses 57. A. P. £1,401. Pop., in 1801, 154; in 1831, 314. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 5s.

COSBY WITH LITTLE THORPE, a parish in the hund. of Guthlaxton, union of Blaby, county of Leicester; 7 miles south-south-west of Leicester, on a branch of the river Sour, and near the Midland Counties railway. Living, a discharged vicarage formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £4 15s.; returned at £93; gross income £138. Certain tithes commuted in 1767. Patron, in 1835, J. Pares, Esq. Charities, in 1837, £5 14s. 6d. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,550. Houses 197. A. P. £3,591. Pop., in 1801, 555; in 1831, 1,009. Poor rates, in 1838, £471 19s.

COSFORD HUNDRED, in the county of Suffolk. Area 30,640 acres. Houses 1,917. Pop., in 1831, 10,489. A workhouse has been erected in this hundred for the union of Cosford, by the poor-law commissioners. The Cosford poor-law union comprehends 28 parishes, embracing an area of 80 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 17,900. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £19,223. Expenditure in 1838, £7,122.

COSFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Newbold-upon-Avon, county of Warwick; 3 miles north of Rugby, intersected by the Midland Counties railway to Leicester. Acreage with the parish. Houses 8. A. P. £834. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 63. Poor rates, in 1838, £14 19s.

COSGROVE or COVESGRAVE, a parish in the hund. of Cleley, union of Pottersbury, county of Northampton; 1½ mile north of Stony-Stratford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £14 11s. 3d.; gross income £426. Tithes of township and liberties commuted in 1767. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. H. L. Mansell. This parish possesses two daily schools. Acres 1,760. Houses 121. A. P. £3,662. Pop., in 1801, 505; in 1831, 624. Poor rates, in 1838, £286 3s.

COSHESTON, a parish in the hund. of Castle-Martin, union and county of Pembroke, South Wales; 2½ miles north-north-east of Pembroke. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. David; returned at £130; gross income £181. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Owen, Bart. Charities, in 1833, £30 per annum, out of Dr. Jones's charity, in the parish of St. David's, distributed to paupers. There are two daily, and 1 Sunday National, schools here. Houses 99. A. P. £1,418. Pop., in 1801, 401; in 1831, 678. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 4s.

COSMUS (ST.) AND DAMIAN. See BLEANE. COSSAL, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Broxtow, union of Basford, county of Nottingham; 6 miles west by north of Nottingham.

Living, a curacy united to the rectory of Woollaton. Willoughby's hospital in this parish consists of 8 tenements inhabited by alms people, and is endowed for their behoof, and for the apprenticement of poor children, with an income, amounting, in 1828, to £130, which however was partly exhausted in payment of repairs on hospital. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 720. Houses 66. A. P. £1,322. Pop., in 1801, 353; in 1831, 341. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 5s.

COSSINGTON, a parish in the hund. of East Goscote, union of Barrow-upon-Sour, county of Leicester; 2 miles south-east of Mount-Sorrel, intersected by the Melton canal, and bounded on the west by the river Sour, and on the south by the Wreak. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £17 7s. 6d.; gross income £537. Tithes commuted in 1777. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Babington. Charities, in 1837, £109 10s. 6d., about £55 of which is carried to general parish account, and the remainder principally distributed to poor, in alms, clothing, and food, and for education of their children. There are a daily and an infant school here. Acres 1,810. Houses 62. A. P. £3,473. Pop., in 1801, 298; in 1831, 283. Poor rates, in 1838, £169 3s.

COSSINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Whitley, union of Bridgewater, county of Somerset; 4 miles north-east of Bridgewater. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £13 10s.; gross income £267. Patrons, in 1835, the executors of the Rev. T. Hobbs. The advowson of this rectory was advertised for sale by auction in 1835. Charities, in 1823, about £12 per annum. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,400. Houses 47. A. P. £3,259. Pop., in 1801, 237; in 1831, 280. Poor rates, in 1838, £67 16s.

COSTESSY, or COSSEY, a parish in the hund. and union of Forehoe, county of Norfolk; 4½ miles north-west by west of Norwich, on the northern bank of the Yare. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; valued at £40, returned at £100; no return. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Norwich. Charities, in 1834, £3 12s. per annum. There is a Catholic chapel here. There are also 2 Sunday and daily National, and 6 daily schools, one of which is supported by the Duke of Sutherland, and one connected with the British and Foreign School society, attended by 54 scholars. Acres 3,150. Houses 136. A. P. £3,191. Pop., in 1801, 604; in 1831, 1,098. Poor rates, in 1838, £455 9s.

COSTOCK, or CORTLINGSTOCK, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Rushcliffe, union of Loughborough, county of Nottingham; 8½ miles south of Nottingham, on a branch of the Sour. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 18s. 4d.; gross income £418. Tithes commuted in 1760. Patron, in 1835, W. Beetham. This parish has an interest in Sir Thomas Parkyer's charity to the parish of Bunby-with-Bradmore, for apprenticement of poor children, &c. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,320. Houses 86. A. P. £1,740. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 412. Poor rates, in 1838, £126 2s.

COSTON, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; 7 miles east-north-east of Melton-Mowbray, on a branch of the Wreak. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £16 6s. 3d.; gross income £351. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,680. Houses

31. A. P. £2,959. Pop., in 1801, 150; in 1831, 170. Poor rates, in 1838, £122 10s.

COSTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Forehoe, county of Norfolk; 4½ miles north-west of Wymondham, on the Blackwater river. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; returned at £100; annexed to the archdeaconry of Norfolk. Acres 300. Houses 7. A. P. £355. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 64. Poor rates, in 1838, £54 10s.

COTE. See ASTON, Oxford.

COTES, a township in the parish of Eccleshall, county of Stafford; 7 miles north-west by west of Stafford. Acres 820. Houses 56. Pop., in 1811, 196; in 1831, 261. Other returns with the parish.

COTES DE VAL, a hamlet in the parish of Kimcote, county of Leicester. House 1. Pop., in 1821, 7; in 1831, 6. Other returns with the parish.

COTGRAVE, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Bingham, union of Bingham, county of Nottingham; 5½ miles south-east by east of Nottingham, close on the Grantham canal. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; consisting of two portions, rated, the one at £10 7s. 3½d., the other at £9 14s. 9½d.; gross income £709. Tithes commuted in 1790. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Manvers. Charities, in 1828, £2 10s. per annum. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 3,350. Houses 160. A. P. £5,341. Pop., in 1801, 596; in 1831, 842. Poor rates, in 1838, £246 1s.

COTHAM, a hamlet in the parish of Keelby, county of Lincoln; 9 miles west-west by north of Great Grimsby. In former times a Cistercian nunnery existed here.

COTHAM, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Newark, union of Newark, county of Nottingham; 4 miles south of Newark, on the eastern bank of the Devon. Living, a donative curacy, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 18s.; gross income £35. Patron, the Duke of Portland. Acres 1,210. Houses 11. A. P. £1,154. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 74. Poor rates, in 1838, £61 2s.

COTHELSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Taunton and Taunton-Dean, union of Taunton, county of Somerset; 6½ miles north-north-west of Taunton. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; returned at £70; gross income £58. Patron, the vicar of Kingstone. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,240. Houses 15. A. P. £1,546. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 120. Poor rates, in 1838, £60 19s.

COTHERIDGE, or COTHRIDGE, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Doddingtree, union of Martley, county of Worcester; 4 miles west of Worcester. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £5 16s. 8d., returned at £40; no return. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. R. Berkeley. Charities, in 1830, £8 per annum. Acres 1,900. Houses 44. A. P. £2,751. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 276. Poor rates, in 1838, £188 10s.

COTHERSTON, a township in the parish of Romald-Kirk, north riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles north-west of Barnard Castle, on the river Tees. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £97 15s. 6d. There is an Independent chapel here; the church was formed in 1746. There are also 2 daily schools, one of which is a National school. Here are the ruins of an old castle. Acres 8,120. Houses 123. A. P. £9,129. Pop., in 1801, 636; in 1831, 631. Poor rates, in 1838, £141.

COTHY (THE). See CARMARTHENSHIRE.

COTLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Colyton, union of Honiton, county of Devon; 3 miles north-east by east of Honiton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £9; gross income £252. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. William Michell. Charities, in 1820, £14 10s. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,040. Houses 47. A. P. £1,838. Pop., in 1801, 214; in 1831, 240. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 18s.

COTNESS, a township in the parish of Howden, east riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-east of Howden. There is an infant school here. Acres 240. Houses 6. A. P. £1,060. Pop., in 1801, 27; in 1831, 29. Poor rates, in 1838, £21 11s.

COTON, a parish in the hund. of Wetherley, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 3 miles west by north of Cambridge. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £5 12s. 11d.; gross income £240. Tithes commuted in 1799. Patrons, the master and fellows of Catherine hall, Cambridge. Church and town estate; income, in 1837, £30. Other charities £7 6s. 8d. per annum. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,130. Houses 30. A. P. £1,072. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 225. Poor rates, in 1838, £76 6s.

COTON. See CROFREDY.

COTON, a township in the parish of Hanbury, county of Stafford; 5½ miles south-east by east of Uttoxeter, on the southern bank of the Dove. Acres 770. Houses 6. Pop., in 1811, 69; in 1831, 56. Other returns with the parish.

COTON. See HORTON-WITH-COTON.

COTON-IN-THE-ELMS, a township in the parish of Lullington, county of Derby; 5 miles south-west of Burton in Staffordshire. There is a daily school here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 58. A. P. £2,255. Pop., in 1801, 248; in 1831, 264. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 15s.

COTON-CLAY. See COATON-CLAY.

COTTENHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 6½ miles north of Cambridge. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £36 15s.; gross income £980. Patron, the bishop of Ely. The Baptists have two churches here; one of which was formed in 1780. One dissenting chapel is licensed under the new marriage act. Catherine Pepys, in 1703, founded and endowed a free school here, which was afterwards further endowed. Income, in 1837, about £48; wherewith 26 children were instructed in the usual branches of education. In 1834 a school-house for this charity was built out of funds belonging to Moreton's charity; a moiety of the annual proceeds of which, amounting, in 1837, to £148 10s., was applicable to various charitable purposes, in the parish of Cottenham. The church and causeway estate, in 1837, produced annual revenues of £140. Other charities £88 13s. 3d., chiefly expended in donations of £1 to £10 amongst deserving poor, and in apprenticing poor children. There are 10 daily schools here. This is among the most celebrated parishes in England for the produce of the dairy, and especially for a new kind of cheese called the Cottenham cheese. The excellency of the latter is ascribed to the nature of the rich pasture-lands along the banks of the Ouse, and to the mode in which the dairies are managed. Cottenham is noted in history as the place to which, in 1109, Geoffrey, abbot of Crowland, sent his monks, who appear first to have established courses of lectures which resulted in a regular system of academical education at Cambridge. This was the birth-place of Archbishop Tension, and of Pepys, Lord-chancellor Cottenham. Acres 7,510. Houses 229. A. P. £7,767. Pop., in 1801, 1,088; in 1831, 1,635. Poor rates, in 1838, £509 17s.

COTTERED, a parish in the hund. of Odsey, union of Buntingford, county of Hertford; 2½ miles west of Buntingford. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £20 8s. 6½d.; gross income £380. Tithes commuted in 1806. Patron, in 1835, R. F. Forester. This parish possesses 2 day and Sunday schools, built in 1829 by Mr. H. Soames, and endowed with £40 per annum. Other charities, in 1834, £72 9s. 4d., of which £56 11s. 2d. were applied to parochial purposes, and residue expended for behoof of poor in clothing, &c. Acres 1,760. Houses 94. A. P. £2,480. Pop., in 1801, 339; in 1831, 436. Poor rates, in 1838, £159 14s.

COTTERSTOCK, a parish in the hund. of Wilbybrook, union of Oundle, county of Northampton; 2 miles north-north-east of Oundle, on the river Nen. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Glapthorne, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £37 19s., returned at £100; gross income £92. Tithes commuted in 1813. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Westmoreland. The poor of this parish have an interest in Bellamy's charity for the apprenticeship of children, for the maintenance of 2 poor scholars at Cambridge; and the residue for the relief of the poor; annual rent charge of this charity, £28, of which £8 are intended for the scholarships. There is a daily school here. It was at Cotterstock-hall, in this parish, belonging to his friend Mr. Norton, that the poet Dryden composed his Fables, and spent the two last summers of his life. Tessellated pavements and other Roman antiquities have been found here. Acres 690. Houses 37. A. P. £1,199. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 161. Poor rates, in 1838, £30 9s.

COTTESBATCH, a parish in the hund. of Guthlaxton, union of Lutterworth, county of Leicester; 1½ mile south-south-west of Lutterworth. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; returned at £118 7s. 4d.; gross income £112. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Marriott. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,230. Houses 20. A. P. £2,321. Pop., in 1801, 91; in 1831, 108. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 9s.

COTTESBROOK, a parish in the hund. of Guilsborough, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 9½ miles north-north-west of Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £26 0s. 10d.; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Langham, Bart. A hospital was established here in 1655 by John Langham, Esq., for 8 poor people,—2 to be widowers, and called brothers, and 6 to be women, and called sisters. Revenues in 1825, £60 per annum, expended on the inhabitants of the hospital, which contains 8 apartments and a garden. Other charities, £7 2s. 4d. per annum. There are 2 small daily schools in this parish. Acres 3,860. Houses 59. A. P. £5,810. Pop., in 1801, 290; in 1831, 226. Poor rates, in 1838, £259 16s.

COTTESFORD, a parish in the hund. of Ploughley, union of Bicester, county of Oxford; 6 miles north of Bicester. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £357. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Eton college. Acres 1,520. Houses 30. A. P. £1,374. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 163. Poor rates, in 1838, £72 7s.

COTTESLOE HUNDRED, in the county of Buckingham. It lies between the hundreds of Newport and Ashenden, on the borders of Bedfordshire. Area 70,010 acres. Houses 3,283. Pop., in 1831, 17,435.

COTTESMORE, a parish in the hund. of Alstoe, union of Oakham, county of Rutland; 4½ miles north-north-east of Oakham. It includes the hamlet of Barrow. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Barrow, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £25 16s. 3d.; gross income £928; nett income £893. Tithes commuted in 1799–1800. Patron, in 1835, Sir Gerard Noel, Bart. Charities, in 1820, £51 10s., inclusive of a participative interest, to the extent of £16 per annum, in Lady Anne Harrington's general charities to this county. There are 2 daily schools here, and a day and Sunday National school. Acres 2,420. Houses 121. A. P. £4,684. Pop., in 1801, 545; in 1831, 631. Poor rates, in 1838, £94 12s.

COTTINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 2 miles south-west of Rockingham, south of the river Welland. It includes the township of Middleton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £23 7s. 3½d.; gross income £478. Patrons, the principal and fellows of Brazen-nose college, Oxford. There are 1 Sunday and daily National, and 8 daily schools here, 2 of which have small endowments. Other charities, in 1830, £32 15s. 6d. per annum. Acres 3,220. Houses 186. A. P. £2,426. Pop., in 1801, 882; in 1831, 903. Poor rates, in 1838, £585 1s.

COTTINGHAM, a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Sculcoates, east riding of Yorkshire; 4½ miles north-west of Kingston-upon-Hull. It contains part of Wilerby township. Living, a vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Skidby, in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; valued at £42, returned at £102; gross income £124. Tithes commuted in 1791. Patron, the bishop of Chester as impropiator of the rectory of Cottingham. The Independents have a church here, formed about 1690. There are 2 Sunday and daily National, and 8 daily schools in this parish, 2 of which have endowments. Other charities, in 1822, £28 10s. 6d. Acres 8,530. Houses 550. A. P. £24,261. Pop., in 1801, 1,927; in 1831, 2,575. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,815.

COTTINGWITH (EAST), a township in the parish of Aughton, east riding of Yorkshire; 2½ miles north of Aughton; which see. There are 4 daily schools in this township. Acres 1,140. Houses 67. A. P. £1,249. Pop., in 1801, 250; in 1831, 310. Poor rates, in 1838, £24 16s.

COTTINGWITH. See THORGBY WITH COTTINGWITH.

COTTLES, an extra-parochial liberty with Little Chalfield; 3½ miles west of Melksham.

COTTON. See ALLENDALE.

COTTON, a township in the parish of Sandbach, co.-palatine of Chester; 3 miles east by north of Middlewich, on the southern bank of the river Dane. Acres 350. Houses 15. A. P. £498. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1838, £40 1s.

COTTON, a township in the parish of Wem, county of Salop; 7½ miles east of Wem, on the western bank of the Tern. Houses 93. Pop., in 1821, 458; in 1831, 438. Other returns with the parish.

COTTON, a township in the parish of Alveton, county of Stafford; 5½ miles north-east of Chedale, in the vicinity of the Uttoxeter canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry; gross income £44. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Gilbert. Acreage with the parish. Houses 84. A. P. £1,719. Pop., in 1801, 302; in 1831, 471. Poor rates, in 1838, £253 13s.

COTTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Hartismere, county of Suffolk; 2 miles west-northwest of Mendlesham. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £15 10s. 2½d.; gross income £367. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. P. Eade. Charities, in 1829, £8 per annum. Acres 1,820. Houses 70. A. P. £425. Pop., in 1801, 441; in 1831, 585. Poor rates, in 1838, £434 11s.

COTTON, or COTRAM, a township in the parish of Langtoft, east riding of Yorkshire; 5½ miles north-north-west of Great Driffield. Living, a curacy, a peculiar of the prebendary of Langtoft. Acres 2,760. Houses 1. A. P. £1,417. Pop., in 1801, 16; in 1831, 25.

COTTON, a township in the parish of Hovingham, north riding of Yorkshire; 7½ miles south-south-east of Helmsley. Acres 930. Houses 25. A. P. £918. Pop., in 1801, 98; in 1831, 131. Poor rates, in 1838, £22 12s.

COTTON-ABBOTS, a township in the parish of Christleton, co.-palatine of Chester; 4 miles east of Chester; in the vicinity of the Chester and Crewe line of railway. Acres 290. Houses 2. A. P. £540. Pop., in 1801, 21; in 1831, 11. Poor rates, in 1838, £25 14s.

COTTON-EDMUND'S, a township in the parish of Christleton, co.-palatine of Chester; 4½ miles east-south-east of Chester. Acres 430. Houses 13. A. P. £836. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1838, £33 4s.

COTTON-END, a hamlet in the parish of Cardington, county of Bedford; 3½ miles south-east of Bedford, on the post road. There is a Baptist church here.

COUGHALL, or CONGHALL, a township in the parish of Backford, co.-palatine of Chester; 3 miles north of Chester. Acres 340. Houses 2. A. P. £594. Pop., in 1801, 17; in 1831, 26. Poor rates, in 1838, £19 14s.

COUGHTON, a parish in the Alcester division of the hund. of Barlicbway, union of Alcester, county of Warwick; 2 miles north-north-west of Alcester, on the eastern bank of the Arrow. It includes the hamlet of Sambourne. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £9 10s. 7½d., returned at £104; gross income £161. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, £42 16s. 1d.; of impropriated, £5 14s. 8d. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Bowles, Esq., impropiator. Charities, in 1825, £32 6s. per annum, inclusive of £15 12s., more particularly connected with the township of Sambourne. The seat of Sir Charles Throckmorton, which has been occupied for many ages by branches of the same family, has been much admired for its antiquity, and the delightful view which it commands of the windings of the Arrow, and of the surrounding country. There are 4 daily schools in this parish. Acres 3,070. Houses 187. A. P. £4,653. Pop., in 1801, 709; in 1831, 1,010. Poor rates, in 1838, £291 9s.

COULDSNOUTH AND THOMPSON'S WALLS, a township in the parish of Kirknewton, county of Northumberland; 7½ miles west-north-west of Wooler; east of the river Beaumont. Acreage with the parish. Houses 7. A. P. £643. Pop., in 1801, 32; in 1831, 41. Poor rates, in 1838, £3 19s.

COULSDON, a parish in the hund. of Wallington, union of Croydon, county of Surrey; 5 miles south-south-west of Croydon, near the Croydon line of railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £21 16s. 5½d.; gross income £716. Patron, the Archbishop of Canterbury. Charities, in 1824, £4 2s. 8d. per annum. There is a daily and a Sunday and daily National school here. Acres 3,930. Houses 90. A. P.

£3,837. Pop., in 1801, 420; in 1831, 630. Poor rates, in 1838, £689 12s.

COULSTON (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Whorwelsdown, union of Westbury and Whorwelsdown, county of Wilts; 5½ miles east-north-east of Westbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £7 14s. 2d.; returned at £140; gross income £174. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 1,080. Houses 12. A. P. £3,618. Pop., in 1801, 90; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1838, £27 18s.

COULSTON (WEST) AND BAYNTUN. See EDINGTON.

COULTON, a parish in the hund. of Lonsdale, union of Ulverstone, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5 miles north-north-east of Ulverstone. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £18 6s. 8d., returned at £88 0s. 2½d.; gross income £84. Every land-owner who contributes to the minister's stipend has his share of the patronage. There are three chapels-of-ease in this parish, viz. at Fenthwaite, Haverthwaite, and Morland, besides a meeting-house belonging to the Society of Friends. Charities, in 1819, exclusive of school endowment, £9 6s. per annum, besides £10 more particularly connected with Fenthwaite. This parish possesses 4 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £62 per annum. Acres, including the chapelry of Rusland, East and West Coultons, Haverthwaite, Fenthwaite, and Nibthwaite, 13,331. Houses 313. A. P. £1,726. Pop., in 1801, 1,516; in 1831, 1,786. Poor rates, in 1838, £764 12s.

COUND, a parish in the hund. of Condoover, union of Atcham, county of Salop; 5 miles north-west of Much Wenlock. It includes the chapelry of Cressage. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Cressage, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield, rated at £33; gross income £1,029; nett income £906. Tithes of Cound manor commuted in 1815. Patron, in 1835, J. C. Pelham, Esq. Charities, in 1830, £12 8s. 8d. per annum. There are a daily and a boarding school here. Acres 5,890. Houses 147. A. P. £5,972. Pop., in 1801, 714; in 1831, 680. Poor rates, in 1838, £260 9s.

COUNDON, a township in the parish of St. Andrew-Auckland, co.-palatine of Durham; 2 miles east-south-east of Bishop-Auckland. There are a Sunday and daily National, and 3 daily schools here. Acres 680. Houses 84. A. P. £1,076. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 475. Poor rates, in 1838, £97 16s.

COUNDON-GRANGE, a township in the parish of St. Andrew-Auckland, co.-palatine of Durham; 1½ mile east-south-east of Bishop-Auckland, in the vicinity of the Wearhead railway. Acres 630. Houses 9. A. P. £637. Pop., in 1801, 25; in 1831, 44. Poor rates, in 1838, £12 8s.

COUNDON, a hamlet in the parish of Holy Trinity, county of Warwick. Acres 880. Houses 43. A. P. £2,043. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 192. Poor rates, in 1838, £58 16s.

COUNTESTHORPE, a chapelry in the parish of Blaby, county of Leicester; 6 miles south of Leicester, on a branch of the river Soar. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Blaby. Tithes commuted in 1776. The only charity connected with this parish, consists of a bequest by the Rev. Edward Stokes, in 1753, of a parlour, a coal house, and another appendage, to the rector of Blaby and Countesthorpe, for the time being,—a chamber, a coal house, &c. to a schoolmistress for teaching poor children, and to the parish officers and inhabitants of Countesthorpe, to transact public business in; with a stable to the curate, the rector, and the schoolmistress, all in common; certain articles of furniture, iron, brass, wood, and china, were added to this rather curious and heterogeneous bequest; besides four perches of land, called the Lord's Garden. The stable is now used by the master as a school-house, and the parlour as a lumber room. The 'lord's garden' is trodden down by public feet, and the other items have ceased to exist. There are six daily schools in this chapelry. Acres 1,920. Houses 167. A. P. £2,291. Pop., in 1801, 540; in 1831, 839. Poor rates, in 1838, £461 11s.

COUNTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of Bytham-Castle, county of Lincoln; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Corby, on the river Glen. Acres 1,450. Houses 10. A. P. £989. Pop., in 1801, 35; in 1831, 65. Poor rates, in 1838, £57 16s.

COUNTISBURY, a parish in the hund. of Sherwill, union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; $15\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-east by north of Ilfordcombe, and 11 north-east of Combe-Martin, on the Bristol channel. Living, a curacy conjoined with the vicarage of LINTON: which see. Tithes commuted in 1839: rent charge £105. Acres 3,290. Houses 31. A. P. £639. Pop., in 1801, 120; in 1831, 187. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 9s.

COUPE-LENCH-NEWHALLHEY, AND HALLCARR, a township in the parish of Bury, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4 miles south-south-east of Haslington, east of the river Irwell. Acres 1,260. Houses 263. Pop., in 1801, 676; in 1831, 1,519. Poor rates, in 1838, £250 11s.

COUPLAND, a township in the parish of Kirknewton, Northumberland, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Wooler; on the northern bank of the river Glen. Acreage with the parish. Houses 16. A. P. £1,290. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 100. Poor rates, in 1838, £37 16s.

COURTEENHALL, a parish in the hund. of Wymerley, union of Hardington, county of Northampton; 5 miles south of Northampton, in the vicinity of the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12 10s. 10d.; gross income £312. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school here, supported by endowment, and free to males from any parish within the distance of four miles from Courteenhall. Acres 1,510. Houses 26. A. P. £2,363. Pop., in 1801, 139; in 1831, 120. Poor rates, in 1838, £103 13s.

COVE, a tithing in the parish of Yately, county of Southampton; 9 miles east-north-east of Odiham; intersected by the London and Southampton railway. There is a daily school here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 88. A. P. £1,194. Pop., in 1801, 357; in 1831, 443. Poor rates, in 1838, £179 3s.

COVE-HYTHER, or NORTH HALES, a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Southwold, on the post road. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Benacre. Charities, in 1829, £27 12s. 6d. per annum. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 1,900. Houses 22. A. P. £808. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 182. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 8s.

COVE (NORTH), a parish in the hund. and union of Wangford, county of Suffolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Beccles, south of the river Waveney. Living, a discharged rectory with that of Willingham, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £10; gross income £353. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1829, £4 10s. per annum. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is a National school. Acres 1,910. Houses 47. A. P. £1,074. Pop., in 1801, 178; in 1831, 183. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 3s.

COVE (SOUTH), a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Southwold. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich, rated at £6 2s. 11d.; gross income £275. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. S. Gooch. Charities, in 1829, £13 13s. 4d. Acres 1,520. Houses 25. A. P. £814. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 183. Poor rates, in 1838, £136 9s.

COVEN. See BREWOD.

COVENEY, a parish and township in the south division of the hund. of Witchford, union of Ely, county of Cambridge; 4 miles west-north-west of Ely. It includes the chapelry of Mania. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Mania, in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £5; gross income £870. Patron, in 1835, Lord Rokeby. Charities connected with the chapelry of Mania, in 1837, £45 6s. per annum; besides 6 tenements, mud and stud, inhabited by poor families rent free. There is a day National school here. Acres 8,420. Houses 204. A. P. £9,670. Pop., in 1801, 712; in 1831, 1,170. Poor rates, in 1838, £246 9s.

COVENHAM-ST.-BARTHOLOMEW, a parish in the wapentake of Ludborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 5 miles north-north-east of Louth. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £17 12s. 8d.; gross income £299. Tithes commuted in 1793. Patron, in 1835, C. D. Holland. There are two daily schools here. Acres 1,340. Houses 44. A. P. £1,424. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 222. Poor rates, in 1838, £112 6s.

COVENHAM-ST.-MARY, a parish in the wapentake of Ludborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; 7 miles west of Saltfleet. Living, a discharged rectory, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £10; gross income £200. Tithes commuted in 1793. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school here. Acres 950. Houses 25. A. P. £1,032. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 163. Poor rates, in 1838, £78 18s.

COVENTRY,

A city and county of itself, locally situated in the county of Warwick; 9 miles north-north-east of Warwick; 17 east by south of Birmingham; and 91 north-north-west of London; nearly in the centre of England, equidistant from its four principal ports, London, Liverpool, Hull, and Bristol, with all of which it is connected by continuous lines of railway, either in progress or completed. The London and Birmingham railway passes within a short distance of the city. The station is one of the best on the line for passengers and goods. A railway is in contemplation between Coventry and Leamington Priors, with a branch to Warwick. Its local advantages are also multiplied by its almost universal provincial communication through a most extensive inland navigation by canals, beginning with the Coventry canal, on the one hand, and its junction with the Birmingham and Grand Trunk canals, &c. and, on the other, with the Oxford canal, and its connection with the Wilts and Berks canal, &c. One of the principal roads between London and Birmingham passes through this city. The following quotation from Lambard, the celebrated antiquarian, who lived in the 16th century, presents rather a curious contrast with the present state of things here: "COVENTRY. A towne standinge (sayeth Jovius) in umbilico Insulæ, in the midst of this realme, and therefore accompted the cheif sea of al Mercia, which was the kingdome of middle Inland.—It hath bene very populous, but the number is much abated, by reason that the art of capping (whereby it grew) is fayled; yet notwithstanding it is wel stoared, considering eyther the disadvantage of the situation (wanting water) or the general decay of al suche townes as lyved by arts, London reserved." Coventry is pleasantly situated on a gentle declivity, bounded for a short distance on the north-east by the Sherbourne river, and the Radford brook, which, running from north to south, unites its waters with the Sherbourne, in the middle of the town. It has all the appearance of considerable antiquity. Leland, describing it, in the reign of Henry VIII., says, "The town of Coventry by west is set on a low ground, but by east it somewhat condescendeth. It was begun to be walled 1st Edward II., and has 6 gates, and many fair towers. It is but late ago since the walls were finished. There be many fair streets, well builded with timber. There be divers fair suburbs without the walls. The king hath a palace here, now somewhat in ruin. The town rose by making cloth and cappes, which, now decaying, the glory of the city also decayeth." The most striking feature in the approach to Coventry, is the fine effect of its beautiful tapering spires. The streets are generally narrow, and are darkened and almost closed over by high projecting richly ornamented gable ends and upper stories. Many of them, however, have been replaced by modern ones; and, altogether, the citizens have great merit in recent improvements, which were called for by the rising prosperity and consequence of the town. The streets are lighted at night with gas, and part of them paved with flag stones. Acres, of the city and suburbs, 4,920. Houses 5,454. A. P. £57,770. Pop., in 1801, 16,034; in 1831, 27,070, of whom 4,913 families were employed in manufactures, trade, &c., and 204 in agriculture. The increase of population is chiefly attributable to the extension of trade and manufactures in and around the city. Poor rates, in 1838, £7,287 17s. The county of this city includes an area of about 7 miles in length, and 20 in circumference, containing 15,070 acres, and 8 parishes, or parts of parishes—exclusive of those within the limits of the city—namely, Austey, Exhall, Foleshill, Stivichall, Stoke, Wyken, part of St. Michael's, including the hamlets of Keresley and Radford, and part of Sow; containing, in all, exclusive of the city, 19 villages and hamlets; 2,265 houses. A. P. £28,877. Pop., in 1801, 5,724; in 1831, 10,706, of whom 1,606 families were chiefly employed in manufactures, &c., and 362 in agriculture.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Coventry was till recently comprehended, as an archdeaconry, in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, and it even, at various times, took precedence of the bishopric of Lichfield; though, latterly, the titular dignity of the see was Lichfield and Coventry. But, by order of council, of date 22d December, 1836, it was transferred to the diocese of Worcester. There are two parishes and part of a third in the city of Coventry. The livings are: 1st, St. Michael's, a vicarage; rated at £26 15s. 6d.; gross income £496. Patron, the Crown. A part of this parish only is within the limits of the city. The church, not unaptly called the boast of Coventry, is an ancient and splendid Gothic edifice, with a fine tower, about 136 feet high, richly ornamented, and surmounted by a beautiful octagonal tapering spire, 130 feet high. This church was styled by Sir Christopher Wren a masterpiece of architecture. The interior contains nothing of interest. It was erected in 1373-95, at the charge of two brothers, Adam and William Bota, both mayors of Coventry. A chapel—Christ-church—has been erected in this parish by the parliamentary commissioners, at an expense of £9,702; it is a perpetual curacy of the yearly value of £189. Patron, the vicar of St. Michael's. 2d, The Holy Trinity, a vicarage; rated at £10; gross income £397. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The church was a venerable and magnificent pile of building, cruciform, with a beautiful turret spire. But it was taken down and rebuilt, and the spire repaired, in 1832, when a large and curious painting of the resurrection was discovered under the white-wash in the tower. The eastern window was enriched, in 1834, with beautiful stained glass, which, for beauty of design and splendid colouring, is said to be scarcely equalled by any work of the kind in the kingdom. 3d, St. John's, a rectory; returned at £70; gross income £83. The patrons are the mayor and corporation of Coventry. Besides the established churches, there are here places of worship for Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Society of Friends, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The Baptists and 3 other dissenting chapels are licensed under the new marriage act.

Charities and Schools.—The charities of this city are very ancient and numerous as well as largely endowed. The greater part of them have been founded by members of the corporation, who, till 23d February, 1837, when trustees were appointed, had the administration of charity funds to the amount of about £7,200 per annum. The total annual income of charities connected with Coventry, in 1836, was £10,359 2s. 1d. But in some of these, other cities, &c., have an interest, especially Sir Thomas White's charity, income, in 1836, £2,339 15s., intended to be given in loans, by rotation, to 24 freemen, inhabitants of Coventry and four other cities. Bablacke's hospital, for poor and aged men, founded in 1506, possessed, in 1836, an annual income of £1,082 14s. 5d. Bablacke's hospital for the maintenance and education of boys, founded in 1560,—£909 5s. The free grammar-school, founded by John Hales in the reign of Henry VIII.,—£1,070 9s. 10d. Here the celebrated antiquary Dugdale was educated. This school had fallen into disrepute, when the charity commissioners were conducting their investigation. The masters, who shared between them from £700 to £800 a-year, besides other sources of emolument, had but one scholar amongst them, and the seats in the school were covered with blue mould; having evidently not been used for years. The library books had been used to light the fires, and those remaining were mutilated and torn, besides being exposed, in a damp room, into which they had been carelessly thrown, to waste and decay. Since the appointment of trustees, however, a new head master has been elected, and the school has begun to revive. Two fellowships at St. John's college, Oxford, and one at Catherine hall, Cambridge; besides three exhibitions at each university are appropriated to the scholars of this school. These are the principal charities. There are others, including alms-houses, hospitals, charity schools, &c., possessing yearly incomes of from £100 or less to £400 or more; but they are too numerous to be all particularly alluded to; while the relative importance of most of them is too nearly on a par for marked selection.—A self-supporting dispensary was instituted here in 1831, and a general dispensary in 1832. There are 14 daily, and 3 day and Sunday schools, here, several of which are endowed. There are amongst them 3 infant schools; an endowed Lancasterian school; a school connected with the British and Foreign School society, attended by 320 scholars; and 5 day and Sunday National schools.

Government, &c.—A charter of freedom and exemption from toll is said to have been granted by Leofric, Earl of Mercia, the first lord of the city, as early as the reign of Edward the Confessor. By charter from Edward III., the government was vested in a mayor and two bailiffs, elected by the inhabitants. Edward IV. took away the mayor's sword, and disfranchised the corporation, who subsequently paid a fine of 500 merks for its renewal. By charter from Henry VI., in 1451, the charter of Edward III. was confirmed as to the election of the corporate body, and the city was conjoined with adjacent villages under a separate jurisdiction, to form a distinct county, of which the bailiffs of the city should be sheriffs, and the same coroner preside over both. By this very important charter, and amongst other valuable rights and privileges with which Henry honoured it, it was decreed that all the inhabitants of the city should be "free from toll, passage, pontage, murage, and pavage, for all their goods and merchandise throughout England and Ireland." By charter of James I., which was in force till the passing of the municipal reform act, the constitution of the borough was entirely changed. The government was vested in a select and self-appointed body, consisting of a mayor, 10 aldermen, who were justices of the peace within the city and its county, and presided over the 10 wards, into which it was divided; a body termed the grand council, and an indefinite body of burgesses or freemen. The jurisdiction extended over the city and county, and to all cases short of treason; but it latterly became the custom to remit all capital cases to the circuit judges of assize. Corporate rights and privileges could be acquired only within the city and suburbs of Coventry. There were fraternities or incorporate trading companies in the city, admission into which could be obtained only by a servitude of 7 years within these limits. They do not appear, however, to have been connected with the municipal corporation, and, in modern times, had in no way interfered with the trade of the town; except that all persons, not freemen, were compelled to purchase the freedom in order to carry on trade as victuallers. The fine imposed was £10. Among the privileges of freemen, there is a singular one of depasturing cattle upon a tract of 3,000 acres of land from Lammas to Candlemas, hence called "Lammas grounds." Under the municipal act, the city and county is divided into 6 wards; and is governed by 12 aldermen and 36 councillors under the style of mayor, bailiffs, and commonalty of the city of Coventry. The jurisdiction of this corporate body is co-extensive with that of the last. Previous to the passing of the Reform act, the freemen by servitude possessed the exclusive right of voting for members. The city returns 2 members to parliament. The sheriff is the returning officer. The parliamentary borough has never extended beyond the city and suburbs. The inhabitants of the outlying parishes of the county have never had any share in the return of members for Coventry on the one hand; and, on the other, as this district forms no part of the county of Warwick, they have been excluded from voting for the members for the county at large. The number of freeholders resident in the city, in 1831, was 640; in the outlying parishes of the county, and who had no vote, 288. There were upwards of 3,000 freemen electors before the passing of the Reform bill. The greatest number of electors polled, for 30 years previous to 1831, was 2,763. The number of electors registered for 1836 was 3,662, of whom only 567 were newly privileged electors. The number actually polled at the election of 1837, was 3,323. Coventry has had a commission of the peace granted, and a court of quarter-sessions and a recorder appointed. In the court of record for the borough, debts of any amount are sued for. It assimilates its practice, however, to the superior courts. The jurisdiction extends over the whole county. A county court, held by the sheriffs for the recovery of debts under 40s., the fees of which were extremely low, had, nevertheless, fallen into disuse in 1835. There are several other courts besides these. The city and suburbs are watched, lighted, and paved under a local act, 30 Geo. III. c. 77. There are 35 commissioners, including the mayor, ex officio. The police force consists of a chief constable, a body of ordinary constables, from 60 to 80 in number, and a night watch, consisting of 10 persons. Special constables are also occasionally sworn in. It was stated to the municipal commissioners that, except at the elections of members of parliament, which, in this city, have frequently been of a most tumultuous and violent character, the inhabitants were remarkably peaceable and well conducted, and that the city had been frequently complimented by the judges of assize on the paucity of offences committed in it. There is a jail belonging to the city, and a house of correction united with it. The jail has been recently rebuilt, at an expense of £16,009 5s. It was opened in 1880. It is spacious, healthy, and well-regulated, and is superior to the generality of borough prisons. It consists of 86 cells, with airing-yards, and 9 day-rooms. A tread-mill is attached, the power of which is rendered available in grinding beans and oats. The number of prisoners, in 1834, was 280. The county-hall is a modern structure, erected, in 1784, upon the site of the ancient guild hall of the city. The barracks where Mary Queen of Scots was detained prisoner in 1566, are capable of containing two full troops of cavalry, and are spaciouly built. The barrack-yard contains an hospital, riding-school, &c. St. Mary's hall is a structure of great antiquity, and presents a relic of that munificence which this borough has displayed in bygone days. It was originally erected in the time of Henry VI. as a place of meeting for the Trinity guild; but it is now used for the festivities of the corporation, and occasionally as a theatre. The mayor's parlour is a place of official resort for municipal proceedings. Income of this borough, in 1837, £9,705 8s. 8d.; expenditure £8,329 7s. 2d.

Trade and Manufactures.—Coventry early acquired affluence and reputation as a place of manufacture and trade. Cloth, caps, and bonnets became articles of important traffic about the commencement of the 16th century. It was for the security of its mercantile consequence, that the walls were built, from the proceeds of 27 years' accumulation of tolls made for the purpose; after which, the merchants became enriched, the town flourished, and the costly steeple of St. Michael's was built. In the early part of the 16th century it became famous for the manufacture of a blue thread; but the art was lost before the year 1581, and it was stated by John Hales, to the Protector Somerset, that "trade grew so low, and there was such a dispersion of people from the city, that there were not above 3,000 inhabitants, whereas there had formerly been 15,000." This alleged depression of trade, however, was attributed to the dissolution of the monasteries on which the early prosperity of the city was said to depend. But at least one staple branch of commerce—the woollen and broad cloth manufacture—was now advantageously cultivated, and continued till the destruction of the Turkey trade in 1694. The manufacture of striped and mixed tammies, camblets, callimancoes, and shalloons, flourished during the greater part of the 18th century; but, with a small cotton manufactory which arose on its decline, it is now almost dwindled away, and has been succeeded for about a century by the throwing of silk, and the weaving of silk gauze, broad silks, and ribbons,—a trade introduced here, as well as at Spitalfields, by French refugees. The manufacture of watches, which was not carried on to any great extent till within the last 40 or 50 years, has also so greatly increased, that the number of watches annually made here far exceeds that furnished by the metropolis. Ribbon manufacture was at first confined to but a few hands, but it became gradually almost relinquished to Coventry, and has spread to so very great an extent, that, in 1838, there were in the Coventry trade, 3,504 plain engine looms, only 50 of which were in the rural weaving parishes; including Nuneaton, Bulkington, Bedworth, Chilverscote, and Hartshill, as well as the outlying parishes of the city and county; 2,228 jacquard engine looms, of which 850 were in the rural parishes, and 7,480 single-hand looms, all of which were in the rural parishes, except 129 in the city, making a total of 13,229 looms worked by hand, and nearly all employed. Between 17,000 and 18,000 persons, of whom between 6,000 and 7,000 were in the city and suburbs, and the remainder in the rural parishes, were engaged in the trade. In the city and suburban villages the numbers employed were 3,222 plain engine; 1,182 jacquard; 123 single hand; in all, 4,527 looms; besides 53 power and 4 alabar looms. The total number of looms, in 1831, was 14,602; but only 5,062 were employed; of which 2,464 were in the city and suburbs. The total number in the city, in 1818, was 3,268, employing 4,973 hands. Thus the trade has ever been in some degree on the increase, and during the year 1838, more goods were made than in any previous year since the commencement of the manufacture; but this partly arose from the increased production by engine-looms, wherewith several breadths are made at once.

Fostered by prohibitions, drawbacks, bounties, and exclusive protection, as the Coventry trade had been, in the "big purl time," for 60 years;—till 1828, when French and other foreign goods were admitted, and when the force of French competition, especially in point of taste and originality of invention, became a most formidable check, which the trade has never yet recovered,—causes of dissatisfaction had, nevertheless, previously prompted the Coventry weavers to petition parliament for a restriction of the 7 years' servitudes, and for a regulative trades' police, or other magisterial jurisdiction over the trade, for the regulation of wages;—in point of fact, for an extension of the Spitalfield's Act to them,—See Art. SPITALFIELDS,—a proceeding which led, on the contrary, to the total abolition of that celebrated Act, in 1824, and to a repeal of the law of prohibition itself, which came fully into operation in 1829. The consequences flowing from the admission of French and other foreign goods, have since led government, as well as the trade itself, to desire a renewal or re-establishment of some prohibitory system, or other regulative mode of relief and advancement to the trade; but the commissioners, in their interesting report on hand-loom weaving, observe, that "though great distress was felt for a brief period on the introduction of foreign silks, and the highest wear of ribbons is still supplied by France, yet the great body of the trade is now confessedly exempt from the immediate pressure of foreign competition;"—and the trade, which has not been so much "depressed as outstripped," has now met with "a rivalry much nearer home than St. Etienne," in the "home competition," whereby the Coventry weavers have been kept in constant trepidation; and in the factory and steam power manufacture at Congleton, Leek, Derby, &c., and Coventry itself, where there are several steam-loom factories; and that, in fact, "since the full encounter with French competition, in 1829, the trade, always subject to depressions, has gradually revived and extended, in channels collateral with those in which French goods keep possession of the market." There are two joint-stock banks here, viz., the Coventry and Warwickshire, and the Coventry Union banking company. There is also the Coventry and Warwick Insurance company. The market-day is Friday. Fairs are held on second Friday in Lent for linen and woollen cloth; May 2d for horses, cows, and sheep; August 26th and 27th, and November 1st for linen, woollen, and horses. What is called the Great show-fair continues for eight days, commencing on the Friday after Corpus Christi day, Trinity week. Races are held in March.

The municipal commissioners who reported on Coventry in 1835, observe, that if the great antiquity of this city, and its long established importance as a manufacturing town, its central position, &c., &c., be taken into consideration, it seems clear, that its prosperity has not progressed in proportion to its numerous advantages. The most intelligent of its citizens have attributed this result "to a considerable degree to the circumstance, that the city, already densely populated, is incapable of being enlarged in consequence of the land which surrounds it being subject to a right of pasturage on the part of the freemen, which prevents its being built on, and to other causes negatively resulting from this one, and connected with local taxation, &c. The redemption of this right of pasturage, therefore, was much desired, and it appeared probable could be obtained for £30,000 or £40,000.

History.—The early accounts of this interesting city are involved in obscurity, until the time of Edward the Confessor, in the early part of whose reign, Leofric and his Countess Godiva, re-founded the famous convent of nuns, whence Coventry is supposed to have derived its name. We have already alluded to the charter which Leofric is said to have granted to the city, to the building of the city walls, and to the charters granted by Edward III., and Henry VI.; but remarkable as Coventry has been for its antiquity, its charters, rights, and privileges; and for the favours bestowed upon it by different monarchs; it is perhaps equally remarkable for this, that it has had the honour of having two parliaments held in it:—One by Henry IV., from which all lawyers were excluded, hence called 'lack learning parliament,' or 'Parliamentum Indoctorum.' One by Henry VI., in which Richard, duke of York, and the friends of the house of York were attainted, hence called "diabolicum parliamentum." Henry not only bestowed his favours on this town, but it is stated, that both he and his queen were constant in their attachment to it. It was styled "the harbour of Queen Margaret." King Edward IV. and his queen, to gain the esteem of the citizens, kept a Christmas festival here in 1465, but could not alienate their affections from the house of Lancaster.—In 1470, the Earl of Warwick entered Coventry with warlike stores and hostile intentions. Edward marched from Leicester and demanded entrance, but met with a hostile refusal. It was when reinstated in power that he divested the citizens of their privileges, but restored them, as their good will was too valuable to be lost. In 1474, he kept the feast of St. George here; and was presented with a cup and £100, and made a brother of the guilds of Corpus Christi and St. Trinity. During one of these festivals, Richard II. visited Coventry, and subsequently it was visited by Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Queen Catherine, and Queen Elizabeth, on all of whom, gifts were conferred by the citizens. In 1564, however, an unwelcome visitor appeared.—The plague committed dreadful ravages in the city, and this “Chamber of Princes,” as it has been popularly termed, was converted from a scene of successive festivities and splendour, to one of desolation and mourning. Mary, Queen of Scots, was twice imprisoned here, and her son, the British Solomon, with a vast retinue, paid a visit to the city a few years before his death, on which occasion he was presented, by the corporation, with a silver cup, weighing 45 ounces, curiously wrought, and containing £100; on receiving which, he said, “Out of this Coventry cup I drink wherever I go.” James would not renew the city charter, however, until he was made sensible that a command he had given the citizens, to receive the sacrament kneeling, had been obeyed. Charles I., when he unfurled the flag of defiance to his parliament, attempted to possess himself of the city, but without effect; and it was secured by the Lord Brooke, for the parliament; for whom it was garrisoned and preserved through the war. The women of Coventry organized themselves on this occasion, and were headed by an amazon, who led them daily forth to useful service. At the restoration, Charles II. was proclaimed by the mayor and aldermen amidst an immense concourse of citizens, with triumphant acclamations, all the public conduits, mean time, running claret. The king was, shortly afterwards, waited upon by a deputation from the city, who presented him a silver basin and ewer, with fifty pieces of gold, and a surrender of all the king’s lands; in return for which, the merry monarch next year sent the earl of Northampton, with a large retinue of court-gentry, and a body of troops, to break down the city walls, as a punishment for the citizens having shut their gates upon his father, which orders they so effectually executed, that out of walls three miles in circuit, flanked with 32 embattled towers, they left nothing but the dismantled gates and a few fragments. The entire circuit of the walls, however, may still be distinctly traced, and three of the gates, viz., Bastill, Priory, and Cook Street, gates are still standing.

Customs and Antiquities.—A singular custom, which was upheld till a very recent period, originated in the following fantastic tale; or fable, mixed with fact. The noble monastery which Leofric and Godiva reared on the site of the ancient convent, was endowed by them with 24 manors, with all the treasures of Godiva, and with one-half of the town. It surpassed all others in the country in splendour and revenue, and with its foundation did the importance and prosperity of Coventry begin.* The taxes imposed on the citizens for the aggrandizement of this monastery, were felt to be a heavy grievance, so that Godiva importuned her lord for their remission, to which he not only promised to accede, but to grant them a charter of freedom also, if she would consent to ride naked through Coventry at mid-day. Godiva did so, covered only with her loose and radiant hair; and thus the charter was obtained. She had ordered the inhabitants, on pain of death, to shut their doors, and not to look upon her as she passed. But an unfortunate tailor, who had contravened the order, was struck blind, and acquired the soubriquet of “Peeping Tom of Coventry.” In conformity with this curious tradition, not only have the mayor, aldermen, and corporation, together with the principal trading companies, been, till very recently, accustomed to walk, in annual commemorative procession, on the first day of the great fair, which commences on the Friday after Corpus Christi day, with banners and music, and in attendance on a female in a skin-coloured dress, who represented the renowned Godiva; but a figure of Tom may still be seen, peeping, out of a window niche at a corner of the High street of Coventry; the corporation paying annually for the decoration of the effigy. It has, by many archaeologists and antiquarians, been doubted if this far-famed traditional story has any connexion with the original foundation of the city. They have rather, and with more probability, thought that the tale, and its sequence, have been derived from the dramatic “mysteries,” for which Coventry was so celebrated in the middle ages; and which were conducted with great pomp, under the immediate superintendence of the municipal authorities. This rational explanation is countenanced by the fact, that the Godivan processions took place at the opening of the great annual fair or carnival, after Corpus Christi day; hence called the great Show fair; and that, as Dugdale—whom see—remarks, “before the suppressions of the monasteries, this city was very famous for the pageants that were played therein upon Corpus Christi day.”—See also Strutt’s Sports and Pastimes—Hone’s edition—where these mysteries are fully described; and where it is also observed, that “the well known mystery, entitled Corpus Christi, or Ludus Coventriæ, the Coventry play, which was wont to be acted at Kenilworth before Queen Elizabeth, was acted by the Friars’ minors, or mendicant friars of Coventry, and commenced on Corpus Christi day, whence it received its title.”—This tradition of Godiva, however, is inextricably interwoven with the history of the city. We may here remark, that, amongst the various surmises also hazarded, in explication of the well known expression, now embodied in the common idiom of our language—“send him to Coventry;”—the most feasible and authentic is the suggestion, that it was originally used by military officers, in the mess-room, after having been quartered at Coventry; where the inhabitants, who were then averse to them,—though they are now received with every polite attention,—had rigorously abstained from their society; and had even made females, known to have spoken to “red coats,” objects of reproach and slander. This city is enriched with the most interesting antiquities, the principal of which, besides the remains of the cathedral, and the city walls, are the house of industry, formerly the white friars’ monastery, the cloisters, postern, and staircase of which are in good preservation; the remains of Cheylesmore castle, the residence of the earl Leofric, and the earls of Chester; and some traces of the Episcopal palace, which formerly adorned the city.

COVERHAM, a parish in the west division of the wapentake of Hang, union of Leyburn, north riding of the county of York; 2 miles south-west of Middleham. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Horsehouse, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; returned at £80; gross income £226. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. William Otter. Charities, in 1821, exclusive of £23 6s. of school endowment, £66 13s. per annum. Steps were also about to be taken for the recovery of a small charity connected with the township of West Scrafton. There are five daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed. Acres, returned under the different townships of Agelthorpe, Caldbridge, Carlton, Carlton-Highdale,

* It continued till the surrender, 30th Henry VIII. The cathedral was levelled with the ground at the demolition of religious buildings which then took place; but a fragment still remains; and its original grandeur is rapturously discoursed of by early historians, and greatly extolled by visitors to the city, in its palmy aristocratic days.

Melmerby, and Scafton-West, 22,120. Houses 231. A. P. £7,154. Pop., in 1801, 1,006; in 1831, 1,233. Poor rates, in 1838, £564 13s.

COVINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Leightonstone, union of Thrapstone, county of Huntingdon; 3½ miles north-west of Kimbolton. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £10 1s. 8d.; returned at £135; gross income £167. Tithes commuted in 1801. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fitzwilliam. Acres 1,290. Houses 28. A. P. £1,535. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 146. Poor rates, in 1838, £92 15s.

COW-HONEYBORNE, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Kiftgate, union of Evesham, county of Gloucester; 4 miles north-west of Chipping-Campden. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Church Honeybourne. Tithes of the hamlet commuted in 1801. There are three daily schools here, one of which was endowed, in 1803, by Cotterell Corbett, with £30 15s. 2d. per annum. Acres 1,080. Houses 78. A. P. £1,998. Pop., in 1801, 274; in 1831, 329. Poor rates, in 1838, £181 15s.

COWARNE (MUCH), a parish in the hund. of Broxash, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 5½ miles south-west of Bromyard. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £14 19s. 7d.; no return. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. In January, 1840, the church spire and part of the church were fired by lightning, and destroyed. The chancel was saved. Charities, in 1837, 51 threepenny loaves annually to the poor. Acres 2,970. Houses 108. A. P. £4,240. Pop., in 1801, 548; in 1831, 573. Poor rates, in 1838, £282 16s.

COWARNE (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Broxash, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 4½ miles south-west by west of Bromyard. Living, a curacy to the rectory of Ullingswick. Charities, in 1837, a rent charge of 1s. 1d. per annum. Acres 830. Houses 38. A. P. £739. Pop., in 1801, 111; in 1831, 180. Poor rates, in 1838, £30 11s.

COWBIT, a parish in the wapentake of Elloe, parts of Holland, union of Spalding, county of Lincoln; 5 miles north-north-east of Crowland; bounded on the west by the river Welland. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; valued at £39 6s. 6d.; gross income £511. Patrons, in 1835, feoffees. There are two daily schools here, one of which is supported by an endowment arising from lands. Acres 4,590. Houses 104. A. P. £2,668. Pop., in 1801, 366; in 1831, 556. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 18s.

COWBRIDGE-HUNDRED, in the county of Glamorgan, South Wales. Houses 1,166. Pop., in 1831, 5,942.

COWBRIDGE, a market-town or borough, and parish, in the hund. of Cowbridge, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 12 miles west of Cardiff, and 7½ east by south of Bridgend; in the fertile vale of Glamorgan, on the small river Ddau. There is a stone bridge over the river. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Llanblethian. There are six daily schools in this parish, one of which is a female school of high estimation in great part of Wales, and one is a free school, founded and endowed, in 1663, by Sir Leoline Jenkins. This school is entirely classical. There are in it five pensioners, now called monitors, who enjoy a pension of £30 amongst them, for four years from the term of admission, between the age of 12 and 16. When removed to the university, they have the exclusive benefit of 1 exhibition, 2 scholarships, and 2 fellowships at Jesus college. The schoolmaster, in lieu of £20, out of an income of £70 per annum paid by the society of Jesus college, who are the trustees or guardians of this charity, teaches these five pensioners and ten other boys upon application, though there were none in 1837. Other charities of Sir Leoline Jenkins, in 1837, £20 a-year, expended in alms, and £20 every 4th year, in apprentice fees. Charities about £40 per annum, £20 of which are expended in apprentice fees, and £12 8s. distributed to the poor. This town is governed by 2 bailiffs, 12 aldermen, and 12 capital burgesses. The salary of the bailiffs used to be £4 a-year; but it was suspended a consequence of the low state of the funds. In conjunction with Cardiff and Llantrissant, this town sends one member to parliament. The number of electors registered in 1832, was 105; 50 of whom were freemen, and 55 householders;—in 1837, 92, 45 of whom were freemen, and 47 householders. The bailiffs are the deputy returning officers. The townhall and market-house stand in the middle of the town, which consists of one broad and long street. The figures of a cow and a bridge are the town arms. The town is said to have been formerly walled round. An annual assembly of bards used to be held here. It has a market on Tuesday for corn, cattle, and sheep; and annual fairs the first Tuesday in February, Tuesday before March 25th, May 4th, June 24th, first Tuesday in August, 29th September, and first Tuesday in December. Acres 33. Houses 205. A. P. £1,792. Pop., in 1801, 759; in 1831, 1,097. Poor rates, in 1838, £306 6s.

COWBROW, a hamlet in the parish of Kirby-Lonsdale, Westmoreland; 4 miles east-east by north of Kirby-Lonsdale, on the northern bank of the river Beetha.

COWDEN, a parish in the hund. of Somerden, union of Sevenoaks, county of Kent; 7½ miles west of Tunbridge Wells. One of the principal heaths of the Medway separates this parish on the south from the county of Sussex. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £9 18s. 11d.; gross income £354. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Harvey. The church has been recently enlarged. Charities, in 1837, £1 per annum, besides an almshouse for four paupers. There are 2 daily schools here. There is an annual fair on the 2d of August for cattle, pedlery, &c. Acres 3,170. Houses 82. A. P. £2,747. Pop., in 1801, 553; in 1831, 689. Poor rates, in 1838, £236 9s.

COWDONS, a township in the parish of Mapleton, east riding of York; 4 miles south-south-east of Hornsea. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £2 15s. 4d. Tithes commuted in 1770. The church has been washed away by the sea, and the parish has been assigned as a township to Alborough and Mapleton. Acres 1,750. Houses 29. A. P. £1,588. Pop., in 1801, 115; in 1831, 146. Poor rates, in 1838, £139 13s.

COWES (EAST), a hamlet in the parish of Whippingham, Isle of Wight division of the county of Southampton; 4½ miles north of Newport; on the eastern bank of the Medina or Cowes river at its mouth. The foundation-stone of a new chapel-of-ease to Whippingham church was laid here in September, 1831, by her present majesty, then the Princess Victoria. It was finished and consecrated in 1833. Many of the houses in this hamlet are very respectable. The Independents have a church here, formed in 1829. There are here 2 Sunday and daily National schools. From its vicinity to West Cowes this is a thriving place, and has a considerable trade. The custom-house is here, and there are bonded warehouses for all goods except tobacco and East India goods. Gross receipts of customs for 1838, £3,098 18s.; and for 1839, £2,122 12s. 6d. East Cowes castle stands on a hill in the vicinity. From hence there is a view of the Solent sea, superior in point of beauty to any other in the island. To the east, Portsmouth, crowded with shipping, and the richly wooded line of coast, in long and varied perspective, are in full view. To the north are seen the Southampton river, and the town with its spires and towers in the distance.

COWES (West), a sea-port and chapelry in the parish of Northwood, Isle of Wight division of the county of Southampton; $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-east of Southampton, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ north of Newport, on the declivity of a steep semicircular eminence; on the western bank of the Medina river, at its mouth, directly opposite East Cowes. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Winchester, returned at £110; gross income £261. Patron, the vicar of Carisbrook. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here, one of which is licensed under the new marriage act. There are two day and Sunday National schools here. It is now a large and populous place. The streets are narrow and ill-built; but from the terraced manner in which they rise one above the other from the water's edge, they have a singular and picturesque appearance. Many handsome houses, inhabited by respectable families, have been built in the upper part of the town and the vicinity. The convenience of this town for bathing has of late years occasioned it to become the resort of much fashionable company. The bathing machines are stationed on a fine beach in the vicinity, near a pleasant seat called Egypt. There are an assembly room, and a number of genteel lodging houses. The church stands on the summit of the eminence.

Cowes is the principal port of the island. The harbour is both perfectly safe and convenient. The trade carried on is extensive, particularly in provisions and other articles used in shipping. The road affords excellent shelter in severe weather; the anchorage being so good, that vessels seldom drift with any wind. Nearly fifty sail lay recently here at anchor at one time. It is now expected that Sir John Rennie's plan for deepening the Medina will be carried into execution. A spacious tower quay will also be erected. The rendezvous of the royal yacht squadron is here; but it is rumoured that it is about to be removed to the anchorage off Norris, on which estate a splendid club house is to be built for the accommodation of its members. The road here was much frequented by merchant shipping, waiting for convoy in time of war. It has a private dock, in which many war ships have been built. During the alarm of invasion in the reign of Henry VIII., "His majestie, in his own personne, toke very laborious and painfull journeyes towardes the sea coastes, and in all doubtfull places his highness caused dyverse and many bulwarkes and fortifications to be made."* Cowes was one of these doubtful places; and a small castle was built in the form of a crescent on each side of the river here. That on the west side now alone remains; but there is nothing particular in its construction. Steamers ply daily between Cowes, Portsmouth, and Southampton. There are also steamers to London. The passage up the channel from off Cowes to London by steam-boat required an average of 28 to 30 hours. The distance may now be run, by railroad, from Southampton, in 4 or 5. A fair is held here on Thursday in Whit-week for toys. There is here a branch of the National Provincial bank of England. Returns with the parish.

* Hall's Chronicle.

COWFOLD, a parish in the hund. of Windham and Ewhurst, rape of Bramber, union of Cuckfield, county of Sussex; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Horsham. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £10 6s. 8d.; gross income £476. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £605 12s. 9d. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. Charities, in 1837, £1 15s. per annum. There are 4 daily schools here, one of which is a National school. Acres 4,640. Houses 145. A. P. £2,121. Pop., in 1801, 601; in 1831, 809. Poor rates, in 1838, £641 10s.

COWGROVE, or KINSON, a tything in the parish of Wimborne-Minster, county of Dorset; 1 mile south of Kingston. Houses 149. Pop., in 1821, 638; in 1831, 728. Other returns with the parish.

COWICK, a township in the parish of Snaith, west riding of Yorkshire; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile south-east of Snaith. The Independents have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1823. There are 5 daily schools in this township. Acres 8,970. Houses 203. A. P. £3,431. Pop., in 1801, 709; in 1831, 928. Poor rates, in 1838, £405 2s.

COWLAM, a parish in the wapentake of Buckrose, union of Driffield, east riding of Yorkshire; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Great Driffield. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £11 11s. 3d.; gross income £30. Patron, in 1835, T. F. F. Bowes, Esq. Acres 1,930. Houses 2. A. P. £2,200. Pop., in 1801, 17; in 1831, 49.

COWLEY, a parish in the hund. of Rapsgate, union of Cheltenham, county of Gloucester; 5 miles south of Cheltenham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £9 1s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £322. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1820, £4 per annum. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,600. Houses 66. A. P. £1,835. Pop., in 1801, 251; in 1831, 323. Poor rates, in 1838, £176.

COWLEY, a parish in the hund. of Elthorne, union of Uxbridge, county of Middlesex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Uxbridge, near the Grand Junction canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £11; gross income £230. Tithes commuted in 1795. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Hilliard. There are 3 small daily schools here, one of which has a small endowment. Other charities, in 1822, £21 12s. per annum, principally distributed to poor in alms and bread. Acres 300. Houses 58. A. P. £1,699. Pop., in 1801, 214; in 1832, 315. Poor rates, in 1838, £103 6s.

COWLEY, a parish in the hund. of Bullington, union of Headington, county of Oxford; $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-east of Oxford, east of the river Isis. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; returned at £73; gross income £64. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ church. Charities, in 1823, £1 5s. per annum. There is a daily, and a Sunday and daily, school here. Acres 940. Houses 98. A. P. £1,828. Pop., in 1801, 345; in 1831, 558. Poor rates, in 1838, £156 12s.

COWLEY, a quarter in the parish of Gnosall, county of Stafford; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Newport, county of Salop. Pop., in 1801, 446; in 1821, 498. Other returns with the parish.

COWLING, a parish in the hund. and union of Risbridge, county of Suffolk; 7 miles north-north-west of Clare. Living, a curacy formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; returned at £54; gross income £100. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity hall, Cambridge. Charities, in 1829, £20 per annum, besides 10 acres of land held by parish clerk. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Here are two annual fairs, July 31st and October 16th, for sheep, other cattle, and pedlery. Acres 2,820. Houses 92. A. P. £3,593. Pop., in 1801, 570; in 1831, 845. Poor rates, in 1838, £826 14s.

COWLING. See BURREL WITH COWLING.

COWLING, a township in the parish of Kildwick, west riding of Yorkshire; $\frac{5}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Skipton. There are 2 daily schools here, containing 52 pupils, endowed with £18 per annum. The inhabitants of this populous and rapidly increasing township are almost all engaged in the cotton manufacture. Acres 5,140. Houses 398. A. P. £4,196. Pop., in 1801, 1,140; in 1831, 2,249. Poor rates, in 1838, £729 16s.

COWPEN, a township in the parish of Horton, county of Northumberland; 7 miles south-south-east of Morpeth, on the southern bank of the river Blyth, at its mouth. There are 2 daily schools here. This township is the seat of numerous and extensive collieries. Houses 363. Pop., in 1801, 853; in 1831, 2,081. Other returns with the parish.

COWPEN-BEWLEY, a township in the parish of Billingham, co.-palatine of Durham; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Stockton-upon-Tees, close upon the Clarence and Hartlepool canal. There is a daily school in this township. Acres 2,590. Houses 30. A. P. £4,088. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 137. Poor rates, in 1838, £102 3s.

COWSBY, a parish in the wapentake of Birdforth, union of Thirsk, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north-north-east of Thirsk. Living, a discharged rectory, a peculiar, in the dio. of York; rated at £5 11s. 0 $\frac{1}{4}$ d.; gross income £148. Patron, in 1835, G. Lloyd, Esq. There is an almshouse here with an endowment of £10 per annum. Acres 1,220. Houses 16. A. P. £596. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 89.

COWTHORN, a township in the parish of Middleton, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-north-west of Pickering, east of the river Severn. Acres 1,540. Houses 3. Pop., in 1821, 22; in 1831, 18. Poor rates, in 1838, £2 12s.

COWTHORPE, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Claro, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-north-east of Wetherley, on the river Nidd. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £4 15s. 10d.; returned at £111; nett income £130. Patron, in 1835, R. F. Wilson, Esq. On the estate of Lord Petre here, there is a gigantic oak, surpassing in size the famous Greendale oak at Welbeck Notts. Its present circumference, close to the ground, is 60 feet; and its principal limit extends 45 feet from the trunk. Acres 1,280. Houses 26. A. P. £1,139. Pop., in 1801, 148; in 1831, 146. Poor rates, in 1838, £69 16s.

COWTON (EAST), a parish in the wapentake of Gilling-east, union of Northallerton, north riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-east of Catterick, close on the Great North of England railway. It includes the townships of North and South Cowton. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £4 6s. 10 $\frac{1}{4}$ d.; gross income £223. Patrons, the trustees of St. John's hospital, Kirby-Ravenshaw. Charities, in 1821, £7 0s. 6d. per annum. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which, containing about 33 pupils, is endowed with certain lands belonging to St. John's hospital. Acres 3,150. Houses 77. A. P. £3,773. Pop., in 1801, 323; in 1831, 374. Poor rates, in 1838, £270 13s.

COWTON (NORTH), a township in the same parish, north riding of Yorkshire; $\frac{1}{4}$ mile east by north of Catterick. Acres 1,030. Houses 73. A. P. £1,519. Pop., in 1801, 282; in 1831, 264.

COWTON (SOUTH), a township and chapelry in the same parish, north riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles north-east of Catterick. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £39 4s.; gross income £39. Patron, the vicar of Gilling. Acres 1,530. Houses 30. A. P. £2,107. Pop., in 1801, 142; in 1831, 163. Poor rates, in 1838, £88 13s.

COXALL. See BUXTON and COXALL.

COXHOE, a township in the parish of Kelloe, co.-palatine of Durham; $\frac{5}{4}$ miles south-south-east of Durham. This is the terminus of the Durham and Coxhoe branch of the Clarence railway, with which one portion of a projected railway, to be termed the North Union railway, is to form a junction, and from whence it is to proceed to the Durham Junction railway at Houghton-le-Spring. There is a daily school here. Acres 870. Houses 29. A. P. £884. Pop., in 1801, 117; in 1831, 158. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 16s.

COXLODGE, a township in the parish of Gosforth, Northumberland; $\frac{2}{4}$ miles north-north-west of Newcastle. The grand stand on the Newcastle race-course is within the limits of this township. Houses 142. Pop., in 1801, 106; in 1831, 965. Poor rates, in 1838, £84 4s.

COXWELL (GREAT), a parish in the hund. and union of Farrington, county of Berks; $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile south-west of Great Farrington. Living, a discharged vicarage formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £7 7s. 11d.; gross income £217. Patron, the bishop of Oxford. There are two daily schools here, one of which has a small endowment. This parish has a joint interest in a rent charge of £73 6s. bequeathed by the Earl of Radnor and the Rev. John Pinsant for apprenticing children of this parish and that of Coleshill. Acres 1,440. Houses 68. A. P. £1,227. Pop., in 1801, 241; in 1831, 337. Poor rates, in 1838, £192 14s.

COXWELL (LITTLE), a township and chapelry in the parish of Great Farrington, county of Berks; $\frac{1}{4}$ mile south of Great Farrington. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Great Farrington. Tithes commuted in 1801. There is a daily school here. Houses 63. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 304. Poor rates, in 1838, £141 12s.

COXWOLD, a parish in the wapentake of Birdforth, union of Easingwold, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles north of Easingwold. It includes the townships of Angram-Grange, Byland cum Membria, Coxwold, Newborough, Oulston, Thornton with Baxly, Wildon-Grange, and Yearsley, and the chapelry of Birdforth. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Cleaveland and dio. of York; gross income £380. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £352 19s. 6d. In the patronage of Trinity college, Cambridge. Charities, in 1820, £51 12s. 6d., distributed to poor. There are 4 daily schools in this parish, and a day and Sunday school. There is here a fair held annually, August 25th. Laurencé Sterne held the curacy of this parish at the time he wrote Tristram Shandy. Acres 14,590. Houses 267. A. P. £11,819. Pop., in 1801, 1,099; in 1831, 1,380. Poor rates, in 1838, £426 15s. Acres of the township, 1,250. Houses 72. A. P. £1,699. Pop., in 1801, 289; in 1831, 375. Poor rates, in 1838, £127 13s.

COY-CHURCH. See COED-DHU-CHURCH.

COYTY, a parish in the hund. of Newcastle, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 2 miles north-east of Bridgend. It includes the hamlets of Higher and Lower Coyty. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Noltun, in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £21 12s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £420. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Dunraven. Charities, in 1837, £1 10s. per annum. There are seven daily schools here, one of which is a National school. Houses 351. A. P. £5,877. Pop., in 1801, 1,018; in 1831, 1,642. Poor rates, in 1838, £513 10s.

COZENLEY. See AZERLEY.

CRABHALL. See BLACON with CRABHALL.

CRACOE, a township in the parish of Burnsall, west riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles north-north-west of Skipton. Average amount of tithe composition belonging to the rector of both mediets of Burnsall, £97 2s. 6d. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,310. Houses 35. A. P. £1,393. Pop., in 1801, 191; in 1831, 150. Poor rates, in 1838, £80.

CRADLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Hales-Owen, county of Worcester; 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Hales-Owen. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, returned at £66 4s. 5d.; gross income £120. Patrons, in 1835, trustees. The Baptists and Presbyterians have places of worship here; the Baptist church was formed in 1801, the Presbyterian in 1796. One of these is licensed under the new marriage act. There are four daily and two day and Sunday National schools here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 401. A. P. £2,143. Pop., in 1801, 1,434; in 1831, 2,022. Poor rates, in 1838, £468 2s.

CRADLEY (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 7 miles north-north-east of Ledbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £18; gross income £975. Patron, the bishop of Hereford. In the parishes of East and West Cradley there are three daily schools, one of which contains about 40 scholars, and is endowed with £20 per annum. Poor's lands here produce annual rents amounting to £50 10s., distributed in clothing, &c. to poor. Other charities, in 1837, £5 per annum. Acreage, including West Cradley, 6,460. Houses 163. A. P. £3,672. Pop., in 1801, 622; in 1831, 776. Poor rates, in 1838, £534 4s.

CRADLEY (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Bromyard, county of Hereford; 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Ledbury. Houses 152. A. P. £4,091. Pop., in 1801, 695; in 1831, 733.

CRAGHOW. See CARGO.

CRAIKE, a parish formerly in the south-west division of Stockton ward, union of Easingwold, co.-palatine of Durham, now annexed to the north riding of the county of York, being locally situated in the wapentake of Bulmer; 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Easingwold. Living, a rectory, formerly a peculiar in the dio. of Durham, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £10; gross income £700. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £678. Charities, in 1822, £27 12s. per annum. Patron, the bishop of Ripon. There are 4 daily schools here. Acres 3,300. Houses 110. A. P. £4,880. Pop., in 1801, 404; in 1831, 607. Poor rates, in 1838, £174 18s.

CRAKEHALL. See ELMER with CRAKEHALL.

CRAKEHALL, a township of Bedale, north riding of Yorkshire; 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-west by west of Bedale. There are four daily schools here. Acres 1,920. Houses 133. A. P. £3,005. Pop., in 1801, 460; in 1831, 580. Poor rates, in 1838, £133 3s.

CRAKEMARSH, or CROKEMARSH. See UTTOXETER.

CRAKENTHORPE, a township in the parish of Bongate, Westmoreland; 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Appleby; bounded on the west by the river Eden.

Houses 22. Pop., in 1821, 134; in 1831, 115. Other returns with the parish.

CRAMBE, a parish in the wapentake of Bulmer, union of Malton, north riding of Yorkshire; 6 miles south-south-west of New Malton. It includes the township of Barton-le-Wilows, Crambe, and Whitwell-on-the-Hill. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £9 1s. 8d.; reported gross income £180; rent charge £342 15s. 4d. Patron, the archbishop of York. Charities, in 1822, 15s. per annum. This parish possesses three daily schools. Acres 3,710. Houses 89. A. P. £5,798. Pop., in 1801, 483; in 1831, 573. Poor rates, in 1838, £151 19s.

CRAMLINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of St. Andrew, county of Northumberland; 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. and dio. of Durham; returned at £100; gross income £75. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of bishop of Carlisle's, £266 13s. 4d.; of dean and chapter of Carlisle's, £266 13s. 4d.; and of impropriated, £102. Patron, in 1835, Sir M. W. Ridley, Bart. There are 3 daily, and 2 Sunday and daily National, schools in this chapelry. Acres 720. Houses 144. A. P. £4,858. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 931. Poor rates, in 1838, £223 12s.

CRANAGE, a township in the parish of Sandbach, co.-palatine of Chester; 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Middlewich; north of the river Dane, and close on the Nantwich and Birmingham railway. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, and there are three daily schools. Acres 2,040. Houses 85. A. P. £2,456. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 438. Poor rates, in 1838, £243 4s.

CRANBORNE HUNDRED, in the east and west divisions of Shaston, county of Dorset. Area 41,000 acres. Houses 1,180. Pop., in 1831, 6,235.

CRANBORNE, a market-town and parish in the above hund., union of Wimborne and Camborne; 30 miles north-east of Dorchester, and 9 north-north-east of Wimborne-Minster, in the centre of an extensive and fertile plain, near the north-east border of the county. It is the largest parish in Dorset; being upwards of 30 miles in circumference. Its longest diameter is 12 miles. Acres, including the tythings of Alderholt, Beveridge, Blagdon, Farewood, and Moncton-up-Wimborne, 13,730. Houses 410. A. P. £3,973. Pop., in 1801, 1,402; in 1831, 2,158. Poor rates, in 1838, £858 16s. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacies of Yerwood and Boveridge, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; returned at £120; gross income £151. Patron, in 1835, the marquis of Salisbury. The church was formerly the conventual church of a priory. It is spacious and very old. Charities, in 1837, £16 10s., besides church lands worth about £37 per annum, and the Boveridge alms-house for 5 paupers; disbursements £86 10s. per annum. There are 4 daily, a Sunday and daily National, and 6 infant schools here. Cranborne is the site of no particular branch of trade. Formerly the weaving of ribbons was carried on; but it is now chiefly an agricultural parish. It has a market on Thursday, and two annual fairs on the 24th of August and the 6th of December, for cheese and sheep. It is divided into three liberties, called the tything, the priory, and the borough, to each of which a tything-man and a bailiff are appointed. Cranborne chase courts were formerly held here, afterwards at Wimborne St. Giles, and now at Rushmore; packs of hounds have always been kept in the vicinity of the chase, and hunted in season. Deer, foxes, hares, and martin cats, were the animals chased. There are still, at least, 10,000 herd of deer; but the cats are nearly extinct. In the chase are 6 lodges, and walks belonging to them. In early times the chase was an immense tract of unenclosed woodlands without roads; but it was afterwards cut into commodious ridings, planted with evergreens. Ultimately, the whole was divided into 8 distinct walks. The manor-house, where the courts were held, contains a room in the house called the dungeon, used as the prison, where those who disobeyed the laws of the chase were confined, and "which, by old presentments," says Hutchins, "seems to have been much in use." An abbey of black monks was founded here in 980.—The priory of Tewkesbury was originally subject to it; but the monks were removed thither, and Cranborne abbey became a cell to Tewkesbury abbey. The cell, or priory house, was demolished in 1703. This was the birth-place of Bishop Stillingfleet, in 1635.

CRANBROOKE HUNDRED, in the lathe of Scray, county of Kent. Area 14,100 acres. Houses 772. Pop., in 1831, 4,650.

CRANBROOKE, a market-town and parish in the hund. and union of Cranbrooke, lathe of Scray, county of Kent; 14 miles south-south-east of Maidstone, and 7½ north-west by west of Tenterden. One of the projected lines of railway through Kent passes near Cranbrooke. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £19 19s. 4½d., returned at £95; gross income £207; nett income £163. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, £64 16s. 5d.; of those due to dean and chapter of Canterbury, £993 7s. 6½d. In the patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury. There are here places of worship for Calvinistic Baptists, Huntingdonians, (a particular class of Methodists, founded by the late William Huntington, who was a native of this parish,) Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians; the Baptist church was formed in 1706, the Independent in 1700. There are 2 Sunday and daily National, and 11 daily, schools in this parish, one of which, the free grammar-school, is endowed with £135 per annum, and another with £5 per annum and a school-house. The church is a large and beautiful edifice. The town is situated upon a small brook called the Crane, whence its name. Here was erected by the Flemings, under the patronage of Edward III., in the 10th year of his reign, the first woollen manufactory attempted in England. This town continued for ages to be the centre of that manufacture, till it was removed into the counties of Gloucester and Somerset. There is much business done here in hops. The market-day is Saturday; and here are two annual fairs, the 30th of May and the 29th of September, for horses and cattle. Acres 10,460. Houses 639. A. P. £13,102. Pop., in 1801, 2,561; in 1831, 3,844. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,102 7s.

CRANFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Redborne-Stoke, union of Ampthill, county of Bedford; 6 miles west-north-west of Ampthill. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £33 2s. 1d.; gross income £650; nett income £376. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Beard. The Baptists have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1661. It is licensed under the new marriage act. There are 2 daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed with £18 per annum. There is also a Sunday and daily National school here. One of the titles of the duke of Dorset is baron of Cranfield. Acres 3,500. Houses 248. A. P. £4,256. Pop., in 1801, 661; in 1831, 1,260. Poor rates, in 1838, £516 6s.

CRANFORD, a parish in the hund. of Elthorne, union of Staines, county of Middlesex; 2½ miles north-west of Hounslow. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of London; rated at £116; gross income £200. In the patronage, in 1835, of the Countess of Berkeley. Charities, in 1822, £7 7s. per annum. Acres 790. Houses 72. A. P. £1,468. Pop., in 1801, 212; in 1831, 377. Poor rates, in 1838, £169 7s.

CRANFORD (ST. ANDREW AND ST. JOHN), a parish in the hund. of Huxloe, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 3½ miles east of Kettering. Living, of St. Andrew, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £9 9s. 7d.; gross income £160. Tithes, of Cranford St. Andrew, commuted in 1775, and of Cranford St. John, in 1805. Patron, in 1835, Sir George Robertson, Bart. Living of St. John also a rectory; rated at £12. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Charities, in 1830, £6 per annum. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,420. Houses 105. A. P. £2,541. Pop., in 1801, 419; in 1831, 564. Poor rates, in 1838, £109 7s.

CRANHAM, a parish in the hund. of Chafford, union of Romford, county of Essex; 2½ miles east by south of Horn-Church, bounded on the west by the river Ingerburn, and close upon the Thames-Haven railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £13 13s. 4d.; gross income £546. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £627 17s. 1d. In the patronage of St. John's college, Oxford. There is a daily National school here. Acres 1,880. Houses 53. A. P. £2,808. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 300. Poor rates, in 1838, £107 9s.

CRANHAM, a parish in the hund. of Rapegate, union of Stroud, county of Gloucester; 2½ miles north-north-east of Painswick. Living, a discharged rectory united with that of Brimsfield. There is an infant and daily school here. Acres 1,970. Houses 75. A. P. £1,389. Pop., in 1801, 250; in 1831, 394. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 14s.

CRANLEY, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Blackheath, union of Humbledon, county of Surrey; 7 miles south-east by east of Godalming, and in the vicinity of the Arun and Wey canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £20 18s. 1½d.; gross income £1,197. Patron, in 1835, — Supte, Esq. There are 3 daily and 2 boarding schools here. The foundations of Vacherie, the baronial residence of the lords of the shire, surrounded with a moat, are still visible in this parish. It was their principal dairy farm. Cranley gives the title of Viscount to the earl of Onslow. A fair is held here on Whit-Tuesday. Acres 7,420. Houses 202. A. P. £5,721. Pop., in 1801, 1,090; in 1831, 1,328. Poor rates, in 1838, £806 6s.

CRANMORE (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Wells-Forum, union of Shepton-Mallet, county of Somerset; 2 miles east of Shepton-Mallet. Living, a curacy united to the vicarage of Douling. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 2,160. Houses 58. A. P. £3,040. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 298. Poor rates, in 1838, £105 9s.

CRANMORE (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Frome, union of Shepton-Mallet, county of Somerset; 4 miles east of Shepton-Mallet. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Douling. Acres 900. Houses 10. A. P. £1,605. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 64. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 11s.

CRANOE, a parish in the hund. of Gartree, union of Market-Harborough, county of Leicester; 5½ miles north-north-east of Market-Harborough. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8 16s. 8d., returned at £140; gross income £190. Tithes commuted in 1805. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Cardigan. Charities, in 1837, £10 11s. per annum. Acres 990. Houses 22. A. P. £945. Pop., in 1801, 91; in 1831, 100. Poor rates, in 1838, £52 13s.

CRANSFORD, a parish in the hund. and union of Plumegate, county of Suffolk; 2 miles east by north of Framlington, west of the river Adde. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £305. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £337 7s. 5½d. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Chevallier. Charities, in 1829, 16s. 8d. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,180. Houses 64. A. P. 1,523. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 323. Poor rates, in 1838, £210 14s.

CRANSLEY, a parish in the hund. of Orlingbury, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 3 miles south-west of Kettering. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8 5s.; gross income £78. Patron, in 1835, J. C. Rose, Esq. There is a daily school here, endowed with £26 per annum. Other charities, in 1830, £1 per annum. Acres 2,510. Houses 54. A. P. £3,705. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 308. Poor rates, in 1838, £148 10s.

CRANTOCK, a parish in the hund. of Pyder, union of St. Columb Major, county of Cornwall; 7 miles north-west of St. Michael. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; returned at £47 10s.; gross income £81. Patron, in 1835, J. W. Buller, Esq. Several children from this parish attend the endowed school at St. Columb Minor. Charities, in 1837, £1 per annum; besides the dues of one-sixteenth of some tin bounds in St. Agnes, which are payable to the officers of this parish for the support of poor widows. The mine, however, has not been productive for many years; but the improving appearance of mines in general in this vicinity leads to an expectation that the parish will again derive some benefit from this source. Acres 2,480. Houses 80. A. P. £3,244. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 458. Poor rates, in 1838, £186 5s.

CRANWELL, a parish in the hund. of Flaxwell, parts of Kesteven, union of Sleaford, county of Lincoln; 4 miles north-west of Sleaford, near the post-road. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; returned at £58; gross income £202. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,480. Houses 38. A. P. £1,901. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 229. Poor rates, in 1838, £156 5s.

CRANWICK, a parish in the hund. of Grimshoe, union of Thetford, county of Norfolk; 6½ miles south-east of Stoke-Ferry, on the southern bank of the Wissey. Living, a discharged rectory, with the curacy of Methwold, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8 9s. 7d.; gross income £453. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £180 6s. 1d. Patron, in 1835, H. S. Partridge, Esq. Charities, in 1834, 16s. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 1,550. Houses 15. A. P. £949. Pop., in 1801, 79; in 1831, 88.

CRANWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Mitford, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 5½ miles north-east of Watton, on the Blackwater river. Living, a rectory, united with that of Letton, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 18s. 6½d.; gross income £326. Patron, in 1835, T. T. Gurdon, Esq. Charities, in 1834, £9 per annum; besides 4 chaldrons of coals, and a joint interest in £14 per annum, to the poor of the hundred. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,100. Houses 59. A. P. £1,458. Pop., in 1801, 226; in 1831, 323. Poor rates, in 1838, £71.

CRASTER, a township in the parish of Embleton, Northumberland; 6 miles north-east of Alnwick. Acreage with the parish. Houses 36. A. P. £900. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 212. Poor rates, in 1838, £43 11s.

CRASWALL (LOWER and UPPER), a township in the parish of Clodock, county of Hereford; 7 miles south-east of Hay, in the county of Brecon. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; returned at £25; gross income £47. In the patronage of the vicar of Clodock. There is a daily school in this township. Here was a monastery in ancient times. Acreage with the parish. Houses 75. A. P. £1,896. Pop., in 1801, 391; in 1831, 374. Poor rates, in 1838, £126 5s.

CRATFIELD, a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; 5 miles west-south-west of Halesworth. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Laxfield, in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 7s. 11d.; gross income £290. Patron, in 1835, Lord Huntingfield. There is an Independent church here, formed in 1813, and licensed under the new marriage act. There are also 2 daily schools, and 2 day and Sunday National schools, in this parish. Charities, in 1829, about £150 per annum, applied to parochial purposes. Acres 1,930. Houses 75. A. P. £2,418. Pop., in 1801, 551; in 1831, 692. Poor rates, in 1838, £277 19s.

CRATHORNE, a parish in the west division of the liberty of Langbaugh, union of Stokesley, north riding of Yorkshire; 3½ miles south-south-east of Yarm, on a branch of the Tees. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £10 11s. 10½d.; gross income £222; in the patronage, in 1835, of the Misses Cockayne. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here, and a daily school with a small endowment. Acres 2,460. Houses 68. A. P. £2,822. Pop., in 1801, 307; in 1831, 304. Poor rates, in 1838, £156 13s.

CRAWCROOK, a township in the parish of Ryton, county of Durham; 8 miles west-north-west of Gateshead; south of the river Tyne, and in the vicinity of the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. There are 1 daily National and 2 other daily schools here. One of them is endowed with £25 per annum. Acres 1,390. Houses 62. A. P. £2,147. Pop., in 1801, 325; in 1831, 340. Poor rates, in 1838, £93 18s.

CRAWFORD-TARRANT WITH PRESTON, or LITTLE CRAWFORD, a parish in the hund. of Badbury, union of Blandford, Shaston division of the county of Dorset; 3½ miles south-south-east of Blandford-Forum. Living, a donative formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; gross income £50. Patron, in 1835, E. B. Portman, Esq. There is a daily school in this parish. Bishop Poor founded an abbey of Cistercian nuns here about the year 1230. It had, at the dissolution, a revenue of £214 7s. 9d. Dugd.: £239 11s. 10d. Speed. Acres 600. Houses 16. A. P. £1,066. Pop., in 1801, 76; in 1831, 78. Poor rates, in 1838, £40.

CRAWLEY, a township in the parish of Eglingham, Northumberland; 8 miles west by north of Alnwick, south of the river Breamish. Crawley tower, a Roman structure, commands a beautiful view of the vale of Whittingham, with the course of the Breamish from its source as far as Horton castle. There are several British and Saxon intrenchments in this vicinity. Houses 5. Pop., in 1801, 30; in 1831, 32. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 2s. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, 6s. 6d.; of impropriate, £6 10s.

CRAWLEY, a hamlet in the parish of Witney, county of Oxford; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-west of Witney, on the northern bank of the river Windrush. There is a small daily school here. Acres 910. Houses 52. A. P. £1,122. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 275. Poor rates, in 1838, £471 4s.

CRAWLEY, a parish in the hund. of Buddlegate, union of Winchester, county of Southampton; 5 miles north-north-west of Winchester. It includes the chapelry of Hunton. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Hunton, a peculiar, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £35 13s. 4d.; gross income £75. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. Charities, in 1824, £1 5s. There are 2 daily schools here, and a day and Sunday National school. Acres 4,170. Houses 84. A. P. £3,292. Pop., in 1801, 426; in 1831, 484. Poor rates, in 1838, £355 15s.

CRAWLEY, a parish in the hund. of Butthinghill, Lewes rape, union of East Grinstead, county of Sussex; 8 miles north-north-east of Cuckfield, and close on the London, Horsham, and Brighton railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £6 15s., returned at £150; gross income £116. Patron, in 1835, Col. Clitheroe, Esq. There are two annual fairs held here, on May the 8th and September the 9th. Acres 820. Houses 66. A. P. £1,645. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 394. Poor rates, in 1838, £131 13s.

CRAWLEY (HUSBORNE), a parish in the hund. of Manshead, union of Woburn, county of Bedford; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-east of Woburn. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £9. No return. Tithes commuted in 1795. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Duncombe. Acres 1,520. Houses 118. A. P. £2,074. Pop., in 1801, 543; in 1831, 680. Poor rates, in 1838, £342 2s.

CRAY (TAX), a small stream in the county of Kent. It falls into the Derwent, 2 miles north-north-west of Dartford.

CRAY (THE), a rivulet in Breconshire, Wales, a tributary of the Uske.

CRAY, a hamlet in the parish of Devynnock, county of Brecon, South Wales; 9 miles west of Brecknock. A chapel has been erected at Llanlild for the accommodation of the inhabitants of this hamlet. There is also a daily school here. Houses 99. A. P. £2,428. Pop., in 1801, 440; in 1831, 576. Poor rates, in 1838, £270 9s.

CRAY-FOOTS, a parish in the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by east of London. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester, rated at £8 3s. 4d.; gross income £252. Patron, the Crown. There are two day and Sunday National schools here, one of which is endowed with the interest of £200, 5 per cents., for behoof of the children of Cray-foots and Chiselhurst. The school-house is also a benefaction. This school is also supported by subscriptions. Foots-Cray Place is a beautiful building after a design by Palladio. Acres 620. Houses 52. A. P. £2,661. Pop., in 1801, 151; in 1831, 308. Poor rates, in 1838, £151 1s.

CRAY (ST. MARY'S), a parish in the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; 2 miles south of Foots-Cray. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to the vicarage of Orpington. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which, a National school, is endowed with a farm at Edenbridge, producing an annual rent of £70 per annum, for the benefit of this and the adjoining parish of Orpington. Other charities belonging to this parish, in 1836, about £6, besides 3 alms-houses. Fairs are held here on February 2d and September 10th. This has always been considered the principal parish of the 4 into which the district called the Crays, from being watered by the Cray, has been divided. Acres 2,220. Houses 149. A. P. £3,827. Pop., in 1801, 672; in 1831, 905. Poor rates, in 1838, £456 13s.

CRAY (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; 1 mile north-east of Foots-Cray. Living, a rectory with Ruxley in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £13 9s. 9d.; gross income £375. Patron, in 1835, T. Coventry, Esq. This parish possesses a daily school, endowed with about £21 per annum. The school is held in an almshouse for 5 paupers, which belongs to this parish. Other charities, in 1836, about £12 10s. per annum; £10 10s. of which were a donation from the Goldsmiths' company, London. Acres 1,160. Houses 56. A. P. £2,919. Pop., in 1801, 192; in 1831, 342. Poor rates, in 1838, £192.

CRAY (ST. PAUL'S), a parish in the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; 5 miles east of Bromley. Living, a rectory, in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £12 13s. 4d.; gross income £543; nett income £483. Patron, Lord Sidney. There is a day and Sunday National school here. Charities, in 1836, £3 10s. per annum, applied in teaching 6 children. Acres 630. Houses 81. A. P. £2,722. Pop., in 1801, 263; in 1831, 411. Poor rates, in 1838, £150 7s.

CRAYFORD, a parish in the hund. of Leasness, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Dartford, county of Kent; 13 miles east by south of London, and $5\frac{1}{2}$ south-east of Woolwich, about 2 miles south of the Thames. Living, a rectory, a peculiar in the dio. of Canterbury; rated at £35 13s. 4d.; gross income £890. Tithes commuted; aggregate amount £894 16s. 7d. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Austen, Esq. There are here a Baptist church, formed in 1810, and 6 daily schools, besides a day and Sunday National school, with a small endowment. Other charities, in 1836, £3 per annum. This village, which takes its name from an ancient ford over the Cray, was formerly a market-town. There is a fair held on 8th September. On the Cray are very extensive bleaching-grounds, and large establishments for printing silk and calicoes, by which Crayford is rising so fast into commercial importance, that a ship canal to connect it and Dartford with the Thames has been projected. There is also a mill for making iron hoops set in motion by the Cray in which there are fine trout. Numerous caverns are met with here, some of them nearly 20 fathoms in depth, and containing rooms, one within the other, supported by pillars of chalk. The origin of these caverns seems to have puzzled the antiquarian brotherhood in no small degree; but the most rational theory seems to be that they were simply pits whence chalk was taken. In 457, this place was the scene of a sanguinary and decisive battle between Hengist the Saxon, and the British king Vortimer, who was totally defeated with the loss of the greater part of his followers. Acres 2,380. Houses 338. A. P. £6,248. Pop., in 1801, 1,210; in 1831, 2,022. Poor rates, in 1838, £604 12s.

CREACOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Witherside, union of South Molton, county of Devon; 8 miles south-east by east of South-Molton, on the river Sturcomb. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £4 18s. 9d., returned at £116 15s.; gross income £166. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £40 12s. 10d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. William Karslake. Charities, in 1824, 16s. Acres

3,190. Houses 7. A. P. £372. Pop., in 1801, 29; in 1831, 43. Poor rates, in 1838, £21.

CREAKE, or CREYK (NORTH), a parish in the hund. of Brothercross, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 3 miles south-south-east of Burnham-Westgate. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £33 6s. 8d.; gross income £1,152; nett income £1,077. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £1,047 11s. 11d. Patrons, in 1835, Earl Spencer and bishop of Norwich alternately. There are 2 day and Sunday National schools in this parish, one of which was endowed by the late Mr. Herod with £10 per annum. Other charities, in 1834, £5 8s. per annum, besides Mansaur's alms-houses and a contingent fund, bequeathed by Mr. Herod, and amounting to £616 11s., to be applicable to charitable purposes on the death of an annuitant. There was a monastery here in ancient times. Acres 3,460. Houses 134. A. P. £3,816. Pop., in 1801, 405; in 1831, 651. Poor rates, in 1838, £592 5s.

CREAKE (SOUTH), a parish in the hund. of Brothercross, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 3½ miles south-south-west of Burnham-Westgate; and 6 west by south of Walsingham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £22; gross income £330. Patron, in 1835, Lord C. Townsend. Charities, in 1824, £36 16s. 6d., principally distributed to the poor in coal, bread, and alms. There is also an alms-house occupied by a pauper. There are one Sunday and daily National, and three daily, schools here. Acres 3,820. Houses 187. A. P. £3,587. Pop., in 1801, 625; in 1831, 831. Poor rates, in 1838, £402 18s.

CREATON (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Guilsborough, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; 8 miles north-north-west of Northampton, on the post road. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £11 1s. 8d.; gross income £220. Tithes commuted in 1782. Patron, in 1835, E. T. Beynon, Esq. Charities, in 1824, £1 per annum. The Independents have a church here, formed in 1739. There is a daily school in this parish. Holmby house, once the prison of Charles I., is in this parish. Acres 790. Houses 113. A. P. £2,186. Pop., in 1801, 341; in 1831, 543. Poor rates, in 1838, £295 6s.

CREATON (LITTLE), a hamlet in the parish of Spratton, county of Northampton; 7½ miles north-north-west of Northampton. Tithes commuted in 1782. Houses 19. Pop., in 1801, 80; in 1831, 100. Poor rates, in 1838, £57 12s.

CREDENHILL, a parish in the hund. of Grims-worth, union and county of Hereford; 5 miles north-west by west of Hereford. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £17 19s. 4d.; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Eckley. Charities, in 1837, 7s. Acres 1,170. Houses 41. A. P. £1,784. Pop., in 1801, 167; in 1831, 235. Poor rates, in 1838, £127 18s.

CREDITON HUNDRED, in the new northern division of the county of Devon. It lies in the centre of the county a little to the north-west of Exeter. Area 34,160 acres. Houses 2,417. Pop., in 1831, 12,237.

CREDITON, a market-town or borough and parish in the above hund., union of Crediton; 8 miles north-west of Exeter, on the southern bank of the Creedy, near its confluence with the Exe. Acres, including the tythings of Bradley, Canon-Fee, Falford, Knowle, Rudge, Town, Uford, Uton, and Woodland, 11,440. Houses 1,217. A. P. £19,011. Pop., in 1801, 4,929; in 1831, 5,922.

Poor rates, in 1838, £3,445 2s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Crediton, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Crediton poor-law union comprehends 29 parishes, embracing an area of 138 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 21,765. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £12,314. Expenditure, in 1838, £9,955.

Crediton was anciently a bishop's see; but it was removed to Exeter so early as the reign of Edward the Confessor. Living, a vicarage, a peculiar or the bishop of Exeter; rated at £30; gross income £425. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £1,516 15s. 5d. Patrons, the governors of the church of Crediton. The church is a fine building, and has been recently enlarged and repaired by the governors, out of trust funds for the purpose. There is an old and valuable library in one of the towers of the church. The Baptists have a chapel here, which was erected in 1817. There are also places of worship for Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Presbyterians. Crediton possesses 12 daily, including 2 daily National, schools, one of which is a free grammar-school, founded by Edward VI., and additionally endowed by Queen Elizabeth, for the children of parents residing in this parish and that of Sandford. The endowment of this school proceeds out of the funds of a church corporation trust, appointed by Edward VI., and confirmed and augmented by Elizabeth and James I., for the sustenance and government of the church. The trust is vested in 9 parishioners of Crediton, and 3 of Sampford, now Sandford. The income of this charity, in 1823, was £2,720 8s. 9d., chiefly arising from the tithes of Crediton, Sandford, and Exminster, and out of which £1,050 were paid for the stipends of the vicars of Crediton and Exminster, and the chaplains of Crediton and Sandford. The ecclesiastical presentation to them all, except the chaplainship of Sandford, belonged to the governors, who had also other patronage at their disposal. Of the residue, £30 were paid to the master of the grammar-school as salary, besides £5 each per annum for 20 to 25 day scholars; £8 were divided amongst 4 poor scholars called Choristers; and £8 8s. each were given to 4 alms-men, who had no allotted dwelling under this charity. Besides £13 6s. 8d. paid for 2 exhibitions—though there are 3—to either of the universities, tenable for 5 years, belonging to this school; a sum of £62 per annum was paid towards the support of other charity schools in Sandford, Exminster, and Crediton, one of which, the united English school, and Blue school of Crediton, had an endowment of £106 12s.; and another, Dunn's school, £25 4s. per annum. There are a number of other comparatively valuable charities enjoyed by this parish, including alms-houses, borough-lands, &c., and producing an aggregate income of £464 13s. 5d.

Serges are manufactured here, and give employment to 2 or 3 old men, and a considerable number of girls and women, whose husbands or fathers are generally agricultural labourers, mechanics, &c. A flax-mill or manufactory for sail-cloth, canvas, and other linen articles, has been recently introduced. In 1839 there were 20 looms at work on these articles: 59 hands were employed. Wool is spun here, and many of the finest kerseys are woven. Crediton is renowned for these, and for fine spinning: 140 threads of woollen yarn, spun here, were actually drawn through the eye of a tailor's needle. The proverb, "as fine as Keston spinning," is applied to Crediton. The market-day is Saturday

The Saturday preceding the last Wednesday of April is a large cattle-market, and there are fairs for cattle on May 11th, and September 21st, in the eastern division of the town, and on the 21st of August in the western division, unless the 21st happens to be Friday, Saturday, or Sabbath, in which case it is held the Tuesday following. A great trade is done in wool and yarn, at the weekly market. There are branches of the Devon and Cornwall, and of the Western District, banking company here. The town, which is about a mile in length, is divided into East and West Crediton, the latter of which was twice destroyed by fire in the last century; but the whole was rebuilt in a very handsome manner. It is governed by a portreeve, and petty-sessions are held. It is one of the polling places for the members for North Devon. Here is said to have been a collegiate church in Anglo-Saxon times, which was made the cathedral of the bishops of Devonshire, upon the division of the dio. of Sherbourne, about A. D. 905. In Leland's time there were a dean and 12 prebends, valued at £332 17s. 5d. per annum. The church of this college and some of the estates were granted to the governors of the church and school by Edward VI.

CREECH (EAST), a tything in the parish of Church-Knowle, county of Dorset; 2 miles south of Wareham. Houses 39. Pop., in 1831, 204. Other returns with the parish.

CREECH (St. MICHAEL), a parish in the hund. of Andersfield, union of Taunton, county of Somerset; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles east by north of Taunton, intersected by the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £16 18s. 9d.; gross income £508. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. Cresswell. Charities, in 1825, £3 per annum. There are six daily schools, and one Sunday and daily National school, in this parish. Acres 2,150. Houses 227. A. P. £4,921. Pop., in 1801, 628; in 1831, 1,116. Poor rates, in 1838, £363 2s.

CREED, a parish in the west division of the hund. of Powder, union of St. Austel, county of Cornwall; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-north-east of Tregony. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Grampound, in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £351. Patron, in 1835, C. H. T. Hawkins. There are 4 daily and 3 infant schools in this parish. Acres, including the borough of Grampound, 2,710. Houses 148. A. P. £3,296. Pop., in 1801, 742; in 1831, 973. Poor rates, in 1838, £295 2s.

CREEDY (THE), a small river of Devonshire, which running south-east falls into the Exe a little to the north of Exeter.

CREEKSEA, or CRICKETH, a parish in the hund. of Dengie, union of Maldon, county of Essex; 2 miles north-west of Burnham, bounded on the south by the river Crouch. Living, a discharged rectory with the vicarage of Althorne, in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £9 8s. 10d.; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, J. Robinson, Esq. Acres 690. Houses 17. A. P. £1,768. Pop., in 1801, 97; in 1831, 154. Poor rates, in 1838, £28 9s.

CREETING (ALL SAINTS), a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Needham. Living, a discharged rectory united with the rectories of Creeting-St. Mary, and Creeting-St. Olave, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £10 0s. 5d.; gross income £687. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Eton college. Charities, in 1828, £56 6s. per annum, in which the parishes of Creeting-St. Mary and St. Olave have an interest. Acres 1,760. Houses 57.

A. P. £1,927. Pop., in 1801, 279; in 1831, 2. Poor rates, in 1838, £186 3s.

CREETING-ST. MARY, a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Needham. Living, a discharged rectory, united as above; rated at £7 14s. 2d. "There are four contiguous parishes of this name in Suffolk," says Tanner, "viz. St. Mary's, St. Olave's, All Saints, and St. Peter's, and at the two first seem to have been two distinct alien priories of the Benedictine order." Charities, in 1820, £1 10s., besides an interest in those of the above parishes. Acres 2,080. Houses 23. A. P. £2,010. Pop., in 1801, 122; in 1831, 129. Poor rates, in 1838, £216 1s.

CREETING-ST. OLAVE, a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north of Needham. Living, a discharged rectory, united as above; rated at £4 17s. 8d. The church is in ruins. Charities with Creeting All Saints. Acreage with Creeting-St. Mary. Houses 6. A. P. £472. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 41. Poor rates, in 1838, £43 13s.

CREETING-ST. PETER, or WEST-CREETING, a parish in the hund. and union of Stow, county of Suffolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of Stow-Market. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely, rated at £10 2s. 6d.; gross income £320. Patron, in 1835, George Paske, Esq. There is a Sunday and daily National school here. Acreage with Creeting All Saints. Houses 37. A. P. £1,655. Pop., in 1811, 123; in 1831, 166. Poor rates, in 1838, £160 17s.

CREETON, a parish in the wapentake of Beltsloe, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-east of Corby, on the river Glen. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £4 15s. 10d., returned at £115 7s.; gross income £166. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 490. Houses 14. A. P. £391. Pop., in 1801, 62; in 1831, 66. Poor rates, in 1838, £29 10s.

CREGRINA, or CRIGRINA, a parish in the hund. of Colwyn, union of Builth, county of Radnor, South Wales; 6 miles east by north of Bualt, on the western bank of the Eddw. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Llanbadarn-y-Grarg, in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; rated at £9 6s. 2d.; returned at £80 14s.; gross income £120. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. Charities, an interest in Powell's charity to the counties of Radnor and Brecon for apprenticeship, and the foundation of 2 exhibitions in Jesus college, Oxford, &c. Houses 17. A. P. £536. Pop., in 1801, 133; in 1831, 119. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 12s.

CREIGHTON. See UTTOXETER.

CREIGIOG ISYLAN, and UWCHLAN. See LLAN-ARMON, Denbigh.

CRENDON (LONG), a parish in the hund. of Ashendon, union of Thame, county of Buckingham; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Thame. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; returned at £98; gross income £150. Tithes commuted in 1824. Patron, in 1835, Lord Churchill. Charities, in 1832, £44 7s. 1d. per annum. There are a Baptist church here, and 5 daily schools. An ancient cemetery was discovered here in 1824, near the supposed site of the castle of the Giffords. On being opened, it presented some curious relics of Roman pottery, and proofs of various modes of burial, at different periods, in the same spot. The remains of the splendid abbey of Nuttley, founded in 1162, and, at the dissolution, valued at £495 18s. 5d., are still to be seen here, converted into a farmhouse and barn.

in Acres 3,120. Houses 258. A. P. £4,423. Pop., 1801, 991; in 1831, 1,382. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,232 16s.

CRESLOW, a parish in the hund. of Cottesloe, union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Aylesbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £3. Acres 620. House 1. A. P. £1,461. Pop., in 1801, 6; in 1831, 5. Poor rates, in 1838, £35.

CRESSAGE. See COUND.

CRESSING, a parish in the hund. of Witham, union of Braintree, county of Essex; 3 miles south-east of Braintree. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £7 15s. 5d.; gross income £220. Patron, the vicar of Witham. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,960. Houses 98. A. P. £2,782. Pop., in 1801, 378; in 1831, 551. Poor rates, in 1838, £391 6s.

CRESSING-TEMPLE, a manor in the above parish, once belonging to the Knights Templars.

CRESSINGHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of South Greenhoe, union of Swaffham, county of Norfolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Watton. Living, a rectory with that of Bodney, a peculiar, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £17 18s. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £610. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £458 18s. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1834, £45 0s. 8d. per annum. There are 3 daily schools here. In a field called Stone-close, which belongs to the rectory of the parish, about a mile to the east or south-east of the village of Cressingham, stood formerly the parochial chapel of St. George, which had originally been the chapel of a hermit, in right of which chapel the rector still holds here an annual fair on 12th August. Acres 2,490. Houses 89. A. P. £2,367. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 449. Poor rates, in 1838, £263 11s.

CRESSINGHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of South Greenhoe, union of Swaffham, county of Norfolk; 3 miles west by south of Watton, on the southern bank of the Wissey. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £13 12s. 6d.; gross income £337. Tithes commuted in 1777. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Thomas Baker. There is a daily school here, endowed with the interest of £300. Other charities, £7 per annum; besides 14 pecks of rye, charged on an estate. Acres 1,690. Houses 41. A. P. £1,776. Pop., in 1801, 205; in 1831, 276. Poor rates, in 1838, £167 5s.

CRESSWELL, a township in the parish of Woodhorn, county of Northumberland; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Morpeth. There is a daily school here. Houses 51. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 251. Poor rates, in 1838, £118 11s.

CRESSWELL, an extra-parochial liberty, south division of the hund. of Pirehill, county of Stafford; 3 miles south-south-west of Cheadle. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here. Acres 460. House 1. Pop., in 1801, 17; in 1831, 11.

CRETINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Loes, union of Plomesgate, county of Suffolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Framlington, on the river Deben. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £9 10s. 10d.; gross income £144. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1828, £50 15s., whereof £48 15s. were applied to parochial purposes. Acres 1,700. Houses 60. A. P. £2,637. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 387. Poor rates, in 1838, £199 14s.

CREWE, a township in the parish of Farndon, co. palatine of Chester; 9 miles south-south-east of Chester. Acres 400. Houses 12. A. P. £609. Pop., in 1801, 29; in 1831, 51. Poor rates, in 1838, £14 9s.

CREWE, a township in the parish of Barthomley, co. palatine of Chester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Sandbach, and 11 south-west of Congleton, intersected by the Grand Junction railway, between Birmingham and the Liverpool and Manchester railway. The CREWE STATION, on the line of this railway, is $43\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Liverpool and Manchester, and $53\frac{1}{2}$ from Birmingham. This central station is also the terminus of the Chester and Crewe railway, to be opened in August, 1840, and of the projected Manchester and Birmingham Junction railway—the line by Congleton being now abandoned. See articles CONGLETON, BIRMINGHAM, and CHESHIRE. The traffic through Crewe, on the Grand Junction railway alone, is immense. The gross income derived from this railway for the half year preceding January, 1840, was £226,684 15s. 10d.; the receipts being constantly and rapidly on the increase. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of rectorial, £28 15s.; of impropriated, £89 16s. 5d. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £6 per annum and a house and garden. Acres 2,190. Houses 55. A. P. £1,983. Pop., in 1801, 289; in 1831, 295. Poor rates, in 1838, £92 17s.

CREWKERNE HUNDRED, in the western division of the county of Somerset; on its southern extremity bordering on Dorset. Area 13,260 acres. Houses 1,286. Pop., in 1831, 6,847.

CREWKERNE, a market-town and parish in the above hund., union of Chard; 10 miles south-south-west of Ilchester, on the post road, in a valley watered by the branches of the rivers Parret and Axe. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; returned at £104; gross income £158. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Winchester. The Baptists and Presbyterians have places of worship here, licensed under the new marriage act. There are 7 daily schools, one of which, a free grammar-school, was founded in 1499 by John De Combe, precentor to the cathedral church of Exeter, who endowed it with revenues, subsequently augmented, and, in 1822, amounting to £320 10s. 11d. per annum; This school possesses 4 exhibitions, of £5 per annum each, to any college in Oxford, bestowed by William Owsley of Shepton Beauchamp. There are 2 almshouses, one of which, for 6 male and 6 female paupers, was founded and endowed by Mary Davis in 1707; income £183 14s. Other charities, about £45 per annum, applied partly in education, and partly in doles to poor. Sail-cloth, dowlas, and stockings are manufactured here. In 1838, there were 3 flax mills, employing 190 hands; and, in 1839, the number of looms employed in manufacturing sail-cloth was 420. The market-day is Saturday; and there is an annual fair, September 4th, for horses, cattle, linen-draperies, cheese, &c. There are branches here of the National Provincial Bank of England and of Stuckey's Banking company. Acres 5,810. Houses 709. A. P. £16,777. Pop., in 1801, 2,576; in 1831, 3,789. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,089 15s.

CRICH, a parish, partly in the hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, partly in the hund. of Scarsdale, and partly in the hund. of Wirksworth, union of Belper, county of Derby; 4 miles west by south of Alfreton, and 13 north of Derby, near the Derby and Leeds railway, close on the Cromford canal, and bisected by a projected railway to effect a junction between the High Peak railway near the Cromford canal, and the North Midland railway near Bull bridge. It includes the township of Wessington. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £6 10s. 10d.; gross income £98. Patron, in 1835, Sir W. Dixie. Charities, in 1826, £3 per annum. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here, and there are 10 daily schools. In 1838 there were 3 cotton mills, employing 161 hands, within this parish. It is also a hand-loom weaving station in connection with the silk manufacture of Derby. The trade was taken here at a time when hands were scarce, and a confidential person was employed to teach the first hands. This was formerly a market-town. It has still two annual fairs, on old Lady-day and old Michaelmas-day. Acres 6,180. Houses 532. A. P. £4,381. Pop., in 1801, 1,413; in 1831, 2,115. Poor rates, in 1838, £735 5s.

CRICK, a hamlet in the parish of Caerwent, county of Monmouth; 4 miles south-west by west of Chepstow, on the post road. Acreage with the parish. Houses 24. A. P. £1,480. Pop., in 1801, 329; in 1831, 131.

CRICK, or CREEK, a parish in the hund. of Guilsborough, union of Rugby, county of Northampton; 7 miles north of Daventry, in the vicinity of the London and Birmingham railway, on which there is here a station, and bisected by the Derby and Leicester Grand Union canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £32 13s. 1½d; gross income £926. Tithes commuted in 1776. Patrons, the president and fellows of St. John's college, Oxford. The Independents have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1825; and there are 8 daily schools. Charities, in 1824, £97 6s. 6d.; of which £24 17s. 4d. were applied in educating 39 children. Acres 3,930. Houses 225. A. P. £5,273. Pop., in 1801, 961; in 1831, 945. Poor rates, in 1838, £414.

CRICKADARN, a parish in the hund. of Talgarth, union of Builth, county of Brecon; 7 miles north-north-west of Talgarth. It is divided into North and South Crickadarn. Living, a vicarage with that of Llandeulvalley, in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; rated at £14; gross income £830. Patron, in 1835, George P. Watkins. Charities, in 1837, £9 8s. per annum. Houses 81. A. P. £1,677. Pop., in 1801, 433; in 1831, 397. Poor rates, in 1838, £203 6s.

CRICKEITH, or CRICCIETH, a parish, borough, and market-town, in the hund. of Ewionydd, union of Pwllheli, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 9 miles east by north of Pwllheli, and 4 west by south of Tremadoc, pleasantly situated on a spacious bay. The village or town consists only of a few cottages straggling over a wide extent of ground along the sea-shore. It is, however, a place of considerable antiquity. Living, a discharged rectory, with the curacies of Ynys Cynhaiarn and Treflys, in the archd. of Merioneth and dio. of Bangor; rated at £13 8s. 11½d.; gross income £379. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £129 17s. 10d. Patron, the bishop of Bangor. There is a day and Sunday school here, endowed with the interest of £200. The government of the town is vested in 2 bailiffs. It is one of the original contributory boroughs to Carnarvon. There is no commerce except herring-fishery, which is very flourishing. There is no harbour. The imports are limestone and coal from Liverpool, &c. The market-day is Wednesday; and it has annual fairs, May 23d, July 1st, and October 18th. Houses 146. A. P. £1,306. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 648. Poor rates, in 1838, £156 2s.

CRICKET-MALHERBIE, a parish in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, union of Chard, county of Somerset; 2½ miles south-east of Ilminster, near the Charch canal. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; returned at £107 4s. 4½d.; gross income £85. Patron, in 1835, Stephen Pitt, Esq. Acres 350. Houses 4. A. P. £1,033. Pop., in 1801, 64; in 1831, 28. Poor rates, in 1838, £45 4s.

CRICKET (ST. THOMAS), a parish in the hund. of South Petherton, union of Chard, county of Somerset; 4½ miles west by south of Crewkerne. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £9 17s. 6d. gross income £106. Patron, in 1835, Lord Bridport. Acres 540. Houses 18. A. P. £1,273. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1838, £28 1s.

CRICKHOWELL HUNDRED, in the county of Brecon, South Wales. This was anciently a separate district, and was governed by its own prince. It was erected into a hundred by Henry VIII. It comprises 8 parishes; and, in 1831, contained a population of 11,176.

CRICKHOWELL, a parish and market-town or borough in the above hund., union of Crickhowell; 14 miles east-south-east of Brecon, and 157 west-north-west of London, close upon the Brecon and Newport canal. The town is romantically situated on the eastern bank of the Uske, on a gentle acclivity. Near it is a bridge of 14 arches across the river. The town is well built, and is considered a healthy and agreeable residence. Living, a discharged vicarage, and sinecure rectory, in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; reported gross income of the former, £85; of the latter, £132; aggregate amount of tithe composition, £220 17s. 5d. Patrons, in 1835, the Duke of Beaufort and the rector of Crickhowell. The Calvinistic and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship in this parish. Charities connected with it, in 1837, £3 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £383 8s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Crickhowell, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 100 persons. The Crickhowell poor-law union comprehends 10 parishes, with a population returned at 11,305. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £2,172. Expenditure, in 1838, £1,718. There are 2 day and boarding and 2 day and Sunday schools in this parish. During the summer season it is a general resort for invalids, on account of the fine air, and the abundance of goats' milk. It is also much frequented by anglers, on account of the numerous trout streams, and the beautiful scenery, in its vicinity. It is a borough by prescription. The bailiff is appointed by the lord of the manor, the duke of Beaufort. Here petty-sessions for the hundred are held. There are weekly markets on Thursday and Saturday, and fairs on January 1st, February 1st, April 13th, and May 12th, for cattle. Here, in ancient times, there was a very strong castle, re-erected, in the reign of Henry IV., by one of the Pouncefoots, a family who held the manor for several generations. Some remnants of it, covered with ivy, are still extant. Houses 204. A. P. £4,106. Pop., in 1801, 566; in 1831, 1,061.

CRICKLADE, a borough and market-town in the hund. of Highworth, Cricklade, and Staple, union of Cricklade and Wootton-Bassett, county of Wilts; 44 miles north-north-west of Salisbury, and 7½ north-north-east of Wootton-Bassett, on the northern bank of the Thames, at the junction with it of two small streams, the Churn and the Key. The Thames and Severn canal passes near the north end of the town; and, within a mile of it, forms a junction with the Berks and Wilts canal; affording a navigable communication with the metropolis, and the intervening districts. Acres, including the small township of Whidhill, 5,840. Houses 331. A. P.

£11,230. Pop., in 1801, 1,133; in 1831, 1,642. Cricklade is divided into two parishes, St. Samson's and St. Mary's, both formerly in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury, but recently annexed to the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol. St. Samson's is a vicarage; rated at £18 11s. 10^{d.}; gross income £380. St. Mary's is a discharged rectory; rated at £4 14s. 9^{d.}; gross income £80. Patron, the bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Both churches are ancient buildings. There are here places of worship for Independents and Wesleyan Methodists; and 4 daily schools, an infant, and a boarding school. Charities, in 1834, £293 9s. 8^{d.} per annum; of which £104, the annual rent of "the hundred acres," were bequeathed to 8 poor labourers, a moiety for apprenticeship, and residue to aged poor; £95 for repairs of highways, and the residue principally for behoof of poor. There was also a free-school here, with a rent charge of £20, but the endowment is lost, and the school converted into a poor-house. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,090 10s. A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Cricklade and Wootton-Bassett, by the poor-law commissioners. The Cricklade and Wootton-Bassett poor-law union comprehends 14 parishes, embracing an area of 69 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 10,275. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £11,948. Expenditure in 1838, £6,628. The town of Cricklade is of very high antiquity. It was a borough by prescription; the principal functionary being the bailiff, appointed at the court leet of the lord of the manor. From the time of Henry VI. till the year 1782, this borough regularly returned two members to parliament. Having been then, however, convicted of the most corrupt practices, the elective franchise was extended to the freeholders of the four adjoining hundreds, viz., Highworth, Staple, Kingsbridge, and Malmesbury, excepting such parts of the hundred of Malmesbury as are now included in the borough of Malmesbury. The polling places are, Cricklade, Brinckworth, and Swindon. The registered electors for 1837 were 1,636, of whom 620 claimed under the old right of voting. The number polled at the election in 1837 was 1,389. The market, on Saturday, though it has become almost nominal, is still kept up; fairs are held on the second Thursday in April, for sheep, cows, and calves, and on September 21st for chapmen's goods, and for hiring servants.

CRIDLING-STUBBS, a township, partly in the parish of Darrington, and partly in the parish of Womersley, west riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Pontefract, close on the Egborough and Goole canal. There is a small daily school here. Acres 1,380. Houses 23. A. P. £1,013. Pop., in 1801, 83; in 1831, 118. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 1s.

CRIGGLESTONE, a township in the parish of Great Sandall, west riding of York; 3 miles south-west of Wakefield; on the southern bank of the Aire, and close upon the York and Manchester railway. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1822; also a daily school and three boarding schools. Acres 2,950. Houses 265. A. P. £4,888. Pop., in 1801, 1,216; in 1831, 1,266. Poor rates, in 1838, £524 4s.

CRIMPLESHAM, a parish in the hund. of Clackclose, union of Downham, county of Norfolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Stokesferry. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £8; gross income £74. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Charities, in 1834, £23 per annum, allotted for fuel to the poor. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,680. Houses

58. A. P. £2,258. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 320. Poor rates, in 1838, £183 15s.

CRINGLEFORD, a parish in the hund. of Humbleyard, union of Henstead, county of Norfolk; 3 miles south-west of Norwich, on the post-road. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; of the certified value of £45; gross income £210. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Norwich. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,080. Houses 32. A. P. £1,270. Pop., in 1801, 138; in 1831, 177. Poor rates, in 1838, £147 7s.

CRINOW, a parish in the hund. of Dungleddy, union of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 2 miles north-east of Narberth. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; returned at £4; gross income £81. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Houses 13. A. P. £263. Pop., in 1801, 53; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1838, £13 8s.

CRIPTON, a tything in the parish of Winterbourne-Came, county of Dorset; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Dorchester. Acres 900. Houses 2. Pop., in 1821, 20; in 1831, 18. Other returns with the parish.

CRITCHELL (LONG), a parish in the hund. of Knowlton, union of Wimborne and Cranborne, Shaston (East) division of the county of Dorset; 6 miles west-south-west of Cranborne. Living united, in 1774, to that of Critchell-Moore. There are a Sunday and daily National, and an infant school here. This parish is divided into two tythings and manors called Critchell-Gonis and Critchell-Lucy; the former western, and the latter eastern. Acres 2,310. Houses 21. A. P. £976. Pop., in 1801, 91; in 1831, 138. Poor rates, in 1838, £55 8s.

CRITCHELL-MOORE, a parish in the hund. of Badbury, union of Wimborne and Cranborne, Shaston (East) division of the county of Dorset; 6 miles south-west of Cranborne. Living, a rectory with that of Long Critchell, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; rated at £12 13s. 8^{d.}; gross income £431; nett income £371. Patron, in 1835, H. C. Sturt, Esq. Many children in this parish attend a daily school at Witchampton. Acres 2,020. Houses 66. A. P. £1,721. Pop., in 1801, 268; in 1831, 304. Poor rates, in 1838, £86 7s.

CROCK-STREET, a hamlet partly in the parish of Donyatt, and partly in the parish of Combe-St.-Nicholas, county of Somerset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-west of Ilminster. There are extensive potteries here. Returns with the respective parishes.

CROCKERNE-PILL, a hamlet in the parish of Easton in Gordano, county of Somerset; 5 miles west-north-west of Bristol; on the southern bank of the Avon, near its confluence with the Severn. Returns with the parish.

CROCKERNE-TORR, a high rock in the forest of Dartmoor, parish of Lydford, Devon, where the parliament for stannary causes is held. The table and seats are hewn out of the rocks. See Risdon's Devonshire.

CROCKERNE-WELL, a hamlet in the parish of Bishop-Cheriton, Devon; 7 miles south-west of Crediton. It has been greatly admired for the beautiful wooded scenery with which it is surrounded. It had a chapel which is now a malt-house. Returns with the parish.

CROFT, a parish in the hund. of Wolphy, union of Leominster, county of Hereford; 5 miles north-west of Leominster. Living, a discharged rectory with the vicarage of Yarpole, in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £7 11s. 3^{d.}; gross income £283. Patron, in 1835, E. H. Kevell, Esq. Children attend the Croft and Yarpole National school. Acres 1,860. Houses 22. A. P. £1,722. Pop., in 1801, 119; in 1831, 128.

CROFT. See SOUTHWORTH and CHROFT.

CROFT, a parish in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, union of Blaby, county of Leicester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Hinckley; bounded on the east by the river Soar. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12 3s. 4d.; gross income £584. Tithes commuted in 1779. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. T. Adnutt. There are three daily schools here. Acres 1,010. Houses 52. A. P. £1,553. Pop., in 1801, 255; in 1831, 284. Poor rates, in 1838, £103 9s.

CROFT, a parish in the Marsh division of the wapentake of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Spilsby, on the river Steeping. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £23 7s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £390. Patron, in 1835, Lord Monson. There is a daily school here. Acres 5,840. Houses 87. A. P. £9,156. Pop., in 1801, 379; in 1831, 546. Poor rates, in 1838, £229 8s.

CROFT, a parish in the wapentake of Gilling-East, union of Darlington, north riding of Yorkshire; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Richmond; intersected by the Croft branch of the Darlington railway, which forms part of the Great North of England line, and was purchased for that line, together with several pieces of land contiguous, in 1839, at the price of £20,000. The length of this branch is $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles. For public safety, 2 bridges are to be erected, one across the Stockton turnpike, and the other across the Hurworth highway. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £21 8s. 4d.; gross income £950; nett income £825. Patron, the Crown. There is a Roman Catholic chapel here. Charities, in 1821, £9 13s. 8d. per annum. There are here 2 daily schools. See CHROFT—the township. Acres, returned under the three townships of Croft, Dalton-upon-Tees, and Stapleton, 7,060. Houses 117. A. P. £9,105. Pop., in 1801, 543; in 1831, 692. Poor rates, in 1838, £302 6s.

CROFT, a township in the above parish; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Darlington, on the southern bank of the Teda. There is a daily school here, endowed with £4 4s. 4d. per annum. A little to the west of this village is a strongly sulphurous spring, which is in considerable repute. This village gave birth to Bishop Burnet, author of the Sacred Theory of the Earth. Acres 4,700. Houses 61. A. P. £5,135. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 375. Poor rates, in 1838, £222 18s.

CROFTON, a manor in the parish of Orpington, county of Kent; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Foot's Cray. This manor is said to have once been a parish of itself.

CROFTON. See DIDDLEBURY.

CROFTON, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Agbrigg, west riding of Yorkshire; 4 miles south-east of Wakefield. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £10 0s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £334. Patron, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. Charities, in 1826, £13 11s. 6d., £11 1s. 6d. of which applied to parochial purposes. There was also a right to £5 every five years. There are a daily and a boarding school here. Acres 970. Houses 67. A. P. £2,405. Pop., in 1801, 535; in 1831, 361. Poor rates, in 1838, £172 15s.

CROFTON-QUARTER, a township in the parish of Thursby, Cumberland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Wigton; on the northern bank of the river Wampool, and close upon the Carlisle railway.

Houses 14. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 106. ~~See~~ returns with the parish.

CROGDEAN, a township in the parish of Kirk-whelpington, Northumberland; 15 miles west of Morpeth. Houses 2. Pop., in 1801, 14; in 1831, 9. Other returns with the parish.

CROGLIN, a parish in Leath ward, union of Penrith, county of Cumberland; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Kirkoswald, on the northern bank of the Croglin. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £8, returned at £133; gross income £223. Tithes commuted in 1846. Patron, in 1835, William Clark, Esq. There is a daily and a day and Sunday National school here, one of which was built by subscription, and endowed with £24 2s. per annum, besides other funds. Other charities, in 1820, £1 per annum. Acres 9,150. Houses 69. A. P. £1,461. Pop., in 1801, 169; in 1831, 362. Poor rates, in 1838, £48 9s.

CROMER, a parish, formerly a market-town, in the hund. of North Erpingham, union of Erpingham, county of Norfolk; 21 miles north of Norwich, and 13 miles west by south of Wells. Acres 800. Houses 244. A. P. £1,673. Pop., in 1801, 676; in 1831, 1,232. The old town was walled, of which there are still vestiges. The new town stands mostly upon a high cliff, and commands a magnificent view of the bay of Cromer, which is called "the Devil's throat" by seamen, from the heavy sea generally rolling into it and the consequent danger of its navigation. Life-boats are stationed here. There are 4 light-houses between Cromer and Yarmouth, and there was formerly 1 about a mile east of the town, called the Foulness light-house, which was taken down in 1832, and a new one built further inland, as the surf, which is here making daily encroachments, had swept away a large portion of the cliff on which it stood. This place, originally called Shipdon, was formerly of greater extent than at present, having two parish churches, one of which, with nearly the whole of the ancient town, has been swept away by the sea. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £9 4s. 9d., returned at £80; gross income £102. Patron, the bishop of Ely. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, and there are 7 daily schools, one of which was endowed, in 1505, by Sir B. Read, with £10 per annum, and farther by the Goldsmiths company, in 1821, with a voluntary contribution of £76 per annum; and by subscriptions to an indefinite amount. It is conducted as a National school. Town lands, in 1832, £18 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, £405 7s. Beacon hill, and the ruins of Beerton regis abbey, are principal objects of attraction to the numerous visitors, who frequent this now rather celebrated place, as a bathing station. The atmosphere is salubrious, the scenery picturesque, and the beach excellent. The inhabitants are chiefly fishermen, who subsist a great part of the season by taking lobsters and herrings, which are here abundant. There is no harbour, but vessels of 60 to 100 tons burden unload at ebb-tide into carts driven alongside of them. The imports are chiefly coals; the exports corn. There is a fair annually on Whit-Monday.

CROMFORD, or CRUMBEFORD, a township and market town in the parish of Wirksworth, county of Derby; 15 miles north-north-west of Derby and 2 south of Matlock. Houses 233. A. P. £2,409. Pop., in 1801, 1,115; in 1831, 1,291. The Cromford canal joins the Ennwaah canal at Langly bridge. The Great North Midland railway crosses the Cromford canal between Crich and Pentrick. The High Peak or Cromford and Peak Forest railway begins at this canal a mile to the south-east of Cromford, and terminates at the Peak Forest canal at Whalley bridge.* A projected railway, termed the Crich railway, is to unite the Peak with the North Midland railway, near Bull bridge. Thus every facility is afforded to this flourishing township for unlimited and universal traffic. It arose into importance, and was rendered eminent and remarkable, by Sir Richard Arkwright, the regenerator—almost the originator—of the cotton manufacture; when he purchased the Cromford manor, in 1789, having previously established here, in 1771, the first extensive cotton mills that ever were either erected or worked by water power. They are supplied by a never-failing stream of warm water, drained from the mines on Cromford moor, which not only never freezes itself, but prevents the adjoining canal from being frozen throughout the winter. Neither does it ever fluctuate in quantity. The value and advantages of such a stream could not escape the discernment of Sir Richard Arkwright. Darwin thus elegantly describes the complex operations carried on by the improved machinery in Sir Richard Arkwright's mills, at Cromford; clothing dry details of manufacture and machinery, in language which at least displays the consummation of poetic art.

"—Where Derwent guides his dusky floods,
 Through vaulted mountains, and a night of woods,
 ————— the watery god;
 His ponderous oars to slender spindles turns,
 And pours o'er massy wheels his foaming urns;
 ————— emerging Nabalda cool,
 From leathery roods, the vegetable bowl;
 With wiry teeth revolving cards release
 The tangled knots, and smooth the ravel'd fleece
 Next moves the iron hand with fingers fine,
 Combs the wide card, and forms th' eternal line;
 Slew with soft lips the whirling can acquires
 The tender skeins, and wraps in rising spires -
 With quicken'd pace successive rollers move,
 And these retain, and those extend the rove,
 Then fly the spokes, the rapid axis glow;
 While slowly circumsolves the lab'ring wheel below."
Bokanic Garden.

The mills, 2 in number, and houses for the workmen, are built of gritstone procured in the township; which, with the mills themselves, have since continued principally to belong to the family of Sir Richard, who have another mill at Masson, a little higher up the Derwent. In 1838, these mills employed 612 hands, 64 of whom were children, generally paupers, who had previously been taught for a certain period at a free school, built and supported by the proprietors of the mills. The valuable lead mines—for an account of which, see WIRKSWORTH, wapentake and parish;—the manufacture of red lead; the grinding and preparing of calaminaris, the wharfs, the canal and the railroads, together with extensive smelting mills, a hat manufactory, and worsted mills, at Lea, in the immediate vicinity, not only give employment to the numerous and increasing population of the parish, but render it—especially the town of Cromford—of commercial importance. In 1790, Sir Richard Arkwright obtained a grant of a market, which is now held every Saturday. The Rock House, the seat of the Arkwrights, is built on a high limestone rock, overlooking a beautiful part of the Derwent vale. The township has been beautified by extensive plantations. The church, a small but neat stone building, was founded by Sir Richard Arkwright; and, in 1797, completed and endowed by his son, Richard Arkwright, Esq. Augmentations were also subsequently made to it by the latter; by the administrators of Queen Anne's bounty, and by parliamentary grant. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £98; gross income £96. Patron, in 1835, R. Arkwright, Esq. There are 2 daily and 2 day and Sunday schools here. In 1651, an alms-house for 6 poor widows was founded by Lady Armyne. Income, in 1830, £16 10s. Poor rates, in 1838, £369 1s. Some years ago 200 Roman coins were found in a hole of a rock near Cromford. There is here a curious association for insuring the lives of cows.

* The length of this railway is about 34 miles and in its course it passes over some high land; its greatest elevation being 990 feet above the level of the Cromford canal. This ascent is accomplished by means of several inclined planes up which the waggons are drawn by stationary steam engines. The summit level is maintained for 12½ miles, and in its course the railway passes through a hill by means of a tunnel 638 yards long, and is then level to the end. The rails are built, contrary to the now almost universal practice, of cast-iron, and have been adopted instead of malleable iron. They are cast into lengths of 4 feet each, which weigh 84 lbs. or 63 lbs. per yard.

CROMHALL-ABBOT'S with CROMHALL-LYON, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Berkeley, union of Thornbury, county of Gloucester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Wicks. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £16 19s. 2d.; gross income £468. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £382 17s. 6d. Patron, the provost and fellows of Oriel college, Oxford. Charities, in 1833, £4 17s. 5d. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,810. Houses 157. A. P. £4,544. Pop., in 1801, 550; in 1831, 760. Poor rates, in 1838, £181 17s.

CROMPTON, a township in the parish of Oldham-cum-Prestwich, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4 miles south-south-east of Rochdale. There are 7 daily schools in this township, which contains extensive cotton-manufactories. By the reform act it is included within the boundaries of Oldham. Acres 2,290. Houses 1,158. A. P., in 1814, £7,027; in 1829, £11,263. Pop., in 1801, 3,432; in 1831, 7,004. Poor rates, in 1838, £898 18s.

CROMWELL, a parish in the north division of the wapentake of Thurgarton, union of Southwell, county of Nottingham; 5 miles north of Newark, on the western bank of the Trent. Living, a rector formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 2s. 3d.; gross income £420. Tithes commuted in 1778. Patron, in 1835, the duke of Newcastle. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,170. Houses 32. A. P. £2,105. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 184. Poor rates, in 1838, £108 3s.

CRONDALL HUNDRED, in the Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton. Area 28,220 acres. Houses 875. Pop., in 1831, 5,209.

CRONDALL, a parish in the hund. of Crondall, union of Hartley Wintney, Basingstoke division, county of Southampton; 3 miles north-west of Farmham in Surrey. Living, a vicarage, in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £22 5s. 7½d.; gross income £454. Patron, the master of St. Cross Hospital, Winchester. The Independents have a chapel here; the church was formed in 1798. There are 2 day and Sunday National schools, one of which is endowed with £37 3s. 2d. per annum, and a daily school, in this parish. Acres 9,540 Houses and pop. returned separately under the tythings of Ewshott, Dippenhall, Crondall with Swanthorpe and Crookham. Houses 283. A. P. £8,783. Pop., in 1801, 1,556; in 1831, 2,010. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,297 10s.

CRONDALL AND SWANTHORPE, a tything in the parish of Crondall, county of Southampton. Houses 72. Pop., in 1811, 460; in 1831, 510. Other returns with the parish.

CRONTON, a township in the parish of Prescot, co.-palatine of Lancaster, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-east of Prescot. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres

1,000. Houses 69. A. P. £1,916. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 293. Poor rates, in 1838, £193 13s.

CROOK and BILLY-ROW, a township in the parish of Brancepeth, co.-palatine of Durham, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Bishop-Auckland; on a branch of the river Wear. There is a daily school here. Acres 4,310. Houses 35. A. P. £2,210. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 200. Poor rates, in 1838, £112 14s.

CROOK, a chapelry in the parish of Kendal, county of Westmoreland; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Kendal. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; valued at £7 5s., returned at £60; gross income £59. Patrons, the proprietors of the chapelry. There is a daily school here. Acreage with the parish. Houses 46. A. P. £1,109. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 246. Poor rates, in 1838, £71 13s.

CROOKDALE. See BROMFIELD, Cumberland.

CROOKHOUSE, a township in the parish of Kirk-Newton, Northumberland; 6 miles west-north-west of Wooler, on the northern bank of the river Glen. Acreage with the parish. Houses 2. A. P. £307. Pop., in 1801, 14; in 1831, 20. Poor rates, in 1838, £3 15s.

CROOKHAM, a tything in the parish of Cron-dall, county of Southampton; 4 miles north-east by east of Odiham, close on the Basingstoke canal. Here is a presbyterian chapel licensed under the new marriage act. Houses 87. Pop., in 1811, 589; in 1831, 650. Other returns with the parish.

CROOM. See SLEMMERE with CROOM.

CROOME (EARLS), or CROME SIMON, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Upton-upon-Severn, county of Worcester; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east of Upton-upon-Severn. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £7 8s. 1½d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Charles Dunne. Charities, in 1830, £17 per annum; besides 5 tenements inhabited by paupers. Acres 1,650. Houses 40. A. P. £1,904. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 192. Poor rates, in 1838, £50.

CROOME-D'ABITOT, or CROMB-OSBERN, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Upton-upon-Severn, county of Worcester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Pershore, near the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a rectory united to that of Pirton, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £7; gross income £488. Patron, in 1835, the earl of Coventry. Charities, in 1830, 3s. 6d. Acres 1,510. Houses 25. A. P. £1,599. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 144. Poor rates, in 1838, £85.

CROOME-HILL, or HULL-CROME, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Upton-upon-Severn, county of Worcester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Upton-upon-Severn. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £7 10s. 5d.; gross income £200. Tithes commuted in 1771. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1830, £18 10s. There is a daily school here. Acres 840. Houses 40. A. P. £1,722. Pop., in 1801, 169; in 1831, 215. Poor rates, in 1838, £80.

CROPREDY, a parish in the hund. and union of Banbury, county of Oxford; 4 miles north of Banbury, intersected by the Oxford canal. Living, a vicarage with the curacies of Wardington, Mollington, and Claydon, in the dio. of Oxford, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of Lincoln; rated at £26 10s. 10d.; gross income £624. Tithes commuted in 1774, of Claydon in 1775, of Great Bourton and Little Bourton in 1777, and Mollington in 1797. Patron, the bishop of Oxford. There are in this parish 6 daily and 4 day and Sunday, 2 of which are National, schools, and 2 of them endowed, one with £15, and the other, which is the Great and Little Bourton School, with £29 per annum. Other charities, in 1824, £52 5s. Acres, including the chapelries of Claydon, Mollington, and Wardington, with the hamlets of Great and Little Bourton, Prescott, &c., 8,460. Houses 553. A. P. £17,513. Pop., in 1801, 1,913; in 1831, 2,601. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,489 4s.

CROPSTON, a township in the parish of Thurstaston, county of Leicester; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Mount-Sorrel. Tithes commuted in 1781. Acres 890. Houses 26. A. P. £827. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 115. Poor rates, in 1838, £38 8s.

CROPTHORNE, a parish in the middle division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Pershore, county of Worcester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of Pershore, on the southern bank of the Avon. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £14 17s. 3½d. No return. Tithes of Charlton commuted in 1776. Others in 1779. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Worcester. Charities, in 1830, £17 per annum. There are 4 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with the interest of £200. Acres, including the hamlets of Charlton and Netherton, 3,520. Houses 156. A. P. £7,253. Pop., in 1801, 570; in 1831, 690. Poor rates, in 1838, £183 18s.

CROPTON, a township in the parish of Middleton, north riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Pickering, on the eastern bank of the Severn. Tithes of manor commuted in 1765. There are 2 daily schools in this township, one of which is endowed with 12 acres of land. Acres 3,810. Houses 64. A. P. £1,718. Pop., in 1821, 321; in 1831, 330. Poor rates, in 1838, £73 10s.

CROPWELL-BISHOP, or GREAT-CROPHILL, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Bingham, union of Bingham, county of Nottingham; 8 miles east-south-east of Nottingham, bounded on the east by the river Smithe, and close on the Grantham Canal. The living is a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the collegiate church of Southwell; rated at £5 3s. 4d., returned at £84; gross income £130. Tithes commuted in 1802. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,380. Houses 94. A. P. £1,706. Pop., in 1801, 307; in 1831, 473. Poor rates, in 1838, £132 11s.

CROPWELL-BUTLER, or LITTLE-CROPHILL, a hamlet in the parish of Tythby, county of Nottingham; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Nottingham. Tithes of lordship commuted in 1787. Acres 2,080. Houses 107. A. P. £2,592. Pop., in 1801, 362; in 1831, 551. Poor rates, in 1838, £106 5s.

CROSBY, a township in the parish of Cross-Cannonby, Cumberland; 3 miles north-east by east of Maryport, near the Maryport and Carlisle railway. Acreage with the parish. Houses 40. A. P. £1,520. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 197.

CROSBY, a township in the parish of Bottesford, parts of Lindsey, county of Lincoln, 8 miles north-west of Glandford-bridge. There is a daily school here. Acres 740. Houses 40. A. P. £1,850. Pop., in 1801, 180; in 1831, 174. Poor rates, in 1838, £94.

CROSBY, a township in the parish of Leak north riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Thirsk. Acres 1,430. Houses 5. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 37. Poor rates, in 1838, £26 13s.

CROSBY-UPON-EDEN, a parish in Eskdale ward, union of Carlisle, Cumberland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by east of Carlisle. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £3 11s. 5½d., returned at £140; gross income £105. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. The church is situated in the township of Low Crosby. Charities, in 1820, £2 per annum. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 3,590. Houses and pop. returned separately under the townships of Brunstock, Crosby-High, Crosby-Low, and Walby, of which the parish is composed. Houses 85. A. P. £2,161. Pop., in 1801, 357; in 1831, 497. Poor rates, in 1838, £137 8s.

CROSBY (HIGH), a township in the same parish, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by east of Carlisle. Houses 24. Pop., in 1801, 102; in 1831, 183. Other returns with the parish.

CROSBY (LOW), a township in the above parish; 5 miles east by north of Carlisle. Houses 37. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 204. Other returns with the parish.

CROSBY-GARRET, or GERARD, a township and parish in East ward, union of East ward, Westmoreland; 3 miles west by north of Kirby-Stephen, bounded on the north-east by the river Eden, and on the south-west by Crosby-Fell, at the foot of which it stands in a deep secluded and romantic valley. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, rated at £19 4s. 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; in the parliamentary returns at £127; gross income £107. Patron, in 1835, W. Crawford, Esq. There is a daily school here, endowed with £7 9s. 2d. per annum. Other charities, in 1822, £5 16s. 8d. This parish consists of two detached portions, Crosby-Garret, and Little-Musgrave, having the chapelry of Soulbey, a part of the parish of Kirby-Stephen, interposed between them. Acres 4,580. Houses 53. A. P. £1,795. Pop., in 1801, 245; in 1831, 286. Poor rates, in 1838, £41 8s. Acres of the township 3,470. Houses 42. A. P. £1,117. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 211. Poor rates, in 1838, £25 15s.

CROSBY (GREAT), a chapelry in the parish of Sephton, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7 miles north-north by west of Liverpool. It is a thriving pleasant village, much frequented for sea-bathing. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; returned at £95; gross income £121. Patron, the rector of Sephton. There are 6 daily schools here; one, a free grammar-school, was endowed in 1618 by James Harrison; and another, containing 60 girls, is also endowed with £25 per annum. Acres 1,900. Houses 216. A. P. £3,237. Pop., in 1801, 425; in 1831, 1,201. Poor rates, in 1838, £169 11s.

CROSBY (LITTLE), a township in the parish of Sephton, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north-west of Liverpool. There is a dissenting chapel here licensed under the new marriage act. Acres 1,750. Houses 56. A. P. £2,408. Pop., in 1801, 317; in 1831, 414. Poor rates, in 1838, £200 14s.

CROSBY-RAVENSWORTH, a parish in West ward, union of West ward, county of Westmoreland; 4 miles north of Orton, in a valley on the river Lyvennet. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £7 13s. 4d.; gross income £151. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. F. G. Howard. There are 4 daily schools here, 3 of which possess endowments. Limestone is plentiful in this parish. Acres 15,460. Houses 159. A. P. £7,313. Pop., in 1801, 789; in 1831, 928. Poor rates, in 1838, £388 6s.

CROSCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of White-stone, union of Shepton-Mallet, county of Somerset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west-north-west of Shepton-Mallet, on the river Brae. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £12 6s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £241. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Elizabeth Wylie. This parish possesses 5 daily schools. An annual fair is held here on Lady-day. Acres 1,420. Houses 182. A. P. £2,771. Pop., in 1801, 705; in 1831, 803. Poor rates, in 1838, £272 13s.

CROSS ST. (HOSPITAL OF). See WINCHESTER. CROSS (ST.), in the parish of Carisbrook, Isle of Wight; 1 mile north of Carisbrook. Before A.D. 1155, here was a priory or hospital, dedicated to the Holy Cross.

CROSS (ST.), SOUTH ELMHAM or SAND-CROFT, a parish in the hund. and union of Wangford, county of Suffolk; 5 miles south-south-west of Bungay, bounded on the west by the river Waveney. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Homersfield. In 1835 there was a school of industry here, supported by Alexander Adam, Esq. of Hixton-hall. Acres 1,110. Houses 28. A. P. £1,331. Pop., in 1801, 203; in 1831, 234. Poor rates, in 1838, £188 9s.

CROSS-CANNONBY. See CANNONBY CROSS. CROSSFELL, a mountain in Cumberland, which rises to the height of 2,901 feet above the level of the sea. It is situated in the parish of Kirkland, ward of Leath.

CROSSLAND (SOUTH), a township in the parish of Almondbury, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-south-west of Huddersfield, east of the river Colne. There are 4 daily schools here, one of which, containing 60 pupils, is endowed by Godphrey Beaumont with £3 per annum. Acres 1,560. Houses 409. A. P. £4,732. Pop., in 1801, 1,221; in 1831, 2,258. Poor rates, in 1838, £595 7s.

CROSTHWAITE AND LYTHER, a chapelry in the parish of Heversham, Westmoreland; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Kendal, on a branch of the river Kent. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, returned at £110; gross income £125. Patrons, the land-owners and vicar of Heversham. The chapel was rebuilt at the expense of the inhabitants. There are lime-kilns, a paper-mill, and a hoop manufactory here. There are 3 daily schools here. Acres 7,880. Houses 119. A. P. £5,218. Pop., in 1801, 509; in 1831, 721. Poor rates, in 1838, £219 16s.

CROSTHWAITE, a parish partly in Allerdale ward, below Derwent, and partly in Allerdale ward, above Derwent, union of Cockermouth, Cumberland; 1 mile north-west of Keswick, and 10 east-south-east of Cockermouth. Acres 58,330. Houses 839. A. P. £15,821. Pop., in 1811, 3,547; in 1831, 4,344. Poor rates, in 1838, £952 12s. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £50 6s. 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £319. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. There are 23 daily schools here, one of which is a day and Sunday National school, and one a free grammar-school, containing 200 pupils, supported by endowment. The income of this school, the original foundation of which is obscure, amounted, in 1820, to £99 4s. per annum. Charities, applied to parochial purposes, £222 15s. 10d. Other charities about £85, besides a school-house, unendowed in St. John's chapelry, and grazings in the parish for 14 cows. This very extensive parish, which comprises the townships of Braithwaite, Coledale, or Portingale, Keswick, and Under Skiddaw, and the chapelries of Borrowdale, Newland, Thornwaite, St. John's, Castlerigg, and Wythburn, abounds with picturesque, sublime, and celebrated scenery. It comprehends the universally admired vale of Keswick, with its beautiful villas and hamlets, the lakes of Derwent-water, Thirlmere, or Leathes-water, and part of Bassenthwaite (all which, with its townships and chapelries, see). The rugged mountains in this vicinity, are rich in copper, and lead ores, with abundance of plumbago. In 1838 there were 8 woollen mills, employing 176 hands, within this parish.

CROSTON, a parish in the hund. of Leyland, union of Chorley, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 6 miles west of Chorley, on the river Yarrow, and bounded on the west by the Douglas. This was anciently a market-town and a parish of great extent, but several parishes have at intervals been taken from it. Living, a rectory and vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £31 11s. 10½d.; gross income £1,641; nett income £1,538. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. S. Master. This parish possesses 19 daily schools, one of which is National. Exclusive of Durning free-school in Bispham, and the Bretherton free-school,—which see,—there is a school in this parish endowed with £18 7s. per annum, and a school of industry endowed with £6 13s. 7d., but chiefly supported by subscription. Besides a considerable interest in Latham's charity to 17 townships, in which Croston, Bispham, Mawdesley, and Ulmes-Walton, are included, and which, in all, amounts to £372 7s. 6d. per annum; there are alma-houses for 7 paupers, and other charities, connected with this parish, amounting, in 1825, to about £135 per annum. It has an annual fair the Monday preceding Shrove-Tuesday. Acres returned under the chapelries of Hesketh with Beconsall, and Tarleton, with the townships of Bispham, Bretherton, Croston, Mawdesley, and Ulmes-Walton, 17,840. Houses 1,103. A. P. £30,997. Pop., in 1801, 4,235; in 1831, 6,278. Poor rates, in 1838, £2,002 19s. Acres of the township, 2,390. Houses 243. A. P. £6,216. Pop., in 1801, 915; in 1831, 1,398. Poor rates, in 1838, £488 4s.

CROSTON, or CROSS-STONE, a chapelry in the parish of Halifax, west riding of Yorkshire; 10 miles west-south-west of Halifax, near the York and Manchester railway. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; returned at £90; gross income £130. Patron, the vicar of Halifax.

CROSTWICK, a parish in the hund. of Taverham, union of St. Faith's, county of Norfolk; 3 miles south-south-west of Coltishall, near a branch of the Bure. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £2 17s. 6d. No return. Patron, the bishop of Norwich. Charities, in 1832, £1 10s. per annum. Acres 550. Houses 27. A. P. £763. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 143. Poor rates, in 1838, £35 17s.

CROSTWIGHT, a parish in the hund. of Tunstead, union of Tunstead and Happing, Norfolk; 3½ miles east by south of Walsham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 6s. 8d., returned at £67 2s. 6d.; gross income £70. Patron, in 1835, M. Shepherd, Esq. Charities, in 1832, £1 per annum. Acres 710. Houses 11. A. P. £516. Pop., in 1801, 69; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1838, £64 6s.

CROUGHTON, a township in the parish of St. Oswald, co.-palatine of Chester; 4½ miles north-north-east of Chester; near the Mersey canal. Acres 310. Houses 4. A. P. £399. Pop., in 1801, 33; in 1831, 39. Poor rates, in 1838, £23 12s.

CROUGHTON, a parish in the hund. of King's-Sutton, union of Brackley, Northampton; 3½ miles south-west of Brackley. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £15 3s. 6½d.; gross income £324. Tithes commuted in 1807. Patron, in 1835, Viscount Ashbrook. Charities, in 1825, £2 12s. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,620. Houses 100. A. P. £2,703. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 450. Poor rates, in 1838, £43 10s.

CROWAN, a parish in the hund. of Penwith, union of Helstone, county of Cornwall; 5½ miles north-north-west of Helstone. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £11 9s. 2d.; gross income £559; nett income £451. Patron, Sir J. St. Aubyn, Bart. There are twelve daily schools here, one of which, a Lancasterian school, contains about 120 boys, and is maintained by Sir J. St. Aubyn, Bart. Acres 7,340. Houses 773. A. P. £13,175. Pop., in 1801, 2,587; in 1831, 4,332. Poor rates, in 1838, £961 15s.

CROWBOROUGH. See BLACKWOOD and CROWBOROUGH.

CROWCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemanners, union of Williton, county of Somerset; 7 miles north-north-east of Wiveliscombe. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £32 14s. 4½d. No return. Patron, in 1835, Robert Harvey, Esq. There are one day and Sunday National, and four daily schools in this parish, one of which is a boys' school, endowed with about £30 per annum; and another, a girls' school, endowed with £10 per annum. This was formerly a market-town and borough. It is still governed by a portreeve. The market-day is Tuesday, and fairs are annually held 1st Friday of May, 1st Monday after 1st of August, and 28th October. Acres 3,220. Houses 91. A. P. £3,553. Pop., in 1801, 575; in 1831, 691. Poor rates, in 1838, £306 9s.

CROWDON. See CROYDON WITH CLAPTON.

CROWELL, a parish in the hund. of Lewknor, union of Thame, county of Oxford; 4½ miles east-south-east of Tetworth. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £7 9s. 9½d.; gross income £206. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £245 9s. 1d. In the patronage, in 1835, of Baroness Wenman. Charities, in 1822, £2 7s. 6d. per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,160. Houses 30. A. P. £1,013. Pop., in 1801, 149; in 1831, 159. Poor rates, in 1838, £58 2s.

CROWFIELD, a parochial-chapelry connected with the parish of Coddensham, Suffolk; 4½ miles east-north-east of Needham, in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Coddensham. There are one Sunday and daily National, and two daily schools here. Acres 2,280. Houses 73. A. P. £1,350. Pop., in 1801, 250; in 1831, 340. Poor rates, in 1838, £243.

CROWHURST, a parish in the lower division of the hund. of Tandridge, union of Godstone, county of Surrey; 3½ miles south-east of Godstone, west of the Broad Mead water. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £34; gross income £65. Patron, in 1835, George Rush, Esq. Charities, in 1824, £4 per annum. Acres 2,250. Houses 36. A. P. 1,655. Pop., in 1801, 186; in 1831, 212. Poor rates, in 1838, £198 3s.

CROWHURST, a parish in the hund. of Baldslow, rape of Hastings, union of Battle, county of Sussex; 2½ miles south of Battle. A small streamlet flows through the parish. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £10; gross income £195. Patron, in 1835, J. C. Pelham, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,180. Houses 51. A. P. £1,645. Pop., in 1801, 321; in 1831, 370. Poor rates, in 1838, £172 11s.

CROWLAND. See CROYLAND.

CROWLE, a small market-town and parish in the west division of the wapentake of Manley, union of Thorne, county of Lincoln; 5½ miles east-east by south of Thorne in Yorkshire, bounded, on the west, by the river Don, and on the east by the river Trent. The Stainforth and Keadley canal is in the vicinity. It includes the township of Eastoft. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Stow and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £14 10s.; gross income £900; nett income £777. Tithes commuted in 1813. Patron, in 1836, the Rev. G. Egremont. There are here places of worship for the Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists. There are nine daily schools in this parish, one of which is endowed. During the months of March, April, and May, sheep and cattle markets are held every alternate Monday. Fairs are also annually held on last Monday in May, and 22d November, for cattle, flax, hemp, &c. Acres 7,350. Houses 412. A. P. £8,320. Pop., in 1801, 1,471; in 1831, 2,113. Poor rates, in 1836, £505 10s.

CROWLE, a parish, partly in the middle division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, and partly in the upper division of the hund. of Halfshire, union of Droitwich, county of Worcester; 5 miles south-south-east of Droitwich, near a branch of the Avon, and in the vicinity of the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £16; gross income £308. Tithes commuted in 1806. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Harrison. Charities, in 1830, £18 5s. 9d. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,640. Houses 117. A. P. £2,267. Pop., in 1801, 346; in 1831, 526. Poor rates, in 1838, £85 8s.

CROWLEY, a township in the parish of Great Budworth, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles north of Northwich. Acres 1,440. Houses 22. A. P. £1,775. Pop., in 1801, 147; in 1831, 138. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 5s.

CROWMARSH-GIFFORD, a parish in the hund. of Langtree, union of Wallingford, county of Oxford; half-a-mile east by north of Wallingford. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £12 6s. 0½d.; gross income £187. Patrons, in 1835, the trustees of the late Bishop Barrington. Charities, in 1822, £2 16s. per annum. This parish has been included, by the reform act, within the boundaries of Wallingford. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 480. Houses 56. A. P. £867. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 325. Poor rates, in 1838, £140 8s.

CROWNTHORPE, a parish in the hund. and union of Forehoe, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles north-west of Wymondham, on the river Yare. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £4 12s. 6d., returned at £125 10s.; gross income £138. Patron, in 1835, Lord Wodehouse. Charities, in 1834, 10s. per annum. Acres 520. Houses 13. A. P. £826. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 106. Poor rates, in 1838, £96 13s.

CROWTHORNE AND MINETY HUNDRED, in the eastern division of the county of Gloucester. It lies upon the southern extremity of Cirencester. Area 33,720 acres. Houses 1,219. Pop., in 1831, 5,766.

CROWTON, a township in the parish of Weaverham, co.-palatine of Chester; 5½ miles west of Northwich; near the Birmingham Grand Junction railway. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,260. Houses 77. A. P. £1,970. Pop., in 1801, 297; in 1831, 361. Poor rates, in 1838, £148 3s.

CROXALL WITH EDINGHALL, a parish partly in the north division of the hund. of Offlow, county of Stafford, and partly in the hund. of Bepton and Gresley, union of Tamworth, county of Derby; 6½ miles north of Tamworth, on the river Meese, and close upon the Birmingham and Derby railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £5; gross income £520. Tithes commuted in 1791. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1824, £3 12s. per annum. There is a day and Sunday school here, with a lending library attached, and a day National school. Acres, including the townships of Catton and Oakley, 3,160. Houses 40. A. P. £5,968. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 292. Poor rates, in 1838, £124 16s.

CROXBURY, a parish in the south division of the wapentake of Walshcroft, union of Caister, county of Lincoln; 5 miles east-south-east of Caister. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 4s. 2d.; gross income £120. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 1,690. Houses 6. A. P. £905. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 73.

CROXDALE, a chapelry in that part of the parish of St. Oswald, which is in the south division of Easington ward, co.-palatine of Durham; 3 miles south of Durham, and close on the Great North of England railway. Living, a curacy returned at £70. Patron, the curate of St. Oswald, Durham. There is here a Roman Catholic chapel, licensed under the new marriage act.

CROXDEN, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Totmonslow, union of Uttoxeter, county of Stafford; 5½ miles north-north-west of Uttoxeter, in the neighbourhood of the Uttoxeter canal. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; returned at £58 12s. 11d.; gross income £92. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Macclesfield. There is a daily and a Sunday and daily National school here, one of which is endowed with £5 per annum for teaching 12 children. A Cistercian monastery was founded here, A. D. 1176, whose yearly revenues were, 26° Henry VIII., £90 5s. 11d. The remains of this once stately edifice are in good preservation, and exhibit beautiful specimens of the early style of English architecture. Acres, including Great Yate township, 2,400. Houses 44. A. P. £2,645. Pop., in 1801, 238; in 1831, 272. Poor rates, in 1838, £162 12s.

CROXTETH-PARK, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4 miles west-north-west of Prescott. Here is the seat of the earl of Sefton. Acres 710. Houses 5. A. P. £1,291. Pop., in 1801, 14; in 1831, 42.

CROXTON, a parish in the hund. of Longstow, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; 4½ miles west of Caxton. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £14 8s. 6½d.; gross income £203. Tithes commuted in 1811. Patron, in 1835, S. Newton, Esq. Charities, in 1836, £36 3s. per annum. There is a daily school here, with a free school-house, and a small endowment. Acres 1,901. Houses 39. A. P. £1,425. Pop., in 1801, 171; in 1831, 245. Poor rates, in 1838, £189 3s.

CROXTON, a township in the parish of Middlewich, co.-palatine of Chester; 1 mile north-north-west of Middlewich; bounded on the south and west by the river Dane. Acres 430. Houses 4. A. P. £1,540. Pop., in 1801, 45; in 1831, 17. Poor rates, in 1838, £103.

CROXTON, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Yarborough, parts of Lindsey, union of Glandford-bridge, county of Lincoln; 7 miles north-east by east of Glandford-bridge. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 14s. 2d.; gross income £360. Tithes commuted in 1800. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres, including the hamlet of Yarborough, 1,630. Houses 16. A. P. £1,420. Pop., in 1801, 80; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1838, £32 5s.

CROXTON. See FULMODESTON WITH CROXTON.

CROXTON, a parish in the hund. of Grimshoe, union of Thetford, county of Norfolk; 2 miles north of Thetford. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £100. The church is supposed to have been built by the Saxons. Patrons, the master and fellows of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge. Charities, in 1834, £20 per annum. There is a daily school here. Acres 3,450. Houses 52. A. P. £1,625. Pop., in 1801, 206; in 1831, 278. Poor rates, in 1838, £157 7s.

CROXTON, a township in the parish of Eccleshall, county of Stafford; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west by west of Eccleshall, on the river Sow. Acres 3,790. Houses 166. Pop., in 1811, 702; in 1831, 836. Other returns with the parish.

CROXTON-KEYRIAL, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Grantham, county of Leicester; 9 miles north-east of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £7 14s. 7d.; gross income £208. Tithes commuted in 1766. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Rutland. Charities, in 1837, £69 4s. per annum, £11 8s. of which are expended in the education of poor children, and the remainder principally distributed amongst the poor. There are four daily schools in this parish. A Premonstratensian abbey was built here, A. D. 1162, which was endowed at the suppression with £385 Os. 10d. q. per annum, Dugd. Acres, including Bishopay Place, 3,900. Houses 107. A. P. £5,123. Pop., in 1801, 387; in 1831, 594. Poor rates, in 1838, £217 5s.

CROXTON (South), a parish in the hund. of East Goscote, union of Barrow-on-Soar, county of Leicester; 8 miles south of Grimsdon, on a branch of the river Wreak. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8 3s. 4d.; gross income £130. Tithes of lordship commuted in 1794. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Rutland. Charities, in 1837, £29 7s. 2d. per annum, besides four small houses occupied by paupers. Here are two Sunday and daily National schools. Acres 1,760. Houses 61. A. P. £2,394. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 315. Poor rates, in 1838, £169 1s.

CROYDON, or CROWDON WITH CLAPTON, a parish in the hund. of Armingford, union of Caxton and Arrington, county of Cambridge; 6 miles south of Caxton. Living, a vicarage with the rectory of Clapton or Clopton, in the archd. and dio. of Ely; gross income £451. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £536 12s. Patron, in 1835, J. F. Gape, Esq. Acres 2,655. Houses 81. A. P. £2,274. Pop., in 1801, 288; in 1831, 434. Poor rates, in 1838, £375 9s.

CROYDON, a market-town and parish in the first division of the hund. of Wallington, now invariably denominated the hund. of Croydon, union of Croydon, county of Surrey; 10 miles east-south-east of Kingston, and $9\frac{1}{2}$ south of London; pleasantly situated on the edge of Bansted Downs, near the source of the Wandle, which is enlarged by several streamlets, abounding in trout, and joins the Thames at Wandsworth. There is a line of railway from Croydon southwards to Reigate and Godstone-green, and northwards to Wandsworth, whence there is a navigable communication with the river Thames. Horses are the motive power employed on this railroad. The London and Southampton railway, now open throughout, crosses this railway between Wandsworth and Mitcham. The Croydon and London railway, open throughout from Croydon to the station in Tooley-street, near London bridge, is considered to be a main trunk line, connecting London by its junction with the important Dover and Brighton railways, now in progress, not only with the counties of Kent, Surrey, and Sussex, and with the southern coast, from Deal and Dover to Brighton and Worthing; but, as the south-eastern and Dover line is the national line of the country, and will form the main artery of communication with the continent, the whole of the continental railway traffic with London and England in general, as well as with Scotland and Ireland, will pass through Croydon and along the Croydon and London railway. The Croydon canal, between Croydon and Deptford, was purchased by the proprietors of this railway, at a cost of £40,200, for the purpose of laying the rails partly in its bed. The Croydon railway has become a favourite one with the citizens of London on account of its beautiful scenery. From its opening on 1st June, 1839, and during the 6 months ending 1st January, 1840, 311,319 passengers have travelled on the Croydon railway,—and the money received was £17,666 11s. 3d. Epsom and Croydon are to be connected by a projected railway. This parish is very extensive. It includes eight hamlets within its limits, and a considerable part of the waste called Norwood, which was formerly a forest. The town is large and handsome. It consists chiefly of one long and spacious street. The houses are many of them, modern, some of them elegant, and, generally speaking, all of them substantial and well built. The streets are well paved and lighted. Acres 9,840. Houses 2,229. A. P. £47,017. Pop., in 1801, 5,743; in 1831, 12,447.

Living, a vicarage within the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury in the deanery of Croydon; rated at £21 18s. 9d.; gross income £692. The church was begun by Archbishop Courteney, and finished by Archbishop Chicheley. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. To accommodate the rapidly increasing population, two new chapels—All Saints and St. James—have been erected by the parliamentary commissioners, in the Gothic style. Livings, curacies to the vicarage, and, in the gift of the vicar of Croydon. Besides the established churches, there are here places of worship for Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and the Society of Friends. One of these is licensed under the new marriage act. There are 3 day and Sunday National schools here. There are also almshouses for eight poor people of a respectable class, one of whom is a tutor or master, and one a supernumerary, called the reliever. These almshouses were founded by Elias Davy, and incorporated by letters patent in the reign of Henry VI., and the income derived from their endowments amounted, in 1837, to £189 13s. 6d., chiefly expended on the alms-people. There are also little almshouses for 12 paupers, with an endowment of £9 per annum. An hospital was founded here at an expense of £2,700, in the 38th year of Elizabeth, by John Whitgift, then archbishop of Canterbury, named the hospital of the Holy Trinity, and consisting of a warden, a schoolmaster, and 30, or any number under 40, poor brethren or sisters. The rental of the property belonging to this hospital, in 1836, amounted to £2,028 3s. 4d.; and there were other minor sources of revenue to a small extent. The building, called the hospital, contains 33 dwellings, a chapel, &c., besides a school and schoolmaster's house. The establishment, in 1837, consisted of 34 brethren and sisters, including the schoolmaster and warden. They are all appointed by the archbishop of Canterbury, who is the special visitor, and they must all be 60 years of age. One-half must belong to the parish of Lambeth, and one-half to the parish of Croydon. There may, however, be nominations from the archbishop's household. The estates are managed by the brethren, and the revenues, in a great measure, shared amongst them. The school-house, built by the founder, was given up to the subscribers for a National school established here. Henry Smith's charities, for behoof of the indigent in this parish, produced, in 1824, £213 per annum. Other charities about £275,—of which £121 arise from Archbishop Tennison's endowment of a free school, founded by him in 1714, and in which 15 poor boys and 15 poor girls of Croydon were educated. The Croydon and Norwood self-supporting dispensary was instituted in 1835. Poor rates, in 1838, £5,756 3s. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Croydon, by the poor-law commissioners. The Croydon poor-law union comprehends 11 parishes, embracing an area of 49 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 22,113. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £12,583. Expenditure in 1838, £9,856.

A court of requests, for all debts under £5, is held here and at Greenwich, Woolwich, and Brinley, alternately. This is the principal place of election for the members for East Surrey. It is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who here hold weekly petty-sessions. It is governed by a head-constable, petty-constables, &c. A commodious and handsome townhall was some years ago erected, in which, and at Guildford, the summer assizes are alternately held. A police force, on the model of the metropolitan police, was established at Croydon sometime previous to December, 1839, when an extension of the metropolitan police itself was intended to be immediately effected. There is a good gaol in the town; and there are also barracks for a considerable number of troops. Trade has been here for some time very considerable, especially in oats, for the supply of the city of London, and the great facilities now, and to be still further afforded by railways, cannot fail to increase its general trade to a great extent. The market-day, chiefly for grain, is Saturday, and the annual fairs are October 2d, for horses, cattle, and sheep, and October 3d and 4th for walnuts and toys.

Croydon is supposed to have been the ancient Noviomagus; and the Roman road from Arundel to London is said to have passed through it. There is a tradition that it was a royal residence. At the Conquest it was bestowed on Lanfranc, archbishop of Canterbury, whose successors in the see have been lords of the manor ever since. Here, for many ages, was an archiepiscopal palace, where the arch-primate occasionally resided from 1278 to 1757. Here, in 1573, Archbishop Parker entertained Queen Elizabeth and all her retinue, consisting of the principal nobility, for seven days. Having fallen into decay, it was sold in 1780, under the authority of an act of parliament, for £2,500. Soon after it was fitted up as a calico-printing establishment; but it has since been abandoned. The chapel is used as a school of industry. Addington park, with its noble mansion, at about 3 miles distance, was purchased for £25,000, and annexed to the see of Canterbury as a more suitable residence for the archbishop. Addiscombe house, the seat of the first Lord Liverpool, about a mile to the north-east of Croydon, is now a military college for educating cadets for the service of the Honourable the East India company. There are 14 professors and masters employed in the several departments of this college, and from 130 to 150 students. In one of the cuttings of the railway near Croydon, a gold noble of Edward III., in excellent preservation, was found.

On the obverse side is the king in a ship, crowned, and in armour, with sword and shield, the latter bearing the arms of England and France.

CROYLAND, or CROWLAND, an ancient town and parish in the wapentake of Elloe, parts of Holland, union of Peterborough, county of Lincoln; 47 miles south-south-east of Lincoln, and 14 east by north of Stamford, on the eastern bank of the Welland. It includes the extra-parochial liberty of Deeping Fen. The town of Croyland consists principally of four streets, separated by water-courses bordered by willows, which give it a rural and at the same time a romantic aspect. The streets are united by a triangular bridge extending over the Welland, the Nen, and a capacious drain called Catwater. The workmanship of this bridge—which is of the age of Edward II.—is perhaps the greatest curiosity of its kind in Britain, and has been much admired. On one of the wings is a statue of King Ethelbald, supposed to be of the era of the 9th century, and a genuine specimen of Saxon sculpture. It consists of 3 segments of a circle meeting in a central point. This town was at one time surrounded by impassable marshes, which have now been drained and converted into rich meadows and luxuriant corn-fields. Acres 29,070. Houses 546. A. P. £17,339. Pop., in 1801, 1,795; in 1831, 2,716. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,045 16s. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln, returned at £64; gross income £120. Patrons, in 1835, J. Whetsed and the Marquis of Exeter alternately. The church consists of an adaptation of the north aisle of the nave of a partly ruinous old abbey-church. The Wesleyan Methodists have here a place of worship. There are 9 daily and 9 infant schools in this parish. The first great school established in England after the Norman conquest, was founded at Croyland, at the close of the eleventh century. The following was the course of education:—"Early in the morning the young pupils heard the lectures of Brother Odo in grammar. At noon Terricus, a sophist, explained to those of advanced years the logic of Aristotle, with the introduction and comments of Porphyrius and Averroës. Brother William was occupied in the afternoon by an exposition of the rhetoric of Cicero and Quintilian. On Sundays and holidays Gislebert preached in the neighbouring churches, and chiefly directed his arguments against the errors and infidelity of the Jews." In this course the formal sciences alone are included, and its effect must have been to discourage all original investigation. The inhabitants of Croyland are principally occupied in dairying and rearing geese; and in fowling, and fishing,—for the privilege of pursuing the two latter of which occupations, they pay to the Crown, as they originally did to the abbot of Croyland, £300 per annum. The market-day is Saturday, and fairs are held on June 28th and Sept. 5th for cattle, hemp, and flax. Croyland is peculiarly interesting from its great antiquity, its singular bridge, and the ruins of its splendid and extensive abbey which Ethelbald, king of Mercia, built A. D. 716, for Black monks. The foundation was laid in the marshy soil, on piles of oak and ash. After the massacre of the monks and the destruction of the abbey by the Danes, it was rebuilt by Edrid, and being again ruined by fire, it was restored with increased splendour by the abbot Joffried, in 1112. At the general dissolution the manors and estates belonging to it were returned worth £1,083 15s. 10d. ob. per ann. Dugd. The site was granted to Edward, Lord Clinton.

CRUCKTON, a quarter in the parish of Pontesbury, county of Salop, 3 miles west-south-west of Shrewsbury. Pop., in 1811, 345; in 1821, 377. Other returns with the parish.

CRUDWELL, a parish in the hund. and union of Malmesbury, county of Wilts; 4 miles north-north by east of Malmesbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £19 5s. 2d.; gross income £487. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Hardwicke. There is a day and Sunday school here, endowed with £18 per annum. Other charities to poor, in 1834, £19 17s. 4d. per annum. Acres, including the tything of Eastcourt, 4,820. Houses 128. A. P. £5,032. Pop., in 1801, 512; in 1831, 604. Poor rates, in 1838, £326 19s.

CRUGGION, a township in the parish of Abberbury, Montgomeryshire, North Wales; 6½ miles north-east by north of Welshpool, bounded on the north and west by the Severn. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, £44; of those due to All Soul's College, Oxford, £172 14s. 2d. There is a day and Sunday school here. Houses 52. A. P. £1,955. Pop., in 1801, 196; in 1831, 173. Poor rates, in 1838, £145 11s.

CRUMMOCK-WATER, a lake of Cumberland, ¾ of a mile below Buttermere. It is nearly 4 miles in length, and ¾ of a mile in breadth, and lies between the barrier mountain ridges of Melbreak on the west, and Grasmoor on the east. It contains three small islands. The head of the lake is very beautiful, but, except at the head and foot, there is a deficiency of wood on the borders. The principal object of notice at Crummock-Water, is Scale force cascade, in a glen betwixt Melbreak and Blea Crag. The fall is one clear leap of 156 feet, besides a smaller fall below. The scenery, however, is harsh and wild.

CRUMSALL, or CRUMPSALL, a township in the parish of Manchester, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles north of Manchester, on the river Irk. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, and there are 3 daily schools. Acres 660. Houses 347. A. P. £2,910. Pop., in 1801, 452; in 1831, 1,878. Poor rates, in 1838, £184.

CRUNDAL, a parish in the hund. of Wye, lathe of Scray, union of East Ashford, county of Kent; 8 miles south-south-west of Canterbury, east of the river Stour. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £11 10s. 10d.; gross income £398. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge of rectorial, £371 9s. 6d.; of impropriated, £23 10s. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. Filmer, Bart. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which has a small endowment. Other charities, in 1836, £2 10s. per annum. Acres 1,530. Houses 37. A. P. £1,330. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 263. Poor rates, in 1838, £130 16s.

CRUNWEAR, a parish in the hund. and union of Narberth, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 6 miles east-south-east of Narberth. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Carmarthen and dio. of St. David's; gross income £100. Patron, the Crown. There is a daily school here. Houses 54. A. P. £896. Pop., in 1801, 191; in 1831, 274. Poor rates, in 1838, £55 11s.

CRUTCH, an extra-parochial district in the upper division of the hund. of Halfshire, county of Worcester; 2 miles north of Droitwich, with which borough it is now included.

CRUWYS-MORCHARD, a parish in the hund. of Witheridge, union of Tiverton, county of Devon; 5½ miles west of Tiverton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £21 11s. 8d.; gross income £501. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £433 7s. 4d. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. G. S. Cruwys. Charities, in 1819, £6 9s. 4d. per annum. There are 3 daily schools here. Acres 6,290. Houses 116. A. P.

£3,485. Pop., in 1801, 556; in 1831, 634. Poor rates, in 1838, £292 6s.

CRUX-EASTON, a parish in the hund. of Pastrow, union of Kingsclere, Kingsclere division of the county of Southampton; 6 miles north-north-west of Whitechurch. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £12 12s. 6d.; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, James Bagge, Esq. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 950. Houses 17. A. P. £767. Pop., in 1801, 78; in 1831, 97. Poor rates, in 1838, £60.

CUBBERLY, or COBERLY, a parish in the hund. of Rapsgate, union of Cheltenham, county of Gloucester; 4½ miles south-south-east of Cheltenham. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Gloucester, and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £10; gross income £326. Patron, in 1835, H. Elwes, Esq. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1827. Acres 3,800. Houses 34. A. P. £3,536. Pop., in 1801, 161; in 1831, 181. Poor rates, in 1838, £124.

CUBBINGTON, a parish in Kenilworth division of the hund. of Knightlow, union and county of Warwick; 5 miles east-north-east of Warwick, south-east of the river Avon. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £6 6s. 8d.; gross income £220. Patron, in 1835, Chandos Leigh, Esq. There are a daily and 2 day and Sunday National schools here, one of the latter of which is endowed with £17 per annum. Other charities, in 1827, £38 10s. Acres 1,790. Houses 133. A. P. £3,672. Pop., in 1801, 140; in 1831, 677. Poor rates, in 1838, £241 13s.

CUBERT, a parish in that part of the hund. of Pyder which is included in the western division of the county of Cornwall, union of St. Columb Major; 5½ miles west-north-west of St. Michael's, near Holywell Bay. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £3 6s. 8d., returned at £141 15s.; gross income £185. Patron, in 1835, J. Hoaken, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,320. Houses 76. A. P. £2,552. Pop., in 1801, 269; in 1831, 487. Poor rates, in 1838, £174 5s.

CUBLEY, a parish in the hund. of Appletree, county of Derby; 6 miles south of Ashbourne, on a branch of the river Dove. Living, a rectory with that of Marston Montgomery, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £13 16s. 3d.; gross income £560. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Chesterfield. Charities, in 1826, 18s. There is a daily school here. There is an annual fair held here, November 30th. Acres 2,410. Houses 78. A. P. £3,735. Pop., in 1801, 431; in 1831, 471. Poor rates, in 1838, £150 9s.

CUBLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Cottesloe, union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; 6 miles north-north-east of Aylesbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 16s. 3d.; gross income £309. Patrons, the rector and fellows of Lincoln college, Oxford. Charities, in 1833, income of £500 bequeathed in 1832, for behoof of poor. Acres 1,200. Houses 63. A. P. £2,361. Pop., in 1801, 271; in 1831, 284. Poor rates, in 1838, £183 2s.

CUBY, a parish in the west division of the hund. of Powder, union of Truro, county of Cornwall; ¼ of a mile north of Tregony. It includes the borough of Tregony. Living, a vicarage annexed to that of Tregony. There are 2 daily and 2 day and Sunday schools in this parish. Acres 2,410. Houses 242. A. P. £3,243. Pop., in 1801, 1,076; in 1831, 1,232. Poor rates, in 1838, £179 7s.

CUCKFIELD, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Buttinghill, union of Cuckfield, rape of Lewes, county of Sussex; 30 miles east-north-east of Chichester, and 37 south of London, on the post-road, and near the London and Brighton railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £20 14s. 2d.; gross income £568. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. The Independents have a place of worship here; the church was formed in 1821. There are 7 daily and 2 day and Sunday National schools in this parish, one of which was endowed by Henry VIII. with £28 5s. per annum for teaching Latin grammar. The other charities belonging to this parish were found to be in great confusion at the time of the inquiry in 1835-6. They were mostly lost; but there is an alms-house which was charity property; though the parish authorities conceived it to be parochial, and the poor-law guardians of the Cuckfield union possessed themselves of it under the poor-law Amendment act, and proceeded to rebuild it. The charity commissioners recommended a petition to Chancery for its investment in inhabitants of the parish, to whom the guardians of the union should pay a rent of £30 per annum, for the original purposes of the charity. The market-day is Friday, and the fairs are May 25th, Whit-Tuesday, September 16th, and November 29th. The petty-sessions are held here. Acres 10,500. Houses 376. A. P. £7,679. Pop., in 1801, 1,693; in 1831, 2,586. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,297 12s. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Cuckfield. The Cuckfield poor-law union comprehends 15 parishes, embracing an area of 92 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 12,017. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the 3 years preceding the formation of the union, was £16,014. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,104.

CUCKLINGTON WITH CLAPTON-FORMS, a parish in the hund. of Norton-Ferris, union of Wincanton, county of Somerset; 3 miles east-south-east of Wincanton. Living, a rectory with that of Stoke Frister, in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £12 19s. 4½d.; gross income £738. Patron, in 1835, John Phelps, Esq. Charities, in 1824, £28 14s. 10d. per annum, of which £19 19s. 10d. were applied to parochial purposes. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,780. Houses 55. A. P. £1,732. Pop., in 1801, 350; in 1831, 280. Poor rates, in 1838, £201 4s.

CUCKNEY, a parish in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of Worksop, county of Nottingham; 5 miles south-south by west of Worksop. Living, a discharged vicarage formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 8s. 6½d.; nett income £193. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of vicarial, £177 2s. 3d.; of impropriated, £726 18s. Patron, in 1835, Earl Manvers. Cuckney possesses 6 daily schools. In 1838 there were 2 cotton mills, employing 310 hands, within this parish. Acres, including the townships of Holbeck, Langwith, and Norton, with the hamlet of Belgh, 5,510. Houses 266. A. P. £4,677. Pop., in 1801, 1,094; in 1831, 1,638. Poor rates, in 1838, £332 8s.

CUDESSEN, a parish in the hund. of Bullington, union of Headington, county of Oxford; 6½ miles east-south-east of Oxford. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Wheatley, annexed to the bishopric of Oxford, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £17 0s. 5d. There are 2 daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school in this parish; one of which, the Wheatley school, is endowed with £45 per annum. Other charities, in 1824, £49 5s. per annum, of which £26 10s. were derived from the town meadow in the chapelry of Wheatley. Acres, including the chapelry of Wheatley and the hamlets of Chippinghurst and Denton, 2,700. Houses 292. A. P. £6,506. Pop., in 1801, 1,065; in 1831, 1,460. Poor rates, in 1838, £579 18s.

CUDDINGTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; 5½ miles west-south-west of Aylesbury. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Haddenham. There is a Baptist church here, formed in 1829. Charities, in 1832, £10 10s., besides a quantity of barley and wheat payable out of tithes. Acres 980. Houses 123. A. P. £4,293. Pop., in 1801, 964; in 1831, 1,477. Poor rates, in 1838, £342 3s.

CUDDINGTON, a township in the parish of Malpas, co.-palatine of Chester; 2 miles west-south-west of Malpas. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,260. Houses 47. A. P. £1,855. Pop., in 1801, 424; in 1831, 260. Poor rates, in 1838, £146 15s.

CUDDINGTON, a township in the parish of Waverham, co.-palatine of Chester; 4½ miles west-south-west of Northwich, on a branch of the Mersey. There is a day and Sunday school here. Acres 990. Houses 40. A. P. £1,932. Pop., in 1801, 212; in 1831, 277. Poor rates, in 1838, £75 18s.

CUDDINGTON, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Copthorne, union of Epsom, county of Surrey; 1 mile north-north-east of Ewell. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £7 12s. 3½d. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £381 15s. The church, which was pulled down by Henry VIII. to make room for his palace of Nonsuch, was ded. to St. Mary. Of the royal palace of Nonsuch, Camden says, "It was erected by Henry VIII., in a very wholesome air called before Cuddington, and designed by him for his pleasure and diversion. 'Tis so magnificent and withal so neat as even to arrive at the highest pitch of ostentation, and one would think that the whole art of architecture were crowded into this single work." Evelyn, in his additions to Camden, thus sums up the result:—"Not far from whence is Nonsuch, so much magnified by our author for its curious structure, but now there's nothing of all this to be seen, scarce one stone being left upon another, which havoc is owing to the late civil wars." Acres 1,850. Houses 24. A. P. with Ewell. Pop., in 1801, 92; in 1831, 138. Poor rates, in 1838, £238 1s.

CUDHAM, a parish in the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; 7 miles south-south-east of Bromley. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £13 2s. 2d.; gross income £190. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1836, £5 8s. per annum. In 1835, £1 of this small charity was given to the parish clerk, and the residue divided amongst no less than 186 adults and 155 children. Acres 5,930. Houses 125. A. F. £4,506. Pop., in 1801, 514; in 1831, 660. Poor rates, in 1838, £351 6s.

CUDWORTH, a parish in the hund. of South Petherton, union of Chard, county of Somerset; 3 miles south-east of Ilminster. Living, a curacy, a peculiar, in the dio. of Bath and Wells; of the certified value of £12 10s.; gross income £63. Patron, the prebendary of Cudworth in Wells cathedral. Acres 1,070. Houses 31. A. P. £1,067. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 146. Poor rates, in 1838, £33 18s.

CUDWORTH, a township in the parish of Royston, west-riding of Yorkshire; 8½ miles north-east oy east of Barnesley, intersected by the York and Derby railway. There are 4 daily schools here. Acres 1,520. Houses 84. A. P. £3,046. Pop., in 1801, 396; in 1831, 451. Poor rates, in 1838, £252 17s.

CUERDALE, a township in the parish of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles east of Preston, on the eastern bank of the river Ribble, and west of the Derwent. Acres 500. Houses 20. A. P. £1,286. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 118. Poor rates, in 1838, £95.

CUERDEN, a township in the parish of Leyland, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5 miles north-north-west of Chorley, on the river Lostock. Andrew Dandy, in 1673, erected a school here, and endowed it with £5 per annum, to which other bequests were added, amounting in all, in 1825, to £16 per annum. There is also a boarding-school here. Acres 930. Houses 96. A. P. £1,583. Pop., in 1801, 519; in 1831, 592. Poor rates, in 1838, £170 18s.

CUERDLEY, or CRUERDLEY, a township in the parish of Prescot, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4½ miles west-south-west of Warrington, north of the river Mersey, and near the Sankey canal. There is a small daily school here. Acres 1,420. Houses 55. A. P. £3,208. Pop., in 1801, 251; in 1831, 319. Poor rates, in 1838, £147 5s.

CULBORNE, or KILNER, a parish in the hund. of Carhampton, union of Williton, county of Somerset; 9 miles west of Minehead, at Porlock bay near the Bristol channel. It is so completely surrounded by high hills, that, for three months, in winter, the sun is never seen within its precincts. A rapid rivulet, rushing through the valley, in a rocky narrow channel, greatly enhances the romantic grandeur of the scene. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £3 18s. 11½d.; no return. Patron, in 1835, Lord King. Warner observes, that "the Lilliputian church of Culborne is situated in as extraordinary a spot as man, in his whimsicality, ever fixed on for a place of worship." This spot is in the bottom of a cove or secluded dell, 2 or 3 acres in extent, surrounded by almost perpendicular cliffs or hills, from 1,200 to 1,300 feet in height. The church is 12 feet in breadth by 33 in length. Acres 1,560. Houses 11. A. P. £1,582. Pop., in 1801, 56; in 1831, 62. Poor rates, in 1838, £12 18s.

CULCHETH, a township in the parish of Winwick, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 5 miles west of Newton, close on the Liverpool and Manchester railway. There are two daily schools here. Acres 5,330. Houses 372. A. P. £7,475. Pop., in 1801, 1,833; in 1831, 2,503. Poor rates, in 1838, £906 17s.

CULFORD, a parish in the hund. of Blackburn, union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 5 miles north-north-west of Bury-St.-Edmund's. Living, a discharged rectory, annexed to that of Ingham. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 2,490. Houses 55. A. P. £1,674. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 327. Poor rates, in 1838, £286.

CULGAITH, a chapelry in the parish of Kirkland, county of Cumberland; 6½ miles east by south of Penrith, bounded on the west by the river Eden, and on the south by the Tees. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Kirkland, in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; returned at £130; gross income £75. Patron, the vicar of Kirkland. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with a salary arising from land, and free to Culgaith and the township of Blencarn. Acreage with the parish. Houses 51. A. P. £2,419. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 257. Poor rates, in 1838, £58 15s.

CULHAM, a parish in the hund. of Dorchester, union of Abingdon, county of Oxford; 1½ mile south-south by east of Abingdon, bounded on the south and west by the Thames. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, not in charge; returned at £90 5s.; gross income £100. In the patronage of the bishop of Oxford. Charities, in 1822, £41 per annum. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 1,680. Houses 85. A. P. £4,794. Pop., in 1801, 364; in 1831, 404. Poor rates, in 1838, £248 3s.

CULLERCOATS, a township in the parish, and now enclosed within the boundaries, of the borough of Tynemouth, Northumberland; 1½ mile north-north-west of Tynemouth. There is a day and Sunday school here. This is a sea-bathing village. On the cliff fronting the sea a terrace has recently been erected for the accommodation of visitors. Acreage with the parish. Houses 89. A. P. £1,472. Pop., in 1801, 452; in 1831, 542. Poor rates, in 1838, £80 3s.

CULLIFORD-TREE HUNDRED, in the Dorchester division of the county of Dorset. Area 11,920 acres. Houses 429. Pop., in 1831, 2,454.

CULME (THE), a river in Devon, which rises near Church-Staunton, in the Black-Down hills, and, after a course of 25½ miles, flows into the river Ex, near Stoke-Cannon.

CULMINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Munslow, union of Ludlow, county of Salop; 4½ miles north-north-west of Ludlow, on the river Corve. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £18 9s. 2d.; gross income £685. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. William Johnstone. Charities, in 1819, 18s. There is a daily school here. Acres 3,160. Houses 95. A. P. £3,444. Pop., in 1801, 419; in 1831, 515. Poor rates, in 1838, £275 3s.

CULMSTOCK, a parish in the hund. of Hemjock, union of Wellington, county of Devon; 7 miles north-east of Cullumpton, on the river Culm. Living, a discharged vicarage, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of Exeter; rated at £16; gross income £329. There are chapels here for Baptists, the Society of Friends, and Wesleyan Methodists. Charities, in 1819, £12 17s. 6d. per annum. There are here 2 daily National schools. In 1838 there was a woollen mill here, employing 65 hands. Fairs are held annually, May 22d, and October 1st, for cattle. Acres 4,530. Houses 312. A. P. £4,778. Pop., in 1801, 1,496; in 1831, 1,519. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,103 13s.

CULOMBTON, or COLUMBTON. See COLLEMP-TON.

CULPHO, a parish in the hund. of Carlford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; 4 miles east of Woodbridge. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 7s. 11d.; gross income £57. Patron, in 1835, T. T. Gurdon, Esq. Charities, in 1829, £5 per annum. Acres 1,620. Houses 12. A. P. £359. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 64. Poor rates, in 1838, £136 3s.

CULVERLANDS AND TELFORD, a tything in the parish and hund. of Farnham, county of Surrey; 3 miles east-south-east of Farnham, on the river Wey. Houses 83. Pop., in 1811, 166; in 1831, 443. Other returns with the parish.

CULVERTHORPE, a township and chapelry in the parish of Haydor, county of Lincoln; 5 miles south-west of Sleaford. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Haydor. Acres 860. Houses 9. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 109.

CULWORTH, a parish in the hund. of King's Sutton, union of Brackley, county of Northampton; 7½ miles north-east of Banbury. Living, a rectory and vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10; gross income £563.

Published by A. & C. Chapman & Co. London.

Patron, in 1835, S. Spence, Esq. There is a day and Sunday National, and a daily, school here, one of which is supported by endowment, amounting, in 1825, to £65 12s. 8d. A charity estate produces £45 per annum. Acres 2,060. Houses 144. A. P. £4,073. Pop., in 1801, 532; in 1831, 606. Poor rates, in 1838, £383 18s.

CUMBERLAND,

A maritime county, situated at the north-western extremity of England. On the north and north-west, it is bounded by Scotland, from which it is separated by the Solway frith, the Sark, the Eake, the Liddle, and the Kershope-burn. On the east and north-east, it is bounded by Northumberland, and a small part of Durham; on the south-east, by Westmoreland and Lancaster, from the former of which it is separated by the Tees, the Eden, the Emont, and the Ulleswater, and from the latter by the Duddon. On the west, it is bounded by the Irish sea. It lies between 54° 6' and 55° 7' north lat., and 2° 13' and 3° 30' west long. Its extreme length, from the Kershope-burn on the north-east to Millom point on the south-west, is about 72 miles. In this direction it sweeps round by a prominent projection into the Irish sea. Its extreme breadth, from Allonby on the Solway, to Nent-head on the borders of Northumberland, is about 38 or 40 miles; and its circumference about 225. It contains 1,523 square miles, or 974,720 statute acres, two-thirds of which, including, however, upwards of 340,000 acres of mountain district, are considered to be enclosed and cultivated. Of the remaining third part, including 8,000 acres of lakes, rivers, and moors, the greater part, though it may be considerably improved for pasturage, will, in all probability, for ever defy the powers of cultivation. It is divided into an eastern and a western parliamentary section, each of which sends 2 members to parliament. The polling-places for the former are, Carlisle, Wigton, Penrith, Alston, and Bramp-ton, the principal place of election being Carlisle; for the latter, Cockermouth, Keswick, Aspatria, Egremont, and Bootle, the principal place of election being Cockermouth. The number of electors registered for the county in 1837 was 9,075. Previous to 1832, only 2 members were returned for the county. It is divided into 5 wards, synonymous with hundreds in other counties; but here termed wards, from the inhabitants of each division having been formerly obliged to keep watch or ward against northern irruptions. Of these, the eastern parliamentary division comprehends the wards of Cumberland, Eskdale, and Leath; the western, Allerdale above, and Allerdale below, Derwent. All the manufacturing and trading part of the county lies within the 2 latter wards, and the remaining 3 are almost purely agricultural.

With the exception of Allerdale ward above Derwent, which is in the deanery of Copeland, archdeaconry of Richmond, and dio. of Chester, the county is in the archdeaconry and diocese of Carlisle, and province of York. It contains 3 deaneries, Carlisle, Penrith, and Wigton; 41 rectories; 28 vicarages; 59 perpetual curacies and chapelries; and 104 parishes; in which there are 125 dissenting and Roman Catholic places of worship. There is 1 city and county town, Carlisle. There are 2 boroughs, Cockermouth and Whitehaven. Carlisle returns 2 members, Cockermouth 2, Whitehaven 1; in all, for Cumberland, 9, including county members. Previous to 1832, this county returned, in all, 6 members; 2 for the county, 2 for Carlisle, and 2 for Cockermouth. There are 14 market-towns; 5 principal ports; Carlisle, an inland port, Whitehaven, Maryport, Workington, and Harrington; and 400 townships. There are, in all, 31,617 houses; assessed property estimated at £705,446; and a population, in 1801, of 117,230; in 1821, of 186,124; and, in 1831, of 171,700, of whom 10,630 families were chiefly employed in agriculture, and 12,026 in trade, manufactures, &c., all other families 12,164. In 1835 there were 632 daily, and 185 Sunday, schools in this county; the former attended by 20,866 children, the latter by 14,692. There were 39 lending libraries connected with these schools. The amount raised by the parish rates, on a yearly average of 3 years, from 1748 to 1750, was £2,456; whereof £2,450 were expended on the poor. In 1803, the amount of assessment was £34,896; expenditure on poor £29,669; in 1821, £68,740; expenditure on poor £56,637; and, in 1838, £40,553; expenditure on poor £32,513. The total amount of church rates, in 1838-9, was £2,660; of county rates, in 1800, £2,499; in 1830, £13,427; expenditure £14,569; in 1832, £6,196; expenditure £5,948; and in 1838, £6,788; expenditure £6,764. This county is in the northern circuit; the assizes being held in Lent and summer at Carlisle, where the county jail is situated. The quarter-sessions are held there in January and June; and at Cockermouth in April and October. In 1834-38, we find, from an elaborate statistical table of crime composed by W. Rawson, Esq., that, taking the proportion of all the criminals to the total population as unity, or 1.00, Cumberland ranks so low in crime as .49, while the average of 11 agricultural counties stands as high as 1.07. Cumberland is lowest on the list of 21 agricultural counties.

Surface, &c.—The surface of this county is considerably diversified, but in its general aspect, and especially in the eastern division, it is bleak and sterile, and the climate dry and cold, yet bracing to the constitution, and extremely conducive to health and longevity, as is shown by the report of the registrar-general on births, deaths, and marriages, alluded to in our article on CORNWALL,—which see,—and whereby we also find, that the most prevalent causes of death, in this and some adjoining counties, are epidemic, endemic, and contagious diseases, in the ratio of 713, to 588 arising from consumption, decline, &c., and 310 from nervous diseases. The mountains in this county are exceedingly numerous, and many of them immense in elevation, and singular in structure. They enter into the composition of almost every view; and either by their sublime heights, their romantic forms, the dignified grandeur of their aspects, the immensity of rocks composing them, or the imposing, wild, and awful majesty of their appearance, are peculiarly calculated to excite our interest and admiration. Two distinct ranges run, the one towards the north, to which belongs the Crossfell ridge; the other, and the most gigantic, toward the south, of which the highest peak, Skiddaw, is 3,166 feet above the level of the sea. Besides this noted peak, the most striking of the loftier mountains, which are termed fells, are and are familiar to tourists and to admirers of picturesque and majestic scenery in general, are the Seafell, Saddleback, Helvellyn, Bowfell, Grasmerefell and Hardknott, Wrynose, Highpike, Pillar, Screes, &c. Their scenery, in general, is abrupt, precipitous, and bold. Between these grander heights are many hills of various elevation; some of them cut through by clear and rapid torrents; others based in richly wooded, highly cultivated valleys, fertilized by quiet brooks and rivers; others dipping their precipitous and craggy sides down into the beautiful and celebrated lakes; the picturesque and varied scenery of which has often been described in poetry and prose.

The Lakes.—Of these,—for sketches of which see the respective articles,—the principal are Ulleswater, between Cumberland and Westmoreland; Thirlmere, or Leath-water, at the entrance to the vale of St. John; Derwent-water, and Bassenthwaite, connected by a stream in Keswick vale; Borrowdale, in the vale of that name; Buttermere, in the north-west of Borrowdale,—flanked by rugged mountains; and, to the north a little, Crummock-water, and Lowes-water; the three latter connected by the Cocker, which, running north through the fine vale of Lorton, falls into the Derwent at Cockermouth. Besides these and Over-water, West-water, Osmerdale, and Devock-water, there are smaller lakes called tarns—Tindale-tarn, Talkin-tarn, &c., &c. Wild fowl, salmon, trouts, and char, are taken in the lakes. The last is a delicate fish, found nowhere, it is said, but in the lakes of Cumberland and Westmoreland. Considerable quantities are sent from Keswick, through Carlisle, to London.

Rivers.—The principal are the Eden, the Scottish Esk, and the Derwent. The Eden is one of the largest rivers in the north of England. It rises in Westmoreland, enters Cumberland a little to the south of Edenhall, and flowing by Kirk-Oswald, Warwick-Bridge, and Carlisle, falls into the Solway Frith below Rocliffe. The Esk from Scotland enters Cumberland at a place called the Moat, and, flowing past Longtown, falls into the Solway frith. The Derwent rises in Borrowdale, flows through and forms the lakes of Derwent and Bassenthwaite, and, turning to the south-west, meets the Cocker at Cockermouth, whence it flows, by Workington, into the sea. For further information regarding the rivers in this county, see the respective articles. The smaller streams are too numerous to be all particularized. The most notable are the Petterell, and the Caldew, which join the Eden, the former to the north-east, and the latter to the north-west of Carlisle; the Croplin, which also joins the Eden to the north of Kirk-Oswald; the Duddon, which skirts the south-eastern border of the county, and forms an estuary at Millom point, between this county and Lancaster; the English Esk, which has its sources on the south and north sides of the Seafell, and falls into the Irish sea by an estuary at Ravenglass; the Jet, famous for pearl muscles, which has its source in West-water lake, in Wasdale, to the south of Buttermere, and falls into the sea nearly at the same place; the Ehen, which has its source in the mountains surrounding Borrowdale, and forms the Ennerdale-water, to the west of Buttermere, and the Calder, both of which fall into the Irish sea to the north of Ravenglass. Among the mountains are a number of splendid waterfalls, particularly Stocke-Gill-Force, Rydal waterfalls, and Lowdore cascade, near the south-east corner of Derwent-water, which has a fall of two hundred feet, and, in a rainy season, is one of the most magnificent objects in Great Britain. All the rivers and brooks, as well as the lakes, abound in fish of excellent quality, and some of them are almost peculiar to this county.

Canals, roads, and railways.—There is only one canal in this county; namely, that which renders Carlisle an inland port,—the Ship canal, which runs from Carlisle, past Burgh, Drumburgh, and Kirkland, towards Bowness, and communicates with the Solway frith,—see article CARLISLE.—The county is crossed from south to north, and from east to west, by two important turnpike roads; one of which, from south to north, is a principal road from London to Edinburgh and Glasgow, entering near Penrith, and proceeding direct to Carlisle, whence it runs direct to the celebrated village of Springfield, near Greta, where it quits England and enters Scotland. The other road, from Newcastle and the German ocean on the east, enters this county near Nether Denton, passes through Brampton, and crosses the great northern road at Carlisle. It then proceeds by two branches, the one through old Carlisle, joined by the Wigton road, and the other past the Bassenthwaite water to Cockermouth, and thence to Whitehaven and the Irish sea. There is also a cross-road from Penrith through Keswick, where it meets another from Kirkby-Kendal to Cockermouth, and from Penrith to Hexham, &c., joined to which, at Alston moor, another road crosses the south-western extremity of Northumberland to Brampton, and thence to Longtown. Innumerable roads radiate from and inter-communicate with these, which are the principal roads in the county. The average of highway returns for 3 years, ending October, 1814, show an extent of 167 miles of turnpike roads and paved streets, and 1,834 miles of all other highways used for wheeled carriages, with a total expenditure in money, and in estimated value of statute labour, of £13,202. In 1836, the total income of the 14 turnpike trusts in this county was £15,448 7s. 4d., and the total expenditure £14,568 0s. 10d. The expenditure in 1839, on 2,015 miles of highway, was £11,869. It is intersected by the Newcastle and Maryport railway through Carlisle,—which see. The Carlisle and Maryport section of this railway, now in progress, passes through Wigton and Aspretria. A railway is projected, as a continuation, and outlet to Scotland, of the Grand Junction line from Lancashire. It is to run, by embankments, through Morecambe and Duddon bays; and thence, by the coast of West Cumberland, to Dearham on the Maryport railway.

Soil and agriculture.—The soil, like the surface, is various. In particular spots it is a strong rich loam, producing, in great perfection, all sorts of grain, with very moderate care and preparation. In other places it is a heavy wet loam, upon a cold clay bottom. In the lower districts, and sometimes far up the western mountains, the prevailing soil is light dry loam. In the mountainous districts, particularly on the borders of Durham and Northumberland, the predominating soil is black peat earth, unmanageable, and almost unimprovable. Moor game is plentiful; and cranberries grow so abundantly, that they are exported to London and elsewhere. Corn is principally grown in the north-west parts of the county; but in the north-eastern, turnips are extensively and scientifically cultivated, as food for sheep and cattle. The rotation of crops, on good soil, is frequently 3 years grass, and afterwards oats, turnips or potatoes, wheat, and hay and grass, in succession. The manures generally used are lime, dung, sea-weeds, and mud or slime, with latterly a little bone-dust. The farms are generally small; and the modern farm-houses are of stone, covered with fine blue slates from Borrowdale. A large portion of the county, especially in the south-south-east and southern divisions, is appropriated to grazing, and excellent butter forms a principal item in the exports of the county. The cattle are chiefly the old Cumberland steers, small, with long horns. The Galloway and short-horned cattle are also prevalent. The sheep, besides the Cheviots, are a black faced, mixed, and hardy breed, with short coarse wool.

Minerals, manufactures, &c.—Almost all the moors and mountains of this county teem with valuable minerals. The celebrated plumbago, wad, or black lead mine is situated at the head of Borrowdale, in the steep side of a mountain, extremely difficult of access. This peculiar substance, which contains no lead whatever, but is composed chiefly of carbon, impregnated with iron, and is hence erroneously called plumbago or black lead, &c., though it is less objectionably also termed graphite, is so rare, as to be almost exclusively procured from this mine, and fears have, groundlessly, perhaps, been entertained, of its complete exhaustion. The mines are defended from pilferers by temporary mason work, and a wall within, with a house over each entrance, occupied by the stewards and workmen. For an interesting account of graphite and its manufacture, see our article BORROWDALE. Coal, gypsum, limestone, and slate, are all found here. The geological characteristics of the district are very various; but consist chiefly in its red marl and gypsum, the latter of which is extensively exported from Carlisle. Slate and limestone in abundance, marble, porcelain clay, quartz, spar, and many other mineral substances, are also found; with cobalt, antimony, iron, silver, manganese, and copper, the mines of which are not now worked, though at one time copper was largely exported. Lead, iron, and coal, with limestone, are the staple minerals. The principal lead-mines are those of Alston-moor, which originally belonged to the estate of Derwent-water; but upon the attainder of the earl in 1715, were vested in Greenwich hospital. Many of these mines are worked to great advantage. See ALSTON. Most extensive coal-works are carried on in the neighbourhood of WHITEHAVEN and WORKINGTON: which see. Immense quantities are exported to Ireland and the west and south of Scotland. In the eastern quarter of the county also, there is abundance of coal. In the parish of Egremont, there is the most singular mine of iron ore supposed to be in Britain; the thickness of the band of ore, which is hard, solid, and comparatively pure metal, is between 24 and 25 feet. There are iron foundries at Carlisle, Dalston, and Seaton. Earthenware articles are manufactured at Dearham and Whitehaven; and bottles at the Ginns. The woollen manufacture is carried on at Alston, Brigham, Caldbeck, Cross-thwaite, and Hayton. There are flax manufactories at St. Bees, Brigham, Bridekirk, Cleator, Dalston and Egremont, and the cotton manufacture has also been established in Carlisle, Dalston, and Wetherhall. In 1838 there were 13 cotton, 14 woollen, and 9 flax mills, employing 2,525 hands. There were many hand looms also. According to a careful survey of the state of cotton hand-loom weaving in Carlisle, the report of which has been given to the public since our article, CARLISLE, was published, we find that there were, in that city alone, in 1840, 1,963 hand-loom, on which 3,814 persons were dependent: average earnings of each employed loom, 4s. 6d. a-week; but 1,203 were unemployed. See articles COCKERMOUTH, LONGTOWN, WIGTON, &c.

History and Antiquities.—Before Britain was conquered by the Romans, Cumberland was probably occupied by the Caledonians; and Richard of Cirencester states that it formed a part of the territories of a British tribe called the Sistuntii. Under the Roman government it belonged to the province of Maxima Cæsariensis; and subsequently it was included in the kingdom of Cumbria, which seems to have been the hereditary domain of the renowned King Arthur. The inhabitants maintained their independence after the other parts of England had been conquered by the Saxons; but they were at length obliged to submit to the yoke, and the county was made a part of the Anglo-Saxon kingdom of Northumbria. At an early period the kings of Scotland acquired a kind of feudal authority over this county, which was the subject of frequent disputes between the English and Scottish sovereigns; but it ultimately remained in possession of the former; and it thus became exposed to the perpetual inroads of the Scots, and was the principal scene of border warfare, which had a considerable effect on the character and manners of the inhabitants. The preservation of peace and the punishment of malefactors were intrusted to the Lord Warden of the Northern Marches,—an officer of high responsibility and ample jurisdiction, and generally chosen from the great landed proprietors of this county. The union of the two kingdoms under James I. removed the causes of national animosity, and since that time those habits of rapine and violence, for which the borderers were distinguished, have been exchanged for more peaceful pursuits; and commerce, literature, and the arts, flourish in districts formerly desolated by continual warfare.

The great Roman wall is the most remarkable antiquity of Cumberland. It was built by Adrian in 121, to exclude the Caledonians, and extended across the whole island from sea to sea. Its length was 100 miles; its breadth was 8 feet, and its height 12. It had 25 strong castles planted, at intervals, in its course. The foundations of many of these, and of the wall itself, can still be traced. There are also remains of Roman, Saxon, or Danish encampments, ancient roads, both British and Roman, and Druidical circles. Religious houses were never at any period numerous or much distinguished in this county. The soil was too barren, the air too thin, and it lay too near the Scots, to be coveted by the monks, who generally had the kingdom “all before them where to choose their place of rest.” The few that were in it are noticed, with its other antiquities, under the places where they were situated.

CUMBERLAND WARD, in the county of Cumberland. Area 94,830 acres. Houses 3,848. Pop., in 1831, 20,604.

CUMBERSDALE, or COMMERSDALE, a township in the parish of St. Mary, city of Carlisle. There is a daily school here. Acres 2,000. Houses 83. A. P. £2,957. Pop., in 1801, 382; in 1831, 488. Poor rates, in 1838, £63.

CUMBERWORTH, a parish in the Marsh division of the hund. of Calceworth, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles south-east by east of Alford. Living, a discharged rectory, annexed in 1733 to the rectory of Anderby. There is a daily school here. Acres 950. Houses 34. A. P. £1,312. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 188. Poor rates, in 1838, £50 6s.

CUMBERWORTH (HALF), a township in the parish of Kirk-Burton, west riding of Yorkshire. There are one Sunday and daily National, and two daily schools, in this township. Acres, including a part of the township of Skelmanthorpe, 250. Houses 222. A. P. £2,190. Pop., in 1801, 858; in 1831, 1,180. Poor rates, in 1838, £198 3s.

CUMBERWORTH, a chapelry in the parish of Silkstone, west riding of Yorkshire; 7 miles south-east of Huddersfield. Living, a rectory and donative in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £18 15s.; gross income £148. Patron, in 1835, T. W. Beaumont. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here, and there is a daily National school. Acres, including that part of the township of Skelmanthorpe, which is in the parish of High Hoyland, 930. Houses 259. A. P. £2,468. Pop., in 1801, 450; in 1831, 1,374. Poor rates, in 1838, £240 5s.

CUMDEVOCK, a township in the parish of Dalston, Cumberland; 6 miles south-south-west of Carlisle, close on the Carlisle railway. Houses 63. Pop., in 1801, 283; in 1831, 448. Other returns with the parish.

CUMNOR, a parish in the hund. of Hormer, union of Abingdon, county of Berks; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north by west of Abingdon. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £24 17s.; no return. Patron, the Earl of Abingdon. This parish possesses four daily schools, one of which is supported by endowment. The warden and fellows of All Souls college, Oxford, are trustees and special visitors of this school. Other charities, in 1838, £77 4s. per annum, besides 20 to 30 bibles and prayer-books annually distributed amongst the poor, for whose behoof the charity income is principally expended. About £14 of this income arises from poor's land let at low rents to poor parishioners. CUMNOR PALACE, the residence of the abbots of Abingdon, and ultimately the scene of the presumed murder of Amy Robsart, wife of Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, has totally disappeared; but it is immortalized in Meikle's beautiful ballad, and in Sir Walter Scott's delightful romance of Kenilworth. Acres 7,730. Houses 265. A. P. £2,900. Pop. returned under the tythings of Botley, Bradley, Chawley, Chilswell, Henwood, Hill-End, Stroud, Swinford, and Whitley, with the township of Cumnor, and the chapelry of Wootton, in 1801, 924; in 1831, 1,364. Poor rates, in 1838, £769 16s. Houses of the township, 100. Pop., in 1801, 406; in 1831, 515.

CUMREW, a parish in Eskdale ward, union of Brampton, county of Cumberland; 6 miles north of Kirk-Oswald. It includes the townships of Cumrew Inside, and Cumrew Outside. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; returned at £50; gross income £82. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Carlisle. There are two daily schools here. This parish contains the extensive ruins of a castle, formerly the seat of the Dacres. Acres 2,760. Houses 40. A. P. £218. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 216. Poor rates, in 1838, £59 10s.

CUMWHINTON AND COATHILL, a township in the parish of Wetheral, Cumberland; 4 miles south-east by east of Carlisle. Houses 100. Pop., in 1801, 365; in 1831, 575. Other returns with the parish.

CUMWHITTON, a parish in Eskdale ward, union of Brampton, county of Cumberland; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Carlisle, east of the river Eden, and in the neighbourhood of the Newcastle and Carlisle railway. It includes the townships of Cumwhitton, Moorthwaite, and Northseugh. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; returned at £90; gross income £103. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Carlisle. There are two daily, and two Sunday and daily National, schools here. Acres 5,670. Houses 103. A. P. £2,951. Pop., in 1801, 446; in 1831, 579. Poor rates, in 1838, £110 5s. Houses of the township, 57. A. P. £1,594. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 324.

CUNDALL AND LECKBY, a parish in the wapentake of Hallikeld, north riding of Yorkshire; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Borough-bridge, on the western bank of the Swale, and near the Great North of England railway. It includes the townships of Cundall and Leckby, Norton-le-Clay, and Fawdington. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £3 6s. 8d.; gross income £59. Patron, in 1835, W. Heathcote, Esq. Charities, in 1820, £34 5s. per annum. There is a day and Sunday National school in this parish. Acres 3,150. Houses 68. A. P. £5,777. Pop., in 1801, 314; in 1831, 394. Poor rates, in 1838, £147 18s. Acres of the township, 2,120. Houses 38. A. P. £4,335. Pop., in 1801, 204; in 1831, 200.

CUNESBY. See CONINGSBY.

CUNSALL. See CHEDDLETON.

CURBAR, a hamlet in the parish of Bakewell, county of Derby; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile east-south-east of Stoney Middleton; bounded on the west by the Derwent. Charities, in 1827, £5 per annum. Acreage with the parish. Houses 69. A. P. £617. Pop., in 1801, 188; in 1831, 277. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 1s.

CURBOROUGH WITH ELMHURST, a township in the parish of St. Chad, Lichfield, county of Stafford; 2 miles north-north-east of Lichfield; close on the Grand Trunk canal. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 2,060. Houses 50. A. P. £3,110. Pop., in 1801, 174; in 1831, 249. Poor rates, in 1838, £146 13s.

CURBRIDGE, a hamlet in the parish of Witney, county of Oxford; 2 miles west-south-west of Witney. There is a small daily school here. Acres 2,480. Houses 74. A. P. £3,824. Pop., in 1801, 353; in 1831, 398. Poor rates, in 1838, £485 7s.

CURDWORTH, a parish in the Birmingham division of the hund. of Hemlingford, union of Aston, county of Warwick; 3 miles north-north-west of Coleshill, close on the Birmingham and Fazeley canal. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £5; gross income £290. Patrons, in 1835, W. Wakefield and others. Charities, in 1834, a contingent interest in £23 per annum, connected with Lea Marston and other parishes. There are three daily schools in this parish. Acres, including the township of Minworth, 3,170. Houses 111. A. P. £4,556. Pop., in 1801, 452; in 1831, 617. Poor rates, in 1838, £104 14s.

CURLAND, a parish in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, union of Taunton, county of Somerset; 6 miles west by north of Ilminster. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Curry-Mallet. Charities, in 1825, 8s. per annum. There is a day and Sunday school here, endowed, in 1830, for 20 girls. The boys of this parish attend an endowed school in the adjoining parish of Staple-Fitzpaine. Acres 1,160. Houses 35. A. P. £813. Pop., in 1801, 157; in 1831, 167. Poor rates, in 1838, £39 12s.

CURRY (NORTH) HUNDRED, in the county of Somerset. Area 12,940 acres. Houses 815. Pop., in 1831, 4,211.

CURRY-MALLET, a parish in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, union of Langport, county of Somerset; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Ilminster, close on the Chard canal. Living, a rectory with the curacy of Curland, in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £24 1s. 3d.; gross income £456. Patron, the Crown. Charities, in 1825, £1 per annum. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,700. Houses 79. A. P. £2,041. Pop., in 1801, 364; in 1831, 496. Poor rates, in 1838, £115 10s.

CURRY (NORTH), a parish in the western division of the hund. of North Curry, union of Taunton, county of Somerset; 6 miles east-south-east of Taunton, south of the river Tone. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of West Hatch annexed, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of Wells; rated at £21; gross income £450. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Wells. Charities, in 1825, £2 per annum. There are 3 daily schools here. Tuesday is market-day, and a fair is held on the first Tuesday in September, for bullocks, sheep, and toys. Acres, including the tythings of Knapp, Lillisdon, and Wrantage, 6,020. Houses 377. A. P. £10,316. Pop., in 1801, 567; in 1831, 1,833. Poor rates, in 1838, £1,045 4s.

CURRY-REVELL, a parish in the hund. of Ab-dick and Bulstone, union of Langport, county of Somerset; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Langport, south of the Parret river. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Weston, in the archd. of Taunton and union of Bath and Wells; rated at £13 16s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £172. Patron, in 1835, W. Speke, Esq. Charities, in 1825, £27 10s. per annum. This parish possesses 9 daily schools. Fairs are held here for cattle and sheep annually; on the Monday after Lammas, and the 5th of August. Burton-Pynsent, the seat of the Earl of Chatham, stands on the summit of a ridge, ensconced in luxuriant woods, in this vicinity; and on an eminence at a short distance is a pillar commemorative of Sir William Pynsent. The views from the heights are extensive and beautiful. In one quarter no less than 30 churches may be seen. Acres, including the parochial district of West-Moor, 3,870. Houses 275. A. P. £5,976. Pop., in 1801, 974; in 1831, 1,444. Poor rates, in 1838, £363 8s.

CURY, a parish in the hund. of Kerrier, union of Helston, county of Cornwall; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Helston. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of St. Breage. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount of impropriated, £262 13s.; of vicarial, £165 12s. 6d. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which is National. Acres 3,420. Houses 94. A. P. £2,529. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 523. Poor rates, in 1838, £79 10s.

CUSOP, a parish in the hund. of Ewyaslacy, union of Hay, county of Hereford; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile east by south of Hay. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £5 19s. 7d.; gross income £205. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Oxford. There is a school at the Hay, endowed for the benefit of poor children of this parish, of the name of Butler, with £14 per annum. Other charities, in 1836, £1 per annum. Acres 2,570. Houses 56. A. P. £1,570. Pop., in 1801, 242; in 1831, 252. Poor rates, in 1838, £143 5s.

CUSTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of West-Acre, county of Norfolk; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Swaffham. The ruins of a chapel are still to be seen here, supposed to have been founded by the monks of West-Acre priory.

CUTCOMBE, a parish in the hund. of Carhampton, union of Williton, county of Somerset; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south by west of Dunster. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Luxborough, in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £14 0s. 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £250. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are a daily and a Sunday and daily National school here, one of which is endowed with £35 per annum. Other charities, in 1835, £19 0s. 4d. Acres 7,760. Houses 120. A. P. £3,553. Pop., in 1801, 594; in 1831, 709. Poor rates, in 1838, £426 1s.

CUTSDEAN, a chapelry in the parish of Bredon, county of Worcester; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Moreton-in-the-Marsh. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Bredon. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which is endowed with £7 16s. per annum. Acres 1,890. Houses 31. A. P. £1,174. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 166.

CUTTLESTONE HUNDRED, in the county of Stafford. It lies in the centre of the county, and is divided into East and West. Area 105,500 acres. Houses 5,050. Pop., in 1831, 26,918.

CUXHAM, a parish in the hund. of Ewelme, union of Henley, county of Oxford; 5 miles south-west by west of Tetworth. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £9 10s. 5d.; gross income £306. Patrons, the warden and fellows of Merton college, Oxford. Acres 520. Houses

38. A. P. £1,149. Pop., in 1801, 144; in 1831, 207. Poor rates, in 1838, £44 7s.

CUXTON, a parish in the hund. of Shamwell lathe of Aylesford, union of North Aylesford, county of Kent; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Rochester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £14 15s. 5d.; gross income £409. Patron, the bishop of Rochester. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 1,330. Houses 41. A. P. £1,585. Pop., in 1801, 202; in 1831, 296. Poor rates, in 1838, £154 15s.

CUXWOLD, a parish in the wapentake of Bradley-Haverstoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Caistor, county of Lincoln; 4 miles east of Caistor. Living, a discharged rectory, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £5 7s. 6d.; gross income £306. Patron, in 1835, H. Thorold, Esq. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,370. Houses 13. A. P. £865. Pop., in 1801, 72; in 1831, 79.

CWM, or COMBE, a parish in the hund. of Rhudlan, union of St. Asaph, county of Flint, North Wales; 3 miles north-north by east of St. Asaph. Living, a sinecure rectory and vicarage in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; the former rated at £6 15s. 8d.; gross income £251; and the latter, which is discharged, at £5 8s. 9d.; gross income £253. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Houses 87. A. P. £1,842. Pop., in 1801, 415; in 1831, 442. Poor rates, in 1838, £378 2s.

CWMCARVAN, a parish in the hund. of Ragland, union and county of Monmouth; 4 miles south-south by west of Monmouth, on a branch of the river Trothy. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Michael-Troy. Charities, in 1833, £7 16s. 6d. Acres 2,830. Houses 70. A. P. £1,835. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 301. Poor rates, in 1838, £129 10s.

CWMDARE, a hamlet in the parish of Aberdare, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 4 miles south-east of Merthyr Tydvil. Pop., in 1811, 1,129; in 1821, 889. Other returns with the parish. This hamlet gives its name to CWMDARE VALE, in which, near Aberdare, on Hirwain common, there is a waterfall, which has recently been found to exhibit the rare and peculiarly interesting phenomenon of an extraordinary exhalation of gas from the bed of the stream, which, when ignited, burns without intermission, with a yellow-coloured flame, interspersed with streams of vivid white, orange, purple, and blue. There are more than 12 apertures through which the gas escapes from the water, and on the dry banks there are others. The flame from one of the apertures burns about 2 feet in length, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ foot in width. At times the flame is considerably larger. The soil consists chiefly of argillaceous schist, or fire clay, sufficiently hot to burn the hand. Fish caught in the stream have been boiled upon it. "My first impression," says Mr. Byrne, "was, that this phenomenon was occasioned by an escape of carburetted hydrogen from a coal level, but, from its distance from a mine, and the occasional appearances in the flame, I do not think the idea can be correct; most probably it is a mixture of gases. The water has been observed to bubble for many years, by the peasantry, but not to any extent until within the last two months, when the attention of a Staffordshire miner was attracted by the noise and height of the bubbles, and subsequently by the application of a fire. I had an opportunity of witnessing this wonderful appearance by night, and regret my inadequacy to describe a sight so interesting. There were not less than twelve large bodies of brilliant flame, of great illuminating power, issuing from the bed of the stream, and underneath the rock which forms the waterfall; the rich glare of variegated light cast upon the trees and surrounding objects, the noise of the waterfall of the stream, and the reflection of the whole in the water, afforded one of the most imposing sights I ever beheld."^a CWMDU, a hamlet in the parish of Llangynydd, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 6 miles north-north-west of Bridgend. There is a infant school here. Houses 163. A. P. £904. Pop., in 1811, 237; in 1831, 968. Poor rates, in 1838, £116 7s.

CWMGILLA. See FARRINGTON WITH CWMGILLA.

CWMYOY, a parish, partly in the hund. of Ewyaslacy, county of Hereford, and partly in the lower division of the hund. of Abergavenny, union of Abergavenny, county of Monmouth; 6½ miles north of Abergavenny, on the river Honthy, near a branch of the river Monnow, on the borders of Herefordshire. The parish is separated into upper and lower divisions, and contains the townships of Bwlch and Foothog. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; returned at £60; gross income £74. Patron, in 1835, Rees Powell, Esq. Lanthony Abbey, founded about the year 1108, and the ruins of which are still in good preservation, is most romantically situated in sublime solitude, upon the summit of a steep bold cliff, in the upper division of the parish, beneath a craggy hill, in the vale of Ewyas, formed by the Hatterel hills. The aspect of the whole valley is gloomy and desolate. The abbey is said to have been built on the very site of the hermitage of the patron saint of Wales, St. David, who, according to Drayton, —"Fed upon the leeks he gathered in the fields;

In memory of whom, in the revolving years,
The Welchmen on his day, that sacred herb do wear."

The celebrated poet, Southey, in his inscription for a monument in the vale of Ewyas,—which see,—expresses the same tradition in more elegant language. The ruins of the abbey church present a mixture of Gothic and Anglo-norman architecture. The abbey was founded by Walter Lacy, as a priory for canons regular of the order of St. Austin, and dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Its revenue at the dissolution was about £100. Acres 9,870. Houses 140. A. P. £4,254. Pop., in 1801, 595; in 1831, 658. Poor rates, in 1838, £393 1s.

CWMRHEIDOL, a township in the parish of Llanbadarn-Fawr, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 1 mile south-east of Aberystwyth. There is a daily school in this township. Houses 122. A. P. £1,041.

^a There are streams in Yorkshire where a similar exhalation of gas takes place, as at Slaithwaite, near Huddersfield; also at Stanley, near Wakefield; and we believe at Uppingham, near York.

Pop., in 1801, 338; in 1831, 649. Poor rates, in 1838, £162 15s.

CWM-TOYDDWR, a parish in the hund. and union of Rhayadar, county of Radnor, South Wales; 2 miles south of Rhayadar. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; nett income £95. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which was built by subscription, and has an endowment of about £50 per annum. Other charities, in 1836, £19 per annum. Houses 138. A. P. £2,227. Pop., in 1801, returned under the townships of Dyffryn-Ellan and Dyffryn-Gwy, 563; in 1831, 873. Poor rates, in 1838, £256 3s.

CYFOETH-Y-BRENNIN, a township in the parish of Llanfihangel-Genur-Glynn, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 4 miles north-north-east of Aberystwyth. There are 2 daily schools here, one of which, containing 147 pupils, is supported by the trustees of the late Mrs. Bevan's charity. Houses 220. A. P. £1,633. Pop., in 1801, 419; in 1831, 965. Poor rates, in 1838, £168 8s.

CYFRONYDD, a township in the parish of Welshpool, county of Montgomery, North Wales; 1½ mile south-west of Buttington, west of the river Severn. Houses 7. A. P. £341. Pop., in 1811, 71; in 1831, 56. Poor rates, in 1838, £47 10s.

CYLCH-BYCHAN, a hamlet in the parish of St. David's, county of Pembroke, South Wales; north of St. Bride's bay, near the Bristol channel. Houses 82. Pop., in 1811, 261; in 1831, 359.

CYLCH-GWYLOD-Y-WLAD, a hamlet in the parish of St. David, county of Pembroke. Houses 89. Pop., in 1811, 427; in 1831, 512. Other returns with the parish.

CYLCH-MAWR, a hamlet in the parish of St. David's, county of Pembroke. Houses 94. Pop., in 1811, 394; in 1831, 492. Other returns with the parish.

CYLCH-Y-DEE, a township in the parish of St. David's, county of Pembroke. Houses 238. Pop., in 1811, 734; in 1831, 1,025. Other returns with the parish.

CYLY-CUM (Lower and Upper), a parish in the hund. of Cayo, union of Llandovery, county of Carmarthen, South Wales; 6 miles north-west of Llandovery. There is a daily school here. The Calvinistic Methodists and Particular Baptists, have Sunday schools in this parish. Houses 272. A. P. £4,523. Pop., in 1801, 1,485; in 1831, 1,637. Poor rates, in 1838, £587 12s.

CYNILL-MAWR, a township in the parish of Llanfihangel-Genur-Glynn, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 5 miles north-east of Aberystwyth. There is a daily school here, endowed with £5 per annum, being the interest of £100, bequeathed for the education of the poor children of the parish. Houses 118. A. P. £1,840. Pop., in 1801, 465; in 1831, 636. Poor rates, in 1838, £224 5s.

D

DACORUM HUNDRED, at the western point of Herta, projecting into Buckinghamshire. Area 78,160 acres. Houses 5,542. Pop., in 1831, 28,872.

DACRE, or DACOR, a parish in Leath ward, union of Penrith, Cumberland; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Penrith, on the northern bank of the river Emont. It includes the townships of Dacre, Great Blencow, Newbiggin, Soulby, and Stainton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £8, returned at £58; gross income £89. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The church is said to have been built out of the ruins of a monastery, mentioned by Bede, in his Ecclesiastical History, "which being built near the river Dacore, took its name from it, and over which the religious man Suibert presided." This parish possesses four daily, and two day and Sunday, schools, one of which is National, and one endowed with £140 per annum, arising from land; two others have small endowments. Other charities produce £22 9s. per annum. Dacre castle, the original seat of the barons of Dacre, or D'Acre, in which they resided for many ages, stands in the village of Dacre. Four square towers, connected by a centre building with narrow grated windows, still remain in tolerable preservation. It was sold by Anne, Baroness Dacre, to Sir Christopher Musgrave, in 1716. Acres 8,130. Houses 154. A. P. £10,321. Pop., in 1801, 712; in 1831, 935. Poor rates, in 1837, £180.

DACRE, a township in the parish of Ripon, west riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Ripley; bounded on the east by the river Nidd. A new church was erected here in 1837. For education returns, see BEWERLEY. The linen manufacture is carried on here to a considerable extent; and there are valuable lead-mines in the vicinity. Acres 5,230. Houses 141. A. P. £11,520. Pop., in 1801, 592; in 1831, 698. Poor rates, in 1837, £382.

DADLINGTON, a hamlet and chapelry in the parish of Hinckley, county of Leicester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Hinckley, close on the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Hinckley. There is a daily school in this hamlet. Acres 870. Houses 41. A. P. £1,691. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 169. Poor rates, in 1837, £86.

DAGENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Becontree, union of Romford, Essex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Romford; on a branch of the Thames. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £19 10s.; gross income £800. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. L. Fanshaw. There are in this parish five daily, and two Sunday and daily National, schools, two of which are endowed. This parish is remarkable for a great irruption of the river Thames, which occurred here in 1703, and by which 5,000 acres of land were laid under water, and remained inundated till 1715, when Captain Penny received £25,000 from parliament for redeeming the lands. Acres 4,550. Houses 413. A. P. £12,179. Pop., in 1801, 1,257; in 1831, 2,118. Poor rates, in 1837, £957.

DAGLINGWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 3 miles north-west of Cirencester. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £8 6s. 3d.; gross income £270. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There is a daily school in this parish. Charities, £6 17s. per annum. Acres 1,700. Houses 55. A. P. £1,312. Pop., in 1801, 215; in 1831, 239. Poor rates, in 1837, £103.

DAGNELL, or DAGNOLL, a chapelry in the parish of Edlesborough, Buckinghamshire; 3 miles east of Ivinghoe. Acres 1,890. Houses 54. Pop., in 1801, 348; in 1831, 304.

DAGWORTH. See OLD NEWTON WITH DAGWORTH.

DAILESFORD. See DAYLESFORD.

DALBURY WITH LEES, a parish and township in the hund. of Appletree, union of Burton-upon-Trent, county of Derby; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Derby, on a branch of the river Dove. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Litchfield; rated at £4 16s. 3d.; gross income £225. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Charities, in 1826, £13 per annum. The charities of this parish, and that of Radbourn, are, to some extent, mutually intercommunicative. This parish possesses a daily and a Sunday school. Acres 1,600. Houses 44. A. P. £1,376. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 256. Poor rates, in 1837, £80.

DALBY, a parish in the Wold division of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 3 miles north-north-east of Spilsby, on the post road from Boston to Louth. Living, a perpetual curacy not in charge, in the jurisdiction of the dean and chapter of Lincoln; returned at £73; gross income £79. Acres 1,020. Houses 17. A. P. £1,835. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 98. Poor rates, in 1837, £106.

DALBY WITH SKEWSBY, a parish in the wapentake of Bulmer, union of Easingwold, north riding of Yorkshire; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-west by south of New Maldon, on a branch of the Derwent. Living, a discharged rectory, in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £5 1s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £240; in the patronage, in 1835, of the daughters of the Rev. E. Lumley. Acres 1,480. Houses 29. A. P. £1,553. Pop., in 1801, 123; in 1831, 155. Poor rates, in 1837, £82.

DALBY-MAGNA, or DALBY-CHALCOMBE, a parish in the eastern division of the hund. of Goscote, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; 3 miles south by west of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8 4s. 7d.; returned at £150; gross income £214. Patron, in 1835, Sir F. Burdett, Bart. This parish possesses four daily schools, one of which is supported by subscription and endowment. Other charities, in 1836, £1 16s. per annum. Acres 3,080. Houses 73. A. P. £3,266. Pop., in 1801, 345; in 1831, 411. Poor rates, in 1837, £152.

DALBY-PARVA, a parish in the hund. of Framland, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Melton-Mowbray, and close on the post road from thence to Oakham. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £9; gross income £300. Patron, in 1835, E. B. Hartopp, Esq. Charities, in 1836, £5 18s. per annum. Acres 2,180. Houses 34. A. P. £2,652. Pop., in 1801, 162; in 1831, 194. Poor rates, in 1837, £74.

DALBY-ON-THE-WOULDS, or OLD DALBY, a parish in the eastern division of the hund. of Goscote, union of Melton-Mowbray, county of Leicester; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Melton-Mowbray. Living, a donative curacy not in charge, in the jurisdiction of the peculiar court of Old Dalby, of the clear yearly value of £40. Patron, in 1835, Sir H. Sawyer. A new church was erected here in 1836, at the expense of the rector, the Rev. W. E. Gauze. Charities, in 1836, £8 per annum. There is a daily school in this parish. Tanner says that this place was "a preceptory of the knights hospitallers, founded probably by Robert Bossu, earl of Leicester, in the former part of the reign of King Henry II." The revenues belonging to it amounted to £91 2s. 8d. per annum. There is a fine chalybeate spring here. Acres 3,430. Houses 74. A. P. £2,960. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 393. Poor rates, in 1837, £174.

DALDERBY, a parish in the southern division of the wapentake of Gartree, parts of Lindsey, union of Horncastle, county of Lincoln; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Horncastle, and close upon the Horncastle canal. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Scirvelsby. Acres 550. Houses 6. A. P. £822. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 42. Poor rates, in 1837, £37.

DALE, a small sea-port town and parish in the hund. of Roose, union of Haverfordwest, Pembrokeshire; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Milford. This parish is a peninsula, forming the east cheek of Milford haven. At St. Anne's Head, on its southern extremity, there are two light-houses, first erected in the reign of Queen Anne, whose name this land-point bears, and they were re-edified in 1800. The bay and roadstead, where small vessels ride in two or three fathoms water, are defended from all winds, except the east and south-east. The scenery along the shore is very fine. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £6; gross income £65. Patron, in 1835, J. P. L. A. Phillips. There are here three daily schools. Dale appears to possess little trade. It was anciently a borough and market-town. The earl of Richmond landed near this place, and being joined by Rhys-ap-Thomas and others, marched to Bosworth field, where he won the crown of England. Houses 68. A. P. £955. Pop., in 1801, 314; in 1831, 355. Poor rates, in 1837, £155.

DALE-ABBEY, or DE PARCO STANLEY, an extra-parochial chapelry in the hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, county of Derby; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Derby, in the neighbourhood of the Erwash canal. Tanner says, "Serlo de Grendon, temp. Hen. II, first placed a prior and convent of Black canons here," an abbey of whose order was founded here, A. D. 1204, which was endowed with £144 12s. per annum at the dissolution. Acres 1,538. Houses 84. A. P. £2,163. Pop., in 1801, 414; in 1831, 407. Poor rates, in 1837, £136.

DALE-TOWN, a hamlet to the parish of Hawnby, north riding of Yorkshire; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east by east of Thirsk. There is here a daily school with a small endowment. Houses 11. A. P. £641. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 53. Poor rates, in 1837, £8.

DALHAM, a parish in the hund. of Risbridge, union of Newmarket, county of Suffolk; 6 miles east by south of Newmarket. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £15 10s. 5d.; gross income £431. Patron, in 1835, Sir James Affleck, Bart. There is here a day and Sunday National school. Acres 1,840. Houses 106. A. P. £1,951. Pop., in 1801, 428; in 1831, 338. Poor rates, in 1837, £265.

DALINGHOE, or DALLINGHOO, a parish partly in the hund. of Loes, and partly in that of Wilford, union of Woodbridge, county of Suffolk; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Wickham market. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £386. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. E. Walford. There is a daily school in this parish. Charities connected with it amount to £10 6s. per annum. Acres 1,110. Houses 42. A. P. £2,331. Pop., in 1801, 246; in 1831, 354. Poor rates, in 1837, £283.

DALLING-FIELD. See FIELD-DALLING.

DALLINGRIDGE, a manor in the hund. of Rushmonden, rape of Pevensey, county of Sussex; the river Cuckmere flows through it. "This manor," says Burrell, as quoted by Carlisle, "lies in the parishes of East Grinstead, West Hoathley, and Horsted Keynes; with Court-Baron, Quit-Rents, Heriots, &c. The lord of this manor is a free suitor to the forest of Ashdown, and is entitled to an unlimited right of common on the said forest, for as many head of cattle as he can winter, with liberty of cutting turf, &c., thereon. There are upwards of 50 acres of forest within the limits of the manor."

DALLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Nottle-Grove, union and county of Northampton, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Northampton; on the river Nen. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £6 15s. 8d.; gross income £100. Patron, in 1835, J. Reddal, Esq. There are a few endowed alms-houses in this parish. Acres 1,520. Houses 102. A. P. £2,407. Pop., in 1801, 302; in 1831, 479. Poor rates, in 1837, £258.

DALLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Netherfield, rape of Hastings, union of Battle, county of Sussex, 6 miles west-north-west of Battle. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £8; gross income £192. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Ashburnham. There is a daily school in this parish. Sir Joseph Jekyll was born here in 1663. Acres 3,890. Houses 84. A. P. £1,590. Pop., in 1801, 401; in 1831, 577. Poor rates, in 1837, £343.

DALSTON, a parish in the ward and county of Cumberland, union of Carlisle; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south by west of Carlisle, on the river Caldew, and close upon the original line of the Maryport and Carlisle railway. It comprises the townships of Buckhowbank, Cumdevoek, Dalston, Hawkesdale, Ivegill, and Raughton with Gatesgill. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; gross income £231. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. This parish possesses 1 day and Sunday National and 12 daily schools, one of which, a grammar-school, is supported by endowment. The celebrated Dr. Paley was vicar of Dalston from 1774 to 1793. In 1838 there 4 cotton mills and 1 flax mill, employing together 335 hands, within this parish. Rosecastle, situated in a delightful valley here, is supposed to have been the principal residence of the bishops of Carlisle from the year 1228. In 1322, it was burned by Robert Bruce. In 1643, being then held for the king, it was attacked by General Lambert and taken by storm. Since the restoration it has been rebuilt and enlarged by successive prelates. Acres 10,890. Houses 473. A. P. £15,129. Pop., in 1801, 2,120; in 1831, 3,021. Poor rates, in 1837, £391. Houses of the township, 164. Pop., in 1801, 701; in 1831, 1,109.

DALTON, in judicial processes, styled DALTON CUM HUTTON, a township in that part of the parish of Burton in Kendal which is in the hund. of Lonsdale, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east by east of Burton in Kendal. Acres 2,230. Houses 18. A. P. £2,136. Pop., in 1801, 73; in 1831, 131. Poor rates, in 1837, £120.

DALTON, a township in that part of the parish of Wigan, which is in the hund. of West Derby, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Wigan, in the vicinity of the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount of impropriated, £284 7s. 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; of rectorial, £85 8s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 1,930. Houses 84. A. P. £3,477. Pop., in 1801, 352; in 1831, 468. Poor rates, in 1837, £233.

DALTON, a township in the parish of Newburn, Northumberland; 11 miles north-west of Newcastle, on the northern bank of the river Pont. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £120 1s. 11d. Acres 850. Houses 26. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 106. Poor rates, in 1837, £37.

DALTON, a township in that part of the parish of Topcliffe, which is in the wapentake of Birdforth, north riding of York; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Thirsk, close upon the Great North of England railway. There is here a daily school endowed with £31 per annum. Acres 1,150. Houses 54. A. P. £1,119. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 252. Poor rates, in 1837, £41.

DALTON, a township in the parish of Kirk-Heaton, west riding of Yorkshire; 2 miles north-east of Huddersfield, bounded on the north by the river Calde and on the west by the Colne. There are here a Calvinistic Methodist church, formed in 1826; and 5 daily schools. Acres 1,260. Houses 535. A. P. £3,031. Pop., in 1801, 1,222; in 1831, 3,060. Poor rates, in 1837, £610.

DALTON-LE-DALE, a parish and township in the northern division of Easington-ward, union of Easington, co.-palatine of Durham, comprising the townships of Dawdon, Cold-Hesleton, and East Morton; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Sunderland, on a branch of the Wear. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £6 0s. 7d.; gross income £215. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham. This parish possesses 3 daily schools. The annual income of charities amounts to £50. Acres 3,940. Houses 134. A. P. £2,980. Pop., in 1801, 185; in 1831, 1,305. Poor rates, in 1837, £187. Acres of the township 830. Houses 12. A. P. £654. Pop., in 1801, 40; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1837, £22.

DALTON-IN-FURNESS, a parish and township in the hund. of Lonsdale, union of Ulverston, north of the sands, co.-palatine of Lancaster, comprising the market-town of Dalton, and the townships of Hawcoat above Town with Ireleth, and Yarleaside; 25 miles north-west by west of Lancaster, and $5\frac{1}{2}$ south-west by west of Ulverston. Acres 16,210. Houses 504. A. P. £4,577. Pop., in 1801, 2,027; in 1831, 2,697. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,571. Acres of the township 770. Houses 180. A. P. £2,136. Pop., in 1811, 643; in 1831, 759. All the islands to the south and west on the coast of Furness, belong to the parish. The face of the country is monotonous, but fertile. The town stands on the slope of a limestone rock, and is almost comprehended in one street. The isle of Walney, which is a long strip of land, south-west of Dalton, has a lighthouse at the southern extremity. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £17 6s. 8d.; gross income £113. Patron, the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. There are in the parish 13 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £10, another with £125, and a third, Dalton Free School, with £135 per annum. There is a square tower here, erected in the reign of Edward III., on the supposed site of an Agricolan fort. It was recently used as a court-house for the liberty. The trade of Dalton is principally in malt. The iron mines, in the vicinity, produce excellent ore, which is smelted in extensive iron works on the spot. Fairs are held here on the 6th of June for horned cattle; and on the 23d of October for cattle, horses, and pedlery. The market is on Saturday. The vicinity of Dalton is favourable for the sports of the chase; but the Dalton hunt, which existed for more than a century, has been long discontinued. In the year 1631 the plague visited Dalton and the isle of Walney, and carried off 500 persons. In a deep sequestered narrow vale in this vicinity, termed the vale of Nightshade, are the remains of the magnificent abbey of FURNESS, founded in 1125 by Stephen, afterwards king of England, for monks of the Cistercian order. The revenue of this splendid establishment at its dissolution was £966 7s. 10d. Dalton was the chief town in Furness while this abbey prospered. The deer park around the abbey is finely terraced. On a rocky island, adjacent to the isle of Walney, are the remains of an ancient castle, called the Peel of Foundry, which is thought by Camden to have been erected in the reign of Edward III., by the abbots of Furness, to defend the approach to the harbour.

DALTON (NORTH), a parish in the Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Driffield, east riding of Yorkshire, comprising the townships of North Dalton and Neswick; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Great Driffield. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; rated at £9 6s. 8d.; gross income £75. Patron, in 1835, James Walker, Esq. This parish possesses 2 daily schools. Acres 4,850. Houses 93. A. P. £5,173. Pop., in 1801, 326; in 1831, 525. Poor rates, in 1837, £262. Acres of the township 3,890. Houses 82. A. P. £3,533. Pop., in 1801, 272; in 1831, 468. Poor rates, in 1837, £237.

DALTON (SOUTH), a parish in the Hunsley-Beacon division of the same wapentake, union of Beverley; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Beverley. Living, a rectory, a peculiar of Beverley; rated at £12; gross income £450. Patron, in 1835, Lord Hotham. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,730. Houses 56. A. P. £1,500. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 273. Poor rates, in 1837, £77.

DALTON-PIERCY, a township in the parish of Hart, co.-palatine of Durham; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north by east of Stockton-upon-Tees. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge of impropriated, £118 5s.; of those due to the vicar of Hart, £10 10s. Acres 960. Houses 16. A. P. £1,032. Pop., in 1801, 70; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1837, £28.

DALTON-UPON-TEES, a township in the parish of Croft, partly within the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the parish of Kirkby-Ravensworth, wapentake of Gilling-wast, north riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south of Darlington, intersected by the Great North of England railway. Acres 3,890. Houses 104. A. P. £4,557. Pop., in 1801, 354; in 1831, 504. Poor rates, in 1837, £171.

DALWOOD, a hamlet and chapelry to the parish of Stockland, county of Dorset, locally in the county of Devon; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Axminster. There is a daily school in this hamlet. A fair is held first Wednesday before August 24th, for cattle. Acres 3,950. Houses 105. A. P. £1,892. Pop., in 1801, 430; in 1831, 434. Poor rates, in 1837, £172.

DAMERHAM HUNDRED (NORTH AND

SOUTH, in the county of Wilts. Area 27,600 acres. Houses 1,147. Pop., in 1831, 6,092.

DAMERHAM (SOUTH), a parish in the above hund.; $9\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south by west of Salisbury, and 3 miles west of the river Avon. Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of St. Martin, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £25 10s. 2½d.; gross income £411. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Chichester. This parish possesses 3 daily schools. Acres 4,310. Houses 143. A. P. £3,323. Pop., in 1801, 529; in 1831, 716. Poor rates, in 1837, £604.

DANBURY, a parish in the hund. of Chelmsford, union of Chelmsford, Essex; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of Chelmsford, bounded on the west by the river Chelmer, in the neighbourhood of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £20; gross income £455. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £527 9s. 11d. Patron, in 1835, Sir B. W. Bridges, Bart. Charities, in 1836, £40 5s. per annum. There are 2 almshouses, 1 Sunday and daily National, and 4 daily, schools in this parish. The name is contracted from Danesbury, signifying 'the town or castle of the Danes.' On the summit of Danbury hill is an ancient encampment. A fair for toys is held here annually on the 29th of May. Acres 3,670. Houses 207. A. P. £2,605. Pop., in 1801, 768; in 1831, 1,060. Poor rates, in 1837, £439.

DANBY, a parish in the eastern division of the liberty of Langbaugh, union of Guilsborough, north riding of Yorkshire; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Guilsborough. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Cleveland and dio. of York; rated at £16 3s.; gross income £96. Patron, in 1835, Lord Viscount Downe. Annual income of charities £20. This parish possesses 7 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. In 1838 there was a flax mill here, employing 21 hands. North of the church, on the brow of a hill, stand the ruins of Danby-castle. Acres 13,860. Houses 282. A. P. £5,949. Pop., in 1801, 990; in 1831, 1,392. Poor rates, in 1837, £432.

DANE (THE). See CHESHIRE.

DANBY-WHISKE, a parish and township in the eastern division of the wapentake of Gilling-East, union of North-Allerton, north riding of Yorkshire; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of North-Allerton, close on the Great North of England railway, and near the post road from Darlington to Thirsk. It includes the chapelry of Yafforth. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Yafforth, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £9 3s. 11½d.; gross income £490. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. William Cust. Acres 4,350. Houses 105. A. P. £4,472. Pop., in 1801, 427; in 1831, 508. Poor rates, in 1837, £256. Acres of the township 3,230. Houses 73. A. P. £2,923. Pop., in 1801, 302; in 1831, 343. Poor rates, in 1837, £150.

DANEHILL-HORSTED HUNDRED, in the rape of Pevensey, county of Sussex. Area 8,650 acres. Houses 148. Pop., in 1831, 1,051.

DANTHORPE, a township in the parish of Humbleton, east riding of Yorkshire; $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-north-east of Kingston-upon-Hull. Acres 870. Houses 6. A. P. £917. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 37. Poor rates, in 1837, £19.

DANTSEY. See DAUNTSSEY, Wiltshire.

DARENTH, or DARENT, a parish in the hund. of Axton, Dartford, and Wilmington, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, county of Kent; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east by south of Dartford, on the river Darent. Living, a discharged vicarage in the jurisdiction of the archd. of Canterbury; rated at £9 18s. 11½d.; gross income £346. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Rochester. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 2,080. Houses 94. A. P. £2,544. Pop., in 1801, 407; in 1831, 588. Poor rates, in 1837, £244.

DARESBURY, a chapelry in the parish of Run-corn, co.-palatine of Chester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Frodsham, near the Warrington and Newton railway, and close on the Duke of Bridgewater's canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; returned at £115; gross income £191. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Christ-church, Oxford. There is here an endowed daily school. Acres 530. Houses 29. A. P. £1,223. Pop., in 1801, 134; in 1831, 143. Poor rates, in 1837, £67.

DARFIELD, a parish, partly in the northern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, and partly in Staincross wapentake, west riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by south of Barneley, on the river Dearne, and on the Leeds and Derby railway, near the Dearne and Dove canal. It comprises the townships of Ardsley, Billingley, Darfield, Great Houghton, Little Houghton, and Wombwell, and the chapelry of Worsbrough. The town of Darfield is beautifully situated on the slope of a hill. Living, 1st mediety, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of York, with the curacy of Wombwell; no return: 2d mediety, a vicarage with the curacy of Wombwell; gross income £93. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge of those due to Trinity college, Cambridge, £269 1s.; of vicarial, £260 16s. Patrons, the master and fellows of Trinity college, Cambridge. This parish possesses 14 daily schools, 5 of which are partly supported by endowments; there is also an infant and daily National school, endowed with £15 per annum. Annual income of other charities £51 10s. Acres 11,740. Houses 1,097. A. P. £23,126. Pop., in 1801, 2,958; in 1831, 5,703. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,970. Acres of the township 1,640. Houses 109. A. P. £3,709. Pop., in 1801, 447; in 1831, 520. Poor rates, in 1837, £395.

DARKING. See DORKING, Surrey.

DARLASTON, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Offlow, union of Walsall, county of Stafford, agreeably situated on the banks of the Trent; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-west by north of Wednesbury, near the Grand Junction railway from Birmingham to Liverpool, and on the borders of the Easington canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £3 11s. 5½d.; gross income £297. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Simeon. This parish possesses a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1811; and a place of worship for Independents. There are likewise 5 daily, and 2 Sunday and daily National, schools. Gunlocks, hinges, and various articles of hardware are manufactured here. Coal and iron-ore abound in the vicinity. Acres 770. Houses 1,225. A. P. £4,213. Pop., in 1801, 3,812; in 1831, 6,647. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,579.

DARLESTON. See PREES, Salop.

DARLETON, or DARLTON, a parish in the South-clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 3 miles north-east by east of Tuxford, and 2 miles west of the Trent. Living, a curacy, not in charge, subordinate to the vicarage of Dunham. Acres 1,500. Houses 26. A. P. £1,579. Pop., in 1801, 126; in 1831, 162. Poor rates, in 1837, £129.

DARLEY. See MENWITH WITH DARLEY.

DARLEY, a parish, partly in the hund. of Wirksworth, but chiefly in the hund. of High Peak, county of Derby, with the hamlets of Winsley, Suitterton, and Darley Dale; 3 miles north-west of Matlock.

on the eastern bank of the Derwent. Acres 7,860. Houses 384. A. P. £9,350. Pop., in 1801, 1,697; in 1831, 1,937. Poor rates, in 1837, £823. Living, a rectory in two portions,—the mediety of North Darley, and the discharged mediety of South Darley, in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield, each rated at £9 13s. 0½d.; gross income £438. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £232 14s. 4½d. Patron, the dean of Lincoln. There are in this parish 4 daily, and 2 day and Sunday, schools, of which 2 are jointly endowed and similarly supported, and have a lending library attached. Annual income of other charities £15. In 1838 there was a flax mill here, employing 96 hands. Fairs are held on May 13th, and October 27th, for sheep and cattle. Darley dale is surrounded by rich meadows and dusky hills in strong contrast. The church, as seen through the trees, has a very rural appearance. In the churchyard there is an extraordinary yew-tree, the mean diameter of which, taken from measurements at four different places, is 1,356 lines. Horizontal sections from its north and south sides gave an average from its latest increase at 44 rings per inch nearly, which, according to De Candolle's rule for estimating the age of the yew-tree, ought also to indicate the number of years. The estimated age of this tree, therefore, is no less than 2,006 years. The probable reason why so many old yew-trees are to be met with in churchyards, is, that they were planted there, at a period anterior to the introduction of Christianity, under the influence of the same feelings as those which prompted the early nations of antiquity to plant the cypress round the graves of their deceased friends. "Hugh, dean of Derby—Temp. Henry II.—built here a priory of black canons."—Tanner.

DARLEY-ABBEY, or LITTLE-DERBY, a township in the parish of St. Alkmund, county of Derby; 1½ mile north of Derby; on the river Derwent, and close upon the Derby and Leeds railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £153. Patron, in 1835, W. Evans, Esq. There are here three daily schools. A religious house was founded here by the earl of Derby, in the reign of Stephen. Part of the walls, which still remain, are converted into cottages. This township is stated, in the parliamentary boundary reports, to be a flourishing place,—the inhabitants being chiefly employed in a paper-mill and a large cotton factory; but no separate returns were given in the report of mills and factories in 1838. Houses 172. Pop., in 1801, 615; in 1831, 1,170.

DARLINGSCOTT, a hamlet in the parish of Tredington, eastern division of the county of Worcester, locally in the Kington division of the hund. of Kington, county of Warwick; 2½ miles north-west by west of Shipston-upon-Stour, and near the Moreton and Stratford-on-Avon railway. Houses 38. Pop., in 1811, 173; in 1831, 166. Other returns with the parish.

DARLINGTON, a parochial chapelry in the south-east division of Darlington ward, union of Darlington, county of Durham; 18½ miles south of Durham, comprising the market-town of Darlington with Oxenball, and the townships of Archdeacon Newton, Blackwell, and Cockerton. The town of Darlington is situated on rising ground, in a grazing district, on the western bank of the Skerne; 3 miles north from where it joins the Tees, over which there is here a bridge of three arches; it is on the post-road, and on the line of the Great North of England railway.—See article CHORT.—The whole line of this railway from Darlington to York, a distance of 45 miles, is expected to be open to the public in the autumn of 1840, together also with all the railway lines from York to London. The railway communication northwards from Darlington to Newcastle is also in progress. The Stockton and Darlington railway is continued from Darlington to Bishop Auckland, where it meets the Weardale and Frosterly railway. A railway, named the North Junction railway, has been projected between Darlington and the Durham branch of the Clarence railway, between the Sherburn branch of the Clarence and the Durham Junction railway at Houghton-le-Spring; and from thence to join the Brandley Junction at Heworth, and finally to terminate at Newcastle-upon-Tyne. See also Coxhoe, Durham, the Aucklands, Stockton, &c. Darlington is built in the form of a square, whence several streets diverge in different directions. It is lighted at night with gas. Acres of the chapelry 7,630. Houses 1,347. A. P. £21,579. Pop., in 1801, 5,349; in 1831, 9,417. Acres of the township 3,470. Houses 1,192. A. P. £13,843. Pop., in 1801, 4,670; in 1831, 8,574.

Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Durham, returned at £133 3s. 10d.; gross income £284. Patron, the Duke of Cleveland. There are here a Wesleyan Methodist church formed in 1812; places of worship for the Baptists and Independents; a Friends' meeting-house, and a Roman Catholic chapel, opened in 1827, and licensed under the new marriage act. There are also here two day and Sunday National, one Lancasterian, and 24 other schools; one of which, a grammar-school, was founded and endowed by Queen Elizabeth with houses and lands, to the amount of £245 per annum, and is otherwise supported by the proceeds of a bequest originally constituting the endowment of another charity school. Minor charities, from numerous sources, produce upwards of £120 per annum. There are two almshouses and a public dispensary. Poor rates of the township, in 1837, £1,594; of the chapelry, £2,048.—The Darlington poor-law union comprehends 41 parishes, embracing an area of 92 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 18,863. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,805. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,278.

Darlington is the place of election for the members for the south division of the county. The government of the town recently was vested in a bailiff appointed by the bishop of Durham. A commodious townhouse has been erected, and a mechanics' institute has been established. There are two iron foundries; and in 1838 there were three worsted mills, and one flax mill, employing together 498 hands. The Darlington District Joint Stock banking company was established in 1832. There is also a branch of the National Provincial bank of England here. Fairs are held on the first Monday in March, Easter-Monday, Whit-Monday, Monday fortnight after Whit-Monday, November 22d, and a fortnight after, for cattle, horses, and sheep. The market-day is Monday. Darlington gives the title of Earl to the marquis of Cleveland, of the family of Vane.

DARLINGTON WARD, in the county of Durham, consists of three divisions,—south-east, south-west, and north-west. Area 282,480 acres. Houses 9,203. Pop., in 1831, 55,904.

DARLTON. See DARLETON.

DARNALL. See ATTERCLIFFE.

DARNHALL, a township in the parish of Whitgate, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles west-south-west of Middlewich, on a branch of the river Weaver, in the neighbourhood of the Warrington and Newton railway. Acres 1,240. Houses 29. A. P. £2,292. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 193. Poor rates, in 1837, £131.

DARNHALL (THE), a river in Radnorshire, which falls into the Wye near Rhydar-Gowy.

DAROWEN, a parish in the hund. and union of Machynllaeth, county of Montgomery, North Wales. It comprises the townships of Caerseddffan and Noddfa; 6 miles east-north-east of Machynllaeth, east of the river Dovey. Living, a rectory and vicarage in the dio. of St. Asaph; the former a sinecure, rated at £10 17s. 11d.; gross income £131: the latter, which is discharged, is valued at £38 per annum; gross income £130. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. There is a Calvinistic Methodist church here, formed in 1812, and a daily school. In 1838 there were five woollen mills here, employing 19 hands. Houses 178. A. P. £2,732. Pop., in 1801, 801; in 1831, 961. Poor rates, in 1837, £544.

DARRAS-HALL, a township in the parish of Ponteland, Northumberland; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, south of the river Pont. Houses 2. Pop., in 1801, 21; in 1831, 15. Poor rates, in 1837, £8.

DARRINGTON, a parish and township in the upper division of the wapentake of Osgoldcross, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-east of Pontefract, on the post-road from York to Doncaster, and in the neighbourhood of the York and Derby railway. It includes the township of Stapelton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £16 11s. 3d.; gross income £517. Patron, the archbishop of York. There is a daily school here. Charities, £8 per annum. Acres 4,590. Houses 112. A. P. £3,133. Pop., in 1801, 480; in 1831, 619. Poor rates, in 1837, £453.

DARSHAM NEAR YOXFORD, a parish in the hund. and union of Blything, county of Suffolk; 2 miles east-north-east of Yoxford, near the post-road from Lowestoft to Saxmundham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £4 10s. 10d., returned at £70; gross income £64. Patron, the Earl of Stradbroke. There is a daily school. There seems formerly to have been several hamlets in this parish. Acres 1,700. Houses 58. A. P. £2,012. Pop., in 1801, 421; in 1831, 513. Poor rates, in 1837, £190.

DART (THE). See DEVONSHIRE.

DARTFORD, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Axton Dartford, and Wilmington, union of Dartford, lathes of Sutton-at-Hone, county of Kent; 15 miles east-south-east of London, and 22 north-west of Maidstone, on the great road from London to Canterbury and Dover, in a narrow valley at a ford, on the river Darent, which is navigable for boats, and over which a bridge is now erected. A ship canal has been projected to connect Dartford and Crayford with the Thames, and to be capable of admitting steam and other vessels of 400 tons burden at all times of the tide; and thus, in effect, to convert Dartford and Crayford into seaport towns. Dartford is beautifully situated between two hills. The town consists of one wide street. Below the town is a good wharf. Acres of the parish, 4,150. Houses 811. A. P. £12,595. Pop., in 1801, 2,406; in 1831, 4,715.—Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £18 11s. 3d.; gross income £560. Patron, the bishop of Rochester. The church is a spacious edifice, with chancel, nave, aisles, and an embattled tower. There is an Independent church here, formed in 1790; and a Wesleyan Methodist, formed in 1798. There are 9 daily schools, one of which, the free grammar-school, is endowed with £50 per annum; and another, the church charity school, in which a number of poor children are clothed and educated, is supported by endowments, amounting to £130 per annum. Two of them are day and Sunday National schools, partly supported by endowments. Other charities, derived from numerous sources, and distributed among the poor, amounted, in 1836, to upwards of £200 per annum. An alms-house, called the Spittel house, was founded here under a license from Henry VI. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,405.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Dartford, by the poor-law commissioners. The Dartford poor-law union comprehends 21 parishes, embracing an area of 81 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 21,053. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £11,625. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,140.

There are celebrated powder mills near Dartford. Here the first mill for the preparation of iron in the manufacture of wire was erected. There are paper and silk mills in the vicinity. The original paper mill was erected in the reign of Elizabeth, on the present site of the powder mills, by Sir John Spilman, a German, who first introduced the manufacture of paper into this kingdom. Corn is sold here in great quantities. A few hops are grown. Market-houses were built about 50 years ago. The market-day is Saturday. A fair is held on August 2d for horses and bullocks. There is a branch of the Devon and Cornwall banking company in the town. Tanner says, that "about A.D. 1355, Edward III. founded and endowed here a fine nunnery, of the order of St. Augustine, which was endowed 26th Henry VIII., with £380 9s. ob. per ann." Wat Tyler's insurrection began at Dartford.

DARTINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Stanborough, union of Totness, Devonshire; 2 miles north by west of Totness; bounded on the north and east by the river Dart. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £36 4s. 4d.; gross income £100. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £670 7s. Patron, H. Champenowne, Esq. There are one Sunday and daily National, and three daily schools, in this parish. Acres 2,910. Houses 112. A. P. £6,755. Pop., in 1801, 486; in 1831, 618. Poor rates, in 1837, £300.

DARTMOOR, an extensive and most remarkable tract of high land on the north-west of Exmoor, and in the parish of Lidford, county of Devon; 10 miles north-east of Tavistock. It includes a space of 350,000 acres, about one-seventh part of which is termed DARTMOOR FOREST, and belongs to the duchy of Cornwall. This elevated tract is of an irregular form, broken into numerous minor hills, many of them crowned by picturesque groups of granite rocks, provincially termed Tors, and for the most part consisting of a wild mixture of heath, bog, rock, and rapid streams, whence some of the principal, and many of the smaller, rivers of Devon take their rise. De La Beche states, that the Yes Tor, apparently the most elevated point in this high land, rises 2,050 feet above the sea. There are other mountains nearly as elevated. The summits of Caws and Beacon, on the north of Dartmoor, one of the stations of the great triangulation on which the ordnance maps are based, is 1,792 feet above the sea; but several others are higher. Dartmoor is the principal metalliferous district of Devon. Viewed as a whole, it is of a mixed metalliferous character, and affords large quantities of most of the useful metals, with valuable mines of manganese. &c.—See articles DEVON and CORNWALL.—Dartmoor exhibits numerous British remains. During the revolutionary war, a French prison was erected on the moor, which has been transformed into an agricultural settlement for the poor. Acres 53,900. Houses 60. Pop., in 1831, 353.

DARTMOUTH, or CLIFTON DARTMOUTH HARDNESS, a borough, seaport, and market-town, in the hund. of Coleridge, union of Totness, Devonshire; 31 miles south-south by west of Exeter, and 202 west-south-west of London; at the mouth of the river Dart, on the acclivity of an eminence, sloping gradually from the margin of the water, and ranged in streets rising in a terraced form at different elevations. Its buildings have recently extended along the Totness road, on ground belonging to the corporation. There is a good supply of water, with other local advantages. Acres 1,650. Houses 588. A. P. £8,135. Pop., in 1801, 2,398; in 1831, 4,597. The bay, in several points of view, from which the town and the sea are excluded by projecting rocks, has the appearance of an inland lake; while, from the bay itself, the view of the town with its terraced streets, extending nearly a mile along the water's edge, embosomed among trees, is eminently pleasing. The harbour, the entrance to which is defended by a castle and two platforms of cannon, is capacious enough to receive 500 sail of vessels, and is remarkable for its security, though rather narrow of entrance. It has been recently selected as the point of departure and arrival for the West India mail-steam-packets. The dockyards and quay project into the river, and cause an apparent curvature in its course, which has a very beautiful effect; while the uniformity is farther broken by the ships of war and smaller vessels gliding along its current. A floating bridge was opened, for the public use, in August, 1831. It is impelled across the river upon chains, and being of great size and accommodation, and employed on a river of about 1,650 feet in breadth, and of great depth and rapidity of stream, the power used to impel it on the chains is steam.

Dartmouth is divided into 3 parishes,—viz., St. Petrox, St. Saviour, and Townstall, all in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter. The living of St. Petrox is a perpetual curacy, with a chapel-of-ease; gross income £66. Patron, the rector of Stoke-Fleming. The living of St. Saviour is a perpetual curacy annexed to the vicarage of Townstall; gross income £135; in the patronage of the mayor and corporation. The living of Townstall is rated at £12 15s. 4½d. The patronage also belongs to the mayor and corporation. One of the churches is situated on a hill, and has a tower 69 feet high, which forms a good sea-mark. The Presbyterians, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists, who are numerous, have places of worship here. The Presbyterian and Baptist chapels are licensed under the new marriage act. The Presbyterian chapel was formerly occupied by the Rev. John Flavell, of pious memory, who died in 1691, and whose monument is placed in the chapel. There are 12 daily schools. Annual income of charities, £50. There are also almshouses, one of them for decayed mariners. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,328.

The legal style and title of the corporation of this borough is: "The mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of Clifton Dartmouth Hardness, in the county of Devon." This borough sent two members to parliament since the 14th Edward III., up to the passing of the reform act, when it was deprived of one. The right of election was formerly vested in about 41 freemen. The number of electors registered under the reform act, in 1832, was 243, of whom 22 were freeholders. The mayor is the returning officer. A commission of the peace has been granted to Dartmouth, and a court of quarter-sessions, and a recorder appointed. The gaol consists of 2 cells only, and these very insufficient. The town-council are about to erect a new prison. The trade of Dartmouth arose, in a great measure, from the Newfoundland fisheries. They are still carried on to a great extent; but of late they have declined. The chief markets are the Mediterranean ports, the returns from which are generally wine, oil, salt, and fruit, &c. The chief exports at present are cider and barley. The coasting trade is also extensive. The gross receipt of customs in 1838, was £4,100 13s. 2d.; in 1839, £4,629 6s. 10d. There are here bonded warehouses for all goods except tobacco and East India goods. There is a custom-house near the quay, which is large and convenient, and the principal merchants reside in a spacious street before it. A new market-house has been built. The market-day is Friday. There are no fairs of importance. In the parliamentary war under Charles I., Dartmouth being considered a very important post, was warmly contested by both parties, and surrendered in 1643, after a siege of four weeks, to Prince Maurice, who garrisoned it for the king; but, in 1646, it was retaken by General Fairfax.

DARTON, a parish and township in the lower division of the wapentake of Staincross, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles north-west of Barnsley, on the river Dearne. It includes the townships of Barugh and Hexborough. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £12 10s.; returned at £150; gross income £150. Patron, in 1835, T. W. Beaumont. There are in the parish 11 daily schools; of which, one is partly supported by endowments, and another, the free school, is endowed with £120 a-year, being half the produce of land bequeathed by George Beaumont, in 1688. The remaining moiety is distributed among poor people of Darton and Overtofton, not receiving parochial relief. Other charities, £22 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, of the parish, £633; of the township, £316. Acres 4,510. Houses 577. A. P. £7,775. Pop., in 1801, 1,699; in 1831, 2,960. Acres of the township, 1,400. Houses 277. A. P. £2,638. Pop., in 1801, 936; in 1831, 1,466.

DARWEN (Lower), a township in the parish of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles south by east of Blackburn, in the neighbourhood of the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, not in charge; gross income £48. Patron, the vicar of Blackburn. A district chapel has been erected here, by the parliamentary commissioners, in the Gothic style, with a tower, at an expense of £5,491 2s. 6d. Sittings 969. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 2,490. Houses 409. A. P. £4,328. Pop., in 1801, 1,646; in 1831, 2,667. Poor rates, in 1837, £605.

DARWEN (Over), a township and chapelry in the above parish; 4 miles south-south by east of Blackburn. Living, a perpetual curacy, of the certified value of £9 16s. 8d.; gross income £166. Patron, the vicar of Blackburn. There is a new chapel here, built by the parliamentary commissioners, in the Gothic style, with a tower, at an expense of £6,573 4s. 9d. Sittings 1,529. There are also an Independent church, formed in 1688; and a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1788, one of which is licensed under the new marriage act. This township possesses 5 daily schools. It abounds in coal and slate. Acres 5,010. Houses 1,151. A. P. £6,629. Pop., in 1801, 3,587; in 1831, 6,972. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,146.

DARWENT. See DERWENT.

DASSET-AVON, or LITTLE-DASSET, a parish in the Burton-Dasset division of the hund. of Kington, county of Warwick; 5½ miles east by south of Kington. Living, a rectory, formerly in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £13 18s. 9d.; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, R. G. Jeston, Esq. This parish enjoys the privilege of sending 15 children to the free school at Farnborough. Charities connected with it amount to £25 5s. per annum. Acres 1,580. Houses 49. A. P. £2,523. Pop., in 1801, 174; in 1831, 226. Poor rates, in 1837, £134.

DASSETT-BURTON. See BURTON-DASSETT.

DATCHET, a parish in the hund. of Stoke, union of Eton, Bucks; 2 miles east-south-east of Windsor, on the eastern bank of the Thames. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11, returned at £85; gross income £125. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. There is a Baptist chapel in this parish; and it possesses 3 daily schools. Annual income of charities £40. Datchet is separated from Windsor by the river Thames. Lord Montagu has a splendid mansion in Ditton-park in this parish, and upon the banks of the river are many handsome villas, whence there are fine views of Windsor castle and the adjacent scenery. Shakspeare has invested Datchet-mead with peculiar interest, by making it the scene of Falstaff's punishment in the case of the Merry Wives of Windsor. Acres 1,630. Houses 140. A. P. £3,709. Pop., in 1801, 357; in 1831, 802. Poor rates, in 1837, £371.

DATCHWORTH, a parish in the hund. of Broadwater, union and county of Hertford; 3½ miles north-east of Welwyn. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £14 13s. 4d.; gross income £422. Patrons, the master and fellows of Clarehall, Cambridge. Here is a daily and Sunday National school. Acres 1,930. Houses 103. A. P. £2,224. Pop., in 1801, 410; in 1831, 593. Poor rates, in 1837, £130.

DATTON, a township in the parish of Rotherham, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles east of Rotherham. Acres 1,400. Houses 37. A. P. £2,251. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 187. Poor rates, in 1837, £101.

DAUNTSEY, or DANTSEY, a parish in the hund. and union of Malmesbury, Wilts; 4½ miles south-south-east of Malmesbury, in the neighbourhood of the Great Western railway, and the Wilts and Berks canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 6s. 3d.; gross income £350. Patrons, the trustees of the late Earl of Peterborough. In 1667, the Earl of Danby bequeathed £50 per annum, by which, together with the proceeds of accumulated stock, a daily school and an alms-house, with 6 inmates, are now supported. Acres 2,940. Houses 70. A. P. £9,448. Pop., in 1801, 357; in 1831, 561. Poor rates, in 1837, £244.

DAVENHAM, or DANEHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Northwich, county of Chester; 2 miles south of Northwich, on the western bank of the river Wenbeck, near the Warrington and Newton railway. It comprises the townships of Bostock, Davenham, Eaton, Leftwich, Moulton, Newhall, Rudheath, Shipbrook, Shurlach, Stanthorne, Wharton, and Whatcroft. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £23 15s. 1½d.; gross income £886. Patron, in 1835, W. Tomkinson, Esq. There are here 17 daily schools, and also 2 day and Sunday-National schools, partly supported by an endowment, originally intended for the parish school, which fell entirely off. Annual income of charities about £70. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,937; of the township, £182. Rudheath, in this parish, is celebrated as the scene of an action fought between the king's troops and the parliamentary forces under Sir William Brereton on the 22d February, 1643. Acres 9,440. Houses 805. A. P. £19,429. Pop., in 1801, 2,891; in 1831, 4,515.

DAVENPORT, a township in the parish of Astbury, co.-palatine of Chester; 4½ miles north-west of Congleton, south of the river Dane. Tith-commuted in 1839; aggregate amount, £76 15s. 8d. Acres 660. Houses 18. A. P. £1,455. Pop., in 1801, 89; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1837, £70.

DAVENTRY, a very ancient parish and market-town, having separate jurisdiction, but locally situated in the hund. of Fawley, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 13 miles west-west by north of Northampton, and 72 miles north-west of London, on the post-road from Towcester, within 2 miles south-west of the London and Birmingham railway, and of the Grand Junction canal. It includes the hamlet of Drayton. The town of Daventry occupies the ascent and summit of a hill, near the sources of the Avon and the Nen, which fall into the opposite seas. It is cleanly and respectable in appearance, with some good houses and shops. Acres of the parish 4,090. Houses 725. A. P. £10,287. Pop., in 1801, 2,582; in 1831, 3,640. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £50, gross income £344. In the patronage of the dean and chapter of Christ church, Oxford. There is a Wesleyan Methodist church here, formed in 1795; and an Independent, formed in 1722: the latter is licensed under the new marriage act. There are in this parish 19 daily schools; one of which, a free grammar school, founded and endowed by William Parker, in 1576, and farther endowed by John Farrer, in 1749, is open to the sons of parishioners, not exceeding 50 in number; and another, the English charity school, first endowed by Dr. Edward Maynard, in 1756, and since supported by various gifts, is at present combined with a National school, for the instruction of all the poor children of the parish. Annual income of other charities, £110. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,751. A work-house has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Daventry, capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Daventry poor-law union comprehends 28 parishes, embracing an area of 95 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 19,137. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £16,644. Expenditure in 1836, £9,368.

Daventry received a charter of incorporation from King John, confirmed by Elizabeth and James I., by virtue of which, the town is governed by a bailiff, a recorder, and a town-clerk, who must all be barristers-at-law, 12 burgesses, 20 common council-men, two sergeants-at-mace, and other officers. Daventry is a polling-place for the southern division of Northampton. Sessions of the peace are held once a year. The recorder attends and presides. The borough is exempt from contribution to the county of Northampton, and from serving on its juries; but a borough rate is paid out of the poor's rate, in the nature of a county rate, which amounted, in 1836, to £57 10s. The chief trade is shoe-making. There is a considerable manufacture of whips. This is considered the central horse-market in England. Fairs, chiefly for horses and cattle, are held on 1st Monday in January, last Monday in February, Tuesday in Easter week, June 7th, August 3d, September 23d, and October 2d and 27th. The market-day is on Wednesday. The Northamptonshire banking company and Union bank have branches here.

A priory for monks of the Cluniac order, was founded here in 1090. This was one of the first and richest of the monasteries dissolved by Cardinal Wolsey. Its remains are now converted into dwellings for a few poor individuals. Danes-hill, in the vicinity, is the most extensive Roman encampment in the kingdom.

It comprises an area of 190 acres, and is capable of containing 100,000 men in military order. A variety of arched vaults, walls and foundations, named Burnt Walls, have been discovered at the foot of the hill, and contiguous are vestiges of a fortification connected with the Great Roman station, and called John of Gault's castle. A great branch of the military way, called Watling street, runs east of the town.

DAVIDSTOW, a parish in the hund. of Lesnewth, union of Camelford, county of Cornwall; 4 miles north-east of Camelford, north of the river Inny. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8; gross income £205. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £199 13s. Patron, the Crown. Acres 6,260. Houses 56. A. P. £3,393. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 389. Poor rates, in 1837, £156.

DAVID'S (Str.), or LLANFAES, upper division, a parish in the hund. of Devynock, union of Brecknock, county of Brecon, South Wales; 8 miles west by south of Brecon, on a branch of the Usk. The lower division of this parish is given with the borough of BRECON: which see. There are 2 daily schools here. Houses 27. A. P. £651. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 155. Poor rates, in 1837, £395.

DAVID'S (Str.), a parish and city in the hund. of Dewisland, union of Haverfordwest, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 14 miles west-north-west of Haverfordwest, and 265 of London, near the coast, north of St. Bride's Bay. Besides the city or town of St. David's, which consists in great measure of an assemblage of miserable cottages intermingled with the ruins of ancient structures of a more imposing aspect, and some good modern streets, but situated in a wild and solitary district, this parish comprises the hamlets of Bychan, Gwylyd-y-Wlad, Mawr, and Y-dee. Houses 503. A. P. £5,274. Pop., in 1801, 1,803; in 1831, 2,868. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of St. David's: gross income £113; in the patronage of the precentor and chapter of St. David's. There are here 5 daily schools, and a day and Sunday National school, one of which is endowed. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,090.

St. David's was anciently the seat of the metropolitan see or archbishopric of South Wales. "St. David," says Tanner, "translated it hither from Caerleon about A.D. 540, till S. Sampson, about A.D. 930, carried the pall with him to Dole in Brittany. Notwithstanding, the bishops of this see had the archiepiscopal power till the time of King Henry I. in whose reign Bernard, bishop of St. David's, made profession of his subjection to the archbishop of Canterbury as his metropolitan." The situation of this place is so very remote, that King Henry VIII. is said to have determined upon removing the see to Carmarthen, but changed his intention upon learning that his grandfather, Edmund, Earl of Richmond, was interred here. St. David's is an extensive diocese, comprehending the entire counties of Pembroke, Carmarthen, Brecon, and—except 5 parishes—Radnor; together with some small parts of Monmouth, Hereford, Montgomery, and Glamorgan. Besides the bishop and the corporation of the cathedral, it has 4 archdeacons, viz. of Brecon, Cardigan, Carmarthen, and St. David's. The total amount of the average gross yearly income of the see and of the ecclesiastical preferments, for 3 years, ending 31st December, 1831, was £2,490. The number of benefices in this diocese, in 1831, inclusive of sinecure rectories, but exclusive of benefices annexed to other preferments, was 416. The aggregate amount of the gross incomes of incumbents, in 409 of these benefices, was £60,653; average gross income £148. In 1840, 331 members of the clergy were non-resident. The number of curates, in 1831, was 206: stipends, included in the income of incumbents, £11,464; average £55.

The chapter or corporation of the cathedral consists of six canons, who take equal shares of the nett revenue except the adoptions, which are paid in certain proportions according to seniority; the average sum so divided after payment of the adoptions, being £1,176. There is a lower chapter or corporate body consisting of 8 vicars-choral, of whom sometimes 4 and sometimes 5 are priests, and one of the lay-vicars is always organist. Each receives £36 from what is called the common fund, besides other payments out of small tithes, amounting, in all, to £591. The subchanter, the bishop's vicar, and the organist also receive in all £39 14s. 9d. from the dean and chapter in respect of their several offices in the cathedral. The precentor, chancellor, and treasurer, have separate revenues, and houses which they keep in repair. The cathedral, though most parts of it are old, was in tolerably good repair in 1831. It is always repaired out of the revenues of the corporation before any division is made. It is a large Gothic structure, of venerable appearance, cruciform, with a lofty square tower, surmounted by handsome pinnacles at each corner. The common entrance is through a porch on the south side, but the principal entrance is by a grand door-way in the west end, called the Bishop's door, which is used only on occasions of ceremony. The interior comprises a nave, and two side aisles, the choir, and chancel. The nave is divided from the side aisles by a row of handsome columns, alternately round and octagon, five in number, with corresponding pilasters at each end, supporting six elegant arches of ornamental Saxon architecture. Over these is a range of smaller Saxon pillars supporting other arches of less dimensions, reaching to the roof. The ceiling of the nave is of Irish oak. It is divided into square compartments, and is justly admired for the elegance of its workmanship. It is, however, evidently in a state of decay. The choir is placed immediately under the tower, which is supported by four large arches, three of them Gothic, and one Saxon, but all of them springing from Saxon pillars. The organ is placed on the rood loft under the northern arch. The bishop's throne is near the upper-end of the choir, and is of exquisite workmanship. The stalls, which are 28 in number, are placed on the north, west, and south sides. The floor is formed of small square tiles of variegated colours, very beautifully arranged. The chancel is separated from the choir by a low screen. On the north side is the shrine of St. David, having four recesses in which the votaries deposited their offerings. The north transept was occupied by St. Andrew's chapel, and the south by the Chanter's chapel. Adjoining it on the east is the old chapter-house, over which is the public school-room. On the north and south sides of the chancel were formerly side aisles, which are now roofless, and in a ruinous condition. Beyond the chancel, to the eastward, is the elegant chapel of Bishop Vaughan, built by that prelate in the time of Henry VIII., and exhibiting an exquisite specimen of the florid Gothic of that period. Adjoining this structure, and forming the extreme eastern end of the cathedral buildings, is St. Mary's chapel, divested of its roof, and falling into ruins.

The cathedral is enriched by a considerable number of ancient monuments, several of them curious in their kind as specimens of art, and rendered interesting by the celebrity of the persons they commemorate. Among them, and besides the shrine of St. David, are the altar tomb of Edmund Tudor, in the centre of the choir, the monument of Giraldu Cambrensis, and those of Bishops Anslem, Jorwerth, Morgau, and Gower. The edifices and walls in the cathedral precincts, though now ruinous, are very extensive, and were once very magnificent. A walled area, 1,200 yards in circumference, enclosed the episcopal palace, the cathedral, and the residences of various dignitaries. There were 4 entrances to this court, the handsomest of which, beneath a tower 60 feet high, was called the tower gate. The palace, once a noble edifice, was built by Bishop Gower. A collegiate chantry was founded here by John of Gaunt, and his wife Blanch, the ruins of which still exist. The bishop of this diocese once possessed palaces and manor-houses at St. David's, Trefdyn, Llewdden, and Llanfey, in Pembroke; at Llandwgwy, in Cardigan; and at Llandaw and Aberbran in Brecknock; but the palaces were plundered, and the manors partly alienated, by Bishop Barlow, and by the learned Richard Davies, who was employed by Queen Elizabeth to translate the Bible into English, and was bishop of this see. The present episcopal residence is at Abergwilly, in Carmarthenshire. The mere tourist will experience much disappointment in a visit to this ancient city, but the antiquary will find an ample field for the exercise of his sagacity.

DAVINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Feversham, lathe of Scray, union of Feversham, county of Kent; $\frac{3}{4}$ mile north-west of Feversham, at an estuary, and near the post-road from London to Dover. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; valued at £20; no return. Patron, in 1835, T. Bennett, Esq. Here was a Benedictine nunnery founded, A.D. 1153. Acres 540. Houses 28. A. P. £1,027. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 157. Poor rates, in 1837, £42.

DAWDON, or DALDEN. See DALTON-LE-DALE.

DAWLEY-MAGNA, a parish in the Wellington division, south part of the hund. of Bradford, union of Madeley, county of Salop; $\frac{4}{5}$ miles west by south of Shiffnal, intersected by a branch of the Shrewsbury canal. The townships of Dawley-Parva, and Malins-Lee are included in this parish. Living, a perpetual curacy with that of Dawley, New church, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £250. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £154. Patrons, in 1835, R. Phillips and others. There is a Methodist church of the New Connexion, formed in 1820. There are here several private daily schools. Acres 2,990. Houses 1,317. A. P. £11,378. Pop., in 1801, 3,869; in 1831, 6,877. Poor rates, in 1837, £997.

DAWLISH, or DAULISH, a parish in the hund. of Exminster, union of Newton-Abbot, county of Devon; $\frac{2}{5}$ miles north-north-east of East Teignmouth, situated in a valley which opens on the east to the coast of the English channel; and is bounded on the west by a line of hills richly cultivated. It is celebrated for its genial air, and the beauty of the adjacent country, and is now much resorted to as a watering-place, the beach being excellent. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £25 5s.; gross income £260; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Exeter. The church was rebuilt in 1824, and is a fine specimen of modern English architecture; it contains several handsome monuments. In 1837, a grant was decided on, by the commissioners for building new churches, in aid of one to be built in this parish. There is here an Independent church, formed in 1814; and licensed under the new marriage act. There is also a place of worship for the Methodists. This parish possesses 4 daily, and 2 Sunday and daily schools, one of which, a National school, is supported by voluntary subscription. Poor rates, in 1837, £935. Acres 4,710. Houses 572. A. P. £9,990. Pop., in 1801, 1,424; in 1831, 3,151.

DAY (Sr.), a hamlet in the parish of Redruth, county of Cornwall; $\frac{2}{5}$ miles east by north of Redruth, in the vicinity of the Redruth railway: see articles CORNWALL and REDRUTH. Here was once a chapel called Trinity, which is said to have been the resort of pilgrims, and so much frequented by them that the country people used to bring provisions to the place for sale, and by degrees it grew to a kind of market.

DAYLESFORD, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Oswaldslow, union of Stow-on-the-Wold, surrounded by Gloucestershire, county of Worcester; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles east by south of Stow-on-the-Wold. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £7; gross income £153. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Hastings. This parish possesses a daily school. It was the residence of the celebrated Warren Hastings. "Ethelbald, king of Mercia, gave this place, A. D. 718, to one Begia, that a monastery might be built here. This was granted afterwards to the church of Worcester, first by Beortwulf, and then by Ceolwulf, kings of Mercia. But, in King Edward the Confessor's time, the monks of Evesham obtained it by the gift of Duke Ælfgar, and kept it till the dissolution."—Tanner's Not. Mon. Acres 540. Houses 18. A. P. £741. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 88. Poor rates, in 1837, £53.

DEAL, a parish, borough, market-town, and seaport, in the hundreds of Cornilo and Bewsborough, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Eastry, county of Kent, but having separate jurisdiction as a member of the Cinque Port of Sandwich. It is 18 miles east-south-east of Canterbury, and 74 east by south of London. Acres 1,120. Houses 1,391. A. P. £14,066. Pop., in 1801, 5,420; in 1831, 7,268. A railway, named the Central Kentish railway, was projected in 1840, to run between Deal and Deptford, with a deviation line to Maidstone, and a branch to Willesborough, to join the South-eastern Dover railway. See CROYDON, DEPTFORD, DOVER, &c.

The town of Deal, strictly so called, consists of Upper, Middle, and Lower Deal. The latter, containing the great mass of the population, extends along the shore, and is connected with Upper Deal by a row of houses, called Middle Deal. The houses in Upper and Middle Deal are detached, and are inhabited by the wealthier classes. The town is well lighted, paved, and watched; and among other recent improvements, a set of rooms, comprising library, reading-rooms, and baths, has been erected. There is here a naval store-house, and a custom-house. The gross receipt of customs, for 1838, was £458 1s. 9d.; for 1839, £229 9s. 5d. Deal has no harbour, but the ample roadstead called the Downs, between it and the Goodwin sands, furnishes a most convenient anchorage for shipping, and is for this reason of great importance to the country. The coast to Dover is very rocky and precipitous. Deal castle was built by Henry VIII., and batteries and strong towers were constructed during the late war, for the defence of the town. Inward and outward bound vessels generally touch at Deal, to land or take in provisions, passengers, letters, &c. It has also long been famed as a station for pilots. Boat-building and sail-making form the chief occupation of the population. These, supplied chiefly to the shipping in the roads, have much declined since the termination of the war. The town is, in consequence, in a very depressed condition, and many of the houses are unoccupied. The market-days are Tuesdays and Saturdays; and fairs for cattle and pedlery are held on 5th April and 12th October.

Living, a rectory and peculiar of the see of Canterbury; rated at £19 10s.; gross income £380. In the patronage of the archbishop. In the middle of the town there is a chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. George the Martyr; gross income £108. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and some other dissenting bodies, have places of worship here. The Independent chapel is licensed under the new marriage act. There are, in the parish, 5 Sunday, one daily National, and 40 daily, schools. Annual income of charities, in 1831, £12 10s.

Frequent disputes with the municipal authorities having occurred while Deal was in dependence on Sandwich, the inhabitants obtained a charter from William III., constituting the town a separate borough, under a mayor, 12 jurats, and 24 common council-men, with a town-clerk and recorder, the jurisdiction of the borough being co-extensive with the parish. A weekly court of record was established by the charter, for actions to the amount of £100, General sessions and weekly petty-sessions were also appointed to be held here by the justices, the mayor being the principal, and the justices of the town and port of Sandwich having a concurrent jurisdiction within the parish in all that related to the general sessions; but they did not interfere. Capital cases have been sent to Sandwich. A court of requests for debts between 2s. and 40s., was granted by George III. The court-hall was built in 1803, principally by subscriptions, in the nature of loans upon the bonds of the corporation, and, along with the market-house, jail, and jailer's house, cost £2,961 12s. 5d. The jail contains 4 apartments. Arrangements have been recently made by the new town-council for sending prisoners to Sandwich jail. By the parliamentary boundary act, the adjoining parish of Walmer was united to Deal, and these, together with the port and town of Sandwich, returns two members to parliament. Under the municipal corporation act, this borough is divided into 2 wards, and is governed by 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors. The style of the corporate body is, "The mayor, jurats, and commonalty, of the town of Deal, in the county of Kent." The municipal boundaries were left unaltered. A commission of the peace has been granted, and a court of quarter-sessions appointed.

The origin of this town is not clearly known. It has been considered as the place of Julius Cæsar's landing when he invaded the island, 55 B. C., but this is doubtful; Mennius says, "Cæsar fought at Dola," which Camden supposes to mean Deal; however, there are no authentic records of a town existing here until centuries after the Romans quitted Britain. Deal was annexed to the Cinque Ports at an early period after the Norman conquest, and its consequent exemption from taxation by the sheriff of the county was formally acknowledged by a decree of Henry III., in 1229; and still more decisively by letters patent 16th of Henry VI.

DEAN, a parish in the ward of Allerdale, Cumberland; 5 miles south-west of Cockermouth, bounded on the west by a branch of the Derwent, and comprising the townships of Branthwaite, Dean, and Ullock, with Pardsey and Dean-Scales. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £19 3s. 1½d.; gross income £320. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. S. Sherwen. There is a free grammar-school here. Acres 6,360. Houses 163. A. P. £6,782. Pop., in 1801, 678; in 1831, 866. Poor rates, in 1837, £437. Houses of the township 37. Pop., in 1801, 178; in 1831, 193.

DEAN, an extensive parish in the hund. of Salford, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 1½ mile south-west of Great Bolton, close on the Bolton and Leigh railway, and near the post-road from Manchester to Lancaster. It includes the chapelries of Farnworth, Little Hilton, Horwick, and West Houghton, with the townships of Heaton, Middle Hilton, Over Hilton, Halliwell, Hearsley, and Rumworth. Acres 19,340. Houses 3,978. A. P. £33,420. Pop., in 1801, 12,546; in 1831, 22,994. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £4, returned at £105 6s. 1d.; gross income £213. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. This parish possesses 1 Sunday and daily National, and 33 daily, schools, of which one is endowed with £150 per annum, to board and educate 15 boys, who are also clothed; another is endowed with land and buildings, from the proceeds of which 60 boys are instructed; and two others are partly supported by endowment. Annual income of charities £45. Poor rates, in 1837, £4,512. In this parish are some extensive coal-mines and bleaching establishments. In 1838 there were 16 cotton mills here, employing 1,752 hands.

DEAN, a parish in the Overton hund., union of Basingstoke, Kingsclere division of the county of Southampton; 5¼ miles west by south of Basingstoke, on the post-road from Salisbury to London, and in the neighbourhood of the Southampton and London railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £10 8s. 11½d.; gross income £350. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £308 2s. 6d. rectorial. Patron, in 1829, Caleb Smith, Esq. Acres 1,350. Houses 34. A. P. £1,427. Pop., in 1801, 137; in 1831, 163. Poor rates, in 1837, £136.

DEAN (THE), a river in Nottingham and Leicester, falling into the Trent at Newark.

DEAN (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Thorn-gate, union of Romsey, Andover division of the county of Southampton; 6½ miles north-west of Romsey, close on the Salisbury and Southampton canal. Living, a curacy, not in charge, annexed to the rectory of Mottisfont. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £202 15s. 9d. Acres 640. Houses 26. A. P. £1,079. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 173. Poor rates, in 1837, £90.

DEAN (EAST), a parish in the hund. of West Bourne and Singleton, rape of Chichester, union of West Hamphnett, county of Sussex; 6 miles south by east of Midhurst. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £5 4s. 4½d.; gross income £86. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. W. Cogan. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 4,670. Houses 72. A. P. £1,729. Pop., in 1801, 305; in 1831, 391. Poor rates, in 1837, £124.

DEAN (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Willingdon, rape of Pevensey, union of Eastbourne, county of Sussex; 3 miles south-west of Eastbourne, north of Beachy-head. Living, a vicarage, united to the vicarage of Friston, in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £8; gross income £288. Patrons, the bishop and dean and chapter of Chichester. A light-house has been erected here. Acres 2,510. Houses 48. A. P. £1,841. Pop., in 1801, 284; in 1831, 330. Poor rates, in 1837, £219.

DEAN-Forest, an extra-parochial liberty in the hund. of St. Briavell's, county of Gloucester; 5 miles south-west by west of Newnham, belonging to the crown, and rich in iron, coal, and other minerals. It comprehends 22,000 acres of land, of which about one-half are under enclosure for navy timber. Great quantities of oak and beech have long been supplied by the forest, which was once reckoned the chief support of the navy; and it is even said that the commander of the Spanish armada had directions, if he failed in subduing the nation, and making good the conquest, to destroy every tree in the forest of Dean. It is now thinned by frequent felling, and narrowed by increase of cultivation. With the exception of the orchards, which abound throughout the vale and forest, and which produce great quantities of excellent cider, from the Styre apple, which is almost peculiar to the western banks of the Severn, the remainder of this extensive district consists of open common. It is divided into six extra-parochial districts, viz., Denby-Walk, Herbert's-Walk, Little Dean-Walk, Speech-House-Walk, York-Walk, and Worcester-Walk. The boundaries, having varied at different periods, were settled by act 16^o Charles I. c. 6; and finally recognised by 20^o Charles II. c. 3. The district was perambulated by parliamentary commissioners in 1833, who gave a detailed account of its boundaries in their report of 1st May, 1834. The forest is intersected by several railways. The Bull Pill, or Forest of Dean railway, runs from the river Severn, near Newnham, into the forest, where 3 short branches radiate forth to separate mines. The Severn and Wye railway runs from Lidbrook-on-the-Wye, bisects the forest, and terminates at Lydney. It is connected with the Severn at Nass Point by a canal a mile in length. The Monmouth railway runs from Monmouth into the forest, where several branch railways proceed through it in different directions.—See also article CINDERFORD. The uses of all these railways consist in the conveyance of the timber, coals, iron ore, and other minerals found in the forest for shipment, &c. The railway companies pay rents to the crown. There are many common roads also through the forest. There are 3 livings in this district: namely, that of Christ-church, on the south-west side, consecrated in 1816; Holy Trinity, on the north-east, consecrated in 1817; and St. Paul's, on the south, consecrated in 1822. Here also are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Holy Trinity church is about 6 miles from Christ-church, and the same distance from St. Paul's. The patronage of these chapels is vested in trustees. No division into ecclesiastical districts has yet been made.

There is no doubt that iron was wrought here at an early period, probably before the Roman invasion. A privilege of sinking mines, free liberty of pasturage, access to the woods and timber, with an exemption from rates and taxes, the origin of all which is involved in obscurity, have induced many persons to reside here. The population, in 1801, was 2,325; in 1831, 7,014. Houses 1,412. County rates have never been collected within this liberty. The free miners by prescription as well as by royal recognition—though their rights have been also royally disputed, and their claims judicially rejected on the ground that they were not incorporated—were originally those, native to the hundred of St. Briavell's, who had worked a year and a day at the mines. They were anciently called "Verns," or "Feren," the old English plural of Frere, a fellow or brother. Latterly, however, foreigners encroached on the alleged rights of the Verns, and the principal miners at present are foreigners. The government of this district was vested in a lord-warden—the Duke of Beaufort—as constable of St. Briavell's, 6 deputy-wardens, 7 woodwards, a conservator, a chief forester in fee, and bow-bearer; united offices, held in right of inheritance by the Wyndham family without salary, but with a claim to the left shoulder of all bucks and does killed within the forest. Besides these officers, 8 foresters in fee, a gaviller, and a steward of the swainmote were appointed. Courts of attachment every forty days; a court of swainmote three times in the year; and, once in three years, a court called the justice-seat; have been usually held at "Speech-house," or King's-lodge, in the centre of the forest. Mine law courts also, for the protection of the free miners, and other purposes, were formerly held, but were discontinued in 1777, since which period the encroachments on the alleged rights of the free miners have taken place; as the only periodical test to which they could resort then ceased. The crown, by right of superiority, has always been considered a partner in the free miners' profits, and entitled to a fifth share. The free miners have even from time to time exercised a right of sinking mines, not only in the open lands of the forest, "but also in all enclosed lands within the hundred of St. Briavell's, except churchyards, gardens, orchards, and crown enclosures."¹ The only difference was, that in the case of private lands, galed or licensed to them, on demand, at a nominal rent, by the crown gaviller, the proprietor was considered a partner with the free miners and the crown.[†] This right also, however, was more or less disputed. But an improvement has been effected by two recent acts of parliament in the condition and prospects of the miners and possessors of land in this district. These statutes, although they annul some of the ancient rights, or presumed rights, of tenure, empower commissioners to define boundaries—long a source of dispute—and enable the landholders, at a merely nominal price, to purchase and possess their land as freehold estates, to which heretofore they could not make a "marketable" title. The uncertain tenure of property hitherto existing, is doubtless the sole cause which has prevented the application of capital, on a large scale, to agricultural and mining purposes in the forest. From the removal of this impediment, a rapid and large improvement is anticipated in the wealth and importance of this district.

DEAN (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of St. Briavell's, union of Westbury, county of Gloucester; 2 miles north-west by north of Newnham. Living, a curacy annexed to the perpetual curacy of Newnham. An Independent church was formed in 1803. There are 6 daily schools in this parish. There is also a county house of correction, possessing 31 cells, 4 wards, 4 day-rooms, and 4 airing yards. In one class or ward are placed the male prisoners sentenced to hard labour; in another, those not so sentenced; in another, those for trial and want of sureties; and in the last, the women. From the opening of the prison in November, 1791, up to July, 1837, the number of prisoners has been 2,391. The village is situated on the verge of Dean Forest, and the parish abounds in mines of coal and iron. The inhabitants are employed in the mines, and in the manufacture of nails. Fairs are held on Whit-Monday, and on 26th of November, for pedlery. Act. 780. Houses 133. A. P. £1,120. Pop. in 1801, 541; in 1831, 617. Poor rates, in 1837, £391.

DEAN-MITCHELL, a parish and market-town in the same hund., union of Westbury; 11 miles west of Gloucester, in the neighbourhood of the post-road from Ross to Gloucester. Acres 680. Houses 150. A. P. £1,229. Pop., in 1801, 563; in 1831, 601. Poor rates, in 1837, £194. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Hereford and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £10 16s., returned at £130; gross income £141. Patron, in 1835, M. Colchester, Esq. The church is a quadrangular structure, with a nave, and cha-

* Reports 4th and 5th of Dean-Forest Commissioners, 1833.

† Every free miner duly qualified claimed the right to demand of the crown gaviller a gale, that is, a spot of ground, galed by himself, for sinking a mine; and this, provided only it did not interfere with the works of any other free miner, the gaviller considered himself obliged to give. "The gaviller goes to the spot selected with the free miner making the application, and gives him possession with the following ceremonies: The gaviller cuts a stick, and asking the party how many verns or partners he has, cuts a notch for every partner, and one for the king, a turf is then cut, and the stick forked down by two other sticks, the turf put over it, and the party galing the work is then considered to be put in full possession."

cel, and a tower, and octagonal spire. There is a subterranean passage from it to a hill in the vicinity. Some ancient and curious paintings, supposed to be of the age of Edward IV., were discovered a few years ago, on removing the white-washing from a large piece of pannelled wainscot, under the roof of the nave, in front of the chancel of the church. The pulpit is of oak, handsomely carved in Gothic tracery, and is as old as the time of Henry VII., or beginning of Henry VIII.'s reign. Pews were at one time manufactured here to a considerable extent, but tanning is the only branch of manufacture carried on at present. Here are a place of worship for Independents, and 2 Sunday and daily National schools. The market-day is on Monday. Fairs are held on Easter Monday and October 10th, for cattle, horses, and sheep.

DEAN (NETHER and UPPER), a parish in the hund. of Stodden, union of St. Neot's, county of Bedford; 3½ miles west of Kimbolton. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £24, returned at £50; gross income £50. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Worcester. There is a free school here. Acres 2,370. Houses 86. A. P. £2,508. Pop., in 1801, 385; in 1831, 513. Poor rates, in 1837, £335.

DEAN-PRIOR, a parish in the hund. of Stanborough, union of Totness, county of Devon; 4 miles south-south-west of Ashburton, south of the river Dart. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Totness, and dio. of Exeter; rated at £21; gross income £309. Patron, in 1835, Sir J. B. Y. Buller. There is a daily and a day and Sunday school in this parish. Charities £15 per annum. Acres 3,760. Houses 101. A. P. £3,821. Pop., in 1801, 495; in 1831, 553. Poor rates, in 1837, £288.

DEAN-PRIORS, a parish in the hund. of Barton-Stackey, Petersfield division, union of Petersfield, county of Southampton; 4 miles north by west of Petersfield. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Colmere. Acres 1,290. Houses 18. A. P. £991. Pop., in 1801, 117; in 1831, 166. Poor rates, in 1837, £121.

DEAN-RAW, a quarter in Warden parish, Northumberland; 8 miles west of Hexham; south of the south Tyne river, and east of the Allan. Houses 108. Pop., in 1811, 439; in 1831, 654. Other returns with the parish.

DEAN-SCALES. See ULLOCK WITH PARDSEY and DEAN-SCALES.

DEAN (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Alderbury, county of Wilts; 7 miles north-west of Romsey, close on the Salisbury canal. It includes the chapelry of East Grimstead. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of East Grimstead, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £19 4s. 4½d.; no return. Patron, in 1835, Francis Glossop, Esq. There is here a daily school. Charities £28 per annum. Acres 2,780. Houses 85. A. P. £2,236. Pop., in 1801, 369; in 1831, 360. Poor rates, in 1837, £213.

DEAN (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Willington, rape of Pevensey, union of Eastbourne, county of Sussex; 2½ miles east by north of Seaford, bounded on the west by the river Cuckmere. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £6 2s. 11d.; gross income £102. Patrons, in 1835, the trustees of the late William Cavendish. Acres 1,840. Houses 12. A. P. £2,150. Pop., in 1801, 88; in 1831, 150. Poor rates, in 1837, £163.

DEAN (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Westbourne and Singleton, rape of Chichester, union of Westbourne, county of Sussex; 6 miles south of Midhurst. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Singleton, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £6 12s.; gross income £275. In the patronage alternately of the dean and chapter of Chichester and Duke of Richmond. This parish possesses 4 daily schools. Acres 4,480. Houses 69. A. P. £3,060. Pop., in 1801, 510; in 1831, 641. Poor rates, in 1837, £258.

DEAN, or DEENE, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Oundle, county of Northampton; 6 miles east by north of Rockingham, on a branch of the Nen. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; valued at £24 3s. 6½d.; gross income £353. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Cardigan, whose seat of Deanthorpe-park is in this parish. Acres 1,820. Houses 52. A. P. £2,007. Pop., in 1801, 221; in 1831, 228. Poor rates, in 1837, £142.

DEANHAM, a township in Hartburn parish, Tindale ward, county of Northumberland; 10½ miles west by south of Morpeth, south of the river Wansbeck. Houses 8. Pop., in 1801, 36; in 1831, 46. Poor rates, in 1837, £19.

DEARHAM, a parish in Allerdale ward, below Derwent, county of Cumberland; 5 miles north-west of Cockermouth, comprising the townships of Dearham, Ellenborough, and Unerigg; close on the Maryport and Carlisle railway, from which a railway was projected in 1840, to pass hence to Lancaster. See CUMBERLAND. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £4 13s. 4d., returned at £70; gross income £85. Patron, in 1835, T. C. Curwen, Esq. There are here 6 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £10 per annum. The collieries in this parish are very extensive, and there is a china manufactory near the village. Acres 3,870. Houses 273. A. P. £2,982. Pop., in 1801, 874; in 1831, 1,449. Poor rates, in 1837, £421.

DEARNE (THE). See YORKSHIRE.

DEBACH. See BOULGE.

DEBDEN, or DEPDEN, a parish in the hund. of Uttlesford, union of Saffron Walden, county of Essex; 4 miles north-west of Thaxted, in the neighbourhood of the London and Cambridge railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £34; gross income £880. Patron, in 1835, Sir F. Vincent. This parish possesses 1 Sunday and daily National and 4 daily schools. Charities, £95 per annum. A fair is held on the 1st of June. Acres 5,040. Houses 202. A. P. £4,994. Pop., in 1801, 781; in 1831, 985. Poor rates, in 1837, £605.

DEBDON, a township in the parish of Rothbury, Northumberland; 10 miles south-west by west of Alnwick, north of the Cocket river. Houses 2. Pop., in 1801, 16; in 1831, 14. Poor rates, in 1837, £1.

DEBENHAM, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Thredling, union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; 13 miles north of Ipswich, and 7 west of Framlingham, at the source of the Deben, whence its name, and in the neighbourhood of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £15 2s. 6d.; gross income £174. Patron, in 1835, Lord Henniker. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1700; and a free school for 20 boys, founded in 1643. Here is also a Sunday and daily National school. Charities, £44 per annum. This town sustained great damage by fire in 1744. A market is held on Friday; and an annual fair for toys, &c., on 24th June. Acres 1,920. Houses 191. A. P. £4,512. Pop., in 1801, 1,215; in 1831, 1,629. Poor rates, in 1837, £695.

DEBTLING, or DEPTLING, a parish in the hund. of Maidstone, lathe of Aylesford, union of Hollingbourn, county of Kent; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Maidstone. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; returned at £138 19s. 1d.; gross income £19. In the patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,430. Houses 64. A. P. £3,876. Pop., in 1801, 253; in 1831, 372. Poor rates, in 1837, £148.

DECUMAN (Str.), a parish in the hund. of Wilton and Freemanners, union of Williton, county of Somerset; 5 miles east of Dunster, on the coast, south of Watchet. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £10 10s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £180. In the patronage of the prebendary of Wells cathedral. There are 8 daily schools here. Charities, £76 11s. per annum. There are chapels here belonging to the Baptists and the Wesleyan Methodists. Ridiculous legends are told about St. Decuman, the patron saint of this parish. Here, in a little hut, he practised all the austerities of a monastic life. In 1838 there was a woollen mill here, employing 30 hands. Fairs are held on August 24th, and September 16th, for cattle and all sorts of goods. Acres 3,250. Houses 405. A. P. £5,601. Pop., in 1801, 1,602; in 1831, 2,120. Poor rates, in 1837, £934.

DEDDINGTON, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Wootton, union of Woodstock, county of Oxford; 69 miles north-west of London, and 16 north by west of Oxford, bounded on the east by the Cherwell, and on the north by the Snore. It is in the neighbourhood of the Oxford canal. It includes the townships of Clifton and Hempton. Acres 3,990. Houses 397. A. P. £8,110. Pop., in 1801, 1,552; in 1831, 2,078. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £15 9s. 4d., returned at £59 13s.; gross income £193. Patrons, the dean and canons of Windsor. Sir Thomas Pope, a native of this place, founded a free-school here. There are also other schools, supported by voluntary contributions; and 8 well-endowed almshouses, for 4 poor men and 4 poor women. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,190. Deddington was formerly a corporate town, and sent 2 members to parliament, but after the time of Edward III. petitioned to be rid of the privilege. It is one of the polling-places for the members for the county. Excellent ale is brewed in Deddington. There is a vitriolic salt-spring in the vicinity. The market-day is Saturday. Fairs are held on August 10th, the Saturday after Old St. Michael, and November 22d, for horses, cows, and swine; and there is a statute fair on the 10th of October. There was formerly a castle of great strength and magnitude at Deddington, but it has entirely disappeared.

DEDHAM, a parish in the Colchester division of the hund. of Lexden, union of Lexden and Winstree, county of Essex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by north of Manningtree, situated near the London and Norwich railway, on the southern bank of the Stour, over which there is here a bridge. It consists principally of one street, but many respectable mansions ornament its vicinity. Acres 2,660. Houses 262. A. P. £4,560. Pop., in 1801, 1,537; in 1831, 1,770. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £10 0s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., returned at £119 11s. 5d.; gross income £179; in the patronage of the chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1736. Annexed to the living is a lectureship, in the appointment of the governors of the free grammar-school. The parish possesses 2 Sunday and daily National, and 3 daily schools, one of which the grammar-school alluded to, is wholly, and another partly, supported by endowments. Two scholars are supported at St. John's college, Cambridge, by the proceeds of a charity estate. Poor rates, in 1837, £963. A fair is held here on Easter Tuesday, for toys.

DEDWORTH, or DEDWORTH-MAUNSELL, a hamlet in the parish of New Windsor, Berkshire; 2 miles west by south of Windsor, south of the Thames. Pop., in 1801, 75; in 1831, 137. Other returns with the parish.

DEE (THE). See CHESHIRE.

DEENE. See DRANE.

DEEPDALE, a beautiful upland recess in the parish of Barton, Westmoreland; 5 miles north of Ambleside. It is plentifully adorned with trees, and conducts a tributary brook from the sides of Fairfairs into Coldrill-beck.

DEEPING-FEN, an extra-parochial district in the wapentake of Elloe, parts of Holland, county of Lincoln; 6 miles south-west of Spalding. The inhabitants are exempted from all rates and taxes. This extensive marsh is now drained by two steam engines of 60 and 80 horse-power. There is a church in the district. Acres 16,290. Houses 5. Pop., in 1831, 342.

DEEPING-ST.-JAMES, or DEEPING-EAST, a parish in the wapentake of Ness, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; $\frac{1}{2}$ mile east by north of Deeping-market, on the river Welland, and near the post-road from Louth to Peterborough. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 19s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £192. Patron, in 1835, Sir T. Whichcote. A priory of Benedictine monks was founded here in 1139. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels here. There are 3 daily schools in this parish. Acres 6,470. Houses 337. A. P. £3,413. Pop., in 1801, 1,160; in 1831, 1,587. Poor rates, in 1837, £329.

DEEPING-GATE, a hamlet in the parish of Maxey, county of Northampton; 1 mile south-east of Deeping-market. Acreage with the parish. Houses 32. A. P. £1,614. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 155. Poor rates, in 1837, £108.

DEEPING-MARKET, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Ness, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; 90 miles north by west of London, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ south-south-east of Lincoln, on the northern bank of the Welland, and on the post-road from Lincoln to Peterborough. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £16 1s. 3d.; gross income £610. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. This parish possesses 7 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £30 per annum, and a house for the master, with school-room and garden, for which 16 children are educated. The fairs, which are for horses, stock, and timber, are held on 2d Wednesday after 11th of May, Wednesday before Lammas, 1st August, 11th October, and 22d November. The market-day is Thursday. There is a branch of the Stamford, Spalding, and Boston banking company here. This was the birth-place of the celebrated linguist and divine Dr. Tighe. Acres 1,290. Houses 218. A. P. £4,304. Pop., in 1801, 803; in 1831, 1,091. Poor rates, in 1837, £306.

DEEPING (WEST), a parish in the wapentake of Ness, union of Stamford, county of Lincoln; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Market-Deeping, on the river Welland, intersected by the Tallington canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 17s. 11d.; gross income £400. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Acres 1,170. Houses 55. A. P. £1,335.

Pop., in 1801, 216; in 1831, 301. Poor rates, in 1837, £189.

DEERHURST-HUNDRED, in the eastern division of Gloucestershire, consists of two divisions, lower and upper. Area 17,500 acres. Houses 764. Pop., in 1831, 4,045.

DEERHURST, a parish partly in the lower division of the above hund., and partly in the lower division of Westminster hund., union of Tewkesbury, county of Gloucester; 2 miles south-west of Tewkesbury, on the eastern bank of the Severn. It includes the hamlets of Apperley and Whitefield, and Deerhurst-Walton. Acres 2,390. Houses 185. A. P. £6,256. Pop., in 1801, 646; in 1831, 869. Poor rates, in 1837, £416. Living, a perpetual curacy, and a peculiar, formerly in the dio. of Gloucester, now in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £102. Tanner says,—"Doddo, the duke or chief nobleman of Mercia, one of the founders of Tewkesbury, who became himself a monk at Pershore, is said to have built a monastery here." Tewkesbury abbey held it as a cell till the dissolution; and, as parcel of Tewkesbury, it was granted, 34th Henry VIII., to William Trockmorton. Deerhurst confers the title of Viscount on the earl of Coventry.

DEFFORD, a chapelry in St. Andrew's parish, county of Worcester; 3 miles south-west of Pershore, north of the river Avon, and close on the Birmingham and Gloucester railway. Living, a curacy subject to the vicarage of Pershore. Acres 1,760. Houses 87. A. P. £1,906. Pop., in 1801, 284; in 1831, 383. Poor rates, in 1837, £233.

DEFYNOCK, or DEYRNOK, a parish in the hund. of Defynock, county of Brecon, South Wales; 8 miles west by south of Brecon, on a branch of the Usk. It contains the hamlets of Cray, Glynn, Maescar, and Senny, and the chapelry of Calwen, or Cravin-Glyntawy. Living, a vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Ystradvelty, in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David's; rated at £14 14s. 4d.; gross income £325; formerly in the patronage of the Bishop of Gloucester. There are two Independent churches here, formed in 1747, and 1823; and a Calvinistic Methodist, in 1793. The petty-sessions for the hundred are held at the village. The 'Great Forest of Defynock' is a space of about 20,000 acres, on which the tenants of the manor enjoy the privilege of pasturing their cattle at a small charge. Houses 390. A. P. £8,060. Pop., in 1801, 1,694; in 1831, 2,031. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,262.

DEIGHTON, a chapelry in the parish of North-Allerton, north riding of York; 5 miles north by east of North Allerton; near the Great North of England railway. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of North Allerton. Acres 2,210. Houses 29. A. P. £1,851. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 146. Poor rates, in 1837, £65.

DEIGHTON, a township in the parish of Escrick, east riding of York; 5 miles south by east of York, east of the river Ouse. Acres 2,290. Houses 83. A. P. £2,167. Pop., in 1801, 172; in 1831, 179. Poor rates, in 1837, £143.

DEIGHTON-KIRK, or KIRK-DEIGHTON, a parish in the upper division of the wapentake of Claro, west riding of Yorkshire, including the townships of Kirk-Deighton and North Deighton; 2 miles north of Wetherby, on the post-road from Richmond to Doncaster. Acres 2,470. Houses 102. A. P. £4,520. Pop., in 1801, 423; in 1831, 506. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £15 11s. 10d.; gross income £901. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. Dr. Geldart. There is in this parish a daily school, endowed with £30 per annum, bequeathed by Sir Hugh Palister, for clothing and educating ten poor children within the townships of North and Kirk-Deighton. Other charities £25 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £190. In the neighbourhood of North Deighton there is a tumulus of considerable magnitude, supposed to contain the bones of Danish soldiers slain in battle; its circumference is nearly 500 feet, and its height 70.

DÉ-LA-MERE, a parish in the hund. of Eddisbury, union of Runcorn, co.-palatine of Chester; 10 miles east-north-east of Chester, composing the greater part of the hundred, and comprising the townships of De-la-Mere, Eddisbury, Oakmere, and Kingswood. Acres 8,670. Houses 123. Pop., in 1831, 828. Poor rates, in 1837, £186. Living, a rectory not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Chester; no return. Patron, the Crown. Here is also a chapel, the living of which is a curacy not in charge. It is also in the patronage of the Crown. This parish—which includes the royal forest of De-la-Mere—was extra-parochial till 1811–12. It was anciently called the forest of Mara and Mondrun. In the time of Leland it abounded with deer. Formerly it was nothing more than an extensive tract of barren land. There are still forests of Scotch fir and larches; but De-la-Mere is now extensively cultivated, and hill and dale completely transformed into valuable fields. On high land here, tradition informs us there was a large city called Eddisbury, founded by Ethelfleda, a daughter of Alfred the Great; but no vestige of it remains, though some have imagined that a house called the Old Pale, or the Chamber in the forest, occupied by the chief forester, belonged to it.

DELAPRE, or DE PRATIS, a township in the parish of Hardingstone, county of Northampton; 1½ mile south-east of Northampton; on the post-road from Leicester to Newport Pagnel. Here was an abbey for nuns of St. Cluniac's order, founded in the reign of Stephen.

DEMBLEBY, a parish in the wapentake of Aveland, parts of Kesteven, union of Sleaford, county of Lincoln; 4 miles north-west of Folkingham. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 11s. 8d.; gross income £212. Patron, in 1835, T. R. Buckworth. Acres 1,000. Houses 11. A. P. £1,130. Pop., in 1801, 50; in 1831, 66. Poor rates, in 1837, £35.

DENBIGHSHIRE,

One of the six divisions of North Wales; bounded north by the Irish sea; east by the counties of Flint, Chester, and Salop; west by Carnarvon; south by Montgomery and Merioneth, into the latter of which a narrow stripe runs towards the south-east. From Merioneth it is separated by the Bereryn mountains; from Flint on the east by the river Dee; and from Carnarvon by the river Conwy. This county is very irregular in form, and its length and breadth hence various. Its greatest length is 48 miles, its greatest breadth about 30 miles. From Llanrwst on the Conwy, to Holt on the river Dee, it is 36 miles in length; and from St. Asaph to Yobytyt-Eran, 19 miles. Its narrowest breadth over the vale of Clwyd is 9 miles. Its circumference is 170 miles, and its superficial area has been calculated by some at 387,600 acres; by others at 400,000. In the report of county rates it is estimated at 405,120 acres, and in the highway returns at 633 square miles. Nearly the whole of the county is cultivated,—3-8ths as arable, and the remainder as pasture land. It is divided into six cantrefs or hundreds,—viz., Bromfield, Chirk, Isaled, Isdulas, Ruthin, and Yale. There are 64 parishes, partly in the diocese of St. Asaph, and partly in that of Bangor, and in the province of Canterbury. The chief towns are the boroughs of Denbigh and Ruthin, and the market-towns of Wrexham, Llanrwst, Abergelly, Ruabon, Llangollen, and Chirk. It returns two members to parliament, who are polled at Denbigh, Wrexham, Llanrwst, Llangollen, and Ruthin; the principal place of election being Denbigh. The number of electors registered for 1837 was 3,689. As the borough of Denbigh, with its contributories, returns 1, there are in all 3 members for Denbigh. The county court is held every fourth Wednesday alternately at Denbigh and Wrexham. See article DENBIGH. The county is in the North Wales circuit. The assizes are held at Ruthin. County rates, in 1815, 4-9 pence per pound on the assessed property. In 1834, they amounted to 5-1. In 1838, the total income of the county rate was £5,978; expenditure, £5,363. Houses 16,368. A. P. £221,783. Pop., in 1801, 60,352, of whom 9,960 were employed in trade, &c. and 21,104 in agriculture; in 1821, 76,511; in 1831, 82,800, of whom 8,135 families were employed in agriculture, 4,178 in trade, &c., and 4,537 otherwise employed. Amount of poor rates on an average of three years, from 1748 to 1750, £1,139, all expended on poor; for 1803, £24,480, expenditure on poor £19,954; for 1821, £43,643, expenditure on poor £36,362; for 1839, £38,500, expenditure on poor £31,100. Total amount of church rates received, 1838-9, £1,430. In 1831, there were 141 daily schools, attended by 5,430 children; and 211 Sunday schools, attended by 20,773. Of these, 8 daily schools, with 302 children, and 154 Sunday schools, with 14,411 children, belonged to dissenters.

Rivers.—The principal river is the Clwyd, one of the sources of which issues from the bottom of a hill to the south of Ruthin, and flowing north-west through the beautiful vale of Clwyd, and on the skirts of the county, leaves it, and flows past St. Asaph, in Flintshire, to the Irish sea. The Dee crosses this county in a north-easterly direction from Merionethshire into CHESHIRE: which see. The Conwy separates Denbigh from Caernarvon. See article CONWR. The Elwy, a tributary of the Clwyd, rises in the south-western parts of the county, and running north and north-west, falls into the Clwyd near St. Asaph. The Alen, a tributary of the Dee, rises near Llandegla; flows north through Flintshire; turns suddenly through Hopedale to Gresford, and re-entering Denbighshire, joins the Dee a little below Holt. The Ceiriog, a tributary of the Dee, rises on the west side of the county, and, forming a boundary between England and Wales, falls into the Dee near Chirk. The Clwyd, the Conwy, and the Dee, are the chief channels through which this county is drained; but it has no river navigation, neither has it any port or tolerable haven, although it be, in some measure, a maritime county. It has no foreign commerce.

Canals, Roads, and Railways.—The Ellesmere canal, which unites the Severn, the Dee, and the Mersey, has a navigable feeder from the Dee, whence it runs towards Ruabon, and at Llantilio crosses the Dee by the celebrated aqueduct of Pont-y-Sycylltan, which is supported by 11 stone columns 120 feet high, and consists of an iron water-way, 1,007 feet in length, 11 feet 10 inches in breadth, and 5 feet 3 inches in depth. It then crosses the river Ceiriog at Chirk by a stone aqueduct, and enters Shropshire. The great parliamentary Holyhead mail-road, between Ireland and the metropolis, enters this county at Chirk, and running past Llangollen at the Waterloo bridge, enters Merionethshire, whence it re-enters this county, running along the narrow stripe which penetrates into Merioneth, towards Llanrwst, near which it crosses the Conwy, and finally leaves the county. By these two modes of conveyance, the trade of Denbighshire has been greatly increased, as it is now likely still farther to be, by the partial introduction of railways. See article CHESHIRE. The mail roads are good, but many of the cross roads are bad. The other principal roads of the county are those which unite Denbigh, Wrexham, Ruthin, and Llangollen, with each other, and with the surrounding counties. The highway returns for 1839 give 1,068 as the length of highways in this county; the expenditure on which was £4,365. The total amount of income arising, in 1836, from its six turnpike trusts, was £4,261 19s. 9d.; total expenditure, £5,059 9s. 11d.

Surface, Minerals, &c.—Denbighshire possesses a great variety in the elevation and quality of its surface and soil. Towards the north it has the appearance of an extensive plain. The celebrated vales of Clwyd, Llangollen, Conwy, and Valle Crucis, are all very extensive and very beautiful. The eastern part of the county is enclosed by a range of rugged hills, commencing near St. Asaph's. The loftiest of these is Moel Fammau, elevated 1,845 feet above the level of the sea. A second range encloses the county on the south-west, commencing at the sea, and extending as far as the Merionethshire hills to the south of Moelwynne-Mawr. The loftiest summit of this range is Modwl Erthin, 1,660 feet. These western heathy hills are interspersed with narrow vales and small lakes, the numerous streams from which afford sufficient moisture for the soil, which is various almost to the extremes of good and bad; but which, in some districts of the south, south-east, and north, consists of fine pasture and meadow land, where cheese, equal to the celebrated Cheshire, is produced. Some of the finest wheat in England is grown in the Denbigh vales. Rye and barley are cultivated on all the hills, and oats on the uplands. Agriculture and sheep husbandry are fostered, and have been much improved, in this county, by two societies instituted for their improvement. Sheep and goats, in immense numbers, are reared on the heaths and mountains, and the wool is manufactured into flannels coarse cloths, and stockings. The climate is esteemed salutary; but, in districts exposed to the northern ocean blasts, is ungenial, and even rigorous and severe. Black cattle are reared on the hilly pastures. Immense quantities of peat, almost like coal, are procured in the mountainous districts. The minerals are not varied; but rich beds of lead, iron, and coal, have been found. Those parts of Bromfield and Yale, bordering on Flintshire, comprise a part of the mineral tract, which passes, in a northern direction, through that county, to the estuary of the Dee. Southwardly, it enters below Mold; extends through the parishes of Llanferres, Llanarmon, and Llandegla, whence it branches off to Minera, and terminates at the Glesgep rocks, in the vicinity of Llangollen. Iron ore, lime, and valuable coal, are dug out of the Ruabon hills—where there are iron forges and a cannon foundry—and in the adjacent and eastern parts of the county.—See article CHESHIRE, section Railways.—At Brombs, in the vicinity of Wrexham, iron ore, of a peculiarly excellent quality, is obtained; and near Pont-y-Sycylltan, a sulphur mine containing iron pyrites in masses, was some years ago discovered. Lead ore of the purest kind is raised in the vale of Llanrwst, and slate of excellent and durable quality—especially at Chirk—with limestone, grindstones, and freestone, for building, are found in various other quarters.

History and Antiquities.—This county, denoted mated in Welsh, SIR DINBECH, was included, at the time of the Roman invasion, in that part of Cambrria occupied by the Ordovices. Subordinate to the Romans, it made a part of Venedotia, one of the minor partitions of the grand imperial division of the island, then denominated Britannia Secunda: yet few or no vestiges of conquest remain. Roman stations and encampments are not found. During the almost continual dissensions between the Mercians and the Welsh, Denbighshire was often the arena and the object of their contests. One vestige remains of their predatory mode of warfare, in an immense ditch and rampart, constructed by Offa, a Mercian king, and named Offa's dyke. This singular work, which, in many places, is almost entire, extends from the river Wye, along the counties of Hereford, Radnor, and Montgomery; enters Denbigh near Chirk castle; quits it above Wrexham, and ends at Mold in Flint. Nearly parallel to this celebrated trench, on the English side, is a similar fortification, which extended from Maesbury, near Oswestry, to the Dee, at Basingwerk, and, with the other, enclosed a piece of ground on which Britons and Saxons were wont to assemble for commercial purposes. The Norman period commenced with the subjugation of this county and its partition amongst military adventurers,—a system also pursued after the Conquest, and especially under Henry III. But it was left to Edward I. to consummate the subjugation of the entire province to the English yoke.

DENBIGH, a parish, borough, and market-town in the union of St. Asaph, county of Denbigh; 201 miles west by north of London, and 5 south of St. Asaph, west of the river Clwyd, on the banks of the Irlhod, one of its tributaries. The town is situated on a steep acclivity, overhung by a rock, crowned by the ruins of its noble castle, whence there is an extensive prospect of the luxuriant vale of the Clwyd, adorned with elegant mansions; Ruthin at a distance on the one hand; St. Asaph's on the other; and the landscape terminated by the blue tops of the distant mountains. Denbigh consists principally of a spacious market-place, and many elegant residences, constituting one long handsome avenue or street, whence other smaller ones diverge. In the opinion of many, it is the handsomest town in Wales. With its castle and ruins, it has been compared to Stirling in Scotland. Viewed from a distance it has an imposing appearance. Houses 742. A. P. £6,859. Pop., in 1801, 2,391; in 1831, 3,786. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; rated at £23 17s. 3½d.; gross income £445. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. The church of St. Marcellus, about a mile out of the town, is properly the parish church; but for the convenience of the parishioners, the service is performed in St. Hilary's chapel, near the castle gate. There are 4 places of worship for dissenters within the borough:—viz., Independents, Baptists, Calvinists, and Wesleyan Methodists. There is also a Roman Catholic chapel. The service in all, except the Wesleyan, is almost always in Welsh. The parish possesses 5 daily and 2 day and Sunday National schools, 2 of which are endowed, one with £60, and the other with £150 per annum, arising from various sources, and used for clothing as well as instructing a number of poor children. A third was founded and endowed by Dr. Daniel Williams, an eminent Protestant dissenting minister. A dispensary was long ago established, with liberal support, for the benefit of the poor. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,457.

By charter from Charles II., this town was governed by 2 aldermen, 2 bailiffs, a recorder, 2 cornors, and 25 burgesses. The freedom could be obtained only by gift from the common council.

Criminal jurisdiction was granted over all offences triable at quarter-sessions generally; "except as to matters that cannot be determined by 2 aldermen," in which case, power was given to the county justices to interfere. The 2 aldermen were appointed borough magistrates. The common council-men elected the recorder. A court of record was appointed as a court of pleas for trial of all personal suits to any amount. The revenue of the borough, in 1832, was £242 3s. 8d., which was above the average. In 1837, it was nett £166 11s. 4½d. Conjointly with Ruthin and Holt, it returned one member to parliament. Electors, in all, 500 burgesses. Under the reform act it sends one member to parliament, in conjunction with Ruthin, Holt, and Wrexham, as contributories. The number of electors registered for 1837, was 3,689. The boundaries of the parliamentary and municipal borough are co-extensive. Under the municipal act, the borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors. A mayor is annually chosen from amongst them. A commission of the peace has been granted. The county court is held here and at Wrexham alternately, every 4th Wednesday. It has no power to imprison for debt. Actions for sums under £5 may be laid. The under-sheriff is the president judge. There is a lock-up in the town, belonging equally to the county and the borough. Tanners, glovers, and shoemakers, who produce goods which are chiefly sent to London for exportation, are the principal tradesmen; but Denbigh is more a place of genteel retirement than of much trade. There is an assembly-room in the market-place. There are also two good inns adjacent, and a market-house. The market-day is Wednesday. Fairs are held on May 14th, July 18th, and September 25th, for cattle and small pedlery. The Northern and Central bank of England have a branch here.

Denbigh was anciently of great military importance. David, brother of the last Llewellyn, made it his rendezvous when he summoned the Welsh chieftains to form a coalition against the English. After his defeat the lordship was granted by Edward I. to Henry Lacy, earl of Lincoln, who built the castle and walled the town. Thomas of Lancaster, his son-in-law, succeeded; but, upon his attainer, it was bestowed upon Hugh de Spencer, favourite of Edward II., and, upon his execution, it reverted to the Crown. Edward III. granted it to the Mortimer family, and, again reverting to the Crown, Elizabeth bestowed it on her favourite, Dudley, earl of Leicester. In 1646, the castle was valiantly defended by William Salisbury, but was finally surrendered to the parliamentary army. At the Restoration, it was totally demolished. The ruins of this venerable structure are very extensive. The walls are of a very singular construction, having been grouted or formed of two thick walls filled up between with stones and hot cement, which bound the whole together in one mass of such strength, as, in the early ages, must have rendered the castle impregnable. Near the chief entrance of the castle are the ruins of the first place of worship which was begun to be erected in Great Britain, for the performance of the reformed religion. The triennial meeting of the Welsh bards, called the Eisteddfod, is occasionally held in this town. A Carmelite priory was established here about the year 1289, by J. Salisbury of Llewenni.

DENBURY, a parish in the hund. of Haytor, union of Newton Abbot, county of Devon; 5 miles west by south of Ashburton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £12 7s. 6d.; gross income £201. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £161 18s. 11d. Patron, the duke of Bedford. There are 1 Sunday and daily National and 3 daily schools in this parish. A fair is held on September 19th, for cheese and soap. Acres 1,270. Houses 101. A. P. £1,530. Pop., in 1801, 330; in 1831, 464. Poor rates, in 1837, £131.

DENBY, a parish in Morleston hund., union of Belper, county of Derby; 7 miles north-north-east of Derby, east of the river Derwent, and on the line of the Leeds and Derby railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; valued at £9; gross income £94. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. D. Lowe. There are here 3 daily schools, one of which is supported by an endowment of £47 10s. The Denby collieries are amongst the principal of those in Derbyshire. Flamstead, the great astronomer, was born here in 1646. Acres 2,380. Houses 240. A. P. £5,990. Pop., in 1801, 631; in 1831, 1,272. Poor rates, in 1837, £488.

DENBY, a chapelry and township in the parish of Penistone, upper division of the wapentake of Staincross, west riding of Yorkshire; 8 miles west of Barnsley, at the source of the Dearne. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of York; valued at £32 7s. 6d.; gross income £98. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £272 12s. 1d., due to the archdeacon of York. It is in the patronage of the vicar of Penistone. There are here 2 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. Acres 2,870. Houses 259. A. P. £3,466. Pop., in 1801, 1,061; in 1831, 1,295. Poor rates, in 1837, £422.

DENCHWORTH, a parish in the hund. and union of Wantage, county of Berks; 2½ miles north by west of Wantage, close on the Great Western railway. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £7 10s. 10d., returned at £82 10s.; gross income £130. Patrons, the provost and fellows of Worcester college, Oxford. A Sunday and daily school on the National system is supported here. Acres 1,060. Houses 46. A. P. £4,327. Pop., in 1801, 229; in 1831, 213. Poor rates, in 1837, £117.

DENERDISTON, or DENSTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Risbridge, county of Suffolk; 5 miles north of Clare. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; gross income £51. Patron, in 1835, W. Pigott, Esq. Acres 1,230. Houses 64. A. P. £1,450. Pop., in 1801, 277; in 1831, 341. Poor rates, in 1837, £232.

DENFORD, a parish in the hund. of Huxloe, union of Thrapston, county of Northampton; 1½ mile south of Thrapston, on the river Nen. Living, a discharged vicarage with Ringstead, in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8 10s.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, T. Burton, Esq. Acres 1,940. Houses 66. A. P. £2,100. Pop., in 1801, 267; in 1831, 319. Poor rates, in 1837, £171.

DENGIE HUNDRED, in the south-east corner of the county of Essex, between the Blackwater and the Crouch. Area 56,410 acres. Houses 1,609. Pop., in 1831, 9,915.

DENGIE, or DENGUY, a parish in the hund. of Dengie, union of Maldon, county of Essex; 3½ miles south-west of Bradwell. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £13; gross income £762. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £774 19s. 10d. Patron, in 1835, W. R. Stephenson. Charities £34 per annum. Acres 1,750. Houses 24. A. P. £3,297. Pop., in 1801, 145; in 1831, 249. Poor rates, in 1837, £323.

DENGIE-MARSH, a member of the town and Cinque Port of New Romney, in the parish of Lydd, locally situated in the hundred of Langport, county of Kent; 1½ mile south by east of Lydd. It has the English channel, with Dungeness lighthouse, on the south.

DENHAM, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Stoke, union of Eton, county of Buckingham; 2 miles north-north-west of Uxbridge, on the eastern bank of the Misbourne stream. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £19 9s. 4½d.; gross income £800. Patron, in 1835, B. Way, Esq. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. There is also a good school, and a well-conducted lunatic asylum for the upper classes. Acres 4,850. Houses 202. A. P. £6,850. Pop., in 1801, 796; in 1831, 1,169. Poor rates, in 1837, £497.

DENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Risbridge, county of Suffolk; 6½ miles west by south of Bury-St.-Edmund's. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely, not in charge; returned at £100; gross income £100. Patron, in 1835, S. Farmer, Esq. Acres 1,990. Houses 17. A. P. £1,239. Pop., in 1801, 141; in 1831, 191. Poor rates, in 1837, £63.

DENHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Hoxne, county of Suffolk; 2½ miles east by north of Eye, within the boundaries of which borough it is now included; it is near the London and Norwich railway. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Hoxne. There is here a daily school endowed with £34 per annum. Other charities £22 per annum, for clothing poor children. Acres 2,300. Houses 32. A. P. £1,682. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 276. Poor rates, in 1837, £191.

DENIO, a parish in the hund. of Gafflogion, union of Pwllheli, county of Carnarvon, North Wales. It includes the township of Pwllheli. Living, a curacy to the vicarage of Llanor. There are 3 daily schools here, one of which is endowed. Houses 395. A. P. £2,486. Pop., in 1801, 1,166; in 1831, 2,091. Poor rates, in 1837, £618.

DENMEAD. See HAMLEEDON.

DENNEY, formerly DANIEA, a hamlet in the parish of Waterbeach and hund. of Northstow, county of Cambridge; west of the river Cam, and 7½ miles north-north-east of Cambridge. About the time of the general dissolution there was a nunnery here, endowed with lands to the yearly value of £172 8s. 3d. ob. Dugd.

DENNINGTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Hoxne, county of Suffolk; 2 miles north of Framlingham, at the source of the river Alde. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Suffolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £36 3s. 4d.; gross income £873. Patron, in 1835, Captain Long. There is a daily school here. Charities about £50 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £937. The title of Baron Bous of Dennington was conferred in 1796 upon the Earl of Stradbroke. Acres 2,840. Houses 113. A. P. £5,185. Pop., in 1801, 726; in 1831, 1,000.

DENNIS (St.), a parish in the eastern division of the hund. of Powder, union of St. Austell, county of Cornwall; 4½ miles south-south-east of St. Columb Major, near the post-road from Penzance to Exeter. Living, a curacy, not in charge, annexed to the rectorship of St. Michael. There are here 3 daily schools. Acres 3,370. Houses 139. A. P. £1,524. Pop., in 1801, 318; in 1831, 721. Poor rates, in 1837, £226.

DENSTON, a township in the parish of Alveton, Stafford; 5 miles north of Uttoxeter, in a beautiful sequestered vale, on the western bank of the Churnet, intersected by the Uttoxeter canal. Acreage with the parish. Houses 48. A. P. £1,269. Pop., in 1801, 192; in 1831, 250. Poor rates, in 1837, £79.

DENSTON. See DENWADSTON, Suffolk.

DENT, a township and chapelry in the parish of Sedberg, west riding of Yorkshire; 7½ miles north-north-east of Kirkby-Lonsdale. Living, a curacy, formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; valued at £133 18s.; gross income £101. Patrons, landowners. A Wesleyan Methodist church was formed in 1800; and a place of worship for Independents; there are also 4 daily schools, one of which is supported by endowment. Dent is one of the polling-places for the members for the west riding. Acres 19,210. Houses 339. A. P. £7,610. Pop., in 1801, 1,773; in 1831, 1,840. Poor rates, in 1837, £959.

DENTON, a township and chapelry in the parish of Gainford, county of Durham; 5½ miles north-west of Darlington, on a branch of the Skerne. Living, a perpetual curacy, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Durham; gross income £32. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £196 13s. 10d. Patron, the vicar of Gainford. There are here 2 daily schools. Denton was, in ancient times, of some importance. It is now but a small village. Acres 800. Houses 26. A. P. £1,965. Pop., in 1801, 141; in 1831, 144. Poor rates, in 1837, £63.

DENTON, a parish in the hund. of Norman-Cross, county of Huntingdon; 1½ mile south-south-west of Stilton, to the south of Holme-Brook. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £5 13s. 6½d.; gross income £120. Patrons, in 1835, Executors of W. Wells, Esq. There is here a daily school, endowed with £15 per annum. Acres 890. Houses 20. A. P. £568. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 85. Poor rates, in 1837, £24.

DENTON, a parish in the hundreds of Kinghamford and Eastry, lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent; 8½ miles south-south-east of Canterbury, near the post-road from Canterbury to Dover. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5 19s. 4½d.; gross income £175. Patron, in 1835, Sir Edgerton Brydges, Bart. About 14 acres of hops were grown here in 1835. Acres 1,160. Houses 30. A. P. £1,061. Pop., in 1801, 187; in 1831, 314. Poor rates, in 1837, £147.

DENTON, a small parish in the hund. of Sharnwell, county of Kent. Pop. returned with the parish of Chalk.

DENTON, a township and chapelry in the parish of Manchester, county of Lancaster; 4 miles north-east by north of Stockport, west of the river Tame, and near the Manchester and Sheffield railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; returned at £99 10s.; gross income £135. Patroness, in 1835, the Marchioness of Westminster. The Wesleyans have a place of worship here. The principal manufacture in this place is that of hats. Acres 1,630. Houses 460. A. P. £3,195. Pop., in 1801, 1,362; in 1831, 2,792. Poor rates, in 1837, £507.

DENTON, a parish in the soke of Grantham, parts of Kesteven, union of Grantham, county of Lincoln; 4 miles south-west of Grantham, near the Grantham and Nottingham canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £18 8s. 4d.; gross income £761. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £800 2s. 1d. Patron, the prebendary of North Grantham, in Salisbury cathedral. Here are 4 daily schools. In this parish a Roman tessellated pavement, 30 feet square, has been discovered. Acres 2,730. Houses 100. A. P. £3,937. Pop., in 1801, 446; in 1831, 563. Poor rates, in 1837, £180.

DENTON, a parish in the hund. of Earham, union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 4½ miles north-east of Harleston, on the northern bank of the Waveney. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £24; gross income £861. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £765 6s. 4d. In the patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1655, and licensed under the new marriage act. There are here 2 daily schools. Acres 2,370. Houses 74. A. P. £3,655. Pop., in 1801, 451; in 1831, 580. Poor rates, in 1837, £306.

DENTON, a hamlet in the parish of Cuddesden, county of Oxford; 6½ miles west by north of Tetworth. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Oxford, not in charge; no return. Patron, the vicar of Cuddesden. Acres 730. Houses 30. A. P. £1,074. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 137. Poor rates, in 1837, £93.

DENTON, a parish in the hund. of Wymersley, union of Hardington, county of Northampton; 6 miles east-south-east of Northampton. Living, a rectory, annexed to that of Whiston. Acres 1,970. Houses 103. A. P. £1,194. Pop., in 1801, 378; in 1831, 527. Poor rates, in 1837, £219.

DENTON, a parish in the hund. of Flexborough, rape of Pevensey, union of Newhaven, county of Sussex; 1½ mile north-east of Newhaven, bounded on the west by the river Ouse. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £14 19s. 8d.; gross income £291. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £255 11s. 2d. Patron, in 1835, H. W. Bates, Esq. There is here a daily school. Denton is within the liberty of the duchy of Lancaster. Acres 890. Houses 26. A. P. £1,944. Pop., in 1801, 54; in 1831, 117. Poor rates, in 1837, £78.

DENTON, a township and chapelry in the parish of Otley, locally situated in the lower division of the wapentake of Claro, west riding of Yorkshire, 4 miles north-west of Otley, north of the river Warfe. Living, a donative curacy, formerly in the dio. of York, now in that of Ripon; valued at £20; gross income £44. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. Ibbetson, Bart. There is here a daily school. This town was anciently a seat of the family of Fairfax. Acres 3,170. Houses 29. A. P. £2,261. Pop., in 1801, 192; in 1831, 179. Poor rates, in 1837, £52.

DENTON (EAST), a township in Newburn parish, county of Northumberland; 3½ miles west-north-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the coal-mines, which abound in this neighbourhood. Houses 114. Pop., in 1821, 548; in 1831, 524. Poor rates, in 1837, £177.

DENTON (NETHER), a parish in the ward of Eskdale, union of Brampton, Cumberland; 5 miles east-north-east of Brampton; on the river Irthing. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, returned at £120; gross income £196. Patron, the bishop of Carlisle. Here is a daily school. Acres 4,530. Houses 47. A. P. £2,602. Pop., in 1801, 245; in 1831, 290. Poor rates, in 1837, £114.

DENTON (UPPER), a parochial chapelry in Eskdale ward, Cumberland; 17 miles east-north-east of Carlisle; east of the river Irthing, intersected by the Carlisle and Newcastle railway. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle, not in charge; returned at £68; gross income £47. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Carlisle. Acres 860. Houses 15. A. P. £883. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 106. Poor rates, in 1837, £42.

DENTON (WEST), a township in Newburn parish, county of Northumberland. Here is a daily school. Houses 70. Pop. in 1801, 423; in 1831, 455. Poor rates, in 1837, £230.

DENVER, a parish in the hund. of Clackclose, union of Downham, county of Norfolk; 1 mile south of Market-Downham; on the post-road from Cambridge to Kingslynn. Living, a rectory in two mediocrities, viz. St. Michael's Westhall, and St. Peter's Easthall, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £10 13s. 4d.; gross income £802. It is in the patronage of Caius college, Cambridge. Charities, £26 per annum. Acres 2,610. Houses 175. A. P. £4,421. Pop., in 1801, 539; in 1831, 860. Poor rates, in 1837, £424.

DEOPHAM, a parish in the hund. of Forehoe, county of Norfolk; 3½ miles west by south of Wymondham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 7s. 11d., returned at £148 17s. 6d.; gross income £204. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Canterbury. There are here a daily and a Sunday and daily National school. Charities, £27 per annum. Acres 1,520. Houses 75. A. P. £3,067. Pop., in 1801, 352; in 1831, 506. Poor rates, in 1837, £315.

DEPDEN, a parish in the hund. of Risbridge, union of Thingoe, county of Suffolk; 7 miles south by west of Bury-St.-Edmund's. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £10 11s. 3½d.; gross income £400. In the patronage of the Lord-chancellor. Dr. Anthony Sparrow, bishop of Norwich, was born in this parish. Acres 2,000. Houses 38. A. P. £1,824. Pop., in 1801, 240; in 1831, 329. Poor rates, in 1837, £204.

DEPTFORD,

A large and at one time very opulent town, on the southern bank of the Thames, at the mouth of the small river Ravensbourne, in the hund. of Blackheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Greenwich, Kent; 5 miles east of London, and 11 west by north of Dartford; intersected by the Croydon canal, which here joins the Surrey canal, by the Croydon railway, and by the Greenwich railway (see GREENWICH), which runs through the High-street, on a viaduct, and whence a branch has been projected to the new pier at the river side.*

The town of Deptford is very irregularly built. It is nominally divided into Upper and Lower Deptford. The latter, originally called West Greenwich and Deptford Strond, was, at one time, merely a small fishing-village, but many neat streets have been erected since the establishment of the royal dock-yard here by Henry VIII.—By the reform bill, Deptford is conjoined with Greenwich, Woolwich, Charlton, and Plumstead in returning two members to parliament.—Acres 1,700. Houses 4,685. A. P. £37,450. Pop., in 1801, 17,548; in 1831, 21,350.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—In 1790 this place was divided into the two parishes of St. Nicholas and St. Paul, both in the dio. and archd. of Rochester. The living of St. Nicholas is a vicarage; rated at £12 17s. 3½d.; gross income £557. The living of St. Paul is a rectory, not in charge; gross income £400. Both these presentations belong to Mrs. Drake, and Captain William Wickham Drake. A small part of the parish of St. Paul's lies in the county of Surrey. Here are four Independent churches, formed respectively in 1700, 1800, and 1805; a Baptist church formed in 1802; and a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1802. There were, in 1834, 78 daily schools within the town. Some of these, however, are charity-schools: one of which, Dean Stanhope's school, in the parish of St. Paul's, founded about 1715, for educating, clothing, and apprenticing poor children, is endowed with upwards of £250 per annum. Dr. Breton's school, in the parish of St. Nicholas, founded in 1672, is endowed with about £40 per annum, for educating and clothing poor children. Out of Addey's charity to the poor, in 1806—the income of which, in 1836, amounted to £415 8s. 6d.—the sum of £134 15s. 1d. was expended that year in teaching about 120 boys and 100 girls on the National system; the residue was chiefly distributed among the poor.—Here are two hospitals belonging to the Trinity-house corporation. The old hospital was founded in the time of Henry VIII., and contains 25 apartments. Trinity-hospital was erected towards the end of the 17th century. It consists of 56 apartments, forming a spacious quadrangle, in the centre of which is placed a statue of Captain Richard Maples, who, in 1680, bequeathed £1,300 towards the building. The pensioners in both hospitals consist of decayed pilots, and masters of ships, or their widows: the annual allowance to the widows and single men is about £18; the married men receive about £28 yearly. See LONDON.—Trinity House.—Minor charities here present a united income of upwards of £120 per annum. In charities founded previous to 1790, when the town was parochially divided, both parishes have a joint interest.—Poor rates, in 1837, £10,037. The parish-work-house now stands on the site of the ancient manor-house of Deptford, named Sayes court. It was once the residence of the celebrated John Evelyn; and was the temporary abode of Peter of Russia, during his stay at the dock-yards.

Docks, Trinity-house, &c.—Deptford was of no importance till Henry VIII. established a naval dock-yard here, and incorporated the society of Trinity-house, to examine the mathematical students of Christ's hospital, and the masters in the navy; to settle the rates of pilotage, and to erect light-houses, &c. This society was incorporated by the name of "The Master, Warden, and Assistants of the Guild or Fraternity of the most glorious and undivided Trinity, and of St. Clement, in the parish of Deptford Strond." The ancient Trinity-hall at Deptford was pulled down about the year 1787, when the Trinity-house was erected at London, where the society now holds its meetings. The royal dock-yard has been greatly enlarged since the time of Henry VIII. It now encloses an area of about 31 acres. It has a double wet dock of two acres, and a single dock of one and a half. There are large workshops of all descriptions requisite for fitting out ships of war, a basin, two mast-ponds, and numerous iron forges. There are capacious storehouses, including the victualling office, originally built in 1745; but burnt in 1749, and since re-erected. It now consists of numerous ranges of buildings added at various times, and all appropriated to the various establishments necessary to the important office of victualling the navy. The victualling yard supplies the whole of the government-establishments abroad with provisions, clothing, and medicines. All the transports and convict ships are also fitted out at this yard, under the inspection of a resident agent, who surveys all the freight-ships employed by government for the army. The residences of the presiding officers are also included in the edifices connected with this establishment. All the affairs of the dock-yard and its ap-

* Two projected Kentish railways commence at Deptford, and terminate, one at Deal, after sending branches to Maidstone, and the South-eastern Dover railway, at Willesborough; and the other at Sandwich, and Sand-Down-Castle. A branch from the projected Southwark and Staines railway runs to the East County dock. The intended Westminster and Deptford railway joins the Greenwich, and another projected Kent railway, at the High-street, Deptford. This latter line forms a grand trunk through the populous towns of East Kent.

Published by Archd. Fullarton & Co. Glasgow.

pendages are under the control of the admiralty, and the immediate superintendence of a captain in the navy, who is called Superintendent, and holds his office for five years, when he is replaced by another. In time of war, from 1,000 to 1,500 workmen have been employed here. There are several private dock-yards for boat and ship-building, including Evelyn's dock, where men-of-war of 74 guns are sometimes built; also a commodious commercial dock, intended for foreign merchantmen in the Baltic trade. About $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile from the town was an extensive erection wherein bayonets, gun-barrels, halberds, &c., were manufactured by machinery set in motion by a powerful steam-engine. This building is now converted into a mill for throwing silk. A rope-work upon the vertical principle is now (June, 1840,) erecting in the dock-yard, which will be sufficient for the supply of the whole navy with cables and ropes of any length. The prosperity of Deptford having hitherto been in a great measure dependent on the trade originating from the building and fitting-out of vessels for the royal navy, it has suffered materially from the comparative suspension of maritime occupations ever since the peace. An extensive manufacture of earthenware, called Deptford ware, is in a prosperous condition. There is a mechanics' institution in the town, and a savings bank has been established. Water-works were erected here as far back as 1699, under a patent from William III.; in 1808 they were purchased by a company, who greatly enlarged them, and, under the name of the Kent Water-works company, supply Deptford, Greenwich, Woolwich, Blackheath, and Kent-road, with water from the Ravensbourne, a rivulet rising near Bromley. A new pier for the convenience of passengers to and from the Greenwich, Croydon, &c., railways, was recently in progress; and other works were projected, including docks for the express use of steam-vessels of the larger class, almost at any time of the tide.

History.—The history of Deptford is little else than the history of its government-establishments. The name of Deptford was derived from a deep ford over the Ravensbourne, at its confluence with the Thames, but which is now superseded by a bridge. A desolating fire happened in 1652; and 19 years afterwards the lower town was inundated by a great flood, which rose 10 feet in the streets near the river.

DEPTLING. See DEBTLING.

DEPWAD HUNDRED, in the county of Norfolk. Area 30,950 acres. Houses 1,752. Pop., in 1831, 10,031. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Depwade, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 400 persons. The Depwade poor-law union comprehends 43 parishes, embracing an area of 110 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 24,768. Average annual expenditure on poor of this district, during three years preceding formation of union, £24,006. Expenditure, in 1838, £13,459.

DERBYSHIRE,

A midland and almost central county of England, situated nearly at an equal distance from the eastern and western seas. It is bounded on the north by Yorkshire; east by Leicester and Nottinghamshires; west by the Dove, the Goyt, and the Trent, which divide it from Staffordshire and Cheshire; and south by Leicester and Warwickshires. This county is very irregular in form, especially on the west side, and there is a small isolated part or parish of it in Leicestershire. Its length from north-north-west to south-south-east is 56 miles; its breadth from east to west is about 33 miles. Its circumference is about 204 miles; and its area 663,180 acres, of which about 510,000 are arable, pasture, and meadow-lands. Houses 46,098. A. P. £887,659. Pop. in 1801, 161,142; in 1831, 236,900; out of 48,320 families of whom, 13,324 were chiefly engaged in agriculture, and 20,788 in trade, manufactures, &c. Poor rates, on an average of 3 years to Easter, 1748-50, £7,874; expenditure on poor, £7,677: in 1803, £77,311; expenditure on poor, £58,665: in 1813, £126,892; expenditure on poor, £100,477: in 1839, £68,900; expenditure on poor, £50,200. Church rates, in 1831-2, £3,849; in 1839, £4,832. Derbyshire forms an archdeaconry in the diocese of Lichfield, and province of Canterbury, comprising the deaneries of Ashbourne, High Peak, Chesterfield, Derby, Castillay, and Repington, and containing from 135 to 140 parishes, out of 117 of which, enumerated by the Messrs. Lyson, 50 are rectories, 58 vicarages, and the remainder perpetual curacies. There are also upwards of 50 dependent chapels within the boundaries of the county, and nearly 200 Dissenting places of worship. In 1831, there were 730 daily schools, attended by 23,102 children; and 420 Sunday schools, attended by 39,184 children.—Of these, 9 daily schools belonged to Dissenters, with 287 children, and 166 Sunday schools, with 18,485 children. The civil divisions of Derby, are: the north and south parliamentary sections, each of which returns 2 members. Those for the northern division are voted for at Bakewell, Chesterfield, Chapel-en-le-Frith, Alfreton, and Glossop; the place of election being at Bakewell: those for the southern at Derby, Ashbourne, Wirksworth, Melbourne, and Belper; the place of election being at Derby. The number of electors registered for this county, in 1837, was, in the northern division, 6,573, out of a population of 102,236; in the southern, 5,527, out of a population of 111,327, exclusive of the borough of Derby,—the only one in the county,—which returns 2;—in all, for this county, 6 members. The number of electors who polled in north Derbyshire at the election in 1837, was 4,481. Before the passing of the Reform act, this county returned 2 members with 2 for the borough of Derby. The northern division comprises the wapentakes or hundreds of Scarsdale, High Peak, and part of Wirksworth; the southern, the remaining hundreds, Appletree, Morleston, Litchurch, Repton, Gresley, and the other parts of Wirksworth. The chief market-towns are Alfreton, Ashbourne, Bakewell, Bolsover, Belper, Chapel-en-le-Frith, Chesterfield, Dronfield, Tideswell, Winstanley, and Wirksworth. Part of the county is in the jurisdiction of the duchy of Lancaster court, held at Tutbury; many parishes in the hundreds of High Peak, Scarsdale, and Wirksworth, are within the jurisdiction of the Peveril court, held at Lenton in Lancashire; both of these courts are for recovery of small debts, determining assaults, &c. The barmote courts for the regulation of the business relative to the working of the mines, &c., are held at Monyash in the Peak, and at Wirksworth. Derbyshire is in the midland circuit. The assizes are held at Derby, as are the quarter-sessions, except the Easter, which are held at Chesterfield. County rates, in 1799, the first on record, £6,890; expenditure £6,392: in 1809, £5,480; expenditure £5,331: in 1819, £15,363; expenditure £14,768: and in 1838, £11,871; expenditure £12,125. In 1834-8 the proportion of criminals to the total population in Derby and Lancaster was .56 for Derby to 1.18 for Lancaster, while the average of 6 counties was 1.08. Derby ranking least or lowest of all in the proportional scale of crime. The county jail was erected in 1824-6 in the county-town of DERBY: which see.

General description.—Derbyshire is much diversified in geographical aspect. Its high lands, especially the mountainous regions of the High Peak, are distinguished by their romantic scenery, their rocks and caverns, their rude precipitous cliffs, and rapid streams, which flow from thence through narrow valleys; meet in the Lower Peak, in the centre of the county; and swell the waters of the Derwent, which divides it into eastern and western districts. The most remarkable eminences are those which occupy its north-western extremity. They belong to the elevated Penine chain which separates the basins of the Humber and the Mersey. Of these, according to the trigonometrical survey, the great northern elevation of Axe-Edge, on the boundary between this county and Staffordshire, is 1,751 feet; and Holme-Moss, the most conspicuous point of Kinder-Scout, is 1,859 feet above the level of the sea. Ridges branch in various directions across the High Peak and the Eastern Moor, until they are lost in the fruitful plains that embank the Trent, and contain the head-springs of numerous rivers. From near Axe-edge, a tract of high land runs south-east, separating the basins of the Derwent and the Dove. Another, east of the Derwent, and running south-east, separates its basin from those of the Rother and the Sheaf. The Low Peak, though hilly, is not so elevated. The southern part presents a level surface with slight undulations, and is for the most part fertile and well-cultivated. Of the dales or valleys, Dove-Dale is undoubtedly the most celebrated. It extends nearly north-west of Thorpe, between Derbyshire and Staffordshire, about 5 miles along the course of the Dove. There are high and elevated rocks in this grand dale called Dove Dale church, Thorpe cloud, Lover's leap, &c. Bonsal Dale, near Cromford, is deep and romantic. Monsal Dale is peculiarly interesting. Matlock Dale extends along the course of the Derwent more than two miles from the celebrated Cromford cotton mills. Middleton or Eyam Dale abounds with elevated rocks and interesting caverns. It is highly picturesque. Cave Dale, Bradford Dale, and Lathkill Dales are also well worthy of notice.

Rivers.—Besides the Trent, which forms the south-west boundary for a short distance between Burton and its confluence with the Erwash, the rivers of this county are numerous. The principal are the Derwent, the Dove, the Wye, the Erwash, the Etherow, the Goyt, and the Rother. The Derwent is the chief as respects this county. It rises on the moor in the Alpine ridges of the High Peak, at the northern extremity of the county; flows southward about 46 miles, during which it receives many tributaries, and passes CHATSWORTH PARK,—which see,—and a little below which it receives the Wye;—Matlock, where it flows in a deep channel sunk between lofty rocks;—Belper and Derby,—where it leaves the varied and beautiful scenery of the highlands; and whence it becomes navigable; though, since the canals were cut, it has been little used. In the vicinity of Derby it enters the wide valley of the Trent, and, after collecting the waters of nearly 300,000 acres of land, discharges them into that noble river, on the borders of Leicestershire. The Dove has been the theme of poets, the study of painters, and the resort of scientific naturalists. It rises near Buxton, and forms the south-western boundary of the county till it falls into the Trent a little below Burton. As far as Ashbourne its course is in the hilly region, generally in a deep valley sunk in the high lands. It presents many scenes of striking grandeur and beauty in its course. The Wye rises north of Buxton and, flowing past Bakewell, joins the Derwent. The Erwash rises near Alfreton, flows southwardly, bounding the county, and joins the Trent below its confluence with the Derwent. The Rother has its source in the junction of several small streams near Chesterfield, which it passes, and quits the county near Beighton on the borders of Yorkshire. Thus, the drainage of the whole county belongs to the basin of the Trent, except a few inconsiderable streams, the chief of which are the Etherow and the Goyt, which bound the county on the north and north-west, and, uniting their streams, become afterwards tributary to the Mersey.

Canals.—Among the numerous canals which intersect this county, the most important is the Grand Trunk or Trent and Mersey canal, completed in 1777. It enters the county by crossing the Dove near its confluence with the Trent, and running past Stenson, meets the southern Derby canal near Swarkeston, and proceeds by Shardlow to the Derwent, near its confluence with the Trent. This has hitherto formed a principal part of the great line of communication between Liverpool, Hull, Bristol, and London. The Erwash or Langley bridge canal, begun in 1777, proceeds from the Trent, between the termination of the last, and the confluence of the Erwash and the Trent. After successively giving off the Beeston cut to the east, and the South-eastern Derby canal, and the Shipwash branch, to the west, it runs northwards along the valley of the Erwash, towards its source near Alfreton, after being joined by the Nottingham canal to the north-east of Langley, and shortly after by the Cromford canal near Langley-hill bridge. The Cromford canal proceeds thence across the Erwash to Codnor Park iron-works. Shortly after, it enters a tunnel 2,966 yards in length. It then crosses the Amber, one of the numerous tributaries of the Derwent, by an aqueduct 200 yards in length and 50 feet high. Thence it follows the course of the Derwent; passes through other two short tunnels, and across another aqueduct near Cromford, where it terminates. A reservoir, of 50 acres, near the great tunnel, is the principal feeder of this canal, which is about 18 miles in length. The Chesterfield canal, completed in 1776, proceeds from Chesterfield along the east bank of the Rother, through a country abounding with coal, to NOTTINGHAMSHIRE: which see. The Peak-Forest canal, proceeding from the Ashton-under-Lyne canal, enters the northern parts of Derbyshire at Whalley-bridge, and proceeds towards Milton. This canal was finished in 1800. The Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal crosses the isolated part of this county which is surrounded by Leicestershire, passing by Measham and Oakthorpe. It was completed in 1799. The two Derby canals already alluded to were completed in 1794. There is a prolongation northwards to Little Eaton.

Roads.—The great road from London to Manchester enters this county from Leicestershire by crossing the Trent near Shardlow. It passes through Derby, and thence through Ashbourne to Staffordshire. A principal branch passes northwards and by west through Buxton to Whalley, thence to Stockport, joined at Whalley by another principal line from Derby through Driffield, Wirksworth, Matlock, Bakewell, and Chapel-en-le-Frith; whence a branch proceeds by Glossop to Ashton under Lyne. A principal road to Sheffield passes from Derby through Chesterfield and Dronfield. Many other roads radiate from Derby in all quarters to the surrounding counties, cities, and towns,—interlacing each other by interminable branches. The average of highway returns for three years ending October, 1814, gives, on 637 miles of turnpike roads and paved streets, and 1,696 miles of all other highways used for wheeled carriages, a total expenditure in money, and in estimated value of statute labour, of £20,624. The amount of highway rates in 1827, was £16,049. In 1836 there were 41 turnpike trusts in this county; the total income of which was £44,810 15s. 7d.; total expenditure, £40,412 12s. 4d. In 1839 the expenditure on 1,978 miles of highway, was £18,627.

Railways.—The pre-eminent means, however, of facilitating general communication and commercial intercourse, internal and external, now enjoyed by this central county, are those, even nationally, most important lines of railway by which it is traversed; and of these, the Leicester and Derby, and the Derby and Leeds, sections of the Great Midland, North Midland, and North of England lines or line of railway, claim our first attention. The Derby and Leicester section, or Midland Counties railway, which joins the Birmingham and London railway at Rugby, is 75 miles in length. It enters this county at the south-eastern corner, near the confluence of the Trent with the Soar, and after having been joined by a branch from Nottingham, through Long Eaton, passes through Sawley, Breaston, and Spondon, to Derby. This section, from Derby to its junction with the Nottingham branch, and from thence to Nottingham, was opened to the public on 4th June, 1839; and from the junction of these to Leicester, on 5th May, 1840. See also LEICESTERSHIRE. The Derby and Leeds section, or North Midland Great Trunk railway, which constitutes a central link between the other important railways in the north, centre, and south of England, is 72½ miles in length, with upwards of 200 bridges and 7 tunnels in its course, measuring together nearly 2½ miles. The parliamentary estimated expense was £1,600,000; but the actual cost was about £3,000,000. Nearly 10,000 men were employed at one time on the line during its construction. The whole line has been constructed in little more than 3 years. The Stephensons, George and Robert, with their assistant, Mr. Swandwick, were the engineers who carried this great work into execution. It was opened through all this county, and as far as Rotherham, beyond Sheffield, on 11th May, 1840; and throughout the whole line on 1st July, 1840. This railway runs up through two of the romantic vales of Derby, and through several of the luxuriant valleys of Yorkshire. The scenery throughout is much more attractive, we believe, than that of any other railway in the kingdom. With two or three exceptions, the railways are comparatively uninteresting in scenery. Indeed, the very necessity of finding the nearest approach to a level, makes it almost inevitable that most of them should be monotonous in scenery, when not devoid of it altogether. But this railway is a splendid exception. Its course lies along the valleys of the Derwent, the Amber, the Rother, the Dun, the Dearne, the Calder, and the Aire, affording views of beautiful parks, seats, villages, woods, and ruins. It is bordered nearly all the way by fertile meadows and pastures, skirted with wooded hills, which altogether constitute, in passing them, an almost uninterrupted panoramic picture; and the works of the railway itself, comprising magnificent viaducts, aqueducts, and bridges, with station-houses of tasteful architecture, contribute not a little to the admiration and delight of the traveller. On these accounts, we have here devoted more space than usual to a description of this railway within the limits of Derbyshire, and for an account of its continuance, see YORKSHIRE. See also DARLINGTON.

The Derby station is a handsome brick structure of very great extent, being erected for the accommodation not only of the North Midland, but also of the Midland Counties and Birmingham and Derby companies. It is built by the North Midland, and is under the management of its directors; but the other companies pay six per cent. on that proportion of the cost which is for their accommodation. The entire area enclosed is 26 acres. The station consists of offices for the booking of passengers, waiting-rooms, refreshment-rooms, apartments for the directors, secretary, and other officers; warehouses for goods; a shed of unequalled extent and great lightness to cover in the landing-places of the railways; and separate engine-houses and workshops. The refreshment-rooms are handsome, but by no means on the grand scale of those at Birmingham. The shed covers nine several lines of rails; the walls have open arches in their whole length. Its width is about 140 feet, under three roofs, of very light yet strong construction, amply lighted from above, and supported by sixty fluted cast-iron columns, 22 feet high. The apex of the roofs is 38 feet high. The length of the main shed is 450 feet; but one of the three roofs is prolonged by wings to the length of 1,050 feet, by 42 feet wide. The engine-house and workshops of the North Midland are very tastefully and admirably constructed. The engine-house is a polygon of 16 sides, and 130 feet in diameter, lighted from a dome-shaped roof of the height of 53 feet. It contains 16 lines of rails radiating from a single turn-table in the centre: the engines, on their arrival, are brought in here, placed upon the turn-table, and wheeled into any stall that may be vacant. Each of the 16 stalls in these locomotive engine stables will hold two, or perhaps three engines; and here the iron-horses will receive every attention after they have been fatigued and harassed by their work. There are also carriage-houses and workshops on a large scale, it being intended to repair every thing on the spot. The latter buildings form wings to the polygon, 160 to 180 feet in length, and at a right angle to each other. A hotel is to be erected at the entrance to the station. The whole of the works at this station have been built by Mr. Jackson, a spirited and able contractor, who also constructed the noble bridges at Belper and the Bull-bridge contract, and who is now erecting the station at Leeds.

From Derby the North Midland railway runs northwards by Duffield and other villages, and through Milford tunnel, 836 yards in length, with rich and handsome arched frontings, to Belper, through which it runs in a cutting lined with masonry, and it has no less than 12 bridges crossing it in the space of a mile. It then, by 2 timber bridges, each about 400 feet in length, and containing in all 200,000 cubic feet of timber, crosses Belper pool, where the Derwent expands in a broad sheet, with a wooded island in the midst. The scenery here is extremely beautiful. A short tunnel; a fine viaduct across the Derwent; and another short tunnel at Hagwood, are then passed, and the grand and interesting works, at the principal crossing of the Derwent, are reached. The river runs in the bottom of the valley with the turnpike road at some distance above it: the railway passes over both, obliquely, by a magnificent viaduct; and, in the same place, is itself crossed by the Cromford canal, in an aqueduct built by the company. At the confluence of the Amber valley with the valley of the Derwent, the scenery is splendid, especially up the Derwent valley, towards Matlock, 5 miles from the Amber gate station. Bull-bridge, and Lodge-hill tunnel, 250 yards in length, and South Wingfield station, are then passed; the Column of Crich stand, where mountain limestone abounds, being seen to the left on the distant hills; and, after passing a deep and extensive cutting, opened out into the romantic valley of the Amber, where the wretched mud huts of the peasantry form a striking contrast with the beauty of the scenery, the summit of the line in Derbyshire is reached at Clay cross tunnel, which is just a mile in length, the entrance being fronted with a magnificent Moorish gateway, having a castellated circular tower on either side, and an arch of the unusual figure of three parts oval, with two fine rounded mouldings. Here a zigzag coal railway joins the North Midland, which then leaves the romantic scenery of the valleys of Derbyshire, and passes onwards to Chesterfield with its well-known crooked spire. Here there is a very beautiful station in the Elizabethan style of architecture. Chesterfield is 24 miles by railway from Derby. Various other handsome stations are then passed, including Eckington station, for Worksop, which stands in Renishaw park in view of the hall, and has hence been made exceedingly chaste and beautiful. It consists of a circular tower with wings, and contains a spacious and elegant waiting-room. Here, a few miles on the right, is that cluster of ducal residences which Sir George Saville called 'the Dukery.' Eckington station is 30 miles from Derby, and 10 from Mashro. At Beighton, 34 miles from Derby, this railway leaves Derbyshire.

The Birmingham and Derby Junction railway—see BIRMINGHAM—is 38½ miles in length, and was opened throughout on 2d August, 1839. It passes from the grand central terminus at Derby, through Normanton; between which and Willington, the Mersey and Trent canal is crossed by an oblique iron-bridge. From Willington it runs parallel with this canal, until it reaches the borders of the county, and enters STAFFORDSHIRE: which see. One of the most remarkable circumstances connected with this railway is the rapidity with which it was completed. The act was obtained in 1836; but the works were only begun in 1837. By its act the company was authorized to raise £630,000 in £100 shares, and further, to borrow £200,000; and the works did not exceed the sums thus sanctioned. The Cromford or Peak Forest, and Crich railways, have been already described.—See articles CROMFORD and CRICH.—There are two railways connected with the Ashby-de-la-Zouch canal, and terminating in the southern integral parts of this county, the one near Hartshorn, the other near Ticknall. Besides these, others were projected in 1840; the Rocester, between Willington and Rocester, there to join another intended railway from Derby, along the valley of the Churnet to the Manchester and Birmingham railway, or its Macclesfield branch; with a branch from Merston to the Birmingham and Derby railway at Burton on Trent;—the Midland Grand Union, from the Midland, or Leicester and Derby, at Lenton, Nottingham, to Renishaw park, Derby. The intended Churnet railway—from the number of towns and populous districts lying on its route—is considered to be a very promising undertaking, attended with great national advantages, besides those, local and peculiar to Derbyshire, and all the surrounding counties. The exportation of the coal, lime, &c. of Derby, is greatly facilitated, and its general trade opened to immense increase, by the railways already completed.

Climate.—The climate is much colder in the northern and western parts, which terminate the principal middle chain of hills from the north, than in the southern, lower, and more sheltered regions. Dr. Aikin, in his 'Description of the Country round Manchester,' observes, that "the mountainous part of this county is distinguished from the rest by the greater quantity of rain which falls in it. At Chatsworth, which is by no means the highest tract, about 33 inches of rain have been found to fall annually at a medium. The High Peak is peculiarly liable to very violent storms, in which the rain descends in torrents, so as frequently to occasion great ravages in the lands; it is also subject to very high winds. These causes, together with the elevation of the country, render it cold, so that vegetation is backward and unkindly. Some kinds of grain will not grow at all in the Peak, and others seldom ripen till very late in the year. The atmosphere is, however, pure and healthful, and the higher situations are generally free from epidemic diseases, though agues and fevers sometimes prevail in the valleys. One disease is endemic, however, in these parts, and even as far south as Derby; this is the bronchocele, or Derby-neck; it is an enlargement of the glands of the throat, and is a degree of the same disease that is known in the Alps and other mountainous tracts." From the report of the Registrar General on the causes of death, from July 1st to December 31st, 1837, we find that,—out of a population of 218,233, consisting of 43,026 families; 20,456 of whom were employed in trade, manufactures, &c., 1,446 in agriculture, and 21,124 otherwise occupied,—in West Derby and Liverpool,—the deaths arising from epidemic, endemic, and contagious diseases, were as 1,666 to 1,287, arising from diseases of the respiratory organs, including consumption, decline, pneumonia, &c.; and 870 arising from nervous diseases, and 184 from old age, besides deaths from other causes. But as Liverpool is mixed up with Derby in this calculation, it cannot, perhaps, afford precise data on which to found an opinion with regard to the nosological peculiarities of Derby.

Soil and Produce.—The most common soil of this county is reddish clay or marl, which prevails in the south. In the north-west is an extensive tract of limestone, the southern and middle parts of which have the same surface soil as the southern district. In a large eastern tract, extending from Stanton by Dale to Morley in Yorkshire, where the coal occurs, the soil is clay of various qualities. In the northern extremity a similar soil and peat bogs prevail. The soil on the banks of the rivers is partly alluvial. The southern and eastern parts are employed both for pasture and tillage. Most kinds of grain are there cultivated, though not very scientifically, and produce a fair return. Dairy farms are numerous in the southern and northern parts, and large quantities—2,000 tons. it is said—of cheese are annually sent to the metropolis, or exported from the seaports on the sea-coast. Barley is much cultivated, particularly near Gresley and Repton, where the farmers are induced to do so principally by the consumption of malt in the neighbouring town of Burton, where the highly celebrated Burton ale is brewed. The whole annual produce of barley thus used has been calculated at about 5,000 quarters. In the northern parts, from the poverty of the soil, and the rawness of the climate, the lands are mainly used as pasture for sheep and cattle. The cows have the property of becoming fat in a short time; their yield of milk is but moderate. The sheep on the High Peak are smaller than those on the Leicester border. They weigh only from 14 to 17 lbs. a quarter; those fed on the gritstone lands being about 3 lbs. lighter than others of the same breed fattened on limestone soil. The fleeces of the former are also much lighter and thinner than the others. Merino sheep were introduced in the beginning of this century; and George III. honoured the patriotic endeavours of the introducer, Mr. W. B. Thomas of Chesterfield, by presenting him with two Merino ewes. In order to excite attention to the progress and advantage of breeding Merino sheep, this gentleman afterwards invited the agriculturists to be annually present at his sheep-shearing, when he exhibited the live animals in their several stages of growth, their wool, their mutton, and cloth, also, both for male and female attire, manufactured from the Merino wool grown on his own farms. The horses of the northern are of a different breed from those of the southern parts; the latter being strong and heavy while the former are light and slender, and are much employed in the Peak for carrying limestone. Their agility in ascending and descending the steep mountains is remarkable. Oats are grown in the high lands in the northern parts, and constitute a considerable portion of the food of the inhabitants. Vast quantities of chamomile—rather an unusual species of culture—besides valerian and elecampane root, are raised, and sold to the London druggists. Derby, on the whole, does not rank decidedly high as an agricultural county, though it has certainly been considered to be on an equality at least with the most favoured district; more especially, however, in respect to the dairy produce cheese, which is sought after in other counties.

Strata and Minerals.—The new red sandstone formation extends into Derbyshire from the other midland counties, and occupies the southern districts as far north as Ashbourne, Duffield, and Sandiacre. Here and there the magnesian limestone rises to the surface. The coal-field, or great coal-rake, lies along the eastern boundary, and is from 12 to 15 miles in width, with narrow branches extending from it along the border of Leicestershire, southward, and more particularly near the border of Yorkshire, where the field or rake itself widens and occupies a large district of that northern county. The strata of coal are sometimes completely denudated or very barely covered with earth, but they are usually found beneath the yellow or magnesian limestone. The whole extent of the coal-measures, or the coal-field, in Derbyshire, is about 190,000 acres. The millstone grit with shale which the coal measures immediately overlie, crops out on the west side of the coal field, and forms a broad zone, partially extending round the coal measures between Driffield, Belper, and Wirksworth, west of the Derwent, and constitutes the rocky ridge east of the Derwent valley. It also occupies the western and northern borders of the High Peak, extending southwards to Buxton. It is this rock which forms the celebrated wild and barren mountain scenery of Derbyshire. Carboniferous or mountain limestone occupies the remainder of this county, north of the red sandstone; forming the Peak forest, and the north-west mountainous district. This rock is noted for the striking appearances which it presents, and for the singular caverns or chasms which often engulf the streams traversing them in subterraneous courses several miles in length, and constitute one of the peculiar features of Derbyshire. The most remarkable are those at Bradwell, Castleton, Eyam, Matlock, &c.—which see.—There are also caverns abounding with crystals and stalactites, in various parts of the Peak, regarding which it is doubtful whether they are natural chasms, or exhausted or neglected mines.

The mineral productions of this county embrace nearly every species of subterranean wealth; but coal, lead, iron, and marble are those which chiefly engage the industry and enterprise of the population. The principal collieries are, Alfreton, Ashgate in Brampton, Butterley, Codnor park, Denby, Ilkeston, Morley park, Pinxton, Ripley, Hartshay in Pentrich, Staveley, Shipley, Swanwick, Newhall, &c. The outcrop of the carboniferous limestone forms the lead district. At all events, the most productive lead mines are those which occur at or near the junction of the gritstone and the subjacent limestone. There are lead mines near Castleton, Cromford, Matlock, Monyash, Winster, Wirksworth, &c.—which see. The lead mines have been worked for many ages. This district was well known among the nations of antiquity for its lead mines, and it has been ascertained that they were worked by the Romans and probably by the Britons. The miners have from time immemorial possessed regulations and laws of their own. By these laws, or customs, any man or set of men might dig or search for veins of ore in the king's field (comprising the greater part of the mountainous limestone district of Derbyshire, including all Wirksworth wapentake and part of High Peak,) without the permission and without being in any way accountable to the owners or occupiers of the soil, for the damage committed by them. Orchards, gardens, and dwelling-houses, however, were excepted. The annual produce of lead from the mines was once estimated at between 5,000 and 6,000 tons; but the veins became poorer the deeper they were excavated, and their present produce is of less value than their past. The rake veins are now worked at very great depths. The produce of ore even in the same rake vein materially differs: in the course of one yard, the quantity may vary from 1,600 to 300 pounds. The mines are frequently held in numerous shares so small as forty-eighths, and even these in some mines are again subdivided into eighths and sixteenths. Other minerals are found in the mines, as calamine, transparent fluor spar, with silvery pyrites, crystals of calc, black jack, and the elastic bitumen, a mineral pitch, peculiar to this county. The grand depository of the singular and rare species of Galena, which explodes and rends the rocks with which it is mixed, was at one time Haycliff mine, near Eyam,—which see.

Ironstone is found in the coal stratum except at Chinley hills. The ironstone beds near Heanor, Alfreton, Chesterfield, and Staveley are the most valuable. The celebrated Alfreton or Butterley iron-works are numerous and extensive. The massive and magnificent castings executed here have rendered the iron-works of Derbyshire universally celebrated.—See BUTTERLEY. The fluor spar, for which Derbyshire is so noted, is obtained most abundantly near CASTLETON,—which see. It is found suspended round the sides and tops of the caverns in a variety of fantastic, beautiful forms. The fluor spar is fashioned into numerous ornamental articles for sale in several towns in the county. Beautiful calcareous marble, black and variously coloured, is found in various parts of the High and Low Peak. Petrosilex, chert, or china-stone, is found in most of the limestone districts, and is sent in considerable quantities to the Staffordshire potteries. Gypsum, alabaster, or plaster-stone, classed by geologists among the earths, is nowhere found in greater purity than in the red marl of this county. It is also sent to the potteries. The Derbyshire diamonds, which are small detached and perfect crystals, consisting of an hexagonal prism terminated by pyramids, are generally found imbedded in toadstone strata; where also small specimens of calcedony, jasper, terra-vert, and even onyxes, are sometimes found. There are in this county calcareous springs, which petrify wood or other substances immersed for a time in their waters. There are also numerous mineral or medicinal springs in the mountainous ridges and elsewhere, variously impregnated with salt, sulphur, or other mineral combinations.—See BUXTON, KEDLESTON, MATLOCK, QUARNDON, &c.

Manufactures.—Derby ranks fourth on the list of manufacturing counties, and its character has for years been rising in national estimation. It participates with Nottinghamshire in the manufacture of stockings; with Lancashire in that of cotton; and with

Yorkshire in those of iron and woollen cloth. The woollen manufacture was established here at a very early period; but in 1838 there were only 3 woollen mills, employing 35 hands, and 1 worsted mill, employing 71 hands. The woollen mills were in the parish of Glossop, and the worsted one at Ashover. There was then also 1 flax mill, employing 96 hands, at Darley dale. The modern cotton manufacture was established in this county by Sir Richard Arkwright in 1771.—See CROMWOLD. The parish of Glossop, situated amidst the most mountainous tracts of the High Peak, has become within the last half century by far the most important seat of the cotton manufacture in this county. Out of 85 cotton mills in Derbyshire, in 1838, employing 10,462 hands, 49 were at Glossop, employing 4,588 hands; the remaining 36 being distributed throughout no less than 23 different parishes in the county. In the hamlets connected with this parish a great number of manufactures and rising trades of various descriptions are scattered. Calico weaving is carried on in many of these and in other places in this county; as are muslin, cambric, carpet, and fustian weaving. There are also calico-printing, and bleaching and dyeing, establishments. The silk-manufacture was introduced near the town of DERBY,—which see,—in 1717. In 1838 there were 20 silk mills in this county, employing 3,226 hands. Of these, 17 were at Derby, employing 3,004 hands; one was at Chesterfield, employing 49 hands; one at Pentrich, employing 28 hands; and one at Tideswell, employing 145 hands. Derby, conjointly with Nottingham, is considered the centre of the silk hosiery trade, and silk ribbons are manufactured by steam-looms.—See DERBY. There are many very extensive manufactories connected with the iron trade in all its departments scattered throughout this county. Hats are made for exportation. There are some potteries; and porcelain and spar ornaments are manufactured at Derby. The chief articles exported for sale beyond the limits of the county, appear to be cotton twist and stockings, silk-thread and stockings, calicoes and muslins, frame-lace, hats; coals, iron, edge-tools and implements, nails, lead, red and white lead, building-stone and marble, lime, gypsum, calamine, chert, fluor spar, coppers, grind and mill-stones, fire-clay, bricks, slate-stone; and, among other articles of agricultural produce, wool and cheese. The import trade of the county may be considered as consisting chiefly of the raw material for its cotton and silk factories, of groceries and wines, and of other articles of foreign growth, with a few manufactured goods of the peculiar produce of other counties.

History and Antiquities.—The civil and military history of this county is of little importance. During the heptarchy, the tract of country now forming the county of Derby was included in the kingdom of Mercia. It is recorded that the Danes, when they invaded Mercia, fixed their head-quarters at Repandune (Repton). Derbyshire was recovered from them, by Ethelfleda, countess of Mercia, in 918; and falling again into their possession, was retaken by King Edmund, in 942. When William the Conqueror divided England between his followers, a large portion of this county was given by the Norman prince to his natural son, William Peveril, whose successors long maintained a large share of feudal authority over this portion of the kingdom; and the Peveril court of justice, which still exists, derived its judicial power from the grant made to the Norman baron by whose name it was denominated. From this period, the history of Derbyshire appears to be so blended with that of the kingdom in general as almost to defy separation.—See DERBY, &c. In 1786 Sir Richard Arkwright was knighted by George III., while presenting an address as sheriff of Derbyshire.

Its antiquities are not of the first order in point either of interest or extent. At times, however, various druidical, Roman, and Saxon, remains have been discovered. Druidical circles, tumuli, and Logan or rocking-stones, &c. There are no itinerary Roman stations of note; but the military way, which comes out of Warwickshire, leads to Derby. There are ruins of baronial castles erected in the middle ages; and of an ancient abbey or two; some fine specimens of Norman architecture in churches and mansions, &c. Coins of various eras, sometimes contained in urns, have been abundantly found, with battle-axes, pigs of lead inscribed with Roman characters, tridents, salvers, spurs, &c.; but as those which are entitled to notice are described in their respective places, we shall not here detain the reader by any specific account of the antiquities of Derby.

There is an ancient game, of somewhat obscure origin, but which is still played on Shrove-Tuesday and Ash-Wednesday in this county, and, though common to it with Yorkshire, Lancaster, and the adjoining counties, is still practised in Derbyshire with so much spirit and riotous enthusiasm, that it here calls for a passing notice. This game, which, in some part of their lives, has been played by almost every native of Derby, from the lowest to the highest, is the Derby Foot-ball. Enthusiasm is but a cold word for the attachment of the people, especially of the town of Derby, for this rather unintellectual though manly game. On Shrove-Tuesday, there is for it a passion irresistible, which bears down before it every obstacle, and defies the law, the magistracy, and the police:—"St. Peter's!"—"All Saints!"—are cries to the onset. Every shop is shut, all business at a stand, and doors and windows, entrance gates and gardens closed or locked and barricaded against the lawless foot-ball. Accidents occur in every annual encounter; and this rude trial of skill and strength is much censured by some, though by others it is highly commended.

DERBY,

A borough and market-town, the capital of the above county, in the hund. of Morleston and Lit-church, union of Derby; 29 miles north-west of Leicester, and 126 north-west of London, chiefly seated on the western bank of the river Derwent, which is navigable hence, by a very tortuous course, to the Trent, during which it forms several islands. It has been very little used, however, since navigable canals were cut to the Trent. The Markeaton brook flows through the town, and issues into the Derwent at its eastern suburbs. The high-road from London to Manchester passes through the town, which is also in communication with an extensive tract of canals, and constitutes the central and common station of various highly important railways, completed, in progress, or projected, the course of which,—both railways and canals,—we have fully described, in article DERBYSHIRE,—which see. Derby is finely situated in a level fertile plain, surrounded by beautiful scenery. Acres 1,660. Houses 4,842. A. P. £39,430. Pop. in 1801, 10,832; in 1831, 23,607; and in 1839, supposed to be about 30,000. It is an ancient town, and formerly had a castle. The streets of the older part are crooked and narrow, but the new streets are well built. There are six good stone bridges across the Markeaton brook, erected by a general subscription; and a modern and elegant bridge of three arches, has also been built over the Derwent, which, with the silk mills, the weirs, and the broad expanse of the river, forms a very pleasing prospect on entering the town from the Nottingham road, on the north-east side. There is a large open market-place in the centre of the town, where there is a spacious assembly-room, and a covered market, erected by the corporation. The town-hall is a handsome edifice of stone. The county-hall is a new and commodious modern building. The streets are remarkably clean and well-paved. Since 1831, very considerable additions have been made to the buildings of this busy and flourishing town.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Derby is divided into five parishes:—1st, All Saints', the living a perpetual curacy; gross income £80. 2d, St. Alkmund's, a vicarage, not in charge; gross income £235. Both of these parishes were formerly in the patronage of the mayor and corporation; but the advowsons have been sold, under the New Municipal act. 3d, St. Peter's, with Normanton, a discharged vicarage; rated at £8; gross income £148. Patron, in 1835, Charles Wright, Esq. 4th, St. Werburgh's, a discharged vicarage; rated at £5 12s. 8d.; gross income £318. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. St. John's, included in St. Werburgh's, is a perpetual curacy; gross income £142. 5th, St. Michael's, a vicarage; rated at £4 15s.; gross income £79. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. They are all in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield. There are 5 parish churches, and 3 chapels-of-ease, including St. John's. The church of All Saints, anciently, and still among the common people, called All Hallows, is a principal ornament to Derby. It was formerly collegiate, and had a master and 7 prebendaries. A house termed the college, which adjoins the church, was probably the residence of the collegians. The church has a tower of peculiar beauty, displaying the latest style of pointed architecture, and consisting of three stages, the lowest of which has a western door-way, with a niche on each side; the others, ornamented windows; and the whole is crowned with rich battlements, crockets, high pinnacles, and other decorations. There is a tradition that it was erected at the expense of "young men and young maids;" corroborated by the vestiges of an inscription on it to the same effect. To this tower has been added, from the design of Gibbs, the architect of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, London, a handsome modern church of classical architecture, with embellishments of the Roman Doric order. The interior is particularly light, elegant, and spacious. There are splendid monuments of the Devonshire, Shrewsbury, and Cavendish families, besides a number of others. Here too was interred John Lombe, who established in this town the first silk mill in England. He died in 1722. There is also a monument to Dr. Michael Hutchison, the curate, who obtained £3,249 by subscription, for rebuilding the church. So industrious was the Dr. in his successful solicitations, that he treated the waites who fiddled at his door with a tankard of ale, and wheedled a guinea out of them! Another monument is commemorative of Richard Croshaw, a poor nailer of Derby, who went to London in a leathern doublet to seek work;—became affluent;—was elected master of the Goldsmiths' Company;—and bequeathed £4,000 to the corporation of Derby for charitable purposes. Besides the parish churches, there are here an Independent church, formed in 1788; a Presbyterian, in 1698; a Baptist, in 1791; besides another Particular Baptist, and two General Baptist; a Unitarian; an Armenian; two Wesleyan Methodists, formed in 1776, and 1806; a Primitive Methodist; a New Methodist Connexion; a Roman Catholic, formed in 1813, and which has recently erected a very handsome and spacious church; a New Jerusalem church; and one for the Society of Friends. Several of these chapels are licensed under the new marriage act: also Friars-gate chapel. There are 24 daily schools in Derby, including 3 infant, 1 Lancasterian, 1 Bell's, and 2 National schools. Some of them are supported by endowment and subscription.

Charitable Institutions.—Some of these, and many of the numerous minor charities, are very ancient. The grammar-school, though not highly endowed, is supposed to be one of the most ancient endowments in England. It originally belonged to Derby abbey; but was granted to the corporation, in 1554, by Queen Mary. At the time of the inquiry into the state of charities, this school only contained 2 scholars; but it is said to be again getting into repute. The Duchess of Shrewsbury's hospital, the Devonshire alms-house, for 12 poor people, is also an ancient charity. It was founded in 1599, but the original alms-house was long ago destroyed, and another built, at the expense of the Duke of Devonshire, the architectural style of which would not disgrace a nobleman's park or pleasure-grounds. The total revenue derived from charities connected with this borough, at the time of the commissioners' inquiries, in 1827 and 1834, was nearly £2,000 per annum; besides large sums lent out on bonds, to industrious poor, in portions, according to the instructions of the donors. There were also other alms-houses; and Large's hospital, endowed with £199 16s. 6d. per annum, of the charity income, and possessed by 6 widows of clergymen: £809 13s. 10d. were applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1837, £5,369. A work-house has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Derby, capable of accommodating 350 persons. The Derby poor-law union comprehends 7 parishes, embracing an area of 4 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 25,484. On the south-east side of the town, there is a very large infirmary, erected in 1810. The ground space is a square, the side of which is about 100 feet, and the whole internal arrangement is very good. There are 5 large baths heated by steam, and into which the water is pumped by a steam-engine; the power of which is likewise applied in performing the more laborious domestic operations of the establishment.

Government.—Derby claims to be a borough by prescription. Charters were granted to it 6^o John, 25^o Henry VI., 1^o Edward VI., 9^o James I., 14^o Charles I., 16^o Charles II., 34^o Charles II. The corporation have, besides these charters, a grant of property from Queen Mary. Previous to the passing of the municipal act, the governing charter was the 34^o Charles II. By it the government was vested in a mayor, high-steward, recorder, 9 aldermen, 14 brethren, 14 common-councilmen, a town clerk, and other officers. It returned two members to parliament, previous to the passing of the reform act; a privilege which it still enjoys. The boundaries of the borough, which comprehended the parishes of All Saints, St. Werburgh, and St. Michael, with portions of the parishes of St. Peter and St. Alkmund, and thus included all that could by any plea be held as belonging to the town of Derby, remained unaltered. No electors had ever been polled for 30 years previous to 1832. The number of electors then registered under the reform act, was 1,384; in 1837, 1,731, of whom 474 were registered as freemen. The number actually polled in 1837, was 1,318, of whom 368 were freemen. The mayor is the returning officer. Derby is one of the polling-places, and the chief place of election, for the southern division of Derbyshire. It possesses a commission of the peace, and court of quarter-sessions. The municipal act of 1835 gave to the borough a magistracy consisting of a mayor, 12 aldermen, and 36 councillors, dividing it, at the same time, into six wards. The parliamentary boundaries were to be taken until altered by parliament. The income of the borough, in 1838, was £5,928 4s. 7d.; expenditure £5,733 16s. 1d. The town is watched by night. Formerly 20 watchmen were employed in this duty, but 10 became sufficient previous to 1835, when the watch-clock—an instrument first used by the late William Strutt, Esq., in his extensive manufactories—was applied to the service of the Derby public. This simple but ingenious invention, consists in a number of clocks judiciously stationed in various quarters of the town, which require the repeated presence of the watchmen, at fixed periods of the night, to prevent an inaccurate registration of their times of absence. The details of collateral arrangements, whereby the watchmen are completely checked, and the occupation of their time, if absent at the stated intervals, accounted for, are too minute to be noticed here. We shall only remark, that the clocks are all kept locked; and that each watchman has his own key, which only opens one check-clock, and that the plan was found to be effective and practically useful. The town was also appointed to be paved and lighted under the same act. Water is supplied by a company to the lower parts of the town; the higher parts are supplied by springs and wells. Petty-sessions are appointed for Tuesday and Friday in each week; they are, in fact, held daily. The borough sessions of the peace are held quarterly; the court of record every Tuesday in every second week. There is also a court of requests, for the recovery of debts under 40s., established by 6th George III., c. 20. The assizes for the county are held here, and the April sessions are held at Chesterfield, but the others in Derby. The county jail was erected here in 1824-6, at an expense of £63,335; the shire-hall and county-court in 1828-33, at an expense of £18,502. The county jail is in an open and airy situation, in the outskirts of the town. It is enclosed with a brick-wall 25 feet in height, flanked with towers loop-holed for musketry. The exterior front and gate present a happy appropriation of the Grecian Doric, with columns and entablature. The interior of the prison consists of a central building—the chapel and keeper's house—with 7 radiating wings, of two stories each, connected with it by iron bridges. The gaol comprises 22 wards, 22 day-rooms, 167 cells, and 20 airing-yards. The male prisoners are put to hard labour upon the tread-wheel, or employed in picking wool. By special agreement the borough-prisoners are now confined in the county-gaol. There were, in both, in 1836, 507 prisoners.

Manufactures.—Situated on the banks of the Derwent, Derby constituted a spot eminently favourable for the early institution and prosperity of manufactures; and the waters of that fine river were rendered useful here, by the erection of large mills for the manufacture of silk, long before the vast spread of steam-power. Of these branches of manufacture, the chief here is silk; and Derby, with Nottingham, is now the centre of the silk hosiery trade. This machinery manufacture,—for an account of the origin of which see Nottinghamshire,—was introduced here sometime in the eighteenth century.* It acquired additional celebrity, about the year 1758, by the invention termed "the Derby rib," for working ribbed stockings by machinery. Jedediah Strutt, the ingenious and celebrated inventor, who first appreciated the importance of Sir Richard Arkwright's inventions, and entered into partnership with him, settled about that time at Derby; and, under a patent, which was granted him for 14 years, carried on the manufacture of ribbed stockings till 1797; during which time the patent right was thrice unsuccessfully disputed; first with the hosiers of Derby, and afterwards with those of Nottingham. This improvement has suggested others; and from it has arisen not only the making of open work mittens, brocade, and various other fancy articles; but another important branch of the Derby manufacture,—though Nottingham is its centre,—namely, the working of lace by machinery; first, by the stocking frame, adapted in 1777, which was superseded by the point net machine; subsequently further improved; and ultimately superseded by the bobbin-net machine, introduced by Messrs. Boden and Morley in 1824. In Derby, some years ago, there were 133 lace-machines at work, and the quantity produced was immense. There are at present (1840) about 200 machines. Silk was used as the principal material in hosiery soon after the invention of the stocking frame; but it was not until the beginning of the eighteenth century that the manufacture of that elegant article, upon an extensive scale, by machinery, was introduced into England. The Italians had previously possessed the art of throwing silk by machinery, and the French excelled in the fabric of piece-goods, but all attempts to rival these productions here were unavailable, till an enterprising mechanic, named Lombe, proceeded, in 1715, to Italy; clandestinely, and at great personal risk, investigated the whole process; and returned, in 1717, with plans and models, and with two Italian workmen. He immediately came to Derby, rented a long swampy island in the Derwent, and erected "the silk mill," which was long esteemed a masterpiece of mechanical skill. In 1718, he obtained a 14 years' patent; but dying shortly afterwards, from poison, as it was suspected, administered by an Italian sent to England for the purpose; his cousin, Thomas Lombe, continued the silk manufacture here till 1753, about which time 300 hands are said to have been employed. The patent then expired; and, on applying for a renewal, he was knighted; and, in lieu of it, a remunerating grant of £14,000 was voted to him, and a model of the works was ordered to be deposited in the tower of London. Since this original mill was erected, many others, on improved plans, have been added, and even a government ordnance dépôt, built in 1803, for 15,000 stand of arms and 12,000 barrels of powder, has been converted into a silk mill. The silk manufacture of Derby has by no means been confined to hosiery. Even in the original mill, all operations were performed from winding the raw silk to organizing or preparing it for the weavers. The weaving of piece-goods in silk was introduced about 20 years ago, and 10 years thereafter, saracnets, gros-de-naples, and other rich silks, were manufactured in a style equal to that of the Spitalfield weavers. The weaving of narrow piece-goods was introduced in 1823, when ferrets, galloons, doubles, &c., were manufactured by steam-power. Ribbon hand-loom weaving was also carried on; but now the steam-loom ribbon manufacture has not only put an end to this branch of the hand-loom weaving at Derby, but is entering into formidable rivalry even with that great monopolizer of the hand-loom ribbon manufacture, COVENTRY: which see. In 1839 there were 238 steam ribbob-looms at work here, and the number was increasing. The broad-silk fabrics then produced by hand-loom weavers were chiefly gros-de-naples, pain velvets, plain and figured satins, and plain sarcenets, &c. The total number of looms thus employed in Derby and its dependencies, in 1839, was about 344, and the trade was still extending. Thus, together with the hosiery trade, which employs a large portion of the population, and the throwing mills, &c., the silk weaving at Derby, whether by hand or steam, is a branch of the general silk manufacture. In 1838 there were here 17 silk-mills, employing 3,004 hands; also 2 cotton-mills, employing 643 hands; and a tape-mill, employing about 200 hands. At this date (June, 1840,) there are no longer any cotton-mills here; nor are the figured pieces for waistcoats, which were manufactured in these establishments, any longer made here. Messrs. W. Y. and J. Strutt, in 1793, erected here the first fire-proof mill ever built in England: see also CROMFORD, DERBYSHIRE, LANCASTIRE, &c.

* The stocking-frames are, of course, adapted either for the silk, cotton, or worsted material. In Derbyshire, however, very few, if any, worsted stockings are made on the frame; but some years ago, there were not less than 6,500 hands employed in the manufacture of cotton stockings.

The porcelain or china manufacture of Derby has placed the reputation of England on a level with that of Saxony, or France, for the production of this elegant article; and beyond it, for the finish and taste of the execution. This manufacture was introduced here about the year 1750; and the fineness of the material, and the brilliancy of the colouring, have since been brought to great perfection. The body of this elegant ware is fine clay, combined with fluxes, and is chiefly brought from Cornwall. The best kind is completely fusible. The proper materials being reduced to a liquid of the consistence of thick cream, a sufficient quantity of this is poured into moulds made of plaster of Paris. The water contained in the mixture is quickly absorbed by the plaster, and a crust left, sufficiently hard and tenacious to be turned out of the mould. This is then dried and trimmed, and joined to the other parts of the figure, whatever it may be; for all the patterns are composed of various pieces, formed in separate moulds. The article is then sent to the kiln, from whence it comes out white as snow. The "biscuit figures" are peculiar to this manufacture, and are in high estimation in almost every part of the globe. The urns, vases, and ewers produced in this manufactory are from classical designs, and are adorned with landscapes, portraits, and figures, by some very superior artists. The blue and gold colours were first perfected; then green, in which alone this porcelain was surpassed by foreigners, was brought to the highest degree of delicacy and lustre. Mineral colours only are used, and the porcelain is finished with a rich enamel. The gold is reduced to a liquid, and re-assumes the solid form in the fire. It is afterwards brilliantly polished.

The spar-works at Derby are gratifying objects of curiosity, taste, and science. The fluor spar, or, as it is termed, blue john, is an elegant natural production. The only mountain where it can be obtained in sufficient abundance and quality for the purposes of manufacture, is situated westward of Castleton, between Mam Tor and the eminences that compose the Long Cliff. Its price has been £40 per ton. Some of the pieces of fluor are a foot in thickness, and have four or five different veins, but such large pieces are very rare. In general they are only about three or four inches in thickness. The deep violet is the most common kind, but in some pieces a fine yellow tint prevails, and in others a pale-rose colour. The acid obtained from fluor spar is more powerfully corrosive than any other, and is used in engraving upon glass. The natural colours of the spar are greatly affected by heat. At the spar manufactories in Derby, this elegant material is worked into a variety of ornamental and useful articles, such as vases, cups, necklaces, ear-drops, &c. Besides these interesting manufactures, there are extensive iron-foundries at Derby eminent for their ponderous castings, as well as for the elegance of their domestic manufactures, and the superiority of their architectural works and ornamental vases. Gothic church window frames and columns have been cast, which are esteemed perfect models in the art, and proofs of its applicability to the loftiest designs in architecture. The beautiful temple in the Alton Tower gardens was cast for the Earl of Shrewsbury at the Derwent foundry in Derby. There are also several very extensive iron and tin forges here, where malleable iron bars, sheet-plates, tin-plates, &c., are formed and manufactured into steam-boilers, gasometers, steam-kitchens, &c., &c. The iron is procured, alternating with coal, at a short distance from the town. There are also lead-works, to which the material is brought from the Peak hills; and various other branches of manufacture and trade are carried on; including soap-making, to the extent of 279,912 lbs. of hard soap in 1839-40. Here are also establishments for dyeing, bleaching, watch-making, jewellery, printing; besides colour, plaster and cement manufacture, and splendid marble and alabaster works; all of which are conducted on a scale more or less extensive at Derby. One of the best proofs of its progressive prosperity is to be found in the fact that the poor rates were 20 per cent. less in 1835 than they were in 1811, though the population had greatly increased. There is besides a steady demand for labour, not occasioned by a mere temporary stimulus; but by causes which are likely to continue in operation. Nevertheless, in 1833-4, Derby became the field of one of the most protracted and severe contests between masters and men that has ever been witnessed in a manufacturing community. Trade was good; the hands were generally employed; no question of wages had been raised on either side; and the difference was one involving a principle of vital importance, which excited commensurate interest; and which was considered not so much a local as a national struggle. The silk-weavers and other operatives had enrolled themselves by thousands in the trades' unions, the moral purposes of which seemed at least equivocal. The masters determined to resist and put an end to these, and 20 of the principal Derby masters, on 25th November, 1833, issued a declaration, "that each of them will immediately cease to employ every man who is a member of the trades' union." On the very next day, the operatives struck work, and most of the mills stood still. 2,400 operatives were said to have turned out. Up to 7th May, 1834, when the turn-out terminated, they were supported by subscriptions from other trades' unions to the amount of £4,783 15s.; but the hands who returned to work were emaciated, feeble, and in a deplorable condition. Hundreds had not the means of obtaining a morsel of bread, and some even died from sheer starvation; yet, although "picketing," or placing turn-outs to prevent the introduction of fresh hands, was, as usual, practised, this turn-out was attended with fewer breaches of the peace than almost any on record. During its progress 21 general strikes occurred: the very washerwomen, in London, struck work!

Derby was formerly a great wool mart. Fairs are held on January 25th, and March 21st, and 22d, for cheese; Friday in Easter week, Friday after May-day, Friday in Whitsun-week, St. James's, July 25th, and Friday before Old Michaelmas, for horned cattle; and September 27th, 28th, and 29th, for cheese. The market-day is Friday. The Derby and Derbyshire banking company have their head establishment here. It was formed in January 1834.

History and Antiquities.—The origin of Derby is unknown. It was called Northworthige by the Saxons, and Deoraby by the Danes. It is supposed to have been a settlement of the Britons. That it was occupied by the Romans there can be little doubt. It has been held to have arisen on the ruins of the Roman station Derventio; but its earliest period of historical notice is in the 9th century. Among the few historical events of importance recorded in its annals, may be enumerated its alternate possession by the Danes and the Saxons. At the Conquest, it was given, together with a prodigious rent-roll, to William Peverell, illegitimate son of William. Henry I. granted it to the Earl of Chester, and made it a corporate town. By an act of Richard I. no Jew was allowed to reside in Derby. In the reign of Edward III. the corporation was deprived of its liberties, and summoned into one of the king's courts to answer, "By what authority they demanded toll, yet paid none? Why they claimed the exclusive privilege of dyeing cloth, and prohibiting it to be dyed in every other place, within ten leagues, except Nottingham?" The plague several times visited Derby; and, in 1592, some hundreds fell victims to its ravages. It is said never to have infected the premises of a tobaccoist, a tanner, or a shoemaker. One of the most important events recorded in the annals of the last century, is connected with the Scottish rebellion of 1745, when Derby became distinguished as the farthest place in England reached by the army of Charles James Stuart, the Pretender, who, in Exeter house, held the council of war which determined the abandonment of his project. Some vestiges of a nunnery of Benedictines, founded in 1160, still remain at Nun's green, on the Markeaton-brook; and there was a Dominican priory in the Friar-gate, and a monastery, — St. Helen's, — near Bridge-gate, with other ancient religious edifices; but few or no vestiges of them remain. George Fox, the founder of the Society of Friends, was imprisoned here for nearly a year; and, in 1650, "Justice Bennet of Derby," says he, "was the first that called us Quakers, because I bid him tremble at the word of the Lord." Dr. Erasmus Darwin spent the last 20 years of his life here, where he composed most of his works. Other distinguished individuals have lived in Derby.

DERBY (LITTLE). See DARLEY-ABBEY.

DERBY-HAVEN, a small village in the parish of St. Malow, Isle of Man; 2 miles east by north of Castleton. It is noted for the excellence of its harbour, which is sought as a place of safety in stormy weather. In a small island, at the mouth of the haven, a fort was erected, in 1667, by an Earl of Derby.

DERBY-HILLS, an extra-parochial district in the hund. of Repton and Gresley, county of Derby; 9 miles south of Derby. Acres 270. Houses 13. A. P. £354. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 80. Poor rates, in 1837, £61.

DERBY (WEST), a chapelry in the parish of Walton-on-the-Hill, county of Lancaster; 4½ miles west of Prescott. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; valued at £43 2s. 8d.; gross income £166. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £418 15s. Patron, the rector of Walton. There are here 2 day and Sunday National, and 10 daily, schools, one of which is endowed with £34 per annum and a cottage, for which 72 children receive instruction. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,716. Acres 6,500. Houses 1,634. A. P. £37,012. Pop., in 1801, 2,636; in 1831, 9,613.

DEREHAM (EAST), or MARKET-DEREHAM, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Mitford, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 17 miles west-north-west of Norwich, and 7 south-east of Litcham, pleasantly situated on the east side of a rivulet between 2 branches of the Wensum. It includes the hamlet of Dillington, besides other small hamlets. Acres 5,550. Houses 791. A. P. £9,184. Pop., in 1801, 2,541; in 1831, 3,946. Dereham is the most central town, and one of the handsomest in Norfolk. In 1581, and again in 1679, it was nearly destroyed by fire. In 1646 it suffered severely by the plague. The numerous gardens and orchards in the vicinity are so prolific, that Dereham has been named the "Garden of Norfolk." Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Hoe, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £17 3s. 4½d.; gross income £480. There is also a sinecure rectory; rated at £41 3s. 1½d; gross income £710. Patron of the former, the rector of East Dereham; of the latter, the Rev. J. H. Wollaston. The church was originally the conventual church of a nunnery founded about 750 by Withberga, a natural daughter of the East Anglian king, Anna. Among the monuments in this church, is a tablet of white marble to the memory of Cowper the poet, who, for the last nine years of his life, resided in this town, and was buried in the church in 1800. Edmond Bonnar was rector of this parish before his translation to the see of London. Here is an independent chapel, licensed under the new marriage act. A National school, for children of both sexes, is supported partly by endowment and partly by subscription. There are also 8 daily schools. Annual income of charities, £147. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,232. The worsted trade was formerly carried on here. There was recently an iron foundry, and an extensive brewery and gas works were in course of formation. A horticultural society was instituted in 1835. The market-day is on Friday. Fairs are held here for cattle, sheep, and toys, on the Thursday and Friday before Old Midsummer, and on the Thursday and Friday before New Michaelmas. There is a branch of the East of England bank here.

DEREHAM (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Clackclose, union of Downham, county of Norfolk; 3 miles west-north-west of Stoke-Ferry. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich, not in charge; returned at £56 12s. 6d.; gross income £74. Patron, in 1835, G. Jenyns, Esq. This parish possesses 3 daily schools. Annual income of charities £75. Poor rates, in 1837, £341. "Hubert, A. D. 1188, then dean of York, afterwards bishop of Salisbury, and at last archbishop of Canterbury, built at this, the place of his nativity, an abbey for Premonstratensian canons from Welbeck to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. It was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £223 per annum." — Tanner. The site was granted to the ancient family of Dereham. The old gate-house, an elegant entrance tower, still exists. Acres 3,440. Houses 75. A. P. £3,244. Pop., in 1801, 449; in 1831, 496.

DERITEND, a chapelry in the parish of Aston and Birmingham, county of Warwick; continuous with the long street which constituted Birmingham prior to the restoration of Charles II., and intersected by the Birmingham railway and canal. Living, a curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Aston. This chapelry is now included within the boundaries of Birmingham. Here is a Baptist chapel, licensed under the new marriage act.

DERSINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Freebridge-Lynn, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 4 miles north-north-east of Castle-Rising. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 6s. 8d., returned at £145; gross income £155. Patron, in 1835, D. Hoste, Esq. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Charities £23 per annum. Acres 3,340. Houses 83. A. P. £3,367. Pop., in 1801, 457; in 1831, 606. Poor rates, in 1837, £379.

* The art of dyeing woollen cloth was supposed to be practised here with peculiar advantage, in consequence of the rare adaptation of the water of the Derwent to the purpose.

DERWEN, a parish in the hund. and union of Ruthin, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 6 miles south-south by west of Ruthin. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Bangor and province of Canterbury; rated at £10 15s.; gross income £420. Patron, the bishop of Bangor. There are here a Sunday and daily National, and a daily, school. Charities £12 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £424. Houses 109. A. P. £2,309. Pop., in 1801, 443; in 1831, 522.

DERWENT (THE), a river in Cumberland, which has its origin among the monstrous crags at the head of Borrowdale, and, having poured its foaming stream over various precipices, has its current enlarged, by several sister branches, at the bottom of that romantic chasm, through which it is dashed from rock to rock, till it flows into Keswick lake or DERWENT-WATER,—which see. At the foot of this beautiful lake, it unites with the Greta; and afterwards meanders through an extensive tract of meadow land, till it reaches Bassenthwaite-water,—see BASSENTHWAITE,—through which it pursues its silent course, and at length emerges at Ouxbridge. Again, confined in a rocky channel, it assumes a western direction, and flows rapidly, through a narrow vale, to Cockermouth, where it is joined by the waters of the Cocker, and then pursues its course, though a more open country, to the sea, at Workington. The scenery along the whole extent of this river is exceedingly varied and interesting. It is perhaps the most limpid and colourless stream in England.

DERWENT-WATER, or KESWICK LAKE, as it is termed, from its vicinity to the town of KESWICK, on its border,—which see, with SKIDDAW,—is one of the celebrated Cumberland lakes, formed by the river Derwent. It is upwards of three miles in length, and a mile and a half in breadth,—which is wider than any other of the lakes. It is adorned by several considerable islands, richly clothed with wood, of which the principal are, Lord's Island, Vicar's Island, St. Herbert's Island, and Rampsholm. From the extent of the plain in which it lies, and the several valleys diverging from it, a much greater number of mountains are seen from its surface than from any other lake; and their rocky, irregular, and tumultuous character gives to the scenery of Derwent-water a deep and wild sublimity, distinct from either the solemn grandeur of Ulls-water or the soft beauties of Windermere. At the south-east corner of the lake there is the phenomenon of a floating island, which rises occasionally above the surface of the lake; but, being attached to the bottom by its sides, does not change its place, except by rising and sinking. The extent of this island is sometimes half an acre. It seldom rises to the surface. The most probable conjecture as to the cause of the phenomenon is, that the vegetable substances upon it, in the process of decomposition, form a large quantity of gas, which pervades the spongy substance of the island, and makes it so light as to rise to the surface. Heat promotes the accumulation of gas, and when the gas is carried off by exposure to the atmosphere, or condensed by cold air, the island sinks. When the surface is pierced, gas issues forth, which has been collected, and found to consist of equal parts of carbonated hydrogen and azotic gases, with about six per cent. of carbonic acid. It has been supposed that the water of a small cascade, name Cat-gill, which tumbles down the rocks near this place, and which then finds a subterraneous passage into the lake, may have been the cause of buoying up the island; but this supposition is generally disallowed by men of science. The waters of this lake are sometimes agitated in an extraordinary manner, though without any apparent cause; and, in a perfectly calm day, are seen to swell in high waves, having a progressive motion from west to east. This phenomenon has received the name of bottom wind. The swell sometimes continues for an hour or two only: at other times, it lasts almost all the day, even when scarcely a breath of air is felt in the vicinity of the lake. Near the north-east corner, is the celebrated fall or cascade of Lowdore,—see CUMBERLAND. In this vicinity, an extremely fine echo is heard. On the discharge of a cannon, which is placed here for the purpose, the reverberation is awful. It is hurled from Borrowdale fells, back to the opposite heights of Causey Pike and Catbells, whence it roars, around the mountainous amphitheatre, like a fierce continued fire, from hostile cannons planted on its heights. The solemn stillness, which immediately succeeds, is no less awful and impressive. Derwent lake, by moon or star-light, with the jaws of Borrowdale, and other wild and rugged mountain scenery around it, is more interesting still, and solemn, than it is by day-light.

DERWENT (THE). See DERBYSHIRE.

DERWENT, a chapelry to the parish of Hathersage, county of Derby; 12 miles west-west by north of Sheffield, on the eastern bank of the Derwent. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; gross income £90. Patron, in 1835, Lord Denman. There is here a daily school, partly supported by endowment. Acreage with the parish. Houses 26. A. P. £828. Pop., in 1801, 135; in 1831, 153. Poor rates, in 1837, £60.

DERWENT VALE. See DERBYSHIRE—Railways—&c.

DERWENT (THE). See DURHAM.

DERWENT (THE), a river of Surrey, falling into the Thames. In Gale's edition of Nennius it is called the Deragwent.

DERWENT (THE). See YORKSHIRE.

DESBOROUGH HUNDRED, in the south-western extremity of the county of Buckingham. Area 52,370 acres. Houses 3,953. Pop., in 1831, 20,794.

DESBOROUGH, a parish in the hund. of Rothwell, union of Kettering, county of Northampton; 5½ miles north-west of Kettering. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8, returned at £113 16s.; gross income £156. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. M. J. Cotton. There are in this parish a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1800; and a Sunday and daily National, and 5 daily schools. Here a number of weavers are employed in making silk-plush for hats. Acres 2,410. Houses 229. A. P. £3,363. Pop., in 1801, 831; in 1831, 988. Poor rates, in 1837, £326.

DESFORD, a parish in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, union of Market Bosworth, county of Leicester; 5 miles east of Market Bosworth; close on the Leicester and Swamington railway. It includes the hamlet of Barron's Park. Living, a discharged rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8 9s. 7d.; gross income £193. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. This parish possesses a day and Sunday National, and 6 daily schools. Acres 3,830. Houses 195. A. P. £3,618. Pop., in 1801, 601; in 1831, 971. Poor rates, in 1837, £404.

DESUNNY (THE), a river in Merionethshire, falling into the Irish sea near Scarborough point.

DETTET (THE), a river in Cardiganshire, falling into the Tivy near Llandypill.

DETCCHANT, a township in Belford parish, Northumberland; 2 miles north-north-west of Belford; on the post-road from Berwick-upon-Tweed to Alnwick. Houses 31. A. P. £2,993. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831, 180. Poor rates, in 1837, £73.

DETHWICK-LEA AND HOLLOWAY, a hamlet and chapelry in the parish of Ashover, county of Derby; 2 miles south-east by east of Matlock. Living, a perpetual curacy not in charge, returned at £58; gross income £93. Patron, in 1835, T. Hallows, Esq. There is here a daily school. Acres 2,110. Houses 137. A. P. £1,761. Pop., in 1801, 509; in 1831, 675. Poor rates, in 1837, £115.

DEUXHILL, a parish, locally situated in the hund. of Stottesden, but within the liberty of Wenlock borough, union of Bridgenorth, county of Salop; 4 miles south-south-west of Bridgenorth; on a branch of the Severn. Living, a discharged rectory annexed to that of Chetton. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 470. Houses 9. A. P. £505. Pop., in 1801, 30; in 1831, 55. Poor rates, in 1837, £10.

DEVEREL BARROW is situated on a small elevated piece of ground, about 8 miles east of Dorchester, near the Great Western road. It was opened in November, 1825, and found to contain some curious relics, which were deposited in the museum of the Bristol Literary Institution. Its base is about 55 feet in diameter, and its original height 12 feet above the surrounding level. After removing a heterogeneous mass of flints, charcoal, and broken pottery, a compact bed or pavement of flints, firmly wedged together, was found constituting a floor to the barrow on the natural surface of the earth, and presenting a singular spectacle. On this level compact floor were arranged 20 large stones of various irregular shapes and sizes. They were placed in a semicircular form. On removing some of the stones, and digging down to a lower level, a rude earthen vase or urn was found beneath each stone, placed in a cist or case cut in the solid chalk, and covered by the stone. Each of the vases contained the ashes of a human being mixed with charcoal, which also constituted a great part of the substance of the barrow, and was probably the result of the funeral piles. Besides these, there were found nine burned skeletons not in vases. Five were placed in graves cut in the chalk, but not covered by stones; and four were simply collected in a heap on the floor of the tumulus, making in all 30 specimens of human remains. Near one of the vases two rude cups were found,—the one containing a very rich earth, the other the bones of a bird. The pottery of these vessels was black, friable, and rough, containing white coarse sand, and even small sea-shells. The makers of it were unacquainted with the art of augmenting its hardness and durability by the action of heat; for it was only partially baked in some places by the fire of the funeral piles, and, without due care, crumbled to pieces on being touched.

DEVEREUX (St.), with DIDLEY, a parish in the hund. of Webtree, union of Dore, county of Hereford; 7 miles south-south-west of Hereford; intersected by the Abergavenny and Hereford railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £6 15s. 7½d.; gross income £186. Patron, in 1835, Edward B. Clive, Esq. Acres 1,600. Houses 45. A. P. £1,063. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 201. Poor rates, in 1837, £80.

DEVERHILL-LONGBRIDGE, a parish in the hund. of South Damerham, union of Warminster, county of Wilts; 3 miles south of Warminster. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Deverhill-Monckton, in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £12; gross income £593. Patron, the Marquess of Bath. There is an endowed almshouse in this parish. Acres 4,230. Houses 281. A. P. £3,921. Pop., in 1801, 1,228; in 1831, 1,307. Poor rates, in 1837, £740.

DEVERHILL-MONCKTON, a parish in the hund. of South Damerham, union of Mere, county of Wilts; 4½ miles north-east by north of Mere. Living, a curacy to the above vicarage. Acres 1,320. Houses 35. A. P. £1,174. Pop., in 1801, 168; in 1831, 204. Poor rates, in 1837, £119.

DEVIL'S CAVE. See CASTLETON, Derby.

DEVIL'S-DYKE (THE), a rising ground about 5 miles north-west of Brighton, where an immense chasm appears, which vulgar tradition affirms was scooped out by the great author of evil, who, beholding with envy the numerous churches in the wold of Sussex, determined to form a channel and breach at this place so as to admit the sea, and inundate the whole tract. This notable plan, according to a writer in the 'Beauties of England and Wales,' was disconcerted by an old woman and a farthing candle!

DEVIZES, or colloquially THE VISE, a large borough and market-town, considered to have separate jurisdiction; locally in the hund. of Potterne and Cannings, union of Devizes, county of Wilts; 22½ miles north-west by north of Salisbury, and 89 west by south of London; on an eminence almost in the centre of the county, of which it is the secondary capital. The principal road from London to Bath passes through it, and it is close on the Kennet and Avon canal, over which there are several bridges at the different approaches to the town. This canal traverses the southern districts of England, is joined by the Wilts and Berks canal in its course, and meets the Great Western railway at its western terminus at Melksham and Bath, and at its eastern terminus at Reading, where it also joins the Thames. The Devizes and Melksham Great Western Union railway, the name of which denotes its purpose, was projected in 1836-7. The parliamentary limits of Devizes, which the act fixes as its future municipal boundary, also comprise the parishes of St. John the Baptist and the blessed Virgin Mary, together with a part of the parish of Rowde and of the chapelry of St. James, with a tything of the parish of Bishops Cannings. The extreme length of the borough from north-east to south-west is about 2 miles; its greatest breadth about 1 mile. In 1831 it contained 1,200 houses. Pop. 6,367. Assessed taxes £2,259 19s. 3d. The old borough contained 660 acres, and 810 houses. A. P. £3,209. Pop., in 1801, 3,547; in 1831, 4,562. The town consists of several streets branching from a spacious market-place, and a semicircular one or crescent on the north side towards the canal, uniting with the others at its centre and extremities. There are also branch streets. It is well-paved, and lighted with gas; and having hitherto been a great thoroughfare between London and Bath, it contains some excellent inns, which, with many of the shops and private houses, are spacious and handsome buildings. The town-hall is a handsome modern building; and the new county bridewell, west of the town, is a large substantial structure.

The livings of the parishes of St. John the Baptist, and the Virgin Mary, form a united rectory, not in charge, in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; gross income £518; in the patronage of the Lord-chancellor. The church of St. John displays some interesting specimens of Anglo-Norman architecture, and contains several monuments of the families of Heathcote and Sutton. At the eastern extremity of the town, on the green, is St. James', a chapel-of-ease to the parish of Bishop Cannings. It was rebuilt, with the exception of the tower, in 1832. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1776; a Baptist, during the 16th century; a Presbyterian, in 1670; and a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1818. The Northgate-street chapel is licensed under the new marriage act. There are six daily schools, a school connected with the British and Foreign school society, attended by 426 scholars, and 3 Sunday and daily National schools. One school is partly supported by endowments, amounting to nearly £50 per annum; and another is endowed with £18 per annum, for clothing and educating a few poor children. There are also endowed alms-houses. Charities about £250 per annum. Those under the influence of the corporation were vested in trustees on 24th December, 1836. Income of these in 1837-8, chiefly connected with the alms-houses, £155 7s.; but as many difficulties had been met with, the affairs were not then put in order. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,164.—A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners, for the union of Devizes, capable of accommodating 400 persons. The Devizes poor-law union comprehends 28 parishes, embracing an area of 87 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 20,638. Average annual expenditure on poor of this district, during three years preceding formation of union, £16,004. Expenditure, in 1838, £10,755.

It appears that Devizes is a borough by prescription. The earliest grant is a charter of the Empress Matilda, without date, granting to her burgesses 'De Divisis,' freedom of toll throughout England and the parts of the sea. This grant was confirmed, successively, by John and Henry III. The governing charters were 3^o James I. and 15^o Charles I. The latter confirms the former where not specifically altered. By these a mayor, recorder, 10 magistrates, and 24 common councilmen were appointed, and a court of record for debts or damages, not exceeding £40, was appointed to be held every Friday, with the mayor, recorder, and one of the councillors, as judges; and as justices, also, in a court of quarter-sessions, which, by the charter of Charles, was appointed to have jurisdiction to try misdemeanors or petty larceny. After the statute, assimilating grand and petty larceny was passed, the borough justices in quarter-sessions continued to try such felonies as amounted to petty larceny before that act was passed. The jurisdiction of this court became exclusive,—the erroneous idea prevailing that the county-sessions had no jurisdiction over such offenders. Among the many advantages derived from its charters, the common councilmen had the liberty of making what number of burgesses they pleased, all of whom had the privilege of voting for members of parliament. These, two in number, were returned so early as the time of Edward I. The greatest number of electors polled within 30 years, previous to the passing of the reform act, was 30, in 1830. Under that act, the privilege of returning two members has been continued. The mayor is the returning officer. The number of electors registered, in 1837, was 17 freemen, 249 £10 householders,—in all 266. Devizes is a polling-place, and the principal place of election, for the members of the northern division of the county. Under the municipal act, the borough was divided into two wards, the boundaries, as above stated, having been fixed by the reform act; and 6 aldermen and 18 councillors were appointed,—the style of the corporation being the 'mayor and burgesses of the borough of Devizes.' Income of the borough, in 1837, £445 14s. 10d. £122 17s. 9d. of which arose, in that year, from the sale of borough property. The town is watched, paved, and lighted, under a local act, Geo. IV., cap. 102; but no power was given by this act to bring water into the town. The expenditure on police, in 1837, was £159 17s. 8d.; and on special constables at election, £73 13s. 7d. The new town-council, in 1838, had paid off a principal sum of £1,415, borrowed by the late corporation. A commission of the peace has been granted to this borough. The winter quarter-sessions, and the summer-assizes, for the county are held here. The house of correction is surrounded by two external walls, and tolerably secure. It contains 210 cells, 11 wards, and 11 airing-courts. The prisoners have each a separate cell, which they occupy by night and by day. There is a tread-mill for grinding corn, at which 60 prisoners are employed. The profits arising from such labour are appropriated to the county. In 1835 there were 791 prisoners.

1.

The town appears wealthy and prosperous. The chief manufacture is silk-throwing; crape-weaving is now extinct. There is a silk-mill here, which, in 1838, employed 53 hands. Snuff and tobacco are also extensively manufactured. The woollen manufacture has been carried on; but, in 1838, there were no returns of woollen mills or factories employed. There are rather extensive breweries, and one of the largest corn-markets in England is held here. The market is on Thursday. Fairs are held on February 14th, Holy Thursday, and April 20th, for cattle, horses, and sheep; July 5th for wool, October 2d for sheep, and October 20th for sheep and hogs. There are branches of the Wilts and Dorset, and the North Wilts, banking companies here.

Devizes is a place of great antiquity, but its origin is uncertain. Roman coins and other antiquities, however, have been found in the vicinity. Early writers give it the name of De Vies, and Divisio, from its having been divided, in the reign of Henry I., between the king and Roger, the celebrated bishop of Salisbury, who erected a strong castle here, which Stephen attempted to wrest from the bishop. This castle was dismantled, probably in the reign of Edward I.; but it is doubtful. We read of no governor subsequently to the year 1321; but in Leycester's 'Civil Warres of England,' we find that "the town and castle of Devizes were taken on the 22d of September," in 1645. It was ultimately demolished.* The vicinity of Devizes was the scene of the most signal defeat sustained by the parliament during the whole course of the war.

DEVOCK WATER, one of the Cumberland lakes, situated among the hills; about 5 miles south-east of Ravenglass, south of Dale Garth Hall, near the southern or English Esk, Allerdale ward above Derwent; on ground of considerable elevation. It occupies about 300 acres. The immediate boundaries of this lake are humble; but the high mountains of Eskdale, Wastdale, and Conistoun, are in view from its western side. It is formed by the sources of a tributary to the Esk, and has some of the finest trout for flavour, size, and colour, known in the north. In the midst of it there is an island.

DEVONPORT,

Till within these few years called PLYMOUTH-DOCK, is a town and celebrated naval arsenal, in the parish of Stoke-Damerel, hund. of Roborough, county of Devon, about 2 miles west-north-west of Plymouth,

* "The town of Vies," says Leland, "standeth on a ground somewhat clyvinge, and most occupied by clothiers. The beauty of it is all in one strete. The market is very celebrat. There is a castell on the south-west side of the towne stately advanced upon a highe ground, defended partly by nature, and in a circular sweep, at the mouth of the river Tamar, which here forms a magnificent basin, called the Bay of Hamouze, nearly 4 miles in length, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ in breadth. It stands very high, and is almost surrounded with fortifications. It is a regular and well-built modern town. The streets intersect each other at right angles, and are paved with limestone-marble, which abounds in the vicinity, and which, having been considerably polished by the feet of passengers and the action of the weather, has a very beautiful appearance when washed by a shower. The town is lighted at night with gas from the station at Mill Bay, whence also Stonehouse and Plymouth are supplied. Devonport and Stonehouse are connected by a neat stone-bridge of one arch. On the south there is a ferry to Mount Edgecumbe, and on the north-west one to Torpoint. Morice-town, inhabited chiefly by those who find employment in the docks, the ships lying in ordinary, &c., has been erected north of Devonport, beyond the lines with which the town and arsenal are surrounded. 'The King's boundary wall,' constitutes a line of fortification 12 feet high on the north and south-east. The walls of the dock-wharf, in some places 30 feet high, and those of the gun-yard, protect the town on the west. Heavy batteries on Mount Wise were designed to protect the entrance from the sea, and a redoubt and block-house on Mount Pleasant to command the capital of the lines. There are other fortifications, amongst which, without the wall, is a line or breast-work, with a ditch from 12 to 18 and 20 feet in depth, excavated from the solid slate and limestone rock. In the lines are 2 barrier-gates, leading respectively to Tavistock and the passage across the river Tamar. All these fortifications, however, are in an unfinished state. They were begun during the last war; but when inspected by Wellington, were pronounced to be useless as a means of defence, and are, therefore, left unfinished. There is now a floating-bridge across the Hamouze to Torpoint. The width of the river at this site is 2,550 feet at high water, and its greatest depth at spring-tides is 96 feet. Velocity of stream $3\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 knots an hour. The bridge is guided by chains like those at Dartmouth, Southampton, &c., and worked by 2 steam-engines of 11 horse-power each. The bridge is a large flat-bottomed vessel, 60 feet long, and 50 feet wide, in 3 side divisions, the middle being appropriated to the machinery, and each of the side divisions to carriages, passengers, and traffic of all kinds, which pass off by drawbridges at the landing-places without the slightest inconvenience. A railway, named the Plymouth, Devonport, and Exeter railway, with a branch to Tavistock, has been projected. There are to be stationary engines on this railway. See also PLYMOUTH, EXETER, and DEVONSHIRE. The foundation of a column, erected to commemorate the alteration in the name of the town, from Plymouth-dock to Devonport, was laid in 1824. This column is a conspicuous object to the whole neighbourhood, rising 112 feet above the brow of Windmill-hill, which is itself on a level with the pinnacles of St. Andrew's church tower at Plymouth. It is a design by Foulston, of the Doric order, and was completed in 1827. The whole town was supplied with rain-water only, collected in tanks, till 1792, when an act was passed for a supply from Dartmoor, by a cut 40 miles in length.

Government establishments.—Devonport owes its present importance entirely to its advantageous situation, as the site of a great naval establishment. Till the beginning of last century, it scarcely had an existence; but since the reign of William III., and particularly since it was first fortified in the reign of George II., 'Plymouth Dock' has rapidly increased in extent, and risen in importance, till it has not only become a flourishing town,—the most populous in Devon,—but a borough, represented by two members in parliament. William III. constructed the basin and two of the naval docks. Other two were built in the reign of George III. They were hewn out of a mine of slate, and lined with Portland stone. The following are the dimensions of the several docks:—

	Length.	Breadth.	Spring-tide.
South Dock,	197 ft.	49 ft. 6 in.	16 ft.
Head Dock,	223 —	52 — 3 —	14 — 10 in.
Stem Dock,	192 —	52 — 4 —	18 — 10 —
New Dock,	230 —	56 — 1 —	19 — 10 —
North New Dock,	272 —	56 — 7 —	20 —
Froward Point Graving slip,	142 —	60 — 4 —	14 — 6 —

The dock-yard has been recently completed, and it now extends along the shore 3,500 feet in length. Its width, in the middle, is 1,600 feet, and at the extremities 100. The whole includes an area of 96 acres. The entrance from the land-side is from Fore-street, by a large gateway for carriages, &c., and a small one for foot-passengers. From the gates a flat paved road, skirted with elms, leads to the dwelling-house of the Crown-commissioner of the dock-yards, who has the supreme command, and even the officer of the military guard receives the watchword from him. The houses of the other officers are here also, and in front of the range is a double row of lime-trees, and gardens attached. In this part also, are the guard-house and pay-office, the stables, and a fine reservoir of fresh water which supplies the dock-yard. The wharf-wall extends along the shore, and there is sufficient depth of water to allow the largest war-ships to range along the jetties, and take in their ordnance-stores immediately from the spacious wharfs. In the line facing the harbour are two dry-docks for ships of the first-rate; and a double and single dock for ships-of-the-line. A canal about 70 feet wide, termed the Camber, communicating with the boat-pond, runs nearly through the yard, to which stores are thus conveyed. Five jetties project from the entrances of the dry-docks into the bay. All these are situated between the centre and the southern side of the dock-yard. On the northern side are three slips for the building of vessels of the largest size, and two for those of a smaller class. Adjoining these is a building in which planks of wood are steamed and curved. Here also are the outer mast-pond and mast-houses, timber-berths, saw-pits, and an extensive smithery, containing 48 forges in a building 210 feet square. Higher up, on this side, are mast-ponds, hemp-magazines, and a very fine ropery, consisting of two ranges of buildings, one the laying-house, the other the spinning-house, each 1,200 feet long, and three stories high. The new rope-house is almost entirely made of iron. The largest cables made here are 25 inches in circumference, and 100 fathoms long, weighing nearly 6 tons. At this part of the yard is the moulou loft. On the northern side, besides the docks and basin, and the sheds and workshops of the different artificers, there is a quadrangular range of handsome stone buildings, including an area of 450 feet by 300. Within this space are two ranges of buildings constructed of iron, which contain magazines for different sorts of stores, rigging-houses, and sail lofts. The immense arched roofs over the docks are spans without a buttress, and are extraordinary specimens of architectural skill. A steam-engine of 18 horse-partly with the dykes the Yare, whereof is cast up a slope, and that of a great height to defence of the walls. Such a piece of castle works so costly and strongly was never before since set up by any bishop of England."

DEVONSHIRE.

REFERENCE TO THE HUNDREDS.

1 Bampton	17 Axminster
2 Sherwill	18 Colyton
3 South Molton	19 Ottery St Mary
4 Fremington	20 East Budleigh
5 Shebbear	21 Cliston
6 Hartland	22 Hayridge
7 Black Torrington	23 Linton
8 Winkley with	24 Tavistock
9 North Tawton	25 Roborough
10 Crediton	26 Plympton
11 West Budleigh	27 Ermington
12 Witheridge	28 Stanborough
13 Bampton	29 Coleridge
14 Thiverton	30 Haytor
15 Halberton	31 Tainbridge
16 Hemyock	32 Axminster
33 Wotford

The Figures prefixed to the Towns denote the distance from London.

power is used for pumping the docks; and there is another of 20 horse-power employed in working turning-lathes, saw-mills, &c. The number of persons of every class employed in this great establishment, has amounted to upwards of 3,000; all under the control of the commissioner.—Hamoaze is a spacious and excellent harbour for ships of war, though the entrance is dangerous, and requires a pilot. It is 4 miles in length, and its depth, at low water, is 15 fathoms. In time of peace, a considerable part of the English navy is stationed here, and by its number and disposal, constitutes a very interesting spectacle.—See also PLYMOUTH.—There is a cordon of 8 barracks squares, capable of accommodating 3,000 men, and the government-house, a handsome building, appropriated to the business of the military, stands on Mount Wise, whence there is a fine view of the opening to the channel, and communications may be interchanged by signals with the citadel at Plymouth, where the lieutenant-governor is stationed. The seat of government was removed thence to Devonport in 1795. In front of the government house is the grand parade, on which all military reviews and inspections take place; and Mount Wise presents, at all times, the attractions of a delightful promenade. The port-admiral's house is also in this quarter. It is an elegant building, and is the first of 32 telegraphic stations, communicating with the admiralty in London, and, if necessary, receiving a response in 15 minutes. The port-admiral holds the chief naval command of the port, and his authority is not subject to the control of the admirals of any squadrons resorting hither. All naval court-martial are held on board the flag-ship in the Hamoaze. The military hospital is situated on the north-east, without the lines, and the powder magazine to the west of Morice-town. There are also other branch and relative establishments here, and at STONEHOUSE and PLYMOUTH,—which see.

Ecclesiastical affairs, &c.—In the dock-yard there is a chapel built by government, on the site of one erected, in 1700, by contributions from the seamen and officers. The parish-church is half-a-mile from the town. In the town there is a chapel-of-ease and a proprietary chapel belonging to the Episcopalians; 4 Independent chapels; 3 Wesleyan, built respectively in 1766, 1807, and 1818; 2 Baptist chapels; 2 for Methodist Seceders; 1 Unitarian, now let to a section of Methodists; and one Moravian. There are also 3 Bethel lofts, in each of which there are 3 weekly services for sailors and watermen conducted by the different dissenting ministers.—Mr. R. T. Spearman, in 1834, bequeathed £12,000 for building alms-houses here, for poor women above 60 years of age, and members of the established church. An annuity of £12 each, per annum, was appointed to be given them. There is a classical and mathematical proprietary school here. This school was the first of the kind, instituted in 1820, and has formed the model for various others in many parts of the kingdom. It is in a state of considerable efficiency. There is a British and Foreign school for boys and girls, a free school for the orphans of sailors and soldiers, and a large subscription-school for boys and girls sustained by the men employed in the Dock fund. A public library, well furnished, was established in 1819. The building was erected by the proprietors; and a mechanics' institute, entitled the Devonport and Stonehouse Mechanics' institute, was established in 1825.

Franchise, &c.—By 3d William IV. the parish of Stoke-Damerel, and the township of Stonehouse, are included in the parliamentary borough of Devonport. The number of electors registered in 1837, was 2,101. Pop. of the borough, in 1821, 39,621; in 1831, 44,454. Devonport has had a commission of the peace granted to it, and has been constituted a corporate town. Its civic jurisprudence is committed to the mayor and council—the commissioners manage the paving, lighting, &c., and are the guardians of the poor under an old local act. A town-hall, designed by Foulston, was erected in 1822. The trades and manufactures are mostly those connected with ship-building and equipping of vessels. There are also breweries, and soap-boiling manufactories. The market-days are Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; the markets are well supplied with provision. An act was passed in 1835 to regulate the market then held in this town, and to establish a market for corn, grain, &c., and for other purposes relative and subsidiary to these. The Western District banking company for Devon and Cornwall have their head establishment here. The bank was established in September, 1836. The Devon and Cornwall banking company, and the National Provincial bank of England, have also branches in this town.

DEVONSHIRE,

An extensive and valuable maritime county near the south-western extremity of England, bounded by the Bristol channel on the north; Somerset and Dorset on the east; the English channel on the south and south-east; and the river Tamar and a small rivulet called Marsland-water separating it from Cornwall on the west. Its figure is nearly rhomboidal. In length, from north to south, it is about 70 miles; from east to west, about 65. In circumference, 280. It is calculated that it has altogether above 130 miles of sea-coast. Vancouver says that the most modern calculation assigns it an area of 1,595,309 acres, or 2,493 miles. The highway returns for 1839 estimate it at 2,585. It appears by the ordnance survey to be 1,519,360 acres, or 2,374 square miles. Fraser supposes that there are about 320,000 acres, being a fifth part of the whole county, in waste land. Dartmoor alone has been computed at 350,000 acres; but, in a stricter sense, such as we have ultimately stated it, under article DARTMOOR, 53,900 acres are the square contents of that region. Nevertheless, the numerous commons skirting Dartmoor may be taken into account as partly waste lands, though much of it has now been drained and reclaimed. There are also very extensive commons adjoining Exmoor and Bridestowe, besides Roborough-down, Blackdown, &c. The cultivated land is perhaps pretty equally divided between arable and pasture; but the greater portion is the latter. There is an insulated portion of this county surrounded by Dorset and Somerset; while, on the other hand, an insulated portion of Dorset is surrounded by this county. There is also a peculiar projection into Cornwall; and the small island of Lundy, about 10 miles north-west of Hartland Point, belongs to Devonshire. It is a mass of granite, about 2½ miles long. Its southern point is occupied by a lighthouse. In point of extent, Devonshire is the third county in England, being inferior only to Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. For parliamentary representation it is divided into a northern and a southern section, comprehending 32 hundreds, and returns four members to parliament, namely, two for the northern division, which includes the whole of the several hundreds of Bampton, Black Torrington, Braunton, Crediton, Fremington, Halberton, Hartland, Hayridge, Hemyock, North Tawton and Winkleigh, Shebbear, Sherwill, South Molton, Tiverton, Witheridge, and West Budleigh; and two for the southern division, including the whole of the several hundreds of Axminster, Clyston, Colyton, Ottery St. Mary, East Budleigh, Linton, Exminster, Teignbridge, Haytor, Coleridge, Stanborough, Ermington, Plympton, Roborough, and Tavistock, and also the castle of Exeter, and the hundred of Wonford, except such parts of that hundred as are included in the limits of the city of Exeter. The principal place of election for the members for the northern division is South Molton, the polling-places being Barnstaple, Crediton, Collumpton, Torrington, Holsworthy, and South Molton; for the southern division, Exeter, the polling-places being Tavistock, Plymouth, Kingsbridge, Newton Bushel, Oakhampton, Honiton, and Exeter. The isolated portion of Axminster hundred is included in Dorsetshire, and the isolated portion of Dorsetshire in Axminster hundred, is included in the southern division of this county for parliamentary representation. Besides these, Barnstaple sends 2, and Tiverton 2, from the northern division; and Ashburton 1, Dartmouth 1, Devonport 2, Honiton 2, Plymouth 2, Tavistock 2, and Totness 2, from the southern division—in all, from this county, 22 members; besides 2 from Exeter—a county in itself. The number of electors registered for the county, in 1837, was, for the northern division, 7,871; for the southern, 10,561; in all, 18,432. The number actually polled in the southern division, in 1837, was 8,449. On the appointment of Lord Ebrington, one of the members for North Devon, as Irish viceroy, he was created Baron Fortescue, and a new election took place in March, 1839, when 3,720 voters polled for Mr. Bucke, a conservative, and 3,240 for Mr. Buller. Previous to 1832 there were 2 members returned for this county, with 22 for the boroughs, exclusive of 2 for Exeter.

Devonshire is in the province of Canterbury and diocese of EXETER,—which see. It is divided into 451 parishes, besides 22 within the bounds of Exeter. The number of benefices is stated by the Lysons to be 430; besides 41 subordinate or daughter churches, or chapelries, now esteemed and called separate parishes. Of these, 258, a much greater proportion than in some counties, are rectories; 130 vicarages, and 42 donatives and curacies. There are 40 market-towns, 91,991 houses. A. P. £1,897,515. Pop., in 1801, 343,001; in 1811, 383,908; in 1821, 439,040; and in 1831, 503,118, consisting of 103,277 families, 36,150 of whom were chiefly employed in agriculture; 33,880, chiefly in trade, manufactures, and handicraft; 33,247 otherwise employed. In 1831 the number of daily schools in this county was 1,772, attended by 52,440 children; and of Sunday schools, 599, attended by 43,342 children. Of these, 25 daily schools, with 1,006 children, and 171 Sunday schools, with 17,270 children, were established by dissenters. The amount raised by parish rates on an average of 3 years, from 1748 to 1750, was £13,790, whereof £34,953 were expended on the poor. In 1803 the assessment was £179,359, of which £148,565 were expended on poor. In 1821, £272,939; expenditure on poor £234,097; and in 1839, £214,500; expenditure on poor £183,300. The county-rates are levied in this county on a rate made under a special act passed a few years ago. The total amount of church rates in 1838-9 was £17,792; of county rates, in 1800, £7,031; in 1810, £23,159; in 1830, £12,783; and in 1838, £18,459. This county is in the western circuit. The assizes are held twice a-year for the county in Exeter. The quarter-sessions for the county are also held in Exeter. From the statistical tables referred to under article CUMBERLAND, and elsewhere, we find, that, taking the proportion of all the criminals to the total population, in 1834-38 inclusive, as unity, or 1.00; Devonshire ranks as .74, being lowest on a list of 6 southern counties, averaging 1.01;

the adjoining county, Somerset, ranking so high as 1.27.

External aspect.—The surface of this county is exceedingly diversified and irregular. The vale of Exeter, in some parts, especially between Tiverton, Exeter, and Collumpton, has an irregular, billowy surface, and presents eminences of considerable altitude; but the central and more southern parts of it preserve the vale character. The area of this district contains about 200 square miles: its boundaries on the north are the hills that range from Clansborough by Halberton and Uffculm to Black-down, a dreary mountainous ridge, which, with its contiguous branches, skirts the eastern side of the vale: on the south-east, it is bounded by the heights of Sidmouth hill, East-down, and Woodbury; and on the west, by the mountainous tract of Haldon, and the undulating eminences that stretch towards Bow. The district called the South-Hams is frequently termed the Garden of Devonshire, from its fertility. Its natural boundaries are Dartmoor and the heights of Chudleigh on the north; Plymouth sound on the west; Torbay on the east; and on its southern point the English channel. Its area, including the rich valley of the Dart, which extends towards Ashburton, includes nearly 250 square miles. This tract is strikingly diversified by bold swells, winding coombs, and fine vales: in many parts, particularly towards the north, the scenery is picturesque, and highly romantic. Numerous springs flow from the sides of the hills; and, uniting into brooks and rivulets, spread luxuriance and beauty through a considerable extent of country. The lands in this district are almost all enclosed. West Devon, a district bounded on the east by the Dartmoor mountains; on the south by Plymouth sound and its estuaries; on the west by the Tamar; and on the north by the Brent Tor and the adjacent heaths, is extremely varied in surface, not only from the number, narrowness, and depth of the larger valleys, whose sides generally rise with a steep ascent from the banks of the streams dividing them; but likewise from the hills, or wide spaces, which extend between the valleys, being rent and broken in a very peculiar manner. No part of this district can be strictly called vale; and the level meadows and marsh lands are of very inconsiderable extent. North Devon comprehends the whole district situated between Dartmoor and the British channel; but more generally its signification is limited to the country round Bideford, Barnstaple, South Molton, and the north coasts. In this tract the ground is greatly diversified, and the scenery beautiful. The Dartmoor district is of a far different character. The scenery there may claim the attribute of deep sublimity; but not of beauty. Dartmoor constitutes a kind of extensive table land stretching over the greater portion of the western district, from the vale of Exeter nearly to the banks of the Tamar, and consisting mainly of open and uncultivated common; though much of it is now improved by draining and cultivation. This wild, vast, and desolate region is replete with scenes of grandeur and immensity. Its lofty, rugged granite tors, which lie in horizontal strata, mass on mass, piled up upon the summits of its numerous heights, have stamped a peculiar and unique character on the Dartmoor district. "The feelings inspired by visiting Dartmoor," says Mrs. Bray, in her lively and descriptive letters to Mr. Southey, published in 1836, "are of a very different order from those experienced on viewing our beautiful and cultivated scenery. The rich pastures, the green hills, the woodland declivities of Devon; its valleys, alive with sparkling streams, and skirted by banks whose verdure never fails, studded as they are with cottages and farms.

convey to the mind that sense of pleasure which renders the spirits cheerful and buoyant. There is nothing in such scenes to raise a thought allied to wonder or to fear. We know that we could dwell among them in security and peace. They delight and soften the mind; but they seldom raise in it those deep and impressive reflections which scenes, such as Dartmoor affords, seldom fail to create."

Rivers.—From Dartmoor, the great head-land of Devon, some of its principal, and many of its numerous smaller, rivers take their origin; all radiating from within a circuit of a few miles, on this central fountain-head, and flowing down the slopes of its high flat summit to almost every point in the compass. Of the more important of these, the Dart, so termed from the rapidity of its course; and whence the name Dartmoor originated; runs south-east, from Okement hill, in a winding course, to Totness; and, after a course of about 35 miles, gradually widens into a deep navigable estuary, and falls into the English channel at Dartmouth haven. Its course is tidal for 10½ miles. The east and west Okement, on the other hand, though they also rise in and near Okement-hill, take an opposite course from that of the Dart, and uniting at Okehamp-ton, form one of the chief branches of the Torridge, which rises in the north-west angle of the county, near the source of the Tamar, and, after taking a very tortuous course, unites with the Okement or Oke, and flows north-west, past Torrington and Bideford, where it becomes navigable for larger vessels; and, after a course of about 45 miles, issues into an estuary, at Barnstaple bay, common to it with the Taw. Its course is tidal for about 15 miles. The Taw rising in Dartmoor, flows northwards past Chumleigh, where it meets the little Dart, and then pursuing a north-west course, receives various tributaries, among which is the Moule, and, after a course of about 45 miles, flows, by Barnstaple, into the estuary to which we have alluded. It is tidal in its course for 11½ miles. The Tav, or Tavy, flows from the common centre southward by Tavistock, and issues into the estuary of the Tamar; for an account of which, see CORNWALL. The Teign originates by two branches, one of them termed the Wrey, in the most elevated district of Dartmoor. The main branch flows eastward between the Dart and the Exe, and by a circuitous southward route, passes Chudleigh. After being joined by the Wrey, it flows on to Newton-Bushel, below which it widens into a navigable estuary, and falls into the sea at Teignmouth. It is tidal in its course for 5 miles. The Plym rises in the Dartmoor district, and mingles with the waters of the Tamar and the Tavy in Plymouth sound. The Erme and the Avon, between the Plym and the Dart, are also considerable rivers, rising in Dartmoor, and falling into the English channel. The Axe—which see—rises in the vicinity of the isolated portion of Axminster hundred in Dorsetshire, and falls into the English channel at Axmouth. The Otter, to the westward, runs nearly parallel to it, and passing Otterton, falls into the English channel. The main root of the Exe rises in Exepool in Somersetshire, and enters Devonshire near Dulverton. At Bampton it enters into a richly wooded valley, and flowing past Tiverton and Bickleigh, it is reinforced by the waters of the Culm, the Creedy, and the Yeo, with other tributaries, before it reaches Exeter, whence it flows, through fertile meadow-land, to Topsham, near which it is joined by the Clist, where it is tidal, and where its navigable estuary begins. Its length thence to the sea is nearly 8 miles, and its width, in some places, ½ mile. Its whole length is about 55 miles. The main drains of the district are the Taw and Torridge on the north, and the Dart, the Teign, and the Exe, with the Tamar, on the south.

Coasts and Fisheries.—Surveying the coasts of this county, beginning with the English channel, we find this southern coast to contain the considerable estuaries of the Exe and the Teign, Torbay, Dartmouth, Salcombe harbour, between Prawley Point and Bolt-head, Bigbury bay, into which the Avon and the Erme fall, the estuary of the Yealm, and Plymouth Sound, between Devon and Cornwall, —off which is the EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE—which see—while the northern coast contains one considerable bay, namely, Bideford or Barnstaple bay, with the estuaries of the Torridge and the Taw, besides the smaller bay called Morte bay. Fish is very plentiful on the coasts and in all the rivers. The salmon and trout caught in the larger rivers, form a profitable article of trade. The plaice, sole, and John-doree, are considered of superior quality. The hake is abundantly caught, throughout the year, on the southern coast, and is an important article of food for the poorer classes. The herring and mackerel fisheries are very extensively carried on. The pilchard fishery is peculiar to this county and Cornwall, but especially to the latter—which see. There are extensive oyster-beds at Dettesham-on-Dart, at Lympstone-on-the-Exe, at Starcross, Topsham, and elsewhere, and a few years since, large beds were discovered in Torbay, where also the torpedo or electric ray has been caught.

Canals.—In the reign of Henry VIII., the inhabitants of Plymouth, Dartmouth, and other seaports in Devon and Cornwall, represented to parliament that their harbours were utterly ruined by the stream-works of the timbers, in consequence of immense quantities of rubbish having been carried down by the rivers on whose banks the said works were situated; that the mouths of the rivers were choked up, so that, whereas, formerly, ships of 800 tons could enter the harbour at low water, ships of 100 tons could then scarcely enter. The responsive measures adopted by the parliament, in 1531, do not appear to have been effective; for complaints still continued to exist; and, as regarded Plymouth, an act was obtained, in 1584, for making a canal from the river Meary, to cleanse the channel of the haven and to supply the town with water: see PLYMOUTH. The navigation of the river Exe was also, from various causes, much impeded; and indeed had previously been of little importance; and a canal, running parallel with the river, was cut between Topsham and Exeter, a distance of 3½ miles. But this work was very imperfect and inefficient, and the cut has recently been extended lower down to a place called the Turf: see EXETER. The Bude and Thornbury canal commences in Bude harbour, on the north-west coast of Cornwall. It takes a very circuitous course, first along the western bank of the little river Bude to Hell bridge. It then turns abruptly north-east and east to Red Post, where the Launceston branch is given off. At Burmesdon, a branch proceeds to Moreton mill, and to a reservoir or feeder on Langford moor; and at Veale, about a mile from Burmesdon, is the Vorworthy branch. This canal is about 21½ miles in length. There are 3 inclined planes and a tunnel of considerable length in its course. The act for its formation was obtained in 1829. One of its chief objects is to facilitate the introduction of Welsh coal to Devon. The Tavistock canal, projected in 1803, and finished in 1817, begins at Tavistock and terminates in the tideway of the Tamar. During its course of about 4 miles, it passes, at Morwelham Down, through a tunnel nearly 2,640 yards long, and about 460 feet beneath the highest point of the land above it. This canal is 16 feet wide, and 4 deep, and has a fall of 256 feet. There is a branch of 2 miles to the slate quarries at Mill hill. The Tavistock canal is chiefly used in the conveyance of slate, copper, ore, and other minerals from, and coal, lime, &c., to, this district of the county. The Stover canal is cut from the Teign to Bovey Heathfield. Pipe and potter's clay are sent down, and culm and coal brought up this canal. The projected Grand Western canal, originally intended for internal hydrographic communication between the two counties of Somerset and Devon, and also with the English channel at Topsham, is traced on the map of England, published, in 1837, under the superintendence of the Society for the diffusion of useful knowledge, from near Bridgewater in Somersetshire, whence the river Parret communicates with Bridgewater bay in the Bristol channel; and to the north of the Bristol and Exeter railway, near Taunton and Wellington, whence it takes a turn westward, and runs towards Tiverton in this county. In Walker's map of Devonshire, and Nichols' & Co.'s maps of canals, another is traced from Torrington along the valley of the Torridge, for about 4 miles, till it opens into the river at Wear Gifford, where it becomes navigable. With the exception, however, of the Grand Western, and a projected English and Bristol channels ship canal, from Bridgewater bay to Seaton bay, at the mouth of the Axe, across the valley of the Axe,—the act for which was obtained in 1825,—the canals of Devonshire are unimportant.

Roads.—The principal of these are the two great roads which cross the county, from Somerset, and Dorset, to Cornwall, meeting in Exeter. The road by Dorset, and the English coast, enters by Axminster, and passes through Honiton, Exeter, Chudleigh, Newton-Bushel, Totness, and Plymouth; whence, after the ferry is crossed, it is continued, on the Cornwall coast, to Liskeard, &c. The road by Somerset enters between Willington and Collumpton, through which it passes to Exeter, and thence the inland continuation runs through Crediton and Oakhampton, north of the river sources in Dartmoor, to the termination of the Launceston canal, near Launceston, where it enters Cornwall. Another road, from Dorsetshire, enters on the coast, by Lyme Regis, and joins the great road through Axminster, near Exeter. Various roads enter from Somerset, to Honiton, to Bampton and Tiverton, and to South Molton, Torrington, Barnstaple, &c. The other principal local roads, are those that radiate; from Exeter, through Moreton-Hampstead, and over the Dartmoor district, to Tavistock; from Exeter to Tiverton; from Crediton, through Torrington, to Bideford, and through Barnstaple, to Ilfracombe, on the coast of the Bristol channel. The roads which radiate from the other principal towns, and the cross-roads interlacing them are very numerous. From the high fences, and the depth and narrowness of the roads, in great part of this county, together with the perpetual recurrence of hills, all prospect is shut out, excepting on the open tops of the hills, and where there are no enclosures. There are many extensive views from these heights, however, over the beautiful vales and coasts in their vicinity. The highway returns show an extent of road in this county far greater than that of any other in England, except Yorkshire. In the three years ending October, 1814, the turnpike roads and paved streets, are estimated at 776 miles, and all other highways used for wheeled carriages, at 5,936 miles; the total expenditure on which, was £44,658. In 1836, there were 29 turnpike trusts, the total income of which was £62,024 6s. 1d.; of which, £11,167 4s. 4d., were expended on improvements.

In 1839, the expenditure, on 6,898 miles of highway, was £37,356.

Railways.—The Dartmoor and Plymouth railway commences in the parish of Lydford near the bar-rack—see DARTMOOR—and runs southward in a very tortuous course. It crosses the Tavistock and Kingsbridge road below Walkhampton, and winding on, like the Plym in its vicinity, crosses the Plymouth and Exeter great road, at the northern skirt of Saltram policies, whence it runs to the sound, at Sutton Pool, a short distance south of Plymouth. It has a branch to the lime-works at Catsdown. This railway was executed under acts of parliament passed in 1819-21. It is about 25½ miles in length, and has proved of great use in the transit of goods to the district through which it passes. A railway extends from the Hey Tor quarries to the Stover canal: it is about 8 miles in length, and formed of granite blocks. The Exeter and Bristol railway was sanctioned by act of parliament, passed in May, 1836. No part of it was in progress within this county, in June 1840; but between Bristol and Bridgewater it was considerably advanced: see SOMERSETSHIRE. It enters this county to the north and west of Burlescombe, and runs near Collumpton, Bathys, and Stoke Canon to Exeter. A railway between Exeter and Basingstoke has been projected, at which latter place it is to communicate with the Southampton and London or South-western railway. Another is in contemplation between Exeter and Falmouth, near the Land's End, CORNWALL,—which see,—and it is also intended to unite Davenport, Plymouth, and Exeter by railway, with a branch to Tavistock.

Strata, Quarries, &c.—From the confused intermixture of the strata in Devonshire, the operation of earthquakes and volcanoes is strikingly apparent. The whole district is extremely rich in useful mineral products. Granite occupies the central and most elevated portion of the county, including the whole forest of Dartmoor, and a large district around it. This stone is quarried to a considerable extent, and is largely exported. Several thousand tons are annually sent to London from the Hey Tor quarries, which are situated at the foot of the Hey Tor rocks. Blocks much prized by architects, for their size, durability, and fineness of texture, are produced here, and conveyed by railway to the Stover canal; thence to the new wharf at Teignmouth, where they are shipped. Specimens of the red granite are exceedingly beautiful when polished. On exposure to the atmosphere, it becomes extremely hard; but when first raised it may be easily worked. Laminated schistus is common to almost all the county: most of the thin laminae are very rotten, quickly dissolving into mud; but the thicker beds are used in building, being sometimes black, compact, and hard, disposed in very thick laminae: it is also used for pavements and tombstones. Slate occupies an extensive surface on the northern, southern, and eastern, parts of the county. A north-eastern range, bounded by the granite and the transition limestone, occupies nearly the whole of Doddiscombeleigh and Chrutrow, and may be traced through the eastern parts of Hennock, Bovey Tracy, Ilington, and Ashburton, to and beyond the Dart. A second and more easterly range, commencing in the transition lime, occupies nearly the whole of West Oggwell and Woodland, and a considerable portion of Highweek, East Oggwell, and Denbury. Another south-easterly range has a part of Marlton and Berry Pomeroy as its inland boundary, and occupies a large portion of Churstone, Ferrers, and Kingwear. There are several large quarries of this slate, which is used for roofing. The principal are at Staverton and Nethway. Transition limestone occurs in several detached parts of the county; but principally in the south, between Torbay and Plymouth; the whole coast between these points being composed of this rock. It is likewise found higher up to the north, as far west as Chudleigh parish. Limestone is quarried and burnt to a great extent for the purposes of manure, especially at Naldon; and thence, in different parts, as far as the Dart. From the Babbiscombe quarries also, (a mile or two from Torquay), vessels are constantly employed in conveying it for the supply of the kilns along the banks of the Exe. This limestone is also adapted to building, and ornamental purposes. Beautifully veined marble is worked in different parts; and is used for tablets, pillars, mantel-pieces, &c. The greater part of the south-east and south coast is marble. The cliffs near St. Mary's church, on the north side of Torbay, are of beauty superior to any in Devonshire. The cliff at Petitoe, on the edge of the sea, is likewise celebrated for its marble formation. Pillars of 14 or 15 feet in length are often worked from it. In the parish of Ipplepen, excellent marble is also quarried for ornamental purposes. Red sandstone occupies what is usually termed the Dist district, immediately round Exeter: stretching, thence, on the one side, through the valley of the Exe, round the base of Naldon, it occupies a considerable tract, along the coast, as far as Torbay; and, on the other, winds round the base of Woodbury and Peak hills, forming the coast line of cliffs to and beyond Sidmouth. This stone is, in some places, sufficiently hard to serve as a very durable building material. The green sand formation presents, on the confines of this county and Dorset, many outlying masses forming considerable hills. Coal of a peculiar nature, the origin of which has occasioned considerable discussion, is obtained in the extensive flat called Bovey-Heathfield, which constitutes a large natural basin of irregular form, and appears to have been formerly covered by the tide. It is supposed still to be lower than the sea. This coal, which is distinguished as lignite, or wood coal, occurs in strata running nine miles to the southward through the Heathfield, commencing at the base of the granite hills in Bovey parish. The coal strata alternate with those of clay: their perpendicular depth, including the clay, is about 70 feet. This combustible differs from black coal in several of its constituents. It is supposed to consist of imperfectly carbonized wood, analogous to oak and other existing trees. It is chiefly used as fuel for the Bovey Heath potteries, where an inferior description of earthen ware is made from the clay alternating with it. It is also used as fuel by the poorer classes in the vicinity; but it emits a fetid gas, and is not thoroughly combustible. The clay with which it is intermixed has been supposed by geologists to consist of decomposed Dartmoor granite, carried down by streams, and quietly settled, in the same manner that similar china clay is now artificially prepared in the south part of Dartmoor, and in Cornwall, by turning streams of water upon decomposed granite. The clays towards Kingsteignton, however, and away from the vicinity of the granite, are of greater purity than the Bovey-Heathfield clay: finer particles having been carried farther than the grosser. It is worked in square open pits to various depths of from 30 to 80 feet. The clay is cut into small cubic junks, technically termed clay balls, and weighing about 30 lbs. each; many thousand tons are annually shipped from Teignmouth to the Staffordshire and other potteries. China clay was selling, in 1838, at £1 12s. per ton; and china stone, a semi-decomposed granite, at 16s. per ton. It is calculated by De la Beche, that of these, and other china clays, artificial and natural, 37,500 tons are annually shipped from the Devon and Cornwall district to the potteries. This export is altogether recent: the first preparation of this clay for making china appears to be due to Mr. Cookworthy, of Plymouth, who was the first to manufacture porcelain in England. A bed of pipe-clay so impregnated with iron as to be only fit for the manufacture of pipes, runs under the beds of potter's clay, lying east of the Bovey coal strata: white quartz and sand are found under this. Throughout this county, there are numerous, though partial, manifestations of other strata, and of other portions of those already described, with many heterogeneous formations intermixed; but in a work of this kind it would be entirely out of place to give them further notice.

Ores and mines.—Devonshire participates in the celebrity of Cornwall as a great mining district; but, in this respect, it is much more a mere adjunct, than a co-equal, to Cornwall. Anciently, however, Devonshire produced greater quantities of tin than Cornwall; for in 1213, the duty on tin payable to the Earl of Cornwall was farmed at £200 for Devon, and only at 200 marks for Cornwall; but in 1479 the amount of coinage dues was £166 9s. 5½d. for Devon, and £1,620 17s. 11d. for Cornwall; in 1602, £102 17s. 9½d. for Devon, and £2,623 9s. 8d. for Cornwall; in 1820, about £45 17s. 9d. for Devon, and £11,080 for Cornwall; and in 1838, previous to the abolition of the tin coinage duties, £193 2s. 10½d. for Devon, and £14,762 4s. 10½d. for Cornwall: the tin coined at Morwelham, the last coining station in Devon, from Mid-summer 1837 to Mid-summer 1838, consisted of 82 blocks of grain or stream tin, and 674 blocks of common tin—in all, 756 blocks, the average weight of each of which, as already given, under the article CORNWALL, is from 3.34 to 3.35 cwt. But it must be here observed, that while the duchy dues on Cornish tin were 4s. per cwt., they were only 1s. 6½d. on Devonshire. In 1838 the tin coinage dues were commuted.—See CORNWALL.—Tin was the staple article of commerce with the Phœnicians, who used it in their celebrated dye of Tyrian purple; it being the only absorbent then known. This—as observed under article CORNWALL—they procured from the island of Great Britain; and, though it appears that the principal place of shipment was near “the Land's end,” Devon participated in the profits of the trade, and vestiges of the Phœnician smelting houses, called by the miners “Jews' houses,” are still to be seen in and about the ancient stream works, where the tin was washed from the surface soil; when sometimes gold was found amongst it. This was the mode by which tin was formerly almost exclusively obtained. Remains of ancient stream works are found in every part of the granite district, and its immediate vicinity, where the tin is chiefly found. But comparatively few are now worked; though an inhabitant of Tavistock states, that, “the stream works, though less productive than the mines, are still, in many instances, a source of profit to the adventurer.” Although the tin works in this county were almost altogether abandoned, after the Cornwall mines became productive, they have been recently re-worked, and have given promise of a revival of this branch of lucrative industry in Devon. The chief tin ore is the peroxide, from which all the pure metal is produced.

For the information of some of our readers, we may observe, that metallic veins, or lodes, in general, consist of ores or crystals, apparently precipitated from water holding them in solution, or deposited on the sides or inner surfaces of rents, or, as geologists technically term them, faults, or dislocations, in the various strata constituting the solid crust of the earth; produced probably by volcanic action, earthquakes, or the geological elevating power. The lines of disturbance and dislocation, fractures or fissures, and slides, in this county, with the concurrent veins or lodes, run generally east and west; with cross courses, north and south, of different epochs. "There is no want of evidence," says De la Beche, "to show that the solid rocks of the area before us, have, at different epochs, been well-contorted, bent, and broken; and it will be seen in the sequel, that the consequences of such violent contortions and fractures have been of the greatest importance and value to man." Intimately related to this subject, is the singular fact, well worthy of remark, and well known to miners, that certain metals, thus deposited in these fissures by filtration through the stratal rocks, or even by freer ingress, are more readily found in certain stratal formations than in others. Thus, says De la Beche, "a connexion has often been observed, in various parts of the world, between sulphuret of lead and calcareous rocks;" and thus, he also remarks, "the argentiferous lead-lodes of Combe Martin occur in beds, immediately beneath the slates in which limestones are found at the same place; and the celebrated argentiferous lead-lodes of Beer Alston cut through slates which are in part calcareous:"—see also DERBYSHIRE, Strata and Minerals:—again, "granite, or its modification, elvan, occurs near, or at the localities where tin and copper ores so abound as to be worked, and produce good mines; while lead, antimony, manganese, iron, and zinc, are discovered in sufficient quantities, to be profitably raised, at a distance from granite or elvan. Hence we might infer, that the presence of granite or elvan has had considerable influence in promoting the presence of tin or copper ores, which either occur in them or in other rocks in their vicinity; while the granitic influence, if we may use the expression, was not essential to the accumulation of the ores of lead, antimony, manganese, zinc, or iron." Nevertheless, in one of the Dartmoor tin-mines, manganese and calcareous spar have been found enclosed in masses of solid granite at the depth of 60 fathoms. Splendid octohedral pseudo-morphous crystals, sometimes enclosing a little water, have been also found in the same mine. In such cases, the water impregnated with the manganese so deposited, has carried the solution with it from an extrinsic source through the strata which it must have penetrated. In many lodes, also, layers of different metals, or minerals, succeed each other in the rents, or dislocations, "showing a difference of the solution or solutions from which the various substances were deposited."

The great stanniferous district in Devon is Dartmoor, considered as a part of the Tavistock district. The granite rock itself here is sometimes found impregnated with the metal. The mines around the town of Tavistock are principally cupriferous. On the north are the lead lodes of Wheal Betsey and Lidford; and on the south, the argentiferous lead-mines of Beer Alston. Thence the principal metalliferous country quits this county, and runs southwards into Cornwall. Following the skirts of Dartmoor, round by Okehampton and Ashburton, to the vicinity of Plymouth, a few lodes or veins are discovered, principally of copper. Tin ore has been extensively worked at Restonget creek and Falmouth harbour. Valuable manganese mines have been worked on the east of Dartmoor, at Doddiscombe and Ashton; and fine iron-ore is found near Ilminster, and very recently at Hey Tor rocks. In the stripe of the carbonaceous series which runs to the north of Exeter, lead-ore has been raised near Newton St. Cyres; and there is a valuable manganese lode running near the latter place, Upton Pyne, and Huxham. Proceeding to the north of Devon, the country is non-metalliferous, with the exception of some clay-iron-ore mixed with the anthracite of Bideford, and its continuation eastward to the range of land beyond Barnstaple, where manganese is found at West Down, &c.

The ores of manganese and antimony are chiefly found in those portions of the grauwacke which are much associated with trappean rocks. The rich bunches found on the west of Dartmoor occur under such conditions. "The manganese at Upton Pyne is found," says the author of the History of Exeter, "in large, rugged, irregular masses, and contains great variety of crystallizations: some shoot irregularly; some are plane, and transversely striated; others are streaked, like the lead-ore; and others shoot into hollows, crossing each other every way. The crystals seem to be the metal in a pure state, and are not equally advantageous with the calx, which contain a larger proportion of pure air, the ingredient for which it is chiefly valuable. It is employed in the potteries, but principally in the glass-houses, where it is used to discharge the colour imparted by calces of lead, and for other purposes. It has also been applied latterly in preparing the oxygenated muriatic acid, employed to facilitate the operation of bleaching," since which time the consumption of manganese has become increased to a considerable extent. Peroxide is the chief form in which it is found in Devon and Cornwall. In Devon it has been found in great quantities, and a considerable trade has been carried on in it since 1770, when it was first found at Upton Pyne; and this mine, together with two other less important ones in the same lode, for many years supplied the whole United Kingdom with manganese, and of the finest quality raised any where. From about 1804 to 1810, the quantity shipped from Exeter is stated by the Lysons to have been between 2,000 and 3,000 tons per annum. Some of the mines afterwards became exhausted, but others were discovered, especially those near Launceston and Tavistock, in 1815; and, according to Mr. E. Williams, 12 mines in Devon produced 1,911 tons in 1821. In the same year 2,212 tons were shipped from Plymouth, and the export was then increasing; 1,336 tons only having been exported in 1819. It is difficult to obtain a fair approximation to the quantity now raised in the district; but it is usually estimated at about 5,000 tons per annum. This annual produce, taking the value of the ton to be, on the average, £8, would give £40,000 as its value.

Copper pyrites, or the bisulphuret of copper, is the chief ore of that metal which occurs in Devon and CORNWALL: which see;—as also for other general information as to the sale and smelting of the ores, &c., the mines of Cornwall and Devon being very similarly circumstanced in these respects. Though it would appear that copper was raised in Devon early in the last century, it was not until the commencement of the present, that the copper mines in this county became important. The quantities raised, chiefly from the Tavistock mines, were, in 1801, 1,078 tons 18 cwt. of ore, producing 136 tons, 6 cwt. of metal; in 1811, 3,540 tons of ore, producing 323 tons 13 cwt. of metal; in 1821, 483 tons of metal; in 1831, 3,721 tons of ore, producing 311 tons of metal; and in 1837, 6,323 tons of ore, producing 527 tons of metal. The produce of the ores, from 1801 to 1837, varied from about 8-2 to 11-2 per cent., and frequently to 9 and 10 per cent. Their value was £12,878 in 1801, £31,517 in 1811 and, judging from the sales of the Cornish ores, £40,793 in 1822, £17,132 in 1832, and £44,242 in 1837. In 1811 there would appear to have been only seven copper mines yielding ores: viz., Wheal Friendship, 110 tons; Wheal Crebor, near Tavistock, 1,306 tons; Crowndale, 863 tons; East Crowndale, 913 tons; Ding Dong, 250 tons; Wheal Hope, 6 tons; and Wheal Hockworthy, 10 tons. Wheal Friendship has been worked since the end of last century, and is still an important mine. Here has been recently erected the most powerful and finest water-wheel-pump in the whole district. This and Wheal Franco, also near Tavistock, are at present the richest copper-mines in Devon: Bottle-hill mine, near Plympton, being chiefly worked for tin.

As to the value of the chief lead-mines in Devon, see COMB MARTIN: besides which, we find, from the Geological Report of De la Beche, on Cornwall and Devon, that the two lodes near Beer Alaton have produced large quantities of argentiferous galena, often containing from 80 to 120, and sometimes even 140 ounces of silver per ton of lead. In 1784, and 1785, the silver produce of these mines amounted to 6,500 ounces. From Wheal Betsey, near Tavistock, which was re-opened in 1806, from 300 to 400 tons of lead, and from 4,000 to 5,000 ounces of silver, were annually obtained about 15 years since. The produce of this mine is now greatly reduced, and only about 140 tons are stated to have been obtained, in 1835, from the Devon and Cornish lead-mines; Wheal Betsey having produced 40 tons. At this time Mr. John Taylor estimated the lead produced in Great Britain and Ireland at 46,112 tons. Wheal Betsey, North Wheal Tamar, between Tavistock and Launceston, a mine near Launceston, and the Comb Martin mines, were all that De la Beche found working in Devon: the produce of the whole of them, including all those of Cornwall, would scarcely amount to 180 tons. Very rich lodes have been discovered, however, since 1837, as we have already observed under article COMB MARTIN.

Several fine lodes of rich hematite iron ore are found in the district, which have been worked at various times. Besides those already alluded to, there is a lode near Comb Martin, whence iron ore to the amount of 9,293 tons, was shipped between 1796 and 1802, to the iron-works at Llanelli in South Wales. Micaceous iron ore is found at various places on Dartmoor; and, under the name of Devonshire sand, was some years since sent to London, and used as writing sand, selling at from £3 3s. to £8 8s. per ton. The iron ore near Ilington was at one time raised in considerable quantities; and the large lode near the base of the Hey Tor rocks—which has been only recently explored and worked—is a very regular stratified one of oxidulated iron ore and argillaceous schist, in alternate beds, varying in thickness from half-a-foot to 3 or 4 feet. The central bed, which is the largest, is of iron ore, chiefly compact, but sometimes coarsely granular: 40 to 70 per cent. of iron is extracted from the ore. Micaceous iron ore, provincially known as “shining ore,” occurs in small lodes: it contains so large a proportion of carbon, that it may perhaps be considered as an inferior kind of graphite or plumbago,—see CUMBERLAND and BORROWDALE,—and is applied to many of the same uses. It is worked in the parishes of Hennock, Lustleigh, Moreton, and Bovey Tracey; and, after being washed, it is packed in casks, in a pulverized state, and sent, in limited quantities, to Teignmouth and Exeter, whence it is shipped. Magnetic iron ore of good quality has been worked near South Brent. Dr. Edward Cotton sent a piece of this ore, weighing 60 lbs., to the Royal Society, in 1687, which moved a needle placed at the distance of 9 feet. Various other metallic or mineral substances, such as cobalt, zinc, antimony, arsenic, gold, &c., are found in this county; but copper, manganese, tin, and lead, are the staple articles of handicraft and commerce. There are numerous chalybeate or mineral springs; but the Victoria Spa at Plymouth is, we believe, the only one in the district at present medicinally used.

Jurisdiction.—The mining system in Devon has been from ancient times under a separate jurisdiction, similar to, and connected with, that in Cornwall; and, that the Stannators exercised great powers, is proved by the imprisonment of Richard Strode, Esq., member of parliament for Plympton, in the castle of Lidford, now a ruin, but then “one of the most banious, contagious, and detestable places in the realm;” as an act of parliament, in 1512, denounces it to be. Ostensibly, he was imprisoned for refusing to pay fines levied upon him, in 1512, by the Tinner’s court at Crockern Tor; but really, because he had “rendered himself obnoxious,” say the Lysons, “to his brother tinnors, by his patriotic exertions in parliament, towards procuring the act for protecting the western harbours from the injuries caused by the stream-works.” He was kept in the dungeon at Lidford for more than 3 weeks, in irons, and fed on bread and water. This daring outrage gave occasion to the establishment and maintenance of some of the most important privileges of parliament. Crockern Tor, on Dartmoor, has from ancient times been the place where the stannary parliaments of Devon have been held; and it is stated by the Lysons, in 1822, that, within the memory of man, the commission was opened, and the jurors sworn, at this wild spot; after which, the court was adjourned to one of the stannary towns: these, anciently, were Tavistock, Ashburton, Chagford, and Plympton; but, previous to the commutation of tin dues, the coinages for Devon were effected at Morwellham. Except the stannary laws, there has been nothing peculiar in the government or jurisdiction of Devonshire. See HENGESTON-DOWNS.

Soils.—The soils of this extensive county are extremely various; but may be generally characterized according to the rock, or stratified substances which they cover, as granitic, slaty, calcareous, arenaceous, argillaceous, gravelly, and loamy. Striking coincidences exist, between the nature of the soils, the strata on which they are superincumbent, and the variance of the produce with the precise limits of both, even to the obvious distinction, to be traced across portions of a field, where the transition boundaries occur; the relative amount of fertility being thus very much due to the decomposition of the subsoil rocks. The poorest is the soil covering the granite of Dartmoor, which has also the disadvantages of a cold wet climate: that which lies on the slate district is more or less fertile, and fit for all the purposes of agriculture. Very extensive tracts, however, of this soil, are of a thin staple; others are in contact with a cold bed of clay, and some are so elevated as to have a very low degree of temperature. The mouldering argillaceous slate surrounding the granite district, has, in covering the strata with soil, produced a rounded surface, which an agricultural writer (Marshall) not inaptly describes as “billyow in the extreme, being wholly composed of high swells, separated by close narrow valleys. Some of these swells,” he adds, “are nearly hemispherical.” The most uniformly fertile soils are perhaps in the red sandstone district; but the richest are those occurring in contiguity with limestone or greenstone rocks, in many parts of the slate district, particularly in the South Hams, “the garden of the west,” which is exceeded by few tracts in the whole kingdom in rich and productive soil. The red colour which characterizes the best soils, both in the South Hams and the eastern division of the county, and which seems to be so closely connected with the principle of fertility, proceeds from an abundant mixture of iron, in a highly oxidated state. The surface and soil of that part of the South Hams which is bounded by the rivers Dart and Erme, is generally a red loam, of a hazel nut brown colour, mostly on a substratum of slate; small fragments of rotten slate being frequently mixed with it. This soil is rich and friable. The hills and slopes are excellent corn and sheep lands. The valleys are remarkably rich, and are converted into orchards and watered meadows; the first producing excellent cider, and the latter the finest of hay, and the earliest of grass. The soil of the South Hams, east of the Dart, as far as Torbay, is richer and more red; generally on a substratum of marble rock. This part produces excellent pasture for cattle: the valleys are also converted into orchards and watered meadows. North-west of the Erme, the soil of the South Hams is nearly similar, lying on slate marble, and, in some instances, on clay. There is abundance of rich meadow-land also in the celebrated vale of the Exe, and in that of the Otter. North of Hatherleigh and Holworthy, and east to Chulmleigh, Bradninch, &c., the soil is chiefly clay. A large district west of Dartmoor, to the Tamar, north to Hatherleigh and Holworthy, and east to Newton Bushe, is chiefly sand or gravelly. North-east of the Taw it is light, on a substratum of grauwacke, or dunstone, as it is here called. Towards Hartland Point there is much clay and moorland: a vein of black soil runs through Filleigh and Swimbridge; and a narrow vein of the red soil from North Molton to Chalcombe: the soil about Blackdown and Haldon is flinty. The rich red soil of the South Hams, which is of great depth, is sometimes worked as marl pits, and used most beneficially as manure for the poorer lands. The chief manures are lime and sea sand. The lime is very extensively burnt in kilns along the banks of the rivers; and the sand is brought, in immense quantities, from all parts of the coast in carts; from the north coast, by the Bude and Holworthy canal, the chief commerce of which is the conveyance of this sand; and even from the Dunbar, in Padstow harbour, Cornwall; whence, as stated by De la Beche, one-fourth of the sand employed for agricultural purposes in Cornwall and Devon is obtained. The quantity taken from this harbour, in 1836, was estimated at 100,000 tons, or 5,600,000 cubic feet of sand, chiefly composed of comminuted sea-shells, as mineral manure; and this he calculates to be only a fifth of all that is used in Devon and Cornwall. Sands differ in their calcareous contents and fertilizing powers, from 40 to 70 per cent. The farmers prefer that which the tide has just left, and Borlase has observed, that the saltier the sand, the better it is for agricultural purposes. Probably, the salt and animal matter with which it is impregnated, contributes very materially to its fertilizing powers.

Climate.—Devonshire has been termed the Italy of the west. The climate in general is so mild, especially on the south coast, that in flourishing gardens, even overhanging the sea, orange and lemon trees, myrtles, &c., grow in the open air, with little shelter during winter, though they are exposed to the south-east winds. This, however, as De la Beche observes, is partly attributable to the geniality of the soil. From 6 years' observation, by Mr. Snow Harris, at Devonport and Plymouth, the most prevalent winds were found to be from the west, in the ratio of 522 days out of 2,191. Out of the remaining days the winds were east 296; south-west 288; north 280; south 219; variable 197;

north-west 178; south-east 119; and north-east 90. The laurels and bays of Devon are held to be the most beautiful evergreens in the world; and, indeed, though one of the chief characteristics of the county, as a whole, be the striking and perpetually recurring contrast between luxuriant wooded valleys and bleak and scathed hills, the vivid vegetation of the lower parts is almost proverbial with artists; and Sir Joshua Reynolds himself asserted, that the verdure in the vicinity of Exeter, Bath, and Bristol, was the richest in England. Broad leaved myrtle trees have grown here in the open air, to the extraordinary height of 30 feet, with branches spreading nearly from the roots, where the stalk or trunk was from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 2 feet in circumference. They were probably the largest in England. Swallows have been seen feeding their young in the end of September, and Martins flying, during mild weather, even in Christmas week. The mean annual temperature, from 11 years' observation by Mr. Harris, was found to be $= 52.5^{\circ}$. But from its advanced position in the ocean, the climate, especially in the vicinity of the mountainous districts, is unquestionably a moist one. So decidedly, indeed, that an ingenious Devonshire poetaster, quoted in the pleasant volumes of Mrs. Bray, to which we have already been indebted, has alleged, with probably a little of the "license" usually termed "poetic," that

"The west wind always brings wet weather;
The east wind wet and cold together;
The south wind surely brings us rain;
The north wind blows it back again.

If the sun in red should set
The next day surely will be wet;
If the sun should set in grey,
The next will be a rainy day."

And this objection to the climate of the south of Devonshire, has even the traditional sanction of Charles II., who was wont to declare, "that however fine it might be elsewhere, he felt quite sure it must be raining at Tavistock," where he had dwelt, during the civil wars, in his father's lifetime. It has nevertheless been remarked, that "no person born and bred on Dartmoor, was ever yet known to die of pulmonary consumption," and the climate of Devonshire is considered by medical men to be so healthy and auspicious to invalids predisposed to its fatal influence, that a residence within its bounds is very generally advised, in preference even to Lisbon or the south of France. Perhaps the strongest confirmation of the truth of this, is to be found in the registrar-general's abstract of the causes of death; whereby we find, that Devonshire presents a marked difference, in this respect, even to the adjoining county of CORNWALL,—which see;—and that diseases of the respiratory organs, especially consumption, decline, and pneumonia, so generally found to be at the head of the list of mortality, as the most fatal causes of death in this country,—a fact which this abstract also testifies throughout,—are, nevertheless, here, as in some other favoured districts, only second on the list. The relative proportions of the most prevalent causes, registered for the half year from July 1st, to December 31st, 1837, are these:—

	Males.	Females.	Total.
Epidemic, Endemic, and Contagious diseases,	636	657	1,293
Diseases of respiratory organs,	{ Consumption, 279 Decline, 110 Pneumonia, 100 All others, 78	306	1,169
Nervous diseases,		250
Old age,		250
Diseases of digestive organs,		129
Violence,	101	64	165
Diseases of circulating organs,	35	16	51

We may add, that, of the total proportion of those, in the much less populous county of Cornwall, who died by diseases of the respiratory organs during the same period, 170 males and 140 females died of consumption, 125 males and 105 females of decline, and 65 males and 42 females of pneumonia. According to Mr. Harris' observations for rain at Devonport and Plymouth, the mean annual quantity for 6 years was 5313.58 cubic inches; or, according to the usual mode, 36.24 inches in depth. Sidmouth, and its vicinity, are considered to be amongst the most beneficial and beautiful situations in the county.

Produce.—Both arable and grass husbandry are attended to in this county. Wheat, barley, peas, and beans, are the usual crops towards the eastern district; wheat, oats, and the artificial grasses, are more usual towards the west. Potatoes are extensively reared in the southern parts, at the South Hams, and largely exported from Dartmouth. Corn is also grown at South Hams, and it has been noted for its barley. The chief corn-markets in the county are Exeter, Tavistock, Totness, Barnstaple, Plymouth, and Kingsbridge. The Devonshire Agricultural society was instituted in 1791, for the improvement of the soils and of the vegetable and animal produce of the county. Devonshire, and above all, South Hams, has been for centuries celebrated for its cider. Almost every farm has its orchard, and the general produce is so great as to afford a considerable surplus for exportation, even after large deductions have been made for home consumption. The soil is particularly well adapted to the growth of the apple; which likewise flourishes in the red sandstone district, where much cider is made. A disorder termed the Devonshire colic has been attributed to this beverage, or to its adulteration with lead in the cider-presses. Amongst the natural vegetable productions of this county is the beautiful scarlet lichen of Dartmoor, which, not many years ago, was used as a dye for cloth. It is stated by the Messrs. Lysons, that, in the years from 1762 to 1767, inclusive, Mr. Davy, whose brother had obtained a patent for making it into English orchil, collected from the rocks and tors of Dartmoor, nearly 100 tons of the lichen tartareus; and that even during the present century, many tons of this lichen, and of the lichen parellus, which is applicable to the same purposes, have been collected in the vicinity of Okehampton. Mrs. Bray, who displays no less talent than enthusiasm in the cause of Devon, thinks it even not improbable, that, as a dye stuff, this lichen was alluded to by Pliny; when, speaking of British dyes, he says, that they were enriched by "wonderful discoveries, and that their purples and scarlets were produced only by certain wild herbs;" and it must be remembered that even the great tin trade of the Phenicians was carried on chiefly for its auxiliary aid in dyeing the Tyrian purple.

In some parts of this county considerable attention is paid to the breeding of sheep. The established breed, reared chiefly on Dartmoor and Exmoor, is the middle woolled class, bearing a strong resemblance to the Dorsets; but many other kinds are also reared. The total stock is estimated at 630,000, nearly 200,000 of which produce heavy fleeces of long wool. The Dartmoor sheep produces the well-known Okehampton mutton. It is a small breed, weighing about 14 lbs. per quarter. The wool averages 7 lbs. a fleece. But the extensive pasture-lands are most generally appropriated to the purposes of the dairy, and the fattening of the Devonshire cattle, a very fine breed with wide-spreading horns, and of an uniformly light brown colour. This breed, for working, and for fattening, is allowed, by the best judges, to be one of the most perfect in the island. For symmetry of form and limb also, as well as richness of bronze colour, it is a model of beauty in its kind. Heifers and cows of 3 and 4 years old are preferred for feeding; and they are fit for the market in the short space of 20 weeks. They are not much esteemed for the dairy. The native breed of horses, in Devon, is small, resembling the Welsh and Highland breeds. The Dartmoor poneys are usually about 12½ hands high; coarse in form; but surprisingly spirited and hardy. The late Edward Bray, Esq., of Tavistock, reared great numbers of these horses, which were disposed of at an annual sale on the moor; but, since his death, the breed has become almost extinct. Red or forest deer once abounded in this county, but it is now also almost extinct.

Manufactures and Trade.—This county is an important woollen district. Its principal manufacture, from an early period, has been woollen cloth. There appears to be no mention of fulling mills in Devonshire in the Domesday survey; but cloth was woven at Exeter and Chudleigh in the reign of Edward I. The Dartmoor wool, however, was at that time exported; but Edward III. prohibited the exportation of wool, and encouraged the immigration of foreign weavers. In the 15th century, friezes, tavistocks, or western dozens, and other species of coarse cloths, were exported by the Devonshire merchants to Brittany, and bartered for dowlas, lockram, and canvas. In the reign of Edward IV. an Italian taught the English the art of weaving kerseys, "for which," says Westcote, "at first they only used Devon wool, which is more than any stranger travelling the county would suppose, since, except in Dartmoor, Exmoor, and such open grounds, the sheep are hidden by the high grown ridges of the enclosures." The Devonshire kerseys had acquired celebrity, and were an important article of commerce to the Levant, in the early part of the 16th century; but towards the end of that century, frauds of the manufacturers brought them into discredit. The market for wool and cloths, which had long been at Crediton, was removed, in 1538, to Exeter. In the early part of the 17th century, the kersey trade revived, and serges, previously introduced—which differ from kerseys in this, that the chain is worsted, while that of the kersey is the same as the shute or warp, only more twisted—were extensively manufactured; the Exeter market being, as Westcote remarks, "abundantly furnished of all sorts and prizes, fine, coarse, broad, narrow, so that the number will scarcely be credited." Crediton had then become pre-eminent for fine spinning. Totness produced a sort of coarse cloth called Pynn whites, not elsewhere made. Barnstaple and Torrington furnished bayes and fryzadoes, &c.; and Pilton, cottons and lining, "so coarse a stuff as there was a væ (a woe) pronounced against them in these words:—'Woe unto you, ye Piltonians, that make cloth without wool.'" Many other places contributed to the great Exeter mart, and the trade increased, and towards the latter part of the 17th century, was supposed to have come to its greatest height. In 1759 it had somewhat declined; but still Exeter, from whence a great part of the woollen goods manufactured in the county was then, as it still is, exported, was esteemed the greatest wool market in England, next to Leeds; and one of the Lysons was assured, that, about the year 1768, the annual exports of woollen cloth were above a million in value: 330,414 pieces of cloth were exported from Exeter alone in that year. The trade suffered considerably during the American war; but after the peace, in some measure recovered itself; and the extension of exportation to the East Indies, which took place soon afterwards, caused it to equal its former amount: at all events, in 1787, 295,311 pieces were exported from Exeter. In 1789, the East India trade being then increasing, 121,000 pieces were bought by the East India company alone. These were of the sort of serges called Sandfords, except 600 pieces of broads made at Crediton: the others were made mostly at Ashburton, Tavistock, Modbury, North Tawton, and Newton Bushel. The East India company, while they had the monopoly of the tea trade, were enabled to force these pieces of serge or long ells, on the Chinese in exchange; and it is believed, by some of the Devonshire manufacturers, that they were induced to do this at the request of the executive government, in order to relieve the great and sudden distress in which the weavers and manufacturers of Devonshire had previously been involved. From 1795 to 1805, the company annually purchased from 250,000 to 300,000 pieces. After this their purchases began to decline to about 200,000. After the renewal of the charter, in 1813, their demand still further declined. At the publication of the Mag. Brit., in 1822, they did not annually exceed 150,000 pieces; yet more than two-thirds of the woollen cloths, then made in Devon, were for the East India company. Ever since the expiration of the company's charter, the trade has been very fluctuating, and neither so extensive nor so regular as it had previously been: nevertheless, in 1838, serges or long ells were still made almost at every town and village in the county; giving employment to more than 3,000 looms, of which there were, in and around Ashburton, about 660; Okehampton, 530; Collumpton, 500; Buckfast, 500; Exeter, 300; Totness, 230; Buckfastleigh, 200; South and North Molton, 200; Crediton and North Taunton, 150; and Tavistock, 100. The hand-loom commissioner, Mr. Austin, observes that these looms were not all situated in the places he has thus enumerated, but that there the manufacturers resided who gave out work for so many looms. Besides kerseys and long ells, which have been in general of a scarlet colour, various other branches of woollen manufacture, such as plush, druggets, sagaties, duroys, kerseymeres; with flannel, estameans, and baize, have been carried on here at various times and places; but kerseys and serges have ever been the characteristic manufacture of Devonshire; and it is a remarkable fact, that, since the East India company opened their contracts to public competition, and diminished the amount of their orders, thus reducing the wages of the weavers; the whole of this still extensive manufacture has, in all parts of Devonshire, with the partial exception of COLLUMPTON,—which see,—fallen into the hands of women; and we gather, from the interesting reports of Mr. Austin and other hand-loom commissioners, that, though the general distress of the weaving population—the causes of which seem too deep seated to be of mere temporary continuance—has not hitherto been, in any considerable degree, attributed to the introduction of power-looms; the certain prospect of their universal introduction, even, under certain modifications, into the very cottages of the peasants and lower classes in general themselves; together with the facts, “that a woman can, with the power-loom, do twice as much as a man can in a hand-loom;” and that “it appears to be a custom, in every trade, to pay women at a lower rate than men for the same article;” leave no alternative but the inevitable conclusion, that, “when this generation of weavers has passed away, women only will find employment. There will be no weavers as a class. The work (as in Devonshire) will be done by the wives of agricultural labourers, or different mechanics, and the weaving will no longer give a designation to the race.” The manufacture of blankets has been established in Devonshire since the expiry of the Company's charter; and many of the women, previously employed in weaving serges, have been since employed in glove-making, &c.

Since the repeal of the prohibition to export English long wool, great quantities have been exported from Devonshire, chiefly to France, for the manufacture, it is believed, of finer articles than serges: and though there has been a still greater compensatory importation of foreign wool, duty free, cheaper than their own, and much used; it is, nevertheless, supposed, that the English wool is better adapted for the manufactures of Devon; and that hence the exportation of home-grown wool is injurious to its serge and long ell trade. Besides, an article like serge, and made, it is alleged, of English wool, and at a lower price than that at which the Devonshire manufacturers themselves can produce it, has been recently imported to the London market from France and elsewhere abroad; and though not, as yet, so good, it is conceived, by some of the Devonshire manufacturers, that the chief trade of this county stands near to ‘the brink of a precipice.’ In 1838, there were 39 woollen mills here, employing 1,810 hands. The linen trade is carried on at Crediton, where there are about 20 looms; and at Plymouth, where there are about 58. There is also a flax-mill at Axminster: in all, in 1838, there were three flax or linen mills, employing 101 hands. At Axminster, also, the most beautiful Turkey and Persian carpets have been imitated with great success since 1755. In 1838 there were three silk-mills, employing 405 hands, at Church Staunton, Aylesbeer, and St. Mary Ottery, in this county. One at Collyton was unemployed. The manufacture of bone or thread-lace once flourished at HONITON: which see. Lace has also been made at St. Mary Ottery. A large manufactory of Nottinghamshire machine lace was established at Tiverton in 1815, and another at Raleigh, near Barnstaple, in 1822. Blond lace has also been made in Devon; but the machine lace trade in general has, of late years, declined one-half. Among the other manufactures of this county, besides its mineral produce, and others already discussed, are Pottery, at Bovey-Heathfield, and elsewhere; butter made without the churn in most parts of the county; and ‘clotted’ or ‘clouted’ cream, peculiar to the dairies of Devon. A beverage called white ale is brewed here: see ДОБРОЕ. Whetstones are manufactured from soft sandstone, and alabaster has been converted into good plaster of Paris.

History.—The Cornish Britons named this part of the island Dunan, from the inequality of its soil. The Welsh called it Deuffneynt; and the addition of the word scyre produced the Anglo-Saxon Devnascyre, which has been softened down into Devonshire. It is supposed to have been first inhabited by the Cimbric, most of whom emigrated to Ireland when a portion of the Belgic invaders settled in the county. In the time of the Romans it was a prominent part of Britannia prima, and inhabited by the Damnonii, —the Dumnonii of Ptolemy, and Damnonii of most other writers, with the exception of Mr. Polwhele, who, in his ‘Historical View of Devonshire,’ insists on calling them Danmonii, and maintains that they were of Eastern origin, and probably from Armenia! In the Saxon period it became part of Wessex. It is probable that at a very early period this district was a seat of warfare, as there are vestiges of numerous fortifications indicative of its having been so, but the earliest military transaction on record is the defeat of the Britons, in 614, by Cynegil, king of the West Saxons. The Danes having made frequent descents on the coast, at last settled themselves in Exeter, but were besieged by Alfred, and compelled to a truce. In the ensuing year they landed on the northern coast, and were defeated with the loss of their favourite standard of the raven. In 894 they attempted to besiege Exeter, but withdrew on the approach of Alfred. In 1001, they were equally unsuccessful in their attack upon that city, and, pillaging the surrounding country, retired with the spoil. Subsequently, however, they gained possession, and nearly destroyed it. In 1067, Exeter stood a regular siege before it surrendered to William the Conqueror. On the accession of Rufus, it was laid waste by the partizans of Robert, duke of Normandy. During the civil wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, Devonshire was much disturbed: though no battle was fought within its limits, yet the warmth of party feeling was strongly evinced. In 1497, Perkin Warbeck besieged Exeter, but the siege being raised by the earl of Devon, Warbeck proceeded to Taunton. When the contest between Charles I. and his party commenced, the county was controlled by committees, and the majority of its inhabitants were attached to the parliament. Plymouth was fortified by the townsmen against the royalists. Exeter was garrisoned by parliament, and a cavalry body raised in the county was stationed at Tavistock. After the defeat of the parliamentarians, a cessation of hostilities was agreed on; but the treaty was soon broken off, and the country again disturbed by internal dissensions. In 1644 the earl of Essex fixed his quarters at Tiverton; and having, by this means, secured Barnstable for the parliament, marched into Cornwall, and was followed by the king. In October, Ilfracombe and Barnstable surrendered to the royal forces. In 1645, the club-men of Devon declared for the parliament. From this time the royalists experienced great reverses. In the midst of their disasters, Sir Thomas Fairfax, commander-in-chief of the parliamentary army, entered Devonshire, and reduced every town and fortress. Pursuing his victorious career, he stormed the church and castle of Tiverton, and attacked, and totally defeated, Lord Hopeton's army at Torrington. This victory appears to have given the death-blow to the royalists' power in the west. The last garrison which held out for the king was Charles-fort at Salcombe-Regis. The latest event of national importance which took place in this county was the landing of the prince of Orange at Torbay, in 1688, preparatory to the revolution which placed him on the throne. This county gives the title of Duke to the noble family of Cavendish.

Antiquities.—There are, in this county, numerous British and Druidical remains, with some Roman, including stations, encampments, pavements, &c.; besides several Saxon and Danish encampments, and numerous abbeys, priories, and other monastic establishments, colleges, churches, castles, &c., accounts of which are given in their respective places. At Grimspound in Manaton, there is a curious enclosure of loose stones, 4 acres in extent, supposed to be either vestiges of the rude houses of the Damnonii, or Druidical remains. Ancient British roads run from the mouth of the Exe to Woodbury, and thence to Taunton in Somersetshire; from Exeter to Molland Botreaux; Crediton to Halden; Exeter to Okehampton; and Seaton to Molland. The solitudes of Dartmoor are the great store-house of Druidical, as well as other British, remains; and it is even conjectured that the ancient oaks of Wistman's or Wiseman's wood, near Bairdown or the hill of Bards, amidst the gigantic tors, and many British remains, in the forest of Dartmoor, are, so to speak, the posterity of a Druidical "grove in stony places;" and that Dartmoor, from its situation, must have been one of the last retreats of that "deathless brotherhood," the Druids of Damnonia, after they were exposed to the persecution of the Roman power. Here cairns, obelisks, circles, bridges, cromlechs, rocking-stones, and remains of British huts, have been widely scattered; but within the last 20 or 30 years many of its most interesting memorials have been destroyed. Few places, however, are more deserving of the attention of the antiquary than Dartmoor, and few places are really less known:—See Bray's Description of Devonshire.—In the ancient tin streams, and elsewhere, various celts, and Roman coins, rings, brooches, &c., have been discovered. Ancient bronze wristlets were even found round the wrists of a skeleton dug up a few years since at the earth-work near Lower St. Columb Porth; and near the remains of the Phœnician smelting houses, there was found a block of Jews' tin, much corroded, and betraying marks of such great antiquity, that it is supposed to be the most ancient in existence.

DEVYNOCK. See DEFYNOCK.

DEWCHURCH (MUCH), a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Wormelow, union and county of Hereford; 6 miles south-west by south of Hereford, in the vicinity of the Abergavenny and Hereford railway. Living, a discharged vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Birch Much, in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £9 13s. 4d.; gross income £480. Patrons, in 1835, trustees of T. G. Symonds. There is a daily school here. Charities, £12 per annum. Hops are cultivated to some extent in this parish. Acres 4,890. Houses 102. A. P. £4,296. Pop., in 1801, 482; in 1831, 573. Poor rates, in 1837, £269.

DEWCHURCH (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Wormelow, union and county of Hereford; 5½ miles south by east of Hereford, west of the river Wye, and near one of its branches. Living, a curacy, not in charge, subordinate to the vicarage of Lugwardine. Acres 1,640. Houses 60. A. P. £1,662. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 573. Poor rates, in 1837, £84.

DEWLISH, a parish in the liberty of Dewlish, union of Dorchester, Blandford division of the county of Dorset; 9½ miles south-west by west of Blandford-Forum, near the post-road from Axminster to Salisbury. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Milbourn-St.-Andrew. There are 2 daily schools here. Acres 3,480. Houses 75. A. P. £2,500. Pop., in 1801, 348; in 1831, 361. Poor rates, in 1837, £145.

DEWSALL, a parish in Wormelow hund., union and county of Hereford; 4½ miles south-west by south of Hereford. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the perpetual curacy of Acconbury. There were 14 acres of hops grown here in 1835. Acres 500. Houses 5. A. P. £657. Pop., in 1801, 47; in 1831, 44. Poor rates, in 1837, £16.

DEWSBURY, a parish and market-town, partly in the wapentake of Morley, but chiefly in the lower division of Aghrigg wapentake, union of Dewsbury, west riding of Yorkshire; 34 miles south-west of York, and 10 east by south of Halifax, partly on the southern declivity of a gentle eminence, and partly in a vale on the northern bank of the Calder. The town is excellently situated for commercial and other purposes, near the line of the Leeds and Manchester railway, and of the Huddersfield canal. The Thornhill-Lees station on the Manchester and Leeds railway is ¾ of a mile distant; and the distance from this station to Leeds is 19½, and to Manchester 40½ miles. The parish also comprises the townships of Soot-hill, Clifton-cum-Hartshead, Dewsbury, and Ossett.

Acres 9,620. Houses 3,853. A. P. £23,190. Pop., in 1801, 11,752; in 1831, 19,854. Acres of the township 1,330. Houses 1,621. A. P. £9,580. Pop., in 1801, 4,566; in 1831, 8,272. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; rated at £22 13s. 9d.; gross income £238. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. St. John's, at Dewsbury Moor, is a perpetual curacy; gross income £53. St. Paul's and St. Peter's are also perpetual curacies; gross income of the former, £49; of the latter, £37; all in the patronage of the vicar of Dewsbury. There are here an Independent church, formed in 1814; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1787; and one of the New Connexion, in 1821. One of these is licensed under the new marriage act. This parish possesses 23 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £100 per annum, and three others are partly supported by small endowments. Minor charities about £3 per annum, besides three cottages occupied rent-free by poor people. Poor rates of the parish, in 1837, £3,580; of the township, £1,401. The Dewsbury poor-law union comprehends 11 parishes. Dewsbury is considered the centre or focus of the blanket manufacture in the west riding of Yorkshire. The principal manufactures carried on, besides blankets, are, coarse broad cloth, carpets, and cotton manufactures. Besides its other local advantages, from excellent inland navigation, and railways, which now afford communication with Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, York, &c.; it is also near a large coal district. In 1838, there were 25 woollen and 3 worsted mills,—besides a cotton mill,—employing, collectively, 1,527 hands, within this parish. A mechanics' institution has been established here:—See YORKSHIRE—Manufactures: and there is a mart or market-place called the "Blanket-hall." Fairs for horned cattle and sheep are held on the Wednesday before May 12th, and the Wednesday before October 10th. There is a branch of the West Riding Union Banking company here; and also a branch of the Yorkshire District bank. Dewsbury is an ancient town. Paulinus, the first archbishop of York, is understood, from an inscription on the top of the church, to have preached here in 627. On the low and level ground near the river Calder, on which this church is now built, he is said to have first preached the truths of Christianity to the inhabitants, and performed in the Calder the initiatory rite of baptism. This is believed to have been one of the earliest settlements of Christianity in England. From the early preaching of Paulinus, Dewsbury became the common centre whence the Christian doctrines spread over the vale of Calder, and hence it also became the mother-church of the west. Several parishes still acknowledge their original dependence, by certain payments to the vicar of Dewsbury. A very singular ancient Saxon tomb was discovered here some time ago.

DEYTHUR HUNDRED, in Montgomeryshire, North Wales. Houses 441. Pop., in 1831, 2,417.

DIBDEN, a parish in the liberty of Dibden, division and union of New Forest, county of Southampton; 3 miles south-west of Southampton, about a mile west of Southampton water. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £5 12s. 11d.; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, Lord Ashburton. Acres 2,000. Houses 77. A. P. £2,366. Pop., in 1801, 288; in 1831, 418. Poor rates, in 1837, £181.

DICKERING WAPENTAKE, in the east riding of the county of York. Area 109,980 acres. Houses 3,513. Pop., in 1831, 17,902.

DICKLEBURGH, a parish in the hund. of Diss, union of Depwade, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles north-north-east of Scole, on the post-road from Ipswich to Norwich, and close upon the London and Norwich railway. It includes the hamlet of Langmere. Living, a rectory, in four portions, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £28; gross income £844. Tithes commuted in 1840. Patron, Trinity college, Cambridge. There is a daily school in this parish supported by endowment. Charities, £56 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, 635. Acres 2,590. Houses 172. A. P. £3,239. Pop., with that of Langmere, in 1801, 550; in 1831, 815.

DIDBROOKE, a parish in Kiftsgate hund., county of Gloucester; 3 miles north-east of Winchcombe, east of the river Isborne. It includes the township of Pinnock and Hyde. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Pinnock, and the curacy of Hayles, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £7 9s. 10d.; gross income £259. Patron, in 1835, C. H. Tracey, Esq. Acres 2,330. Houses 43. A. P. £1,915. Pop., in 1801, 254; in 1831, 240. Poor rates, in 1837, £117.

DIDCOT. See DUDCOTE.

DIDDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Toseland, union of St. Neot's, county of Huntingdon; about 4 miles north of St. Neot's, close on the post-road from Alconbury to Tempsford. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £7 4s. 7½d., returned at £147 19s. 3d.; gross income £134. It is in the patronage of Merton college, Oxford. There is a daily school here. Acres 1,450. Houses 37. A. P. £1,866. Pop., in 1801, 156; in 1831, 208. Poor rates, in 1837, £136.

DIDDLEBURY, or DODLESBURY, a parish in the hund. of Munslow, union of Ludlow, county of Salop; 7½ miles north of Ludlow, west of the river Corve. It includes the townships of Diddlebury, Middlehope, Sutton, and Peaton, also Crofton and Splashford, Lawton and Paston, Upper and Lower Parks, and Westhope. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Westhope, in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £12 1s. 3d.; gross income £384. Patron, the dean and chapter of Hereford. Here was formerly an alien priory. There are 2 daily schools here. Charities, £41 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £577. Acres 7,400. Houses 159. A. P. £9,471. Pop., in 1801, 837; in 1831, 920.

DIDLESTON. See DUDLESTON, Salop.

DIDLING, a parish in the hund. of Dumpford, rape of Chichester, union of Midhurst, county of Sussex; 3½ miles south-west of Midhurst. Living, a rectory, united with that of Trayford. This parish is now included within the boundaries of Midhurst. Acres 1,000. Houses 22. A. P. £537. Pop., in 1801, 83; in 1831, 82. Poor rates, in 1837, £34.

DIDLINGTON, a parish in the southern division of the hund. of Greenhoe, union of Swaffham, county of Norfolk; 5½ miles east-south-east of Stoke-Ferry, bounded on the west by the river Wissey or Stoke. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the rectory of Colverston, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12 14s. 7d.; gross income £110. Patron, in 1835, Lord Berners. Acres 1,810. Houses 12. A. P. £870. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1837, £125.

DIDMARTON, a parish in the upper division of Grumbald's-Ash hund., union of Tetbury, county of Gloucester; 5½ miles south-west of Tetbury, on the post-road from Bath to Farringdon, in Berkshire. Living, a discharged rectory, annexed with the patronage to that of Oldbury-on-the-Hill. There is a daily school here. Acres 170. Houses 21. A. P. £1,166. Pop., in 1801, 74; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1837, £34.

DIDSBURY, a chapelry in Manchester parish, Salford hund., co.-palatine of Lancaster; 3 miles west of Stockport, bounded on the south by the river Mersey. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester, returned at £135; gross income £154. Patron, in 1835, S. Newall, Esq. There are here 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £27 per annum, for which 76 poor children are instructed. Acres 1,560. Houses 181. A. P. £3,803. Pop., in 1801, 619; in 1831, 1,067. Poor rates, in 1837, £419.

DIULACRES, a hamlet in the parish of Leeke, county of Stafford. Here was a Cistercian abbey, founded in 1214, by Blundeville, Earl of Chester, and valued at £227 5s. per annum. Very few traces of this edifice can now be seen, but recent researches have demonstrated that it must have been a building of considerable extent and beauty.

DIGBY, a parish in the wapentake of Flaxwell, parts of Kesteven, union of Sleaford, county of Lincoln; 5½ miles north of Sleaford. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount £209 13s. Living, a discharged vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Bloxholme. There are here 2 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. Acres 2,800. Houses 56. A. P. £2,211. Pop., in 1801, 242; in 1831, 319. Poor rates, in 1837, £246.

DIGSWELL, a parish in the hund. of Broad-Water, union of Welwyn, county of Hertford; 1 mile south-east by south of Welwyn, south of the river Maran. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Huntingdon and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 4s. 2d.; gross income £418. Patron, in 1835, S. Everard, Esq. There is a Sunday and daily National school here. Acres 1,270. Houses 36. A. P. £1,643. Pop., in 1801, 178; in 1831, 196. Poor rates, in 1837, £86.

DIHEWID, a parish in the valley of Aëron, on the river Mydyr, hundreds of Moyddyn and Troed-yr-aur, union of Aberaeron, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 5 miles south-south-east of Aberaeron, on the river Mydyr, a small branch of the Aëron. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £4; gross income £90. Patrons, in 1835, Earl of Lisburne and Major Lewis. A fair is held on May the 9th, for pigs, and pedler's ware. Houses 106. A. P. £1,692. Pop., in 1801, 336; in 1831, 532. Poor rates, in 1837, £169.

DILHAM, a parish in the hund. of Tunstead, county of Norfolk; 4 miles south-east of North Walsham, bounded on the north and east by the North river. Living, a discharged vicarage with that of Honing, in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; gross income £272. Patron, the bishop of Ely. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 1,390. Houses 95. A. P. £1,506. Pop., in 1801, 353; in 1831, 450. Poor rates, in 1837, £104.

DILHORNE, a parish in Totmonslow hund., union of Cheadle, county of Stafford; 2 miles north-west of Cheadle, at one of the sources of the river Tean. It includes the township of Forsbrook. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £8 13s., returned at £110 10s.; gross income £203. In the patronage of the dean and chapter of Lichfield. There are in this parish 2 daily and 3 day and Sunday schools, one of which, a free grammar-school, was founded in the reign of Henry VIII., and is endowed with property, the revenues of which, in 1824, amounted to £261 1s. This school, after being a mere sinecure for upwards of a century, was recently about to be rendered an efficient seminary for classical and mathematical learning. A very spacious school, with a residence for the master, has been erected in the Elizabethan style by the marquis of Hastings, the patron, at Blythmarsh, on the turnpike road from Uttoxeter to Newcastle, and was opened at Christmas, 1838, for boarders. There was another school at Blythmarsh, some years ago, endowed with £22 per annum. Other charities, £5 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £902. The Dilborne coals are considered to be equal, if not preferable, to the celebrated Wallsend coals. Arrangements were entered into in 1839, for the supply of London with Dilborne and other north of Stafford coals. The transit to be in the meantime effected chiefly by the intervening canals. No successful attempt has hitherto been made to introduce these coals into the London market. Acres 3,550. Houses 316. A. P. £5,586. Pop., in 1801, 1,083; in 1831, 1,510.

DILL HUNDRED, in the rape of Pevensey, county of Sussex. Area 12,170 acres. Houses 465. Pop., in 1831, 2,949.

DILLICAR, or DILLIKER, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Kendal, Westmoreland; 12 miles north of Kirkby-Lonsdale, on the river Lune. A. P. £584. Pop., in 1801, 77; in 1831, 109. Poor rates, in 1837, £10.

DILLINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of East Dereham, hund. of Launditch, county of Norfolk; 2 miles north-north-west of East Dereham, on a branch of the Winsum. Acres 460. Houses 6. Pop., in 1801, 31; in 1831, 33. Other returns with parish.

DILSTON, a township in the parish of Corbridge, Northumberland; 2½ miles east by south of Hexham, on the southern bank of the South Tyne, east of the Devil's Water. Here was the ancient seat of the Devilstones; and of the Ratcliffes, earls of Derwentwater. The chapel to the mansion of the latter family, still remains. Houses 25. Pop., in 1801, 131; in 1831, 175. Poor rates, in 1837, £28.

DILTON, a chapelry in the parish and hund. of Westbury, county of Wilts; 2 miles south-south-west of Westbury. Living, a curacy subordinate to the vicarage of Westbury. There are here 2 daily schools. Fairs are held annually on Easter Monday, and the 24th of September, for cattle, horses, and cheese. Houses 454. Pop., in 1801, 1,524; in 1831, 2,172. Other returns with the parish.

DILWORTH, a township in the parish of Ribchester, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 7 miles north-east of Preston, on the river Ribble, and near the Preston railway. Here are 3 daily schools. Houses 142. A. P. £2,299. Pop., in 1801, 524; in 1831, 874. Poor rates, in 1837, £141.

DILWYN, a parish in the hund. of Stretford, union of Weobley, county of Hereford; 2½ miles north-east of Weobley. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £6 2s. 6d.; gross income £388. Patron, the bishop of Hereford. There are 2 daily schools, one partly supported by endowment. Charities, £12 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £449. There are about 120 acres of hops reared here. Acres 6,080. Houses 202. A. P. £7,704. Pop., in 1801, 846; in 1831, 1,035.

DINAS, a parish in the hund. of Kemess, union of Cardigan, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 4 miles north-east of Fishguard, on the coast, at Newport Bay. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of St. David's; rated at £8, returned at £101 6s.; gross income £163. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Lloyd, Esq. Here is a Calvinistic Methodist church, formed in 1812; and a daily school. Houses 125. A. P. £700. Pop., in 1801, 620; in 1831, 741. Poor rates, in 1837, £206.

DINAS-DINLLE, in the township of Dirille, on Carnarvon-bay; 3 miles south by west of Carnarvon, southern bank of the Gurfai river. This place seems to have been a fort or encampment of the ancient Britons. It is a vast mount of gravel and sand, in the centre of which are remains of the foundations of buildings.

DINAS-MOWDDU, or the CITY OF MOWDDU, is a secluded village, in the parish of Mallwdd, county of Merioneth. It is always called the city by its inhabitants and by their neighbours, and has, perhaps, more houses than the city of St. Asaph, to which the title undeniably belongs. The boundaries are said to have been perambulated a few years since. This city did not escape the diligent curiosity of Mr. Hutton, who gives the following graphic account of it:—"The situation of Dinas Mowddu is romantic, singular, and beautiful, upon a small flat made by nature, and improved by art, on the declivity of a mountain prodigiously elevated, and nearly perpendicular; on the left descending to the town, and on the right continuing the same steep down to the river Dovy, which washes its foot. The road winds round the hill in the shape of a bow, and the houses take the same curve. It appears to the observer a town suspended upon the side of a mountain. Curiosity led me to count the houses, which were 45. One of these, by far the best, is worth at a fair rent, perhaps 50 shillings per annum. In most of the houses I perceived that the inhabitants could not injure themselves by falling down stairs. Although in England I appeared like other men, yet at Dinas Mowddu I stood single. The people eyed me as a phenomenon, with countenances mixed with fear and inquiry. Perhaps they took me for an inspector of taxes; they could not take me for a window-peeper, for there were scarcely any to peep at, and the few I saw were in that shattered state which proved there was no glazier in the place. Many houses were totally without glass. Ambition here seems wholly excluded. The dress of the inhabitants changes not. It is made for use, not show. That of the softer sex, I was told, is a flannel shift. I did not see the smallest degree of smartness in the apparel, even of the young females. I have reason to think their style of living is as plain as their dress, for a swelling in front, from luxury, is rarely seen. One of the curiosities I saw, was a goat feeding, much at ease, upon the ridge of a house. Perhaps the people within did not fare much better than the goat without. Returning, well pleased with my visit, I remarked to my landlord at Mallwyd, a civil intelligent man, that I could not conceive the whole property of the united inhabitants of this celebrated town exceeded £600. 'I can tell you to a trifle,' said he, 'for I know every one of them well.' After a short pause he replied, 'It does not exceed £240!' If care be the concomitant of wealth, these people must be happy; and their circumscribed style of existence seems to declare it. I saw neither a beggar nor a person in rags." The valley of this "city of the mountains" is held to be one of the most beautiful in Wales. It is so surrounded and shut in by apparently inaccessible mountains, that it has been compared, perhaps, all things considered, not inaptly, to "the happy valley of Raselas;" and it possesses a spa with mineral waters of such rare virtue, and a spring so celebrated for the cure of diseases of the eye, that recent speculators have been induced to enter into a grand project, with a capital of £45,000, for its conversion into an "exclusive" and stylish watering-place; for which purpose, they have agreed on terms with the lord of the manor, "for a lease of 999 years of a most delightful site for the erection of a hotel, with elegant dwelling-houses, having a western and southern aspect, with a large lawn, a winding river, and romantic water-falls, in front, within a few minutes' walk of the spa, and possessing, behind, a hundred acres of mountainous land, well-wooded, with the privilege of sporting over 10,000 acres of the surrounding country."

There are two churches here. The parish church is at Mallwydd. The service is performed exclusively in Welsh. There is in this church a singular monument of a once celebrated controversy as to the proper position of the communion table. The only instance in the empire, it is alleged, where it is not set against the wall at the east end of the church, is at Dinas-Mowddu. The rector of the day, Dr. Davies, placed it in the middle of the chancel, and retained it there in defiance of Archbishop Laud, who fiercely contested the matter with him. As is common with eager spirits, the archbishop did not know well what he was contending about; for had he visited the church, and seen the table in the middle of the chancel, remembering the position of the high altar in Roman churches, it is probable that he would have been reconciled to the doctor's disobedience. There is here an Independent church, formed in 1792. The municipal institutions of this secluded city may appear venerable, on account of their undefined antiquity. Its charter and title are unknown. The officers are, a mayor, a recorder, and a bailiff or serjeant-at-mace. The mayor quells disturbances at the fairs, and acts with a county magistrate in granting licenses. A court is held on two successive days at the Red Lion, every spring and autumn. "That this was once a place of more consequence than its present state indicates," observes the Rev. J. Evans, "cannot be denied: indeed the annals of Wales notice it as having been the seat of a chieftain; and its vicinity the scene of feats of valour and barbarity. But that it was ever a place endowed with all the privileges of a powerful corporation, bearing the ensigns of majesty, and exhibiting the pomp and paraphernalia of a proud commercial city, is an idea almost too extravagant to find admission in the regions of imagination." Fairs are held on the Friday prior to Good Friday, June 2d, September 10th, October 1st, and November 13th, for sheep, horned cattle, and horses. Friday is market-day. See MALLWYDD.

DINAS-POWIS HUNDRED, in the county of Glamorgan, South Wales. Houses 1,069. Pop., in 1831, 5,621.

DINCHOPE. See BROMFIELD, Salop.

DINDER, a parish in the hund. of Wells-Forum, union of Wells, county of Somerset; 2 miles south-east of Wells, on the river Brue. Living, a prebend and rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £210a. 7d.; gross income £181. Patron, the bishop of Bath and Wells. There are 2 daily schools in this parish. Charities, £20 per annum. Acres 1,050. Houses 45. A. P. £1,192. Pop., in 1801, 185; in 1831, 210. Poor rates, in 1837, £165.

DINEDOR, a parish in the hund. of Webtree, union and county of Hereford; 3 miles south-east by south of Hereford, west of the river Wye. Living, a rectory, a peculiar in the jurisdiction of the dean of Hereford; rated at £89a. 7d.; gross income £329. Patron, Worcester college, Oxford. There are about 20 acres of hops reared here. Acres 1,744. Houses 54. A. P. £2,024. Pop., in 1801, 274; in 1831, 314. Poor rates, in 1837, £132.

DINEVAWR-CASTLE, in the parish of Llande-fysant, county of Carmarthen. It was built in the time of William the Conqueror, and formerly belonged to the descendants of Rhys-ap-Thomas, a Welch prince, who supported the Earl of Richmond when contending for the British sovereignty. It was a place of considerable strength, fortified with a double moat and rampart. From one of the windows, overhung with ivy, the most delightful view is obtained. The country presents, it is said, "a galaxy of picturesque beauty, at which remembrance becomes entranced, while description falters." Dinevavr gives the title of baron to the De Cardonnell family. The bardic meetings for South Wales were formerly held here.

DINGESTOW, a parish in the hund. of Ragland, union and county of Monmouth; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-south-west of Monmouth, on the river Trothy. It includes Gracedieu Park. Living, a discharged vicarage, with Tregare chapelry annexed to it, in the archd. and dio. of Llandaff; rated at £4 10s., returned at £150; gross income £250. Patrons, the chapter of Llandaff. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,120. Houses 42. A. P. £1,908. Pop., including that of Gracedieu Park, in 1801, 204; in 1831, 198. Poor rates, in 1837, £73.

DINHAM, a hamlet in the parish of Lanvair-Discoed, county of Monmouth; 4 miles west by south of Chepstow. The remains of an old castle exist here. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £70. Acres 410. Houses 3. A. P. £512. Pop., in 1801, 26; in 1831, 24. Poor rates, in 1837, £22.

DINGLEY, a parish in the hund. of Corby, union of Market-Harborough, county of Northampton; 2 miles east of Market-Harborough. The adjacent county is rich, varied, and romantic. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £9 4s. 4d.; gross income £352. Patron, in 1835, H. H. Hungerford, Esq. Dingley-hall, in this vicinity, is a noble mansion. Here was once a preceptory—founded in Stephen's reign. It belonged to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem. Acres 1,500. Houses 33. A. P. £2,777. Pop., in 1801, 143; in 1831, 160. Poor rates, in 1837, £208.

DINKLEY, a township in the hund. and parish of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 6 miles north of Blackburn, on a branch of the river Ribble. Acres 500. Houses 34. A. P. £768. Pop., in 1801, 197; in 1831, 223. Poor rates, in 1837, £61.

DINMEIRCHION. See DRIMEIRCHION.

DINMORE, or DYNEMORE, an extra-parochial liberty in Grimsworth hund., county of Hereford; 7 miles north by west of Hereford. Leland, in his Itin. vol. iv. p. 90, says, "There standeth a little by the west of the very toppe of Dinmore-hill, on the left hand as I roade, a commandry with a fayre place that belonged to the order of the knights of St. John of Hierusalem in London." Acres 640. Houses 2. Pop., in 1801, 15; in 1831, 21.

DINMORE. See CLUNGUNFORD.

DINNINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of Strathforth and Tickhill, union of Worksop, west riding of the county of York; 7 miles north-west of Worksop. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £4, returned at £68 3s. 11d.; gross income £103. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £130. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,540. Houses 39. A. P. £1,311. Pop., in 1801, 162; in 1831, 233. Poor rates, in 1837, £60.

DINNINGTON, a township in the parish of Ponteland, Northumberland; $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-north by west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, near the source of the river Pont. There are here 2 daily schools. Houses 64. Pop., in 1801, 158; in 1831, 354. Poor rates, in 1837, £31.

DINNINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Seavington-St.-Michael, county of Somerset; 3 miles north-west by west of Crewkerne, near the Chard canal. Living, a curacy, annexed to the rectory of Seavington-St.-Michael. Houses 29. A. P. £1,158. Pop., in 1801, 219; in 1831, 187. Poor rates, in 1837, £93.

DINSDALE (Low), or DITTINSDALE, a parish in the south-west division of Stockton ward, union of Darlington, county of Durham; 5 miles south-east of Darlington, on the river Tees. Acres 1,340. Houses 19. A. P. £1,545. Pop., in 1801, 108; in 1831, 169. Poor rates, in 1837, £45. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Durham; rated at £4 11s. 5d., returned at £128 5s. 8d.; gross income £246. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £184 15s. Patrons, the dean and chapter of Durham. Dinsdale-Spa is much resorted to by invalids; it was discovered in 1789, while searching for coal, and has been found serviceable in chronic diseases. A spacious hotel and extensive baths have been recently erected. The beautiful situation of this watering-place is thus described by Sir George Head, in his 'Home Tour among the Manufacturing Districts':—"The house is a spacious, well-built mansion, lately erected by the earl of Durham, embellished with lawn and pleasure-grounds, and situated on an eminence commanding a magnificent view over the broad vale of Cleveland as a foreground, and in the distance bounded by the Yorkshire mountains. Immediately below, the river Tees, almost equal in beauty to the Thames at Richmond, forms an ample and graceful bend; and on its hither bank plantations afford a retired and shaded walk, nearly two miles in extent. The hotel, the lawn, and the plantations, altogether, bear the appearance of a good comfortable gentleman's residence rather than of an inn.—I remained there several days, and was really delighted by the tranquillity of the spot.—The walks through the fields and woods in the neighbourhood of the Dinsdale-Spa are as beautiful as can be imagined, containing a splendid distant prospect, with a home picture of rural retirement; but there are few particular points of attraction in the way of rides or drives in the neighbourhood. There is, however, one local curiosity, which, if by chance seen under favourable circumstances, is worth the pains of a journey from London to obtain a sight of it; I allude to the Salmon Leap (or Fish Lock, as it is called), about two miles up the river. This barrier, when the water is low, is merely an artificial perpendicular fall of seven or eight feet in height, by means of a dyke, or stone-wall, thrown nearly across the river; I say nearly, a space being left on both sides, by which the fish, at particular seasons, enter and are taken."

DINSDALE (Over), a township in the parish of Sockburn, north riding of Yorkshire; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-south-west of Yarm, on the river Tees, near the Great Western railway. Acres 810. Houses 9. A. P. £1,051. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 58. Poor rates, in 1837, £34.

DINTING, a township in the parish of Glossop, Derbyshire; about 10 miles north by west of Chapel-in-le-Frith, intersected by the Manchester and Sheffield railway. It receives its name from the Dinting, a tributary of the Etherow, across which the Manchester and Sheffield canal is here carried at a great elevation. See HADFELD and DINTING.

DINTON WITH FORD AND UPTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Aylesbury, county of Buckingham; 4 miles west-south-west of Aylesbury. It includes the liberty of Moreton and the hamlet of Aston-Mollins. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Bucks and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £17 9s. 7d.; gross income £565. In the patronage of the Lord-chancellor. This parish possesses 1 Sunday and daily National, and 6 daily, schools. Acres 4,100. Houses 109. A. P. £3,298. Pop., in 1801, 668; in 1831, 893. Poor rates, in 1837, £770.

DINTON, a parish in the hund. of Warmingston, union of Wilton, county of Wilts; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Wilton. Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Telford, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £21 2s. 8d.; gross income, uncertain. In the patronage of Magdalene-college, Oxford. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 2,420. Houses 91. A. P., with Ditteridge parish, £2,765. Pop., in 1801, 421; in 1831, 536. Poor rates, in 1837, £176.

DIPPENHALL, a tything in the parish and hund. of Crondale, county of Southampton; 5 miles east-south-east of Oldham, near the post-road from Winchester to London. Houses 43. Pop., in 1821, 312; in 1831, 324. Other returns with the parish.

DIPTFORD, a parish in Stanborough hund., union of Totness, county of Devon; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Totness, on the eastern bank of the Avon, and near the post-road from Plymouth to Totness. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £29 2s. 1d.; gross income £582. Patroness, in 1835, Miss Taylor. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 4,150. Houses 129. A. P. £4,616. Pop., in 1801, 578; in 1831, 735. Poor rates, in 1837, £333.

DIPTON. See COLLIERLY.

DIRHAM and HINTON, a parish in the hund. of Grumbald's-ash, union of Chipping-Sodbury, county of Gloucester; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by east of Chipping-Sodbury, near the post-road from Bath to Farringdon. Acres 3,290. Houses 91. A. P. £4,994. Pop., in 1801, 437; in 1831, 516. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £14 12s. 6d.; gross income £520. Patron, in 1835, W. Blathwayte, Esq. This parish possesses 2 Sunday and daily National, and 2 daily, schools; one is endowed with £17 12s., and another with £37, per annum. The sum of £64 is here annually divided among poor clergymen, or widows of clergymen. Poor rates, in 1837, £220. In the vicinity are some traces of what has been supposed to have been a Saxon camp; but a writer in the 39th volume of the Monthly Magazine, struck with the resemblance of the spot to a Grecian stadium, considers it to have been a cursus annexed in Roman times to the city of Bath. It is a flat artificially levelled valley, skirted by hills, the sides of which next the valley only are cut into steps or terraces. On the tops of the hills are no earthworks or banks, so that this writer conceives fortifications to have been out of the question.

DICOVE, or DISNOVE, a tything in the parish of Burton, county of Somerset; 14 miles north-east by east of Somerton, near the source of the river Brue. Houses 8. Pop., in 1811, 60; in 1831, 35. Other returns with the parish.

DISERTH. See DYSERTH.

DISERTH-BETTWS. See BETTWS-DISERTH.

DISEWORTH, a parish in the western division of the hund. of Goscote, union of Shardlow, county of Leicester; 6 miles north-west of Loughborough, on a branch of the Trent. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £4, returned at £148; gross income £197. In the patronage of Christ's Hospital and the Haberdashers' company, London, alternately. Here are 3 daily schools, two of which are partly supported by small endowments. Charities £12 8s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £213. Lilly the astrologer was a native of this place. Acres 1,880. Houses 151. A. P. £3,497. Pop., in 1801, 628; in 1831, 764.

DISHFORTH, or DISFORD, a township and chapelry in Topcliffe parish, north riding of York; 4 miles north-north-west of Borough-bridge, near Lumyng-Lane. Living, a perpetual curacy to the vicarage of Topcliffe, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; returned at £43; gross income £60. Patron, the vicar of Topcliffe. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1816; and 2 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. Acres 1,600. Houses 76. A. P. £2,405. Pop., in 1801, 291; in 1831, 332. Poor rates, in 1837, £117.

DISHLEY. See THROPE-ACRE WITH DISHLEY.

DISS HUNDRED, in the new eastern division of the county of Norfolk, between Guiltcross and Earsham, bordering upon Suffolk. Area 25,450 acres. Houses 1,647. Pop., in 1831, 9,300.

DISS, a parish and market-town in the above hund., union of Depwade; 22 miles south-south-west of Norwich, and 86 north-east of London, situated north of the river Waveney, which divides it from Suffolk. The streets are wide, and the town looks prosperous. It is in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Acres 3,450. Houses 539. A. P. £6,999. Pop., in 1801, 2,246; in 1831, 2,934. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £33 6s. 8d.; gross income £755. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Manning. Here are a Baptist church, formed in 1789; a Presbyterian, in 1822; and a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1799. Here is also an Unitarian chapel, licensed under the new marriage act. The Society of Friends and the Independents have chapels here. Here are 15 daily schools. Charities, in 1834, £196 18s. 8d., of which £145 were the rents of the Town estate and of a Guild-hall, (formerly occupied as a school-house, but not endowed, and afterwards inhabited by private tenants,) bestowed for repairing the parish church and the streets, and then for the general benefit and use of the inhabitants. There are also alms-houses for 8 widows connected with this charity. There are two town-houses, also occupied by paupers. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,578. The principal manufacture is that of hemp, flax, and cotton. When the hand-loom weavers' commissioners were here, they found only one manufacturer giving out materials for drabnets, huckabacks, sheeting, and shirting; 63 hands were employed. There was also a large shop or factory, and a few sacking weavers were at work. The market is well supplied with yarn and linen cloth, besides general commodities. The market-day is Friday, and fairs are held last Friday in July, and November 8th, for cattle and toys. There is a branch of the East of England bank here. This was the native place of John Shelton, poet-laureate to Henry VIII., and rector of this parish.

DISSERTH, a parish in the hund. of Colwyn, union of Builth, county of Radnor, South Wales; 5 miles north-east of Builth, on a branch of the Wye. It includes the township of Trecoed. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Bettws-Disserth, in the dio. of St. David's and province of Canterbury; rated at £16; gross income £320. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £126 14s. 7d., due to the bishop of Carlisle and vicar of Newburn. Patron, the bishop of St. David's. Here are 2 daily schools. Houses 108. A. P. £1,112. Pop., in 1801, 264; in 1831, 334. Poor rates, in 1837, £277.

DISSINGTON (NORTH), a township in the parish of Newburn, Northumberland; 10 miles north-west of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, on the river Pont. Houses 14. Pop., in 1801, 80; in 1831, 76. Poor rates, in 1837, £45.

DISSINGTON (South), a township about 1 mile from North Dissington. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £193 2s. 3d., due to bishop of Carlisle and vicar of Newburn. Houses 12. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 77. Poor rates, in 1837, £77.

DISTINGTON, a parish in Allerdale ward, county of Cumberland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Workington, near St. George's channel. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; rated at £7 1s. 0 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £301. In the patronage of the earl of Lonsdale. There are 7 daily schools. At the southern extremity of the village are the ruins of Hayes-castle, once the residence of the Moresby family. Acres 2,910. Houses 203. A. P. £3,525. Pop., in 1801, 724; in 1831, 960. Poor rates, in 1837, £126.

DISTLEY, a chapelry in the parish of Stockport, county of Chester; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Stockport, west of the river Goyt, and intersected by the Peak-Forest canal. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £117. Patron, in 1835, Thomas Leigh, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £15 per annum, and a house. Acres 2,700. Houses 373. A. P. £4,754. Pop., in 1801, 995; in 1831, 2,037. Poor rates, in 1837, £486.

DITCHBURN (East and West), a township in the parish of Ellingham, Northumberland, consisting of two villages, the former 6 miles north-north-west, and the latter $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Alnwick, near the post-road from Berwick-upon-Tweed to Alnwick. Houses 12. Pop., in 1801, 87; in 1831, 77. Poor rates, in 1837, £23.

DITCHEAT, a parish in the hund. of Whitestone, union of Shepton-Mallet, county of Somerset; 3 miles north-north-west of Castlecary, north of the river Brue. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £46 5s.; gross income £959; nett income £770. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Leir. Here are 1 Sunday and daily National, and 2 daily, schools. In 1838 there was a silk mill here, employing 51 hands. Acres 5,220. Houses 261. A. P. £4,789. Pop., in 1801, 1,010; in 1831, 1,238. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,062.

DITCHELLING, a parish in the hund. of Street, rape of Lewes, union of Chailey, county of Sussex; 3 miles east-south-east of Hurst-Pierpoint, at the source of a branch of the Ouse. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Lewes and dio. of Chichester; rated at £11, returned at £130; gross income £163. Patron, the chancellor of Chichester. Here is a General Baptist, or Unitarian Baptist chapel, licensed under the new marriage act. Here are 6 daily schools. Charities £40 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £432. Six acres of hops were reared in this parish in 1835. A fair for sheep and swine is held here on April 5th, and one for pedlery on October 12th. Acres 5,270. Houses 113. A. P. £3,882. Pop., in 1801, 706; in 1831, 917.

DITCHFORD. See BLOCKLEY.

DITCHINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Loddon, union of Loddon and Clavering, county of Norfolk; 2 miles north of Bungay, on the northern bank of the river Waveney. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £16; gross income £484. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £562 6s. 9d. Patron, the duke of Norfolk, who always confers it on a fellow of St. John's, Cambridge. Here are 3 daily, and 2 Sunday and daily National, schools. In 1841 a silk mill here employed nearly 700 hands. Acres 1,720. Houses 202. A. P. £2,756. Pop., in 1801, 534; in 1831, 962. Poor rates, in 1837, £314.

DITTERIDGE, or DITCHERIDGE, a parish in the hund. and union of Chippenham, county of Wilts; 7 miles west-south-west of Chippenham, west of a branch of the Avon, and near the Great Western railway. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £2 8s. 9d., returned at £85; gross income £131. Patron, in 1835, W. Northey, Esq. Acres 950. Houses 20. A. P. with Dinton. Pop., in 1811, 101; in 1831, 83. Poor rates, in 1837, £24.

DITTISHAM, or DITTESHAM, a parish in the hund. of Coleridge and Dartmouth Hardness, union of Totness, county of Devon; 3 miles north-north-west of Dartmouth, intersected by the river Dart, which is here navigable. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £34 15s.; gross income £540. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount £452. Patron, in 1835, Viscount Valletort. Here are 5 daily schools. Acres 3,230. Houses 154. A. P. £4,800. Pop., in 1801, 639; in 1831, 816. Poor rates, in 1837, £369.

DITTON, a parish in the hund. of Larkfield, lathe of Aylesford, union of Malling, county of Kent; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-west of Maidstone, west of the river Medway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Rochester; rated at £11 15s.; gross income £320. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Aylesford. In the vicinity is a handsome private mansion, supposed to have been an abbey founded by Gundolph, bishop of Rochester, in the reign of William I. Acres 1,040. Houses 38. A. P. £1,274. Pop., in 1801, 98; in 1831, 218. Poor rates, in 1837, £149.

DITTON, a township in the hund. of West Derby and parish of Prescott, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 4 miles south-south-east of Prescott, north of the river Mersey, near one of its branches, and in the vicinity of the Liverpool and Manchester railway. Acres 1,740. Houses 83. A. P. £3,984. Pop., in 1801, 401; in 1831, 466. Poor rates, in 1837, £258.

DITTON-FEN, or FEN-DITTON, a parish in the hund. of Flendish, union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Cambridge, on the eastern bank of the river Cam or Granta. Living, a rectory, rated at £26 12s. 1d.; gross income £435; in the jurisdiction and patronage of the bishop of Ely. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £24 per annum. Acres 1,862. Houses 114. A. P. £2,903. Pop., in 1801, 317; in 1831, 528. Poor rates, in 1837, £188.

DITTON (Long), a parish in the hund. and union of Kingston, county of Surrey; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Kingston-upon-Thames, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ from the Southampton railway. It includes the hamlet of Talworth. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £12 0s. 5d.; gross income £475; in the patronage of New-college, Oxford. Acres 2,010. Houses 104. A. P. £3,149. Pop., in 1801, 243; in 1831, 627. Poor rates, in 1837, £344.

DITTON-PRIORS, a parish in the liberty of the borough of Wenlock, union of Bridgenorth, county of Salop; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-south-west of Bridgenorth comprising the townships of Ruthale and Ashfield. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated £5 15s. 8d.; gross income £147. Patron, in 1835, R. Canning, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by a small endowment. Acres 5,520. Houses 123. A. P. £2,090. Pop., in 1801, 620; in 1831, 584. Poor rates, in 1837, £258.

DITTON-WOOD, a parish in Cheveley hund., union of Newmarket, county of Cambridge; 3 miles south-south by east of Newmarket. Living, a discharged vicarage, consolidated with the rectory of St. Mary, Newmarket. There is a daily school in this parish. Acres 4,899. Houses 132. A. P. £4,213. Pop., in 1801, 648; in 1831, 888. Poor rates, in 1837, £543.

DITTON (THAMES), a parish in the second division of the hund. of Elmbridge, union of Kingston, county of Surrey, east of the river Mole, and near the Southampton and London railway; 2 miles south by west of Kingston-upon-Thames, and 12½ by railway from London. It includes the manor of Cleygate, and the hamlet of Ember and Weston. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester, not in charge; gross income £290. In the patronage of King's college, Cambridge. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1804. There are also 7 daily and 2 Sunday and daily National schools; one of these is endowed with £50 per annum and a house. There are also a few alms-houses, partly supported by endowment. Annual income of charities, £62. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,127. Acres 2,900. Houses 354. A. P. £7,380. Pop., in 1801, 1,288; in 1831, 1,878.

DIVER (THE), a river in Wilts, which falls into the Nadir at Bishopstrow.

DIXTON-NEWTON, a parish in the hund. of Skenfret, union and county of Monmouth; 1 mile north-east of Monmouth, on the western bank of the Wye. The post-road from Monmouth to Ross passes through the parish. It comprises the hamlets of Dixton-Hadnock and Dixton-Newton. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £7 3s. 1½d., returned at £130; gross income £235. Patron, in 1835, E. Machin, Esq. Here are 2 daily schools. Acres 4,280. Houses 141. A. P. £1,462. Pop., in 1801, 553; in 1831, 672. Poor rates, in 1837, £218.

DOCKER, a township in the parish of Kendal, Westmoreland; 4 miles north-east by east of Kendal, south of the river Mint. Houses 17. A. P. £923. Pop., in 1801, 65; in 1831, 95. Poor rates, in 1837, £33.

DOCKING, a parish in the hund. of Smithdon, union of Docking, county of Norfolk; 6 miles south-west of Burnham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £470. In the patronage of Eton college. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,020. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Docking, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 450 persons. The Docking poor-law union comprehends 36 parishes, embracing an area of 128 square miles, with a population returned in 1831, at 15,376. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £16,840. Expenditure in 1838, £9,033. In the charter of endowment of the college of Eton, mention is made of the 'alien priory of Dokkyng,' in this county. Acres 4,030. Houses 133. A. P. £6,088. Pop., in 1801, 797; in 1831, 1,406.

DOCKINGFIELD, or DOCKENFIELD, a tything in the parish of Frensham, north division of Alton, county of Southampton; 4½ miles south by west of Farnham; 7 or 8 acres of hops are annually reared here. Acres 610. Houses 29. A. P. £447. Pop., in 1801, 124; in 1831, 169. Poor rates, in 1837, £125.

DOCKLOW, a parish in the hund. of Wolphy, union of Leominster, county of Hereford; 4½ miles east by south of Leominster, near a branch of the Wye. It includes the township of Fencott. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to that of Stoke Prior. Charities, about £4 10s. per annum. About 130 acres of hops are annually reared here. Acres 1,420.

Houses 35. A. P. £1,631. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 199. Poor rates, in 1837, £89.

DODBROKE, or DODBOOKE, a parish and market-town in the hund. of Coleridge and Dartmouth Hardness, union of Kingsbridge, county of Devon; 208 miles south-east of London, and ½ mile east of Kingsbridge. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8 11s. 4d.; gross income £183. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. H. B. Owen, D.D. Here is a Baptist church, formed in 1819. There are also 5 or 6 daily schools for very young children. Charities, about £16 per annum, arising chiefly from parish lands. Poor rates, in 1837, £193. This town is noted as the first in which "white ale" was brewed. The rector immediately tithed it, and was thereafter paid a small annuity in lieu of the tithe. The market-day is Wednesday, and the fair is held on the Wednesday before Palm Sunday: there is also a cattle-market held quarterly. Acres 420. Houses 139. A. P. £1,779. Pop., in 1801, 608; in 1831, 1,035.

DODCOT WITH WILKESLEY, a township partly in the parish of Wrenbury, but chiefly in that of Audlem, county of Chester; 12 miles south-west of Nantwich, on the post-road from Chester to Stafford, and in the immediate vicinity of the Birmingham canal. Here is a daily school. In Wrenbury division of this township, Hugh De Malbance, in 1133, founded the Benedictine monastery of Combermere, the revenue of which, in 1534, was rated at £225 9s. 6d.: the site and buildings were granted by Henry VIII. to G. Cotton, Esq., an ancestor of Lord Combermere, whose elegant mansion, situated on the beautiful lake of Combermere, now occupies the site of the ancient abbey. The mere, which is skirted with woods, is only about ¾ths of a mile in length; but, from its circuitous form, has, in some situations, the appearance of a river. It is of great depth, and abounds with various kinds of fish. Acres 5,160. Houses 91. A. P. £6,329. Pop., in 1801, 755; in 1831, 637. Poor rates, in 1837, £434.

DODDENHAM, a parish in the hund. of Dodingtree, union of Martley, county of Worcester; 7 miles west by north of Worcester, on the northern bank of the Teme. Living, a curacy annexed to the rectory of Knightwich. Upwards of 50 acres of hops are annually grown here. Acres 830. Houses 55. A. P. £1,123. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 283. Poor rates, in 1837, £66.

DODDERHILL, a parish partly in the borough of Droitwich, and partly in the upper division of the hund. of Halfshire, union of Droitwich, county of Worcester; ½ mile north from Droitwich, in the neighbourhood of the Birmingham and Gloucester railway, and the Birmingham and Worcester canal. It includes the chapelry of Elmbridge. Living, a vicarage, with the curacy of Elmbridge, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £12 12s. 3½d.; gross income £500. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Pennice. Here is a daily school, partly supported by endowment. Houses 390. Pop., in 1801, 1,445; in 1831, 1,799. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,058.

DODDINGHURST, a parish in Barstable hund., union of Ongar, county of Essex; 4½ miles north-west of Brentwood, in the vicinity of the London and Norwich railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £10 3s. 9d.; gross income £557. Patrons, in 1835, the representatives of the late W. Manby, Esq. Charities, in 1836, £15 5s., besides Pope's House for 4 occupants rent free. Acres 3,460. Houses 59. A. P. £2,730. Pop., in 1801, 265; in 1831, 372. Poor rates, in 1837, £146.

DODDINGTON, a parish of great extent in the north division of the hund. of Witchford, union of North Witchford, Isle of Ely, county of Cambridge; 4 miles south of March. It comprises the chapels of Benwick and March, with the hamlet of Wimblington. Living, a rectory, with the curacies of March and Benwick, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Ely; rated at £22 5s.; gross income £7,781. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £1,482 19s. 6d. Patron, in 1835, Sir H. Peyton, Bart. Here is a daily school and a free school, endowed by Lionel Walden. There are about 30 free scholars at this school; and the master's salary is £40. Town lands here produce an annual rent of £146 5s. 6d., parochially and otherwise applied. This parish enjoys, with March, an equal privilege of cutting turf from 235 acres of land, called the Chatteris and Doddington Turf land. Other charities, 52s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £4,919. Acres 38,240. Houses 1,475. A. P. £50,198. Pop., in 1801, 3,791, in 1831, 7,527.

DODDINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of Boothby-Graffo, parts of Kesteven, county of Lincoln; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Lincoln. It includes the township of Whisby. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 9s. 6d.; gross income £180. Patron, in 1835, Col. Jarvise. Acres 4,330. Houses 31. A. P. £2,326. Pop., in 1801, 189; in 1831, 223. Poor rates, in 1837, £77.

DODDINGTON, a township in the parish of Wyburnbury, co.-palatine of Chester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Nantwich, near the Grand Junction railway to Birmingham. Acres 870. Houses 8. A. P. £578. Pop., in 1801, 51; in 1831, 37.

DODDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Teynham, union of Faversham, lathe of Scray, county of Kent; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by east of Sittingbourn. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £217. Patron, the archdeacon of Canterbury. There is a chapel here belonging to the Wesleyan Methodists. Here is also a daily school. Charities, in 1836, about £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £480. Acres 2,000. Houses 66. A. P. £1,836. Pop., in 1801, 366; in 1831, 466.

DODDINGTON, a parish in the east division of Glendale ward, union of Glendale, county of Northumberland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Wooler, north of the river Till, and near the Glen. It comprises the townships of Doddington Earl, otherwise Yeard-Hill, Ewart, Humbleton, and Nisbett. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Northumberland and dio. of Durham; gross income £200. Patron, the duke of Northumberland. Here is a daily school. The village school-room was erected at the expense of the earl of Tankerville. There is an important coal-mine in the vicinity. Acres 9,110. Houses 166. A. P. £10,903. Pop., in 1801, 634; in 1831, 903. Poor rates, in 1837, £515. Houses of the township, 83. A. P. £3,635. Pop., in 1801, 339; in 1831, 426. Poor rates, in 1837, £314.

DODDINGTON (DAY), a parish in the wapentake of Loveden, parts of Kesteven, union of Newark, county of Lincoln; 8 miles north-north-west of Grantham, near the Great North road from Mansfield. Living, a vicarage united with the rectory of Westborough. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,160. Houses 50. A. P. £2,218. Pop., in 1801, 191; in 1831, 230. Poor rates, in 1837, £82.

DODDINGTON (GREAT), a parish in the hundred of Hamsfordshoe, union of Wellingborough, county of Northampton; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by west of Wellingborough, bounded on the east and south by the river Nen. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; returned at £132 15s.; gross income £166. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Charities, in 1830, £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £216. Acres 1,310. Houses 86. A. P. £3,202. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 442.

DODDINGTON HUNDRED consists of two divisions, upper and lower, situate on the north-west point of Worcestershire, bordering on Salop. Area 67,760 acres. Houses 3,467. Pop., in 1831, 17,123.

DODDISCOMBSLEIGH, a parish in the hundred of Axminster, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 6 miles south-west of Exeter, east of the river Teign. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £16 6s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £392. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Buckingham. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1823, £3 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £195. Acres 2,390. Houses 57. A. P. £2,825. Pop., in 1801, 317; in 1831, 392.

DODDLESTON, a parish partly in the hund. of Broxton, union of Great Broughton, county of Chester, and partly in the hund. of Maylor, county of Flint, including the townships of Lower and Higher Kinnerton, Doddleston, and Bodidris; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by west of Chester. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Chester; rated at £7 0s. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £607. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £625; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Chester. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, in 1836, £14 11s. 6d. per annum. Houses 166. A. P. £8,878. Pop., in 1801, 464; in 1831, 899. Poor rates, in 1837, £341. Acres of the township 1,840. Houses 46. A. P. £2,749. Pop., in 1801, 185; in 1831, 252. Poor rates, in 1837, £146.

DODFORD, a parish in the hund. of Fawsley, union of Daventry, county of Northampton; 3 miles east-south-east of Daventry; very near the London and Birmingham railway. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £10; gross income £243. Patron, in 1835, — Thornton, Esq. Here is a day and Sunday school, endowed with £30 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £195. Acres 1,180. Houses 53. A. P. £2,459. Pop., in 1801, 205; in 1831, 279.

DODINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Grumbald's-Ash, union of Chipping-Sodbury, county of Gloucester; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Chipping-Sodbury, near the post-road from Bath to Farringdon. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £5 6s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £214. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. B. Codrington, Bart. Acres 1,670. Houses 14. A. P. £2,538. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 113. Poor rates, in 1837, £181.

DODINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemanners, union of Williton, county of Somerset; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles west-north-west of Bridgewater. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells, returned at £122; gross income £125. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £76 8s. 4d. Patron, in 1835, the duke of Buckingham. Acres 600. Houses 18. A. P. £709. Pop., in 1801, 71; in 1831, 93. Poor rates, in 1837, £23.

DODINGTON. See WHITCHURCH.

DODNASH, or DODWELLS, a township in the parish of Bentley and hund. of Samford, county of Suffolk; 7 miles south-south-west of Ipswich, close on the eastern counties railway from London to Norwich. Here was in ancient times a priory of Black canons.

DODWORTH, a township in the parish of Silkstone, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles west-south-west of Barnesley. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £11 per annum, and a house and garden for the master. Acres 1,540.

Houses 223. A. P. £2,568. Pop., in 1801, 403; in 1831, 1,179. Poor rates, in 1837, £214.

DOGDYKE, or DOCKDYKE, a township in the parish of Billingham, county of Lincoln; 11 miles east-north-east of Sleaford, west of the river Witham. Acres 850. A. P. £1,533. Pop., in 1801, 192; in 1831, 215. Poor rates, in 1837, £199.

DOGMEL (Str.), or DOGMELLS, a parish in the hund. of Kemess, union of Cardigan, county of Pembroke; 1 mile west of Cardigan. The hamlets of Bridgend and Abbey, included within the parliamentary boundaries of Cardigan borough, are in this parish. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St. David and prov. of Canterbury, united to the vicarages of Llan Tood and Monington; returned at £67 4s. 4d.; gross income £143. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a dissenting chapel licensed under the new marriage act. The village is chiefly inhabited by fishermen. It is large and straggling. St. Dogmel's abbey, now in ruins, was once an extensive and splendid establishment. Houses 492. A. P. £3,349. Pop., in 1801, 1,379; in 1831, 2,109. Poor rates, in 1837, £617.

DOGMERSFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Odiham, union of Hartley-Wintney, county of Southampton; 2 miles east by north of Odiham, close on the Basingstoke canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £9 6s. 8d.; gross income £332; in the patronage of Lady Mildmay. Charities, in 1825, 1 acre 1 rood of poor's land; rent in question. Poor rates, in 1837, £168. Here Prince Arthur, son of Henry VII., first met Catharine of Arragon, on her arrival from Spain. Acres 1,650. Houses 53. A. P. £1,696. Pop., in 1801, 212; in 1831, 272.

DOGS (ISLE OF), or POPLAR MARSHES, an isthmus on the Thames, in the parish of St. Dunstan and All Saints, Stepney, county of Middlesex; 5 miles east-south-east of St. Paul's cathedral. It derives its name from the king's bounds having been originally kept here. The West India Docks,—see article LONDON—Docks,—are on this isthmus, and the city canal has been cut across it, continuing the line of the Thames, and saving the circuitous course of the river between Limehouse and Blackwall.

DOGSTHORPE, or DOSTHORPE, a hamlet in the parish of St. John the Baptist, county of Northampton; 1½ mile north of Peterborough. Acres 2,130. Houses 103. Pop., in 1801, 276; in 1831, 443.

DOGSWELL (Str.), a parish in the hund. of Dewisland, union of Haverfordwest, county of Pembroke, South Wales; 8 miles north of Pembroke. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St. David's and prov. of Canterbury; returned at £71; gross income £71. Patron, the chapter of St. David's. Here is a school connected with the British and Foreign school society, attended by 296 scholars. In this parish there is a celebrated medicinal spring. Houses 73. A. P. £931. Pop., in 1801, 339; in 1831, 514. Poor rates, in 1837, £144.

DOL-BEN-MAEN, a parish and hamlet in the hund. of Eñonyd, union of Festiniog, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 4½ miles north-west of Tremadoc. Living, a chapelry annexed to the rectory of Penmorfa. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £84 12s. 9½d. Here are a Calvinistic Methodist church, formed in 1790; and a Sunday and daily National school. Houses 82. A. P. £859. Pop., in 1801, 266; in 1831, 355. Poor rates, in 1837, £130.

DOLCOATH. See CAMBORNE.

DOLEVOWIN. See BETTWYS, Montgomery.

DOLGELLEU, or DOLGELLY, a parish with the township of the same name, in the hund. of Tal-y-Bont, union of Dolgelly, county of Merioneth,

North Wales; 31½ miles north-west of Dinas-Mowddu, and 208 of London; in a vale on the river Union, 3 miles north of the lofty Cader-Iddris, which rises 2,914 feet above the level of the sea. Houses 870. A. P. £8,844. Pop., in 1801, 2,949; in 1831, 4,087. A railway has been projected from Portdynlleu to London by Barmouth, Dolgelly, Bala, and Shrewsbury. This is one of several projected railways to facilitate the communication between Ireland and the metropolis. Dolgelly is generally crowded with tourists, who resort hither for the purpose of ascending the Cader-Iddris, the summit of which is about 6 miles distant. The town is surrounded by hills, and celebrated for its magnificent and picturesque scenery. Sir R. C. Hoare has remarked that he knows of no place in the principality whence so many pleasing and interesting excursions may be made; and where nature bears so rich, varied, and grand an aspect, as at Dolgelly. Five miles from the town is the cataract of Doll-y-melyllyn, which, falling from a height of 35 feet into a basin, is thence precipitated 20 feet lower. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Bangor and prov. of Canterbury; rated at £13 1s. 8d.; gross income £505. Patron, the Crown. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1800; a Baptist, in 1798; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1807; and a Calvinistic Methodist, in 1770. Here are also a day and Sunday National, and 5 daily, schools, one of which is endowed. Charities, £29 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,639.—The Dolgelly poor-law union comprehends 13 parishes; with a population returned, in 1831, at 12,912. The summer assizes are held at Dolgelly; and the county gaol and house of correction stands on an elevated situation, apart from the high-road. It comprises 8 cells, 3 day-rooms, and 4 airing-yards. The number of prisoners committed for trial in this county is very small. During the assizes of 1835, held here, there were only 2 prisoners for trial, and no capital punishment has been inflicted since 1813. The trade of Dolgelly consists principally in a steady sale of the celebrated Welsh flannels: but the principal manufacture here is a coarser fabric, peculiar to this town, called webs or white plains, produced principally for the American dealers at the London and Liverpool markets. Formerly "webs" were made in different parts of Montgomeryshire; but the manufacture is now exclusively confined to this town and vicinity. In 1839, when the assistant commissioner was instituting an inquiry into the state of the hand-loom weaving here, there were 21 manufacturers, employing 136 hands; and the number of ends made during the three previous years was 6,153. In 1838 there were 8 woollen mills here, employing 55 hands. Dolgelly is one of the principal marts for the sale of flannel: much of it is made at farm houses as well as in factories. Fairs are held here, May 11th, July 4th, Sept. 20th, Oct. 9th, Nov. 22d, and Dec. 16th, for sheep, horned cattle, and horses. The market-day is Tuesday. There is a branch of the National provincial bank of England here. That 'fiery rebel,' Owen Glendwr, summoned his parliament at Dolgelly, when he sought alliance with Charles of France, in 1404. In the wars of Charles I. this town was fortified by 100 of his partizans, but they were dislodged by Edward Vaughan. It was the scene of much bloodshed during this struggle. Some Roman coins have been found in this vicinity.

DOL GWDEN. See TREY-EGLWYS.

DOLTON, a parish in the hund. of North Tawton with Winkley, union of Torrington, county of Devon; 6 miles north-north-east of Hatherleigh, east of the Torridge river. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £20 16s. 8d.; gross income £363. Patron, in 1835, J. J. Johnson, Esq. Here are 2 daily, and 2 Sunday and daily National, schools. A fair is held on Whit-Monday. Acres 2,180. Houses 160. A. P. £2,392. Pop., in 1801, 582; in 1831, 870. Poor rates, in 1837, £287.

DOL-WYDELLAN, a parish and hamlet in the hund. of Nant-Conwy, union of Llanrwst, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 7 miles south by west of Llanrwst, on the river Ledan, and 3 miles south-east of the stupendous Moel-Siabod mountain. Living, a curacy in the dio. of Bangor and province of Canterbury, not in charge; valued at £77; gross income £156. Patron, in 1835, Lord Willoughby D'Eresby. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1826; a Calvinistic Methodist, in 1783; also a daily, and a Sunday and daily National school. Charities, in 1833, £3 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £245. At a little distance are the ruins of Dol-wyddellan castle, in which Llewellyn the Great was born. They occupy the summit of a rocky steep, in a vale surrounded by mountains. Houses 123. A. P. £909. Pop., in 1801, 492; in 1831, 601.

DOMINICK (St.), a parish in the middle division of the hund. of East, union of Liskeard, county of Cornwall; 3 miles south-east of Callington, west of the Tamer. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £23 11s. 0½d.; gross income £400. Patron, in 1835, W. Bazeley, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 2,680. Houses 152. A. P. £4,149. Pop., in 1801, 538; in 1831, 726. Poor rates, in 1837, £382.

DOMMET. See BUCKLAND-ST.-MARY.

DON (THE). See YORKSHIRE.

DONATT'S (St.), a parish in the hund. of Ogmore, union of Bridgend and Cowbridge, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 6 miles south-west of Cowbridge, on the coast of the Bristol channel. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St. David's and province of Canterbury; returned at £99 15s. 3d.; nett income £131. Patron, in 1835, T. J. Drake, Esq. The church, which stands in a quiet, beautiful, and sequestered glen, contains many curious monuments, the most remarkable of which are those to the memory of the Stradlings, whose ancestors for a period of seven centuries were the proprietors of the ancient castle, now occupied by the Drakes. The castle is an extensive structure of much antique beauty. It is partially inhabited. The grounds consist of a formal series of hanging-gardens or terraces, separated by stone walls, and connected by flights of steps, ascending gradually from the shore to the mansion. In the vicinity is a large cave, the reputed abode of St. Donatt. Houses 27. A. P. £1,141. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 151. Poor rates, in 1837, £66.

DONATT'S-ST.-WELSH, a parish in the hund. of Cowbridge, union of Cardiff, county of Glamorgan; 2 miles north-east of Cowbridge, at the source of the river Ely, and near the post-road from Neath to Newport. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Llan-bleddan. This village is more remarkable than any other in Wales for the close conformity of its inhabitants to Welsh customs and the original language. Houses 55. A. P. £1,557. Pop., in 1801, 222; in 1831, 304. Poor rates, in 1837, £122.

DONCASTER,

A borough, market-town, and parish, comprehending also the townships of Sandal-Long with Wheatley, Balby with Hexthorp, and Langthwaite with Tilts, in the soke of Doncaster, and the north division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Doncaster, west riding of York; 37 miles south of York, and 162 north-north-west of London. Acres of the parish 5,842. Houses 2,442. A. P. £36,466. Pop., in 1801, 6,122; in 1831, 11,572. Acres of the borough 1,610. Houses 2,291. A. P. £28,207. Pop., in 1801, 5,697; in 1831, 10,801. A scheme is entertained for the formation of a railway from Doncaster to join the North Midland near Kilnhurst, Swinton, and for straightening and diverting the Don, &c. Meantime a swift passage-boat has been built, to ply from Doncaster, on this river, and the Dearne and Dove canal, to Swinton, which has been fixed on as the station for Doncaster. The North Midland railway was opened throughout on 1st July, 1840:—See DERBYSHIRE and YORKSHIRE—sections Railways. The town of Doncaster is beautifully situated, on the south-eastern bank of the navigable river Don, and on the Roman road termed Watling-street. It is one of the handsomest, most picturesque, salubrious, and cleanly in the county, if not in the kingdom. The entrance from London, through a venerable row of elm trees, and past the race-ground, enclosed by a beautiful railing; the grand stand, and other elegant edifices; the column or cross called Hall-cross; and a range of excellent houses; together with the width, length, and handsome appearance of the High-street, render Doncaster one of the most attractive localities on the Great North road. The High-street, at the south end of which the best houses are situated, is nearly a mile in length, including Hall-gate, French-gate, and Marsh-gate, and is crossed by several others, one of which, through St. Sepulchre's-gate, extends from the north-eastern part of the town, along the road to Rotherham and Sheffield, for more than half-a-mile. Many commodious and handsome houses have been built on the eastern side of St. Sepulchre's-gate, and the town also extends further northwards. The streets are paved, and lighted at night with gas, at the expense of the corporation, who have also established water-works, for the convenience of the inhabitants, at a cost of £3,566. There are two stone bridges over the Don here; and, beyond them, a causeway raised above the occasional inundations of the river. In the level and low lands near the town were several large morasses, of which Potteric Carr, about 4,000 acres in extent, was one. It is now drained, allotted, and well-cultivated.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York; rated at £32 19s. 9d.; gross income £135. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge, £1,805 2s., due to the archbishop of York, who is the patron. St. George's, or the parish church, is an ancient and noble Gothic cruciform edifice, erected about the year 1071. Its square tower is remarkably beautiful, and exhibits some of the richest workmanship in England. The interior of the church is also well worthy of observation. There are some curious monuments in it. Christ's church, founded and endowed by John Jarrat, Esq., who gave £10,000 for the building, and £3,000 for the endowment, is built of Roche-Abbey stone, and is remarkable for its lightness and elegance. It is a perpetual curacy; gross income £336. Patrons, in 1835, the trustees of the late J. Jarrat. Here are also two Independent churches, formed in 1798, and 1813; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1798; a Friends' meeting-house; and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are in this parish a National and British school, 6 Sunday, and 30 daily, schools: the grammar-school, and Hollis's school, are supported by endowment. There are several flourishing boarding schools; and an institution for the deaf and dumb, stands near the race-course, at the spacious entrance from Bawtry. St. Thomas's hospital, founded by Thomas Ellis, in the reign of Philip and Mary, for 6 alms-people, generally poor widows, possessed an income, in 1837, of £424 12s., expended chiefly on the alms-people and 12 or more out-pensioners. There are other alms-houses. Quentin Kay's charity, for apprenticeship of children and other purposes, yielded an annual revenue of £274 10s.; and John Jarratt's charity, to 6 poor pensioners, consisting of £2,200, paid in 1821 by Mr. Jarratt, who continued thereafter to recommend pensioners to the benefit of the revenue, which amounted, in 1837, the year previous to his death, to £110. In all, the charities possessed by this parish and borough amounted, in 1827, to £890 0s. 4d. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, of the parish, £2,429; of the borough, £2,291. A workhouse has been erected for the union of Doncaster by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 200 persons. The Doncaster poor-law union comprehends 54 parishes, embracing an area of 168 squares miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 31,728. The amount of money levied by assessment from the union of Doncaster for the year ending 25th March, 1839, was £8,486 6s.; expenditure on poor £7,711 16s., whereof £235 were for medical relief. A dispensary was established in Doncaster in 1792 to supply medicines to the sick and indigent. It is supported by the corporation and by voluntary subscription. There is also a lying-in charity, a sick charity, a ladies' clothing society, besides several of a more private description. Municipal charity trustees were appointed on 15th December, 1837.

Municipal affairs.—Doncaster is a borough by prescription, the borough and township being co-extensive; and the jurisdiction, which extended over the borough and soke of Doncaster, including a much larger space than the borough, and even comprehending several other parishes and parts of parishes besides that of Doncaster, was confirmed to the burgesses by charter from Richard I., which was followed by numerous other charters, confirmative or otherwise of those preceding; and previous to the passing of the municipal reform act, the borough was governed by a mayor, a deputy-mayor, 12 aldermen, 24 common-councilmen, and a recorder, besides a town-clerk, 2 sergeants-at-mace, and a number of subordinate officers. They held quarter-sessions in the town hall; a court of requests for the recovery of debts not exceeding 40s., under local act 4^o George III. c. xl.; petty-sessions, once a-week, or oftener if necessary; and other courts: they exercised an exclusive criminal jurisdiction over the borough and soke of Doncaster. The aldermen were self-elected, and the only share which the freemen had in the election of capital burgesses was the choice of one of the two "lights" presented to them by the members of the select body. The number of resident free burgesses was about 165; of non-resident, 25. The borough was divided into 17 wards, for which 21 constables were appointed; besides whom, the police consisted of the jailer, the under jailer, the two sergeants-at-mace, the street keeper, and the market-policeman. Under the municipal act the borough is divided into 3 wards, and is governed by 6 aldermen and 18 councillors. A commission of the peace has been granted, and a court of quarter-sessions and a recorder appointed. The court of record takes cognizance of debts to any amount; but, from the parliamentary returns in 1838, we find, that "no trial or inquiry has been held for many years, and the court has not sat during the three years" previous to the report, and subsequent to the passing of the new municipal act. The income of the borough, in 1839, was £13,311 18s. 7d.; of which £2,653 8s. 10d. were expended in public works, repairs, &c.; £976 19s. in lighting and cleansing; £480 19s. 6d. in charities; £263 17s. for police and constables; £859 10s. 9d., miscellaneous, including races, assemblies, &c.; and the remainder in various salaries, rents, prosecutions, liquidation of debt, &c., &c. Doncaster is one of the polling-places for the member of the west riding. The quarter-sessions for the west riding are held here once a-year, in the town hall, where also the quarter sessions for the borough have been held. The jail is a modern structure, built on the radiating principle, with the keeper's house in the centre. It consists of four buildings, occupied by prisoners, to each of which an airing-yard is attached. Prisoners, in 1835, 367. It is the boast of Doncaster that it was furnished with an appropriate residence for its chief magistrate before either York or London. The mansion-house is an elegant and spacious structure, built with stone. It is used for meetings of the corporation, public meetings, assemblies, and concerts. Near this building is the betting-room, a neat though small edifice. There are also a theatre, and an excellent public library, and other literary and scientific institutions.

Trade and Manufactures.—The river Don has supplied the means of navigable communication with several towns in the south of Yorkshire, and the northern part of Lincolnshire; but Doncaster has not hitherto been noted for its trade or manufactures. Attempts were rather unsuccessfully made to introduce the clothing manufacture. A small part of the labouring population have found employment in spinning wool and cotton, and in knitting gloves and stockings; and a flax-mill at work here employed, in 1838, 105 hands. There are two or three iron foundries, and a flour-mill; but the great sources of profit to the inhabitants, are the influx of company during the time of the races, and the trade which arises from its being a thoroughfare on the great north road, and in the midst of a populous and opulent neighbourhood. The weekly market is one of the principal corn-markets in the north of England: the market-day is Saturday: great sales of wool also take place, and the town is visited by an extensive rural population at the chief markets and fairs, held on Monday before Old Candlemas day, February 13th, for horses, cattle, sheep, and pedlery, April 5th, August 5th, and November 26th. Here are branches of the Yorkshire District, and of the Yorkshire Agricultural and Commercial, banks.

Races.—Doncaster is celebrated for its races: they are held annually in the third week of September, and continue for 5 days. They were established about 1703, and have progressively acquired so much distinction in the annals of the turf, that the Doncaster race-course is now visited by nearly all the families of rank in the north of England. In 1776, the famous St. Ledger stakes were founded; and the next year, the race-course, which is about a mile from the town, on the road to London, was much improved, and the grand stand, which well deserves to be styled magnificent, was erected by the corporation. When crowded with company, as it rarely fails to be at the annual meeting, this stand presents a sight truly splendid and imposing. In 1803, the sovereign's plate of 100 guineas, was transferred hither from Burford, and in 1826, a sumptuous edifice was erected in Doncaster, for the amusement of persons resorting to the races. The corporation has always subscribed largely to the races, from a consideration for the prosperity of the town. In 1837, a sum of £516 was thus expended: in the returns for 1838, the sum so applied is not separately stated, but must also have been very considerable. The income an-ing from the Grand Stand, booths, &c., in 1837, was £2,293 18s. The famous horse, called "the flying Childers," was bred at the Carr in this vicinity, by Leonard Childers, Esq.

History and Antiquities.—The origin of Doncaster may be attributed to the establishment of a passage over the Don, in the line of the Roman road; and here was doubtless the Roman station called Danum, in the itinerary of Antoninus. When the Anglo-Saxons settled in this country, and became Christians, a monastery was founded here, which, with the whole town, was destroyed by the Danes in 794. Egbert gained a victory over these invaders at Doncaster in 833. Under the Normans it became a flourishing place; but in 1204 it was entirely destroyed by fire. As its name denotes, Doncaster was anciently defended by a castle. In 1617, King James visited Doncaster in his progress to Scotland. He lodged at a Mr. Gargrave's; and it is stated, that he knighted "a host," an innkeeper, of Doncaster, in this progress. In 1641, Charles I. was here, preparing for the great struggle; but in 1642 the town was in the power of the parliament. Colonel Rainsborough was killed in 1648, by a small party from Pontefract castle, in the midst of his army, as it lay at Doncaster. One of the most interesting antiquities of this town, was the cross of Otto de Tili, at the southern entrance, already noticed. It originally stood at the beginning of Hallgate, about 150 yards north of the present modern substitute for it—a cylindrical column 18 feet high—but was pulled down and inconsiderately dilapidated. Several chapels, hospitals, and other edifices belonging to friars and others, once existed here, but few or no vestiges of them are now to be seen. Roman remains, consisting of urns, coins, &c., are occasionally found.

DONHEAD-ST.-ANDREW, a parish in the hund. of Dunworth, union of Tisbury, county of Wilts; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Hindon, near the post-road from Shaftesbury to Salisbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £1,064; nett income £814. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. W. Dansay. The church accommodation in this parish has been recently increased. Here are a daily and 2 Sunday and daily National schools, one of which is endowed, by a former rector, with £11 per annum. Acres 5,600. Houses 158. Pop., in 1801, 607; in 1831, 804. Poor rates, in 1837, £365.

DONHEAD-ST.-MARY, a parish in the above hund., union of Tisbury, county of Wilts; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by west of Hindon. It includes the tythings of Charlton, Dognell, and Haystone. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £30 14s. 4½d.; gross income £1,033; nett income £928. The Rev. R. Blackmore has the next presentation; afterwards, New college, Oxford. Here are an independent church, formed in 1670; and 4 daily, and 2 Sunday and daily National, schools. Acres 2,680. Houses 308. A. P., with the parish of Donhead-St.-Andrew, £11,614. Pop., in 1801, 945; in 1831, 1,520. Poor rates, in 1837, £944.

DONINGTON-CASTLE, a parish in the west division of the hund. of Goscote, union of Shardlow, county of Leicester; south-east of the river Trent. The village is 3 miles to the west of the Midland Counties railway, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Kegworth station on that line. Living, a discharged vicarage, in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £8 2s. 3½d.; gross income £224. Patron, Marquis of Hastings. Here are 2 independent chapels, one of which was opened in 1840; and chapels belonging to Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Quakers. There are 5 daily, and 2 day and boarding schools.

Charities, £25 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £709. Fairs are held here on 18th March, White-Thursdays, and 29th September. The market is on Saturday. Acres 4,250. Houses 674. A. P. £10,154. Pop., in 1801, 1,959; in 1831, 3,182.

DONINGTON-UPON-BAIN, a parish in the wapentake of Gartree, parts of Lindsey, union of Louth, county of Lincoln; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west by west of Louth, on the eastern bank of the river Bain. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; returned at £110; gross income £173. Patron, in 1835, Lord Monson. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 1,890. Houses 39. A. P. £1,539. Pop., in 1801, 188; in 1831, 300. Poor rates, in 1837, £158.

DONISTHORPE. See OAKTHORPE WITH DONISTHORPE.

DONNINGTON, a market-town and parish in the wapentake of Kirtton and parts of Holland, county of Lincoln; 28 miles south-east by east of Lincoln, and 107 north of London. There is a port here for barges which convey goods to Boston. The parish is intersected by the Hammond-beck and Blacksluice canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £13 17s. 3½d., returned at £137; gross income £133. Patron, in 1835, Lord Monson. The Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists have chapels here. There are also 4 well-endowed daily schools. Fairs are held August 17th for horses only, May 26th, September 4th, and October 17th, for horses, cattle, flax, and hemp, the latter being extensively cultivated in the neighbourhood for the London market. Market-day, Saturday. Acres 6,180. Houses 369. A. P. £11,384. Pop., in 1801, 1,321; in 1831, 1,759. Poor rates, in 1837, £899.

DONNINGTON, a parish in Shiffnall division, in the hund. of Brimstree, union of Shiffnall, county of Salop; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east of Shiffnall, near the post-road from Shrewsbury to Wolverhampton. It includes Boscobel. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £721. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Sutherland. Adjoining this parish is an extra-parochial place, termed Boscobel, where, in a situation beautifully sequestered, there was formerly a priory of Cistercian or White nuns: part of the chapel still remains. Charles II. was concealed in Boscobel house in 1651, after his defeat at Worcester. See BOSCOBEL. Acres 2,000. Houses 56. A. P. £5,418. Pop., in 1801, 289; in 1831, 318. Poor rates, in 1837, £207.

DONNINGTON, a hamlet in the parish of Stow-on-the-Wold, county of Gloucester; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north of Stow-on-the-Wold. At this place the royalists were defeated by Colonel Morgan in 1645. Acres 760. Houses 47. A. P. £1,501. Pop., in 1801, 162; in 1831, 200. Poor rates, in 1837, £66.

DONNINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Box and Stockbridge, rape of Chichester, union of West Hampnell, county of Sussex; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south of Chichester, intersected by the Arundel and Portsmouth canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; rated at £9 10s. 5d.; gross income £298. Patron, the bishop of Chichester. Acres 1,090. Houses 40. A. P. £2,011. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 228. Poor rates, in 1837, £172.

DONNINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Radlow, union of Ledbury, county of Hereford; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by west of Ledbury, very near the Gloucester canal. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £3 9s. 9d.; gross income £219. Patron, in 1835, R. Webb, Esq. Here are 1 Sunday and daily National and 2 daily schools. Acres 740. Houses 24. A. P. £1,155. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 124. Poor rates, in 1837, £53.

DONNINGTON BIRKS. See SHAW WITH DONNINGTON.

DONYATT, a parish in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, union of Chard, county of Somerset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile west-south-west of Ilminster, near the Chard canal. It includes part of the hamlet of Crockstreet. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £15 15s.; gross income £197. Patron, in 1835, R. T. Coombe, Esq. Here is a daily school. In 1838, there was a woollen mill here, employing 17 hands, and potteries have been established at Crockstreet. Acres 1,220. Houses 69. A. P. £2,410. Pop., in 1801, 417; in 1831, 557. Poor rates, in 1837, £151.

DONYLAND (East), a parish in Lexden hund., union of Lexden and Winstreet, county of Essex; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south by east of Colchester, near the mouth of the river Colne. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Colchester and dio. of London; rated at £10; gross income £215. Charities, £10 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £314. Acres 1,430. Houses 63. A. P. £1,570. Pop., in 1801, 370; in 1831, 692.

DORCHESTER.

A borough and market-town, with separate jurisdiction, in the hundred of George, union of Dorchester, Dorchester division of the county of Dorset; about 8 miles north of Weymouth; 17 east by south of Wareham; and 120 south-west by west of London; on the southern bank of the river Frome, a few miles from the sea. The town occupies an eminence bordered on the south and west by open downs; the environs are extremely pleasant, and agreeable walks, shaded with sycamores, chestnuts, and elms, nearly encircle the town, which is of an irregular quadrangular form, and consists of several wide streets. The village of Fordington is so situated on the east as to constitute a large suburb and continuation of the town. The dwellings of the poorer classes are almost all confined to this village; the houses in Dorchester are in general well-built, and the town is lighted with gas. Acres 1,870. Houses 426. A. P. £8,044. Pop., in 1801, 2,402; in 1831, 3,033.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Dorchester is divided into three parishes: viz. All Saints, Holy Trinity, and St. Peter's. The living of All Saints is a discharged rectory; rated at £4 4s. 7d.; gross income £86. Patrons, the mayor and corporation of Dorchester. The living of Trinity parish is a rectory; rated at £17 8s. 6½d.; gross income £454. Patrons, the mayor and corporation. The living of St. Peter's is a rectory; gross income £184. These livings, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, have been transferred to the dio. of Salisbury. The church of St. Peter's, situated near the centre of the town, is a large, ancient, and well-built edifice. It consists of a chancel, nave, and side-aisles. The tower, which is 90 feet high, is indented and adorned with pinnacles. It contains several ancient tombs and monuments; a few of which are of distinguished persons. Trinity church is an elegant structure, built in 1824, on the site of the original church which had fallen into decay. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1776; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1825; and places of worship for Baptists and Unitarians. The Independent, Baptist, and Unitarian chapels are licensed under the new marriage-act.—There are 3 National and 2 daily schools. The free grammar-school was founded by Thomas Hardy in 1579, and endowed with property, vested in 10 trustees; the rental of which, in 1834, amounted to £45 19s. 4d. There are also other sources of revenue for behoof of the schoolmaster, &c. and two exhibitions at St. John's college, Cambridge, to which scholars of this school are eligible, concurrently with that of St. Paul's, London. There is also an exhibition of £5 per annum to any of the universities, for behoof of the scholars of this school. The Trinity or Under school is also endowed from various charities connected with the borough; and some of the children are clothed from the proceeds of special bequests.—Whetstone's almshouses consist of four tenements, and are endowed with about £59 per annum.—'Napper's mite' is an hospital or almshouse in South-street, forming a quadrangle, and containing 10 apartments and a chapel, with a cloister in front to the street, and other appurtenances. The income of this hospital—which was founded and endowed by Sir Robert Napper in 1615—amounted, in 1834, to £163.—The old almshouse, rebuilt in 1822, at the Bull stake, was founded and endowed by Matthew Chubb, in 1614-20, for 9 poor women: income about £41 10s.—The Dorchester workhouse or hospital was erected in 1618, for "relieving, harbouring, and setting to work" 50 poor children. A governor was appointed, styled "the Governor of the poor children of the hospital of the bailiffs and burgesses of the borough of Dorchester." This workhouse was founded by voluntary subscription, and afterwards endowed by various gifts. The charity commissioners observe, that "the town of Dorchester seems to have been one of the first places where the experiment of a workhouse was tried, and it is mentioned in Sir Josiah Child's 'Discourse on Trade' with approbation, and said to have been attended with good success." This workhouse or hospital was rebuilt in 1745, for the accommodation of adults as well as children; but, since the erection of the union workhouse, it has been taken down, and a row of well-built houses erected on its site. The income of this charity, in 1834, was £59.—There are other charitable institutions: the minor charities amounted, in 1834, to upwards of £115 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,211.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Dorchester, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 250 persons. The Dorchester poor-law union comprehends 39 parishes, embracing an area of 103 square miles; with a population, returned in 1831, at 14,525. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £7,041. Expenditure, in 1838, £6,119; in 1839, £6,295 11s.

Municipal affairs, Franchise, &c.—By charter of Edward II., this town was governed by two bailiffs, and burgesses; their number was augmented by James I.; and, under the governing charter 5^o Charles I., the corporation consisted of a mayor, 2 bailiffs, 6 aldermen, 6 capital burgesses, with other officers, and a body of freemen styled 'the governor, assistants, and freemen.' The governor, and 24 of the freemen, constituted the common council of the freemen, for the settlement of certain matters relating to their own body. The mayor, bailiffs, &c. held courts of quarter-sessions, a court-of-record for debts under £40, and a court-leet. The old borough-boundaries were limited to the circuit of the town, which comprised the three parishes of All Saints, Trinity, and St. Peter's. By the new boundary act, the adjoining village of Fordington is also included. The town was appointed to be watched, lighted, and paved, by a local act dated 1776; the provisions of which, however, have been repealed by an act passed in 1834. The borough has returned two members to parliament since the 23d of Edward I., a privilege which it still enjoys under the Reform act. The right of election, previous to 1832, was vested in the inhabitants paying church and poor-rates, "in respect of their personal estates; and in such persons as pay to church and poor, in respect of their real estates within the said borough, though not inhabitants or occupiers." The greatest number of electors polled, within 30 years previous to 1832, was 229; which was about half of those who had the right to vote. For the purpose of parliamentary representation, the whole village of Fordington, part also of the open field called Fordington-field, the whole of Colliton-row, and that portion of Frome-Whitfield which lies between the two branches of the river Frome, have been added to the borough by the boundary act. The estimated number of electors, in 1832, was 423; but the number of electors registered for 1836-7, was only 397. Under the new municipal act of 1835, the parliamentary boundaries were to be taken as coterminous with those of the borough; and the government was vested in 4 aldermen and 12 councillors: the style of the corporate body being 'the mayor, bailiffs, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Dorchester, in the county of Dorset.' The income of the borough, for 1839, was £422 15s. 3d.; of which £114 5s. were expended on police and constables. The town-hall, a spacious and handsome structure, was erected near St. Peter's church, at the expense of the corporation, in 1791; beneath it is a market-house for butter and poultry. A commission of the peace has been granted to the borough. The quarter-sessions and assizes for the county are held in Dorchester. The shire-hall is a neat, plain, commodious building fronted with Portland stone, and having a pediment in the centre. The county-gaol and house-of-correction, is built on the site of an ancient castle, in an open and airy situation on the north side of the town at an expense of £16,179 10s. 6d.; but on a plan not entirely in harmony with the opinions which obtain at present on the construction and arrangement of such edifices. The governor's house, although central, is deficient in point of good inspection. Attempts have been made to remedy this defect, but without success. The number of sleeping cells is 88. There are three tread-wheels. Prisoners, in 1835, 558. A county-hospital is now (August 1840) building. Cavalry-barracks were erected a little to the west of the town in 1795.

Trade, Manufactures, &c.—Dorchester is said to be in a flourishing condition, with a steady trade. It is celebrated for its ale, which is brewed in great quantities, and sent to all parts of the kingdom. Sheep and lambs are fed in vast numbers on the adjacent downs, for sale at the markets and fairs, the tolls of which belong to the corporation. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs for cattle and sheep are held on February 14th, and July 6th, for cattle, sheep, and lambs; and on August 6th, and October 25th, for cattle, wool, and leather. A fund had been accumulated by the old corporation, at the time of the municipal inquiry, for the improvement of the town, by effecting the removal of the sheep-fair from the streets to a spot outside the town. There are a branch of the Wilts and Dorset banking company here; and two other banking establishments; also a Savings' bank.

History.—The etymology of its Roman names, Durnovaria and Durinun, signifying a place near the Varia—now the Frome—may afford data for estimating the antiquity of Dorchester. It was strongly fortified by the Romans, and was to them a place of great importance; nor was it less so to the Saxons, whose king, Athelstan, established two mints here. Sweyn, king of Denmark, besieged the town in 1003, in revenge for Ethelred's attempt to extirpate the Danes. In 1595 the town was nearly depopulated by the plague; and in the 17th century it sustained great damage from two different fires. The first of these occurred in 1613, when 300 houses were destroyed, with the churches of All Saints and Trinity. The second was in 1662. Lord Clarendon tells us, that during the civil war, Dorchester was considered one of the strongest holds of the parliament; but that on the approach of the earl of Carnarvon, with only 2,000 men, it immediately surrendered. Cromwell sustained a defeat here in 1645; but kept possession of the town. On the occasion of the duke of Monmouth's rebellion, in 1685, the assizes were held here by Judge Jeffries, when 29 insurgents were condemned on the first day, and, on the following, 292. Of these, 80 were ordered for execution, and 13 were executed. John Tutchin, author of the Observer, and immortalized by being noticed in the Dunciad of Pope, was sentenced to be whipped through every town in the county once a-year, to be imprisoned seven years, and to pay a fine of 100 marks. He begged that he might rather be hanged than suffer this cruel sentence, on which he was reprieved, and afterwards pardoned. Dr. Arbuthnot, the friend of Swift and Pope, settled here as a physician, but meeting with little practice, he determined to leave the town, because, as he jocularly declared, "a man could neither live nor die in it."

Antiquities.—The ancient importance of Dorchester is displayed in its antiquities. The Roman walls and other fortifications, though levelled by the plough, or destroyed in making the walks round the town, are still visible. The walls seem to have been grouted, or formed of two parallel walls, filled up between with stones, flint, and hot mortar. Numberless tumuli are thrown up all over the downs: these were antiquities in the times even of the Romans themselves. The most valuable fragment on these plains, however, is a Roman amphitheatre, which has, until a recent period—if not to the present day—retained its complete form. Poundbury and Maiden-castle are both extraordinary remains of Roman stations. Various Roman coins have been dug up in different parts of Dorchester: a gold ring half-an-inch thick was found in the Frome; and a bronze image of a Roman Mercury, a most valuable relic, was discovered in the back-garden of Hardy's free-school, where a considerable fragment of a Roman pavement was also found. The ancient religious foundations here were—"The hospital of St. John Baptist, commonly called St. John's-house, founded before 17^o Edward II., and granted 29^o Henry VI., to Eaton college, which grant was confirmed 7^o Edward IV.; but, 1^o Richard III. it was given to the friars minors of Dorchester; also another hospital or house for lepers, and a house of Grey Friars."—Tanner's Not. Mon.

DORCHESTER DIVISION, in the county of Dorset, comprehends the hundreds of Cullifordtree, George, Piddletown, Tollerford, and Uggscombe, with the liberties of Fordington, Isle of Portland, Piddlebinton, Sutton-Poyntz, Wabyhouse, and Wyke-Regis and Otway. Area, 94,840 acres. Houses 3,968. Pop., in 1831, 21,351.

DORCHESTER HUNDRED, Oxfordshire. Area, 11,280 acres. Houses 599. Pop., in 1831, 3,257.

DORCHESTER, a parish in the above hundred, union of Wallingford; about 8 miles south-east by south of Oxford, on the western bank of the Thame, over which there is here a handsome stone bridge, and 3 north from its confluence with the Isis. Acres 900. Houses 161. A. P. £3,646. Pop., in 1801, 777; in 1831, 866. Poor rates, in 1837, £403. Living, a curacy, exempt from visitation, in the dio. of Oxford; gross income £133.

Patrons, in 1835, the trustees of Mr. Fettiplace. The windows of the church, which is cruciform, display some singular tracery. This church was originally a cathedral, and has the tomb of its founder, St. Birinius, on the south side of the altar. There are also many extremely ancient monuments. Tanner says—"Upon the first conversion of the Saxons to the Christian faith, Oswald, king of the North-umbrians, and Kynegils, king of the West Saxons, gave this city to St. Birine, the apostle of these parts, who, about A. D. 635, built a church—wherein, as some say, he placed secular canons—and fixed here the seat of his bishopric, which then comprised the two large kingdoms of the West Saxons and Mercians. But, though, in aftertimes, it was mightily abridged in its extent—the bishopricks of Winchester, Salisbury, Exeter, Bath and Wells, Lichfield, Worcester, and Hereford being taken out of it—yet the diocese still remained the largest in England, and the bishop's cathedral was in this small village situate at the extremity of his jurisdiction, till Bishop Remigius translated the episcopal seat to the city of Lincoln, about A. D. 1066. The abbey of Black canons here was built by Alexander, bishop of Lincoln, about A. D. 1140, to the honour of St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. Birine, and was found, 26^o Henry VIII., to be endowed with £219 12s. ob. q. per annum. The site was granted, 36^o Henry VIII., to Edmund Aysfield." In consequence of the former privileges of the abbey, Dorchester church retained a peculiar jurisdiction over 11 parishes, besides being exempt from episcopal visitation. The font in this church, supposed to be of Birinius's time, has been said to be the most ancient, and perhaps only one of its kind in the world: it is of cast lead; and, on the sides, the 12 apostles are represented, each sitting in a separate stall. The figures are in tolerable preservation; but the faces have been wantonly injured. The old presbyterian chapel in Pease lane here has been licensed under the new marriage act. From the middle of the 12th century this town rapidly decayed in importance, and it is now an almost inconsiderable village. The market has long been discontinued; but there is still an annual pleasure-fair on Easter-Tuesday. This is supposed to have been the Roman station which Richard of Cirencester designated Dorocina. At a short distance from the town are the remains of an ancient camp, now called Dike-hill. There are also other ancient remains; the town and its vicinity have afforded an abundant harvest of coins and relics, and altogether it is a locality replete with antiquarian interest. Here Chaucer is said to have had a residence.

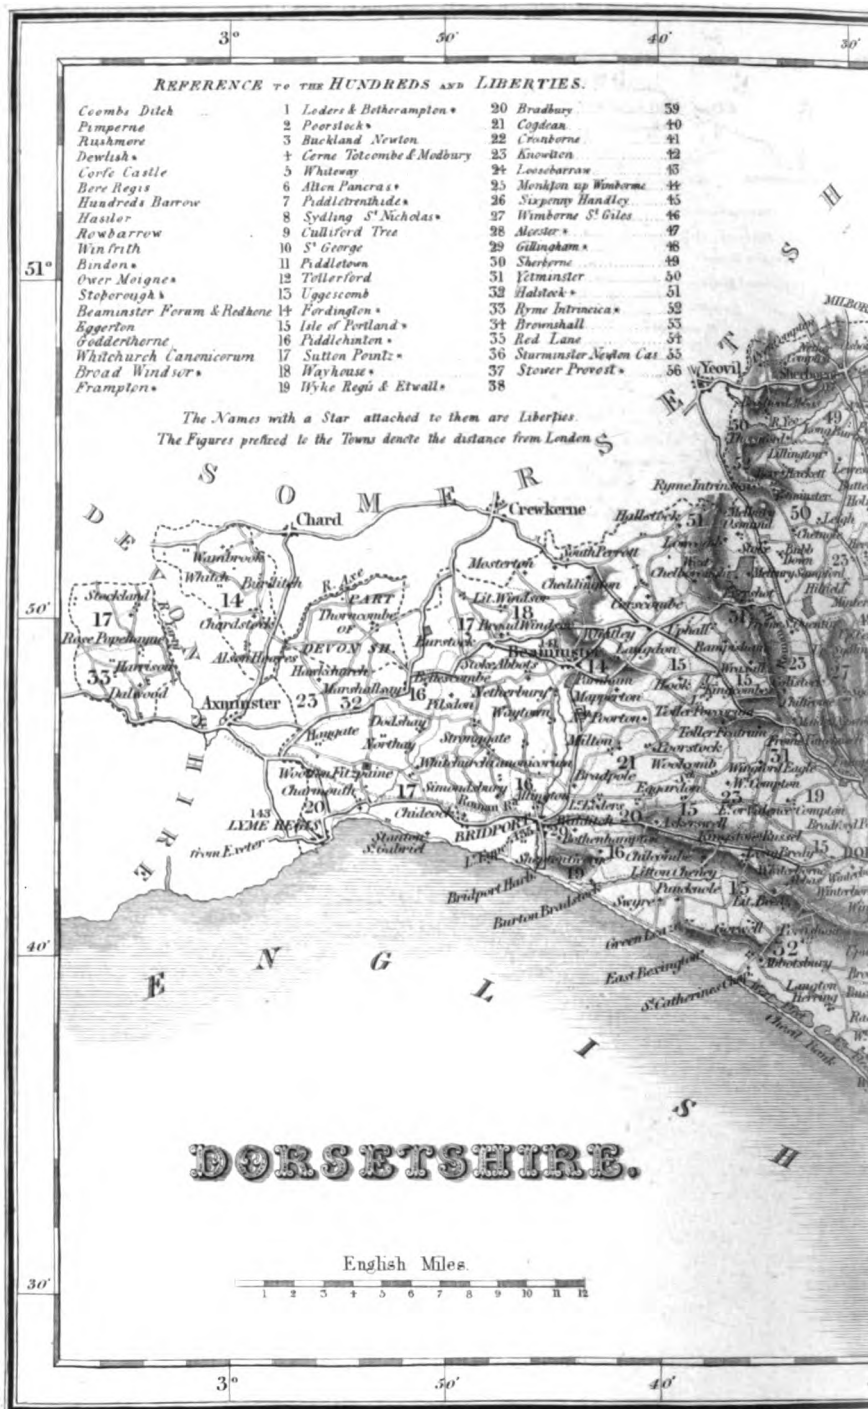

DORE, a chapelry in the parish of Dronfield, county of Derby; 6 miles north-north-west of Chesterfield, and the north midland railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; returned at £70; gross income £90. Patron, in 1835, Earl Fitzwilliam. The chapel has now been some years erected, and there is an endowed school. Acreage with the parish. Houses 105. A. P. £1,684. Pop., in 1801, 375; in 1831, 527. Poor rates, in 1837, £185.

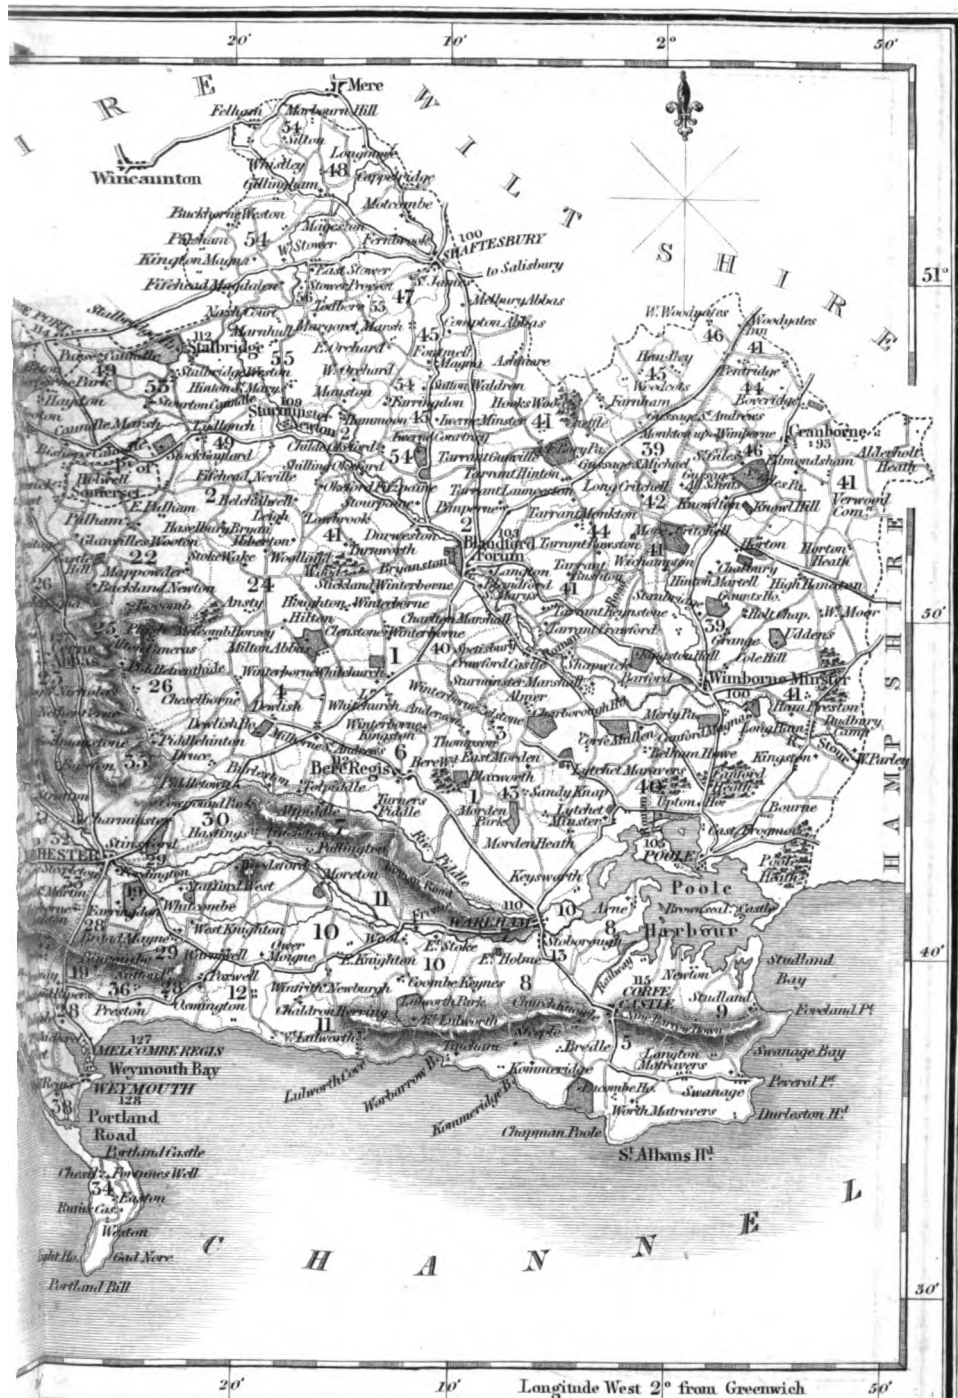

DORE-ABBAY, or ABBEY-DORE, a parish in Webtree hund., union of Dore, county of Hereford; 12 miles south by west of Hereford, on the river Dore, and in the vicinity of the Hereford railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £8; gross income £540. Patrons, in 1835, co-heirs of the late duchess of Norfolk. Here is a daily school, partly supported by endowment. Charities, £34 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £223. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Dore, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 100 persons. The Dore poor-law union comprehends 29 parishes, embracing an area of 118 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 9,203. Tanner, Not. Mon., states that, "Robert the Ewys, youngest son to Harold, lord of Ewys, built here, temp. K. Steph., an abbey of White monks, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which consisted of an abbot and eight religious, about the time of the dissolution, when its revenues were worth £101 5s. 2d. per annum Dugd.: £118 2s. Speed. This monastery was granted, 31^o Henry VIII., to John Scudamore." Acres 5,790. Houses 96. A. P. £4,204. Pop., in 1801, 567; in 1831, 533.

DORKING, or DARNING, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Wootton, union of Dorking, county of Surrey; 23 miles south-south-west of London, and 12 miles east of Guildford. Acres 10,150. Houses 848. A. P. £13,425. Pop., in 1801, 8,058; in 1831, 4,711. The town is situated in a sandy valley on the southern bank of the Mole. It consists of 3 principal wide and well-paved streets, which are clean and well-supplied with water. It is protected on the north by chalky hills; which, with the surrounding heights, command magnificent prospects. Several stately mansions and handsome villas ornament the vicinity. Living, a vicarage in archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £14 13s. 11⁴d.; gross income £519. Patrons, the representatives of the late duke of Norfolk. Here are an Independent church formed in 1662, and a Friends' meeting-house. A dissenting chapel is licensed under the new marriage act. Here are 4 daily, 3 boarding, and 3 day and Sunday schools, 2 of the latter of which are National schools. There is also an endowed alms-house. The annual income of numerous charities amounts to £330, a considerable portion of which arises from lands bequeathed by Mr. Henry Smith. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,314. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Dorking, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 250 persons. The Dorking poor-law union comprehends 8 parishes, embracing an area of 67 square miles; with a population, returned in 1831, at 9,547. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £6,767. Expenditure, in 1838, £3,909. The church, which is built of white stone mixed with flint, consists of a nave, two aisles, and a chancel. Abraham Tucker, author of 'the Light of Nature pursued,' and Jeremiah Markland, the learned critic, were buried in the churchyard of this place. The old Roman causeway, from Arundel to Dorking, called Stone-street, passes through this churchyard. There is a good town-hall here where the sessions used occasionally to be held; but the practice was discontinued. The assizes for the county also were held here in 1699; but on what occasion, or for what purpose, does not appear. In this vicinity is found great abundance of limestone, which, as well as chalk, is made into lime for the supply of London, as it is reckoned superior to any other made in the country. Large quantities of poultry, of a peculiar and superior kind, with a supernumerary claw, which are supposed to have been originally introduced by the Romans, and for which Dorking is celebrated, are sold here for the supply of the London markets. These Dorking fowls, as they are termed, are either white or of a partridge colour. The market is on Thursday, and a fair for horses, bullocks, sheep, &c., is held annually on the day preceding Ascension-day. The manor belongs principally to the Howards, dukes of Norfolk. The custom of Borough English prevails in this manor, by which the youngest son is heir to the copyhold estate.

A little to the right of Dorking, is the Deepden, the estate of the late Mr. Thomas Hope, author of Eng^d by Gray & Son.

Adm & Co Glasgow.

'Anastasius.' The romantic scenery of this spot abounds with endless varieties of hill and dale, interspersed with well-wooded retirements, pleasant features of landscape-gardening, quiet echoing dells, and cool refreshing caves and subterranean passages, with elevated terraces overlooking a vast extent of country. Elegant and decorative casts and sculpture, rustic grottoes, and hermitages, diversify its winding walks and plantations, mingling the aspect of trim neatness, with rude uncultivated nature.—Denby's, a mansion situated on the summit of the downs, was purchased, in 1734, by Jonathan Tyers, the contriver of Vauxhall-gardens; and by him laid out in a style entirely different from that well-known production of his taste. All the objects which excite solemn thoughts, and impress man with a sense of his nothingness, were here assembled; and the fane of melancholy was erected in a small wood, characteristically denominated, Il Penseroso.—The vale beneath Box Hill, called Holmwood, about a mile from the town, was the retreat of the ancient Britons, in their contests with the Romans, and subsequently of the Saxons, when the country was harassed by the Danes, for which reason it has been made the subject of a distich, proclaiming its unconquerableness. There are other fine grounds and several handsome seats in this vicinity. There are also remains of Stane street, a Roman road from Arundel to Dorking made of flints and pebbles, and vestiges of a circular fortress surrounded by a double ditch enclosing an area of more than 11 acres. The late Mr. Malthus was born at the Rookery, an elegant seat in this vicinity, in 1768.

DORMINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Greytree, union and county of Hereford; 5 miles east of Hereford, east of the river Frome. It includes the chapelry of BARTESTREE,—which see. Living, a discharged vicarage with the curacy of Bartestree, in the archd. and dio. of Hereford, rated at £4 6s. 8d.; gross income £309. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. E. F. Foley. 43½ acres of hops have been annually cultivated here on an average of 7 years preceding 1835. Acres 1,150. Houses 31. A. P. £1,468. Pop., in 1801, 107; in 1831, 98. Poor rates, in 1837, £101.

DORMSDEN, a parish in the hund. and union of Bosmere and Claydon, county of Suffolk; 2 miles south by east of Needham, west of the river Gipping. Acres 790. Houses 11. A. P. £348. Pop., in 1801, 82; in 1831, 73. Poor rates, in 1837, £90.

DORMSTON, a parish in the upper division of Pershore hund., union of Pershore, county of Worcester; 6½ miles west of Alcester. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Worcester, not in charge; returned at £41 10s.; gross income £53. Patron, in 1835, T. T. Vernon, Esq. Acres 830. Houses 27. A. P. £670. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 157. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

DORNE. See BLOCKLEY.

DORNEY, a parish in the hund. of Burnham, union of Eton, county of Bucks; 2 miles west-north-west of Eton, on the northern bank of the Thames. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £8 10s. 5d.; returned at £56 2s. 10d.; gross income £68. Patron, in 1835, Sir C. H. Palmer, Bart. Here are two daily schools. Charities, £17 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £149. Acres 1,190. Houses 55. A. P. £1,954. Pop., in 1801, 190; in 1831, 268.

DORNFORD, a hamlet in the parish of Chester-ton, county of Huntingdon; 5½ miles north-north-west of Stilton, south of the river Nen. There is considerable reason to suppose that this place was the city Durobrivæ of Antoninus.

DORRINGTON, or DIBRINGTON, a parish in the wapentake of Flaxwell, parts of Kesteven, union of Sleaford, county of Lincoln; 5 miles north of Sleaford. Living, a discharged vicarage with Sleaford, in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £6 3s. 9d.; gross income £94. Patron, in 1835, Sir G. Heathcote, Bart. Here are a day and Sunday, and two daily schools. Acres 680. Houses 73. A. P. £1,846. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 371. Poor rates, in 1837, £91.

DORRINGTON, a township in Muckleston parish, Drayton division of the hund. of Bradford, county of Salop; 5½ miles north-east by north of Drayton in Hales. Houses 33. Pop., in 1821, 185; in 1831, 197. Other returns with the parish.

DORSETSHIRE,

A maritime county in the west of England; bounded on the north by Somerset and Wilts; on the east by Southampton; on the west by Devon and part of Somerset; and on the south by the British channel. It extends from north to south, measured across the centre, 36 miles; and from east to west 50 miles: its circumference is nearly 160 miles: its superficial area has been variously estimated at 627,220 acres, 504,000 acres, and 775,000 acres. In the highway returns for 1839, it is estimated at 10,006 square miles. About a ninth part is waste land, a third arable, and all the remainder pasture-land. An insulated portion of this county is included in Devonshire, a portion of Devonshire in this county, and the vicinity of Holwell is part of Somerset. There is a rocky promontory on the coast generally called the Isle of Portland, which forms one of the most singular projections on the southern shores of the island:—see Coasts. Dorsetshire is below the average of English counties in respect of size; but Templeman, in his 'Survey of the Globe,' represents it as considerably larger than the duchy of Mantua in Italy, nearly equal to the Dutch province of Guelderland, and exactly of the same size as the island of Madeira. For parliamentary representation, it has not been thought necessary to divide it; but it returns 3 members, who are polled for at Dorchester, Wimborne, Wareham, Beaminster, Sherborne, Shaftesbury, Blandford, and Chesilton; the principal place of county election being Dorchester. The number of electors registered for this county, in 1837, was 6,366. Dorchester, Bridport, and Weymouth with Melcombe-Regis, return each 2 members; Poole, which is a county in itself, also returns 2; Wareham, Shaftesbury, and Lyme-Regis, each returns 1 member; and Blandford and Corfe-castle are not parliamentary boroughs—Corfe-castle having been disfranchised by the reform act; previous to which it returned 2 members. In all, this county returns 12 members, besides 2 for Poole; whereas, previous to 1832, it returned 18, besides 2 for Poole; viz., 2 for the county, 4 for the united boroughs of Weymouth and Melcombe-Regis, and 2 each for Bridport, Corfe-castle, Dorchester, Lyme, Shaftesbury, and Wareham. This county comprehends 9 divisions; Blandford, north and south, Bridport, Cerne, Dorchester, Sherborne, Shaftesbury or Shafton, east and west, and Sturminster; comprising 34 hundreds, and 22 liberties, containing 276 parishes, successively subject as an archdeaconry to the sees of Dorchester in Oxford, of Winchester, and of Sherborne; and when the latter was annexed to Sarum, this archd. remained part of that diocese till the 31st Henry VIII, in which year it was transferred by patent to the newly constituted bishopric of Bristol. Recently, however, the ecclesiastical commissioners have united the sees of Gloucester and Bristol, and transferred the archdeaconry of Dorset to the see of Salisbury. There are 20 market-towns in this county; houses 29,307; A. P. £698,395; Pop., in 1801, 115,319; in 1831, 159,400, consisting of 33,614 families, 14,601 of whom were chiefly employed in agriculture; 10,106 in trade, manufactures, and handicraft; and 8,907 otherwise occupied. The number of daily schools, in 1831, was 596, attended by 15,957 children; of Sunday schools, 316, attended by 18,830 children. Of these, 9 daily schools, with 322 children, and 61 Sunday schools, with 4,623 children, belonged to dissenters. The poor's rate is levied upon a valuation of the year 1740. The amount raised on an average of 3 years, from 1748 to 1750, was £13,790; expenditure on poor £12,266. In 1803 the assessment was £78,358; expenditure on poor £60,981: in 1813, £130,048; expenditure on poor £112,578: in 1833, £108,496; expenditure on poor £92,905: and in 1839, £92,600; expenditure on poor £77,200. The total amount of church rates, in 1838-9, was £8,324; of county rates, in 1800, £5,955; in 1810, £6,947; and in 1838, £8,032. Dorsetshire is included in the Western circuit. The assizes were originally held at Sherborne, but now they are uniformly held at Dorchester. The Epiphany quarter-sessions are held at Blandford; the Easter, at Sherborne; the Midsummer, at Shaftesbury; and the Michaelmas, at Bridport. The shire-hall and county-jail are at DORCHESTER:—which see. Dorset ranks next to Devon on the criminal list there alluded to. The proportion of all the criminals to the total population, taken as 1.00, was .89.

Coasts and Fisheries.—The coast of this county is about 75 miles in length. From near Lyme-Regis to the mouth of the Brit, a small river which passes Bridport to the sea, the coast is high; but becomes low towards the Isle of Portland, which is joined to the land by the Chesil bank, a most singular pebble ridge or bank, about a quarter of a mile in breadth, which runs north-west in a straight line, parallel with the coast, for about 16 miles; a narrow arm of the sea dividing it from the inner coast. It unites with the mainland at Abbotsbury, about 10 miles from Portland; but runs further along the shore nearly as far as Bridport. To the north of PORTLAND ISLE,—which see,—is a safe road for ships, but its southern point, called the race of Portland, is one of the most dangerous places in the English channel. Here is a lighthouse with two lights, the higher revolving, and the lower fixed. Weymouth bay, situated at the mouth of the river Wey, affords good shelter unless in winds from the south or south-west:—see WEYMOUTH. Here the coast is low, but the cliffs commence again and continue past the island of Purbeck, which bounds Weymouth bay on the north-east:—see CORFE-CASTLE and PURBECK. St. Alban's head is a conspicuous promontory succeeded by Durlleston head to the south of Swanage bay and Studland bay at the entrance to the capacious bay and harbour of POOLE,—which see. The fish obtained on the coast are of various descriptions, but the mackerel fishery is most considerable. Vast quantities are taken near Abbotsbury, and along the shore from Portland to Bridport. Herrings and salmon are also plentiful.

Rivers.—The chief rivers are the Frome and the Stour, the former rises near Beaminster, and having received some small streams, flows south-west past Frampton and Dorchester, and falls into Poole-bay. The latter enters this county on the north near Gillingham, below which it gives name to several villages. It crosses the county by Blandford, Sturminster, Marshall, Wimborne, and Parley, at a little distance from which it enters Hampshire, and falls into the English channel at Christ-church. There are many other rivers in this county, as the Char, the Iveloe, the Piddle or Trent, and the Yeo, but none of these are of importance. The principal lakes are Luckford lake, and Abbotsbury, the finest swannery in England. There are chalybeate springs at Aylwood and Farington; sulphureous at Sherborne and Sherford; and medicinal waters at Nottingham.

Roads, Railways, &c.]—The great road from London to Falmouth and Penzance, by Dorchester, enters this county from Salisbury, near Woodyates-inn, and runs south-west, through Bland-Forum, Dorchester, and Bridport, to Axminster, in Devon. The Exeter mail-road, and the road from Warminster, enter near Shaftesbury, and there unite: the road then runs westward, through Stower, quitting, and again entering the county, till, passing through Sherborne, and across the Yeo, it finally quits it by Yeovil, in Somersetshire. The Wimborne Minster road enters from Salisbury, north-east of Bowridge, runs through Cranbourne to Wimborne Minster, whence roads also proceed to Poole, Bland-Forum, and Southampton. Other roads radiate from Dorchester to Beaminster, to Sherborne, to Weymouth, to Wareham, and Purbeck, &c.: there are also numerous roads between the principal towns, and communicating with the surrounding counties. The highway returns for 3 years, ending 1814, show an average total expenditure of £17,706, on 308 miles of paved streets and turnpike roads, and 1,696 miles of all other highways used for wheeled carriages: the report of turnpike trusts for 1836 shows a total expenditure of £21,914 17s. 11d., by 16 turnpike trusts in this county: and the highway returns for 1839 show an expenditure of £12,251, on 1,761 miles of road. There is a short railway from the Clay pits at Norden, near Corfe-castle, to Poole harbour. The proposed Bath and Weymouth Great Western Union railway, with various branches, enters this county by the main line from Winchester by Purse Caundle, thence by Cerne-Abbas, Charminster, Dorchester, Fordington, Winterburn, Upway, Broadway, and Radipole; thence skirting the harbour, and terminating on the quay, and within a quarter of a mile of Weymouth bay. This railway is to be passed 4 times under and twice over the unfinished Dorset and Somerset canal, the only one in this county; which enters near Stalbridge, and follows the valley of the Stour till it opens into the river near Bland-Forum; but it has never been executed, though acts were obtained for its construction so far back as 1796 and 1803.

Surface, Soil, Produce, &c.]—The general outline of this county is extremely uneven, and in many parts hilly; but not elevated to a great height. Swyer hill, the highest point, is only 669 feet above the level of the sea. The most characteristic feature of the county is open unenclosed down, used as sheep pasturage: it is in no part thickly wooded; but plentifully watered. Towards the north, under the highlands which divide it from Somersetshire, and where there are fine arable grounds, yielding large crops of various sorts of grain, the country is level. On the south, on the borders of Hampshire, by the sea-coast, almost as high as Dorchester, an extent of 20 miles in length, and 4 or 5 in breadth, it consists of heathy common. From east to west, through the central parts of the county, runs a ridge of chalk hills, declining, on the southern side, into downs and valleys, which abound with sweet short herbage, nourishing, it is said, from 800,000 to 1,000,000 sheep; many of them esteemed equally for their flesh and fleece. The Dorset sheep is celebrated for early lambs. Cattle are reared in this county, both for fattening and the dairy. The Dorset dairies are extensive, and the butter celebrated. The chalk ridge in this county forms a portion of the great bed of chalk, which may be traced across the island from its eastern border and here terminates; none being found beyond the limits of the county, westwards, except some chalk cliffs, on the south coast of Devonshire. The south-western parts abound in beautiful and luxuriant vales, which counterbalance the dreary appearance of the eastern, where the heaths and commons remind one much of Bagsbot heath. The chase at CRANBORNE and GILLINGHAM forest,—which see,—are remarkable features in this county. The climate is considered extremely mild and healthy, which character it appears to have had from the earliest times, since it was selected as a favourite summer retreat both by Saxons and Romans.

The soil varies in different parts. Towards the west, on the low grounds, it is mostly a deep rich loam: on the more elevated land, it is a sandy loam, intermixed with silex. On the northern and western parts, the vale or forest of Blackmore, 19 miles long and 14 broad, contains, on various substratal clay formations, limestone, &c., some fine arable land, as well as rich pasturage. Orchards here produce excellent cider. On the south, in the isle of Portland, and most parts of the isle of Purbeck, the soil is a stone brack. In the centre of the county, the soil, on the low lands, is a deep rich loam. The soil of the downs is generally a light calcareous earth, covered by a remarkably fine turf. Irrigation is employed on the meadow-lands, and lime, sea-weed, &c., are extensively used as manure. Much attention is paid to the breeding of sheep in this county, and great numbers are annually exported. On the land under tillage, the usual crops are wheat and barley: a considerable quantity of hemp is raised near Bridport and Beaminster. The best seed is obtained from Riga: inferior seed is valuable from its oleaginous qualities. It is bruised in a mill, and produces oil for painters when pressed through hair-cloths. The residue is formed into oil-cakes, and used for feeding cattle. Barley affords great produce, and a large portion of malt is made for internal consumpt. A few acres of hops are also cultivated.

Neither coal nor ores are found in the stratal formations of this county: among the mineral productions, however, is the slaty bituminous coal of Purbeck island, which burns with a bright lively flame; but, like the Bovey coal in Devon, it emits so disagreeable a smell, that it is only used by the poorer classes. It occurs at Kimmeridge, in a low cliff, composed of argillaceous and calcareous strata. Iron is found, mixed with gravel and sand. Two kinds of freestone, for which Dorset is celebrated, are quarried in Purbeck and in the isle of Portland, which seems to be one entire mass of fine freestone: they are extensively employed in building and paving. St. Paul's cathedral, London, was built of Portland stone. A kind of coarse marble is also quarried at Purbeck, which has been used in the interior of several English cathedrals. A great variety of fossil shells and organic remains are discovered in the rocks of this county and Devon. Fine potter's clay is found in extensive beds, running between the north and south downs and elsewhere, and is sent to Staffordshire. Upwards of 10,000 tons are annually shipped from Wareham. The stratal formations of this county are very much disturbed and complicated, and of no great practical importance, farther than already stated. The great chalk ridge, affords a key to its geological structure.

Manufactures, &c.—Flax is manufactured to a considerable extent in this county. In 1838, there were 18 flax mills, employing 656 hands. Three of these were at Beaminster; 3 at Burton Bradstock; 2 at Netherbury; 2 at Bridport; and 1, each, at Charstock, Hook, Allington, Maiden-Newton, Bouston, Gillingham, Bradpole, and Broadwinser. One at Mosterton was unemployed. Mr. Austin remarks, in his report on hand-loom weaving, that 80 tons of flax are said to be used weekly, in a circuit of 20 miles round Bridport, one-tenth of which is home growth. There were, in this county, in 1838, besides the flax-mills, 420 hand-loom in the linen trade, by which Mr. Austin means every thing made of flax. Here the manufacture was principally sail-cloth. Bridport is the chief seat of this manufacture. In 1838, the sail-cloth trade employed here 206 looms: at Beaminster, and adjoining villages, 120 looms. Very little variation had taken place in this trade for many years: canvases, ducks, &c., were also woven, chiefly by women. The silk manufacture has been introduced into Dorsetshire. In 1838, there were 5 silk mills, employing 333 hands. Of these, 4 were at Sherborne, and 1 at Gillingham. There were also 2 woollen mills, one at Fordington, and one at Lyme Regis, employing 58 hands. Fine, seconds, and livery woollen broad cloths are made, by hand-loom, at Lyme-Regis, Uplyme, and Dorchester: in 1838 there were 40 looms, and the trade was steady. Shaftesbury and Blandford have been noted for the manufacture of shirt buttons; and Sturminster for flannel, called swanskin. Gloves, parchment, cottons, &c., have also been manufactured in this county, and blankets have been recently made. The strong beer of Dorsetshire is famous, and the ale is also particularly celebrated: it is in some respects unequalled. The principal foreign trade is carried on at Poole.

History.—Previous to the landing of Cæsar, this county was occupied by the Durotriges and Morini. Under the Roman government it was included in Britannia Prima; but when the Saxons established themselves in South Britain, it was made part of the kingdom of Wessex by Cerdic, who completed his conquest by seizing the Isle of Wight. In 1001, Sweyn, king of Denmark, in his march from Exeter to Wilton, destroyed Dorchester, Clifton, Sherborne, and Shaston. This was the first time that Dorchester severely felt the miseries inflicted by that people. Great preparations were made here to fortify the coast on the approach of the Spanish armada. Portland in particular was strongly guarded. During the parliamentary war the majority of the higher order was attached to the king, but the working classes were generally disaffected.

Antiquities.—Excepting such as are noticed in their respective places, the antiquities most entitled to attention in this county are the Roman roads and stations: it may be proper to particularize those connected with Dorsetshire, as the researches of Dr. Stukeley and Mr. Hutchins have placed them in a clearer light than has been done in almost any other county. Dr. Stukeley travelled over the greater part of the Via Iceniana, commencing at the Venta Icenorum in Norfolk, and following it through Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, Essex, Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire, Oxfordshire, Berkshire, and Wiltshire, entering this county near Woodyates. At a small distance from Woodyates-inn, it passes through an enclosure on the right hand, and continues its way over the down to Blandford. On this down, some years ago, it appeared quite perfect; but has since been destroyed for the sake of the materials. At about a mile from Woodyates-lane it passes some barrows, which are evidently of an earlier date, as the road goes directly over one of them. At Long Critchill, Dr. Stukeley lost the road, and there the researches of Mr. Hutchins commence. From Long Critchill he traces it to Badbury-camp, and hence to Badbury-down, where it appears to have been composed of flint. At Shapwich-marsh it is low, but turning to the left beyond Sturminster, it is bold till it reaches Almer enclosures. Proceeding hence towards Stinford-lane, it enters Dorchester on the north side of St. Peter's church. It faces the town at the west end, and again appears bold and distinct. At four miles distant it mounts the ridge of a hill, where it commands an extensive view; and thence it takes the name of Ridge-way. From Eggerton, where it appears very distinct, it proceeds to Poorstock. It finally pursues its course to Devonshire, and being intercepted at Seaton by the Foss-way, takes a westwardly direction towards Exeter. The Roman stations in Dorsetshire appear to have been the following:—Londonia, Lyme-Regis; Canca, Ariza, Charmouth; Durnovaria, Dorchester; Vindogladia, Wimborne Minster; Clavinio, Weymouth; Morinio, Wareham; and Bolclanium, Poole. Besides these Roman antiquities, various memorials of our British ancestors are also found in different parts of the county. Before the Reformation there were 29 religious houses in this county, of which many vestiges are yet to be seen.

DORSINGTON, a parish in the upper division of Kiftgate hund., county of Gloucester; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north by west of Chipping-Campden, south of the river Avon. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £12 9s. 2d.; gross income £200. Patron, in 1835, J. Harward, Esq. The whole village was nearly reduced to ashes in 1754. Acres 910. Houses 25. A. P. £875. Pop., in 1801, 100; in 1831, 122. Poor rates, in 1837, £35.

DORSINGTON (LITTLE). See BICKNERSH AND LITTLE DORSINGTON.

DORSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Webtree, union of Hay, county of Hereford; 6 miles east of Hay, on the river Dore. The townships of Upper and Lower Dorstone are comprised in this parish. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Hereford; rated at £7 11s. 10d.; gross income £450. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. T. Prosser. Here is a daily school, free to the children of this and the two adjoining parishes of Clifford and Michaelchurch-Eskley, and endowed with about £45 per annum. Charities, £20 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £185. Fairs are held on April 27th, May 18th, September 27th, and November 18th, for horned cattle, horses, sheep, and pigs. Acres 4,700. Houses 120. A. P. £2,160. Pop., in 1811, 535; in 1831, 571.

DORTON, or DOURTON, a parish in the hund. of Ashendon, union of Thame, county of Buckingham; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Thame. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to that of Ashendon. Acres 890. Houses 25. A. P. £2,558. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 158. Poor rates, in 1837, £148.

DOSTHILL. See WILNECOTE WITH DOSTHILL.

DOTHIE-CAMDDWR, a township in the parish of Blaen-y-penal, parish of Llanddewr-Brefi, county of Cardigan, South Wales; 4 miles south-west of Tregaron, near the river Teifi. Houses 29. Pop., in 1801, 116; in 1831, 150. Poor rates, in 1837, £59.

DOTHIE-PISCOTTWR, a township in the above parish and hund. Houses 22. Pop., in 1801, 105; in 1831, 132. Poor rates, in 1837, £37.

DOTTON, an extra-parochial liberty in the eastern division of Budleigh hund., county of Devon. Acreage with the parish of Aylesbear. Houses 2. Pop., in 1821, 13; in 1831, 20.

DOUGHTON. See DUNTON, Norfolk.

DOUGLAS. See MAN.

DOULTING, a parish in the hund. of Whitestone, union of Shepton-Mallet, county of Somerset; 2 miles east of Shepton-Mallet. Living, a vicarage with the curacies of East and West Cranmore, and Downhead annexed, in the archd. of Wells, and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £29 12s. 6d.; gross income £736. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £190. Patron, in 1835, Col. Horner. The church stands on the site of a chapel erected by the monks of Glastonbury. Here are 1 day and Sunday National, and 2 daily schools. Acres 4,530. Houses 120. A. P. £3,200. Pop., in 1801, 539; in 1831, 630. Poor rates, in 1837, £434.

DOVE (THE). See DERBYSHIRE AND DOVEDALE. DOVEDALE, a rocky and romantic chasm, about 5 miles from Ashbourne, Derbyshire; to the singular and striking scenery of which the sparkling and translucent waters of the river Dove give life and animation. The entrance from Thorpe Cloud, a vast and conspicuous, bare, but variegated limestone mountain, in the form of a truncated cone, the summit of which is frequently obscured with mist, is an appropriate introduction to the beauties that succeed: proceeding onwards, the forms become more romantic; the foliage thickens; and the rocks assume a greater degree of grandeur, till they seem nearly to meet overhead and shut up the glen. The rugged, grotesque, and fanciful appearance of the rocks distinguish the scenery of this valley from perhaps every other in the kingdom. In some places they shoot up in detached masses, like spires or conical pyramids, to the height of 30 or 40 fathoms, and are ornamented with festoons and net-work of ivy: in others, their scattered and uncovered beauties hang over the river in terrific masses, upheld by fragments apparently unequal to the tremendous weight they sustain. "A little further on," says Rhodes, "a mighty pillar of insulated rock, which has its base in the stream, rises from the left bank of the river; a bold mass of rock, whose conical summit penetrates the clouds, occupies the right: between these huge portals flows the river Dove. Through this contracted space, some flat meadows, clothed with verdure, appear; and still farther in distance, bold swelling hills close in the prospect. The effect of this scene is truly magical: it is an interesting transition from one description of landscape to another, that excites surprise by its suddenness, and charms with its beauty. Through this magnificent portal we passed into the lovely meadows beyond, where we stood a while to gaze upon the gloomy ravine we had just left. We then sat down amongst a grove of hazels in a sweet little vale, as dissimilar in character to the scenery of Dovedale as if they had been hundreds of miles apart. The river flowed gently and beautifully before us,—the cattle were grazing in the meadows, apparently unconscious of the presence of any human being,—the red-breast poured his lone requiem from amongst the bushes that were scattered over the rising ground where we sat,—and the rush of the waters through the narrow part of the dale came softly upon the ear, which was soothed with its murmurs. The scene was delightfully tranquil; and the mind, that only a few minutes before had been excited to emotions of sublimity and terror, sunk into a state of pleasing repose and luxurious languor. Dovedale was one of the favourite resorts of the enthusiastic and sensitive Rousseau, during his residence in its immediate vicinity; and he is said to have planted many rare and curious seeds in this sequestered spot." The length of the dale is rather more than two miles; but the views are limited from the sinuosity of its course and its projecting precipices, which, in some places, seem to interfold with each other and preclude all further access. While passing along the first and least picturesque division of the dale, the river, which is said to be "one of the most beautiful streams that ever gave charm to a landscape," soothes the ear with its murmurings, and delights the eye with the brilliancy of its waters: "in some places," says Rhodes, "it flows smoothly and solemnly along, but never slowly; in others its motion is rapid, impetuous, and even turbulent. The ash, the hazle, the slender osier, and the graceful birch, hung with honey-suckles and wild roses, dip their pensile branches in the stream, and break its surface into beauteous ripples. Huge fragments of stone, toppled from the rocks above, and partly covered with moss and plants that haunt and love the water, divide the stream into many currents; round these it bubbles in limpid rills, that circle into innumerable eddies, which, by their activity, give life and motion to a numerous variety of aquatic plants and flowers that grow in the bed of the river: these wave their slender stems under the surface of the water, which, flowing over them, like the transparent varnish of a picture, brings forth the most vivid colouring. Occasionally large stones are thrown across the stream, and interrupt its progress: over and amongst these it rushes rapidly into the pool below, forming in its frequent falls a series of fairy cascades, about which it foams and sparkles with a beauty and brilliancy peculiar to this lively and romantic river." At the narrow pass, "the jaws or portals of this wonderful valley," where there is only a passage for the troubled waters, and a narrow foot-path on one side beneath the rocks, "the river, as if impatient at being restrained within the limits of this contracted chasm, rushes with great impetuosity to a more open part of the dale, when its turbulence subsides, and it becomes again a placid but a rapid stream." There are several curious caverns, and near one of them a magnificent natural Gothic arch, in this unique and beautiful dell.

DOVENBY, a township in the parish of Bridekirk, Cumberland; 3 miles north-west by west of Cockermouth, and north of the Derwent. Here are 2 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Acreage with the parish. Houses 49. A. P. £1,746. Pop., in 1801, 153; in 1831, 247. Poor rates, in 1837, £60.

DOVER,*

One of the Cinque ports, a market-town and borough, with separate jurisdiction, locally situated in the union of Dover, lower half-hundred of Besborough, and lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent, in north lat. $51^{\circ} 8'$, and east long. $1^{\circ} 5'$. It is 72 miles east-south-east of London, 40 east by south of Maidstone, and 15 south-east of Canterbury. Its site is in a valley, along the skirts of which runs an amphitheatre of lofty chalk hills and cliffs; a small stream flows through the valley, and from the summit of the cliffs, the coast of France, across the straits of Dover, is seen to some advantage, at a distance of about 18½ miles to Cape Grisnez, which, from Dover, is the point on the French coast nearest to England. Steam-packets pass daily between Dover and Calais, and the passage usually occupies two or three hours. Dover is the chief thoroughfare between England and France. Here the great road from London by Canterbury terminates, and the South-eastern and Dover railway constitutes Dover "the Grand railway terminus for England in connexion with all Europe,"—see also CROYDON, DEPTFORD, KENT, &c.—The western part, or pier part, of Dover, is formed of irregular and narrow streets: this is the business part of the town. The new town consists of a number of good houses, built chiefly for summer sea-bathing visitors, who have lately increased much in number. Very handsome houses have been erected, since 1817, on the Marine-parade, Liverpool-terrace, and under the castle cliff. The first buildings in Castle-street were erected in 1830; Castle-terrace, and Eastbrook place, were also begun in that year. The Esplanade was commenced in 1833, and Waterloo-crescent in 1834. The improvements in Bench-street were completed in 1837. The town possesses a museum, theatre, custom-house, eleven excellent hotels, and three libraries. On the beach are hot, cold, and shower-baths, and news-rooms. The streets are paved, watched, and have been lighted at night with gas since 1822. An act to alter and amend several acts for paving, cleansing, and improving the town, and for making further improvements, was passed in 1835. The scenery of Dover and its neighbourhood is very fine; and, in its combination of rural and marine beauties, particularly interesting: the broad and excellent beach lying at the embouchure of the valley,—the romantic view of the cliffs and castle,—the singular situation of the buildings,—the entrance to the port terminated by an extensive sea-prospect, with the French coast in the distance,—and the many vessels passing up and down the channel,—combine, from various points, in a series of views which are held to be unequalled, for grandeur and impressive effect, by any on the shores of Britain.—The villages of Charlton and Buckland on the London road, are now united to Dover by a continuous line of buildings. Acres of Dover 320. Houses 2,095. A. P. £16,478. Pop., in 1801, 7,084; in 1831, 11,924; and including the parts of Charlton and Hougham within the liberty, 14,599, exclusive of the garrison and visitors.

Dover Castle, Lines, &c.—The castle is extra-parochial; but, by act 54th George III. c. 17, it was made part of the town and port.—The ancient castle of Dover is supposed by some to have been built by Julius Cæsar: other authorities warrant our assigning to it even an earlier existence. It stands 1½ mile north-east of the town, on a chalk cliff about 350 feet in height, and occupies nearly 35 acres. The fortifications are so numerous and complex that a precise idea of their relative situations could scarcely be communicated without the aid of a ground-plan. They are of different epochs, Roman, Saxon, Norman, and of later date. In a general way, the castle, in its present state, may be said to consist of an upper and lower court, defended by deep, broad, dry ditches, from which there are subterranean communications with the inner towers. The upper court is surrounded by a strong wall and towers; the lower is encompassed on all sides, except next the sea, by an irregular wall or curtain, flanked by numerous towers. The entrance to the castle is on the south side of the principal tower, by a flight of steps, leading, by the east side, to the house of the governor. The height of the top of the parapet of the keep is 465.8 feet above low-water. Among the curiosities shown here is 'Queen Elizabeth's pocket pistol,' a beautiful piece of brass ordnance, 24 feet in length, said to be capable of carrying a 12 pound shot 7 miles. It was cast at Utrecht, in 1544, and presented to Queen Elizabeth by the States of Holland. The subterranean passages leading to the castle are supposed to have been formed in the reign of John. During the last century many additions were made to render this castle still more secure; and to fit it as a place of defence. In particular, various subterranean apartments and communications were formed for the reception of soldiery, and barracks excavated in the solid rock sufficiently capacious to accommodate 2,000 men. Previous to the invention of cannon, this immense congeries of almost every kind of fortification must have been a stronghold indeed: but the eminences to the south-west, and north-west by west, are much higher than even the keep itself, and materially lessen the importance which, in modern times, it might have still possessed. During the war which ended in 1783, however, fortifications were erected on the formidable heights to the westward of the town. Four guard houses were constructed, and their position strengthened by ramparts and lines of modern defence which extended a considerable distance on the adjacent hill; and seventy-two pieces of cannon were mounted to protect them. Immense sums were also expended in strengthening this military position, during the eleven years preceding the general peace, in 1814. Whole regiments of soldiers, companies of miners and engineers, and a large train of masons, artificers, and labourers, were continually employed in forming extensive excavations, lines, breast-works, batteries, redoubts, fosses, and all the formidable constructions of military defence. Handsome barracks are situated above the town, and have a communication with it by means of a military shaft. The entrance to it from Snaregate-street, is through an arched passage, at the extremity of which, three spiral flights, of 140 steps each, wind round a large shaft or tower, open at the top to admit light. Above the barracks on the hill is situated the Grand redoubt, surrounded by a deep ditch or fosse. On the ridge of the mountain, and to the south-west of the redoubt, is the Citadel, defended by deep ditches and numerous flanking and masked batteries, besides those that surmount the parapet. Lines of communication, and subterranean excavations, connect every part of these extensive fortifications, which are sufficiently capacious to enclose a numerous army. At the conclusion of the peace, most of the cannon was dismounted, and the works left in an unfinished state. Should they ever be completed, they will form one of the strongest positions in the kingdom; and the garrison will be well-supplied with excellent water from deep wells, and curiously contrived tanks. A military road, made while these improvements were in progress, passes over the hill from Archcliff-forest to the entrance of the town from Folkestone. The military hospital, built at the same time, is a handsome building, delightfully situated on the declivity of the mountain facing the sea. These southern fortifications extend as far as the celebrated Shakspeare cliff, or Hay cliff, described in King Lear. It is 350 feet high; almost perpendicular; and somewhat remarkable in form; but it is by no means so sublime an object as might be supposed, after reading King Lear. From the edge of the cliff, on the east side of the castle, the eye wanders over a vast expanse of waters. Directly opposite lies the coast of France, at a distance of about 20 miles. In clear weather, the white cliffs, the fields, the houses, and a wide extent of country on the French shore are distinctly seen. On the right, lies the town of Boulogne, and on a hill, near it, the lofty tower built by Bonaparte at the time of his intended invasion. Twenty-three miles to the left of Boulogne, on the low ground, is the town of Calais, whose towers and battlements are often clearly seen from this spot by the naked eye. A double tunnel has been cut through the solid chalk of the cliff for the South-eastern railway; for which it was also found necessary to erect a sea-wall of concrete, and other works, of nearly a mile in length, and about 50 feet in height, along the face of the cliff west of the Shakspeare tunnel, to the commencement of the Abbot's-cliff tunnel, near Lydden spout.

* Or, DVOVA: but the opinion of eminent antiquaries is against the orthography of this modern conceit.

Ecclesiastical affairs.—Dover originally contained five parishes, but at present there are only two: viz., St. James's, and St. Mary's.—The living of St. James is a discharged rectory, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the archbishop of Canterbury; rated at £4 17s. 6d., returned at £13 6s. gross income £155. The church is a very ancient structure, and was thoroughly repaired in 1826.—The living of St. Mary is a perpetual curacy, in the peculiar jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury, rated at £4; gross income £287; in the patronage of the parishioners. This church is also a very old structure, and was probably originally founded in Saxon times. A new burial-ground was attached to it in 1835. A very handsome new church, in the Gothic style, built partly by local subscription and partly by parliamentary grant, was opened here in 1841, and in April, 1840, the foundation-stone was laid of a new chapel in Biggin-street to be named Sales chapel. There are the following dissenting places of worship here: A Unitarian General Baptists' chapel, erected in 1820, in Adrian-street; a Friends' chapel, in Queen-street; a Countess of Huntingdon's chapel, erected in 1709, in Last-lane; a Wesleyan chapel, erected in the London road in 1810; a Particular Baptists' chapel, erected, in 1823, on the Commercial quay; an Independent chapel, erected in Middle-row in 1823; a Roman Catholic chapel; a Jewish synagogue; a Wesleyan chapel, erected in Snaregate-street in 1834; and an Independent chapel, erected in 1838, in Russell-street. There were, in 1834, 25 daily and 8 infant schools within the two parishes of Dover. A school connected with the British and Foreign school society, established in 1834, is attended by 320 scholars. A charity school was established in the parish of St. Mary by subscription in 1789. At the time of the inquiry into the state of charities, the receipts of this school, arising from annual subscriptions and donations, &c., were, on an average, £215 per annum: the number of children in the school, 66 boys and 46 girls. This school has been since conducted on the National system; and two lofty and commodious school-rooms, sufficiently large to contain 200 boys and 200 girls, have been erected by the trustees. A school of industry was established in 1818, for the education of 60 girls. A savings' bank was instituted in 1825. Endowed alms-houses for poor and afflicted persons have existed here from time immemorial. The total income of this charity, in 1836, amounted to £147 1s. 6c., and was expended chiefly in the relief of sick and invalid persons, not being alms-people nor common vagrants, and in payments to shipwrecked seamen, and other casually destitute persons, not being inmates of the alms-houses nor in sickness. The alms-houses, with 4 minor charities, were under the management of the corporation of Dover, till 17th May, 1837, when trustees were appointed, from whose report we find, that, in 1838-9, the alms-house income amounted to £198 1s. 3d., including a balance of £52 7s. 9d. from the former trustees. Other charities, in 1836, produced about £343 12s. 10d. Poor rates, in 1837, £6,209.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Dover, by the poor-law commissioners. The Dover poor-law union comprehends 23 parishes, embracing an area of 42 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 20,507. The average annual expenditure on the poor of the district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,974. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,148; in 1839, £7,958 13s.

Government and Franchise.—Dover received its first royal charter from Edward I. The corporation, previous to 1835, consisted of a mayor, 12 jurats, 8 common-councilmen, a recorder, town-clerk, and other officers. The mayor was appointed, by charter, coroner for Dover. A court of record was granted to this and all the Cinque ports. A court of requests was established by act, 24th George III.

c. 8, for recovering debts under £2. Other courts, conducted by members of this corporation, were the general sessions and jail-delivery, and the hundred court. The general sessions were usually held three times in the year; the court of record every three weeks, on Friday; and petty-sessions weekly at the guild-hall. The borough, by the New Municipal act, is divided into 3 wards, and governed by 6 aldermen and 18 councillors; the style of the corporation being "the mayor, jurats, and commonalty of the town and port of Dover." The mayor is the returning officer for the parliamentary borough. The nett income of the "borough" for 1839, chiefly arising from borough-rates, was £1,984 6s. 2½d.; expenditure £2,606 17s. 4d., of which £984 16s. 11d. were for police and constables, £577 4s. 7d. for public works, repairs, &c. The nett income of the "borough and liberties" for 1839, was £2,783 15s. 4d., chiefly arising from borough-rates; expenditure £2,414 14s. 11½d., of which £867 19s. 9d. were for administration of justice, prosecutions, &c.; £596 15s. 6d. for public works, repairs, &c.; £242 7s. 2½d. for jail, prisoners, &c.; £255 for salaries, &c. The court of record was abolished by the municipal act. The hundred court had fallen into disuse. A commission of the peace has been granted, and a court of quarter-sessions appointed. Dover has returned two members to parliament since 29 Edward III. Previous to 1832, the right of voting was in the freemen, resident and non-resident. The greatest number of electors polled for 30 years previous to 1832, was 1,866. The borough comprised the parishes of St. Mary and St. James, and part of the parishes of Charlton, Hougham, or Huffam, and Buckland; besides the extra-parochial precinct of the castle: several detached places also—called the limbs and precincts of Dover—though not sharing in the elective franchise, were subject to the criminal and civil jurisdiction of the port. By the parliamentary boundary act, additional parts of the parishes of Buckland and Charlton, and some extra-parochial houses near the castle, were added to the town and port for parliamentary purposes. The number of electors registered for 1837 was 1,800, of whom only 602 claimed right to vote as householders; the remaining 1,198 were freemen. Under the municipal act the parliamentary boundary is also to be taken for municipal purposes. By the 134th section of it, however, the jurisdiction of the town and ports is still preserved over the several detached places already alluded to. The town and Cinque ports jail now occupies the basement of an ancient building at the entrance of the town, on the London road, formerly the hospital of a priory, called the Maison Dieu, and of late years used as a victualling-office by the ordnance department. In 1834 the premises were purchased by the old corporation, who converted the upper part of the building into their sessions-house, and the ground-floor into a jail. It is a strong stone-building, and its wards are enclosed within a boundary wall 24 feet high. The jail contains 7 wards, with airing-yards, and 22 cells. The only regular employment is picking oakum, or beating hemp. The number of prisoners, in 1836, was 182. A sessions-hall, infirmary, and chapel, were also projected.

Jurisdiction of the Cinque ports.—The admiralty jurisdiction of the Cinque ports, connected with the office of lord-warden, is expressly reserved in that clause of the municipal reform act whereby chartered admiralty jurisdictions in general are abolished. The offices of lord-warden of the Cinque ports and constable of Dover castle are invariably united. This officer has the execution of the Queen's writs within the Cinque ports,—a jurisdiction extending from Margate to Seaford,—independently of the sheriffs of Kent and Sussex. The constable's jail for debtors is within Dover castle. The keeper is called the Bodar, and is appointed by the lord-warden. It is used exclusively for debtors arrested within the limits of the Cinque ports, and consists of five apartments. An act of parliament for the relief of poor debtors confined in this jail authorizes the raising of £300 annually within the Cinque ports, and directs the application of it by the Bodar, under the orders of the justices, to provide bedding, medical attendance, and food to such as are unable to procure them for themselves. There is also a fund of £800, 3 per cent. consols, bestowed in 1810 by the late James Neild, Esq., for a similar purpose, the proceeds of which are devoted to obtaining the discharge of the prisoners under the insolvent acts. In 1836 there were 8 prisoners.—For history of the Cinque ports, see HASTINGS.

Harbour, Trade, &c.—Dover derives its greatest importance from its proximity, as a sea-port, to the continent; and, accordingly, the protection, improvement, and preservation of its harbour, have ever been considered of the utmost importance not only to the prosperity of the town itself, but to the kingdom in general. About the time of Henry VII. it had become so choked up as to demand the immediate attention of government to prevent its total ruin; and accordingly great sums were expended for its preservation. It was found, however, that all that had been done would not answer the end proposed without the building of a pier to seaward; and one was constructed, on the occasion of the landing of the Emperor, Charles V., in the reign of Henry VIII.; and to the erection of which Henry contributed a large sum. It extended 131 rods eastwards from Archcliff fort, or about 20 rods farther out than the present south pier-head. Previously to the reign of Elizabeth this noble work had fallen to decay, and the harbour was again nearly choked up. An act was therefore passed, granting towards the repair of the harbour a tonnage of 8d. a ton from every vessel above 20 tons burthen passing by it, which then amounted to £1,000 per annum. After many different trials, a safe harbour was at length formed, with a pier and different walls and sluices. During the reign of Elizabeth, the improvement of the harbour was carried on without intermission, and several more acts were passed for that purpose; but the future preservation of it was owing to the charter of incorporation of the governors of it by James I., in 1606, by the name of "the warden and assistants of the harbour of Dover;" the warden being always the lord-warden of the Cinque ports for the time being, and his assistants, his lieutenant, and the mayor of Dover for the time being, and eight others. Under the direction of the corporation, the works and improvements of the harbour have been carried on, and acts of parliament have been obtained, in almost every succeeding reign, to facilitate their measures. No less than 18 such acts have been passed during the last 300 years. The principal difficulty to contend with has ever been, and still is, the moveable shingle bar which besets and partly chokes up its mouth, particularly in strong south-west winds. With this view several jetties have been erected towards the east, and many other improvements and additions have been made; yet, notwithstanding all the time, expense, and talent, that have been bestowed upon it, its value as a harbour appears, from the testimony of witnesses examined before a committee of the commons, in 1836, to have retrograded within the last 20 or 30 years. This is the more unfortunate, as, besides being, from its situation and proximity to the coast of France, a harbour of the utmost importance; as a harbour of refuge, if it was a good one, there is, perhaps, none, in point of situation, to compare with it on the eastern coast of England. In its present state it consists of three distinct parts or basins: the innermost called a pent,—the middle, or basin,—and the outer harbour, opening nearly due east by a mouth 130 feet wide, formed of 2 long jetties. See also KENT.

A "fellowship of Trinity Pilots" was established at this port in 1515, under the direction of the court of load-mamage, whose business was to pilot vessels into the Thames. King William, in 1689, restored to the pilots their ancient right of choosing a master and wardens from their own body, and appointed the lord-warden and his deputy, the mayors of Dover and Sandwich, and the captains and lieutenants of Deal, Walmer, and Sandown castles, commissioners of load-mamage. In 1716 the pilots obtained an act authorizing an establishment of 30 pilots at Dover, 50 at Deal, and 20 in Thanet. By another act in 1801, the number of pilots at Dover was increased to 64. Dover was famous for privateers during the war, and supplied the service with cutters and transports. The docks, store-houses, and custom-house, are all admirably constructed. There are bonded warehouses for all goods except tobacco. The foreign trade is very trifling; but no less than two million dozens of eggs have been imported at Dover, from France, within one year; the duty upon which amounts to £8,000. The coasting-trade is considerable, and many vessels are employed in fishing. In 1833 there were 160 vessels employed in the coasting trade: the gross amount of customs duties received at this port during the same year, was £92,702 8s. 8d., up to which point they had been steadily rising for the previous 20 years. In 1838, however, the gross amount of customs duty collected at this port, amounted only to £34,487 19s.; and in 1839 to £30,562 16s. 3d. Ship-building, sail, and rope-making, were formerly carried on here to a great extent; but these have suffered in consequence of the introduction of steam-packets, and the almost entire disuse of sailing packets. There are several large paper-mills in the neighbourhood. At one time a large quantity of corn used to be ground in the town and neighbourhood for the London market; but, since the introduction of steam to mills of this kind, this has been done in the metropolis itself or its vicinity. The market-days are Wednesday and Saturday, and there is an annual fair on the 23d of November for wearing apparel and haberdashery.

History and Antiquities.—Dover is a very ancient port. It was called, by the Britons, Dwffyrtha,—“a steep place,”—by the Romans, Dubris, and by the Saxons, Dofra or Dofria. Watling-street runs hence straight to Canterbury: near Barham downs it is still very perfect. The Romans attached great importance to this station. The Saxons appear to have extended the ground-work of the Roman fortress, and the renowned Arthur is supposed to have held his court here. Dover was anciently walled, and had ten gates, some of the ruins of which have only been removed within these few years. It was in a flourishing condition in the reign of Edward the Confessor; and Dover castle was esteemed the lock and key of the whole kingdom. So well was the importance of this castle known to William the Norman, that,—when taking measures to insure to himself the possession of England,—he refused to permit the departure from Rouen of Earl Harold; and held him in forcible restraint, till he had bound him, by a solemn oath, to deliver up to him, after Edward's death, “the castle of Dover, with the well of water in it.” Harold violated his oath; but the castle afterwards surrendered to the Conqueror after a feeble resistance. The position of the well thus specially alluded to, defied the most diligent investigation till the year 1811, when it was discovered in the keep, in the thickness of the north-east wall. The octagonal watch-tower in the castle precincts, is remarkable, as being not only the most ancient specimen of Roman architecture, but almost the earliest regular mason-work now existing in Great Britain. It forms a conspicuous object for miles around, and during the last 1800 years has served as a landmark to guide the mariner to the shores of England. It is of a square form in the interior, the sides being about 14 feet wide, while the thickness of the walls is equal to 10 feet. The structure is peculiar, as the materials consist of blocks of a stactical concretion, mingled with tiles. This tower was made a place of defence in the time of William the Conqueror, when it underwent several alterations; and it was repaired in the year 1259 by Richard de Grey, the constable of the castle. Since that time it has been allowed to take its chance of preservation against time and weather, both of which it has bravely resisted; but our antiquarian tyros are carrying it away piecemeal.—Dover priory, or St. Martin's the Less, was founded in 1132, in the fields near Dover. The ruins are very extensive, and are nearly surrounded with a stone-wall.—In St. Mary's church King John is stated, by some of our historians, to have resigned his crown. In 1296 the French made a descent upon Dover, in which they greatly ravaged the town and neighbourhood. In 1625, Charles I. visited Dover; and on the 27th of May, 1680, Charles II. landed here, on his restoration to the throne of his ancestors. On the 24th of April, 1813, Louis XVIII. embarked here to resume the crown of the Bourbons; and on the 6th of June, 1814, the emperor of Russia, and the king of Prussia, landed here on their progress to London.

DOVER-COURT. See HAWTICHA.

DOVERDALE, a parish in the hund. of Halfshire, union of Droitwich, county of Worcester; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-west by north of Droitwich. Living, a discharged rector in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £5 2s. 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £221. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Oldham. Acres 501. Houses 6. A. P. £972. Pop., in 1801, 60; in 1831, 72. Poor rates, in 1837, £78.

DOVERIDGE, or DOVEBRIDGE, a parish in the hund. of Appletree, union of Uttoxeter, county of Derby; 2 miles east by north of Uttoxeter, east of the river Dove. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £12 2s. 1d.; gross income £563. Patron, in 1835, the Duke of Devonshire. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 4,000. Houses 158. A. P. £10,412. Pop., in 1801, 721; in 1831, 792. Poor rates, in 1837, £218.

DOVOLE (THE), a river in Northumberland, falling into the Tyne near Dilton.

DOVY (THE), or DYFF, a river which rises near Bala, Merioneth. It passes through the western parts of this county by DINAS-MOWDDU, “the city of the mountains,”—which see,—crosses as eastern portion of Montgomery, and then forms a boundary line between Merioneth and Cardigan, dividing also North and South Wales, till, after a course of 10 miles, it falls into the Irish sea, 7 miles north from Aberystwith.

DOWDESWELL, a parish in the hund. of Brailley, union of Northleach, county of Gloucester; 4 miles south-east by east of Cheltenham, close on the post-road from Gloucester to Burford. Living, a rector, formerly in the dio. of Gloucester, now in the dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, but exempt from visitation; rated at £13 6s. 8d.; gross income £402. Patroness, Miss Rogers. Here is a daily school.

Acres 3,250. Houses 40. A. P. £2,798. Pop., in 1801, 196; in 1831, 232. Poor rates, in 1837, £51.

DOWLAND, a parish in the hund. of North Taunton, with Winkley, union of Torrington, county of Devon; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Hatherleigh, east of the Torridge river. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; returned at £80; gross income £81. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £113 16s. 10d. Patron, in 1835, Sir S. Northcote, Bart. Acres 2,330. Houses 36. A. P. £818. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 195. Poor rates, in 1837, £38.

DOWLES, a parish in Stottesden hund., union of Kidderminster, county of Salop, about a mile north of Bewdley, on the western bank of the Severn. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4; gross income £161; in the patronage, in 1835, of James Taylor and others. Acres 1,080. Houses 15. A. P. £1,300. Pop., in 1801, 57; in 1831, 62. Poor rates, in 1837, £74.

DOWLISH-WAKE, or EAST DOWLISH, a parish in the hund. of South Pethrington, union of Chard, county of Somerset; 2 miles south-east by south of Ilminster, near the Chard canal. Living, a discharged rectory, with that of West Dowlish, in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £8 8s. 9d.; gross income £396. Patron, in 1835, W. Speke, Esq. Acres 680. Houses 79. A. P. £2,462. Pop., in 1801, 241; in 1831, 380. Poor rates, in 1837, £172.

DOWLISH (WEST), a parish in the hund. of Abdick and Bulstone, union of Chard, county of Somerset; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south-east by east of Ilminster. Living, a rectory annexed to East Dowlish. Acres 450. Houses 6. A. P. £530. Pop., in 1801, 40; in 1831, 38. Poor rates, in 1837, £33.

DOWN, a parish in the upper division of the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Bromley, county of Kent; 6 miles south-south-east of Bromley, in the vicinity of the post-road from London to Tunbridge. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of Canterbury, a peculiar; gross income £105. Patron, the rector of Orpington. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Acres 1,380. Houses 70. A. P. £1,954. Pop., in 1801, 217; in 1831, 421. Poor rates, in 1837, £130.

DOWN (EAST), a parish in the hund. of Braunton, union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-east of Barnstaple. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £18 3s. 9d.; gross income £383. Patron, in 1835, C. Chichester, Esq. Here are a daily and a Sunday National school. Acres 3,390. Houses 78. A. P. £2,759. Pop., in 1801, 311; in 1831, 446. Poor rates, in 1837, £132.

DOWN (WEST), a parish in Braunton hund., union of Barnstaple, county of Devon; 6 miles north-north-west of Barnstaple. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Barnstaple and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8 14s. 9d.; gross income £211. Patron, the bishop of Exeter. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 5,000. Houses 84. A. P. £2,826. Pop., in 1801, 336; in 1831, 628. Poor rates, in 1837, £150.

DOWN (ST. MARY), a parish in North Tawton with Winkley, hund. and union of Crediton, county of Devon; 6 miles north-west by west of Crediton, east of the river Taw. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £12 13s. 4d.; gross income £275. Patron, in 1835, B. Bedford, Esq. The weaving of serges by hand-loom is carried on in this parish. Acres 1,890. Houses 44. A. P. £1,542. Pop., in 1801, 313; in 1831, 407. Poor rates, in 1837, £155.

DOWNHAM, a parish in the hund. and union of Ely, county of Cambridge; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-north-west of Ely. Living, a rectory in the dio. of Ely, a peculiar; rated at £17 2s. 1d.; gross income £1,110. In the patronage of the bishop of Ely. Here are 4 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Town-lands produce about £158 per annum; applied for parochial and other purposes. There are also tenements occupied by paupers rent free, and a house, called the Guild-hall, is now used as a school. Downham was once the principal diocesan residence. Wren, bishop of Ely in 1642, was the last occupant of Downham palace. It was suffered to decay during the Commonwealth; and bishop Patrick, promoted to the see in 1696, procured an act of parliament to let the whole demesne, to secure himself and his successors from dilapidations. Acres 10,550. Houses 321. A. P. £11,874. Pop., in 1801, 844; in 1831, 1,722. Poor rates, in 1837, £787.

DOWNHAM, a parish in Barnstaple hund., union of Billericay, county of Essex; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Billericay, north of the river Crouch. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £12 2s. 8d.; gross income £409. Patron, in 1835, R. Berens, Esq. Here is a daily school. Charities, £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £213. Acres 790. Houses 33. A. P. £2,263. Pop., in 1801, 250; in 1831, 271.

DOWNHAM, a division in the parish of Wymondham, county of Norfolk; $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile north-east by north of Wymondham, close on the post-road from Norwich to Thetford. Houses 229. Pop., in 1801, 519; in 1831, 1,165. Other returns with the parish.

DOWNHAM, a chapelry in the parish of Whalley, upper division of the hund. of Blackburn, county of Lancaster; 3 miles east-north-east of Clitheroe, within the boundaries of which it is now included. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; returned at £128; gross income £130. In the patronage of the trustees of Hulme's exhibition. Here is a daily school, endowed with £18 per annum. In 1838 there was a cotton-mill in this chapelry, employing 29 hands. Acres 1,870. Houses 103. A. P. £1,669. Pop., in 1801, 470; in 1831, 552. Poor rates, in 1837, £149.

DOWNHAM-MARKET, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Clackclose, union of Downham, county of Norfolk; 84 miles north by east of London, and 44 miles west by south of Norwich, on the side of a hill east of the river Ouse, over which there is a stone-bridge. The principal streets are well paved. The town and parish are lighted, watched, and paved, under an act obtained in 1835. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 13s. 4d.; gross income £500. Tithes commuted in 1841. Patron, in 1835, W. Franks, Esq. In the vicinity of the church, a plain but venerable structure, situated on high ground, there were formerly some monastic establishments, and among them a priory of Benedictine monks. Here are a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1813; and places of worship for the Independents, Baptists, and Society of Friends. Charities, £18 per annum. The church estate here produced, in 1834, £93 18s. per annum; the hundred acre-common, for behoof of the poor of Downham, Wimbotsham, and Stow Bardolph, £32 15s. per annum; and other charities for behoof of the poor of Downham, £22 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £988. A work-house has been erected here for the union of Downham; by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 250 persons. The Downham poor-law union comprehends 34 parishes, embracing an area of 133 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 16,016. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £11,607. Expenditure in 1838, £6,994; in 1839, £9,312 17s. The privilege of a market was first obtained for this town from Edward the Confessor, and fairs to be holden here were authorized by King John. The market-day is Saturday. The fairs are, 8th of May, and 13th of November. Downham was long celebrated for its butter, immense quantities of which, being forwarded to Cambridge and thence exported to London, obtained the name of Cambridge butter. Swaffham has now the preference in the sale of this article; but the market is well supplied with fish and water-fowl from the adjacent fens. Acres 2,880. Houses 458. A. P. £5,234. Pop., in 1801, 1,512; in 1831, 2,198.

DOWNHAMFORD HUNDRED, in the lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent. Area 10,670 acres. Houses 540. Pop., in 1831, 3,084.

DOWNHEAD, a parish in the hund. of Whitestone, union of Shepton-Mallet, county of Somerset, 5 miles east-north-east of Shepton-Mallet. Living, a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the vicarage of Douling. Acres 1,310. Houses 43. A. P. £1,413. Pop., in 1801, 225; in 1831, 221. Poor rates, in 1837, £131.

DOWN-HOLLAND, a township in the parish of Halsall, county of Lancaster; 4 miles west of Ormalkirk, intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. Here are two daily schools. Acres 3,290. Houses 117. A. P. £4,772. Pop., in 1801, 482; in 1831, 704. Poor rates, in 1837, £226.

DOWNHOLME, a parish in the west division of the wapentake of Hang, union of Richmond, north riding of the county of York; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Richmond, east of the Swale. It includes the townships of Downholme, Ellerton-Abbey, Stainton, and Walburn. Living, a vicarage formerly in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester, now in the dio. of Ripon; returned at £88; gross income £75. Patron, in 1835, T. Hutton, Esq. Here is a daily school, endowed with £15 per annum, by the Rev. E. Ellerton, D. D. Here are the ruins of Ellerton nunnery, founded in the reign of Henry II., by a person named Wymer, or Wymor. Its annual revenue at the dissolution amounted to £8. Acres 5,800. Houses 38. A. P. £3,951. Pop., in 1821, 251; in 1831, 235. Poor rates, in 1837, £163. Acres of the township 1,190. Houses 20. Pop., in 1801, 114; in 1831, 104. Poor rates, in 1837, £33.

DOWNSIDE. See NORTON-MIDSUMMER.

DOWNTON, a parish in the hund. of Wigmore, union of Ludlow, county of Hereford; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Ludlow, bounded on the east and west by the river Teme. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Hereford; rated at £4 10s.; gross income £178; in the patronage of the Lord-chancellor. A church was recently built at East Downton. Downton castle in this parish is a spacious edifice of modern erection, surrounded by romantic scenery, and bounded by the Teme. Acres 1,170. Houses 13. A. P. £1,011. Pop., in 1801, 122; in 1831, 111. Poor rates, in 1837, £97.

DOWNTON HUNDRED, at the southern extremity of Wilts, bordering on Hants, between the hundreds of Fruitsfield and Cawden. Area 23,590 acres. Houses 1,358. Pop., in 1831, 6,815.

DOWNTON, a borough, town, and parish in the above hund., union of Alderbury; 88 miles south-west of London, $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Salisbury; in a valley on the river Avon, which divides itself into 3 channels about 2 miles below the town.

Acres, including No Man's Land, 11,420. Houses 693. A. P. £7,344. Pop., in 1801, 2,426; in 1831, 3,652. Living, a vicarage with the curacy of Nunton annexed, in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £20; gross income £644. Patrons, the warden and fellows of Winchester college. The church is cruciform, with a handsome tower rising from the centre of the cross. St. Mary's church here was founded in 1836; a Baptist church was formed in 1738; and there is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists. Here are 35 daily schools, one of which, the free grammar-school, founded in 1679, by Sir Joseph Ashe, is supported partly by endowment, and partly by the customs payable on cattle and goods brought to the fairs, amounting, in 1832, to £43 18s. 7d., besides land and houses occupied by schoolmaster: another is supported partly by endowment and partly by subscription. There are 3 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities £49 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £2,737. Downton is a place of considerable antiquity, and sent members to parliament from the reign of Edward I. till its disfranchisement by the reform act. Malting, tick-weaving, and lace-making have been carried on here, together with tanning, paper making, &c. Fairs are held on the 23d of April, and 18th of October, for sheep and horses. At the south-east extremity of the town, are the remains of a castle supposed to have been erected prior to the Conquest.

DOWSBY WITH GRABY, a parish in the wapentake of Aveland, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; 6 miles north-north-east of Bourn. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 19s. 2d.; gross income £445. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Forster. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Acres 1,900. Houses 34. A. P. £3,334. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 230. Poor rates, in 1837, £134.

DOXFORD, a township in the parish of Ellingham, Northumberland; 6 miles north of Alnwick; south of a stream which runs into the North sea. Acreage with the parish. Houses 14. A. P. £676. Pop., in 1801, 49; in 1831, 79. Poor rates, in 1837, £16.

DOYNTON, a parish in Langley and Swinehead hundred, upper division, union of Chipping-Sodbury, county of Gloucester; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south of Chipping-Sodbury, on a branch of the Avon. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £14 11s. 3d.; nett income £433. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £340 6s. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a day and Sunday school endowed with £14 per annum. Other charities, £8 5s. per annum. Acres 1,720. Houses 81. A. P. £3,670. Pop., in 1801, 303; in 1831, 448. Poor rates, in 1837, £191.

DRAKELOW, a township in the parish of Church-Gresley, county of Derby; 2 miles south-west by south of Burton-upon-Trent, in the borough of Tutbury; situated in a pleasant meadow on the eastern bank of the Trent, about 2 miles west of the town; the Grand Trunk canal passes here through a tunnel 250 yards long. Acres 1,400. Houses 10. A. P. £2,900. Pop., in 1801, 94; in 1831, 72. Poor rates, in 1837, £33.

DRAUGHTON, a parish in the hund. of Rothwell, union of Brixworth, county of Northampton; $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Kettering; near the post-road from Leicester to Northampton. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; rated at £12 2s. 11d., and returned at £118; gross income £346. Patron, in 1835, H. H. Hungerford, Esq. Acres 1,360. Houses 35.

A. P. £2,183. Pop., in 1801, 179; in 1831, 176. Poor rates, in 1837, £143.

DRAUGHTON, a township in that part of Skipton parish which is in the east division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewecross, west riding of the county of York; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles east by north of Skipton; west of the river Warfe. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,660. Houses 40. A. P. £2,482. Pop., in 1801, 173; in 1831, 223. Poor rates, in 1837, £119.

DRAAX, a parish in the lower division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash, union of Selby, west riding of Yorkshire; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-north-east of Snaith; west of the river Ouse, and north of the Aire. It comprises the townships of Newland, Camblesforth, Drax, and Long Drax. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of York, returned at £88; gross income £81. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are two daily schools, one of which, a free grammar-school, erected in 1669, is endowed, and governed by trustees who act under a decree of the court of chancery. There are also alms-houses connected with this charity: the income, in 1837, amounted to £924 9s. 6d.; whereof £240 were expended in the maintenance of 12 boys at £20 per annum each; £112 5s. 1d. in clothing the boys and the 6 alms-people; £72 in stipends to alms-people; £140 in salaries to schoolmaster and usher; £26 13s. 4d. in apprentices' premiums and indentures; besides considerable sums in books and stationery, washing, medical attendance, &c. &c. Acres 7,490. Houses 170. A. P. £7,723. Pop., in 1801, 760; in 1831, 1,032. Poor rates, in 1837, £112.

DRAAX (LONO), a township in the above parish; 5 miles west of Howden; at the confluence of the river Derwent with the Ouse, on its southern bank. A priory of Black canons, founded here in the reign of Henry I., was valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £104 14s. 9d. per annum. Acres 900. Houses 38. A. P. £1,648. Pop., in 1801, 170; in 1831, 140. Poor rates, in 1837, £81.

DRAVCOT AND WILNE, a chapelry and liberty in the parish of Sawley, hund. of Morleston and Litchurch, county of Derby; $\frac{6}{8}$ miles east-south-east of Derby, on the river Derwent, and near the Derby canal. Here are 4 daily schools. Acreage with the parish. Houses 210. A. P. £2,938. Pop., in 1801, 690; in 1831, 1,074. Poor rates, in 1837, £214.

DRAVCOT. See LYMRINGTON, Somersetshire.

DRAVCOT-CERNE, a parish in the hund. of Malmesbury, union of Chippenham, county of Wilts; 4 miles north of Chippenham, on a branch of the Avon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; returned at £100; gross income £239. Patron, in 1835, the Hon. W. T. L. P. Wellesley. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £235 2s. 7d. Here is a daily school with a small endowment. Other charities, in 1834, £19 10s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £76. Acres 1,090. Houses 30. A. P. £2,358. Pop., in 1801, 141; in 1831, 180.

DRAVCOT. See BOURTON-UPON-DUNSMOOR.

DRAVCOT-FOLLIAT, a parish in the hund. of Kingsbridge, union of Highworth and Swindon, county of Wilts; $\frac{4}{8}$ miles south-south-east of Swindon. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wilts and dio. of Salisbury; rated at £6 6s. 8d.; gross income £165. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £179 17s. 5d. Patron, in 1835, Ambrose Goddard, Esq. Acres 740. Houses 3. A. P. £1,325. Pop., in 1801, 38; in 1831, 19. Poor rates, in 1837, £32.

DRAVCOTT-MOOR, a hamlet in the parish of Longworth, hund. of Ock, county of Berks. Acres 920. Houses 47. A. P. £1,041. Pop., in 1801, 141; in 1831, 224. Poor rates, in 1837, £85.

DRAVCOTT-IN-THE-MOORS, a parish in the south division of Totnonslow hundred, union of Cheadle, county of Stafford; $\frac{2}{4}$ miles south by west of Cheadle, west of the river Tean. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £9 6s. 8d.; gross income £500. Patron, in 1835, Dowager Lady Stourton. Here are 4 daily schools. Acres 3,690. Houses 91. A. P. £3,911. Pop., in 1801, 491; in 1831, 539. Poor rates, in 1837, £228.

DRAVCOT, a parish in the hund. of Ock, union of Abingdon, county of Berks; $\frac{2}{4}$ miles south-west by south of Abingdon, near the Berks and Wilts canal. Living, a curacy with the vicarage of St. Helen, Abingdon. Charities, £22 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £226. In 1780, a fire, which broke out in the village, destroyed upwards of 30 houses. Acres 1,950. Houses 85. A. P. £3,647. Pop., in 1801, 484; in 1831, 506.

DRAVCOT, a township in the parish of Bringhurst, county of Leicester; $\frac{2}{4}$ miles west by north of Rockingham. George Fox, the founder of the body called Quakers, was a native of this place. Acres 980. Houses 33. Pop., in 1801, 136; in 1831, 156. Poor rates, in 1837, £75.

DRAVCOT, a parish in the hund. of Taverham, union of St. Faith's, county of Norfolk; $\frac{4}{8}$ miles north-west of Norwich, east of the river Wensum. Living, a rectory with that of Hellesden, in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £6 2s. 9d.; gross income £570. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £253 5s. 5d. Patron, the bishop of Norwich. Here is a daily school. Charities, £10 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £136. Acres 1,530. Houses 69. A. P. £976. Pop., in 1801, 244; in 1831, 349.

DRAVCOT. See DAVENTRY.

DRAVCOT, a parish in the hund. of Dorchester, county of Oxford; 5 miles north of Wallingford, on the western bank of the Thame, 2 miles from its confluence with the Isis. Living, a curacy in the dio. of Oxford, not in charge; returned at £40; gross income, no return. Patrons, the dean and canons of Christ-church, Oxford. Here is a daily school. Charities, £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £208. Acres 820. Houses 57. A. P. £1,758. Pop., in 1801, 260; in 1831, 333.

DRAVCOT, a parish in the hund. of Bloxham, union of Banbury, county of Oxford; 2 miles north-west by west of Banbury. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; returned at £75; gross income £339. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Delawarr. The church consists of a low square tower, nave, two side aisles, and a chancel. There are in it several curious ancient monuments. Here are 2 daily schools. Charities, £30 per annum. Acres 540. Houses 40. A. P. £1,823. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 184. Poor rates, in 1837, £126.

DRAVCOT, a parish in the hund. of Abdiek and Bulstone, union of Langport, county of Somerset; 2 miles south-west of Langport, west of the Parret river. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; returned at £80; gross income £97. It includes the tything of Middenley. Patron, in 1835, R. T. Coombe, Esq. Here are 5 daily schools. Acres 2,250. Houses 89. A. P. £3,680. Pop., in 1801, 370; in 1831, 519. Poor rates, in 1837, £266.

DRAVCOT-BASSET, a parish in the south division of the hund. of Offlow, county of Stafford; $\frac{2}{4}$ miles south-south west of Tamworth, close upon the Fazeley canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Stafford, and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £7 8s. 4d.; gross income £244. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here is a daily school. In 1838 there was a cotton-mill here, employing 90 hands. Acres 3,941. Houses 75. A. P. £4,290. Pop., in 1801, 395; in 1831, 459. Poor rates, in 1837, £189.

DRAYTON-BEAUCHAMP, a parish in Cottesloe hund., union of Aylesbury, county of Bucks; 2 miles west by north of Tring, very near the Windover canal, and in the vicinity of the Birmingham and London railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £11 9s. 7d.; gross income £275. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. S. Manners. Charities, £8 2s. 6d. per annum. Acres 1,920. Houses 48. A. P. £2,300. Pop., in 1801, 191; in 1831, 275. Poor rates, in 1837, £245.

DRAYTON-DRY, a parish in the hund. and union of Chesterton, county of Cambridge; 6 miles west by north of Cambridge, on a branch of the Ouse. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £21 1s. 3d.; gross income £330. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. S. Smith, D.D. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment. Charities, about £30 per annum. Acres 2,389. Houses 94. A. P. £2,924. Pop., in 1801, 376; in 1831, 432. Poor rates, in 1837, £223.

DRAYTON (EAST), a parish in South Clay division, wapentake of Bassettlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 4 miles north-north-east of Tuxford, on a branch of the Trent. Living, a vicarage with the curacies of Askham and Stokenham, formerly in the archd. of Nottingham and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 3s. 4d.; gross income £170. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,410. Houses 53. A. P. £1,631. Pop., in 1801, 226; in 1831, 256. Poor rates, in 1837, £59.

DRAYTON (FEN), a parish in the hund. of Papworth, union of St. Ives, county of Cambridge; 2½ miles south-east of St. Ives, on a branch of the Ouse. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Ely, not in charge; gross income £100; in the patronage of Christ-church college, Cambridge. Acres 2,000. Houses 52. A. P. £1,149. Pop., in 1801, 256; in 1831, 319. Poor rates, in 1837, £160.

DRAYTON (FERRY), a parish in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, union of Atherstone, county of Leicester; 6 miles west-north-west of Hinckley, north of the river Anker, and near Watling-street. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £11 1s. 5½d.; gross income £292. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. S. B. Fleming. George Fox, the first of the Society of Friends, was a native of Drayton. He preached his first sermon, it is said, in this vicinity, under a tree which was ever thereafter held in veneration by his followers: many of them took away portions of it, and it has now entirely disappeared. Acres 1,280. Houses 28. A. P. £1,709. Pop., in 1801, 109; in 1831, 127. Poor rates, in 1837, £115.

DRAYTON-IN-HALES, or MARKET-DRAYTON, a market-town and parish in Drayton division and union, north hund. of Bradford, county of Salop. Acres 6,880. Houses 801. A. P. £16,777. Pop., in 1801, 3,162; in 1831, 3,882. The parish is in 4 divisions, viz., the church quarter, containing Great and Little Drayton, the last about a mile distant, on the road to Shrewsbury; the north quarter, containing the hamlets of Belton, Ridgewardine, and Tunstall; the south quarter, containing the hamlets of Longslow, Sutton, and Woodseaves; and Tirley quarter, situated in Staffordshire, containing the hamlets of Almington, Blore, Hales, and Tirley. The market-town of Drayton is pleasantly situated on the north-west bank of the Tern; 153 miles north-west by north of London, and 19 miles north-east by north of Shrewsbury, close upon the Liverpool and Birmingham Junction canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Salop and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £12 10s. 7½d., returned at £130; gross income £174. Patron, in 1835, trustees of Sir C. Corbet. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1775. A free grammar-school was founded here in the reign of Philip and Mary. The income, however, was only about £40 when the commissioners on charities visited Drayton, and there were no free scholars at the school, although there was no want of attention or capability on the part of the master. The yearly income of numerous other charities was about £230. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,352. The Market-Drayton poor-law union comprehends 12 parishes, embracing an area of 91 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 13,027. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £5,508. Expenditure in 1838, £3,190; in 1839, £3,225. The petty-sessions for Drayton division are held here. Each quarter of the parish has a separate overseer, accountable to the acting overseer of Great Drayton. The trade has much decreased since the introduction of canals. The principal manufactures have been hair-cloth, paper, and malt. The market-day is Wednesday. Fairs for cattle, horses, sheep, swine, and woollen and hempen cloth are held the Wednesday before Palm-Sunday, Wednesday before the 22d of June, 19th of September, and 24th of October. This is supposed to have been one of the principal cities of the ancient Britons. It was the Roman station Mediolanum.

DRAYTON-PARSLOW, a parish in the hund. of Cottesloe, union of Winslow, county of Buckingham; 4½ miles east by north of Winslow. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12; gross income £269. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. J. Lord, D.D. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,680. Houses 48. A. P. £1,916. Pop., in 1801, 307; in 1831, 416. Poor rates, in 1837, £353.

DRAYTON (WYER), a parish in the hund. of Elthorne, union of Uxbridge, county of Middlesex. Acres 850. Houses 144. Pop., in 1801, 512; in 1831, 662. Living, a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Harmondsworth. Here are a Baptist chapel and two daily schools. Charities, £17 12s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £252. Drayton is 3 miles north-east of Colnbrook; close upon the Grand Junction canal, and intersected by the Grand Western railway, which is here carried over the road to Uxbridge on a white brick bridge of fine proportions. This railway was extended to Steventon on 1st June, 1840, and the Slough station opened for general traffic; and in course of July, further extended to the Farringdon road, 63 miles from London, with an expectation of its completion to Swindon, 76 miles, two months thereafter. In 1839, an electromagnetic telegraph was laid down from the Paddington terminus, through Hanwell, to the Drayton station, a distance of 13½ miles. During an operation of 12 months, no obstruction to its working, by any of the wires, &c. becoming out of order, had occurred. On the completion of the line, it is to extend from the Paddington terminus to Bristol—a distance of 117 miles—and it is contemplated that then correspondence of any description will be carried between London and Bristol in 10 minutes. Merchants and others, residing not only at the two extremities of the line, but at any of the intermediate stations, at all of which dial-plates will be fixed, with competent persons stationed to work the telegraph, will then be enabled to avail themselves of the benefits and facilities of Cooke and Wheatstone's novel invention.

The electro-magnetic or galvanic telegraph consists principally of wires running all the way from each terminus or station to the other. They pass through a hollow iron tube, not more than an inch and a half in diameter, which is fixed about 6 inches above the ground, running parallel with the railway, and about 2 or 3 feet distant from it. At each terminus of the wires, the space occupied by the case containing the machinery, which stands upon a table, and can be removed at pleasure to any part of the room, is little more than that required for a small writing-desk. The telegraph is worked by merely pressing small-brass keys, similar to those on a keyed bugle, which, acting through the line of wire, by means of galvanic power, upon various hands placed upon a dial-plate at the other end of the telegraphic line, point not only to each letter of the alphabet, as each key may be struck or pressed, but numerals are indicated, and even punctuation effected, from a comma to a period, with notes of admiration and interrogation. There is likewise a cross (X) upon the dial, which indicates, that, when this key is struck, a mistake has been made in some part of the sentence telegraphed, and that an "erasure" is intended. A question—such, for instance, as the following:—"How many passengers started from Drayton by the 10 o'clock train?" has been actually put, and the answer transmitted, from the terminus to Drayton and back—a distance of 27 miles—in less than two minutes. The machinery and the mode of working it are so exceedingly simple, that a child who could read, would, after an hour or two of instruction, be enabled efficiently to transmit and receive information. Indeed, two of the boys from the Deaf and Dumb Asylum in the Kent-road have been instructed, and are found perfectly competent to superintend the telegraph at any of the stations. A piece of machinery, simple but unerring, to which is attached a check-string to indicate to the boys, who cannot hear the signal bell, that something is about to be telegraphed, has been invented by Mr. Cook, which enables these youths to perform this duty as efficiently as if they could both hear and speak. Should any interruption to the free operation of this singular instrument take place, from disorder or damage to the wires, especially when the whole line is open to Bristol, it may occur to many, that as all the wires are enclosed in the hollow tube alluded to, there would be considerable difficulty in ascertaining, throughout the whole 117 miles, the precise point at which the injury had been sustained; but this apparent difficulty has been met by Mr. Cook, who has invented a piece of mechanism, contained in a mahogany case not more than eight inches square, by means of which the precise spot on the line where the injury may occur will be indicated in an almost incredibly short space of time. The invention may now be termed perfect in all its details, and only awaits the completion of the line to bring it into full operation between Bristol and the metropolis.

DRAYTON (West), a parish in the South-clay division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; 3 miles north-west by north of Tuxford, on the river Maun. Living, a curacy, not in charge, subordinate to the vicarage of East Markham. A free school, founded in 1688, is open to a number of poor children belonging to this and neighbouring parishes. Connected with this charity, which is under special visitation, is a benefaction of £20 per annum, to 4 clergymen's widows. Acres 1,390. Houses 23. A. P. £830. Pop., in 1801, 95; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1837, £48.

DREGG, or DRAGO, a parish in Allerdale ward, union of Bootle, Cumberland; 3 miles north-west by north of Ravensglass, near the coast of St. George's Channel, intersected by the river Irt, and comprising the townships of Carlton and Dregg. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Richmond and dio. of Chester; returned at £110; gross income £97. Patron, in 1835, S. Irton, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £1,400, 3 per cent. consolidated bank annuities. The soil of this parish is principally of a sandy nature, and is noted for the produce of potatoes. On a mound of drifted sand and gravel, 40 feet above the level of the sea, vitrified tubes from 1 inch to 1½ inch in diameter, have been discovered, perpendicularly descending, through the sand-hill, to the depth of 30 feet. This curious natural phenomenon—which has also been observed near the Rhine—appears to be an effect of lightning. Acres 3,610. Houses 73. A. P. £2,162. Pop., in 1801, 358; in 1831, 432. Poor rates, in 1837, with Carlton, £141.

DREW-TEIGNTON. See TEIGNTON-DREW.

DREWTON AND EVERTHORP, a township in the parish of North Cave, east riding of Yorkshire; 1 mile north by west of South Cave, in the neighbourhood of the Hull railway. Acres 1,390. Houses 28. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 149.

DRIBY, a parish in the wapentake of Candleshoe, parts of Lindsey, union of Spilsby, county of Lincoln; 4½ miles west by south of Alford, near the post-road from Louth to Boston. Living, a discharged vicarage, annexed to the rectory of South Ormsby. Acres 1,410. Houses 8. A. P. £1,643. Pop., in 1801, 66; in 1831, 89. Poor rates, in 1837, £133.

DRIFFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 4 miles south-east by east of Cirencester, in the vicinity of the Thames and Severn canal. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, rated at £8 2s. 3d., now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; gross income £270. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Ashe. In 1825, a free school was founded in this parish. Acres 1,310. Houses 36. A. P. £1,527. Pop., in 1801, 128; in 1831, 146. Poor rates, in 1837, £44.

DRIFFIELD (Great), a parish and market-town, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, but locally in the Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Driffield, east riding of Yorkshire. Acres 7,520. Houses 580. A. P. £15,271. Pop., in 1801, 1,493; in 1831, 2,854. This parish contains the township of Emswell with Kelleythorpe, and the chapelry of Little Driffield, besides the town of Great Driffield, pleasantly situated on a fertile plain, at the foot of the eastern wolds, 196 miles north of London, and 29 miles east by north of York, near the source of the river Hull; and consisting chiefly of one long wide street, parallel with which, among straggling houses, and through small enclosures of romantic beauty, runs a clear brook, abounding with trout, and which, at the south end of the town, is enlarged into a canal, 5 miles long, for the conveyance of goods to Hull. The streets are lighted at night with gas. Living, a discharged vicarage with Little Driffield, a peculiar in the dio. of York; rated at £7 10s. 2½d., returned at £120; gross income £154. Patron, the precentor of York, as prebendary of Driffield. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1801; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1813; and a Baptist, in 1788; a 1 Sunday and daily National, and 3 daily schools, a mechanics' institute, and a dispensary, supported by contributions. Charities, £1 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £910. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Driffield, by the poor-law commisstoners, capable of accommodating 200 persons. The Driffield poor-law union comprehends 43 parishes, embracing an area of 165 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 14,718. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £5,930. Expenditure, in 1838, £4,764; in 1839, £5,074 13s. The soil here is very productive of corn, in which a considerable trade is carried on by the Humber. The principal manufactures are woollen, for carpets, and cotton. Thursday is the market-day. There are here branches of the York Union, the Yorkshire District, and the Yorkshire Agricultural and Commercial banking companies. Great Driffield is one of the polling-places for the members for the east riding. The remains of Alfred, a Northumbrian king, who died in 705, were found here entire, in 1784, enclosed in a stone coffin. They were re-interred with a suitable inscription. North-east, 3 miles, from Driffield, is a farm called Danes-dale, on which are barrows called Danes' graves.

DRIFFIELD (LITTLE), a chapelry in the above parish, east riding of Yorkshire; 1 mile west of Great Driffield. Living, a perpetual curacy annexed to that of Great Driffield. Here are 12 daily schools. The Wesleyans have a chapel here. Fairs are held on Easter Monday, Whit-Monday, August 26th, and September 19th, for horses and leather. Acreage with Great Driffield. Houses 24. A. P. £663. Pop., in 1811, 82; in 1831, 92. Poor rates, in 1837, £31.

DRIGG. See DREGG.

DRIGGLINGTON, a chapelry in the parish of Birstall, wapentake of Morley, west riding of Yorkshire; 5 miles south-east by east of Bradford. Living, a perpetual curacy, formerly in the archd. and dio. of York, now in the dio. of Ripon; gross income £92. Patron, in 1835, J. Sykes, Esq. The free school in this place was founded in 1678, and is endowed with £60 per annum, and a house and garden. Driglington is a clothing village connected with the Leeds district. Acres 1,050. Houses 341. A. P. £3,525. Pop., in 1801, 1,232; in 1831, 1,676. Poor rates, in 1837, £321.

DRIMEIRCHION, or TREMEIRCHION, a parish in Rhuddlan hund., union of St. Asaph, county of Flint, North Wales; 3 miles east-south-east of St. Asaph, on the eastern bank of the river Clydd. It includes the townships of Tre'r-Llan, Tre'r-Graig, Tre'r-Bachy Graig, Tre'r-Maen Efa, and Tre'r-Bryngwyh. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of St. Asaph and province of Canterbury; rated at £5; gross income £240. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Here is a daily school, with a small endowment. There is here an effigy of Dafydd Dhu, vicar of the parish in the 14th century, who translated the Psalms into Welsh metre, and took an active part in the regulation of Welsh prosody. Acres 123. Houses 131. A. P. £3,104. Pop., in 1801, 597; in 1831, 646. Poor rates, in 1837, £322.

DRINGHOE (UPTON AND BROUGH), a township in the parish of Skipton, east riding of Yorkshire; 9 miles east by south of Great Driffield. Acres 1,700. Houses 26. A. P. £1,617. Pop., in 1801, 122; in 1831, 152. Poor rates, in 1837, £100.

DRINKSTONE, a parish in the hund. of Thedwestry, union of Stow, county of Suffolk; 6 miles west-north-west of Stow-Market. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Sudbury and dio. of Norwich, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £16 17s. 1d.; no return. Patron, in 1835, J. E. Rust, Esq. There is here a Sunday and daily National school, endowed with £32 10s. per annum, applied in the education of children of this and Rattlesden parish. Other charities, £65 per annum, besides £7 4s. 6d. applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1837, £275. Acres 1,750. Houses 57. A. P. £2,673. Pop., in 1801, 369; in 1831, 469.

DROITWICH, or WYCX, a borough and market-town in the hund. of Halfshire, union of Droitwich, county of Worcester. Acres 1,660. Houses 519. A. P. £6,702. Pop., in 1801, 1,845; in 1831, 2,487. This town, consisting of 3 or 4 principal streets of rather a straggling conformation, is situated 6½ miles north-east by north of Worcester, and 11½ miles north-west of London, on the small river Salwarp, 1½ mile from the Birmingham and Gloucester railway, and in the vicinity of the Worcester and Birmingham canal. A canal has been cut from Droitwich to the Severn, navigable for vessels of 60 tons burthen. This borough comprises the parishes of St. Andrew and St. Mary, St. Nicholas, St. Peter, and part of the parishes of Dodderhill and Salwarp, all in the archd. and dio. of Worcester. The parishes of St. Andrew and St. Mary were united in the reign of Edward VI. Living, a vicarage; rated at £7 12s. 1d.; gross income £260. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The accommodation in St. Andrew's church has been recently increased. St. Peter's is a discharged vicarage; rated at £6; gross income £170. Patron, in 1835, Earl Somers. One of the churches is a very ancient building. The Coventry workhouse or hospital for the employment of poor people was founded in consequence of a bequest of the Right Honourable H. Coventry, in 1686. It is under the superintendence of special visitors. Here are 7 daily, and 3 Sunday and daily National, schools: one of these is endowed with £20 per annum, for the instruction of 30 children. In 1829, another daily school, also supported by bequest, and 2 endowed Sunday schools, were united, and are now, together with an infant school, conducted by one master and mistress, at yearly salaries of £70 and £40 respectively. The children are apprenticed with a premium not exceeding £12 each. The charities possessed by this borough, exclusive of the Coventry charity, but including charities to schools, amounted, in 1830, to £153 15s. 8d. per annum, chiefly for behoof of poor. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,156. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Droitwich, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 200 persons. The Droitwich poor-law union comprehends 26 parishes, embracing an area of 74 square miles; with a population returned in 1831 at 15,687. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £7,696. Expenditure, in 1838, £5,814; in 1839, £5,763 15s.

King John granted a charter to this town which Henry III. confirmed. In 1625 James I. conferred on it the charter of Insuperimus, under which it was governed previous to 1835: the body-corporate consisted of 2 bailiffs, a recorder, 2 justices, a town-clerk, burgesses, &c. The bailiffs and justices held courts of quarter-sessions. The recorder, bailiffs, and town-clerk, or his deputy, held courts of record, with a jurisdiction extending to all causes of action not exceeding £10 in amount. Four constables were appointed at a small salary by the corporation. There was no local act to regulate the lighting and watching of the borough. Droitwich formerly returned 2 members to parliament. It now returns one, in conjunction with the several parishes of Dodderhill, Hampton-Lovett, Doverdale, Salwarp, Martin-Hussington, Oddingley, Hadsor, Hindlip, Hableton, Elmbridge, the Moreway-end division and the Broughton division of Hanbury, and the extra-parochial places called Crutch and Westwood par-

The parliamentary boundary thus comprehends a large tract of agricultural district. The franchise was formerly confined to 28; though the greatest number of electors polled within 30 years previous to the passing of the reform act was only 19: the number of electors registered, in 1837, was 326, of whom 5 only were freemen. The bailiff is the returning officer. Under the new municipal act this borough is governed by 4 aldermen and 12 councillors, under the style of "bailiffs and burgesses of the borough of Wych, otherwise Droitwich, in the county of Worcester." The boundary plan of the municipal boundary commissioners curtails the limits of the old borough to a considerable extent both in the northern and southern parts. The income of the borough, in 1837, was £46 19s.; in 1839, £97 18s. 8d., arising chiefly from fines, &c., on renewals of leases. A commission of the peace has been granted.

Droitwich has been famed, for many ages, for its saline springs, or Wyches. The ancient Britons appear to have had an establishment here for making salt, and a road has been traced from the coast of Lincolnshire across the kingdom to this place, supposed to have been formed by the early inhabitants of the island, and called the Upper Salt-way. The Romans made it one of their stations called Salinæ; and under the Anglo-Saxons it seems to have formed a part of the royal demesne; for in 816, Kenulph, king of Mercia, is recorded to have given Hamilton, and ten houses in Wick (Droitwich), with salt furnaces, to the church of Worcester. It is mentioned in Domesday Book as a place of importance, on account of its brine springs. Up to the year 1689, the salt springs within the borough were a monopoly in the hands of the burgesses; but this monopoly was put an end to by a verdict in a suit at law. Individuals now sink pits at pleasure in any part of the borough. Before the year 1725, the usual depth of the pits was about 30 feet, but at that period an enterprising speculator, Sir Richard Lane, resolved to try the effect of boring to a much greater depth, and after perforating a bed of gypsum of considerable thickness, which had previously formed the floor of the springs, a copious salt-spring strongly impregnated, suddenly rising, overflowed the mouth of the pit, and destroyed the workmen. Thereafter, the pits were so multiplied by individuals that the old works were ruined; and a greater quantity of brine was procured than could be consumed in the manufacture. The prevailing rock around Droitwich is a fine grained calcareo-argillaceous sand-stone, of a brownish red colour, with occasional spots and patches of a greenish blue; and the rock-salt and brine-springs of Cheshire appear to be situated in strata of a similar nature; but the great substratum seems to be a salt-rock, which lies at 150 or 200 feet below the surface: above this is a brine river, 22 inches in depth: next in order is a stratum of gypsum, or alabaster, 130 feet thick, through which the salt-springs rise at a depth of little more than 100 feet below the surface. On attentive analysis, this brine has been found to contain several substances besides the culinary salt, or muriate of soda; as sulphate of soda, or glauber salts; sulphate of magnesia, called Epsom salts; and muriate of lime. Though there are many salt-springs in England, none are of equal strength with those of Droitwich, which contain, in solution, about one-fourth part of their own weight in salt; while the others, even the most strongly impregnated, do not yield in general more than one-ninth. Brine fully saturated contains 33½ per cent. of salt. In order to obtain the salt in a state of dryness, the brine is pumped from the springs into reservoirs, and is thence discharged into large boilers, where, by the application of heat, the water is driven off, and, by the aid of resin, the salt at the bottom of the pan is granulated. It is then collected, dried in stoves, and thus made fit for use. The inhabitants are chiefly occupied in the salt trade, which is very much increased since the repeal of the duty on salt; but this has not materially increased the number of inhabitants, as it requires but few hands to manage the process. Previous to the American war, the salt trade of this place returned to government in duty nearly £80,000 per annum. Immediately previous to the additional duty, however, which preceded its ultimate withdrawal, it amounted only to £15,000; but after the additional duty was laid on, it was supposed to have nearly doubled that sum. The average annual quantity made and sold at present is about 30,000 tons, nearly one-half of which is sent abroad. By the canal to the Severn most of it has been hitherto conveyed for sale, and the barges commonly return laden with coal, of which large quantities are consumed in the salt-works. The exchequer-house, where the duties on the salt made here were paid weekly, is an antiquated structure, in the windows of which are some stained glass. In 1837 a scheme was entered into for the establishment of salt baths at Droitwich, the advantage of such a measure having been recommended by the faculty. The distance from the sea, the beauty of the surrounding country, and the favourable opinion entertained, from analysis, of the properties of the spring, presented rational grounds of encouragement for proceeding with the undertaking. The market-day is on Friday. Fairs for cattle, cheese, wool, &c., are held on Friday in Easter week, 18th of June, 22d of September, and 15th of December. A fair for hiring servants is held 23d of September.

Droitwich is supposed to have been the Salinæ of the Romans, and to have acquired the affix droit to its Saxon name wic, from a royal grant, which authorized the keeping open of the pits: droit being synonymous with "legal." It was undoubtedly a populous town in the days of the Conqueror, and many succeeding monarchs had great property here; but John alienated it all to the burgesses for an annual rent of £100, annexing many immunities to the purchase. In after times, it was distinguished by the loyal disposition of its inhabitants; so decidedly evinced in the contest of the parliament with Charles I., that the latter addressed to them a letter of thanks, which they long preserved with a degree of pride commensurate with their zealous loyalty. In a division of Droitwich called Daderhill, was once an hospital for a master and some poor brethren; and a house of Augustan friars founded by the Beauchamps. Hindlip, or Hendlip-hall, which stands near the Worcester-road, half-a-mile from Droitwich, is not less interesting for its exterior architectural style—that of the reign of Henry VIII.—than for the many romantic places of retreat and concealment to be found within its walls, and for the memory of its quondam inhabitants. In this house there is scarcely an apartment which has not a secret entrance, back-staircases in the walls, places of retreat in the chimney, and trap-doors. It is, however, at present, in a ruinous condition; many of the windows are blocked up, and the gardens lie waste; but the whole affords a good idea of ancient manners; and, with the small adjoining church, is well deserving of attentive examination. At the distance of two miles, westward from Droitwich, is situated Westwood-house, formerly the seat of Sir Herbert Packington, Bart., surrounded by an extensive park, laid out in rays of planting, from a centre, which is occupied by the house. This building is of brick, forming a square with two wings, approached, in front, by a turreted gateway, through a large court

It contains many ancient family paintings; among which is a curious one of Sir John Perrot, reported to have been a natural son of Henry VIII. Here was formerly a small priory for six nuns of the Behectine order, the possessions of which were granted, at the dissolution, to John Packington, Esq. Sergeant Wilde, an eminent republican lawyer, was a native of Droitwich, and likewise Richard de Wich, bishop of Chichester, canonized by Urban IV.

DRONFIELD, a township and extensive parish in the hund. of Scarsdale, union of Chesterfield, county of Derby; 156 miles north-north-west of London, and 6 miles north-west by north of Chesterfield and the North Midland railway, on the post-road from Sheffield to Derby. The town is pleasantly and most salubriously situated in a valley, formed by a branch of the Rother, and well-watered with springs. It is a small neat town inhabited by many respectable families. The parish comprises also the townships of Little-Barlow, Coal-Aston and Unstone, with the chapelries of Dore and Holmesfield, and the hamlet of Totley. Acres 15,580. Houses 792. A. P. £14,042. Pop., in 1801, 2,841; in 1831, 3,974. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; returned at £99 3s. 2d.; gross income £230. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. The church stands on an elevation near the town: it has a fine tower and spire, chiefly in the decorated English style. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1812; and places of worship for other dissenters. The parish also possesses 2 day and Sunday schools, one of which is National, and one endowed with £16 per annum, with 13 daily schools, one of which, the free grammar-school, was founded in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and endowed by Henry Fanshawe, Esq., with about £200 per annum, and two houses for the masters. It affords instruction to about 130 scholars. 3 others are partly supported by endowments. Charities, in 1827, exclusive of grammar-school endowment, about £140 per annum; of which £35 14s. constituted an endowment of a school at Dore, £12 11s. 9d. an endowment of one at Holmesfield, and £16 the proceeds of a charity at Coal-Aston for the apprenticement of poor children. There is also a similar charity in the Dronfield quarter, under the eye of special visitors. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,192. The manufactures of Dronfield, town and parish, are chiefly those of iron, such as cutlery and agricultural implements. A considerable quantity of coal is found in the neighbourhood. Fairs are held on April 25th, and August 11th. At Cawley in the vicinity, there is a sulphureous spring, with a bath. About 2 miles from Dronfield are the remains of Beauchief abbey.

DROXFORD, a parish in the upper half-hund. of Bishop's-Waltham, Portsdown division, union of Droxford, county of Southampton; 3½ miles east-north-east of Bishop's-Waltham. Living, a rectory and peculiar in the dio. of Winchester; rated at £17 19s. 4d.; gross income £850. Patron, the bishop of Winchester. The church is a curious specimen of Saxon architecture. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities, in 1824, £7 19s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,011.—A workhouse has been erected here, for the union of Droxford, by the poor-law commissioners. The Droxford poor-law union comprehends 11 parishes, embracing an area of 67 square miles; with a population, returned in 1831 at 9,549. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £9,901. Expenditure in 1838, £5,308; in 1839, £5,810 15s. Acres 7,380. Houses 294. A. P. £2,268. Pop., in 1801, 1,199; in 1831, 1,620.

DROYLSDEN, a township in Manchester parish, county of Lancaster; 4 miles east of Manchester, south of the Medlock river, near the Manchester and Sheffield railway, and intersected by the Rochdale canal. A Wesleyan Methodist church was formed here in 1825. Here also is Fairfield, a beautiful Moravian settlement. There are 3 daily, 2 boarding, and 3 Sunday schools in this township. Acres 1,400. Houses 491. A. P. £4,955. Pop., in 1801, 1,552; in 1831, 2,996. Poor rates, in 1837, £416.

DRUMBURGH, a township in the parish of Bowness, county of Cumberland; 9 miles west by north of Carlisle, on the coast of the Solway Frith, intersected by the Ship canal. Originally there was a chapel-of-ease here to the parish of Bowness. Here are 1 Sunday and daily National, and 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £7 per annum. This was the Roman station Gabrosentum. The fort is about 320 feet square with a deep ditch and high ramparts. The site has been converted into an orchard and garden to Drumburgh castle, an old mansion built out of the ruins of the fort and wall. Adrian's vallum is said to have terminated west of this station. About a mile east of Bowness is a large tumulus, on the summit of which is a dated column called Fisher's Cross. Acreage with the parish. Houses 80. A. P. £2,317. Pop., in 1801, 299; in 1831, 384.

DRYBECK, a township in the parish of St. Lawrence, county of Westmoreland; 3 miles south by west of Appleby, on a branch of the river Eden. Houses 15. Pop., in 1821, 100; in 1831, 92. Other returns with the parish.

DRYBY. See DARBY.

DRYPOL, a parish and township in the middle division of the wapentake of Holderness, east riding of Yorkshire; ½ mile east of Kingston-upon-Hull, on the eastern bank of the Hull, and north of the Humber. It contains the township of Southcoates. Living, a perpetual curacy, in the archd. of the east riding and dio. of York; returned at £100; gross income £189. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. Simeon. Here are 2 day and Sunday National, and 15 daily, schools. It is supposed that the village of Frisneck, or Frismark, which was washed away some ages ago by the inundations of the Humber, was situated near this place. Acres 1,290. Houses 667. A. P. £9,885. Pop., in 1801, 671; in 1831, 2,935. Poor rates, in 1837, £515.

DUCKENFIELD. See DUKINFIELD.

DUCKINGTON, a township in the parish of Malpas, county of Chester; 8 miles north-north-west of Whitchurch. Acres 510. Houses 16. A. P. £678. Pop., in 1801, 61; in 1831, 86. Poor rates, in 1837, £82.

DUCKLINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Bampton, union of Witney, county of Oxford; 2 miles south of Witney, on the western bank of the river Windrush. It includes the hamlet of Hardwicke. Living, a rectory, with the curacy of Cokethorpe, in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £24 10s. 5d.; gross income £420; in the patronage of Magdalene college, Oxford. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 2,640. Houses 103. A. P. £2,768. Pop., in 1801, 321; in 1831, 406. Poor rates, in 1837, £160.

DUCKMANTON WITH SUTTON-IN-THE-DALE, a parish in the hund. of Scarsdale, union of Chesterfield, county of Derby; 4 miles east of Chesterfield and the North Midland railway. Living, a discharged vicarage annexed to the rectory of Sutton-in-the-Dale. There is a charity-school here endowed with £18 per annum: other charities, £4 18s. 3d. The Adelphi iron and coal works are in this parish. Sutton-hall, formerly the seat of the Marquess of Ormond, was purchased by Sir Richard Arkwright in 1824. Acres, including those of Sutton, 4,870. Houses 117. A. P. £5,879. Pop., in 1801, 515; in 1831, 700. Poor rates, in 1837, £196.

DUDCOTE, or DIMCOTT, a parish in the hund. of Moreton, union of Wallingford, county of Berks; 6 miles west by north of Wallingford, intersected by the Great Western railway. A projected Oxford railway terminates here and at Harwell by junctions with the Great Western; and one of the projected railways to facilitate the communication between London and Ireland here joins the Great Western railway, running through Worcester, Newton, and Dolegelleu, to Portdynlleau. The line, however, from Portdynlleau, through Dolegelleu by Shrewsbury and Wolverhampton, to the Grand Junction railway, appears to be considered more eligible than that by Dudcote: see also HOLYHEAD. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Berks and dio. of Salisbury, now in the dio. of Oxford; rated at £20 12s. 6d.; gross income £418. Patrons, the principal and fellows of Brazen-nose college, Oxford. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,150. Houses 40. A. P. £1,792. Pop., in 1801, 181; in 1831, 181. Poor rates, in 1837, £93.

DUDDEN, a township in the parish of Tarvin, county of Chester; 3 miles north-west by west of Tarporley, on the post-road from Chester to Nantwich. Acres 630. Houses 41. A. P. £718. Pop., in 1801, 163; in 1831, 203. Poor rates, in 1837, £56.

DUDDINGTON, or DODDINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Willybrook, union of Stamford, county of Northampton; 6 miles west by north of Wandsford, on the eastern bank of the Welland. Living, a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Gretton. Here are an Independent chapel and two daily schools: a school, endowed with £10 per annum, has been allowed to become dilapidated. Acres 1,400. Houses 75. A. P. £1,893. Pop., in 1801, 295; in 1831, 364. Poor rates, in 1837, £103.

DUDDOE, or DUBHOWE, a township in Norham parish, co.-palatine of Durham; 10½ miles north-west of Wooller. On an eminence here called Grindon-Rigg, are the remains of Duddoe Tower, near which are six stones, placed there in commemoration of the victory gained by the English over the Scots, in 1558. Acres 1,580. Houses 53. A. P. £1,725. Pop., in 1801, 231; in 1831, 356. Poor rates, in 1837, £178.

DUDDON (THE), a river rising near the shire stones marking the union of the 3 counties of Cumberland, Lancashire, and Westmoreland. It flows south, forming the boundary between Cumberland and Lancashire from its source to its confluence with the sea—a distance of about 20 miles—receiving the waters of several brooks flowing from the mountains Hardknott and Wrynose; and its whole course, till it reaches the tide mark, is through a narrow dell, skirted by mountains and elevated grounds: the sea flows nearly 9 miles up its channel; and great abundance of fish, particularly salmon-trout, cod, and flounders, are taken in the river. Its estuary contains about 13,000 acres of sand dry at low water. One of the projected lines of railway communication with Scotland is intended to cross this estuary and Morecombe bay, whereby 52,000 acres of land would be reclaimed, and form two of the most beautiful valleys in the lake district, of 83 square miles. The sands, being composed almost entirely of calcareous matter washed from the surrounding limestone, are capable of being formed into the most fertile soil for agriculture. The land proposed to be reclaimed will form an area half the size of Rutlandshire, and, calculating one individual for two acres, will accommodate a population of 26,000, being about half the number of the present population of the counties of Huntingdon and Westmoreland, and 5,000 more than that of Rutland. It would be about equal in population and extent to Lonsdale North, which is a peninsula lying between the two bays of Morecombe and the Duddon, on which stand the ancient ruins of Furness Abbey, and which is also a rich agricultural and manufacturing district, abounding with slate, iron, and copper mines. By the reclaimed land being added to it, Lonsdale North would form one of the most pleasant and compact counties in the kingdom. It has been observed by the authorities appointed by government to decide upon the most eligible of the projected lines, that such a scheme might stand on a separate foundation, and be carried into effect on its own merits, even though this projected line of railway should not be executed.

DUDLEY, a borough, market-town, and parish in the hund. of Halfshire, union of Dudley, county of Worcester, though locally situated in Staffordshire; 119 miles north-west of London, 26 miles north-north-east of Worcester, and 8½ west-north-west of Birmingham. The Dudley canal proceeds from the Worcester and Birmingham canal, about 4 miles south of Birmingham, and joins the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal a little west of Stourbridge. Its whole course is 13 miles; and in this short distance, it passes under 3 tunnels, the aggregate length of which is considerably more than 4 miles. About a mile north of Stourbridge, a branch goes to that town. The town was originally comprised in one long street, with a church at each end; but several other wide and well-paved streets have been added, containing some very good houses. They are lighted at night with gas. North of the town, on an elevated hill, are the extensive remains of an ancient castle, from the top of the lofty tower of which, the prospect, in walking round it, is singularly beautiful, and so extensive, that, on a clear day, the eye may discern the counties of Worcester, Stafford, Derby, Leicester, Warwick, Salop, Hereford, and part of Wales. Nor is the prospect more extensive than full of variety, comprising hills and dales, woods and villages, populous towns and busy seats of manufacture. The stupendous hills of Malvern, though at the distance of about forty miles, bounding the horizon towards the south, are noble features in the scene; as are also those of Clent, Abberley, the Cleyes, and the Wrekin. To the west of the castle, stand the venerable ruins of Dudley-priory. Acres 3,930. Houses 4,326. A. P. £20,833. Pop., in 1801, 10,107; in 1831, 23,043.

Living, a vicarage, with St. Edmund's chapel, in the archd. and dio. of Worcester; rated at £7 18s. 6½d., gross income £615. Patron, in 1835, Lord Ward. The church was rebuilt in 1819. It is a fine edifice. Two chapels connected with the establishment have been recently built. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1788; a Baptist, in 1776; a Presbyterian, in 1704; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1788; one of the New Connexion, in 1829; a Friends' meeting-house; a Unitarian and a Roman Catholic chapel. The Baptist and Independent chapels are licensed under the new marriage act. A new and spacious Independent chapel was opened on 9th August, 1840: it accommodates 1,400 persons; and cost about £3,500. There are 250 free sittings. Here are also 23 daily and 18 Sunday schools, including 1 school connected with the British and Foreign school society, and 3 Sunday and daily National schools. The free grammar-school, Baylie's charity-school, the blue-coat school, the female school of industry, and Mrs. Cartwright's school for 40 poor girls, are all endowed schola.

The grammar-school was established by an inquisition under a commission of charitable uses in 1638, on a previous foundation by grant from Queen Elizabeth, aided by other donations. The income of this school, in 1790, hardly amounted to £50 per annum; in 1822, it amounted to £199 8s. 6d.; and, in 1832, to £368 18s. 5d. The master's salary was fixed, in 1830, at £240. In 1806, a new school-house was built, which was occupied till 1826, when the walls cracked and the foundations gave way,—the house having been built on ground under which mines had been worked: the recent workings had also drained away the water with which the house was supplied. The school was of course removed to a safer locality. It is open to all the boys of parishioners of Dudley, for instruction in the classics, so soon as they can read English. The average number of scholars on the foundation, in 1832, was 37. They were sons of the most respectable inhabitants: several have gone to the universities. Baylie's charity-school was founded in 1732, for instructing and clothing 50 poor boys "out of the parishes of the Town and Foreign of Dudley." The income of this charity, in 1832, was £455 7s. 6d. A new school, consisting of one lofty room, capable of containing 250 boys, was built in 1827. There were between 230 and 240 boys in the school, all supplied with books and stationery, and instructed on the Lancasterian system; 50 boys were annually clothed with caps, coats, and breeches, &c., at an expense of about £2 each. The master's salary was £100, with £50 to a treasurer and superintendent. A Presbyterian chapel was vested in the trustees, for purposes connected with this charity. A school of industry for girls, under the management of the trustees for the chapel, but entirely supported by voluntary contribution, was built at an expense of £500, derived from the funds of this charity. The blue-coat school was founded in 1706, by subscription, for the instruction of 50 boys, children of the poor of Dudley: most of them received clothing in 1707. Endowments followed, and, in 1832, the income of this charity was £482 6s. 6d. The school-house originally occupied by the children of this charity, was also undermined; and, about the year 1812, they were removed to an enlarged building in Fisher-street, in the lower room of which the boys' blue-coat school, and in the higher, the girls' school of industry was held in 1832, when the charity commissioners visited Dudley. The boys, 241 in number, were taught on the Madras system, and 100 of them annually clothed, at Easter, in blue, with numbered badges, the clothes being chiefly made, and the stockings knit, by the girls of the school of industry. In 1821, the trustees established an infant school: 114 boys and 22 girls were taught in this school in 1832: at 7 years of age they are transferred to the blue-coat school, and the school of industry. Schools for the instruction of adults, male and female, are also supported out of the funds of this useful charity. In March 1832, 15 men and 11 women were receiving instruction at these schools. The girls' school of industry also derives considerable aid from its funds. This latter institution was founded by John Hodgetts in 1755: there are generally 230 girls in the school, 50 of whom, parishioners of Dudley, are clothed when they have been 2 years in this or the infant school: 15 others are also clothed, partly by the trustees, and partly by their parents. The girls take in work, and make the clothes for the blue-coat school and Sunday school—another charitable institution belonging to this parish—and they are allowed to work for their parents two half days in each week. They make also their own clothing. Some of the ladies of Dudley frequently attend to inspect the school. Besides female work, the girls are otherwise well educated. Amongst Mrs. Cartwright's benevolent gifts, the girls' school, which she established in 1818, is also a meritorious institution: 40 girls, 6 of whom were usually nominated by the benefactress herself, are taught to read, write, knit, and sew; and all of them annually receive complete suits of clothing on Christmas-day. Clothing charities were also instituted by Mrs. Cartwright and others. There are charity dissenting schools in Dudley; and a valuable contingent charity, for various purposes beneficial to Dudley and other parishes, was devised by Daniel Parsons in 1814, but had not come into operation in 1832: the annual income of this charity amounted to £526. The annual income arising out of the numerous and valuable charities connected with Dudley, exclusive of Parsons', amounted, in 1832, to upwards of £1,500; besides the proceeds of valuable coal mines and other property. Poor rates, in 1837, £4,309.—The Dudley poor-law union comprehends 4 parishes, embracing an area of 26 square miles; with a population returned in 1831, at 66,009. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £11,455. Expenditure in 1838, £9,563; in 1839, £9,562 16s.

Dudley was a borough, and sent members to parliament in the reign of Edward I.; but had lost the privilege, till it was restored by the Reform act. It now returns one member: the limits of the parliamentary borough and those of the parish are coincident. The number of electors registered for the year 1836-7 was 844. The number who actually polled at the general election, in 1837, was 674. The sheriff of the county appoints the returning officer.

The manufactures of Dudley are iron, nails, chains, chain cables, fire irons, &c., and glass. In 1831 there were 570 men employed as nailers, and a great number in the iron works. The vicinity abounds with coal, iron-stone, and lime-stone: there are extensive collieries, mines, and quarries of these, which furnish employment to a large proportion of the inhabitants: in 1831 there were 500 hands employed in the coal mines alone. The mineral riches of this vicinity are remarkable:—Dudley may be considered as forming the centre of two ranges of hills, of which one runs towards the north to Wolverhampton, and consists of lime-stone; the other takes a southern course from Dudley, through Rowley—from thence called the Rowley hills—towards Birmingham, and consists of basalt. On the last of the former chain is situated part of the town of Dudley, and the ruins of its castle; which are undermined by immense quarries of admirable lime-stone, forming rude caverns of vast extent, the great entrance to which is half-a-mile to the north of the castle. Here an enormous scene of subterraneous excavation discovers itself, consisting of lime quarries worked into the rock, and one of the canal tunnels, which perforates it entirely, and opens again into day-light at the distance of nearly two miles from its entrance. This tunnel is 13 feet high and 9 wide, and, at one point, is 64 feet below the surface of the earth. It was begun and made navigable in about the space of 4 years; and affords a striking proof of the vast power and effects of human industry and perseverance. The height and great extent of the caverns, with the massive lime-stone pillars which support their roof, cast over them an air of rude magnificence and grandeur. Numerous fossils have been here discovered, such as enchirini, cornua ammonis, anomia, and others; but the rarest and most curious production of this sort is the pediculus marinus, or sea-louse, the "entimolitus paradoxus monoculi desperditi" of Linnæus, which is less learnedly, though perhaps more euphoniouly, styled "the Dudley locust," in the homely vocabulary of the workmen. The market-day is Saturday. The fairs, which are chiefly for cattle, wool, and cheese, are held on the 8th of May, 5th of August, and 2d of October. Races are held here on July 24th, and continue for two days. The head establishment of the Dudley and West Bromwich banking company commenced business here in 1834.

Dudley seems to have derived its name from the Saxon prince Dudo or Dodo, to whom it belonged at the time of the heptarchy, and who, in 700, built a castle here, which was demolished in the 20th year of the reign of Henry II.; but it was rebuilt by Roger de Somery, in the reign of Henry III. It was garrisoned by the royalists at the commencement of the parliamentary war; and, in 1644, Col. Beaumont bravely and successfully defended it against the parliamentarians. It was destroyed by fire in 1750; but, as already observed, some of its interesting remains still exist. It consisted of a variety of buildings, partly encompassing an area about an acre in size, surrounded by an exterior wall, flanked with towers: the keep, which still stands, on a considerable eminence, in the south-west angle of the area, has evident marks of great antiquity, and is probably the only part remaining that was built by Dodo, the original founder. Lord Dudley and Ward, some time since, restored part of the keep to its original state, and raised the mutilated tower to the height and form of its corresponding one. The vast heap of lime-stone which was battered down in the civil wars, and filled up the area, being now taken away, exhibits the original form in which Dodo is stated to have erected it. This massive structure is of an oblong shape, having a lofty tower at each corner, with staircases and communications from one to the other, all built of the same durable lime-stone, dug from the rock below. The bases of each of these four towers gradually increase to the foundation, and those on the south side, which are now laid bare, seem to unite with the formation of the mount itself: on examining the base apartments cleared from rubbish, instead of windows, appear loop-holes, with a flight of steps ascending to the apertures, similar to those of Rochester-castle. Next to the keep, in point of antiquity, is the chapel, of which two fine Gothic windows remain—one of them is of the lancet form—and the great gateway, with the apartments over it: this entrance appears to have been very strong; the walls are 9 feet in thickness, having a portcullis at each end. Under the chapel is a large vault, arched over, which is commonly called the prison, but the brick-work being broken, it now affords shelter for cattle. The other parts of the castle appear to have been built about the time of Henry VIII., or of Queen Elizabeth. In the kitchen, which is on the east side, are two enormous chimneys; the fire-place of one measures four yards and a half in width. Gervase Pagnell, lord of the manor, founded a priory of Benedictine monks near the site of this castle before the year 1161. It afterwards became a cell to Wenlock, a monastery of the same order in Salop. The principal fragments of the building are a handsome Gothic window, with the upper part of its tracery almost entire, and an elegant little tower, of an octangular form: a considerable part of the building was taken down some years since, for the convenience of a manufactory into which the tenable remains were converted.

DUDSTONE AND KING'S-BARTON HUN-

DRED comprises three divisions,—lower, middle, and upper,—in the county of Gloucester. Area 42,090 acres. Houses 2,218. Pop., in 1831, 12,331.

DUESHILL, a township in the parochial chapelry of Hallystone, west division of the ward of Coquetdale, Northumberland; 6 miles west of Rothbury; on the western bank of the Coquet or Cocket river. Houses 7. Pop., in 1801, 32; in 1831, 45. Other returns with Hallystone.

DUFFIELD, a parish in the hund. of Appletree, union of Belper, county of Derby; $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north of Derby, comprising the chapelries of Belper and Turnditch, with the townships of Hazlewood, Heage, Holbrook, Shottle and Postern, and Windley; besides the beautiful village of Duffield, situated on the western bank of the Derwent, and close upon the Great North Midland railway. Acres 17,390. Houses 2,791. A. P. £26,464. Pop., in 1801, 9,010; in 1831, 14,683. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Derby and dio. of Lichfield; rated at £8 4s., returned at £100; gross income £141. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £450. Patron, the bishop of Lichfield. Here are a Presbyterian church, formed in 1766; and places of worship for other dissenters. Inclusive of 2 daily and 2 Sunday National schools, there are, throughout this parish, 49 daily, and 21 Sunday schools. Of the daily, 3 are respectively endowed with £124 9s. 10d., £28, and £6 per annum. There are alms-houses, several of which are also supported by endowment. In 1685 Joseph Webster gave certain property to this parish for various charitable purposes, the income of which amounts to £101 10s. 6d. per annum. Charities, exclusive of those already particularized, upwards of £160 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £408. In 1838 there were 2 cotton mills here, employing 1,619 hands. Lace-making is carried on to some extent, and many of the working-class obtain employment in the neighbouring collieries and quarries. A fair for cattle is held here on March 1st. Duffield was formerly part of the demeane of Henry de Ferrars, earl of Derby, who, in 1096, had a castle at the north-west end of the village on the site now called Castle-orchard, which was forfeited by his turbulent descendant, Robert de Ferrars, who joined the rebels in the reign of Henry III. In 1330, Henry, earl of Lancaster, claimed several parks in Duffield Frith, and it continued a portion of the duchy of Lancaster till it was granted to several persons in the reign of Charles I.

DUFFIELD (NORTH), a township in the parish of Skipwith, east riding of Yorkshire; $\frac{1}{2}$ miles north-east of Selby; west of the river Derwent. There are 2 daily schools and a neat chapel for Primitive Methodists in this village. At this place formerly was a castle, the residence of Lord Hussey; but it has long since been destroyed. Acres 3,220. Houses 70. A. P. £4,269. Pop., in 1801, 313; in 1831, 344. Poor rates, in 1837, £219.

DUFFIELD (SOUTH), a township in the parish of Hemingborough, east riding of Yorkshire; $\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north of Selby; in the vicinity of the railway from Leeds to Hull. Acres 1,280. Houses 34. A. P. £1,274. Pop., in 1801, 160; in 1831, 202. Poor rates, in 1837, £80.

DUFFRIN, a hamlet in the parish of Bassaleg, hund. of Wentloog, union of Newport, county of Monmouth; 3 miles south-west of Newport, a little to the west of the river Ebwy, near the Crumlin canal, and in the line of the Romney railroad near its junction with the Sirhowey railroad at Pye-corner in Bassaleg, where also the Ebwy railroad is connected with the Romney railroad.

Acreeage with the parish. Houses 37. A. P. £1,686. Pop., in 1801, 208; in 1831, 213. Poor rates, in 1837, £219.

DUFFTON, a parish in East Ward, union of East Ward, county of Westmoreland; 3 miles north of Appleby, on a branch of the river Eden. Living, a discharged rectory in the archd. and dio. of Carlisle; rated at £120; gross income £172. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Thanet. The Methodists have a chapel here. Here are also 3 daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. The lead-mines in Dufton have been found to be unusually rich, producing, at least recently, at a smelting mill, about a mile from the village, more than 140 stones of pig-lead per week. Dufton-hall, a venerable mansion, north of the village, is now occupied as a sporting-seat. Acres 20,560. Houses 98. A. P. £2,311. Pop., in 1801, 392; in 1831, 554. Poor rates, in 1837, £108.

DUGGLEBY, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Grindalylth, east riding of the county of York; 6 miles east-south-east of New Malton. Here is a day and Sunday school, partly supported by endowment. Acres 1,820. Houses 31. A. P. £1,661. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 186. Poor rates, in 1837, £133.

DUKE'S-HAGG, a township in Ovingham parish, county of Northumberland; 11½ miles east-south-east of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. House 1. Pop., in 1811, 7; in 1831, 8. Other returns with the parish.

DUKINFIELD, or DUCKENFIELD, a township and chapelry in the parish of Stockport, county of Chester; 6½ miles north-east by north of Stockport, on an eminence, commanding a fine prospect of a populous and fruitful country. The Manchester and Sheffield railway crosses the valley of the Tame, and the river itself, a little to the south of Dukinfield; and the Peak Forest and Macclesfield canal is carried under the public road in this vicinity. A new church or chapel was erected here by parliamentary grant, subscription, &c., in 1840, at an estimated cost of £3,689: it contains accommodation for 802 persons in pews, 432 in free seats. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1806; and places of worship for the Wesleyans, Unitarians, and Moravians; the three last of which have schools: that of the Methodists accommodates 1,000 children. There are besides 8 daily and 6 Sunday schools. The Roman Catholics have a chapel in this place. A new and elegant Unitarian chapel was erected in 1840 on the site of the former edifice: it contains 977 seats, of which 194 are free. Here are extensive collieries and cotton factories: returns of the latter with the parish. Dukinfield hall, now let in tenements, was here the seat of a family who derived their name from the town. Sir Robert Dukinfield was created baronet in 1665. Acres 1,690. Houses 2,465. A. P. £9,859. Pop., in 1801, 1,737; in 1831, 14,681. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,145.

DULAS, a parish in the hund. of Webtree, union of Dore, county of Hereford; 12 miles south-west by south of Hereford; on a branch of the river Monnow, and in the vicinity of the Abergavenny and Hereford railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. of Brecon and dio. of St. David, returned at £75; gross income £82. Patron, in 1835, J. Farry, Esq. Acres 1,320. Houses 10. A. P. £549. Pop., in 1801, 39; in 1831, 58. Poor rates, in 1837, £15.

DULAS, a hamlet and small sea-port in the parish of Llanwenallwyf, hund. of Twerclwyn, county of Anglesea, North Wales; 4 miles south-south-east of Amlwch; on the river Dulas. This harbour is small and dangerous, being very shallow. The island of Ynys-Gadem lies opposite the entrance. The inhabitants employ themselves in fishing and mining. The extensive Parys mines are in this vicinity: see AMLWCH. Pop. with the parish.

DULAS, or DYLAIS, (UPPER and LOWER.) two hamlets in the parish of Cadoxton, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 9 miles east by south of Cowbridge. There are coal and copper mines here. Houses 101. A. P. £6,087. Pop., in 1801, 562; in 1831, 496. Poor rates, in 1837, £245.

DULAS (THE), a river of Anglesea, which falls into the Irish sea opposite Mica Island.

DULAS (THE), a river in Montgomeryshire, which falls into the Severn below Llanidloes.

DULAS (THE), a river in the above county, falling into the Severn at Newton.

DULAS (THE), another river of the county of Montgomery, which falls into the Towy.

DULAS (THE), a river in Carmarthenshire, falling into the Towy at Druson-Castle.

DULLINGHAM, a parish in the hund. of Radfield, union of Newmarket, county of Cambridge; 4 miles south-south by west of Newmarket. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Ely; rated at £12 15s. 5d., returned at £136; gross income £165. Patroness, in 1835, Mrs. Pigott. Here are two daily schools, one of which has a small endowment. Charities, about £123 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £425. Here, at the Reformation, 1643, "March 22, we destroyed 30 superstitious pictures, 2 of them crucifixes; ordered a cross to be taken off the church, and the steps to be levelled." Acres 3,240. Houses 83. A. P. £2,742. Pop., in 1801, 468; in 1831, 634.

DULOE, a parish in the hund. of West, union of Liskeard, county of Cornwall; 3½ miles north-north-west of West Loe; near the Liskeard canal. Living, a vicarage consolidated with a rectory, in the archd. of Cornwall and dio. of Exeter; rated at £30 15s. 2½d.; gross income £650; in the patronage of Balliol college, Oxford. Here is a daily school. Charities, £13 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £393. Acres 5,900. Houses 169. A. P. £5,094. Pop., in 1801, 709; in 1831, 928.

DULVERTON, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Williton and Freemanners, union of Dulverton, county of Somerset; about 165 miles west by south of London, and 13 east of South Molton. Acres 7,760. Houses 247. A. P. £5,046. Pop., in 1801, 1,049; in 1831, 1,285. This ancient town is pleasantly situated on a branch of the Exe river. It consists principally of two neat and tolerably well-paved streets. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £21 10s. 10d.; gross income £378. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £269 18s. 1d. impropriated, and £390 vicarial. In the patronage of the dean and chapter of Wells. Here is an Independent church, formed in 1831. There are a Sunday and daily National, and two daily schools, one of which is endowed with £21 10s. per annum. There are also five infant schools. Charities, about £56 12s. per annum, inclusive of £17, constituting an endowment of the National school. There are also rents of poor's lands carried to poor's rates. The tolls taken at the fairs held here have been annually distributed to the poor of the parish. Poor rates, in 1837, £590.—The Dulverton poor-law union comprehends 11 parishes, embracing an area of 77 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 4,951. The average annual expenditure on the poor of the district, during the three years preceeding the formation of the union, was £2,668. Expenditure, in 1838, £1,973; in 1839, £1,983 5s. The chief manufactures are woollen cloths and blankets, made by hand-loom weavers. A silk-manufactory here, in 1838, employed 74 hands. There are a few lead-mines in the vicinity. The market-day is Saturday. Fairs are held here on the 10th of July and 8th of November, for cattle. The West of England and South Wales District bank have a branch here. Several individuals concerned in the rebellion of 1745, were executed in the market-place here.

DULWICH, anciently DULWYCHE, a pleasant secluded hamlet in the parish of Camberwell, and east division of the hundred of Brixton, county of Surrey; 4 miles south of London. There are many handsome mansions and villas in Dulwich and its vicinity; and the number of visitors and temporary summer residents is considerable. Pop. included in that of Camberwell. DULWICH COLLEGE, at the eastern extremity of the village, was founded in 1619 by Edward Alleyn, the celebrated dramatic performer, cotemporary with Shakspeare. He endowed it with the manor of Dulwich and various tenements in the county of Middlesex, producing, at present, an income of about £8,000. By the regulations of the founder, it was appointed that the master and the warden of the college should bear the name of Alleyn, or Allen, and that 4 fellows, 6 poor brethren, 6 poor sisters, 12 poor scholars, 6 assistants, and 30 non-resident members, should be selected from the parishes of St. Botolph, St. Saviour's (Southwark,) St. Luke and St. Giles, Camberwell. On the death of the master the warden succeeds him, and a new warden is immediately elected. The poor brethren and sisters are chosen as vacancies occur, from the out-burrows, who are taken from the parishes of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, St. Giles's Cripplegate, and St. Saviour's, (Southwark), ten from each parish. Apartments in the college are allotted them, and a considerable pecuniary allowance. The scholars are received at the ages of from 6 to 8 years, and educated until they obtain their 14th year, when they are apprenticed: some were originally educated for the university, which was discontinued; although, according to the statute, there ought to have been four. The buildings of the college are in various and discrepant styles of architecture: the hall and west wing are of the style which prevailed in the reign of Elizabeth; the east wing is in the Vanbrugh style, and the gallery different from each. The form of the college is three sides of a quadrangle: the centre contains the master and warden's apartments, with a hall, kitchen, and other offices on one side, and the chapel on the other. The chapel is open to the inhabitants of the village. The altar-piece has a fine painting of the Ascension. Here is the tomb of the founder and his family. The east wing, rebuilt in 1740, contains apartments for the fellows and the school-room, and the opposite wing contains apartments for the scholars and the library. At the south end of the college is a noble picture-gallery, erected for the reception of a valuable collection of paintings by Italian, Flemish, and English masters, opened to the public at stated times, and consisting of 371 pictures, worth at least £50,000,—containing exquisite and even numerous specimens of Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, Correggio, Andrea del Sarto, Titian, the Carraccis, Carlo Dolci, Guido, Rubens, Rembrandt, Paul Potter, Tintoret, Parmegiano, Guercino, Vanduyke, Teniers, Cuype, Claude, Poussin, Berghem, Wouvermans, and, in short, of almost every master whose works are desirable in a public collection. They were left to the college by Sir F. Bourgeois, who died in 1811, bequeathing also the sum of £12,000 to complete the establishment, and provide an adjoining mausoleum for his body and those of his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Des Enfants. The mausoleum forms a central projection of the picture-gallery: it is fitted up like a chapel or oratory, and is a master-piece of effect. It receives its light from the roof, through a lantern of orange-coloured glass, which, producing the gloom of candle-light, augments or creates a solemnity that is highly impressive. The three bodies are deposited in sarcophagi, which are placed in recesses; that of Sir Francis standing behind an elegant altar-piece. A free school was founded here by James Alleyn, Esq., master of the college, in 1741, and endowed by him with property producing a rental of £200 per annum for the education of poor children belonging to the hamlet, or living within a mile of it. The school-house is a handsome building facing the college, and belonging to it. The management was vested by the founder, in the college corporation. About 60 boys and 60 girls were receiving education here at the time of the commissioners' inquiry. The inhabitants of the village, by a subscription among themselves, clothed 12 of the boys and 20 of the girls, at an annual expense of between £60 and £70. There are 3 Sunday and daily National schools in Dulwich. A horticultural society has been recently established, and it is considered that there are few vicinities in the outskirts of the metropolis which can offer greater advantages to such a society than Dulwich, as most of the villas and houses have large pleasure-grounds attached, and are occupied by gentlemen of fortune. There are medicinal springs in this vicinity. A fair is held on Monday after Trinity Monday, for toys, &c.

DUMBLETON, a parish in the lower division of Kiftgate hundred, union of Winchcombe, county of Gloucester; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north by west of Winchcombe; west of the river Isborne. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £18 16s. 8d.; gross income £374. Patron, in 1835, E. Holland; Esq. Here are two daily and Sunday schools, at which several poor children receive gratuitous instruction. Acres 2,100. Houses 78. A. P. £4,501. Pop., in 1801, 307; in 1831, 420. Poor rates, in 1837, £75.

DUMMER, a parish in the hund. of Bermondspit, union of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division of the county of Southampton; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-south-west of Basingstoke; near the Southampton and London railway. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Winchester; rated at £14 12s. 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £436. Patron, in 1835, W. Adams, Esq. Here are two daily schools, one of which is partly supported by endowment, for which 10 boys and 10 girls are educated. Acres 2,100. Houses 77. A. P. £2,213. Pop., in 1801, 286; in 1831, 383. Poor rates, in 1837, £313.

DUMPFORD HUNDRED, in the rape of Chichester, county of Sussex. Area 22,490 acres. Houses 511. Pop., in 1831, 3,262.

DUN (THE). See DON.

DUNCHIDEOCK, a parish in the hund. of Exminster, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 5 miles south-west of Exeter; east of the river Teign. Living, a rectory, with that of Shillingford, St. George, in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £14 17s. 1d.; gross income £327. Patron, in 1835, Sir L. V. Falk, Bart. Acres 790. Houses 32. A. P. £1,158. Pop., in 1801, 183; in 1831, 182. Poor rates, in 1837, £46.

DUNCHURCH, a parish in the hund. of Knightlow, union of Rugby, county of Warwick; 16 miles east-north-east of Warwick, on the road to Birmingham; and near the Oxford canal. Living, a vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Coventry and dio. of Lichfield and Coventry, now in the dio. of Worcester; rated at £14 1s. 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; gross income £220. Tithes commuted in 1839. Aggregate amount £104 10s. 6d. Patron, the bishop of Lichfield. Here are 6 daily schools, two of which are National, and one endowed, in 1707, by Francis Boughton, Esq., who also granted funds for apprenticing children of this parish. There are here endowed almshouses. Other charities, about £145 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £399. Dunchurch is one of the polling-places for the members for the northern division of the county. Acres, including those of the hamlets of Toth and Thurlaston, 5,010. Houses 274. A. P. £7,498. Pop., in 1801, 1,087; in 1831, 1,310.

DUNCTON, a parish in the hund. of Rotherbridge, rape of Arundel, county of Sussex; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles south by west of Petworth. Living, a rectory, not in charge, in the archd. and dio. of Chichester; gross income £404. Patron, in 1835, the Earl of Egremont. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 1,330. Houses 37. A. P. £840. Pop., in 1801, 205; in 1831, 272. Poor rates, in 1837, £115.

DUNDRAW, a township in the parish of Broomfield, county of Cumberland; $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles west-north-west of Wigton; on the river Waver. Acreage with the township of Blencoggs. Houses 63. A. P. £787. Pop., in 1801, 198; in 1831, 337. Poor rates, in 1837, £77.

DUNDRY, a parish in the hund. of Chew, union of Bedminster, county of Somerset; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-west of Pensford; in the vicinity of the Bristol and Exeter railway. Living, a curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Chew-Magna. There is a daily school here. Charities about £18 per annum, out of which various small sums are applied in education of poor children. Poor rates, in 1837, £199. A fair for cattle, sheep, and hogs, is held here on the 12th of September. Acres 2,828. Houses 77. A. P. £5,076. Pop., in 1801, 355; in 1831, 583.

DUNGNESS. See LYND.

DUNGLEDDY HUNDRED, in the county of Pembroke, South Wales; one of the seven divisions of the county. On the east, west, and south it is washed by the East and West Cleddau rivers. Houses 1,528. Pop., in 1831, 7,835.

DUNHAM, a township in the parish of Thornton, co.-palatine of Chester; $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles south-west of Frodsham. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal passes through this place. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,480. Houses 57. A. P. £1,756. Pop., in 1801, 261; in 1831, 322. Poor rates, in 1837, £141.

DUNHAM, a parish in the South Clay division of the wapentake of Bassettlaw, union of East Retford, county of Nottingham; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east of Tuxford; on the western bank of the Trent. It includes the chapelry of Ragnall. Until a bridge was thrown across the river at this place, there was not one across the Trent between Newark and Gainsborough. In times of flood it was not unusual for travellers to go out of their way to cross the Trent by Newark or Gainsborough, in order to avoid the delay incurred in crossing the ferry at Dunham. This bridge is of cast-iron, and consists of 4 arches of 118 feet span each; the total length being 536 feet. Living, a discharged vicarage, with the curacies of Ragnall and Darlton, a peculiar in the jurisdiction and patronage of the prebendary of Dunham, in the collegiate church of Southwell, formerly in the dio. of York, now in that of Lincoln; rated at £4 13s. 4d.; gross income £252. There is a chapel-of-ease at Darlton. Here are four daily schools. Charities, £6 12s. per annum, besides between 2 and 3 acres of church-lands. Poor rates, in 1837, £138. Formerly there was a market here, but it has been disused. A fair for cattle and merchandise is held on the 12th of August. Acres 2,030.

Houses 109. A. P. £4,144. Pop., in 1801, 313; in 1831, 557.

DUNHAM (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east by north of Swaffham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £12 1s. 10d.; no return. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £5,740 4s. 10d. rectorial. Patron, in 1835, John Peel, Esq. Here are 2 Sunday and daily National schools. Charities, about £55 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £318. Acres 2,180. Houses 116. A. P. £2,295. Pop., in 1801, 361; in 1831, 511.

DUNHAM (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. of Launditch, union of Mitford and Launditch, county of Norfolk; 4 miles north-east by north of Swaffham. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; rated at £9 18s.; gross income £464. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. John Neilson. Here are two daily schools. Charities, £60 19s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £186. Acres 1,860. Houses 39. A. P. £1,990. Pop., in 1801, 210; in 1831, 290.

DUNHAM-MASSEY, a township in the parish of Bowden, Bucklow hund., co.-palatine of Chester; $6\frac{1}{4}$ miles north of Nether-Knutsford, north-east of the river Bollin. The beautiful residence of the Stamford family is situated in a neighbouring park. Here are two daily schools, one of which is endowed for the education of 40 boys, the master's salary being £60 per annum; and the other called "Littleheath Charity school," endowed for the instruction of 15 of each sex, who are all provided once a-year with suits of clothes: the salary of the mistress is £20 per annum, and a house adjoining the school. Poor rates, in 1837, £377. Acres 3,710. Houses 192. A. P. £4,984. Pop., in 1801, 872; in 1831, 1,105.

DUNHOLME, a parish in the east division of the wapentake of Lawress, parts of Lindsey, union and county of Lincoln; 6 miles north-north-east of Lincoln, near the source of the Lugworth river. Living, a discharged vicarage, with that of St. John, Newport, in the dio. of Lincoln, exempt from visitation; and returned at £96; gross income £10. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Here is a daily school. Acres 2,270. Houses 32. A. P. £2,027. Pop., in 1801, 140; in 1831, 237. Poor rates, in 1837, £166.

DUNKERTON, a parish in the hund. of Wellow, union of Bath, county of Somerset; 5 miles south-west by south of Bath, intersected by the Bath canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Wells and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £10 4s. 7d.; gross income £350. Patron, in 1835, Lord Baltimore. Here is a daily school. A second Daniel Lambert is said to have been recently produced at Dunkerton, in the person of a son of Richard March, labourer. This phenomenon, only 12 months old, is of the following dimensions:—2 feet 9 inches in height; 2 feet 1 inch round the breast; 2 feet 4 inches round the stomach; 1 foot 3 inches round the thigh; 11 inches round the calf; head proportionately large; and altogether well formed. The child walked by himself at 6 months old. Acres 910. Houses 124. A. P. £2,689. Pop., in 1801, 238; in 1831, 718. Poor rates, in 1837, £148.

DUNKESWELL, a parish in the hund. of Hem-yock, union of Honiton, county of Devon; 5 miles north by west of Honiton, near one of the sources of the river Culm. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; valued at £16; gross income £47. Patroness, in 1835, Miss M. Graves. Dunkeswell, which originally belonged to a Jew named Amadio, was purchased from him by William Briwere, who "settled here, A. D. 1201, an abbe-and convent of White monks, in honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, who were, 26^o Henry VIII., found to be endowed with £294 18s. 6d. per annum, Dugd.; £298 11s. 10d., Speed."—Tanner's Not. Mon. The abbey is built of flint, and two fine streams encompass the scattered remains, which occupy a site of about 6 acres. Acres 5,160. Houses 77. A. P. £2,905. Pop., in 1801, 393; in 1831, 414. Poor rates, in 1837, £161.

DUNKESWITH, a township in the parish of Harewood, Claro wapentake, west riding of Yorkshire; 6½ miles west of Wetherby, on the northern bank of the Warfe. Acres 1,230. Houses 45. A. P. £2,043. Pop., in 1801, 218; in 1831, 261. Poor rates, in 1837, £98.

DUNKIRK, an extra-parochial ville in Westgate hund., lathe of St. Augustine, county of Kent; 2½ miles west by north of Canterbury. It consists of a tract of land comprising 5,000 acres, bordering on the parishes of Boughton and Herne-hill, and was formerly the king's ancient forest of BLEAN,—which see. A large portion of it now forms part of the possessions of the dean and chapter of Canterbury. It was noted in former years for smuggling practices. Out of fifty cottages recently examined, 24 were without books of any description. There is a day school here, supported by the vicar of Herne-hill. With few exceptions, the whole of the persons implicated in the extraordinary occurrences of May, 1838, occasioned by Sir William Courtenay, or Thoms, belonged to Herne-hill, Boughton, and Dunkirk; but chiefly to HERNE-HILL,—which see.

DUNMOW HUNDRED, situated between the hundreds of Chelmsford and Harlow, on the western side of the county of Essex. Area 54,670 acres. Houses 2,367. Pop., in 1831, 12,791.

DUNMOW, or GREAT DUNMOW, a market-town and parish in the hund. and union of Dunmow, county of Essex. The town stands on an eminence on the western bank of the Chelmer; 38 miles north-east by north of London, and 12 miles north-north-west of Chelmsford. It consists principally of two good streets, with a market-cross in the centre of the town. The ville of Great Dunmow is a part of the duchy of Lancaster, and is supposed to be co-extensive with the parish of Great Dunmow; but the parish is divided into quarters, one of which is called the corporation quarter, and it is doubtful whether the corporate limits extend beyond this division of the parish. Acres 7,910. Houses 471. A. P. £8,895. Pop., in 1801, 1,828; in 1831, 2,462. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; rated at £18 13s. 4d.; gross income £429. In the patronage of the bishop of London. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1700; and places of worship for Baptists and the Society of Friends. Here are 2 charity schools, supported by voluntary contributions, 2 Sunday and daily National schools, and an alms-house for six poor persons. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,379. A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Dunmow, by the poor-law commissioners. The Dunmow poor-law union comprehends 26 parishes, embracing an area of 116 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 18,769. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £20,206. Expenditure, in 1838, £12,270; in 1839, £13,985 10s. The very ancient town of Dunmow, supposed, by some antiquaries, to have been the Roman station Casarmagus, was made a market-town in 1253. It was incorporated by Philip and Mary, and the government vested in a recorder, bailiff, and 12 burgesses, but these do not at present possess magisterial authority. Their municipal regulations have grown obsolete, and are now buried in the corporation chest. The inhabitants continue to hold their markets under the charter, without troubling themselves about the corporation. Sessions for the division have been usually held here. The manufacture of baize and blankets was at one time very extensively carried on; but the principal employment of the poorer inhabitants has latterly been the manufacture of coarse cloth and sacking. The market-day is Saturday. Fairs for cattle are held on the 6th of May and 8th of November.

DUNMOW (LITTLE), a parish in the hund. and union of Dunmow, county of Essex; 2 miles east-south-east of Great Dunmow, east of the river Chelmer. Acres 1,390. Houses 78. A. P. £2,054. Pop., in 1801, 272; in 1831, 376. Poor rates, in 1837, £203. Living, a curacy in the archd. of Middlesex and dio. of London; returned at £35; gross income £72. Tithes commuted in 1839; rent charge £515 18s. 9d. Patron, in 1835, N. R. Toke, Esq. The church consists of the remains of one belonging to a razed priory which stood on the site of the present manor-house, and which Tanner says—"The Lady Juga, sister to Ralph Baynard, built here, A. D. 1104, to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary, wherein her son, Jeffry, two years after, placed canons, who shortly after observed the rule of St. Austin. This priory consisted of a prior and 10 or 11 religious, whose maintenance was valued, 26^o Henry VIII., at £150 3s. 4d. per annum, Dugd.; £173 2s. 4d., Speed. The site was granted, 28^o Henry VIII., to Robert, earl of Sussex." "Here," observes Grose, "under an arch in the south wall is an ancient chest-like tomb, supposed to contain the body of the foundress, Lady Juga. Near the same spot is a monument, said to have been that of Walter Fitz-Walter, the first of that name, who died in the year 1198;" it consists of a male and female figure, supposed to be those of Sir Walter and his lady. "Sir Walter is represented in plate armour, under a shirt of mail, which appears at his collar, and below the skirts of his armour. There is something remarkable in the appearance of his hair, which seems to radiate from a centre somewhat like the caul of a wig, but curling inwards. This fashion hair, or wig, (for it appears doubtful which was intended,) is observable on diverse monuments of the same age, and is also the head dress of the lady." On the opposite side of the church is an alabaster figure, on a gray altar tomb, intended to represent Matilda, daughter of the second Walter Fitz-Walter, who, according to the monkish story, unsupported however by history, is pretended to have been poisoned by contrivance of King John, for refusing to gratify his illicit passion. She is also legendarily famous as the wife of Robin Hood, the outlawed earl of Huntingdon. It is said that one of the Fitz-Walters instituted the ancient and celebrated custom of delivering a fitch, or gammon, of bacon, to any married couple, who, after having been united a year and a day, would take a prescribed oath, that neither party had repented, and that no quarrel had arisen between them since they entered wedlock. The ceremonial consisted in the claimants kneeling on two sharp-pointed stones in the churchyard, and there, after a solemn chaunt, and other conventual rites, taking the following quaint rhythmical oath:—

"You shall swear by custom of confession,
That you ne'er made nuptial transgression;
Nor since you were married man and wife,
By household brawls or contentious strife,
Or otherwise at bed or at board,
Offended each other in deed or in word;
Or since the parish clerk said Amen,
Wished yourselves unmarried again,
Or in a twelvemonth and a day,
Repented not in thought any way;

But continued true in thought and desire,
 As when you join'd hands in holy quire.
 If to these conditions without all fear,
 Of your own accord you will freely swear,
 A whole gammon of bacon you shall receive,
 And bear it hence with love and good leave;
 For this is our custom at Dunmow well known:
 Though the pleasure be ours, the bacon's your own."

Three persons are recorded to have received the bacon previously to the suppression of the religious houses. Since that period, it has been only thrice delivered; when the ceremonies were performed at a court-baron for the manor held by the steward. The last persons who received it, were John Shakeshanks, of Wetherfield, woolcomber, and his helpmate Anne, who established their right on the 20th of June, 1751. Mr. Gough mentions the custom as abolished; but it is merely dormant, either through want of worthy claimants, or from their neglect to enforce the demand. A similar custom was observed in the manor of Winchenor, in Staffordshire, where corn as well as bacon was given to the happy pair.

DUNNERDALE, a township in the parish of Kirkby-Ireleth, co.-palatine of Lancaster; $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles west by south of Hawkeshead. Acres 3,940. Houses 26. Pop., in 1821, 143; in 1831, 143. Poor rates, in 1837, including Leathwaite, £141.

DUNNINGTON, a township in the parish of Beesford, east riding of the county of York; 9 miles east-south-east of Great Driffield. Acres 650. Houses 11. A. P. £1,022. Pop., in 1801, 67; in 1831, 61. Poor rates, in 1837, £75.

DUNNINGTON, a parish, chiefly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, but partly in the wapentake of Ouse and Derwent; 4 miles east of York, west of the river Derwent. It includes the township of Grimston. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Cleeve-land and dio. of York; rated at £19; gross income £352. Patroness, in 1835, the Countess of Bridgewater. Here are a chapel for the Wesleyan Methodists, and 3 daily schools. Charities, £66 10s. 6d. per annum, £82 2s. 6d. of which is rent of church estate, and applied to parochial purposes. Poor rates, in 1837, £162. Acres 3,110. Houses 152. A. P. £3,174. Pop., in 1801, 481; in 1831, 713.

DUNNINGTON. See DINNINGTON, Northumberland.

DUNNOCKSHAW, a township in that part of the parish of Whalley which is in the upper division of the hund. of Blackburn, county of Lancaster; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-west of Burnley, at the source of the river Irwell. Pop., in 1811, 63; in 1831, 46. Poor rates, in 1837, with Lower Booths.

DUNSBROOK (THE), a river in Devonshire, which falls into the Axe below Elverton.

DUNSBY, a parish in the wapentake of Aveland, parts of Kesteven, union of Bourn, county of Lincoln; $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by east of Bourn. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £12 14s. 7d.; gross income £189; in the patronage of the governors of the charter-house. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £23 11s. 5d. Acres 2,420. Houses 32. A. P. £3,518. Pop., in 1801, 146; in 1831, 172. Poor rates, in 1837, £69.

DUNSBY. See BRAUNCEWELL and DUNSBY.

DUNSCROFT, a hamlet in the parish of Hatfield, west riding of Yorkshire; $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-west of Thorne. Tanner says—"Here was formerly a small cell to the abbey of Roche."

DUNSFOLD, a parish in the hund. of Blackheath, union of Hambleton, county of Surrey; $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-south-east of Godalming, in the line of the Arun and Wey canal. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Surrey and dio. of Winchester; rated at £12 0s. 7½d.; gross income £540. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Acres 4,240. Houses 117. A. P.

£2,548. Pop., in 1801, 549; in 1831, 567. Poor rates, in 1837, £287.

DUNSFORD, a parish in the hund. of Wonford, union of St. Thomas, county of Devon; 8 miles west by south of Exeter, north of the river Teign. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Exeter; rated at £19 10s.; gross income £319. Patron, in 1835, B. Falford, Esq. Here are 4 daily schools. Charities, £22 4s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £245. Acres 6,560. Houses 143. A. P. £3,856. Pop., in 1801, 661; in 1831, 903.

DUNSFORTH (UPPER), with BRANTON GREEN, a township and chapelry in the parish of Aldborough, west riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles south-east of Aldborough. Living, a perpetual curacy, a peculiar of the dean and chapter of York; returned at £35 10s.; gross income £51. Patron, the vicar of Aldborough. Acres 900. Houses 30. A. P. £1,026. Pop., in 1801, 110; in 1831, 163. Poor rates, in 1837, £152.

DUNSFORTH (LOWER), a township in the same parish; $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles east-south-east of Aldborough, on the western bank of the Ure. Acres 960. Houses 24. A. P. £816. Pop., in 1801, 118; in 1831, 133. Poor rates, in 1837, £58.

DUNSLEY, a township, with Newholm, in the parish of Whitby, north riding of Yorkshire; 3 miles west of Whitby. From this place a Roman road, now called Wade's causeway, extends for many miles over the moors to York. See NEWHOLM with DUNSLEY.

DUNSTABLE, a market-town and parish in the hund. of Manshead, union of Luton, county of Bedford. Acres 520. Houses 388. A. P. £2,204. Pop., in 1801, 1,296; in 1831, 2,117. The town, which is 33 miles north-west by north of London, and about 20 south by west of Bedford, is situated east of the Chiltern hills, at the foot of the range, in the centre of the Dunstable chalk downs, and at the junction of the Ikneild and Watling streets, and a few miles east of the Birmingham and London railway. Most of the houses are built of brick, and many of them have an antiquated appearance. The town is cruciform, the four principal streets taking the direction of the four cardinal points. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; returned at £148 1s. 3d.; gross income £177. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £107 15s. 4d. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are 3 Baptist churches, one of which was formed in 1801; and a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists. There are 6 daily and 4 Sunday schools, one of the latter of which is National; and a charity school, founded, in 1727, by William Chew, and subsequently endowed: 40 boys are educated, and clothed: some of them are apprenticed: they are admitted at 7, and apprenticed at 14. The income of this charity is upwards of £330. Marsha's alms-house, or the Ladies' lodge, was founded by Blandina Marshe, in 1730, for 6 poor maiden gentlewomen, upwards of 40 years of age, who have each £12 a-year, with as apartment in the Lodge: they have also other small yearly gifts. Mrs. Cart's alms-houses were founded and endowed for 6 poor widows, and Mrs. Ashtons, for other 6 poor women. Mary Lockington's charities, to Leighton Buzzard, Dunstable, Hockliffe, &c., chiefly for relief of poor clergymen, widows, and others, produces £484 5s. per annum: other charities connected with this parish about £200 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £602. Formerly, Dunstable was governed by a mayor; but latterly by 4 constables, a church-warden, and 2 overseers. The queen is lady of the manor, and courts leet are held here by the Duke of Bedford.

as lessee of the crown. Here is an extensive manufacture of various articles in straw, especially the well-known 'Dunstable hats,' in which a great many females are engaged: children are taught to plait the straw at a very early age. Dunstable is also celebrated for its extensive manufacture of whiting, and it is proverbial for its larks, which are of a remarkably large size, and are sent to the London market in great quantities. According to Bingley, 4,000 of these birds have been caught in the neighbourhood of Dunstable between September and February. It is said the London and Birmingham railway has given a new stimulus to trade here; but this is very doubtful, if not the reverse of the truth. The market is on Wednesday; and fairs are held on Ash-Wednesday: May 22d, a great horse fair; August 12th; and November 12th, for cattle.

The origin of the town of Dunstable is traced to the time of the ancient Britons. According to Hearne and Bishop Gibson, it takes its name from dunum or dun, 'a hill,' and staple, 'a commercial mart'; others suppose it to be derived from Dun, or Dunnin, chief of a banditti, who infested the neighbourhood in the reign of Henry I. At all events Henry I., finding the vicinity much infested by robbers, who secreted themselves in the woods with which the country was then overrun, ordered the trees to be cut down and grubbed up; and having built a royal mansion for himself, issued a proclamation, inviting his subjects to come and settle near him at Dunstable, offering them lands at a very small rent, and various liberties and privileges. Henry kept the new town in his own hands till about the year 1131, when he granted it, with all its rights and privileges, to a priory of Black canons, which he built and endowed to the honour of St. Peter. The palace, which was not included in this grant, continued to be occasionally inhabited by Henry, Stephen, and John, who, however, at length granted it also, with the gardens, to the prior and convent; they, on all future visits, being bound to accommodate the monarch and his suite within their own walks. On the site of the palace and gardens there is now a farm-house, on the road to Luton, near Marsha's hospital. Whilst Henry I. kept the town in his own hands, it was a free borough: the burgesses were free throughout England, and possessed the privilege of not answering before the justices itinerant out of the town and liberty. The friars were exempted from all taxes, fines, tolls, customs, secular exactions, and worldly services through the realm. They had the power of life and death, and sat with the king's justices itinerant, when they came to Dunstable on their circuits. They had more than one gaol, and a gallows at a place called Westcote, outside the town. These extraordinary privileges, which were confirmed by succeeding princes, caused many disturbances between the townsmen and the abbey occupants; and some unequal assessments having been made in 1229, the people were so provoked, that, out of resentment, they withdrew their tithes and offerings; scattered the prior's corn, and pounded his horses; and though, at the prior's request, the Bishop of Lincoln caused the offenders to be excommunicated, they declared that they would sooner "go to the devil than be taxed," and had even treated with William Cantilupe for forty acres in his field to build booths on, and to quit the town. This difference was at last adjusted by John, archdeacon of Bedford, the town paying £60 sterling to the prior, for the remuneration of his right to all tollage, except the misericordia of 4d., and fines in cases of violence. During the insurrections in the reign of Richard II., in 1371, the townsmen obtained of the prior a charter of liberties; but it was cancelled afterwards, as having been forcibly extorted. At the dissolution, the possessions of this priory were valued at £344 13s. 3d. per ann. Dugd.; £402 14s. 7d. ob. Speed. The site was granted 1^o Mary to Sir Leonard Chambedorpe. The only remains of the conventual buildings, excepting what constitutes the parish church, are some rooms with vaulted and groined stone roofs; one of which has been converted into a parlour. The remains of the priory church exhibit an interesting combination of ancient architectural ornaments; especially the west front, which has been considered "one of our great national curiosities," from its singular intermixture of circular and pointed arches, and the curious manner in which its ornaments are arranged. For an interesting account of the original edifice and its remains, see 'Beauties of England and Wales.' There was a house or hospital for lepers belonging to this priory, and a convent of friar preachers was established here, and countenanced by the court, much against the will of the priors and canons. The revenues of this convent only amounted to £4 18s. 4d. per annum: no remains of these establishments now exist. There are many vestiges of Roman occupation in this vicinity. A great quantity of copper coin of Antoninus and Constantine was discovered in digging gravel here in 1770. About 2 miles from the town are the remains of an ancient fortification called Maiden-Bower, and a little farther on, a strong fortification named Totenhoe Castle, consisting of a keep, area, and square, on a high mount, encompassed by two ditches. It is said that the first representation of a play, or mystery, in England, took place in this town, under the direction of a priest or friar.

DUNSTABURGH, or DUNSTANBROUGH CASTLE, a noble relic of antiquity, about 2 miles east-south-east of Embleton, and 6 miles north-east of Alnwick in Northumberland. It was probably a British fort, but is not mentioned in history until the beginning of the 14th century, when it was founded, or rather rebuilt, by Thomas, Earl of Lancaster. The heavy seas which break upon the rocks here have riven them much, and it appears that the area or platform on which the castle is built, had been originally of greater extent than at present. Immediately below one of the towers is a gully or passage in the rock, about 60 yards in length, 540 feet deep, through which the sea breaks with tremendous noise.

DUNSTALL, a township in the parish of Tatenhill, county of Stafford, on the borders of Needwood forest; 5 miles west-south-west of Burton-upon-Trent. Houses 38. A. P. £2,897. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 204. Poor rates, in 1837, £169.

DUNSTAN (ST.), a parish in the hund. of Westgate, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Blean, county of Kent; $\frac{1}{4}$ mile west of Canterbury, on the river Stour, and intersected by the Canterbury and Whitstable railway. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £5, returned at £145; gross income £121. Patron, the archbishop of Canterbury. Here are 4 daily and 2 day and Sunday National schools, which, together with an infant school, are endowed with £124 per annum. Acres 320. Houses 182. A. P. £1,768. Pop., in 1801, 707; in 1831, 809. Poor rates, in 1837, £530.

DUNSTER, a market-town and parish, in the hund. of Carthampton, union of Williton, county of Somerset; 36 miles west-north-west of Somerton, and 162 west by south of London. Acres 2,500. Houses 201. A. P. £2,589. Pop., in 1801, 772; in 1831, 963. It includes Rodhuish. The town of Dunster is situated on the margin of a rich and fertile vale, opening towards the Bristol channel, and defended on every other side by lofty hills, which rise in rapid succession behind each other. The surrounding parks and grounds are beautiful, finely wooded, and afford pasture to great numbers of sheep. The town consists principally of two streets, one running north and south, the other branching westward from the church. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; rated at £4 13s. 4d., returned at £110; gross income £130. Patron, in 1835, J. F. Luttrell, Esq. Here is a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1803. There are 2 daily schools, one of which is endowed with £30 per annum, for which 20 children are instructed. Charities, £28 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £415. In the reign of Edward III. this town enjoyed the privileges of a borough, and returned members to parliament. It afterwards held the elective franchise conjointly with Minehead, but both of these places have been disfranchised by the reform act. The market is on Friday; and a fair—chiefly for pedlery—is held on Whitmonday. Tanner says, "Sir William de Mobun the Elder, temp. Will. Conq., built a priory of Benedictine monks on the north-west side of the castle here, to the honour of St. George, and annexed it as a cell to the abbey of St. Peter, at Bath. About the time of the suppression it consisted but of three monks, whose maintenance was valued at £37 4s. 8d. per annum, Dugd. Speed. The site of this house was granted, 34th Hen. VIII., to Humfry Colles." On a steep hill, to the south of the principal street, is part of an ancient castle, which was formerly a very magnificent structure, but it was nearly destroyed during the parliamentary war, when it was taken possession of by General Blake, under Oliver Cromwell.

DUNSTEW, a parish in the hund. of Wootton, county of Oxford; 2½ miles south-south-west of Deddington. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Oxford; rated at £8 2s. 8½d.; gross income £250. Patron, in 1835, Sir G. Dashwood, Bart. Here are 3 daily schools. Charities, £13 15s. per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £274. Acres 1,370. Houses 79. A. P. £2,924. Pop., in 1801; 318; in 1831, 450.

DUNSTON, a parish in the second division of the hund. of Langoe, parts of Kesteven, union and county of Lincoln; 8 miles south-east by south of Lincoln, on a branch of the river Witham. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £7 0s. 10d., returned at £96; gross income £161. Patron, the bishop of Lincoln. Acres 4,620. Houses 77. A. P. £2,647. Pop., in 1801, 279; in 1831, 423. Poor rates, in 1837, £212.

DUNSTON, a parish in the hund. of Humbleyard, union of Henstead, county of Norfolk; 4 miles south of Norwich, on the river Yare, and close upon the London and Norwich railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; gross income £30. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. C. Long. Acres 500. Houses 13. A. P. £637. Pop., in 1801, 86; in 1831, 102. Poor rates, in 1837, £73.

DUNSTON, a township in the parish of Embleton, southern division of Bambrough ward, county of Northumberland; 6 miles north-east of Alnwick, on the coast of the north sea. Houses 41. A. P. £2,069. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 185. Poor rates, in 1837, £86.

DUNSTON, a township and chapelry in the parish of Penkridge, county of Stafford; 2½ miles north by east of Penkridge, near a branch of the Trent, intersected by the Birmingham and Liverpool railway. Living, a perpetual curacy in the dio. of Lichfield, a peculiar; gross income £67. Patron, in 1835, Lord Hatherton. "In a field close by the chapel," observes Mr. Freeling, in his Railway Companion, "there is an extraordinary echo, which returns seven or eight syllables distinctly." Acres 1,480. Houses 50. A. P. £1,624. Pop., in 1801, 208; in 1831, 272. Poor rates, in 1837, £96.

DUNTERTON, a parish in the hund. of Lifton, union of Tavistock, county of Devon; 5 miles south-east by south of Launcerton, on the eastern bank of the river Tamer. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Totness and dio. of Exeter; rated at £8 7s. 1d.; no return. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. N. T. Royse. Here is a daily school. Acres 1,170. Houses 31. A. P. £1,538. Pop., in 1801, 129; in 1831, 207. Poor rates, in 1837, £64.

DUNTISH, a tything in the parish and hund. of Buckland-Newton, county of Dorset; 1½ miles north by west of Dorchester. Here is a circular camp of 10 acres, in which arms and Roman coins have been found. Returns with the parish.

DUNTSBORNE-ABBOTS, a parish in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester. It includes the township of Duntsborne-Leer. Living, a rectory. Acres 3,290. Houses 66. A. P. £2,124. Pop., in 1801, 245; in 1831, 282. Poor rates, in 1837, £138.

DUNTSBOURN-ROUSE, a parish in the hund. of Crowthorne and Minety, union of Cirencester, county of Gloucester; 4 miles south-south-west of Cirencester. Living, a rectory, formerly in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester, now in the archd. of Bristol and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; valued at £8 14s. 9d.; gross income £250; in the patronage of Corpus Christi church college, Oxford. There are a daily and a Sunday school in this parish. Acres 1,730. Houses 21. A. P. £1,505. Pop., in 1801, 93; in 1831, 126. Poor rates, in 1837, £39.

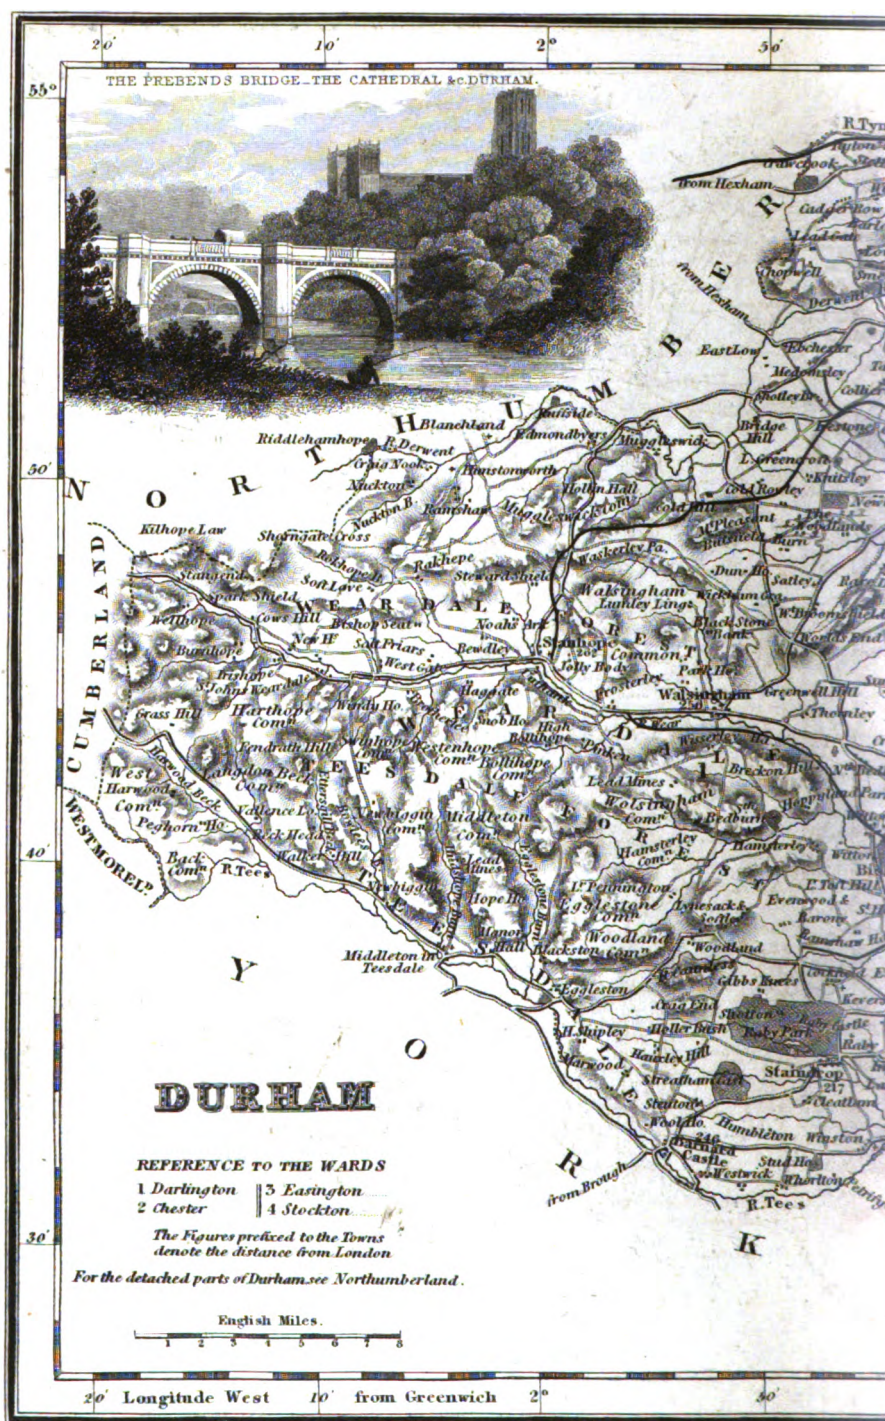

DUNTON WITH MILLO, a parish in the hund. of Biggleswade, union of Biggleswade, county of Bedford; 3½ miles east by south of Biggleswade. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Bedford and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Ely; rated at £10; no return. Patron, in 1835, Earl Spencer. Here are 3 daily schools. Acres 2,840. Houses 75. A. P. £2,428. Pop., in 1801, 336; in 1831, 413. Poor rates, in 1837, £304.

DUNTON, a parish in the hund. of Cottesloe, union of Winslow, county of Bucks; 4 miles south-east by east of Winslow. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Buckingham and dio. of Lincoln; rated at £9 9s. 7d.; gross income £222. Patron, in 1835, Earl Spencer. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 1,550. Houses 19. A. P. £1,660. Pop., in 1801, 85; in 1831, 116. Poor rates, in 1837, £84.

DUNTON, a parish in the hund. of Barstable, union of Billericay, county of Essex; 3½ miles north-north-west of Horndon-on-the-Hill. Living, a rectory in the archd. of Essex and dio. of London; rated at £14 13s. 4d.; gross income £466. In the patronage of King's college, Cambridge. Acres 2,790. Houses 19. A. P. £3,176. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 133. Poor rates, in 1837, £104.

DUNTON WITH DOUGHTON, a parish in the hund. of Gallow, union of Walsingham, county of Norfolk; 2½ miles west by north of Fakenham, north of the river Winsum. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Norfolk and dio. of Norwich; rated at £5 6s. 8d., returned at £111; gross income £161. Patron, in 1835, T. W. Coke, Esq. Acres 1,570. Houses 27. A. P. £1,773. Pop., in 1801, 121; in 1831, 126. Poor rates, in 1837, £124.

DUNTON-BASSETT, a parish in the hund. of Guthlaxton union of Lutterworth, county of Leicestershire; 4 miles north of Lutterworth, and near the been .

Published by A. & C.

power who

Midland Counties railway. Living, a discharged vicarage, formerly in the archd. of Leicester and dio. of Lincoln, now in the dio. of Peterborough; rated at £60s. 10d., returned at £75; gross income £77. Patron, in 1835, George Payne, Esq. Here is a Sunday National school. Acres 1,860. Houses 122. A. P. £1,983. Pop., in 1801, 407; in 1831, 514. Poor rates, in 1837, £194.

DUNWICH, a borough and parish, anciently a market-town, in the hund. of Blything, union of Blything, county of Suffolk; 98 miles north-east of London, and 29 miles north-east of Ipswich, on the coast of the North sea. The parish of All Saints and the borough are now considered to be co-extensive. Acres 3,240. Houses 44. A. P. £522. Pop., in 1801, 184; in 1831, 232. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of Norwich; gross income £40. Patrons, Lord Huntingfield and M. Barne, Esq. A new church has been erected by subscription. St. James' hospital and the Maison Dieu were two hospitals of great antiquity, the origin and endowment of which are involved in obscurity. At the time of the inquiry into the state of charities, in 1830, they had, for a long time, been consolidated, as a charity, under the government of a master, for the support or relief of aged widows, and poor persons of this town, and particularly such as were afflicted with insanity, or loss of speech, or laboured under any peculiar disorder or affliction. The corporation and other principal inhabitants appointed. The income of the charity was £300 a year, with which the Maison Dieu was £300 a year, at one time, according to tradition. The considerable extent, but, with the exception of about one acre, the whole has been lost by encroachment of the sea. A yearly income of £75, arising from a gift, conferred, in 1566, by John Page, was divided between the church-wardens of Laxfield, and the corporation of Dunwich; the latter receiving 5-9ths of the income. Poor rates, in 1837, £119.

Dunwich sent two members to parliament from 23d Edward I., till disfranchised by the reform act. The privilege of returning the members was vested in 32 electors, partly dispersed over the country, and devoid of any other local interest in the borough. The constitution of this ancient and once populous borough was based on annual elections, and universal suffrage among the freemen, in all matters of corporate interest. They choose their own magistrates and all other municipal officers. After the passing of the reform act, however, the members of the body corporate had no longer any common interest. At the time of the municipal inquiry, the number of resident freemen was reduced to 9, sharing their corporate privileges with twice that number of non-residents; they still elected every year their own magistrates, consisting of a recorder, two bailiffs, a coroner, &c., who occasionally held an admiralty court, granted by charter of Edward IV.; but the local jurisdiction possessed, among other valuable privileges, by the borough, was nearly obsolete. No felony had been tried at the sessions within the previous 5 years, and only one misdemeanour. A civil court, formerly held before the bailiffs, had long been obsolete. There was no borough jail, and the resident magistrate could suggest no reason for any longer maintaining a separate jurisdiction. The revenue of the borough, arising principally from rents of land due to the corporation, as lords of the soil of the borough, was about £150 a year: the land is partly arable, but principal marsh or heath. It appears, however, from the 3d report of the Charity commissioners, that the corporation were entitled to a portion at least of the profits; but the terms on which they were allowed to take fuel from the corporation heath, extending over nearly 300 acres, were considered by the bailiffs to be more than an equivalent. On all coals landed on about 6 miles of sea-beach, claimed by the corporation, they had recently levied a toll of 3d. per chaldron; and they received small sums for wreck, fines, and fees; but unfortunately a debt of £1,000 had been incurred in a legal dispute with the corporation of Southwold, about a puncheon of Scotch whisky which had been removed by the water-bailiff of Southwold from the Dunwich beach: the Dunwich corporation established their right to the whiskey, but incurred this debt for the payment of costs. Only two houses in the borough were valued, in 1835, at £10 and upwards.

The greater part of the land of this borough is either heath of little value, or sea-beach. Its extent, which is stated in the population return of 1831, to be 3,240 English statute acres, is, according to the corporate authorities, only 1,340 acres; one quarter of which is heath land, and more than another quarter sea-beach. The sea is perpetually gaining upon this land, and within the last nine years above 20 acres have been lost. In 1833 flood-gates were erected for the protection of the marshes. The town is considered to be rather improving, its buildings being on the increase. It is now a fishing town, chiefly for herrings and sprats, the latter of which are cured here in the same way that herrings are at Yarmouth. The market is on Saturday: there are annual fairs on St. James's, and the 25th of July, for toys.

Dunwich is supposed to have been a town of the Britons, or a Roman station. During the heptarchy, it was the metropolis of East Anglia, and the episcopal seat for that kingdom "was placed here upon the consecration of Felix, the first bishop, about A. D. 630. Upon the division of this diocese, A. D. 673, the bishops of Suffolk continued their residence here, till the whole kingdom was reunited under the bishops of Elmham, in the 10th century. After which, here was a cell of monks, who were subordinate to Eye; but this, with many other churches and religious houses, was some ages since swallowed up by the sea." In the time of Henry II., Dunwich had a mint, and under Richard I. its importance was denoted by a fine of 1,000 merks, whilst Ipswich paid only 200, for supplying the king's enemies with corn. In the reign of Edward I., it had 11 ships of war, 16 fair ships, 20 barks or vessels, and 24 small boats for the home fishery. The primary cause of its decay was the opening of a port at Blithburgh. Such was the original extent, importance, and opulence of this place, that it contained 6 parishes and upwards of 50 religious foundations; but being situated on a hill, composed of loose sand and loam, it has suffered so repeatedly from inundations of the sea that it is now reduced to a small village, no longer presenting any appearance of the former importance of the borough. The ruins of a monastery of Grey friars, covered with ivy; part of an ancient church, standing on the edge of a cliff; a chapel of Saxon architecture; and the old hospital or Maison Dieu, are the only remains of the capital of East Anglia. The harbour has disappeared, with several miles of land to the east, and the sea continues its steady course of encroachment on the shore.

DUNWORTH HUNDRED, at the south-west extremity of the county of Wilts, on the borders of Dorsetshire. Area 26,650 acres. Houses 1,292. Pop., in 1831, 6,747.

DURHAM,

A maritime county-palatine, bounded on the east by the German ocean; on the north by Northumberland, from which it is separated by the Derwent and the Tyne; on the west by Cumberland and Westmoreland; and on the south by Yorkshire, from which it is separated by the Tees. It is of a triangular form, 140 miles in circumference; 40 miles in extreme length from east to west, and 35 miles in its greatest breadth from north to south. Area 1,097 square statute miles, or 702,080 acres; of which about 300,000 are in tillage, 200,000 in pasture, and the remainder in fells, wastes, &c. Houses 40,740. A. P. £791,359. Pop., in 1801, 160,561; in 1831, 253,700; consisting of 54,736 families, of whom 8,408 were chiefly employed in agriculture, 18,511 in manufactures, trade, and handicraft, and 27,817 otherwise occupied.

Civil and Ecclesiastical divisions, &c.—This county is divided into four wards—see CUMBERLAND—and deaneries,—namely, Chester, Darlington, Easington, and Stockton, which together form an archdeaconry in the diocese of Durham, and ecclesiastical province of York; but, besides these divisions, there are detached portions of the county, viz., Northamshire and Islandshire, including Holy Island and the Farne Isles, and a portion of the main land extending from the Tweed, north and north-west, to the sea on the east, and separated from Northumberland, on the south, partly by the course of the river Till, and partly by an artificial boundary: this portion contains 73 square miles of excellent and well-cultivated land;—Bedlingtonshire, lying in the heart of Northumberland, betwixt the rivers Blyth and Wansbeck;—these are usually termed the North Bishopric: they are included in Chester ward;—and the insulated territory of Craike, in the wapentake of Bulmer, in the north riding of York,—which is included in Stockton ward: of these outlying portions of the county, the three first, constituting ‘the North Bishopric,’ are in the archdeaconry of Northumberland, except the parochial chapelry of Ancroft in Islandshire, which is in the archdeaconry of Durham: Craike is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop of Durham. The archdeaconry of Durham contains 75 parishes and parochial chapelries, of which 32 are rectories, 23 vicarages, and 20 perpetual curacies: some of these are very extensive, comprehending from 10,000 to upwards of 50,000 acres each. By subdivisions of them, 24 dependent chapelries have been formed. The total amount of church-rates, received for 1831–2, was £5,236; for 1839, £6,273, with nearly an equivalent expenditure. Besides upwards of 180 dissenting, there are 16 Roman Catholic, chapels. In 1831 the number of daily schools was 709, attended by 28,840 children; and of Sunday schools, 260, attended by 24,443 children. Of these,—11 daily schools with 510 children, and 83 Sunday schools with 10,312 children, belonged to dissenters. The poor rate returns for 3 years to Easter, 1750, show an average expenditure of £7,143 on the poor of this county; for 1803, an expenditure of £54,686; for 1821, an expenditure of £97,618; for 1832, an expenditure of £86,087; and for 1839, an expenditure of £68,700. Including those of the outlying parishes, there are, in this county, 300 townships, 1 city—Durham—and 15 market-towns, including, however, several, either of little importance or now obsolete: the principal market-towns are—Sunderland, Darlington, Barnard-Castle, Bishop-Auckland, Gateshead, Hartlepool, Sedgefield, South Shields, Staindrop, Stanhope, Stockton-upon-Tees, and Walsingham.

For parliamentary representation, the county is divided into two parts,—the northern division containing the wards of Chester and Easington, and the southern those of Darlington and Stockton. Each division is represented by two members,—nominated, for the northern, at Durham, and for the southern, at Darlington. The other polling-places for the first are Sunderland, Lanchester, Wickham, Chester-le-street, South Shields; and for the second, Stockton, Bishop-Auckland, Stanhope, Middleton, Teesdale, Barnard-Castle, and Sedgefield. In the north division, Durham and Sunderland return each two members; Gateshead and South Shields one each: in the south there is no town with separate parliamentary representation.—At the general election in December, 1832, one of the members chosen for South Durham was a quaker. He was allowed to take his seat in the house of commons, on giving his affirmation, in place of swearing the oath. North Durham, including two of the wards, must not be confounded with the detached portions of the county, to which the name used to be applied, viz. the districts of Holy Island, Northam, and Bedlington; these are now, in respect of representation, joined with the northern division of Northumberland; as is Craike with the north riding of Yorkshire. The number of electors registered for the county, in 1837, was 10,305; the number who actually polled at the general election in 1837, was 4,282. Previous to 1675, this county did not return members to parliament at all: indeed as a county-palatine, under the supreme rule of the bishop, it was more like a petty kingdom in itself than a mere county: since that year, however, when an act was passed for the purpose, and until 1832, it returned two members; and the only place within it separately represented was the city of Durham, which also returned two.

Jurisdiction, &c.—Durham has usually been termed ‘the bishopric’ on account of the great powers formerly possessed by the bishop of the diocese, who was said to have all the authority in Durham that the king exercised elsewhere. These privileges were latterly much abridged: the bishop still, however, acting as lord-lieutenant of the county, and having the appointment of the high sheriff; accountable to him and not to the Crown; he being also perpetual chancellor and justice of the peace in his territories; all dues, amercements, and forfeited recognizances, as well as deadlands, belonging to him; all tenures of land originating from him, as lord paramount in chief; all enclosed estates, as well as moors and wastes, to which no title could be made, escheat to him; the admiralty jurisdiction of the county, and the conservancy of all waters within his district, being also vested in him: but, by the 6th and 7th Will. IV., chap. 19, the whole of the palatine jurisdiction is taken away from the bishop, and vested in the Crown as a separate franchise and royalty; the distinction of Durham, as a county-palatine, being thus, for most practical purposes, abolished. It is in the northern circuit. The assizes and quarter-sessions are held at Durham: there the county-jail and house of correction are placed. The total income of county-rates, in 1800, was £5,762; expenditure on jails, £179; on prisoners, £845; on bridges, £1,314. Total expenditure, £4,041: in 1830 the total income was £9,315; expenditure on jails, £700; on prisoners, with prosecutions, £4,353; on constables and vagrants, £1,079; on bridges, £911; total expenditure, £8,069: in 1838 the total income was £8,049; expenditure on jails, £775; on prisoners with prosecutions, £4,862; on constables and vagrants, £815; on bridges, £1,138: total expenditure, £10,151.

Surface, Coasts, &c.—The general aspect of the county is hilly and mountainous; particularly the western angle, a bleak, naked, and barren region, crossed by the chain of hills termed the English Appenines, which, however, do not here rise to any considerable height. From the eastern side of these hills issue numerous streams, which flow towards the sea; and smaller ranges of hills, branching off from this district, spread, in various directions, over the county. Teesdale, in the Appenine district, presents a long and winding strip of fertility, surrounded by the wildest country in the kingdom. This valley is more than 30 miles in length, and here the principal lead-mines are situated. Weardale is also a wild and romantic district; and Tynedale, on the northern border, may vie with either in natural beauty, while it is greatly superior in its cultivation. The central parts of the county include some beautiful and fertile valleys, and are pleasantly varied with hill and dale, alternately appropriated to the growth of corn and pasturage. The eastern coast is bare and dreary, intersected by chains of limestone, whose monotonous forms, destitute of wood, and frequently ploughed to their summits, exclude the romantic grandeur of a mountainous region, and the softer features of the southern grazing district. Betwixt the swells of the country, however, lie numerous dales or denes, almost entirely concealed from the higher grounds. Every brook which falls to the sea has its banks adorned with a profusion of wild and varied scenery; the vales, imperceptibly commencing with the streamlets at their sources, sometimes contract themselves into narrow glens; sometimes open into irregular amphitheatres of rock, covered with ash or hazel; or deepen into ravines resembling the bed of a rapid river, terminating on the coast, either in wide sandy bays, or in narrow outlets, where the stream winds its way under crags of the wildest appearance. The coast of this county forms the base of its triangular form. The Tyne issues out at its northern, and the Tees at its southern extremity; near the latter is the only very prominent headland which occurs; namely, the bold and nearly insulated one on which the ancient but renovated town of Hartlepool is situated. This point projects to the south-east; and parallel with it, on the south-west, an inlet of the sea runs up into the land for about half-a-mile, then turns south-westwards, expands, and forms a dry haven, to which is popularly given the appellation of the Slake. The rocks in the vicinity of Hartlepool afford much interesting scenery,—being here and there hollowed out into perforations and caverns of singularly romantic character. The coast thence to Sunderland, at the mouth of the Wear, is much embayed. About 8 miles north from Hartlepool is Beacon point,—the beacon on which was meant to warn mariners of the rocky and dangerous nature of this part of the coast. At Sunderland, a busy and thriving sea-port, chiefly in the coal-trade, and second only to Newcastle, vessels are constantly to be seen entering and leaving Wear mouth. Between Sunderland and South Shields—another thriving sea-port town, at the mouth of the Tyne,—the coast forms a lengthened promontory, the most conspicuous head-land of which is called Suter Point, about 5 miles south-east from Shields. Incredible multitudes of cod-fish are taken weekly on the coasts, and furnish a cheap and grateful repast to the labouring poor. Ling, haddock, turbot, herring, and many other wholesome fish, are also plentiful. Their fecundity is very astonishing. Harmer found 32,663 eggs in a herring; Pelit, 342,144 in a carp, and Lewenhoeck estimated the eggs of a single cod at 9,384,000! South Shields, Sunderland, and Stockton, are the most important ports: considering its extent, this county is by no means amply supplied with harbours.

Rivers.—Besides the TEES and the TYNE—which see—as they rather bound than belong to Durham, the principal river is the Wear, which rises at the extreme western point of the county, and divides it longitudinally, but with a very sinuous course, during which it receives various tributaries, and passes Wolsingham, Bishop-Auckland, Durham, which it almost encircles, and Chester-le-street, issuing out into the German ocean at Wearmouth or Sunderland, where it is crossed by the celebrated iron-bridge, beneath whose vast arch vessels of large burden sail, by merely lowering their top-gallants. See SUNDERLAND.—The Derwent rises north of the source of the Wear, and though it principally bounds the county, crosses an angle south of the Tyne, into which it falls above Newcastle. The Skerne rises south of Durham, and flowing past Darlington, falls into the Tees. A number of minor streams water and drain the county; but the rivers connected with it do not afford any great facility to its internal navigation, which is confined to the lower waters of the Wear, and of the border rivers Tyne and Tees. The navigation of the Tees has been shortened by a cut, whereby a considerable bend in its winding course has been avoided; but, besides this, there are no canals, or artificial cuts for hydrographic communication, within this county. Salmon is very abundant in the rivers, together with trout, and a variety of other fresh water fish. There are mineral and medicinal springs in various parts of the county; and at Butterly, near Durham, is a salt spring issuing from a rock in the middle of the Wear; it is similar in quality to another at Birtley, which rises at a depth of 70 fathoms, in an engine-pit constructed for drawing water out of coal-mines. The sea-water also has long been extensively used at South Shields for the making of salt; but after the discovery of the Birtley spring—which has produced 20,000 gallons per day, four times stronger than any sea-water whatever—the Shields salt-works lost their importance and celebrity.

Climate, Soil, and Produce.—The air of Durham is considered to be very healthy, and although sharp in the western parts, it is mild and pleasant towards the sea, the vapours from the salt-water mitigating the cold in winter, which, in a situation so far north, might otherwise be rather severe. The soils are various; but they are generally loam. Near the river Tees, and in some spots bordering on the other rivers and brooks, the soil is loamy, or a rich clay: at a further distance from these, it is of a poorer nature, commonly termed water shaken, with here and there spots of gravel interspersed; but these are of small extent, the middle of none of them being half-a-mile from clay. The hills between the sea and an imaginary line drawn from Barnard-castle on the Tees, to Clansford on the Derwent, are for the most part covered with a dry friable loam, the fertility of which varies in proportion to its depth: from this line west, the summits as well as the sides of the hills are moorish wastes. In a country possessing such a variety of soil, the produce is of course proportionably various. The state of agriculture, however, in this county, is, on the whole, above the average in advancement. The crops principally cultivated are wheat, barley, oats, pease, and beans. Wheat has produced from 10 to 30 bushels; barley from 30 to 40, and oats from 20 to 40 bushels per acre. Turnips are extensively raised on all the lands except on the cold wet clays, which are unavoidably kept much in fallow. Lime of first-rate quality is freely used as manure, especially on the clay soils. The rich upland meadow and pasture lands afford great advantages for the rearing of live produce, and accordingly this county has long been distinguished for its excellent and improved breeds of cattle, sheep, and horses. The short-horned cattle are the most prevalent, and are often fed to an enormous size. This breed generally yields great quantities of milk. Several short-horned oxen have been slaughtered, and found to weigh upwards of a ton each: the celebrated Durham white ox weighed 1 ton, 11 cwt., 22 lbs. This extraordinary animal measured from tail to poll 8 feet 8 inches: it was fed in the parish of Houghton-le-Spring. Besides the shortness of horn, this breed differs from others in being wider and thicker in form; in affording the greatest quantity of tallow; and in having very thin hides with very short hair. The Durham short horns are well-known, and extensively used for dairy and other purposes throughout the country. There are several distinct breeds of sheep. The heath-sheep have large spiral horns, black faces and legs, a fierce, wild-looking eye, and short firm carcasses, covered with long, open, coarse, and shaggy wool, though their flesh is excellent in flavour: they weigh from 12 to 16 lbs. per quarter. The Cheviot sheep are hornless, and have generally white legs and faces: two-thirds of their wool is fine; the rest coarse. They average, when fat, from 12 to 18 lbs. a quarter. A long-wooled breed was once reared to a great extent in the north-eastern part of the county, and, when killed, often weighed from 50 lbs. to 60 lbs. per quarter; but the improved Leicester breed has nearly superseded them, as they fatten at an earlier age, and are more profitable. Horses of strength and size were very rare in the north of England, particularly upon the borders, till the year 1435, when a fine breed was imported from Hungary into Scotland by order of James I. But various sorts of these useful animals are now bred here and in the adjoining counties: amongst them is an excellent breed of hunters, generally of a bay colour, very active, strong, and hardy. Many superior race-horses are also bred here. At the Durham, Darlington, and other annual fairs, great numbers of coach and saddle-horses are purchased for the southern parts of England, where they have been used to replace the old heavy black breed. The Cleveland bays are celebrated for activity and vigour. The farms here average the middle size, few exceeding 200 acres. Of the land, about one-third is supposed to be of ecclesiastical tenure. The woodlands are not of any considerable extent; and chiefly confined to the parks and seats of the nobility. The banks of the rivers and brooks, however, particularly in the vicinity of Durham, are fringed with wood of long growth and much value.

Roads.—The public roads are in general good; but those belonging to townships are in many parts extremely narrow, irregular, and dangerous. The great north mail-road, to Edinburgh and the north of Scotland, enters this county over the Tees at Croft bridge, and runs through Darlington, Durham, and Chester-le-Street, to Gateshead, where it crosses the Tyne, and quits the county. About 4 miles south of Durham, on this road, another branches off towards Bishop-Auckland, near to which it divides; one branch proceeding by Bishop-Auckland, and the other by Eldon and Heighington, to Pierce Bridge over the Tees, where they again unite and quit the county, afterwards joining the Carlisle and Glasgow road, at Scotch corner in Yorkshire. A branch to Sunderland from the north road enters the southern parts of the county at Yarm, by crossing the Tees: it passes through Stockton-upon-Tees, Norton, Dalton-le-Dale, and Ryhope, to Bishop-Wearmouth, Sunderland and Monkwearmouth, whence it is continued to South Shields, a separate branch proceeding from it to Gateshead and Newcastle. Other roads radiate from Durham, to Sunderland by Houghton-le-Spring, to Cumberland by Willington, Walsingham, Stanhope, &c., to Lanchester, whence roads proceed to Walsingham, to Gateshead, &c.; to Norton by Sedgfield, &c.: numerous other roads proceed from town to town, with cross-roads interlacing them in all directions.

Railways.—This county is intersected in all directions by numerous railways: most of them have been constructed by the coal proprietors for the transport of coals from the pits to the places of shipment. The Stockton and Darlington railway is an undertaking of very great interest, from the circumstance of its being the first constructed public railway in England, upon which locomotive steam-engines have been used as the moving power. The greater importance, in a commercial point of view, presented by the Liverpool and Manchester railway, has had the effect of calling away, in a great degree, the public attention from the earlier projected Stockton and Darlington line; but although the points of greatest general interest are now more completely developed by the working of the Liverpool and Manchester, and other still more recent and important railways, yet there are some points peculiar to the Stockton and Darlington line well worthy of notice and of record. This railway was projected in 1821, and completed in 1825, at an expense of £125,900, advanced by 60 shareholders, chiefly public spirited members of the Society of Friends. It begins near the town of Stockton-on-Tees, whence it is carried, in a southerly direction, for about 4 miles. A branch is continued, in the same direction, through Egglecliffe, to Yarm Bridge, while the main line runs through Darlington north to the point of junction with the Clarence railway at Sim Pasture. It then runs past West Auckland, and ends at Witton Park Colliery, west of Bishop-Auckland. The main line is about 25 miles long; in addition to which, 4 branches were run to the west of Stockton, and a fifth to the east of that town, which should rather be considered as an extension of the main line to the Tees mouth: this extension branch crosses the river Tees into Yorkshire near Stockton, by a suspension bridge 240 feet wide within the piers, and 30 feet above low-water mark. The line then proceeds by Stainsby, Stainton, Acklam, Newport, &c., to a close adjoining the river Tees in the township of Middleburgh: this branch is 5 miles in length. Another of the branches runs from St. Helen-Auckland to Hagger Leas Lane: another from Darlington to Croft Bridge on the Tees; which has been purchased for the Great North of England line:—see CAOXT. A fourth branch runs from near Brusselton to Cawndon turnpike-gate, and the fifth to Yarm bridge has been already noticed. The views of the projectors of this railway were limited to the conveyance of the coal and other minerals, which abound throughout the district, for shipment to London and the eastern coast. The other descriptions of traffic to which it has given rise, have been created by the facilities which it has afforded. The scheme has not only in every way proved successful; but it may be here mentioned that Middleburgh, where it terminates at the Tees mouth, was 9 years ago an obscure fishing village, while it has now become a considerable sea-port town, the merchants in which have built an exchange. At the time when this railway was projected, its promoters only ventured to anticipate, as the greatest possible export of coal from the river Tees, about 10,000 tons per annum; whereas in 1835, the quantity so shipped,—including the shipment from Seaham harbour, with which port Stockton is connected for revenue purposes,—was 704,781 tons of which considerably more than half a-million tons were taken on board at Stockton and Middleburgh: in 1830, the shipments of coal from the Tees —by the Darlington and Clarence railways—amounted to no less than 1,400,000 tons! The number of passengers conveyed along the Darlington line of railway, in 1838, was 228,946; and in August, 1839, the number was 1,400 per day. The Clarence railway begins at Samphire beacon, on the river Tees, about 4 miles north-east of Stockton; and is carried, in a westerly direction, to Sim Pasture, where it joins the Stockton and Darlington railway, as already mentioned. The main line is only $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, but there are 6 branches collectively extending upwards of 30 miles; these are:—the city of Durham branch, which quits the main line north of Stillington, in the parish of Red Marshall, and is carried in a northern direction towards the city of Durham, a distance of 13 miles:—the Stockton branch, nearly $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, from the old Durham and Yarm road to Stockton:—the Deanery branch, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Sim Pasture to near Bishop-Auckland:—the Sherburn branch, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the Durham branch at Ferryhill, to the lime and coal works at Sherburn:—the Byer's Green branch, 5 miles from Ferryhill to Byer's Green:—the Chilton branch, only 3 furlongs in length from the Durham branch to Chilton. By means of this railway, valuable coal-fields and limestone quarries have been more effectually and cheaply connected with the shipping port of Stockton. The Clarence and Hartlepool Union railway, projected previous to 1837, runs from the Clarence railway at Billingham, to the tide harbour bank at Hartlepool, passing over the Slake: a branch runs to Seaton Carew. The Hartlepool railway runs in a north-eastern direction through the county. It is united with other lines, especially with the Clarence and the Durham and Sunderland, by junction railways: there are also branches proceeding in various directions. The Durham and Sunderland railway unites these two places: branches proceed in various directions to the adjacent collieries: a railway from Haswell-moor crosses the Durham Junction railway near Pespool, and joins the Durham and Sunderland railway north of Murton: the main line, having also previously crossed the Durham junction, then proceeds to Ryhope, and along the coast to Sunderland. The tunnel on this line, under the junction of the Hetton and Elemore railways, near Hetton-le-Hole, is nearly 50 yards in length. In 1837, the number of passengers on this line was 41,387; in 1838, 77,160; amount received for the latter £2,306 6s. 11d. In coals, the transit in 1837 was 9,703 chaldrons; in 1838, 106,890 chaldrons. A novel experiment has been tried on this line, which proves the practicability of railroad vehicles being propelled with wind. The Durham junction railway connects the Tyne with the Durham coal-field. It extends from the Hartlepool railway near Moorsley, to the Stanhope and Tyne railway at Usworth. It is connected with various minor and branch railways, besides the more important ones already described: it is also crossed by, and otherwise connected with, a branch of the railway between Stainton and Bishop-Wearmouth by Herrington and Offerton. The Durham Junction railway, first partially opened for use, during the meeting of the British Association at Newcastle, in August, 1838, crosses the river Wear and its valley, by the magnificent and celebrated Victoria bridge, of four main arches; three across the valley, to obtain the requisite level, and one splendid arch of 180 feet span across the river. The stone of which it is constructed is a hard, durable, well-coloured freestone, obtained from Pensher quarry in the vicinity: the outer quoins of the large arches are composed of granite: the foundations both for the abutments and piers are based upon solid rock, in some instances 40 feet from the surface in depth: turrets are formed above the piers, which transversely greatly strengthen the bridge: its length is 810 feet 9 inches; width, between the parapet walls, 21 feet; but the extraordinary height forms its most attractive feature, and affords interesting views of the surrounding scenery. From the foundation of the main pier to the spring of the large arch is 72 feet; from the spring to the crown of the arch is 72 feet, and from thence to the parapet wall is 13 feet: in all 157 feet. The height from the ordinary water level is about 130 feet,—nearly 20 feet higher than the justly celebrated bridge at Sunderland. The general style of the design is at once simple and grand; being elegant and imposing in appearance, without superfluous ornament: in this respect, it harmonizes admirably with the surrounding scenery, and presents a magnificent object in the landscape. This noble bridge was finished on 27th June, the day previous to the coronation of the Queen. The scenery around it is of a bold rocky character; the steep banks being well-wooded. The Stanhope and Tyne railway extends from Stanhope in West Durham, to South Shields; and, during its course, sends branches off in various directions: it is crossed by others of the railways with which this county abounds. Two other lines, with considerable branches, to the north of the Stanhope railway, communicate with the Tyne, the one near Hebburn hall, and the other near Red Heugh, where it also communicates with the Carlisle and Newcastle railway, which enters this county north-west of Crawcrook, and runs along the southern banks of the Tyne by Bladon, and the suspension-bridge at the junction of the Derwent with the Tyne, to Newcastle:—see CARLISLE. The Brandling Junction railway connects Gateshead with South Shields and Monk Wearmouth. It was opened on 5th September, 1839:—see GATESHEAD. The projected Bishop-Auckland and Weardale railway runs from Frosterley by Bishop-Auckland to the Stockton and Darlington railway, south-west of Shildon: a branch runs to Crook, and another to Bishopley. The projected Weardale junction, or New South Durham railway, runs from Frosterley to the Byer's Green branch of the Clarence railway. The West Durham railway runs from the Chilton branch railway end, in the township of Merrington, and, joining the northern line in the South Church parish, proceeds by St. Helen-Auckland Colliery, to the Stockton and Darlington railway: this railway was opened on 12th June, 1840. The Hagger-Leases branch railway diverges in a westerly direction: the northern line passes through Coundon to its junction with the south line in the township of St. Andrew-Auckland. The projected Great North of England, Clarence, and Hartlepool, Junction railway commences on the Wingate branch of the Hartlepool railway in the parish of Castle Eden, and running by Cornforth, whence branches diverge, continues to its junction with the Byer's Green branch of the Clarence railway. The branches proceed, one in a northerly, the other in a southerly direction, each to its junction with the intended Great North of England railway. A continuation of the main line of the Durham and Sunderland railway to Brancepeth, and a railway from Durham to the Durham junction at Moston, with a Houghton-le-Spring branch, were projected in 1837. The Great North of England railway traverses Durham from its northern to its southern extremity, and thence to York. The line north of Darlington passes by Durham, to which a branch 55 chains long has been proposed to be run. The chief object hitherto held in view by the directors of this railway has been, to complete the portion of the line from Darlington to York:—see DARLINGTON:—so as to make it available to the public, concurrently, as far as practicable, with the completion of the several great lines between York and the metropolis; especially as, since the opening of the Brandling Junction line, a continuous though indirect railway communication has existed between Gateshead and Darlington, through the Sunderland and Durham, the Clarence, and the Stockton and Darlington, railways: nevertheless, the continuance of the line towards Newcastle will, as speedily as possible, be effected. The expense and labour of this northern portion will be very great, as the works in contemplation are of a magnitude unequalled on any railway hitherto executed:—see article NORTHUMBERLAND. For further information regarding the Durham railways, projected, in progress, or completed, see the AUCKLANDS, COXHOE, CROFT, DARLINGTON, &c.

Coalfields, strata, mines, &c.—Durham, considering its dimensions, is unequalled by any county in Great Britain, except Middlesex, for its numerous and important coal, lead, and iron mines, and lime, millstone, and other quarries. To give a scientific and complete account of the strata and minerals common to it with Northumberland, would require volumes. An account of “the Newcastle coal formation,” with its contingent strata, extending through these counties, will be found under article NORTHUMBERLAND. Coal mines are now justly esteemed the most valuable source of our national wealth, as it is from the abundance of coal that our manufactures have derived their astonishing power of production; for the steam-engine would be an inert machine, were it not for the almost vital heat which our inexhaustible supply of coal imparts to it. The use of coal as fuel must have been known in very early times; and in some parts of Leicestershire and Yorkshire, where the coal strata baset, or appear above the limestone, rude tools have been found, which sufficiently prove that the Britons were not unacquainted with this valuable article. There is evidence, also, of the Barwell colliery near Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and some mines in the West Riding of Yorkshire, having been worked by the Romans. Coal, as fuel, however, was by no means extensively used in England, until the commencement of the 17th century. In the reigns of Edward I. and Elizabeth, edicts were made prohibiting coal fires in London: still it appears from a charter of Edward II., dated 1315, that the coal of Derbyshire was in use in the monasteries, and that the monks of Beauchief supplied themselves from the mines at Alfreton and Norton. As all the strata accompanying coal abound with vegetable forms,—see NORTHUMBERLAND.—Geologists consider that “all coal was originally derived from vegetables thus enveloped in the stone or clay.” There are different species of coal. By naturalists, it is described as “a solid, inflammable, and bituminous substance, which, after its oil and other volatile principles are expelled, can sustain a red heat without further decomposition.” Six different species of coal have been enumerated, viz.:—Newcastle, or Caking coal, Rock coal, Splent coal, Cannel coal, Culm, and Jet. The Newcastle or Caking coal, which, from its fat bituminous nature, burns to a cinder and emits a thick smoke, is composed of charcoal and bitumen, mixed with a small quantity of argil, and is commonly debased with pyrites and other foul admixtures. It abounds in both Northumberland and Durham, and forms the great staple of the trade of the ports of Newcastle and Sunderland. Rock coal commonly burns to a cinder, and produces a few ashes, but does not melt and run together in the fire like the caking coal. There are many varieties of it, some of which are well adapted to culinary purposes. Splent coal burns freely, is stratified with great regularity, and breaks with difficulty across the bed of the strata, but at the natural transverse cutters it easily splints into thin broad flags, like boards, which kindle almost as readily, and burn as freely as the bituminous pines. It is found at some of the Lambton collieries on the Wear, and at Wylam, Throckley, and Kenton, in Northumberland. Cannel coal is so called on account of its burning with a clear bright flame, like a candle. It takes a good polish, and when turned on the lathe into snuff boxes, and other trinkets, is similar to real jet. This coal is found in the highest state of perfection at Haigh, near Wigan, in Lancashire, where a summer-house, built of cannel, has now stood more than a hundred years without deterioration, and is visited with impunity by the ladies with their delicate drapery; so clean is this species of coal. Many cottages and outhouses in the neighbourhood of Throckley-fell are built of Splent coal, but fine coal of this description is rather scarce at Durham and Northumberland. Culm or Blind coal, has the singular property of emitting neither flame nor smoke; but burns with a clear, strong, glowing heat, like charcoal; and when a fire of it is extinguished or suffered to go out of itself, the coal that remains unconsumed bears no marks of fire. Jet has a near resemblance to the finer varieties of Cannel coal, except that it has the apparent grain of wood; is not readily broken cross-ways; but cleaves easily length-ways, like the Splent coals. The east and north-east parts of this county are much celebrated for their extensive coal mines; the produce of which is so great as almost to exceed calculation. The seams or strata now wrought are five in number, extending horizontally, for many miles, from 20 to 103 fathoms beneath the surface: these strata are from 3 to 8 feet thick: below are several other coal seams. The coal district occupies a space 22 miles long, and 11½ broad; extending westwards of the magnesian line, from South Shields to Shorley bridge (north) diagonally across the county, by Pontop, Hamstorsley, &c., to Staindrop; the strata varying in thickness and quality. The coal in the western part of the county is considered the best, and is worked for land sale only, while most of the collieries in the northern parts are worked for exportation. The coal trade is very variable here, and, as we have already instanced, has been greatly increased through the operation of the railways. The annual supply for the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire alone, is estimated at no less than 200,000 tons per annum:—see also section Railways—Darlington, Durham and Sunderland, &c. The coals are drawn out of the pits on machines worked by steam; though, in the great sea-sale collieries, numbers of horses are continually kept under ground for the purpose of drawing them to the mouth of the pits; a labour which has been performed by men or boys in the land-sale collieries. The aggregate amount of the power of all the steam-engines on shore and afloat in Durham and Northumberland, was estimated some years ago at between 20,000 and 30,000 horses; it must now be much more.

The loss of life, by fire and choke-damp, or by explosions of inflammable air, in the great coal-fields here, has been dreadful. The frequency and extent of these great calamities excited the sympathy of several enlightened and benevolent individuals at Sunderland, who, in 1813, formed themselves into “A Society for Preventing Accidents in Coal-mines,” and offered premiums for the discovery of new methods of lighting and ventilating them; but this philanthropic association did not receive that zealous support from the coal-owners and viewers which the public anticipated. Dr. William Reid Clanny, &c.

Bishop Wearmouth, presented to this society a "safety-lamp," constructed on the principle of insulating the light, so as to burn without danger in an atmosphere of fire-damp, for which he received a large gold medal from the Society of Arts; and the Rev. Dr. Gray, of the same place, having solicited the attention of Sir Humphrey Davy to this important subject, that eminent chemist visited the coal-mines of these counties in 1815; and, on his return to London, produced two lamps, in which the burners were insulated from the external air. He afterwards found the security of wire-gauze, which proves impervious to flame, and, though surrounded by inflammable air, prevents the communication of any inflammation to the burners. The different claims to the honour of having discovered the safety-lamp excited much angry controversy, in which it was proved that the celebrated Mr. George Stephenson, civil engineer, was the first person who discovered that carburetted hydrogen gas would not explode through small apertures, and, that the idea of using wire-gauze, instead of perforated tin, originated with Sir H. Davy, but the principle of his lamp does not differ from that of Mr. Stephenson's; wire-gauze being similar to the orifices of the capillary tubes used by that gentleman. The coal-owners refused to examine the claims of Mr. Stephenson, and having voted him 100 guineas, presented Sir Humphrey Davy with a service of plate, valued at 1,800 guineas. Several gentlemen, considering that Mr. Stephenson had been unfairly treated, afterwards presented him with a handsome sum of money and a valuable silver tankard, bearing an appropriate inscription. In 1826, Mr. William Wood, of Summer-hill Grove, Northumberland, obtained a patent for an "Apparatus for the explosion of fire-damp in Coal-mines," consisting simply of a common Dutch striking clock, in which the descent of a weight at a previously determined hour, raised a lever, which, by means of another lever, caused a match, charged with the oxymuriate of potash, to be dipped into a bottle containing sulphuric acid; and, a counterbalance weight on the first lever, immediately afterwards, drew the match out of the bottle, when the contact of air caused ignition to the match, to which a train of combustible matter was connected, by which all the inflammable gas was destroyed. Methods of ventilating coal mines, however, have been superseding the use of safety-lamps, since 1816, when Mr. James Ryan, of Netherton Colliery, near Dudley, obtained from the Society of Arts a gold medal and 100 guineas for his method. From seven-eighths to nine-tenths, and in some cases the whole of the coal, is now raised from each mine; whilst, on the old system, not more than one-half, and frequently less, was all that could be obtained.

At the termination of the coal district, the lead mines begin; some of which have been worked from the reign of Edward VI. The different coal strata rise and crop out east of the Derwent, where the uppermost strata of the lead measures are supposed to basset from beneath the lower coal seams. The lead sections are more regular than those of coal, and each individual bed is anticipated with great certainty by practical miners. In Weardale, there are 36 mines, belonging to the Bishop of Durham, which have produced about 6,800 tons of lead per annum. In Teesdale, there are 38 mines, the property of the Marquis of Cleveland, which have produced, on an average, 3,200 tons of lead per annum. Every ton of lead ore produces, on an average, about 9 or 10 ounces of silver, and one sort of lead, sent to Newcastle for sale, has yielded between 30 and 40 ounces per ton. 32 cwt. of clean lead ore usually produces 20 cwt. of pure lead. Of the fissures or faults which contain the lead ore, such as range from north to south are termed cross veins or dikes; these are not very fruitful: the lodes or fissures which run from north west to south-east are from 3 to 6 feet wide, and most productive: these cut through the cross veins. There are flat or dilated veins which lie between two layers of stone, and are frequently discovered by the miners whilst they are working downwards, in the rake or perpendicular veins, which latter are the richest. Sometimes when the miners have cut a drift through a twitch, the vein opens in a large and wide belly of pure and solid ore. Cavities have been found in the great limestone stratum that have yielded upwards of 1,000 bings of lead—each bing containing eight cwt. of lead ore—but the ore is not always in a pure and solid state, for the veins are frequently separated longitudinally into two or more divisions by a hard and heavy stone vein, which is technically called a rider. For an account of the apparent origin and nature of metallic veins, see article DEVONSHIRE—Section, Ores and Mines.—The most prevalent stone in mineral veins is spar, of which there are four kinds, viz. calcareous, fluor, cauk, and quartz, the latter of which is frequently very beautiful, being so fine and smooth as not to exhibit any grain, and so hard as to cut glass like the diamond. Fluor spar also occurs in a great variety of colours; but green, white, yellow, violet, red and brown, are its most prevalent hues. Caik, or barytic spar, is commonly of a dull yellowish, brownish, or reddish white, and is very difficult to separate from the metallic ores. Large caverns are frequently met with in the lead mines. The insides of these cavities exhibit all the variety, beauty, and splendour of the most curious grotto work, being formed by the variegated spar, shot into a diversity of figured crystals. But these caverns are never so magnificent as when there is less or more of yellow copper ore, or of pyrites or black jack in them, as these ores are found to produce, in hard veins, the most beautiful colours in the world. In the lead formation, here, there are, according to Dr. Thompson, 7 beds or sills of coal, 19 of limestone, 60 of plate or slate clay, and 50 of sandstone; but Mr. Winch, in his section, makes 21 limestone beds, of which the aggregate thickness is 96 fathoms. Some of the beds agree with those of the coal-field, viz., coal, shale, and sandstone; but other rocky masses also attend the lead measures. The sandstone and shale beds first rise from beneath the coal formation. The slate sill is of a grey colour, and is used as a roofing slate; the millstone grit is one of the uppermost strata on the Derwent, and is quarried for millstones; the grindstone sill, a fine-grained yellowish sandstone, is the uppermost bed in some of the quarries in the district. Gateshead fell is peculiarly famous for producing the celebrated "Newcastle grindstones," so named principally from being sent to Newcastle for sale, and said to be sent to, and used in, all quarters of the globe. Hazle, tuft, and a variety of other sandstones, prevail, particularly in the lower part of the lead measures. Fire stone, of high estimation in the building of ovens, furnaces, &c., is obtained in various parts of Durham, and exported in immense quantities.

Iron ore is found both in the coal and lead districts. Immense quantities of iron pyrites lie imbedded in the strata of indurated clay through all the coalfield. Ironstone is still more abundant in the shale of the lead mines of the district in which Durham is included; but, owing to the high price of fuel, and the general distance from convenient carriage, it has not hitherto, at least till within the last few years, been manufactured to advantage. An excellent bed of ironstone was some years since discovered at Ouston, near Chester-le-Street. Beautiful black limestone marble, thick set with white coralloid fungitæ, is quarried at Frosterley. It bears a good polish, and is frequently used for tables, slabs, and chimney pieces. A black marble, veined with opaque spar, is found in the Tees near Barnard Castle. The magnesian limestone district commences at South Shields, runs along the coast to near Hartlepool, south of which the red sandstone district begins, and extends to above Croft-bridge. All this stratal tract is covered with very fine loam. The magnesian westerly line passes by Ferry hill, and out of the county into Yorkshire about Pierce bridge. The blue metalliferous limestone, west of the coal district, in this county, is much used for agricultural purposes, for which the magnesian limestone is less fit: it is distinguished from the other by the name of hot lime.

Manufactures.—Many kinds of manufacture are carried on in this county; but none of them to any great extent. In 1838, there were 4 worsted mills, employing 432 hands: of these, 3 were at Darlington, employing 405; and 1 at Gateshead, employing 27 hands;—3 woollen mills employing 89 hands: of these, 2 were at Durham, employing 79, and 1 at Ebchester, employing 10 hands;—and 8 flax-mills, employing 422 hands: of these 2 were at Bishop-Wearmouth, employing 30; 1 at Sunderland, employing 79; 2 at Stockton, employing 122; 1 at Darlington, employing 93; 1 at Houghton-le-Skerne, employing 57; and 1 at Marwood, employing 41 hands. Stuffs and carpeting employ about 550 hands at Barnard Castle and in the city of Durham; linen-weaving 350 at Hurworth, Rycliffe, and other places; sail-cloth 52 at Hedworth, where also scythes and edge-tools are made; woollens 70 at Shildon and Walsingham; glass—especially glass bottles—about 500 at Gateshead, South Shields, Bishop-Wearmouth, Heworth, and Southwick; iron-works 150, at Bedlington and Bishop-Auckland; makers of engines, moulds, and patterns, 150, chiefly at Birtley and Sunderland; earthen-ware, 45, at Ford; lead ore, 30, at Eaglestone; and the manufactures usual at shipping-places—ropery, paint, and anchors—employ about 350 persons: chain-cables are made at Gateshead. Ship-building is extensively carried on at Sunderland and South Shields.

History and Antiquities.—The co-palatine territory of Durham, between the Tees and the Tyne, belonged to the province of Maxima Cæsariensis, and constituted part of the extensive territories of the Brigantes, a British tribe of powerful influence before the invasion by the Romans. When the Anglo-Saxons established themselves in South Britain, this county formed part of the southern portion of the kingdom of Bernicia—taking that appellation in its widest extent:—subsequently it formed part of the kingdom of Northumbria; and, under Alfred and his successors, it was called Doorham, signifying Forest land. Christianity was introduced here in the 7th century, and there were many religious and monastic foundations previous to the incursions of the Danes, who, notwithstanding the victories gained over them by Alfred and other Saxon princes, preserved their own laws, customs, and languages, till the accession of Canute the Dane, the events of whose reign and of those who succeeded him, gradually led to the amalgamation of the Danes and Saxons into one people. When Oswald, king of Northumbria, had embraced Christianity, the task of converting the Northumbrians was undertaken by Aidan, a Scottish monk, who chose for the residence of himself and brethren, the island of Lindisfarne, or Holy Island, a retreat well-calculated for religious meditation, and rendered solemn by the awful prospect of the ocean, which diurnally shut out the residents, by means of the tides, from the continental inhabitants. Here, it is said, his successor built a church, and covered it with reeds after the primitive manner of those in Scotland. The famous St. Cuthbert was the 6th bishop of Lindisfarne: according to some, he was of regal extraction; but others maintain that in his youth he had been a shepherd, and was raised to the church by an extraordinary vision. Being canonized after his death, he was considered the patron saint of the diocese. The Danish conquest in England, towards the close of the 8th century, occasioned the cathedral and monastery of Lindisfarne to be finally abandoned; but it is to this day traditionally related, that St. Cuthbert still retains an affection for his old corporeal residence at Lindisfarne, where the superstitious believe he often comes in the night, and sitting on one rock, uses another as his anvil, on which he forges his beads.* Sir Walter Scott has interwoven this tradition in his beautiful poem of Marmion; according to which the nuns of St. Hilda's abbey, at Whitby, had sent to those of Lindisfarne to ascertain the authenticity of the marvellous legend, the truth of which, nevertheless, they pretended, a priori, to disclaim:—

“But vain St. Hilda's nuns would learn
If, on a rock by Lindisfarne,
St. Cuthbert sits and toils to frame
The sea-borne beads that bear his name:
Such tales had Whitby's fishers told,
And said they might his shape behold,
And hear his anvil sound;
A deaden'd clang—a huge dim form
Seen but, and heard,—when gathering storm
And night were closing round.
But this, as tale of idle fame,
The nuns of Lindisfarne disclaim.”

CANTO II., STANZA 16.

St. Cuthbert had directed that his body should be buried in a stone coffin, in the oratory of his hermitage at Farne, a dreary island, whither he had ultimately retreated, to practise a life of more austerity than that led by the more luxurious monks: he also ordered, that, if the island should be invaded by pagans, the monks were to flee, and carry his bones away with them. All his directions were obeyed; “only, at the weeping request of the monks, he permitted that his body should be transported to Lindisfarne, where, in St. Peter's church, at the right side of the high altar, he was solemnly enshrined, A. D. 687.” At the second descent of the Danes, but before the barbarians could reach Lindisfarne, the bishop Eardulph, and his numerous colony of monks, had fled, taking with them the body of St. Cuthbert, and their other precious relics, all of which they enclosed in one ark or shrine. They wandered from place to place, till the abbot, by a pretended injunction from the patron saint, effected the proclamation of Guthred, a Danish slave, the son of a general, as king of Northumbria. This novel but politic incident conciliated the Danes: peace was re-established: the Northumbrians were reconciled to the rule of the Dane; and, in 882, Eardulph established his see at Chester-le-Street. The monks “had now got the art of enslaving the devotion of princes to their private ends:” they even induced the Great Alfred to swear fealty to St. Cuthbert and his clergy, “by whose help they persuaded him that he had got the victory over the pagans.” Alfred and Guthred granted to the church, for ever, all the lands between the Tyne and the Wear: these, together with other extraordinary rights, privileges, and immunities, constituted the origin of the Jura regalia, which, till the recent act of parliament, dignified the co-palatine of Durham, over which the bishop exercised a truly regal jurisdiction as the representative of the person of St. Cuthbert. In 990, a new invasion of the Danes compelled the holy fraternity to flee from Chester-le-Street to Ripon in Yorkshire, with the remains of their tutelary saint and relics as before. On the retreat of the ravagers they set out on their return to Chester, where the see had now been settled 113 years; but they were intercepted in their progress, at the site of the future city of Durham, by the supernatural agency detailed in our account of that city. Thus "the bishopric" was founded. Gifts and oblations flowed profusely in, and thus the city of Durham was founded. Soon after the Norman conquest, the entire subjugation of the bishopric was intrusted to Comyn, a Norman nobleman, who, though warned of the indomitable spirit of the people, pursued his march to Durham with 700 troops, where he and his followers were put to death by the inhabitants, against whom William immediately sallied forth, devastated the whole country, and devoted its inhabitants to military execution. His troops were scarcely withdrawn, when Malcolm, king of Scotland, penetrated through Cumberland, into Cleveland, to the bishopric, laid waste Teesdale, and burned the towns and monasteries of Wearmouth and Hartlepool. The bishopric was compelled, under the Normans, to provide, from the patrimony of the church, and the possessions of the laity, both soldiers and other military aid. After the establishment of the Norman rule its most serious calamities were the frequent incursions of the Scots, to whose devastations it was more particularly exposed, by its vicinity to the border. In the article of military power, the bishop had his thanes, and afterwards his barons, who held of him by knights' service, as the rest of the "Haliwerk folk" held of them by inferior tenures. On alarms, he convened them as a parliament, with advice for them to assist with their persons, dependants, and money, for the public service at home and abroad; and all levies of men and money were made by the bishop's commission, or by writs in his name out of the chancery at Durham: for he had power in the bishopric both to coin money and levy taxes, and raise and arm soldiers from sixteen to sixty years old. According as he found their strength, he had power to march against the Scots, or to conclude a truce with them. One of the bishops built a strong castle in his territory, on the border, to defend it against them; though no other person could have done this without his leave, nor the greatest person in the palatinate embattle his mansion. As the people depended on him in these matters, they were free from every body else. In 1640, during the parliamentary war, the Scottish army, entering Newcastle on the 28th of August, took possession of Northumberland and Durham. Bishop Morton fled to Stockton, thence to York and London, and never returned to his diocese. The majority of the clergy at this time deserted the cathedral, and the see and episcopal government of Durham were virtually dissolved. An accommodation with Scotland was effected by the parliament; and, in 1653, the county of Durham, or a committee so styling themselves, addressed Lord General Cromwell and his council, expressing adherence to his person and government, but it was signed by only one individual of considerable family or connexions. The restoration was followed by the restitution of the see of Durham, December 14th, 1660. Amongst the architectural antiquities in this county, chiefly entitled to notice, are Barnard castle, Bishop-Auckland palace and church, Brancepeth castle, Durham cathedral, palace, &c., Evenwood castle, Finchale priory, Gateshead monastery, Hilton castle, Lumley castle, Northam castle, Raby castle, Ravensworth castle, Whilton castle, Yarrow monastery, &c. The grand Roman road, called Watling-street, passes the Wear, at Walsingham, and a branch of it passes on to Chester-le-Street, and Shields. The remains of some ancient encampments are also visible.

* On this island there is a bed of black shiver or slate, mixed with iron ore, amongst which are the Entrochi; or, as they are popularly called, St. Cuthbert's beads.

DURHAM,

The capital of the county-palatine, and the seat of the see, of Durham, situated in the wards of Chester and Easington, union of Durham, near the centre of the county, 258 miles north of London, and 4 south of Newcastle, on a singular rocky eminence almost surrounded by the river Wear. Acres 10,125. Houses 1,288. A. P. £26,076. Pop., in 1801, 7,530; in 1831, 10,125.—For an account of the railways connected with this city, see county of DURHAM.

General description.—From all the neighbouring points of view, the appearance of this interesting city is unique and striking; its public edifices exhibiting a degree of magnificence unexpected at a distance so remote from the metropolis; and its situation and figure being so peculiar—in connection also with its historical circumstances—as to have occasioned its being emphatically denominated THE ENGLISH ZION.* The centre of the rocky circular eminence, which rises abruptly from the Wear, is prominently occupied by the cathedral and castle, which, with the streets called the Baileys, are included within the remains of the ancient city walls: here the objects seem to rise one above the other, till they are crowned with the cathedral church, which, especially as seen in the beautiful prospect from the churchyard of St. Giles—a prospect too extensive for a picture, and too rich for description—stands exalted above all, like the mitre round the temples of its prelate; and constitutes the supreme and noblest ornament to the fair capital of the ancient principality. Below the city walls, on one side, the slope is ornamented with hanging gardens and plantations descending to the river: the acclivity on the other side is rocky, steep, and high. The cathedral precincts, and the site of the ancient city, form, towards the south, a kind of peninsula, surrounded by the river. Leland, in the first volume of his Itinerary, says, "The towne of Duresme stoneth on a rocky hill; and stoneth as men cum from the south cuntre on the ripe of Were, the which water, so, with his course, naturall, in a botom, windeth about, that, from Elvet a great stone bridge of 14 arches, it cripeeth about the towne to Framagate bridge, of 3 arches, also on Were, that betwixt these two bridges, or a little lower, at St. Nicholas, the towne, except the length of an arrowshot, is brought in insulam; and some hold opinion, that, of aunient tyme, Were ran from the place wher now Elvet bridge is, strait down by St. Nicholas, now stonending on a hill; and that the other course, part for pollicy, and part for digging of stones for building of the towne and minstre, was made a valley, and so the water-course was conveyed that way,—but I approve not full of this conjecture." There are sufficient appearances, however, to support the conjecture that a sluice or moat once crossed

* "This reverend and aged abbey is seated in the heart of the city, so advanced upon the shoulders of an high hill, and encompassed again with the higher hills, that he that hath seen the situation of this city hath seen the map of Zion, and may save a journey to Jerusalem. Shee is girded almost round with the renowned river Wear, in which, as in a glass of crystal, shee might once have beheld the beauty, but now the ruine of her walls."—Legend of St. Cuthbert.

the neck of this peninsula,—which is not above 200 paces in width,—whereby the whole city could be completely insulated. The bridges alluded to by Leland still exist. Elvet is a township on the east side of the peninsula, from which it is separated only by the river: one of the two streets—that of New Elvet—is composed of respectable houses, some of them of the highest class. The county jail is situated in this township. Elvet and Framwellgate bridges cross the bends of the river at the narrowest part or neck of the peninsula. Framwellgate is another township called the borough of Framwellgate, consisting principally of a single street running northwards from the bridge, whence also another suburb termed Crossgate branches off. Both of these present appearances of great poverty. North of the peninsula is situated the parish of St. Nicholas, which, together with the peninsula itself, contains what is termed the old town: in it are the market-place and the principal shops. St. Nicholas has extended itself along one street called Clay Path, up to St. Giles's parish, where it is continued for $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile, by the name of St. Giles's Gate. There are scarcely any respectable shops, and very few houses of a better class in this street. North and South Bailey are very small townships, situated between the cathedral precinct and the river. This is a very desirable and most respectable part of the town. A handsome bridge of 3 arches crosses the river at the south-western extremity of South Bailey. The form of the city has been whimsically compared to that of a crab,—the market-place representing the body, and the streets the claws. On each side of the river, beyond the hanging-gardens which skirt the peninsular acclivity, are beautiful promenades or public walks, called the Banks. "These celebrated walks," says Warner, "accompany the bending of the stream, and command several interesting peeps at the city, and its august ornaments—the castle and cathedral. The banks, rocky and abrupt on one hand, and sloping gently to the river on the other, darkened by a solemn depth of shade, sequestered and retired, in the immediate neighbourhood of a busy scene of society, afford a retreat of the most beautiful and agreeable nature. The variety of the scenes which they open also is remarkable; deep glades and solemn dells; scarred rock, and verdant lawn; sylvan glades, and proud castellated edifices. From the elegant new bridge, the last mentioned feature is seen to great effect; the castle and cathedral blend their battlements and turrets together, and rise with inconceivable majesty from the sacred groves which clothe their rocky foundations. The combination here of trees and buildings, water and rock, home sylvan scenery, and fine distance, is at once beautiful and grand." The race-ground on the shore of the river opposite to the city, and adjoining the suburb of Old Elvet, consists of an extended tract of level meads. Races are held here in May. There are assembly-rooms, a theatre, news-rooms, a subscription and a mechanics' library; besides those of the bishop, and the dean and chapter, in the cathedral precincts. The free-masons of Durham have a neat edifice in Old Elvet, called Granby Lodge. In the centre of the market-place is a public pant or fountain of excellent water, which supplies the greatest part of the town. The reservoir is octagonal, and ornamented with a statue of Neptune: the water is conveyed to it through pipes, from a spring, granted, in 1450, to the city, for ever, by Thomas Billingham, Esq. The streets are well-paved, and lighted at night with gas, from gas-works on the banks of the river.

'The Bishopric,' &c.]—To the city of Durham itself an ecclesiastical origin has been attributed. About the year 995, when the wandering monks of Lindisfarne were returning, after the Danish invasion, to their church at Chester-le-Street,—see county-palatine of DURHAM—History,—with the ark containing their holy relics, and the mortal remains of the illustrious St. Cuthbert; when they approached the ground where Durham afterwards was built, the ark—by a miraculous interposition, as they themselves inform us,—became immovable at Wardleu, a place to the eastward of the future city. From this mysterious resistance, the ecclesiastics were impressed with the belief that heaven would not permit the remains of their patron saint to return to their former resting-place; and, after much invocation, Dunholme, as it was then called,—“a land flowing with milk and honey,”—was revealed to them in a vision, as the appointed place of rest for St. Cuthbert and themselves. The precise spot was indicated to them by the recovery of a lost cow; in reference to which circumstance, and emblematic of the rich meads and valleys on the Wear, the effigies of the monks and the bountiful cow, on the west corner tower of the east transept of the cathedral, are said to have been erected. The first care of the pious labourers was the construction of an ark or tabernacle, with timber and boughs of trees from the adjoining thickets and forests, wherein they deposited the saint's body: they afterwards built a more suitable edifice, called the White church; and ultimately, the noble cathedral, then dedicated to St. Cuthbert, was erected, and the saint's remains therein deposited. This and other buildings formed the nucleus of the infant city. “Upon the removal of the bishop's see hither by Bishop Aldwin, about the year 995,” says Tanner in his Notitia Monastica, “Bishop W. de Carileph, with consent of the pope and king, was expelled: a prior and convent of Benedictine monks were placed herein, who continued till the general dissolution in the time of Henry VIII., when the bishopric was valued at £3,138 9s. 8d. per annum in the whole, and £2,821 1s. 5d. clear, and the revenues of the church at £1,366 10s. 9d. per annum, Dugd.; £1,615 14s. 10d. ob. Speed; £2,215 Compend. Compert. The titular saint of this cathedral and county was St. Cuthbert, whose body was magnificently enshrined behind the high altar. But King Henry VIII. named it the Cathedral Church of Christ and the Blessed Virgin, upon his refounding and endowing it, ann. reg. 33, for a dean, 12 prebendaries, 12 minor canons, 16 lay singing-men, and other officers and ministers.”

The bishopric of Durham comprehends the counties of Durham and Northumberland, with the parish of Alston in Cumberland; and the ecclesiastical commissioners have now transferred all places within the peculiar jurisdiction of Hexhamshire, from the diocese of York, to the archdeaconry of Northumberland and diocese of Durham. The dignities attached to this see have been very great; the bishop being Count Palatine, Earl of Sadberg, and custos rotulorum of the county, with power to create barons, appoint judges, convolve parliaments, raise taxes, and coin money: the courts of justice were held in his name, and he could grant pardons for all offences or felonies: he granted markets and fairs, and was lord-admiral within the county-palatine. His powers and privileges were abridged by Henry VIII.; and by 6^o and 7^o Will. IV., chap. 19, as already observed in article DURHAM, co-palatine.—Jurisdiction—which see—the whole of the palatine jurisdiction of the bishop of Durham was taken away.

The number of benefices in this diocese, returned to the commissioners, in 1831, inclusive of sinecure rectories, but exclusive of benefices annexed to other preferments, was 192, besides 2 not returned.

The aggregate amount of the gross incomes of incumbents, in the 192 returned benefices, was £74,457—average gross income £387. In 1838, the total number of benefices, without exclusion, was 209, the incumbents in 64 of which were non-resident. The total number of curates, in 1831, was 100: stipends, included in the income of incumbents, £8,556—average £85. The bishopric is one of the richest benefices in the kingdom. Though rated in the crown books only at £2,821 1s. 5d., the total amount of the average gross yearly income of the see, and of the ecclesiastical preferments, for 3 years, ending 31st December, 1831, was £21,991. After making this return, the bishop had granted permanent augmentations to small livings in his patronage, to the amount of £1,170 per annum, out of the revenues of the see. No accurate judgment could then be formed, as to the future average amount of fines on the renewals of leases of mines and quarries, (a great proportion of the revenues being derived from ecclesiastical tenures, &c., in the county-palatine,) as the profits attending them depended, principally, upon the several districts in which the collieries should be worked. The amount of the average gross yearly income of the dean and chapter, or corporation, of the cathedral, as a corporation aggregate, in 1831, was £35,071, besides separate revenues possessed by all the members as a corporation sole, in right of the prebends and the deanery; the average gross yearly amount of these, was £14,478. The corporation consists of a dean and 12 prebendaries. There are also 8 minor canons, with revenues paid, by the dean and chapter, out of the revenues of the corporation aggregate; after payment of which stipends and allowances, and also of the stipends and allowances, amounting to £5,672 13s. 4d., to the dean and prebendaries who have kept their residence, the surplus is divided into 14 parts, of which the dean receives 2-14ths, and the prebendaries 1-14th each; the sum so divided, according to the average for 3 years previous to 1831, having been £20,877. The average nett income of the dean, in right of the deanery, was £3,266, and the nett revenues of the prebendaries, in right of prebends, were,—those of the 11th stall, amounting to £1,400; the 10th, amounting to £1,043; the 2d, to £813; the 1st, to £706; and the remainder varying from £687 belonging to the 7th, to £312 belonging to the 9th. Augmentations of the poor livings in the patronage of the dean and chapter, granted previously to 1831, amounted to £1,734 2s. 9d. per annum; and additional augmentations thereafter to be granted, would, it was estimated, increase the sum total to £3,000 per annum. The chapter had expended and were still expending large sums in building churches and chapels; and property which produced, on an average, £2,986 18s. per annum, had been appropriated to the Durham University. By a supplementary statement made to the commissioners, it appeared, that, in July, 1832, a fine of £44,266 12s. 10d., was paid by the Marquis of Londonderry for the renewal of a colliery lease, of which about 12 years had expired; but that it was improbable so large a fine would be again received: it was also stated that the average of the 3 years on which the return was made was higher than the average of any former 3 years; and that independently of the appropriation to the Durham University, and of the augmentations of poor livings, the revenues were expected in future to produce a much lower average than that which had been stated.

THE CATHEDRAL excels all other sacred edifices in the kingdom in the beauty of its situation, as well as in the riches of its revenues; and though not so large as some of them, its magnificence is not surpassed by any. The foundation of the building, which was laid in the year 1093, by Malcolm, king of Scotland, Bishop Carilepho, and Turgot the prior, is about 80 perpendicular feet above the surface of the river. The west end of the church rises from the rocks, which are seen on the summit of the cliff, and almost overhang the stream. The elevated, bold, and singular position of this cathedral adds greatly to the striking effect and grandeur of its appearance. The original form of the structure, as erected by Bishop Carilepho and his successor Flam-bard, is a long cross with two turrets at the west end, and between them a large and richly ornamented door of entrance. Successive additions, including the great or central tower built in the 13th century, have rendered this cathedral a perfect specimen of the Norman architecture, and a highly instructive congeries of examples, illustrative of the gradual changes in the English style up to the beginning of the 15th century. From the square called the Palace Green, by which it is generally approached, the whole of the north front is at once seen. This entire range preserves its original Norman character, with occasional introductions of windows and tracery in the pointed arch manner. Various incongruities in the style and ornaments are observable: the porch, forming the principal entrance, may, in particular, be remarked as one of the most barbarous commixtures of the Saxon and pointed styles that ever disgraced modern architecture. On the door within the porch is a curious metallic ring, or knocker, sculptured with a terrific visage, in bold relief, and well executed, with which persons claiming sanctuary in the night-time were accustomed to alarm the inmates of the cathedral. Above the great window of the north transept were formerly, in two roundels, the figures of Benedictine monks, carved in relief: these, which displayed the state of the art at the period when that division of the building was erected, have been removed, and their places occupied by two new figures; one a prior, seated in his installation chair; the other an effigy of Bishop Pudsey, as portrayed on the episcopal seal attached to his charter to the city of Durham. On the octangular tower, at the west angle of the chapel of the Nine Altars which forms the eastern extremity of the cathedral, is the memorable basso relievo representing the event which occasioned the latter to be founded on this spot. The figures appear in a recess of the stone-work; but have been re-sculptured, and their original forms somewhat altered. The east front has been repaired and modernized: the windows forming a double range, are all of the lancet shape, excepting the centre window of the upper tier, which is circular, and radiated with stone-work. The south front preserves much of its ancient character, though some parts have been chiseled over to make way for the new facings. Only a partial view can be obtained of this side of the cathedral, as the cloisters, dormitory, and other buildings, conceal nearly the whole of the lower part. The west front, consisting of two highly ornamented square towers, each 143 feet in height, with the Galilee* between,

* Females were only admitted to the Galilee. St. Cuthbert had an inveterate hatred to or dread of them. The following description is curious: it explains the word "Galilee," as connected with conventual architecture:—"Galilee, a porch or porticus annexed to a church. It was used for various purposes; public penitents were stationed in it; dead bodies were there deposited previously to their interment; religious processions formed, and it was only in the Galilee belonging to certain religious houses that the female relatives of the monks were allowed to converse with them, or even to attend divine service. Much speculation has arisen as to the origin of this name. The most commonly received opinion (founded chiefly upon a passage in the writings of Gervase of Canterbury) is as follows:—When a female made an application to see a monk, she was directed to the porch, usually at the western extremity appears to great advantage from the opposite side of the river. The basement line of the elevation presents the projecting chapel of the Galilee, 80 feet from north to south, and 50 feet from east to west, flanked by huge buttresses and arches, springing out of the rock, to contribute due support to its walls, which form one vast combination of security to the main edifice. Above the Galilee, is the great west window, with various enriched compartments springing up to the roof. The architectural adornments of the towers are modern; and the attempt to make them accord with the original forms has, in many instances, proved unsuccessful: their summits are bounded by pinnacles, and open worked battlements. The great centre tower rises from the intersection of the nave and transept, and is singularly rich and elegant. Round it is a profusion of fine tracery, pointed arches, and other ornaments; and its buttresses are graced with niches, canopied, and decorated with tracery, within which various statues are placed, representing the original founders and patrons of the see. The height of this tower is 214 feet. The extreme length of the whole edifice, exclusive of the great western porch, or Galilee, is 411 feet.

The interior of the cathedral is highly interesting to those who wish to trace the connexion between Saxon and Norman architecture, or to observe the latter in perhaps its highest stage of perfection. The comparison of these orders with the English, or pointed styles, may also be made; as the chapel of the Nine Altars partakes, in its general enrichments and proportion, of the architectural character of Salisbury cathedral; and, from its singularly light appearance, forms a striking contrast with the massive Norman work prevalent in the other parts of the fabric. In the interior of this cathedral, observes Pennant, "is preserved much of the ponderous yet venerable magnificence of the early Norman style: the pillars are vast cylinders, 23 feet in circumference; some adorned with zigzag furrows; others lozenge shaped, with narrow ribs, or with spiral; the arches round, carved with zigzags: above are two rows of galleries, each with round arches or openings; a row of small pilasters runs round the sides of the church, with rounded arches intersecting each other." In the middle of the nave, between the four western pillars, is the Baptisterium or font; a rich piece of tabernacle-work, of red oak, in an octangular form, terminating in a pinnacle, ornamented by a dove with expanded wings. The upper part is supported on columns: the whole is about thirty feet high. At a little distance further to the east, and forming part of the pavement, is a long cross, of blue marble, marking the boundary beyond which females were not allowed to pass, even many years after they had been permitted to enter the cathedral from the Galilee. The Galilee, or St. Mary's chapel, is divided by clustered columns, and semicircular arches, into five aisles; the most northern of which is now enclosed as the registrar's office. The singular combination of the Norman and pointed styles displayed in this building arose from the repairs directed by Bishop, afterwards Cardinal Langley, about the year

1406. Here were formerly three altars, now wholly removed: that in the centre was dedicated to the Holy Virgin. Before the steps, which approached it, is the tomb of the cardinal, who died in 1438; and near it a large marble stone covering the remains of that 'light shining in darkness,' the Venerable Bede. There are a few other memorials of persons buried here. The great central tower is supported by clusters of columns, rising to the springing of the groins: the great arch springing from them is crowned by an open gallery of communication round the inside of the lantern: the space from the gallery to the window is filled with net compartments, which, with the window itself, are well imagined: groined arches form the termination of the lantern; and when viewed from below, the magnitude and grandeur of its several parts are extremely striking."—Account of Durham Cathedral—Antiq. Soc.—At each end of the middle transept, on the east side, is an aisle separated from the body of the transept by one clustered and two round pillars: one of the latter is grooved in the spiral form; the other in the zigzag manner: in each aisle were formerly three altars. At the south end of the transept is a curious clock, erected by the dean and chapter in the year 1632. The choir is divided from the transept by an oak screen, decorated with festoons of fruit and flowers, carved in a very bold style, and having an entablature of a rich foliage pattern. Over the screen is a large and fine-toned organ. The length of the choir is 120 feet: the floor is paved with black and white marble. The prebendal stalls are finished with tabernacle work, in which the ancient style is but indifferently imitated, but their general effect is not unpleasing. On the south side is the episcopal throne, an elegant structure, erected about the year 1730, by Bishop Hatfield, over the vault wherein he lies interred. The throne is considerably elevated; in the centre is a chair of state, having a canopy of ornamental tabernacle work. The pulpit, which is on the north side, is adorned with figures of some of the apostles, neatly inlaid on the panels, and nearly as large as life. The choir comprehends four pillars on each side; two of them clustered, and two round: the latter are cut in the spiral figure. The roof is of elegant Gothic work, the ribs of the arches terminating in points ornamented with roses; the fillets pierced in roses and crosses: some of the decorations of the centre roses are singular; one next to the organ contains a human figure, with three round balls in an apron. From the altar-rails eastward, the whole work appears nearly of the same date; and, by the architecture of this part, it seems that the building originally terminated here, and was opened further eastward to form a connexion with the east transept, or chapel of the Nine Altars. The screen, which forms the eastern termination of the choir, and divides it from the Feretory, and chapel of the Nine Altars, is very elegant, but has been greatly mutilated. The design is divided into three tiers, or stories: the lowest, or basement, is solid, the second and third are open, so that the statues, which once filled the niches, or rather canopies, were seen through it, in the view from the east side. The light and airy pinnacles, rising in a pyramidal form, tier above tier, in splendid confusion, cannot be too much admired. Behind the screen, projecting into the chapel of the Nine Altars, and on a level with the choir, is the chapel called the Feretory, where the gorgeous shrine of St. Cuthbert was anciently deposited. This shrine was once the richest in the kingdom; but its ancient splendour has vanished, and the only marks of its former reputation are to be found in the hollow impressions worn in the stone flooring, by the feet of the of the church; being answered, in the words of Scripture, 'He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall you see him!'" (Milner's Treatise on Eccles. Architect., p. 106.) The only English buildings to which the term Galilee is applied, are those attached to the cathedrals of Durham and Ely. A porch at the south end of the great transept of Lincoln cathedral is sometimes called a Galilee; the word has also been used to designate the name of a church, as well as of a small gallery, or balcony, opening towards it, from which visitors might view processions: probably, however, in the latter instance, the name is confused with that of a gallery.

numerous pilgrims who visited it in ages of superstition. So meritorious was this last act considered, that, in the year 1284, William, Bishop of Dumbain, granted a remission of forty days' penance to every votary who performed it. The "incorruptible remains" of St. Cuthbert are said to have been deposited here, in a "chest well fortified with nayles and leather," which was afterwards enclosed in a marble sepulchre; but these have long been removed, the shrine having been defaced and plundered of all its treasures and jewels, including "a precious stone of value sufficient to ransom a prince," by the commissioners of Henry VIII., who himself ordered the sanctified relics of St. Cuthbert to be buried in the ground under the place where his shrine was exalted. A large blue stone, placed in the centre of the floor, is reported to 'cover the often-removed bones of the venerated saint.' The chapel of the Nine Altars, terminating the cathedral eastward, is entered from the side aisles of the choir, by a descent of several steps. Its length is 130 feet; its breadth, from the screen of the high altar, 51 feet. The pilasters of this transept, from which rise the groins of the roof, are of an angular projection, light, elegant, and richly ornamented with foliage and flowers. Every alternate column is of black marble, the intermediate ones of white freestone, which had a beautiful effect before they were, from the mistaken zeal of reformation, daubed over, and concealed with washing and ochre. This portion of the cathedral received its name from the nine altars erected beneath the windows on the east side, and dedicated to various saints. The decorations of these altars, as they appeared previously to the Reformation, have been thus described. "The nine altars had their several screens, and covers of wainscot overhead; having likewise between every altar a very fair and large partition of wainscot, all varnished over with fine branches and flowers, and other imagery work, containing the several lockyers and amberies for the safe keeping of the vestments and ornaments belonging to the altar, with three or four little amberies in the wall for the same use and purpose." Before the great centre window, nine cressets, or lamps, were suspended, whose light was so great, as to make every part of the church visible during the whole time they were kept burning. Many distinguished prelates, and other eminent persons, have been interred in this cathedral, and their remains covered with beautiful tombs and brasses, which have mostly been swept away by the hands of sacrilege or fanaticism, since the days of Henry VIII. In different parts of this splendid cathedral there are beautifully ornamented doorways in the Norman style. That entering into the north cloister from the west end of the south aisle is very striking, and has much the air of a Roman arch. A second door opens from the north side of the cloisters into the east end of the south aisle of the nave, and is, equally with the former, rich and singular in its decorations.

The cloisters which adjoin the cathedral on the south, were erected between the years 1389 and 1438. They form a quadrangle of 147 feet, having 11 open windows in each front, with mullions and tracery repaired in the pointed style. They are ceiled with panels of Irish oak. On the west side of the cloisters is the Dormitory, a very large apartment of desolate aspect; under which were the Song school and the treasury, containing 670 deeds, consisting of charters, &c., by popes and kings, and other deeds by bishops, priors, nobles, &c. On the east side of the cloisters was the Frater house or Monks' hall, converted into an elegant library for the dean and chapter in 1680: it contains many records and curiosities. On the east side of the cloisters stood the chapter house. From the cloisters is a passage leading to a spacious oblong square called the College, which occupies one of the most pleasant parts of the city. Here are the deanery and prebendal houses.

The New University of Durham.—From the cathedral, on the north, extends the Place, or Palace Green, on the north side of which is the castle, latterly used,—until order in Council of date 19th July, 1837,—as the occasional residence of the bishop; but then,—with the exception of apartments called the Palace, still reserved to the use of the bishop for the time being,—appointed to be held by him "in trust for the University of Durham, which has lately been incorporated by the name and style of 'The Warden, Masters, and Scholars of the University of Durham,' but subject, nevertheless, to such right of access as the clergy of the diocese of Durham now have to the library founded by John Cosin, heretofore bishop of Durham, and now remaining within the said precincts," and other rights, "and to the enjoyment of the bedesmen of the cathedral church of Durham, of the alms-houses wherein they now reside, until the said warden, masters, and scholars, shall have provided, to the satisfaction of the bishop of Durham for the time being, sufficient buildings elsewhere for the respective purposes for which the present buildings are lawfully used; and as to those parts of the said buildings which were used by officers of the said palatinate, so long as any of those duties shall remain to be performed by the officers who held their offices at the time of passing the act for separating the palatine jurisdiction from the bishopric of Durham." The bishop holds the reserved apartments in the castle as visitor of the new university. This highly important institution was established by the dean and chapter, under an act of chapter dated 28th April, 1831; and confirmed and endowed, as an university in connection with the cathedral, by an act of parliament passed in the 2d and 3d years of the reign of William IV., entitled 'An Act to enable the Dean and Chapter of Durham to appropriate part of the property of their Church to the establishment of a University in connection therewith, for the advancement of learning.' The government of the university was vested, by this act, in the dean and chapter, subject to the jurisdiction of the bishop as visitor, and the establishment of a warden, professors and readers, tutors, students, &c., was authorized. The dean and chapter were also empowered, as trustees for the university, to sell certain lands enumerated, and by the act vested in them, as well as all other property to be thereafter vested in them for the same purpose, according to powers contained in the act. In 1834 the governors, by another act of chapter, ordained that the university should be managed by a warden and a senate and convocation with certain limited powers. The warden and convocation grant degrees in the various faculties, under permission of the dean and chapter. The regulations regarding degrees are detailed in the statute of the governors, and regulations of the senate and convocation, published at Durham in 1836. In 1837, a royal charter was granted.

* On 17th May, 1837, the workmen employed in making some alterations immediately behind St. Cuthbert's shrine, opened the vault. After removing the slab, a chest, apparently of oak, was seen, the lid and a great part of the sides of which had fallen in from decay. When the mass of powdered wood was taken away, an entire skeleton was found, swathed in vestments of linen and silk, which were also much decayed: a portion, however, of the robes was still remaining, richly worked in silk and gold tissue, and containing some valuable dates. At the lower part of the chest or coffin were laid several detached bones, two full-grown skeletons, and the cranium of a child. A small square tablet of wood, covered with a thin lamina of metal, was placed upon the body. There were also found in the coffin the fragments of an ivory comb, of large dimensions, and a small silver cross; but no crucifix, crozier, ring, or any other article of value. These antique relics, after being inspected, were carefully collected and replaced in the vault, which was afterwards closed.

The endowment of this university is on a scale of liberality worthy of the olden time. It is established at a great personal sacrifice, principally made by the prebendaries, who, under the authority of the act alluded to, have voluntarily appropriated part of their church estate to cover the expense; and the bishop, besides a magnificent donation, confers on the institution £1,000 per annum. The warden and classical professor have the reversion of the first two vacant stalls in the cathedral, and waiting these, a handsome salary. Twenty of the most distinguished students have lodgings, commons, and tuition provided for them as foundation students, at the expense of the prebendaries. The minor canons of the cathedral, which are of the value of £200 per annum, are appropriated to the university as fellowships; and the whole patronage of the chapter and the see will be distributed according to a scale of merit among its members. Other anticipated patronage was expected, with the preceding, to offer to the competition of the members of this university greater preferment than any of the colleges of Oxford or Cambridge. The great distance of the two Southern universities; the high intellectual character of the inhabitants of the North; the great numbers of Northmen who, notwithstanding the distance and consequent expense, flock to Oxford and Cambridge, and especially to the latter university, are circumstances which have ever led men to look upon the establishment of an university in one of the northern counties as eminently desirable; and of all places in the north, Durham is that which every one would first select for its site. The situation of the city is of unequalled beauty; and besides the interest attached to the castle, the majestic cathedral, the shrine of St. Cuthbert, and the college, our two old universities have nothing that can claim a comparison, either in beauty or extent, in meditative solitude or solemn and sequestered shade, with those delightful walks, and wooded avenues, which skirt the Wear. The plan of an university at Durham is as old as the days of Cromwell, by whom a letter, still in existence, was addressed to the chapter, urging its formation. An attempt to establish it in fact was then made. "The orphan college," says Hutchison, "thrived apace; it endeavoured to confer degrees, and mimic its grown-up sisters of Oxford and Cambridge, who checked its presumptions by petitions to the new Protector; (Richard Cromwell); but in less than two years the ill-patched machine of government fell to pieces, and, with it, this new seminary of knowledge." The original charter is still in the dean and chapters' library. "It is a singular fact," observes Brand, in his history of Newcastle, "that George Fox, the founder of the Quakers, has assumed to himself the consequence, and what he thought the merit, of having been the means of suppressing this most laudable institution."

Parishes, Livings, &c.—The city of Durham comprises the following 6 parishes, all in the archd. and dio. of Durham: viz. St. Giles, a perpetual curacy; valued at £20 6s., returned at £50; gross income £99; in the patronage of the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry. St. Mary-le-Bow, a perpetual curacy; valued at £15, returned at £150; gross income £113. Patron, the archdeacon of Northumberland. St. Mary-the-Less, a rectory not in charge; gross income £120. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. St. Nicholas, a perpetual curacy of the certified value of £13 19s. 4d., returned at £80; gross income £90. Patron, the Marquis of Londonderry. St. Oswald's, a vicarage; rated at £17; gross income £272; in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. St. Margaret's, a perpetual curacy; gross income £480; also in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. There are parish churches independently of the cathedral: the principal of these, the church of St. Nicholas, is an ancient structure on the south side of the marketplace. It consists of a nave and side aisles, with a square tower at the south-west angle. Here are the seats for the body corporate, and various city companies. St. Mary-le-Bow, or Bough church, on the east side of the North Bailey, is, according to tradition, erected on the site of the tabernacle of boughs, in which St. Cuthbert's remains were first deposited. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1778, and places of worship for Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, the Society of Friends, and Roman Catholics.

Schools and Charities.—There are, in this city, 25 daily and 8 Sunday schools, 4 of the former of which, and 3 of the latter, are National schools; among these are several well-conducted public schools established for the gratuitous education of the children of the poor. The grammar-school, on the north side of the cathedral yard, is coeval with the refoundation of the cathedral by Henry VIII. after the suppression of the monasteries; and was founded and endowed by that monarch for the gratuitous instruction of 18 poor boys in Greek and Latin, for which the headmaster receives a salary of £120 per annum, and a house; and the second master £80 per annum; besides the foundation scholars, from 60 to 80 others have been instructed; for whom regular fees are paid. This school has 4 exhibitions for sons of clergymen of £25 each at the school, and of £50 each at either of the universities; it has also 5 scholarships of £10 each at Peter House, Cambridge, founded by Bishop Cosins, 1 of £16 at Emanuel college Cambridge, jointly with a school at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The united Blue coat and Sunday school occupy a spacious building on the south side of Claypath, erected by public subscription, and opened in 1812. (The Blue coat school itself was first established in 1718.) This excellent charity has been liberally supported by the annual contributions of the benevolent inhabitants of the city and vicinity, who have long paid great attention to the education of the poor. Upwards of 200 boys and 100 girls were a few years ago instructed on Dr. Bell's system at these schools, and 50 boys and 50 girls clothed from the funds, which then amounted to upwards of £400 per annum. The dean and chapter pay £14 per annum from an ancient endowment to this institution, which has also been endowed with the charitable foundation of Mrs. Carr and other benefactions. There is a charity school in Gravel lane, and 2 infant schools were established by the inhabitants at a very early period after the beneficial effects of the modern system of infant education have been manifested. Upwards of 1,000 children are so to be gratuitously instructed in this city and suburbs. A spacious infirmary was erected by voluntary subscription in 1792. The almshouses on the east side of the palace green were founded in 1668, by Bishop Cosins, for 4 poor men and 4 poor women, with an annuity of £70. This city participates with the rest of the diocese in the benefits resulting from "The Society of the Sons of the Clergy in the diocese of Durham and Hexhamshire" for the relief of distressed clergymen and their widows and families. There are various other charitable institutions, and numerous benefactions to the poor, the most important of which is Hospice.

Smith's bequeathment of several coal-mines and coal-pits, with other properties, whence an annual income of £464 6s. was derived at the time of the charity inquiry; about £300 of which was distributed amongst nearly 400 poor people. The charities which came under the cognizance of the commissioners, yielded an annual income of about £900:—there was also a sum of £401 lent out without interest to carry on a manufactory. Trustees were appointed on 12th January, 1837, to administer the charities previously in the hands of the corporation: income from these for year 1837, £386 5s. There are no poor in the parish of St. Oswald. Poor rates, in 1837, £3,346 15s. The Durham poor-law union comprehends 24 parishes, embracing an area of 65 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 15,550. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £5,015. Expenditure in 1838, £3,886; in 1839, £4,329 9s.

Municipal affairs, &c.—The ancient city of Durham is contained within the parish of St. Nicholas; but the limits of the old borough were always co-extensive with those of "the town;" for, by ancient usage and the bye-laws of the old corporation, an apprentice might acquire freedom by serving in the suburbs of the city, as well as in the city itself; and as the right of voting was in the corporation and freemen, it thus happened that the limits of the town and those of the borough always coincided; while both were endued, as it were, with an elastic property, continually changing and expanding as new houses were erected in continuation of the exterior streets; thus adding to the suburban dimensions of the city. The first charter to the citizens was granted by Hugh Percy, bishop of Durham, and confirmed by Pope Alexander III: it gave "to the burgesses of Durham the free customs of Newcastle," with other privileges. Charters were subsequently obtained from successive bishops, the governing charter, previous to 1835, being that granted on 2d October, 1780, by bishop Egerton, whereby the offices of a mayor, 12 aldermen, and 24 common councilmen were constituted: the title of the ruling body or corporation of the city, being "the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of Durham and Framwellgate." The corporation, as such, exercised no jurisdiction, criminal or civil, other than a manor court of very limited jurisdiction. The want of a local court with more extended jurisdiction and powers was pressed upon the attention of the municipal commissioners. A commission of the peace was granted by the municipal act. The court of the county-palatine was abolished by the 6th and 7th William IV., c. 10; but "the sheriff of Durham's county court" was established, by the same act, for the recovery of debts to any amount. The court is held every 28 days: it has not the power of imprisonment for debt. The assizes for the county are held by the circuit judges twice a-year. Since 1675 this city has returned 2 members to parliament: the mayor is the returning officer: the greatest number of electors polled for 30 years previous to 1832, was 987 in 1830; the right of voting being then in freemen by patrimony or servitude in the city, the borough of Framwellgate, or the streets and suburbs adjoining thereto. The number of electors registered for 1836-7, was 949: the number who actually polled at the general election in 1837, was 857. Durham is a polling-place, and the chief place of election, for the northern division of the county. The limits of the parliamentary borough were extended by the reform and boundary acts; and now, besides the parish of St. Nicholas, part of Framwellgate, and two extra-parochial districts in the heart of the city, one of which is the cathedral precinct, and the other, once the site of an old jail, but now occupied by 3 or 4 houses and some public rooms; the boundaries also include the townships of North Bailey, South Bailey, part of the townships of Elvet and Crossgate, an additional part of the township of Framwellgate, and part of the parish of St. Giles. By the new municipal act, the municipal boundaries were to be taken as coincident with the parliamentary, till altered by act of parliament. The borough is thereby divided into 3 wards, and governed by 6 aldermen and 18 councillors, under the corporate style of "mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the city of Durham and Framwellgate." The nett income of the borough for 1839, was £462 12s. 2d., of which £245 1s. 2d. were expended on police and constables, and £36 12s. 4d. on salaries, &c. to municipal officers: there was no debt, and the balance left in the treasurer's hands was £87 12s. 11d.

In the market place is the guild-hall, town-hall, or tolbooth, erected by Bishop Tunstall in 1555: here the meetings and courts of the corporation, &c. are held. In 1809, a house of correction, county courthouse, and new jail, were begun to be erected in the township of Elvet, and were finished at an expense to the county of £140,000. The prisoners were divided into 13 classes: there are 48 wards, 3 work-rooms, 18 day-rooms, and 13 airing-yards, a chapel, school-room, &c. The prisoners have been chiefly employed in weaving linen and woollen cloth, and grinding corn by the tread-mill. The exchequer, built in 1450 by Bishop Neville, is on the palace green: here the bishop held his court of chancery: it contains the offices occupied by the auditor, cursor, prothonotary, treasurer, clerk of the county, registrar, &c. The north gateway of the castle was used, till 1820, as the county jail. It was then taken down. The judges and their suite have been usually entertained in the great hall of the castle, while on their circuit. It contains a number of portraits of the bishops, casts from the antique, &c. The castle itself is of Norman architecture, and is in some parts in a ruinous state: its erection is attributed to William the Conqueror. The keep or tower is the most ancient part. The habitable portion of the castle consists of a mass of buildings of various dates from the Norman to the present time. The interior, at least previously to its appropriation to the use of the university of Durham, was fitted up in a style subsequent to the reign of Elizabeth. From the castle and palace green is an avenue leading to the public walks on the banks of the river.

Manufactures, Trade, &c.—The trade of Durham is not so extensive as it formerly was. In 1838 there were 2 woollen mills here, employing 79 hands. The population was increasing, and many new houses had been recently built. The state of trade and prosperity of the town, however, were not very improving. It was thought that the discovery of new collieries in the neighbourhood, and the establishment of a railway to the city, would prove very beneficial. Hats, stuffs, and carpets, brass and iron, have been manufactured to some extent. The neighbourhood of the city has been famous for large crops of mustard. A market is held on Saturday. Fairs for horned cattle, sheep, and horses, are held on the 29th, 30th, and 31st of March, Whit-Tuesday, Saturday before the 13th of May, September 15th, and Saturday before the 23d of November; the March fair is considered the best, on account of the superior breed of horses then brought to sale. Here are branches of the Darlington District, and the North of England, Joint Stock banking companies.

History.—The origin, and various particulars regarding the history, of this city have already been given, especially in our account of the county-palatine and the bishopric, with which it has been so closely interwoven. Both nature and art having contributed to render Durham a place of great strength, it often became the scene of warfare. It was repeatedly besieged by the Scots, who, in 1346, were completely defeated; and their king, David Bruce, was taken prisoner, with the loss of 15,000 men, at a place about a mile west of the city, where a magnificent cross was afterwards erected by Ralph, Lord Neville, to commemorate the victory. In 1640 the Scots invaded the country, seized Durham, and kept it till the following year. In the ensuing civil war, nothing very important occurred here:—see DURHAM, co.-palatine, History, &c. This city was visited by the plague in 1416, 1589, and 1597. Among its most eminent literary natives may be enumerated Dr. Richard Gray, author of 'Memoria Technica,' and other works: he died in 1771; John Hall, an English poet, translator of Eugenius; and William Eden, Lord Auckland. Durham gives the title of earl to the Lambton family.

DURLEIGH, a parish in the hund. of Andersfield, union of Bridgewater, county of Somerset; $\frac{1}{4}$ mile west-south-west of Bridgewater; on a branch of the Parret river. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; returned at £20; gross income £22. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £226 19s. Patron, in 1835, W. Gooden, Esq. Acres 480. Houses 19. A. P. £746. Pop., in 1801, 104; in 1831, 139. Poor rates, in 1837, £149.

DURLEY, a parish in the lower half-hund. of Bishop's-Waltham, Portsdown division, union of Droxford, county of Southampton; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles west of Bishop's-Waltham. Living, a curacy, not in charge, subordinate to the rectory of Upham. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £399 3s. 10d. Here are a Sunday and daily, and a Sunday school, both National. Acres 4,290. Houses 60. A. P. £1,263. Pop., in 1801, 304; in 1831, 361. Poor rates, in 1837, £197.

DURNFORD (GREAT), a parish in the hund. of Amesbury, though locally in the hund. of Underditch, union of Amesbury, county of Wilts; $\frac{2}{3}$ miles south-south-west of Amesbury, on the river Avon, comprising Little Durnford, Nitton, Salterton, and Newtown. Living, a vicarage in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; returned at £145 8s.; gross income £132. In the patronage of the prebendary of Durnford, in the cathedral of Salisbury. Here are a Sunday National and three daily schools. On the brow of a hill in this parish is an extensive earthen work, called Ogbury camp, but resembling an ancient residence of the Britons more than a military station; it has not any fosse, and is intersected by numerous small banks. Near this spot is a seat called Durnford-house. By the parliamentary boundaries act, this parish is included within the boundaries of Wilton borough. Acres 3,770. Houses 108. A. P. £3,396. Pop., in 1801, 399; in 1831, 481. Poor rates, in 1837, £217.

DURRINGTON, a parish in the hund. of Brightford, county of Sussex; $\frac{3}{4}$ miles north-west of Worthing; about 2 miles north of the English channel. The church is in ruins, and the inhabitants attend divine service at Tarring. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £208 7s. 10d. Acres 740. Houses 51. A. P. £823. Pop., in 1801, 140; in 1831, 162. Poor rates, in 1837, £102.

DURRINGTON, a parish in the hund. and union of Amesbury, county of Wilts; $\frac{2}{3}$ miles north of Amesbury; on the river Avon. Living, a curacy in the archd. and dio. of Salisbury; returned at £41 3s. 6d.; gross income £53. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £560. In the patronage of the dean and chapter of Winchester. In this neighbourhood are the remains of the ancient British town of Durrington, or Long Walls. Acres 2,880. Houses 76. A. P. £2,041. Pop., in 1801, 394; in 1831, 467. Poor rates, in 1837, £276.

DURSLEY, a market-town and parish, in the upper division of the hund. of Berkeley, union of Dursley, county of Gloucester; 108 miles west by north of London, and 15 miles south-west by south of Gloucester. Acres 1,360. Houses 635. A. P. £5,565. Pop., in 1801, 2,379; in 1831, 3,226. The town stands at the foot of a hill, near the source of a small stream, called the Carn. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol, formerly annexed to the archd. of Gloucester; rated at £10 14s. 4d. Patron, the bishop of the diocese. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1764; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1801; and also 2 daily and 4 Sunday schools, one of the former of which is National, and is supported by endowment. Only 1 in 20 of the population of Dursley has been educated. Charities upwards of £70 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £1,186. There are many poor in Dursley, and their houses are wretched and destitute.—A workhouse has been erected here for the union of Dursley, by the poor-law commissioners, capable of accommodating 280 persons. The Dursley-poor-law union comprehends 11 parishes, embracing an area of 36 square miles; with a population returned, in 1831, at 19,518. The average annual expenditure on the poor of this district, during the three years preceding the formation of the union, was £10,931. Expenditure, in 1838, £7,259; in 1839, £7,631 1s. Dursley was one of the boroughs included in the return made by the sheriff of Gloucestershire in the reign of Edward I., but it does not appear that it ever sent members to parliament. If it ever did, it has long since lost the privilege. It is the principal place of election for the members for the western division of the county. The local authorities are a bailiff and 12 aldermen. At a court-leet, in October, the homage jury annually present the names of three inhabitants of the town, of whom the lord of the manor selects one to be bailiff; who, on his office expiring, becomes an alderman, if the number of 12 be incomplete. Neither bailiff nor aldermen have municipal functions or municipal property of any kind. Four woollen mills here, in 1838, employed 115 hands. In the district of Dursley, however, there were, in 1839, 11 cloth mills in use. This is one of the principal woollen districts in the county. In the town itself there were formerly about 150 hand-loom weavers, and it was a very brisk manufacturing town; but, in 1839, there were only about 20: the clothing trade had greatly declined: two or three mills were then vacant, and almost in ruins. Near the centre of the town is a market-house built in 1738. The market was chartered by Edward IV., in 1471. It is held on Thursday, and there are fairs for the sale of cattle and pedlery on 6th May, and 4th December. There is here a stratum of tophus or puff stone, so soft as to be worked with facility; but, on exposure to the air, it becomes uncommonly hard and durable. The walls of Berkeley castle were built of this stone, which, though upwards of 700 years old, are in good repair.

DURSTON, a parish in the hund. of North Petherthon, union of Taunton, county of Somerset. 4 miles north-east by north of Taunton. The Bristol and Exeter railway, and the Bridgewater and Taunton canal pass near the town. Living, a donative, in the archd. of Taunton and dio. of Bath and Wells; valued at £26; gross income £20. Patron, in 1835, the Rev. R. Gray. Here are two small daily schools. The priory of Buckland-Sorum was founded here in 1167, but it was suppressed and gave way to an establishment of the Knights Hospitallera. Acres 960. Houses 33. A. P. £2,376. Pop., in 1801, 169; in 1831, 226. Poor rates, in 1837, £142.

DURWESTON, a parish in the hund. of Pimperne, union of Blandford, North Blandford division of the county of Dorset; 2½ miles north-west of Blandford-Forum; on the river Stour. Living, a rectory, with that of Bryanston, formerly in the archd. of Dorset and dio. of Bristol, now in the dio. of Salisbury; gross income £563. Patron, in 1835, F. B. Portman, Esq. The parish of Knighton is united to that of Durweston. Here is a Sunday and daily National school. Acres 1,780. Houses 73. A. P. £1,808. Pop., in 1801, 332; in 1831, 418. Poor rates, in 1837, £271.

DUSTON, a parish in the hund. of Nobottle-Grove, union and county of Northampton; 2 miles west of Northampton; north of the river Nen. Living, a discharged vicarage in the archd. of Northampton and dio. of Peterborough; returned at £93 5s. 5d.; gross income £159. Patron, in 1835, Viscount Melbourne. About the year 1112, a monastery for Black canons was founded here by William Peverel, natural son of William the Conqueror; it was styled St. James' abbey, and some remains of it are still visible. A. P. £3,071. Pop. in 1801, 386; in 1831, 603.

DUTTON, a township in the parish of Great Budworth, co.-palatine of Chester; 5 miles east of Frodsham; on the eastern bank of the Weaver, in the vicinity of the Grand Junction railway, and close upon the Grand Trunk canal. The Grand Junction railway viaduct across the valley of the Weaver, near this township is a gigantic structure, which exceeds in magnitude any thing of the kind yet accomplished in this country, or perhaps in Europe; not even excepting the splendid bridge over Menai Straits. The viaduct is of the Gothic order, formed of red stone, procured from the neighbourhood of Bolton and Runcorn; it consists of 20 arches of 60 feet span and 60 feet in height, and the battlements add 12 feet more to the height; the whole length is 1,400 feet. 700,000 square feet of stone were used in the work, which was finished at an expense of £50,000, being considerably under the estimate. Dutton gives the title of baron to the duke of Hamilton, and was, in former times, the seat of the ancient family of Dutton, who were lords of the manor. The remains of Dutton-hall exhibit a remarkably fine specimen of the domestic architecture of the 16th century. Acres 1,760. Houses 128. A. P. £2,279. Pop., in 1801, 301; in 1831, 329. Poor rates, in 1837, £332.

DUTTON, a township in the parish of Ribchester, hund. of Blackburn, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 6½ miles north by west of Blackburn; west of the river Ribble. Acreage with the parish. Houses 85. A. P. £1,961. Pop., in 1801, 388; in 1831, 490. Poor rates, in 1837, £214.

DUTTON-CACCA, a township in the hund. of Bromfield and parish of Holt, county of Denbigh; 5½ miles north-east of Wrexham, on the river Dee. Houses 16. A. P. £1,025. Pop., in 1801, 99; in 1831, 103. Poor rates, in 1837, £9.

DUTTON-DIFFBITH, a township in the parish of Holt, county of Denbigh; 5 miles north-east of Wrexham, on the western bank of the Dee. Houses 32. A. P. £1,102. Pop., in 1801, 103; in 1831, 161. Poor rates, in 1837, £39.

DUTTON-Y-BRAN, a township in the above parish and county. Houses 8. A. P. £553. Pop., in 1801, 44; in 1831, 58. Poor rates, in 1837, £27.

DUXBURY, a township in the parish of Standish, hund. of Leyland, co.-palatine of Lancaster; 2 miles south of Chorley; near the Wigan and Preston railway. Acres 1,090. Houses 34. A. P. £2,107. Pop., in 1801, 255; in 1831, 213. Poor rates, in 1837, £84.

DUXFORD, a parish in the hund. of Whittlesford, union of Linton, county of Cambridge; 5½ miles west of Linton; on the western bank of the Cam, and near the railway from Cambridge to London. It comprises the parishes of Duxford-St.-John, and Duxford-St.-Peter, and has two livings. That of St. John's is a discharged vicarage; rated at £13 3s. 4d.; gross income £170; in the patronage of Clare-hall, Cambridge. The living of St. Peter's is a rectory; rated at £21 6s. 8d.; gross income £431. In the patronage of Corpus Christi college, Cambridge. Both these livings are in the dio. of Ely. The boundaries of each parish not being accurately known, the two are assessed as one. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1795; and four daily and two Sunday schools, one of the former of which is endowed with 20 acres of land. Acres 2,982. Houses 135. A. P. £2,273. Pop., in 1801, 464; in 1831, 670. Poor rates, in 1837, £932.

DWYGYFYLCCHI, a parish in the hund. of Uchaf, union of Conwy, county of Carnarvon, North Wales; 2½ miles west of Conwy, on the coast. Living, a discharged vicarage in the dio. of Bangor and prov. of Canterbury; returned at £109; gross income £126. In the patronage, in 1835, of H. and L. Eyton. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1807; and a Sunday and daily National school. Houses 80. A. P. £1,130. Pop., in 1801, 281; in 1831, 444. Poor rates, in 1837, £126.

DYFFRYN, a parcel, united to Blaine, in the parish of Llan-gynider and hund. of Crickhowel, county of Brecon, South Wales; 7 miles west by south of Crickhowel. Houses 182. A. P. £214. Pop., in 1801, 349; in 1831, 934.

DYFFRYN, a hamlet in the parish of Llanthetty, county of Brecon, South Wales; 12 miles south-east of Brecon, near the Brecon canal. Here are 2 daily schools. Houses 41. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 248.

DYFFRYN, a hamlet in the parish of Vainor, county of Brecon, South Wales; 14 miles south of Brecon. Houses 28. Pop., in 1801, 177; in 1831, 145.

DYFFRYN-CLWYD. See CLWYD.

DYFFRYN-CLYDACH, a hamlet in the parish of Cadoxton, county of Glamorgan, South Wales; 2 miles north-west of Neath. There are here 2 daily schools. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in August and December, for cattle. Houses 174. A. P. £1,859. Pop., in 1801, 726; in 1831, 936. Poor rates, in 1837, £333.

DYFFRYN-HONDDU (UPPER), a hamlet in the parish of Merthyr-Cynog, county of Brecon, South Wales; 3 miles north-north-east of Merthyr-Cynog, near the source of the Usk. Houses 38. A. P. £1,017. Pop., in 1801, 193; in 1831, 118. Poor rates with the parish.

DYFFRYN-HONDDU (LOWER), a chapelry in the above parish, of which the living is a curacy to the parish, not in charge, valued at £60 7s.; gross income £70. Patron, the vicar of Merthyr-Cynog. Houses 33. A. P. £681. Pop., in 1801, 211; in 1831, 205. Poor rates with the parish.

DYFI (ГЪНЪ). See DOVEY.

DYKE, a hamlet in the parish of Bourn, county of Lincoln; 2½ miles north-north-east of Bourn.

Houses 29. Pop., in 1821, 144; in 1831, 143. Other returns with the parish.

DYLAIS. See DULAS, UPPER AND LOWER.

DYMCHURCH, a parish in the liberty of Romney-Marsh, lathe of Shepway, union of Romney-Marsh, county of Kent; 4 miles north-east by north of New Romney, on the coast of the English channel. Living, a rectory in the archd. and dio. of Canterbury; rated at £7 2s. 8d., returned at £104 18s. 11d.; gross income £135. Patron, the Lord-chancellor. Here are a place of worship for Wesleyan Methodists; and 3 daily schools. This parish lies wholly on the level of Romney-Marsh, adjoining the sea, which, in stormy weather, often overflows the land, although there is a strong wall 3 miles long and 20 feet high, to resist its encroachments. Acres 1,210. Houses 91. A. P., including that of Blackmanstone, £4,523. Pop., in 1801, 366; in 1831, 521. Poor rates, in 1837, £228.

DYMOCK, a parish in the hund. of Botloe, union of Newent, county of Gloucester; 4 miles north-north-west of Newent, on the river Leadon, and intersected by the Hereford and Gloucester canal. Living, a vicarage in the archd. of Gloucester and dio. of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £9 13s. 9d., returned at £95; gross income £105. Patron, in 1835, A. Thomson, Esq. Here are 3 daily schools, one of which, with 50 males and 50 females, is endowed with funds producing £93 per annum: the master and mistress have each £20 a-year, with a house, garden, and coals. Charities, £34 per annum. Poor rates, in 1837, £612. From the rye lands in this parish, King Edward sent a breed of sheep to Spain, which now produces the finest wool. For this important present he is censured by Rapin in his history. A great quantity of cider and perry is made here, the vicinity abounding in orchards. Whitehouse, in this parish, was the birth-place of John Kyrle, better known as the 'Man of Ross,' whose benevolence has been so pleasingly recorded by Pope. Formerly this place was of great extent and importance. In the parliamentary war it was garrisoned for the king. Acres 6,270. Houses 289. A. P. £3,292. Pop., in 1801, 1,223; in 1831, 1,656.

DYNHYNLE-ISSA AND MORTON ANGLICORUM, a township in the parish of Ruabon, county of Denbigh, North Wales; 4 miles south-south-west of Wrexham, on a branch of the Dee. Houses 52. Pop., in 1821, 461; in 1831, 489.

DYNEMORE. See DINMORE.

DYSERTH, or DASERTH, a parish in the hund. of Prestatyn, union of St. Asaph, county of Flint, North Wales; 3 miles south of St. Asaph, on a streamlet which runs into St. George's channel. Living, a perpetual curacy in the archd. and dio. of St. Asaph; gross income £113. Patron, the bishop of St. Asaph. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £388 12s. 3d. Here is a day and Sunday National school. Houses 164. A. P. £1,429. Pop., in 1801, 436; in 1831, 714. Poor rates, in 1837, £231.

END OF VOLUME FIRST.

DEC 11 1942

